However, a catastrophe was not even suggested last night, as the Boston Orchestra was fully equal to all demands of technique, and Mr. Gericke gave an understandable reading of the score, but refined to the last degree. There was lacking a full measure of warmth and there was no abandon, but, on the other hand, Strauss was not mutilated. Mr. Gericke's scholarly instincts would never lead him to vandalism.

"Don Quixote," it must be remembered, is not a symphonic poem, but a series of variations upon three themes—Don Quixote, Sancho Panza and the Don's idealization of Dulcinea, and, as a Strauss monomaniac puts it: for wit, humor, pathos and humanism there is nothing like it in the whole library of music. After last night's hearing of the music there certainly remains a definite and deep-seated appreciation of the humor and sadness of Don Quixote's life as revealed by Strauss' eloquent music.

And there is no mistaking the stamp of originality, no flaunting of the cloak of Wagner, no evidence that the composer is musically the "illegitimate son of Liszt." If the reminiscent element is present it is certainly not obvious, but there is evidence in abundance that makes the work the expression of a singularly resourceful and original thinker, a man of great talent if not a positive genius.

The powerful impression that the work must make can be explained by the fact that Strauss has found himself. He is no longer audacious, no longer imitative, he has reached his "Meistersinger" period by being sincere in obeying those forces that culminate in a personal and therefore original expression of his art.

Then the clarity of the style, a style that so admirably fits the thing to be described, and, in a sense, a realization of Flaubert's dream of what style should be; "rhythmical as verse, precise as the language of science, and with undulations, modulations as of a violoncello; a style which enters the idea like the stroke of a stiletto." Well, all that the king of realists dreamed of has been realized by Richard Strauss in "Don Quixote."

And with "Don Quixote" a new force enters music, a force that apparently possesses the potency for power, that, in the case of Wagner, revolutionized the opera, and in the case of Strauss will certainly influence, if not determine, the form, the idea, the content, in short, of orchestral composition in the future.

Though Richard Strauss stands alone as a composer who is daring, resourceful and brilliant in his inventions of new harmonies, and peculiarly interesting in the instrumentation of his scores, yet when it comes to an expression of positive opinion regarding his artistic immortality it is too soon to lay down the law. Discretion whispers, for the present, at least, a suspension of judgment.

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER,

FEBRUARY 18, 1904

STRAUSS AND BEETHOVEN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Concert at the Academy Last Evening

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave an interesting concert at the Academy of Music last evening, when the features of the program were the "Don Quixote" fantasia of Richard Strauss and Beethoven's symphony in A major No. 7, Op. 92. "Don Quixote" is one of Strauss' most recent works. It had not been heard in Philadelphia before last night and there was some curiosity, a mild curiosity, to learn whether it exhibited any further development in the peculiar ideas, theories, principles and methods of its distinguished and much-bepraised composer.

So far as could be judged from the standard established in "Til Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" and "Thus Spake Zarathustra" it is the aim of Richard Strauss to render his music as nearly unplayable as possible and as ugly as the possibilities of dissonance will permit. He has not overlooked those objects in the production of "Don Quixote," which is not exactly an unalloyed melodious delight and whose technical difficulties are appalling; but it must be said that the music with which he has undertaken to portray the character and to illustrate the career of Don Cervantes' illustrious hero is a good deal more interesting, has a good deal more value as mere music than most of the orchestral constructions with which Richard Strauss has heretofore been identified and upon which his fame in this country chiefly rests.

There is much in "Don Quixote" that is beautiful and expressive and artistic in the good old-fashioned way, in the way that Haydn and Mozart and their successors marked out and followed. The theme which is employed to typify the Don is noble, dignified and appealing and several of the variations which are intended to suggest his adventures are eloquent and impressive. Unfortunately the composer lacks self-restraint and the saving grace of humor, and when the bleating of sheep is realistically imitated on the muted brass and the howling of the gale is reproduced by a wind machine, the lover of music for its own sake is made to wonder what things are coming to and to deplore the degradation of the most spiritual of the arts to such material and ignoble uses.

Richard Strauss may be a great genius. He is certainly a very clever composer. But he lacks the sense of fitness and proportion. He never knows when to stop, and by pushing his ideas to extravagant extremes he renders them and himself ridiculous. The fantasia was brilliantly played and the Beethoven symphony received an interpretation which, while it might to advantage have been broader and more dignified, was exceedingly refined and enjoyable. The soloist was Mr. T. Adamowski, who was heard in Lalo's rather trivial "Spanish Symphony," of which he gave a brilliant performance. The concert began with a spirited rendering of Smetana's overture to his opera of "The Bartered Bride."

At the concert to be given by the orchestra at the Academy of Music to-morrow evening the program will include Cherubini's "Anacreon" overture, Georg Schumann's suite "In Carnival Time," and Brahms' fourth symphony. Mr. Rudolf Krasselt, the first 'cellist of the orchestra, will play Saint-Saens' concerto in A minor.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD,

FEBRUARY 20, 1904.

The Boston Symphony First-Series Concert Brings New Soloist.

The fourth concert in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first series, given at the Academy last evening, proved highly enjoyable, without possessing any specially distinctive features. The soloist was Rudolf Krasselt, the new first 'cellist of the organization. Mr. Krasselt played the familiar Saint-Saens Concerto in A minor with considerable distinction, displaying a full, resonant tone and an admirable combination of spirit and delicacy. A brief foretaste of his quality was given at Wednesday evening's concert, when he played the 'cello solo parts in that fantastic Richard Strauss composition, "Don Quixote." The Saint-Saens number, of course, gave this young soloist much greater opportunity and the substantial quality of his art was still further emphasized.

The Brahms Symphony No. 4, in E minor (opus 98), was the chief orchestral number, and was given a scholarly and sympathetic reading by Mr. Gericke. This work is generally considered to be the most individual and characteristic of the Brahms symphonies, but by that same token it is perhaps the least popular. It is marked by a curious quality of restlessness, and its constant iteration of seemingly unfinished themes makes it rather unsatisfying, if not lacking in sustained interest. It was played some weeks ago by Fritz Scheel's forces, and the comparison afforded by last evening's performance was of really more moment than the symphony itself. If anything, we prefer Mr. Scheel's reading, with its accentuated points, to the more smooth but somewhat less distinctive reading given by Mr. Gericke. Georg Schumann's "In Carnival Time" Suite and Cherubini's "Anacreon" Overture were the other numbers on the program.

[92]

Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote" was performed for the first time here at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening in Carnegie Hall. For it the band was swelled to its fullest complement in the wood-wind, the brass, and the instruments of percussion. As Strauss prescribes, the machine used in theatres to suggest the whistling of the wind was added, discreetly hidden behind a screen and played by an unnamed virtuoso. Mr. Gericke conducted; Mr. Krasselt played the 'cello through which Don Quixote speaks, and Mr. Zach, the viola which serves similarly for Sancho Panza, both placed in front of the orchestra.

The performance had the advantage of Mr. Gericke's skill in keen analysis and lucid exposition, and of the fine capacity of his men to impart the results of both in every detail. "Don Quixote" is as hugely complex in structure, as novel in harmony, as rich and strange in instrumental colors, as cruelly difficult to play, as any of its predecessors, and it needed all the clarity and cohesion, sonority and tonal splendor that the orchestra could give it.

The shortcoming of the performance was a lack of full appreciation of the ironic humor that recurs often in the music, of the note of tragi-comedy that, in various guises, runs through it, and of the particular ardor that this or that passage invites. Much of "Don Quixote" would suggest action. Much is enlivened by humorous distortion and realistic discord. It invites a freer and more vital performance than it had last evening. That Strauss himself will probably give a few weeks hence. Mr. Gericke and his men were most satisfying in the episodes, like the death of the knight, or his vigil beside his lance, that are within the received province of musical suggestion. They oftenest disappointed where Strauss's effort to denote mental phantasms playing through bald realism ran highest.

—

The full title indicates the musical skeleton of the piece—"Don Quixote, Introduction, Theme and Variations and Finale; Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character." A severe classicist might have chosen the form, and Strauss clings steadfastly to it. Yet everywhere with the free, sure, pliant strength of a master he bends it to his peculiar purposes. He even makes it seem a felicitously imagined and highly appropriate form for them.

The musical flesh with which he has clothed the skeleton, the musical blood that he has sent coursing through it, are all his own. By the contents and contours of his melodies, by the color and cut of his harmonies, by the significance of his instrumentation, he seeks, within his chosen form, to indicate some of the traits of Don Quixote and Sancho Panza as Cervantes imagined them. By the same means he would suggest certain incidents in which Cervantes makes them figure. In particular he would illustrate these incidents with realism and with humor as they appear to Sancho Panza and to readers of the novel, and at the same time keep the fantastic aspect that they bear to the distorted but wholly serious vision of Don Quixote himself.

—

The introduction suggests the romance and the chivalry of knighthood in its flower, as the books over which Don Quixote is poring, recount them. There are hints of knightly wanderings and adventures, fair ladies loved and rescued, powers of evil and of magic overthrown. Then the music becomes clouded and confused, then vague, wild, discordant. The knight has gone mad over these fantasies. The 'cello recites and enforces the theme that is to suggest Don Quixote; the viola, that which suggests Sancho Panza. The orchestra amplifies each and sets them in contrast.

With the first variation the pair set forth on their adventures. There are ten in all. The knight does battle with the windmills; puts the sheep to rout; debates of chivalrous virtue and adventure with his esquire; is roughly handled by the angry pilgrims; keeps vigil by his arms; encounters the lovely Dulcinea; rides, as he fancies, in air; voyages in an enchanted bark; assails the ambling friars as magicians; is finally overcome by his fellow-townsman, the Knight of the White Moon, and borne home captive. The finale pictures his tranquil end in the death of his illusions and ambitions.

Throughout Strauss strives to enlarge and heighten the suggestion and the pictorial quality of his music. In the blurred instrumental coloring of the knightly picture, and in the shrill discords with which the introduction ends, we must hear the phantasms and madness of Don Quixote. In the rustle of the wood-winds and the whirr of the strings we must see the turning windmills, and in the glissando in the harp and the drum-beats, the knight unhorsed by them. In the interplay of their individual themes and of the alternate chivalric and homely note we must hear Sancho and his lord discourse of the glories of knight-errantry and of the comforts of a quiet life. We must recognize Dulcinea as a vulgar country wench in the coarsened wind choir and the tinkling tambourine. We must—and we do unmistakably—hear the whistle of the wind when the "wind machine" adds its voice to the shrieking flutes. Yet the double-basses rumbling on one note are to tell us that knight and esquire are still firmly set on earth. Again, unmistakably, the sheep bleat when Don Quixote charges upon them, but we must equally believe in the enchanted ship when his theme becomes a barcarolle. Broken rhythms and intricate changes in harmonic contour and instrumental color which make all sound conventional and prosaic must persuade us of the knight's departing illusions. And so it goes.

—

It is idle to say that music, under certain conditions, may not suggest all this and more. Within those conditions Strauss has made it do so. Structurally "Don Quixote" is soundly built and proportioned. The motive of the knight, foreshadowed in the chivalric picture in the introduction, and providing the thematic material of the finale, binds the whole together. The variations spring legitimately from the knight's melody with Sancho Panza's as a counter-theme. In all the sweeping and complex transformations that he makes, Strauss never loses hold of his thematic material. The theme of the knight dominates and sustains the whole. In all his extravagance he is never formless.

Theme and counter-theme are so fecund and supple that he can draw from them all the material he needs for the ten diverse variations. The homely, humorous Sancho Panza melody carries quick persuasion. To imaginative ears there is genuine characterization in the motive of the knight and its development. Now they strike the note of fantastic vision and deluded ambition. Now they hint at the sincerity and nobility of Don Quixote, again at the pathos and irony of it all.

—

It is in the working out of his melodies that Strauss's tremendous power of imagination and expression has risen highest, and had fullest, freest, and most moving play. He reaches out boldly and surely for new and strange harmonic colors and outlines, for new and strange instrumental combinations. He shuns no abnormal progression, no dissonance, no eccentric instrumental device, like the muting of the whole orchestra, even to the tubas, so long as they serve his purpose.

That purpose is to widen and intensify the expressive power of music within the accepted forms, to make it suggest and picture what it has never suggested or pictured before, and to give suggestions and pictures, new and old, a vividness and precision that they never before attained. He does achieve this, within conditions, in the variations in "Don Quixote." He does commingle the suggestions of sincere fantasy, ironic humor, and bald realism, as he designed. He does characterize the knight and the esquire. Now his means are the cacophony of the end of the introduction, again such joyous freaks as the bleating of the sheep in the muted brass, and the whistling of the wind machine, or again such beauty of musical idea and expression, according to the accepted standards, as he attains in the rapt vigil of the knight or the pathos of his death in the dust and ashes of his crumbled visions. It is only when Strauss would make melody, harmony, and instrumentation argue, as he would have Don Quixote and Sancho do in one variation, that he quite fails.

—

Within conditions, Strauss has done all this in "Don Quixote," but those conditions lessen the worth and appreciation of the achievement. He presupposes listeners of very quick and keen musical perception and trained musical understanding. Otherwise they cannot follow him through all his intricacies of structure and expression. He would have them endowed with something of his own imagination, pictorial sense, susceptibility to suggestion, and bold openmindedness. Otherwise they will not appreciate the pictorial quality of his music or his daring and surety as he reaches out for new means of graphic expression. There are no audiences—at least, here in New York in 1904—of miniature Strausses, and Richard may delude himself as to them much as his own Don Quixote did as to the windmills that he fancied were knights.

In "Don Quixote," as Strauss would have us hear it, we must have a sense of musical humor and irony. We must know Cervantes's knight and Cervantes's esquire and a dozen incidents in his romance. Even all this does not suffice. Strauss or his spokesmen must equip us with a minute printed analysis of the music, indicating, not only its general significance, but pointing each detail as thus "There is a pastoral figure (woodwind) and out of the dust cloud (strings) comes a chorus of 'Ba-a-a' (muted brass)." We must listen with our eyes on it.

Now all this apparatus is essentially literary. Every one knows the reproach that attaches to "literary" painting or sculpture. Either, in that case, becomes an artistic medium seeking to express in its own terms what is more fully, clearly, sympathetically, and poignantly expressed in the terms of another. Moreover, the new medium needs the aid of the old to fulfill its task. In precisely the same way "Don Quixote," in spite of all Strauss has done in it, is "literary" music and naked to the same reproaches.

Evening Mail

It was a tenet of Schumann's, and it has been held by most commentators, that "programme music" (illustrative music would be a better term) was perfectly admissible as long as one didn't need a programme in order to enjoy it. That is, the music must appeal inherently, by its beauty, its character, its design, to the hearer; it must create or impart a mood, an emotion, that need not depend upon a knowledge of the exact story or picture in the composer's mind.

Richard Strauss's modernity consists as much in his extension of the field of music as in his amazing use of the orchestral colors. He has made this "Don Quixote" a masterpiece of characterization, of humor, of description, of movement, and, more than once, of beauty in the old sense. Shall the ordinary standards of judgment be applied to it, as though it aimed to be pure music and failed? Assuredly not.

A new classification must be made, a wider definition of music's sphere adopted, or rather, the legitimate union of music with another art (whether that adjunct be literature, painted pictures, stage pantomime or what not) must be formally recognized. Adoption of such a classification would explain away many of the difficulties in "Zarathustra," "Till Eulenspiegel" and other gigantic tone pictures by Strauss, as well as a few by other composers. The tendency of the time strongly moves that way.

Last night's audience was able to hear "Don Quixote" in this new way, being provided with detailed programme books. Eventually, who knows but that the conveyance of the concomitant elements of such works will not be managed more vividly, more pictorially, than the printed page allows?

Meantime, "Don Quixote" is, after its kind, a masterpiece. Its musical ideas are numerous, and they are admirably knit. The orchestral colors are those of a brave painter. The work as a whole is a production of true genius.

Mr. Gericke and the orchestra put their hearts into it, and all their skill. The solo 'cellist and viola player were, respectively, Rudolph Krasselt and Max Zach, and they, with their colleagues, set a proud standard of performance for this remarkable composition.

SAMUEL SWIFT.

EVENING MAIL.

FEBRUARY 19, 1904.

"DON QUIXOTE" TOLD IN MUSIC

Richard Strauss's Extraordinary Work Played for the First Time by the Boston Symphony Orchestra—A New Order of Music.

Richard Strauss is now in midocean, on his way hither from Germany, but as a preliminary to his coming series of "festival" concerts, Wilhelm Gericke and the Boston Symphony Orchestra played last night, at Carnegie Hall, Strauss's "Don Quixote," for the first time in this city.

A fine audience was present, and the programme also included Smetana's "Bartered Bride" overture, Cesar Franck's symphonic poem, "The Wild Huntsman," and Beethoven's seventh symphony.

"Don Quixote," which is Strauss's thirty-fifth numbered work, came after "Thus Spake Zarathustra" and before "A Hero's Life." It was played in Cologne in 1898 and in Chicago in 1899. Emil Paur once thought of giving it in New York, but decided that this public could learn its Strauss by easier stages than this set of "Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character" offered. But Mr. Paur himself was convinced that its time would come.

The composition is in the form of an introduction, ten variations and a finale, joined without a break. It took Mr. Gericke forty minutes to play it last night. The orchestral score requires the presence of a wind machine (like those used in theatres) and of the fullest assortment of modern instruments. A solo 'cello utters most of the distinctive music of Don Quixote himself, and a solo viola speaks for the sly and amiable Sancho Panza.

The introduction sets forth Don Quixote's personality, his inherent nobility of soul, and aims to suggest, by the use of false cadences and intrusive notes, how, "through his little sleep and much reading, he dried up his brains in such sort as he lost wholly his judgment. His fantasy was filled with those things that he read, of enchantments, quarrels, battles, challenges, wounds, wooings, loves, tempests and other impossible follies."

Themes of knight-errantry and gallantry are heard, the image of a beautiful woman, Dulcinea, flits through the Don's consciousness and a harp glissando, leading to sharp discords, declare the overthrowing of the knight's reason. The solo 'cello emerges with the theme thenceforward indicative of Don Quixote.

Variation I. sees the knight, attended by Sancho Panza, start on his pilgimage, and the fight with the windmills. Variation II. is devoted to the fight against the Host of the Great Emperor Alifonfaron—the enemy is enveloped in a cloud of dust, out of which, as Don Quixote puts the foe to flight, comes a chorus of "Ba-a-a-a-a" on the muted brass (to the great amusement of the audience).

Sancho Panza, not an apostle of the strenuous life, protests, through his grumbling viola, but the Don's confident 'cello silences him, with talk of honor and glory. The fourth variation details the knight's punishment by a band of worthy pilgrims, whom he had taken for robbers, in spite of the churchly theme that accompanied them. The next picture shows a vision of Dulcinea. Sancho persuades him, in the following episode, that a country wench is his Dulcinea, while the succeeding adventure of the ride through the air, blindfolded, on the wooden horse, calls forth the onslaught of the wind machine and a charge of whistling flutes. Then, says the official German commentator, "The persistent tremolo of the double basses on one note may be taken to mean that the two did not really leave the earth."

The journey in the enchanted bark, the combat with two magicians, and the return of Don Quixote to his home, after defeat by the Knight of the White Moon, complete the variations. The finale, by its sane and beautiful harmonies, shows that the knight has recovered his reason, and further discussion of the previous themes aims to suggest that he has lost his illusions. "Very peacefully," very nobly and yet with a wonderful touch of homely intimacy, Don Quixote dies.

At first hearing this seems the furthest step Strauss has taken away from pure music. Beautiful and majestic as are the introduction and the finale, supremely vital and thrilling as are episodes scattered through the whole work, it demands recognition of a new kind. This long composition seems indubitably to require a printed programme for its proper understanding by the hearers. A cinematograph would answer the same purpose, or some unlikely arrangement of stage pantomime—but explanation, of one kind or another, "Don Quixote" absolutely requires. The title is not enough; even a knowledge of Cervante's tale does not suffice; one must have the exact incident to be illustrated spread before one, and then the music wholly justifies itself.

EVENING TELEGRAM—NEW YORK,

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1904.

Musical Novelties Presented by Boston Symphony.

The Boston Symphony was heard again last night at Carnegie Hall by an audience of its admirers, which filled the great hall to overflowing. The orchestra gave its accustomed finished performance. The programme introduced several novelties of unusual interest. The first half of the concert comprised several selections of extremely modern music. Mr. Gericke, who conducted, as usual, was less satisfying in the rendition of these numbers than in the symphony which followed. In the years during which Mr. Gericke has conducted the orchestra he has striven beyond everything to develop a perfection of tone and technique.

His sympathies, however, are not modern; he is not temperamentally in sympathy with selections so modern. This was particularly evident in his rendition of the Strauss and Cesar Franck numbers, which would seem to demand a more individual interpretation.

In presenting Beethoven's seventh symphony it could be felt that this admirable leader was not at home. The most notable novelty of the evening was the presentation of selections from "Don Quixote." This opera, it must be recalled, has been promised for this season by Mr. Conried, it never having been sung in America. It was received with enthusiasm, Mr. Gericke being obliged to bow to repeated encores.

[93]

DAILY EVENING TELEGRAPH.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1904.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Fourth Concert of the Second Series at the Academy of Music.

It was surely a new sensation last night to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing an apotheosis of "Hiawatha," with variations suggesting highly refined versions of other street favorites; yet such was the effect of the opening number on the programme. This was Swietana's overture to his opera "The Sold Bride," superbly played with a wonderful mastery of concerted effect in the strings. There are very beautiful passages in it, for, of course, it is not all idealized ragtime; but there are certainly reminiscences in it of popularity that are decidedly amusing in a highly classic symphony concert.

Following this appeared Mr. Adamowski, the violin soloist of the evening, in Lalo's "Spanish Symphony," though why it is not called a "Concerto," as most such works are, is not quite clear. The first two movements of the composition are not quite clear either; they are choppy and scattered, the soloist having a lot of difficult, brilliant technique to perform, very interesting as exercises, but not very musical save in a few tantalizing passages that come and go. The andante or third movement, and the final Rondo are much more attractive to ordinary listeners, and in those the soloist won well deserved applause.

The notable event of the evening was the "tone-drama," or "theme with variations," based on the romance of "Don Quixote," by Richard Strauss, played here for the first time by this orchestra. The character of the Don is represented by the violoncello solo, admirably presented by Mr. Krasself, who is to be the soloist of the next concert, on Friday evening of this week. He was well supported by the viola player, whose name might appropriately have been given, in the solo passages representing Sancho Panza. These two carry their respective themes, and around them the orchestra weaves the variations intended to represent the usndry adventures and mishaps of the Knight Errant and his Squire. In regard to this composition "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing," for, if one wants to get any satisfaction out of it whatever, he should understand it thoroughly, note for note, or else know nothing about it at all. To know a little about it and try to gather the rest from the programme notes and follow the performance at the same time, requires one to "keep up a terrible thinking" that is a great strain; and leaves little time for listening, and still less for enjoying. There are beautiful passages that occur here and there, like vases of harmony with delicious little streams of melody bubbling up; but they are so separated in a desert confusion of unrelated sounds that one grows faint and weary by the way, trying to get from one to the other. The work may delight the elect who can follow it, but it is likely to be "caviare to the general." It certainly accomplishes its purpose of representing the wanderings of a disordered mind, and if any one enjoys contemplating such vagaries he may find the musical version of them satisfying, it all depends on what one wants in music. It is more than likely that most of the rather meagre audience welcomed with relief the sane harmonies of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, which closed the programme and soothed their distracted brains.

THE WORLD:

FEBRUARY 19, 1904.

"DON QUIXOTE" AS STRAUSS SEES HIM

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Plays the Eccentric German Composer's Weird Tone-Poem—Audience Wonders.

The imminent eruption of Richard Strauss, who is coming to America to conduct a series of concerts, was foreshadowed at Carnegie Hall last night, when Mr. Gericke and the Boston Symphony Orchestra produced the German composer's tone poem, "Don Quixote."

It was a weird thing in music, outraging all the accepted canons of taste and form in an eccentric chase after realism. By carefully following the exhaustive explanations of the programme one could understand the composer's intentions; without the guiding notes, however, it would have been a hopeless task.

M. Gericke gave the work a most careful reading, but the audience was left a-wondering whether the whole thing was not a huge joke.

Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Suntana's overture to "The Bartered Bride" and Ceasor Franck's symphonic poem "The Wild Huntsman" completed the programme.

The house was crowded with the best of New York's music lovers, as is usual now whenever the Boston orchestra appears.

EVENING POST:

FEBRUARY 19, 1904.

The Boston Orchestra.

It was perhaps in deference to recent criticism of the archaic character of his programmes this winter that Mr. Gericke offered last night in Carnegie Hall, at the fourth of the Boston Orchestra concerts, that peculiarly tough morsel by Dr. Richard Strauss known as the "Don Quixote" fantasia, and otherwise described by its composer as "Fantastic variations on a theme of knightly character." No one in the audience of bewildered listeners who heard it could pretend that Mr. Gericke had not gone as far away from old-time music as possible, and perhaps not a few persons may have wondered whether their ears were playing them tricks. It is related that upon the occasion of the first production of Strauss's opera "Guntram," in Munich, some six or seven years ago, a well-known musical critic declared after the first act that either he or the composer must be crazy—so utterly foreign to the ordinary conception of music was the conglomeration of orchestral sounds and vocal outbursts. Strauss himself, when the work was withdrawn after three performances, admitted that the public could not grasp it, and predicted that fifty years might pass before its beauties found appreciation.

"Don Quixote," which dates from the same period, 1897, might fairly be classed in the same category of music, for which the world is not yet ready, and its reception when it was played in Cologne, in 1898, was such that perhaps the comparative sanity of "Ein Heldenleben," written soon after, was a sop to old-fashioned prejudice. In the latter symphonic poem, which has been given here several times with great care and much success, there are long pages of distressing cacophony, atoned for by splendid bursts of melody and passages of unquestioned beauty. In "Don Quixote" the cacophony is more frequent. The strings whine, the woodwinds shriek, the brass bellows, and, above all this din, an instrument of torture known as a wind machine whistles and roars. Now and then there is a suggestion of some sort of melody, which is lost at once in a meaningless maze of discords, all doubtless very graphic as portraying the disordered condition of the noble knight's mind, yet anything but musical as a whole. The writer of a programme book prepared for the London Strauss festival last year notes that the work was composed at a time when Strauss was inclined "to be conscious of the tragi-comedy of his own over-zealous hyper-idealism and ironical at its expense." Also, that its queer harmonies "characterize admirably the well-known tendency of Don Quixote toward false conclusions." This commentator, who devotes twenty-seven pages to an analysis of the many beauties he is lucky enough to find, might have gone a step further and admitted that Dr. Strauss, having to portray the antics of a crazy man, made his orchestra behave in a crazy way.

The Boston Orchestra patrons owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. Gericke for presenting it. Certainly nothing more curious has been heard here. The applause which followed the Strauss number last night was due wholly to the splendid playing of the band, and not for the music. Mr. Krasselt, who played the long and difficult 'cello part, was admirable in tone and phrasing.

The evening began with Smetana's overture to "The Bartered Bride," and ended with a beautifully smooth and musical performance of Beethoven's seventh symphony, an interpretation less "muscular" and exciting than that under Mr. Weingartner at the Philharmonic concert of last week, but quite as perfect in its way. The manner in which the strings "sang" the second movement could not well be surpassed.

NORTH AMERICAN,

FEBRUARY 18, 1904.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT

Wide Range of Music Given by Popular Orchestra.

At the Boston Orchestra's concert last evening the selections ranged far and wide in the symphonic field—the stately and inspiring classicism of Beethoven's seventh symphony; Swetana's rippling and vivacious "Bartered Bride" overture; Edouard Lalo's D minor concerto for violin and orchestra, with Timothee Adamowski as soloist, and Richard Strauss' fantastic "Don Quixote" music—the latter for the first time here.

EVENING SUN, FRIDAY,

FEBRUARY 19, 1904.

BOSTON'S WISE MEN PLAY A JOKE ON RICHARD STRAUSS.

Give a Fancy Dress Rehearsal of His Strange "Don Quixote" Score and Intersperse the Programme Notes with Full Page Diagrams of Exits from the Hall—A Red-Letter Introduction to the Only Unknown Work, Barring One, That Strauss Will Play Here at His Festival.

Those musical souls at Carnegie Hall last night who mistook Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote" for a bad dream, and those listeners of another sort who thought the wise men from Boston were playing a practical joke upon musical instruments of torture, came equally near to missing the point of the colossal joke after all. For once the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra's equally famous annotated programme book soared to heights unknown. An audience of 2,500 lay readers sat with eyes glued to the printed page. While Wilhelm Gericke produced the only Strauss tone-poem that had gone for years unsung in this metropolis, the management provided first aid for the injured in four and twenty pages of Mr. Philip Hale's chosen words. And at the middle of this luxuriant verbosity they inserted a full page diagram of the exits from all parts of the hall. Strange to say, there was no stampede.

Only fire-escapes and subway horrors were lacking to lend variety to this musical show. The crazy Don, though he looked as hearty and boyish as Mr. Rudolph Krasselt and played first 'cello on a monument by the conductor's stand, certainly discovered more tangents to the sphere of music than are dreamt of in the philosophy of a Nietsche. But Sancho, in the practical person of Mr. Max Zach, was always there to rise and explain in soft viola tones what his Quixotic chief was driving at. This Sancho's jolly little melodies were more tangible than the tone variations or annotated visions of a knightly and disorderly character like old Cervantes's hero. Sancho, and not Dulcinea, was the deus ex machina.

Seriously, that new Strauss wind machine, though a theatrical device at best, should have had the centre of the stage. It was poked off at one side behind a big red and gold Japanese screen, and it quivered like an aspen leaf, not to say a Russian battleship, whenever Strauss required the wind of Quixotic destiny to howl. Seriously, too, the wind machine had its musical value. It was a daring innovation, and it suffered from association with a Pegasus of wood. Don Quixote's ride through the air, it will be remembered, was about as successful as any trial trip of the average airless flying machine. But as a musical episode, numbered "Variation VII.," it did serve to show some listeners "where they were at." It was like the others, only much more so. Strauss's "Don Quixote" is a musical sensation comparable to the dear old Ferris Wheel, and it does not stop when you would like it to.

The effort of attention at a first hearing is absolutely painful, when your programme-music starts with a crazy pattern to begin with. Don Quixote's sheep go baa-baa with an utterance lik e Dean Swift's horrible Houyhnhms, or a Græco-Roman vox populi, or that fabled animal, the Sinfonia Domestica. Oh! if only the late G. F. Handel could hear how Richard Strauss can make his orchestral sheep go astray!

Here, ladies and gentlemen, is a Hogarth of humorous cacophonies, a Doré of diabolical sound. And with it all, Strauss throws in his pious monks and weary pilgrims, his freak windmills, his delightful Dulcinea, his Quixotic barcarolle, his dancing peasant girl, his battle and murder and none too sudden death of a knightly hero. Episodes of gorgeous music are here. The end is sane on Don Quixote's part, at any rate. But beside the work as a whole, "Zarathustra" next week will be a peace protocol and "Ein Heldenleben" a straight line drawing from still life.

A dress rehearsal was last night's virtuoso performance of "Don Quixote" by the Boston band. It will be the more appreciated when Herr Strauss presents the same work here. Even the attendants at Carnegie Hall these days are humming motives from the tone-poems of Richard Strauss. Everything at the big music hall on Fifty-seventh street denotes the early coming of the celebrated composer. The wind machine for "Don Quixote" this morning joined the Wetzler orchestra, and is rehearsing daily with fervor and patience, so that Dr. Strauss will have only the finishing touches to add before his festival début a week from to-morrow night.

Timothée Adamowski will be the soloist at the Boston Symphony matinée in Carnegie Hall on Saturday. The programme includes Brahms's symphony op. 98, No. 4, in E minor; Lalo's "Spanish Symphony" for violin and orchestra, in D minor, op. 21, and, for the first time at these concerts, two movements from Georg Schumann's suite op. 22 for full orchestra, "In Carnival Time."

NEW YORK TIMES,

FEBRUARY 19, 1904.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

First New York Performance of Strauss's "Don Quixote."

A Vast and Complicated Realistic Tone Poem Listened To with Interest.

The fourth evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evning in Carnegie Hall was notable for giving its first hearing in this city to Richard Strauss's vast symphonic poem "Don Quixote," the only one of the young composer's remarkable series of works of that kind that had never been played here. The reasons why conductors have heretofore fought shy of "Don Quixote" were clear enough after the performance of it. It is, in the first place, of enormous technical difficulty, presenting to almost every choir of instruments in the orchestra problems that approach the limits of even the most skillful players' abilities. Moreover, the difficulties and the obstacles it offers to even the most open-minded listeners are equally great. In this composition Strauss has carried to the furthest point his theories and practices concerning the delineative function of music. He has gone to such extremes in his representation of the adventures of Don Quixote and Sancho Panza as more than once take him beyond the pale of music, and into the domain of imitative noise. All through the work he has employed every artifice of orchestral technique to illustrate and define the most concrete physical occurrences, the most violent contact with reality.

The representation of bleating sheep by the bleating of muted brass instruments, of a gale of wind by the whistling of a theatrical "wind machine," are most obvious and directly naturalistic of these. We are warned by the authoritative commentators that the gale is not a real gale, but one imagined by Don Quixote; yet the distinction seems to be one, so far as practical results are concerned, without a difference. Others are conditioned upon the conventionalities of musical representation, as the ponderous tones of the brass instruments that suggest the revolving arms of the windmill, or the crashing chords through which we are asked to see the drubbing of the fantastic knight by the penitents he has attacked.

Of the more imaginative appeal of really musical themes treated in the endless combinations of ingenious counterpoint and harmonic subtleties, the work is full; in fact, the score is compacted of them, and there is not a measure in it but that is intended to make its literal contribution to the story. There are hints of far-reaching psychological interpretation in the music—the introduction, in which the oncoming of the poor gentleman's madness is depicted, is full of such suggestiveness. So in the finale, in which the phantasms vanish and the realization of their vanity comes to him with the peace of death. And there are not a few passages of remarkable beauty of a purely musical sort, side by side with the most ruthless realistic cacophony.

Don Quixote "speaks nobly of the ideal" in music of truly ideal beauty and conviction in the third variation; in the fifth the vigil of the knight, his vision of the Ideal Woman, are expressed in strains of poetic and rapturious eloquence. In that very scene with the wind machine, where the knight imagines himself and his esquire riding through the air, the music gives something more than a hint of the breathless exaltation that Strauss would have us feel.

The thematic material out of which the piece is composed is of the characteristic Straussian quality; much of it is rich in beauty, in suggestiveness; much of it has real distinction. Of the marvelous technical mastery of the orchestra and of the thematic treatment it would be idle to dwell at this time. They are not to be fully taken in at a single hearing, but it is always plain that the master is at work, that his touch is precise, that for good or for ill he is accomplishing precisely what he is aiming at, without faltering, without uncertainty. The score is one of the fullest, and the instrumental apparatus required enormous. Yet the effect is often of singular delicacy of orchestration. There is passage after passage in which several solo instruments are playing almost alone with each other in independent part writing.

There is much to bewilder and to amaze in the work; much to offend the ear, even the ear that has been inured to the matter and the manner of Strauss through the hearing of his other works. There is needed a full preparation as to the parts of this story to be told, on the part of the listener, and also a new point of view, in approaching "Don Quixote," a complaisant frame of mind that is willing to grant the composer the postulates with which he sets out. But with all the willingness in the world it is difficult to accept it, as a whole, of musical value.

It is difficult to grant the composer's postulates, and much readjustment of ideas will be needed before "Don Quixote," with all its beauties, can be listened to as anything other than a tour de force. Nor will the question fail to present itself as to how far the composer means to be taken seriously in it; how far he is bent on carrying out the mystification suggested in his pedantic title with its conventional Italian description; how far he means to push the "fantastical" of which he gives warning in it.

There is no doubt a certain touch of irony in "Don Quixote," but there is so much besides the grotesque and ridiculous side of the rueful knight's nature presented in this portrait that it seems hardly necessary to assume that the composer is holding him up to unseemly and ignoble ridicule. Don Quixote without the grotesque element is not Don Quixote; but there is something of the sweeter, larger, pathetic side of his character set forth in this music.

The performance was a remarkable triumph over enormous technical difficulties, of superb brilliancy, and precision where brilliancy and precision were the hardest to obtain. Mr. Gericke accomplished wonders at every point. Mr. Krasselt and Mr. Zach played the 'cello and viola obligatos respectively, also of great difficulty, and played them beautifully.

The other numbers of the programme, in which no soloist appeared, were pieces more or less well known—Smetana's overture to his comic opera, "The Sold Bride"; Cesar Franck's symphonic poem, "The Wild Huntsman," and Beethoven's seventh symphony. The overture was played with splendid elasticity.

[94]

THE SUN, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1904.

"DON QUIXOTE" BY STRAUSS.

A REMARKABLE SET OF ORCHESTRAL VARIATIONS.

The Knight of La Mancha's Adventures Told in Weird Instrumental Pictures—Boston Symphony Orchestra Confuses an Attentive Carnegie Hall Audience.

In the spring of 1904 the musician's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of Strauss. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, having tried an unfamiliar work of that extraordinary discomposer on Philadelphia, brought it to New York, and last night at its fourth concert unmasked the thing before a meditative audience amid the cooling breezes of Carnegie Hall. The name of this work, heard for the first time in Gotham, is "Don Quixote." There was other music on the programme; some sceptics would omit the "other." The concert opened with Smetana's "Bartered Bride" overture, and after the Strauss upheaval the orchestra played César Franck's symphonic poem, "The Wild Huntsman," and Beethoven's seventh symphony.

None of these works need detain us now. The caracolings of the tonal Pegasus of Mr. Strauss might fitly furnish several columns with food for type. But a "marciful man is marciful to his beast." Let us not ride the critical Pegasus to the death. Mr. Strauss calls his "Don Quixote" an introduction, theme with variations and finale: fantastic variations on a theme of knightly character. That is a good deal of title, but it does not explain the half of this strange musical dream.

The general plan of the work is this: The introduction sets before us two leading themes, the one reresentative of Don Quixote and the other of Sancho Panza. The former embodies the knightly aspirations and wildly romantic illusions of Quixote, and the latter the rude common sense of Sancho. The introduction, as a whole, depicts the plunge of Don Quixote into the study of the literature of chivalry and his increasing hallucinations. At the close of this introduction the two themes are set forth in clear opposition to one another.

Then follow the ten variations. The first deals with the fight with the windmill. The second treats with the battle with the sheep. The third sets forth the dispute between the Knight and Sancho about honor and the plain comforts of life. The fourth variation represents the combat between Don Quixote and the band of pilgrims. The fifth is "The Knight's Vigil." Don Quixote sits up all night because he ought to, and is rewarded by a vision of his Dulcinea. Variation VI. recounts the meeting with the false Dulcinea and the Knight's amazement at the actual appearance of his vision.

The seventh variation depicts the ride through the air. The themes mount upward and the wind whistles (flutes in scrambling chromatics, harp, drum rolls and wind machine behind screen. Wagner turns over in his grave and murmurs, "What a Valkyr Don Quixote would have made!") Variation VIII.—Don Quixote discovers an empty boat and tries to play "Lohengrin." That work not having been written, the boat upsets, but the two are saved and give thanks with wind instruments religioso.

Variation IX. tells of Don Quixote's meeting with the two monks, whom he believes to be magicians. He puts them to flight. The monks, being ridiculous, are represented by bassoons. Now comes the final variation, which paints the overthrow of Don Quixote by the Knight of the White Moon. The finale shows the Knight, restored to his senses, making his last will and testament and lying down to die.

It goes without saying that this composition is utterly incomprehensible without the programme, which is elaborate and enters into infinitesimal details. But what boots it to discuss this point in the presence of the music of Richard Strauss? He is the arch romanticist of his time, and he proclaims in no uncertain terms his faith that he can say whatsoever he pleases to say in musical phraseology.

It is not strange, then, to find one programme annotator declaring that certain curious harmonies in the introduction "characterize admirably the well known tendency of Don Quixote toward false conclusions." This is humorous comment, though it be unintentionally so. Again, we are told that the work was written at a time when Strauss was inclined to poke fun at his own hyper-idealism.

Oh, when was that time? When did this huge combination of egotism and humor see the ludicrous side of his own nature? "Don Quixote" was composed in 1897, and in the following year Strauss wrote "Ein Heldenleben," in which he bodied forth in a magnificent proclamation his opinion of his own glory. Did not this Gargantuan funmaker mean in this composition to speak his mind about the puny romanticists who could not write as did the author of "A Hero's Life?" Is not this Strauss's criticism of his contemporaries?

But no matter. "Don Quixote" is a masterpiece of humorous composition. It is worthy of the writer of "Til Eulenspiegel." It is saved from much censorious comment by its epithet of "fantastic." That word covers a multitude of sins.

The composition has all the familiar earmarks of its writer's style. The harmonies of it are at times outrageous, wicked, obscene. It snorts and snarls and barks and squeals. It writhes in a wild confusion of disordered counterpoint, which is superb in its shattering of all accepted patterns and its triumphant demonstration of the author's mastery of technic. For in all the mad reeling of sounds, in this tumultuous orgy of dissonance and screaming instrumentation, a clear and tangible musical design is manifest. The fundamental themes are always in evidence; their contours form the framework of every development. These are Rabelaisian variations, indeed, but they are variations nevertheless, and not mere formless rhapsody.

The instrumentation is magnificent in its daring, in its picturesqueness and its wonderful ingenuity. Take the single episode of the fight with the sheep. What an amazing piece of instrumental imitation it is, to be sure! Possibly it is not a lofty musical achievement to make an orchestra imitate the bleating of a flock of sheep, but done as Strauss does it, it cannot fail to fill the mind with speculation as to the resources of music in gross materialism.

Here is not a single sheep, but a whole flock, old ewes and hoary rams, fresh muttons and shambling lambkins. You can hear every one of them—always providing, of course, that you know the composer is writing about sheep. Otherwise you might fancy that this was a description of a one-eyed Cyclops with a bad cold in his head. In the theme of the pilgrims, solemn as it is, there is a rich vein of humor. The ride through the air is not music at all: heaven alone knows what it is, but it is wonderful. In the death scene the tremolo of strings represents the chills of a fever. It is the old literal Strauss of "Tod und Verklaerung" again.

But enough. Strauss has once more shown us that he has a huge fund of Gulliver-like humor. He has again set before us a composition of which the technics are simply stupendous. There is no other man living who can write with such complexity, yet with such absolute mastery of form. There is not now, and there never was, another master who dared to outrage the nature of instruments as he does, yet he almost justifies his tortures by the results he obtains.

Whether all this detailed tone-painting is true musical art is a question which is bound to trouble the sincere mind. Certain it is that such music without the key is incomprehensible. Equally certain it is that there is in it a vast amount of crass ugliness. But let it be said that there is also much that is beautiful when considered simply as absolute music. Of high thematic invention there is not a great deal, yet the motives are thoroughly characteristic and perfectly adapted to the composer's purpose. Heve we a right to ask for more than that?

The work was beautifully played, too beautifully in places. Mr. Gericke was undoubtedly afraid to accentuate some of the vicious harmonies, and let their characteristic discordant notes sink into retirement. But the tonal web was gorgeous in its richness and splendor of color, its solidity, and its rounded sonority. Mr. Krasselt played the formidably difficult 'cello solo admirably, and Mr. Zach was successful with the less exacting viola solo.

NEW YORK HERALD,

FEBRUARY 19, 1904.

Strauss' "Don Quixote" Played.

The programme presented by Mr. Gericke at the Boston Orchestra's concert, in Carnegie Hall, last night, contained one of the most puzzling, yet remarkable, compositions New York has ever heard, namely, Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Don Quixote." Indeed, it is doubtful if anything in the coming visit of the composer himself will involve sensations or raise questions bigger than those occasioned yesterday by this most characteristic of his works.

To find numbers fit for association with such a composition was a problem which Mr. Gericke solved deftly. The list preserved a romantic character by opening with the overture to Smetana's charming opera, "The Bartered Bride," containing César Franck's symphonic poem, "The Wild Huntsman," and concluding with Beethoven's seventh symphony. The audience was large and as extravagant of applause as this orchestra's following ever permits itself to be.

"Don Quixote" is its composer's most astute attempt to represent character, mood, landscape and incident in terms of musical sound—and perhaps his most successful attempt. In form it consists of an introduction, in which is pictured the mania of the Knight of La Mancha for tales of chivalry, his confusion of thought and his madness; next a series of variations, descriptive of the Knight's wanderings, with Sancho Panza and their adventures; finally a broad period in which the old man's sanity is recovered and his life is closed.

Mr. Strauss uses ingenuity in executing this design, which is without a parallel in music, and he introduces some mechanical effects which are, to say the least, unique. The most sensational of these is a "wind machine," which last night was operated behind a screen by a frantic individual whose flying arms were the one humorous feature of an otherwise serious evening. The attitude of the audience toward the work, while uncertain at first, was eventually most enthusiastic.

THE WORLD:

FEBRUARY 21, 1904.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT

Georg Schumann's Suite "In Carnival Time" a Novelty.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a brisk, brief concert at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. The programme comprised Brahms's Fourth Symphony, two movements from Georg Schumann's suite "In Carnival Time" and Lalo's Spanish symphony for violin and orchestra. The solo part of the latter was played by Timothee Adamowski, who gave a fluent performance of this brilliant and shallow work.

The Schumann numbers were a novelty to most of the listeners. They present pleasing, melodious tonal mood pictures of carnival scenes, but beyond that claim very little serious attention.

The playing of the orchestra was as finished as usual. Mr. Gericks's conducting the Brahms symphony being especially characterized by his loving attention to this composition.

The house was brilliantly crowded, and the brevity of the concert came as a happy relief to matinee concert-goers.

MORNING TELEGRAPH,

FEBRUARY 19, 1904.

"DON QUIXOTE" PERFORMED HERE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Richard Strauss' Great Work.

APPLAUDED AT CARNEGIE HALL

Composer Imitates the "Ba-a-a-a!" of Sheep, and Adds a Wind Machine to the Score.

CARNEGIE HALL—Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote," at a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THE PROGRAMME.

Smetana..Overture to the opera, "The Bartered Bride."
Richard Strauss.."Don Quixote," Fantastic variations on a theme of knightly character, op. 35.
Cesar Franck..Symphonic Poem, "The Wild Huntsman."
Beethoven..Symphony in A Major, No. 7, op. 92.

By GUSTAV KOBBÉ.

There is one advantage about a Richard Strauss tone poem. No one can whistle it.

His "Don Quixote," which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Wilhelm Gericke conductor, played in Carnegie Hall last night, defies that familiarity which breeds contempt.

It is deeply interesting, but also disappointing—the latter because there are so many solo passages and so many finicky orchestral effects that the hearer longs at times for more of Strauss' colossal climaxes and frets because the great body of players is not more frequently employed. Still, there are but few whose disappointment will equal that of the lover of classical music, who told me after the concert that during the playing of "Don Quixote" he felt like asking the conductor for a transfer.

Realism of the Score.

Nowhere does Strauss, the ultra realist among musicians, push his realism to such extremes as in this tone poem. The work is a theme with variations, each of the latter depicting the knight of the sad mien and his humorous esquire, Sancho Panza, in one of the episodes from Cervantes. We have in the second variation the "ba-a-a-a" of the flock of sheep, which Don Quixote charges under the delusion that they are a hostile host. The bleating of the woolly enemies is produced on the muted brass.

Later, when the blindfolded knight and esquire have mounted the wooden horse and believe themselves to be carried through the air, Strauss does not hesitate to introduce a theatrical wind machine. The effect produced justifies the device—which, after all, is the main thing. A modern composer need hesitate at nothing, provided the result is found to be worth while. Last night the wind machine was placed behind a screen, the cloth sides of which bellied out like sails before a gale.

The work is of great length, but interesting throughout. The Don Quixote theme (played chiefly on a solo violoncello) and the Sancho Panza theme (viola) are clearly contrasted, the former dreamy and fantastic (the pathos of idealism allied to madness), the latter sanely humorous. There also is a theme of extreme beauty representing the Lady Dulcinea of Toboso.

Strauss' Tilt at Windmills.

"Don Quixote" in date of composition falls between "Thus Spake Zarathustra" and "A Hero's Life." It is Strauss' own tilt at the windmills of pessimism as represented by the former, after which he was ready for the optimism of "A Hero's Life"—the hero being none other than himself.

In last night's performance richer, warmer and more climacteric effects might have been produced. The Boston players are so near perfection on the technical side that depth of feeling sometimes is sacrificed to technique and beauty of tone. The audience, however, received the work and its interpretation with lively demonstrations of approval.

It will be interesting, during Strauss' coming visit to hear him conduct "Don Quixote" himself.

Last night's programme included also Smetana's "Bartered Bride" overture, Cesar Franck's symphonic poem, "The Wild Huntsman," and Beethoven's "Seventh Symphony."

NEW-YORK DAILY TRIBUNE,

FEBRUARY 19, 1904.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The fourth concert for this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which took place in Carnegie Hall last night, deserves a red letter (or a black mark) in the annals of music in New-York as being the occasion on which Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote" had its first performance in New-York. The incident invites to more extended discussion than time, and, it may also frankly be confessed, mood, allows at present. "Don Quixote" is either a wonderfully great musical composition or it is music gone mad. It would be rash to attempt to make pronouncement on either point on the spur of the moment, inasmuch as whichever view is taken a discussion of large and significant principles would have to precede its intelligent presentation. There are boundaries to every art beyond which it cannot go without sacrificing something of that which makes it an expression of the beautiful. But in the flux and change of things characteristic of the present time, all boundaries, and even foundations, seem to be shifting. There seems to be a vast delight in juggling with the senses and objectives, a large enjoyment in observing exchange and interchange of functions.

Once upon a time the fancy was pleasantly stirred by the sound of pattering raindrops on the roof or the singing of the wind through the trees, and the emotions, too, were powerfully quickened through association of ideas and awakened memories. But natural phenomena entered into music only through suggestion and delineation of feelings aroused by them. Now we are asked to recognize realistic mimicry of the rude sounds themselves as high art.

The wind can whistle through a knot hole with finer results than those achieved by Herr Strauss with all his ingenious use of orchestral devices supplemented by a theatrical wind machine, and the scraggiest flock of sheep that ever starved on the barren hills of Maine can bleat more successfully than Mr. Strauss's musicians, with all their training under the painstaking care and skill of Mr. Gericke, but that fact does not seem to enter into the case. Music, unless Mr. Strauss is wrong, is become uncompromisingly devoted to delineation of whatever it can suggest by the use of sounds plus a verbal or written account of the composer's purposes, and all the old notions of propriety and limitations have been wafted away on the wings of his grist mill and by the blasts of his wind machine. We cannot praise for the same reason that we cannot condemn. We are ourselves blown out to sea by the audacity of his effort and its success. There is a fascination, for the intellect at least, if not for the emotions, in his scheme. He conceives the idea of making music tell us of the story of Don Quixote, the hallucinations which filled his mind, the misfortunes into which those hallucinations led him, the essential loveliness of his ideals and his pathetic awakening at the moment of bodily dissolution; all this through instrumental music—aided by a programme. And he adopts a plan fascinating in its ingenuity, and containing within itself great poetical as well as musical potencies. It is the variation form, a form which he discloses to be as efficacious for caricature as Beethoven had shown it to be for transfiguration. He invents a group of symbols, which have in themselves the merit of characteristic expression—a melodic symbol of chivalry, which he permits to stand for the Knight of La Mancha; of gallantry, which means also Dulcinea del Toboso; of mental confusion, which, by a species of analogy, comprehensible only to the musically educated, can be associated with a singular succession of harmonies. He mixes all these things, and many more, up by a strange perversion of an artistic device which used to be polyphony, draws over the tonal fabric a veil of tones made mystical and mysterious by changing the voices of his brass instruments and—the Knight has muddled his brains, is mad and starts out on his woful adventures.

These are described in a series of variations of the themes colored and accentuated at the catastrophic moments with delineative devices as lofty as those which were made familiar to our grandmothers by pieces like "The Battle of Prague." But the imaginative power of the composer, his intuitive ingenuity, his knowledge of the mode of thought pursued by the multitude, are amazing, and while tastes and judgment condemn, intellect and the fancy are carried captive; and so "Don Quixote" held the attention of a numerous audience last night and called out prolonged applause.

Strauss's work took the place of the customary solo performance at the concert, and more than filled it. It was followed by Cesar Franck's "Chasseur maudit," which Mr. Thomas brought forward here in March, 1898—an essentially more poetic, if less irritating and fascinating, composition. Then the concert, which began brilliantly with Smetana's "Bartered Bride" overture, ended with Beethoven's seventh symphony, of which the Philharmonic Society had given us a noble performance as late as last Saturday night. Mr. Gericke and his men were in virtuoso mood. The conductor had spent marvellous pains to lay bare the web and woof of Strauss's composition, and gave us wonderfully lucid and brilliant results, possibly to the sacrifice of things in the score which were not designed to be beautiful.

NEW-YORK DAILY TRIBUNE.
FEBRUARY 21. 1904.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Without announcing the fact, Mr. Gericke produced a work unfamiliar to the local concert rooms at the fourth afternoon concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Carnegie Hall, yesterday. It consisted of two movements from a suite entitled "In Carnival Time," by Georg Schumann, at present conductor of the Singakademie, in Berlin. Mr. Gericke brought forward an overture of Schumann's last season and Walter Damrosch some variations of a jovial character a few weeks ago. Some serious variations, also, of his composition were heard here in the long ago, when we were still under the musical consulship of Theodore Thomas. All of this music has commanded respect for its soundness and its easy, unconstrained euphony. Herr Schumann does not feel himself burdened with a mission, either to destroy old forms or experiment with novel instrumental idioms; he is content with approved conceptions of musical beauty, and applies them in a manner deserving approbation. The pieces played yesterday were a gavotte and a quick movement of a humorous character. Both were pleasing, the latter built on a melody of the kind that sinks into the memory with a single hearing, and remains with the hearer for an hour or so afterward, unless dissipated by other strains. Good ballet music is the music admirably adapted to pretty diversion and aiming at nothing higher.

The Schumann compositions were preceded by Brahms's symphony in E. minor and Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnol," the latter played with a good deal of spirit and abundant tone, but much impurity of intonation by Mr. Timothée Adamowski, who shares the first desk in the orchestra with Mr. Arboe. The symphonies of Brahms offer a gratifying and gracious field to Mr. Gericke. It is plain that he loves them. They receive more than his usual painstaking care, and requite it by putting to shame the too common talk about their austerity and the sombreness of their instrumental color. The performance of the fourth yesterday was full of poetry, exquisite in nuance, fresh and convincing.

NEW YORK TIMES.
FEBRUARY 21, 1904.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Fourth Afternoon Concert in Carnegie Hall.

Brahms's Fourth Symphony and Pieces by Georg Schumann—Mr. Adamowski, Soloist.

The programme chosen by Mr. Gericke for the fourth afternoon concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, given yesterday in Carnegie Hall, seemed scarcely a happy one in its combination of styles and moods of music. It contained only three numbers. Brahms's E minor symphony, Lalo's concerto for violin to which he gave the name of "Spanish Symphony," and two movements from Georg Schumann's suite, "In Carnival Time," Opus 22. Mr. Timothee Adamowski who sits with Mr. Arbot at the first desk of the violins in the orchestra, was the soloist. Mr. Gericke has reached some of his most successful results in conducting the symphonies and other orchestral works of Brahms. It hardly seemed as if yesterday's performance was to be numbered among them. The symphony was played with finish, and there was much of the grave, rich beauty of the tone that especially characterizes Brahms's orchestration in it. But was all the dramatic energy, all the pregnant elegiac fire, all the exalted expression of contrasted power and joy that belong to this work set before the hearers. The performance was such as would have given joy as coming from most other orchestras, but the admirers of the Boston Orchestra have their expectations screwed house to the highest pitch.

The two pieces from Georg Schumann's delightful suite are by a composer whose work, so far as it has been heard here, has won admiration for its fresh and exuberant spirit, its ingenuity, and the skill and fine sense of color it shows in orchestration, rather than for depth and originality. The gavotte and humoreske played yesterday showed something of these qualities, but they scarcely have as much distinction as Schumann's overture "The Dawn of Love," that was heard here last season from Mr. Gericke, or the "Variations, or a Merry Theme," that Mr. Damrosch played at two of his Sunday concerts. The suite from which they are taken is entitled "In Carnival Time," but the mood of abandon, of irrepressible gayety, that ought to characterize that time only fitfully flickers through them. The gavotte is a good tune, and its presentation is clever both in formal development and in richness of orchestral garb; yet Schumann has not been able to escape from a certain cheapness that lingers about the gavotte rhythm, hackneyed by many imitators of the old-time formal grace of this dance. Nor does the "Humoreske" set the blood coursing faster, as in the revelry and hubbub of carnival time. Its pace is rapid and its rhythms are brisk, but the themes are pedestrian; they have little to captivate or to beguile. A certain distinction is needed, even in such light-hearted moments. The orchestra is brilliantly used here, too, and the music was worth a hearing as the work of one of the talented lesser men of the day.

Mr. Adamowski was not fortunate in fitting his concerto into the scheme of the afternoon's music. The "Symphonie Espagnole" is well written, has, indeed, certain passages of striking beauty, but it is longer than its substance really warrants, and there are dullnesses in it. The Spanish characteristic of vivacious rhythm and melody, now brilliant, now languorous, does indeed appear in it, but at intervals. Mr. Adamowski played with spirit, but not always with purity of intonation or finish of style.

THE SUN.
FEBRUARY 21, 1904.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Timothee Adamowski the Soloist at the Fourth Matinee.

The fourth afternoon concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. There was a large and amiable audience, which was remarkably cool at the outset and grew cooler and cooler as it listened to Mr. Gericke's meditative interpretation of Brahms's E minor symphony. It is not possible to burst into a storm of emotional excitement over this gentle and peaceful symphony at any time. Still less is it possible when it is hedged about with æsthetic caution and the stern repression of the left hand.

But those who were content to see in it a suave and contemplative frame of mind and to seek for pure and rich tonal beauty found rest and content for their spirits. The orchestra was in a lovely condition yesterday afternoon, and its roundness and smoothness of style were never more clearly in evidence than they were in the Brahms symphony. Nevertheless the audience, "sustained and soothed by an unfaltering trust" in the backs of the seats, sank back and rested and at the end applauded gently and carefully.

The solo performer of the occasion was Timothee Adamowski, the second concertmaster of the orchestra, who was heard in Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole." The cold hearted audience regarded the elegant Timotheus apathetically after the first movement. After the second it began to sit up and take notice. After the third it gave him a warm double round of applause. After the last it broke into prolonged demonstrations of joy and called him out till he smiled like rosy Aurora in June.

Mr. Adamowski's performance was of uneven merit, but sound excellence predominated. The bravura passages he played with great brilliancy and facile technic. There were a few slips in intonation, but these are so common that no one minds them much. Mr. Adamowski's cantilena yesterday showed unusual warmth and elegance. In short, his whole performance was characterized by a dashing grace and piquancy of style, varied by moments of delicate sentiment.

The concert came to an end with two movements from "In Carnival Time," an orchestral suite by Georg Schumann. These movements were an andantino and a humoreske. They are color studies without any serious thought in them. They were capably performed by Mr. Gericke's little company of virtuosi from Boston.

NEW YORK HERALD,
FEBRUARY 21, 1904.

BOSTON SYMPHONY IS HEARD AGAIN

Orchestra Plays with Its Usual Virtuosity at Carnegie Hall Concert.

There have been many more interesting hearings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra than that afforded by Mr. Gericke's programme at yesterday's matinee, in Carnegie Hall, although it may be said that the orchestra played with all its usual superb virtuosity.

The one really weighty number in the list was Brahms' E minor symphony, No 4. This over, there remained only Lalo's Spanish symphony for violin and orchestra, in D minor—in effect a concerto—and two movements from Georg Schumann's suite, "In Carneval Time," opus 22. The soloist was Mr. T. Adamowski.

Brahms' fourth symphony, especially its first two movements, demands the sort of treatment that the Boston Orchestra can give to it. An infusion of blood and muscle is, however, desirable in the two latter movements, and this was lacking yesterday. It seems to be no part of Mr. Gericke's usual purposes to be betrayed into excitement. Certainly he made the finale anything but the "energico e passionato" affair which the composer intended, and he ended the allegro giocoso with a distinct anti-climax.

Of the four movements of Lalo's violin symphony the scherzando is the most enjoyable, but the whole work is a slight waisted affair, with little to recommend it besides pleasing instrumentation. The same describes the Schumann suite.

Mr. Adamowski's playing of the symphony gave ample evidence of musicianship and pleased the audience hugely. The violinist was repeatedly recalled.

PUBLIC LEDGER
FEBRUARY 18, 1904.

STRAUSS'S "DON QUIXOTE"

An Example of Modern Programme Music Performed by the Boston Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Gericke, gave the fourth concert of its second series at the Academy of Music last evening with this programme:

Overture, "The Solo Bride".....Smetana
Spanish Symphony, violin and orchestra...Lalo
"Don Quixote".....R. Strauss Symphony in A major, No. 7.....Beethoven

The only unfamiliar music on this programme was the Strauss number, "Don Quixote," described as "Introduction, Theme with Variations and Finale: Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character," is not a recent composition. It was written after "Also sprach Zarathustra" and before "Ein Heldenleben," five or six years ago. But, being more than usually abstruse, and making extraordinary instrumental demands in relation to the results, no one but Theodore Thomas in this country has hitherto undertaken it. The commentators upon Strauss are not entirely at one in their elucidation of this "fantastic" piece of musical psychology. Though in a way it conforms with the definition of the title, its significance is conditioned upon the programme—the external suggestion of associated ideas. The introduction is intended to suggest the character of Don Quixote, lost in dreams of romance and chivalry. The Don Quixote motive, given to a violoncello, is typical of knight errantry, and it is developed with strange harmonies that are supposed to indicate "his tendency toward false conclusions"! The vision of the ideal woman is suggested by the oboe; there are trumpet calls to knightly action, and so forth, and a general confusion of muted instruments portrays the knight's growing madness. It is necessary to have all this explained. Otherwise, the effect of the music—at least on a first hearing—would be merely bewildering. Even as it is, the listener may at times wonder whether he himself, or else the composer, may not be as mad as Don Quixote.

The knight sets forth on his journey, closely followed by Sancho Panza, whose contrasted motive is given to a viola solo. Here we have the "theme with variations," each variation depicting a scene in the story, with accompanying mood of the solo part. There is the meeting with Dulcinea, the fight with the windmills, the battle with the host of Alifanfaron, with a suggestion of the dust-cloud, out of which comes the "ba-a" of the sheep, an extraordinary piece of imitation. The knight and the squire discuss their views of life; there is the adventure with the penitents and after this the knight's vigil. Presently we come to the supposed ride through the air; the two themes soar aloft, while the wind (from a wind-machine) whistles about them. So the work goes on, with the strangest progression, the most extraordinary instrumentation and with a serious idealism curiously interrupted by incidents of "realism" that are merely puerile. Finally, Don Quixote recovers from his illusions, the theme comes back to the conventional form, and the last movement is supposed to portray his more peaceful dreams and his approaching death.

The ingenuity of all this is wonderful, and the knowledge with which the complex scheme is wrought is imposing. In its actual musical appeal, the work is substantially a 'cello solo, expressing—like Berlioz's "Harold"—an individual character in many variable moods and conditions, these conditions being suggested by the orchestral background of "descriptive" music. This musical appeal is at many times direct and forceful, but that the main body of the work has any such effect as we are accustomed to associate with musical expression need not be affirmed. If there are beautiful passages, there are many more that strike one as merely dissonant and ugly. If it is a fact that music has passed beyond the region of emotion into that of intellectual ideas, this may be in the right line of development. Other compositions by Strauss that at first repelled we have come to like. Perhaps we may come to this. But certainly at the present stage, it was a relief to return to the sanity of Beethoven.

As a suggestion of the mere instrumental technic of Strauss, it may be worth while to record that "Don Quixote" is scored for one piccolo, two flutes, two oboes, one English horn, two clarinets, one bass clarinet, three bassoons, one double bassoon, six horns, three trumpets, three trombones, one tenor tuba, one bass tuba, kettle drums, snare drums, bass drum, cymbals, triangle, tambourine, wind machine, harp, sixteen first violins, sixteen second violins, twelve violas, ten 'cellos, eight double basses. Mr. Gericke directed all these forces with the utmost precision, and it may be assumed that no significant detail was lost.

The Smetana overture, with which the concert opened, calls for no new comment. Mr. Adamowski played the violin concerto—for so it should be called—agreeably and with some warmth of color, and after the confusion of Strauss came the pure delight of the seventh symphony. Mr. Gericke plays it without temperamental enthusiasm and with a seriousness that impaired its vitality; but his performance was admirably clear and coherent and the fine climax restored an atmosphere of hope and joy.

[96]

BOSTON JOURNAL—SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1904

MOZART'S E FLAT MAJOR IS PLAYED

Joy and Peace Imparted by the Master at Friday Afternoon's Symphony Concert.

RUSSIAN LYRIC A SUCCESS

Schumann-Heink Added to the Laurels Already Won—She was in Good Voice.

A fine performance of Mozart's E flat major symphony, such as introduced the sixteenth Symphony program, always stirs wonderment that the composer, poor, harassed and scorned, could have found for it, and the other two which he wrote at about the same time, so much loveliness, gentle longing, healthy strength and simple-hearted cheer. Truly, he might have taken as his motto, "My mind to me a kingdom is," and added that he nowhere else held the smallest fief. In this score are delicate distant beauties, hearty companionships and large firmness, which not even Beethoven could exceed in wholesome and intimate humanity. It gives joy, peace and encouragement, and it can never be let die so long as men "feel as they were wont to feel."

At the extreme of the program stood the vehemently demonstrative overture to Chabrier's "Gwendoline," and the orchestra rendered vigorous treatment to the several episodes that symbolize the conquering assault of the Danes upon Britain, the fancies of Harold about the delights and honors of love, followed by the glories of Walhalla, which overbear even the direful tragedies to which the invasion leads. This supplied an exciting conclusion.

Truly a Russian Victory.

Midway was set the "Lyric Poem" of the young Russian, Th. Akimenko, who has cast it, nicely orchestrated, into two chief phases. It is at first warmly sentimental in a melody sympathetically stated by the violas, and then comes an urgent, stormy passege, which broadens, rises and hurries to quite a climax, but then thinks better of its opposition, subsides and gives place to the original theme and manner. It might be a song of a broad river cause, temporarily disturbed by rapids and torrents, or a calm June day crossed by a not too violent storm. It was well read and pleased.

Mme. Schumann-Heink was gladly received, much applauded and more than once recalled after her two numbers, each of which she had chosen judiciously and to advantage. Her dramatic disposition filled deeply the large lament of Andromache over Hector's corpse in the third part of Max Bruch's "Achilles." When this cantata (to call it so) was produced in 1885 at the Lower Rhine Festival, the part of the fond and wretched wife was sung by Mme. Joachim, who, great as she was, could hardly have been more true and strong in the pathos, the bitter outcry and the sharp shriek of pain than was Mme. Schumann-Heink, who tempered the great woe for which the dull beat of the funeral music prepares the mind with sensible reserve and dignity.

Where Woman Loves.

Later she showed the quiet, womanly tenderness of homely moods in two songs by Brahms, the "Gestille Sehnsucht," longing and pathetic, and the "Geistliches Wiegenlied," reverent and pious, yet naturally maternal. These songs were accompanied at the pianoforte by Mr. Zach, with carefully subordinated viola obligato by Mr. Ferit.

At the next concert an entr' acte from Vincent d'Indy's opera, "L'Etranger," will be offered as the novelty, and Mr. Busoni is announced to play, his choice at present resting on Saint-Saens' fifth piano concerto. Schumann, Liszt and Wagner will be the other composers.

BOSTON COURIER, FEBRUARY 27, 1904

——There was an unusually fine attendance at the Symphony rehearsal, Friday afternoon, Mme. Schumann-Heinck being the soloist, and appearing to great advantage in a thin black gown, with many jewels, and a black picture hat. In the audience were noted Mr. Maurice Farkoa, of London, and Miss Mason, of "Three Little Maids" company, Mrs. George Bullard, Mrs. George B. Shattuck, Mr. and Mrs. James R. Poor, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hall, Mrs. Neal Rantoul, Mrs. William F. Humphrey, Mrs. William P. Fay, Miss Beatrice Blake, Miss Olivia Thorndike, Miss May Kenney, Miss Priscilla Stackpole, Mrs. Bryce J. Allan, Miss Nathalie Matthews, Miss Margaret Manning, Miss Clara Shattuck, Miss Collette Dumaresq, Miss Susan T. Thayer, Miss Emily Sargent, Miss Mary Russell, Miss May L. Greenleaf, Miss Anna Berry, Miss Lena Stevenson, Miss Catherine Foote, Miss Marion Ladd, Mr. John Williams, Miss Mollie Sargent, Miss Barbara Higginson and Miss Estelle Kimball.

SUNDAY GLOBE, FEBRUARY 28, 1904

Mme Schumann-Heink was the soloist at the 16th Symphony rehearsal and concert, singing Andromache's lament from the Bruch opera, "Achilles," and two songs by Brahms, Messrs Fevir and Zach playing the viola and piano accompaniments of the two arias. Mozart's beautiful E-flat minor symphony opened the program, and the other selections being a lyric poem by Akimenko, first time here, and the overture to Chabrier's opera, "Gwendoline." The gifted German contralto sang with her usual breadth and fullness of tonal power and with every appearance of being delighted with her surroundings, for her wholesome good nature was not even clouded by the serious type of her selections. The "Lament of Andromache" was given with splendid effect, though doubtless something of lighter musical caliber would have better suited a majority of her auditors, but the art of the great contralto was not to be denied, for her organlike tones were as rich, vibrant and sonorous as could be desired, and her phrasing and expression seemed nearly flawless.

In the two songs by Brahms her sympathetic interpretations were even more pleasing than in the Bruch number, and she had fitting associates in Messrs Fevir and Zach, whose accompaniments on viola and piano were very fine. The applause, which was complimenary, after the first number was spontaneous and very hearty after the Brahms group, the popular artist being summoned back many times.

The lyric poem by Akimenko, which was not specially interesting, has some clever ideas of a desultory nature expressed in a musicianly way, without any marked suggestion of originality in matter or method. The orchestra played the piece smoothly and interpreted it according to Mr Gericke's reading.

The performance of Mozart's noble symphony may be praised unreservedly. It was musical poetry interpreted in the best vein of the orchestra, sympathetic and perfect in ensemble. The "Gwendoline" overture was given with due regard to its wild, tumultuous nature, the vigor of the performance according properly with the motif of the barbaric story.

Mr F. Busoni will be the soloist at this week's concerts, playing Saint-Saens' fifth concerto. The orchestral selections include Schumann's first symphony, the entr'acte from "L'Etranger," by Vincent d'Indy; Liszt's "Todtentanz" and an excerpt from "Die Meistersinger."

SUNDAY POST, FEBRUARY 28, 1904

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

Mme. Schumann-Heink, the Soloist, Is Heard in a Group of Brahms's Songs—A Lyric Poem by Akimenko Heard for the First Time Here

The Symphony Orchestra returned from its tour and gave the customary rehearsal and concert with Mme. Schumann-Heink as the soloist. The programme was made up of Mozart's symphony in E flat, the Lament from Bruch's "Achilles," a lyric poem by Akimenko, heard for the first time here; the overture to Chabrier's "Gwendoline," and a group of songs by Brahms.

Mme. Schumann-Heink was in superb voice and was heard to better advantage than when appearing in opera. In the first piece the soloist was accompanied by the viola and the pianoforte, but in the "Cradle Song of the Virgin" the viola played the melody. Seldom has the lady created a more favorable impression.

The next rehearsal and concert will be given on Friday afternoon and evening of this week and the soloist will be F. Busoni, pianist.

SOCIETY AT THE SYMPHONY REHEARSAL

There was an unusually fine attendance at the Symphony rehearsal Friday afternoon, Mme. Schumann-Heink being the soloist, and appearing to great advantage in a thin black gown, with many jewels and a black picture hat. In the audience were noted Mr. Maurice Farkoe of London and Miss Mason of "Three Little Maids" company, Mrs. George Bullard, Mrs. George B. Shattuck, Mr. and Mrs. James R. Poor, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hall, Mrs. Neal Rantoul, Mrs. William F. Humphrey, Mrs. William P. Fay, Miss Beatrice Blake, Miss Olivia Thorndike, Miss May Kenney, Miss Priscilla Stackpole, Mrs. Bryce J. Allan, Miss Nathalie Matthews, Miss Margaret Manning, Miss Clara Shattuck, Miss Collette Dumaresq, Miss Susan Thayer, Miss Emily Sargent, Miss Mary Russell, Miss May L. Greenleaf, Miss Anna Berry, Miss Lena Stevenson, Miss Catherine Foote, Miss Marian Ladd, Mr. John Williams, Miss Mollie Sargent, Miss Barbara Higginson and Miss Estelle Kimball.

SUNDAY HERALD, SUNDAY, FEB. 28, 1904.

The 16th Symphony concert, Mr. Gericke conductor, was given last night in Symphony Hall. The programme was as follows:

Symphony in E flat.....Mozart
Andromache's Lament from "Achilles"..Bruch
Lyric Poem, op. 20.....Akimenko
(First time.)
Two songs with viola and pianoforte accompaniment, op. 91.....Brahms
(a) Longing at Rest.
(b) Cradle Song of the Virgin.
Overture to the opera "Gwendoline"..Chabriet

Of the three famous symphonies composed by Mozart in 1788, the one in E flat is the most old-fashioned, and readers of the fantastical and blood-curdling Hoffman, who was the first critic in Germany to appreciate fully the romantic genius of Beethoven, may well wonder at his rhapsody over this symphony. It is true that symphonies by Hayden and Mozart should be played by a small orchestra and in a small hall, where the bite of the strings is keenly felt, where the musical fluid quickly enwraps the hearer. Wood-wind instruments may be doubled in the modern full orchestra, and yet there is an absence of the proportion, which is everything in Mozart's music. The symphony in G minor has been so highly praised that it has met the fate of Aristides the Just: but how superior it is to this symphony, which in the first and second movements is square-toed in its formulas! The performance was precise and euphonious.

Akimenko's "Lyric Poem," composed in 1898, and published last year, was played here for the first time. The composer is a pupil of Rimsky-Korsakoff, but no matter how great a teacher may be he cannot put broad or beautiful musical ideas into a pupil's head. Akimenko has written little for orchestra; his works are chiefly piano pieces, small chamber pieces, and songs. This "poem" is built on a sentimental and commonplace theme, and the development of it is interesting only in a few passages of orchestral color. The manner in which material from the contrasting episode is afterward employed is amateurish and at times ugly.

Mrs. Schumann-Heink sang Andromache's lament over the body of Hector from Bruch's "Achilles." The music itself recalled the old story of the Frenchman whose wife died. Complimented on his grief at the funeral ceremonies at the house, the bereaved one asked anxiously: "Did you go to the grave?" "No," answered his friend, "but every one thought wou would go crazy at the house." "Ah," said the widower, "you should have seen me at the grave." Bruch's music has neither the noble antique spirit nor true modern intensity. Mrs. Schumann-Heink was in much better voice than at her late recital, and she sang with a far greater display of vocal artistry. Her mannerisms and failings were not in evidence, and on the whole her performance was the finest she has given here, either in opera or in concert. The two songs by Brahms were made endurable by the exquisite tone and sympathy of Mr. Ferir, who played the viola. The "Cradle Song" has a pretty refrain, but "Gestillte Sehnsucht" is without melody or mood. The singer was recalled again and again.

The orchestral feature of the evening was Chabrier's magnificent overture, which was played with appropriate fire and brilliance. The untimely death of this highly original composer was as great a loss to France as that of Bizet. He had superb ideas; he knew how to express them. His language was varied and supple in its eloquence; in his passion there was beauty as well as strength. For daring and successful rhythmical effects, he has never been surpassed, if equalled, and his orchestral palette blazed with gorgeousness. Would that we could hear more music like this overture! Would there were more music like it!

Mme. Schumann-Heinck was the soloist at the Symphony rehearsal Friday afternoon, and admirably well she looked in a black chiffon gown over black silk, the bodice brightened with diamonds, and a black picture hat. There was an especially large number of smart young girls in the audience, among them Miss Priscilla Stackpole, Miss Nathalie Matthews, Miss Collette Dumaresq, Miss Susan Thayer, Miss Barbara Higginson, Miss Estelle Kimball, Miss May Kenney, Miss Beatrice Blake, Miss Clara Shattuck, Miss Lena Stevenson, Miss Katharine Foote, Miss Marion Ladd, Miss May Greenleaf and Miss Olivia Thorndike. Also were there Mr. Maurice Farkoa, who sings such delicious French songs in the "Three Little Maids," and who is such a social favorite in London; Mrs. William Endicott, Jr., Mrs. Neal Rantoul, Mrs. George Bullard and Miss Maude Adams, looking exceedingly pretty, who was with a party including her leading man, Mr. Ainley of London.

[97]

BOSTON JOURNAL—SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1904

MOZART'S E FLAT MAJOR IS PLAYED

Joy and Peace Imparted by the Master at Friday Afternoon's Symphony Concert.

RUSSIAN LYRIC A SUCCESS

Schumann-Heink Added to the Laurels Already Won—She was in Good Voice.

A fine performance of Mozart's E flat major symphony, such as introduced the sixteenth Symphony program, always stirs wonderment that the composer, poor, harassed and scorned, could have found for it, and the other two which he wrote at about the same time, so much loveliness, gentle longing, healthy strength and simple-hearted cheer. Truly, he might have taken as his motto, "My mind to me a kingdom is," and added that he nowhere else held the smallest fief. In this score are delicate distant beauties, hearty companionships and large firmness, which not even Beethoven could exceed in wholesome and intimate humanity. It gives joy, peace and encouragement, and it can never be let die so long as men "feel as they were wont to feel."

At the extreme of the program stood the vehemently demonstrative overture to Chabrier's "Gwendoline," and the orchestra rendered vigorous treatment to the several episodes that symbolize the conquering assault of the Danes upon Britain, the fancies of Harold about the delights and honors of love, followed by the glories of Walhalla, which overbear even the direful tragedies to which the invasion leads. This supplied an exciting conclusion.

Truly a Russian Victory.

Midway was set the "Lyric Poem" of the young Russian, Th. Akimenko, who has cast it, nicely orchestrated, into two chief phases. It is at first warmly sentimental in a melody sympathetically stated by the violas, and then comes an urgent, stormy passege, which broadens, rises and hurries to quite a climax, but then thinks better of its opposition, subsides and gives place to the original theme and manner. It might be a song of a broad river cause, temporarily disturbed by rapids and torrents, or a calm June day crossed by a not too violent storm. It was well read and pleased.

Mme. Schumann-Heink was gladly received, much applauded and more than once recalled after her two numbers, each of which she had chosen judiciously and to advantage. Her dramatic disposition filled deeply the large lament of Andromache over Hector's corpse in the third part of Max Bruch's "Achilles." When this cantata (to call it so) was produced in 1885 at the Lower Rhine Festival, the part of the fond and wretched wife was sung by Mme. Joachim, who, great as she was, could hardly have been more true and strong in the pathos, the bitter outcry and the sharp shriek of pain than was Mme. Schumann-Heink, who tempered the great woe for which the dull beat of the funeral music prepares the mind with sensible reserve and dignity.

Where Woman Loves.

Later she showed the quiet, womanly tenderness of homely moods in two songs by Brahms, the "Gestille Sehnsucht," longing and pathetic, and the "Geistliches Wiegenlied," reverent and pious, yet naturally maternal. These songs were accompanied at the pianoforte by Mr. Zach, with carefully subordinated viola obligato by Mr. Ferit.

At the next concert an entr' acte from Vincent d'Indy's opera, "L'Etranger," will be offered as the novelty, and Mr. Busoni is announced to play, his choice at present resting on Saint-Saens' fifth piano concerto. Schumann, Liszt and Wagner will be the other composers.

BOSTON COURIER, FEBRUARY 27, 1904

[illegible] there was an unusually fine attendance at the Symphony rehearsal Friday afternoon, Mme. Schumann-Heink being the soloist, and appearing to great advantage in a thin black gown, with many jewels, and a black picture hat. In the audience were noted Mr. Maurice Farkoa of London and Miss Mason of "Three Little Maids" company, Mrs. George Bullard, Mrs. George B. Shattuck, Mr. and Mrs. James R. Poor, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hall, Mrs. Neal Rantoul, Mrs. William F. Humphrey, Mrs. William P. Fay, Miss Beatrice Blake, Miss Olivia Thorndike, Miss May Kenney, Miss Priscilla Stackpole, Mrs. Bryce J. Allan, Miss Nathalie Matthews, Miss Margaret Manning, Miss Clara Shattuck, Miss Collette Dumaresq, Miss Susan Thayer, Miss Emily Sargent, Miss Mary Russell, Miss May L. Greenleaf, Miss Anna Berry, Miss Lena Stevenson, Miss Catherine Foote, Miss Marion Ladd, Mr. John Williams, Miss Mollie Sargent, Miss Barbara Higginson and Miss Estelle Kimball.

SUNDAY GLOBE—FEBRUARY 28, 1904.

Mme Schumann-Heink was the soloist at the 16th Symphony rehearsal and concert, singing Andromache's lament from the Bruch opera, "Achilles," and two songs by Brahms, Messrs Fevir and Zach playing the viola and piano accompaniments of the two arias. Mozart's beautiful E-flat minor symphony opened the program, and the other selections being a lyric poem by Akimenko, first time here, and the overture to Chabrier's opera, "Gwendoline." The gifted German contralto sang with her usual breadth and fullness of tonal power and with every appearance of being delighted with her surroundings, for her wholesome good nature was not even clouded by the serious type of her selections. The "Lament of Andromache" was given with splendid effect, though doubtless something of lighter musical caliber would have better suited a majority of her auditors, but the art of the great contralto was not to be denied, for her organlike tones were as rich, vibrant and sonorous as could be desired, and her phrasing and expression seemed nearly flawless.

In the two songs by Brahms her sympathetic interpretations were even more pleasing than in the Bruch number, and she had fitting associates in Messrs Fevir and Zach, whose accompaniments on viola and piano were very fine. The applause, which was complimenary, after the first number was spontaneous and very hearty after the Brahms group, the popular artist being summoned back many times.

The lyric poem by Akimenko, which was not specially interesting, has some clever ideas of a desultory nature expressed in a musicianly way, without any marked suggestion of originality in matter or method. The orchestra played the piece smoothly and interpreted it according to Mr Gericke's reading.

The performance of Mozart's noble symphony may be praised unreservedly. It was musical poetry interpreted in the best vein of the orchestra, sympathetic and perfect in ensemble. The "Gwendoline" overture was given with due regard to its wild, tumultuous nature, the vigor of the performance according properly with the motif of the barbaric story.

Mr F. Busoni will be the soloist at this week's concerts, playing Saint-Saens' fifth concerto. The orchestral selections include Schumann's first symphony, the entr'acte from "L'Etranger," by Vincent d'Indy; Liszt's "Todtentanz" and an excerpt from "Die Meistersinger."

SUNDAY POST, FEBRUARY 28, 1904

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

Mme. Schumann-Heink, the Soloist, Is Heard in a Group of Brahms's Songs—A Lyric Poem by Akimenko Heard for the First Time Here

The Symphony Orchestra returned from its tour and gave the customary rehearsal and concert with Mme. Schumann-Heink as the soloist. The programme was made up of Mozart's symphony in E flat, the Lament from Bruch's "Achilles," a lyric poem by Akimenko, heard for the first time here; the overture to Chabrier's "Gwendoline," and a group of songs by Brahms.

Mme. Schumann-Heink was in superb voice and was heard to better advantage than when appearing in opera. In the first piece the soloist was accompanied by the viola and the pianoforte, but in the "Cradle Song of the Virgin" the viola played the melody. Seldom has the lady created a more favorable impression.

The next rehearsal and concert will be given on Friday afternoon and evening of this week and the soloist will be F. Busoni, pianist.

SOCIETY AT THE SYMPHONY REHEARSAL

There was an unusually fine attendance at the Symphony rehearsal Friday afternoon, Mme. Schumann-Heink being the soloist, and appearing to great advantage in a thin black gown, with many jewels and a black picture hat. In the audience were noted Mr. Maurice Farkoe of London and Miss Mason of "Three Little Maids" company, Mrs. George Bullard, Mrs. George B. Shattuck, Mr. and Mrs. James R. Poor, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hall, Mrs. Neal Rantoul, Mrs. William F. Humphrey, Mrs. William P. Fay, Miss Beatrice Blake, Miss Olivia Thorndike, Miss May Kenney, Miss Priscilla Stackpole, Mrs. Bryce J. Allan, Miss Nathalie Matthews, Miss Margaret Manning, Miss Clara Shattuck, Miss Collette Dumaresq, Miss Susan Thayer, Miss Emily Sargent, Miss Mary Russell, Miss May L. Greenleaf, Miss Anna Berry, Miss Lena Stevenson, Miss Catherine Foote, Miss Marian Ladd, Mr. John Williams, Miss Mollie Sargent, Miss Barbara Higginson and Miss Estelle Kimball.

SUNDAY HERALD

SUNDAY, FEB. 28, 1904.

The 16th Symphony concert, Mr. Gericke conductor, was given last night in Symphony Hall. The programme was as follows:

Symphony in E flat.....Mozart
Andromache's Lament from "Achilles"..Bruch
Lyric Poem, op. 20.....Akimenko
(First time.)
Two songs with viola and pianoforte accompaniment, op. 91.....Brahms
(a) Longing at Rest.
(b) Cradle Song of the Virgin.
Overture to the opera "Gwendoline"..Chabrier

Of the three famous symphonies composed by Mozart in 1788, the one in E flat is the most old-fashioned, and readers of the fantastical and blood-curdling Hoffman, who was the first critic in Germany to appreciate fully the romantic genius of Beethoven, may well wonder at his rhapsody over this symphony. It is true that symphonies by Hayden and Mozart should be played by a small orchestra and in a small hall, where the bite of the strings is keenly felt, where the musical fluid quickly enwraps the hearer. Wood-wind instruments may be doubled in the modern full orchestra, and yet there is an absence of the proportion, which is everything in Mozart's music. The symphony in G minor has been so highly praised that it has met the fate of Aristides the Just: but how superior it is to this symphony, which in the first and second movements is square-toed in its formulas! The performance was precise and euphonious.

Akimenko's "Lyric Poem," composed in 1898, and published last year, was played here for the first time. The composer is a pupil of Rimsky-Korsakoff, but no matter how great a teacher may be he cannot put broad or beautiful musical ideas into a pupil's head. Akimenko has written little for orchestra; his works are chiefly piano pieces, small chamber pieces, and songs. This "poem" is built on a sentimental and commonplace theme, and the development of it is interesting only in a few passages of orchestral color. The manner in which material from the contrasting episode is afterward employed is amateurish and at times ugly.

Mrs. Schumann-Heink sang Andromache's lament over the body of Hector from Bruch's "Achilles." The music itself recalled the old story of the Frenchman whose wife died. Complimented on his grief at the funeral ceremonies at the house, the bereaved one asked anxiously: "Did you go to the grave?" "No," answered his friend, "but every one thought wou would go crazy at the house." "Ah," said the widower, "you should have seen me at the grave." Bruch's music has neither the noble antique spirit nor true modern intensity. Mrs. Schumann-Heink was in much better voice than at her late recital, and she sang with a far greater display of vocal artistry. Her mannerisms and failings were not in evidence, and on the whole her performance was the finest she has given here, either in opera or in concert. The two songs by Brahms were made endurable by the exquisite tone and sympathy of Mr. Ferir, who played the viola. The "Cradle Song" has a pretty refrain, but "Gestillte Sehnsucht" is without melody or mood. The singer was recalled again and again.

The orchestral feature of the evening was Chabrier's magnificent overture, which was played with appropriate fire and brilliance. The untimely death of this highly original composer was as great a loss to France as that of Bizet. He had superb ideas; he knew how to express them. His language was varied and supple in its eloquence; in his passion there was beauty as well as strength. For daring and successful rhythmical effects, he has never been surpassed, if equalled, and his orchestral palette blazed with gorgeousness. Would that we could hear more music like this overture! Would there were more music like it!

Mme. Schumann-Heinck was the soloist at the Symphony rehearsal Friday afternoon, and admirably well she looked in a black chiffon gown over black silk, the bodice brightened with diamonds, and a black picture hat. There was an especially large number of smart young girls in the audience, among them Miss Priscilla Stackpole, Miss Nathalie Matthews, Miss Collette Dumaresq, Miss Susan Thayer, Miss Barbara Higginson, Miss Estelle Kimball, Miss May Kenney, Miss Beatrice Blake, Miss Clara Shattuck, Miss Lena Stevenson, Miss Katharine Foote, Miss Marion Ladd, Miss May Greenleaf and Miss Olivia Thorndike. Also were there Mr. Maurice Farkoa, who sings such delicious French songs in the "Three Little Maids," and who is such a social favorite in London; Mrs. William Endicott, Jr., Mrs. Neal Rantoul, Mrs. George Bullard and Miss Maude Adams, looking exceedingly pretty, who was with a party including her leading man, Mr. Ainley of London.

[97]

DAILY ADVERTISER,

FEBRUARY 29, 1904.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Programme.

Symphony in E flat major (K. 543).....Mozart
Andromache's Lament, from "Achilles." (Part II., No. 3), op. 50. "The dawn still lingers".....Max Bruch
Mme. Schumann-Heink.
Lyric Poem, for Orchestra, op. 20 (First time).....Th. Akimenko
Two Songs with Viola and Piano accompaniment, op. 91.....Brahms
(a) "Longing at Rest."
(b) "Cradle Song of the Virgin."
Mme. Schumann-Heink.
Overture to the Opera "Gwendoline".....Emil Chabrier

The symphony which began the programme was the first in which the clarinette was introduced and has therefore been called the "Clarinette Symphony." It was one of a group of 3, and its companions, the "Jupiter" and the ever-glorious G minor symphony, were both greater than this work in E flat. But it still charms, and the fact that Mr. Gericke was recalled to the platform after its conclusion proves that Mozart is not quite obsolete, even in these days of vivid tone-coloring.

The work was read with much vigor, particularly its finale, and Mr. Gericke evidently enjoyed bringing out its dainty points. Nevertheless, the symphonies of Mozart, outside of the 3 mentioned, are becoming obsolete and do not wear as well as Haydn's pleasant musical prattle.

Mme. Schumann-Heink was in noble voice and sang the unpleasant aria of Andromache, as evolved by the warlike Bruch, with incredible fervor. The frenzied grief that permeates this number requires the footlight flavor, which was so out of place in Mme. Schumann-Heink's recent recital of German "Lieder." The vocalist was great in her declamatory effects and gave the subsequent monotony of grief and despair with impressive majesty. The work is, however, not one of Bruch's best. The plaint of Ingeborg, in his masterpiece, "Frithjof," is infinitely more pathetic.

In Mme. Schumann-Heink's subsequent numbers, by Brahms, a success was won by the instrumentalists as well as the vocalist. But Brahms is not a passionate composer, and the first of these two songs, which dealt with longing, might as well have dealt with mathematics, for all that its emotional power was concerned. We can understand why the intense Tschaikowsky considered Brahms a mediocrity posing as a genius. Composers are seldom the best judges of other composers.

But there was genius in the serene and lofty "cradle song of the virgin," and Mme. Schumann-Heink sang it most effectively. Her rich voice blended beautifully with the dark, mournful tones of the viola, and Mr. Ferir played the latter instrument with most sympathetic quality of tone. Recall followed recall at the end of this song, vocally the gem of the concert.

We may here announce in very large head-lines,—"Another Russian Defeat"! !—for Akimenko's lyric poem for orchestra was at the best a Pyrrhic victory, a "success d'estime." But in the field of music the Russians seldom suffer defeat. Their melodic charm is a constant rebuke to the Germans, for they manage to retain tune, while making as bold flights in orchestration as any Teuton of them all!

Almost every true Russian work has a melodic foundation. Akimenko, too, has not left the melodic path, but there seems to be less of inspiration in his climaxes and less of coherency in his treatment than we find in the works of his Muscovite brethren.

Chabrier's "Gwendoline" overture was given with much power. It has some very broad climaxes and some effective contrasts, but we do not find the sure hand, the delicate touches of a Bizet, in its measures. We have not as much faith in the modern French school as in the Russian. There is not the firm folk-song foundation, for one thing, and there is too much of straining for effect, for another. Chabrier is not so extreme as D'Indy or Debussy, nor so clear and shapely as Widor.

What a leap the French have made in the past century! Not so long ago they had perfect grace and daintiness, as shown in the works of a Boieldieu; Ambroise Thomas was the last of that tribe; now they try to out-Wagner Wagner. The "Gwendoline" overture deserves praise that it does not indulge in the fierce Gallic extremes of the present.

Louis C. Elson.

BLANK PAGE

CUT-OUT

BLANK PAGE

CUT-OUT COLORED PAPER

799.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Season 1903-1904.
$12 REHEARSALS.

FLOOR.

Premium.

Name,

799.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Season 1903-1904.
$12 CONCERTS.

FLOOR.

Premium,

Name,

999.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Season 1903-1904.
$12 REHEARSALS.

First BAL. Right.

Premium.

Name.

999.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Season 1903-1904.
$12 CONCERTS.

First BAL. Right.

Premium.

Name.

1199.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Season 1903-1904.
$12 REHEARSALS.

First BAL. Left.

Premium.

Name,

1199.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Season 1903-1904.
$12 CONCERTS.

First BAL. Left.

Premium.

Name.

1399.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Season 1903-1904.
$12 CONCERTS.

First BAL. Centre.

Premium.

Name,

499.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Season 1903-1904.
$7.50 REHEARSALS.

First BAL. Centre.

Premium.

Name,

COLORED PAPER

499.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1903-1904.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

First BAL. Centre,

Premium,

Name,

599.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1903-1904.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second BAL. Right,

Premium,

Name,

699.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1903-1904.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second BAL. Left,

Premium,

Name,

999.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1903-1904.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second BAL. Centre,

Premium,

Name,

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

POSTAGE ONE CENT.

1843 - McKINLEY - 1901.

THE SPACE ABOVE IS RESERVED FOR POSTMARK.

POSTAL CARD.

THE SPACE BELOW IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY.

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SYMPHONY HALL

HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVES.

Boston, October 1, 1903.

AUCTION SALE of $12 SEASON TICKETS for the SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS, at Symphony Hall, this (THURSDAY) morning, at TEN o'clock.

POSTAL CARD - ONE CENT.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

THIS SIDE IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON and MASSACHUSETTS AVENUES, BOSTON

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA FOUNDED EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

CHARLES A. ELLIS, MANAGER : : : : : FREDERIC R. COMEE, ASSISTANT MANAGER

TELEPHONE { For Tickets Only : : 1492 / Administration Offices 1471 } BACK BAY

[102]

COLORED PAPER

299.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1903-1904.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

FLOOR.....

Premium,.....

Name,.....

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

THE SPACE BELOW IS FOR POSTMARK.

POSTAL CARD.

THE SPACE BELOW IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY.

POSTAGE ONE CENT.

WILLIAM McKINLEY 1901

499.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1903-1904.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

First BAL. Centre,

Premium,

Name,

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
SYMPHONY HALL

October 1, 190

AUCTION SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION TICKETS for the Hall, this THURSDAY

599.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1903-1904.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second BAL. Right,

Premium,

Name,.....

699.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1903-1904.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second BAL. Left,

Premium,.....

Name,

999.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1903-1904.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second BAL. Centre,

Premium,

Name,.....

SYMPHONY HALL
HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVENUES

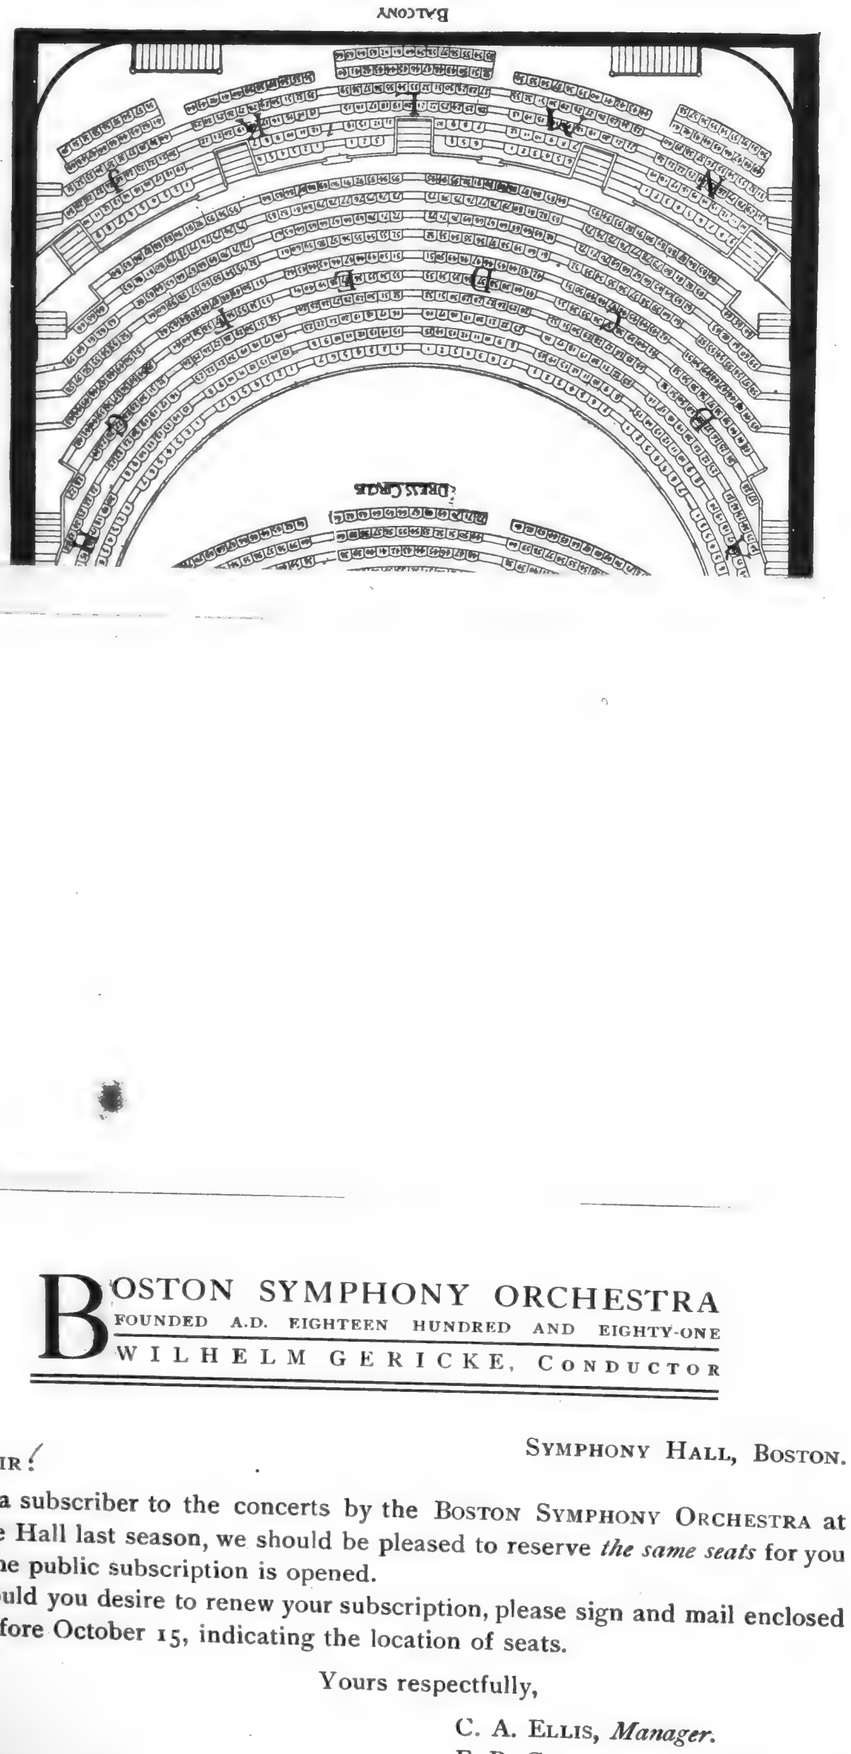
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON, 1903-1904

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

94 Performers. Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

CARNEGIE HALL
NEW YORK
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR

(OVER)



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

DEAR SIR:

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

DEAR MADAM:

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

SYMPHONY HALL

HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVENUES

TWENTY-THIRD SEASON, 1903-1904

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

94 Performers. Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive SATURDAY EVENINGS from October 17, 1903, to April 30, 1904, omitting November 7, December 12, 1903, January 16, February 20, and March 19, 1904, and

Twenty-four Public Rehearsals

On consecutive FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from October 16, 1903, to April 29, 1904, omitting November 6, December 11, 1903, January 15, February 19, and March 18, 1904

SOLOISTS

Mme. Melba, Mme. Gadski, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Mr. Gilibert, Miss Aus Der Ohe, Mme. Hopekirk, Miss Maud Mac Carthy, Miss Olive Mead, Mr. Busoni, Mr. Harold Bauer, Mr. Rafael Joseffy, Mr. George Proctor, Mr. M. Fernandez Arbos, Mr. T. Adamowski, Mr. Rudolph Krasselt, and others.

TICKETS for the series of CONCERTS and for the series of REHEARSALS, $12.00 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, MONDAY, September 28, at 10 a.m.

The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, TUESDAY, September 29, at 10 a.m.

The $12 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall on THURSDAY, October 1, at 10 a.m.

The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, October 2, at 10 a.m.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

TICKETS WILL BE DELIVERED IN THE HALL, AND MUST BE PAID FOR AS SOON AS BOUGHT, OR THEY WILL BE IMMEDIATELY RESOLD

(OVER)

CARNEGIE HALL

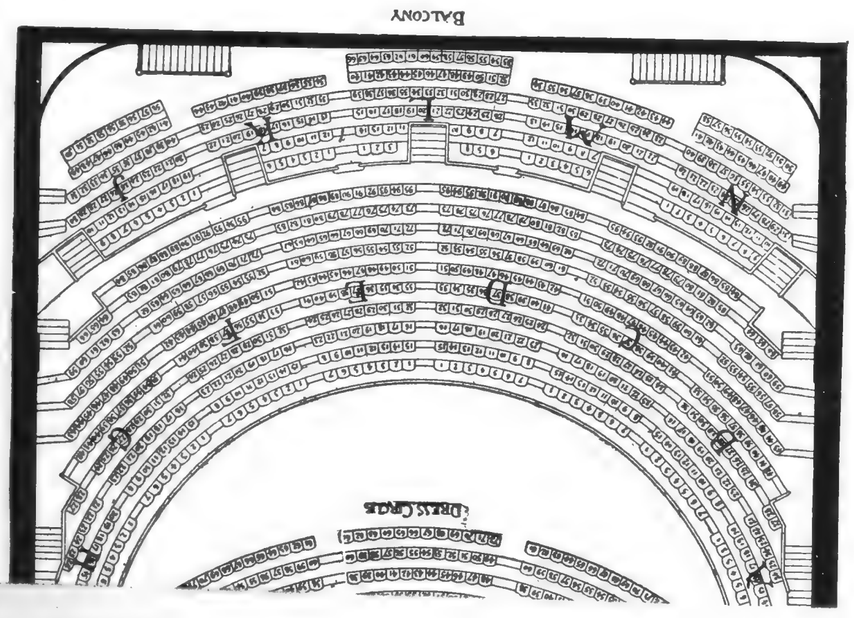
NEW YORK

TWENTY-THIRD SEASON

NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR

(OVER)

BALCONY



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you on is opened.

enew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed dicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

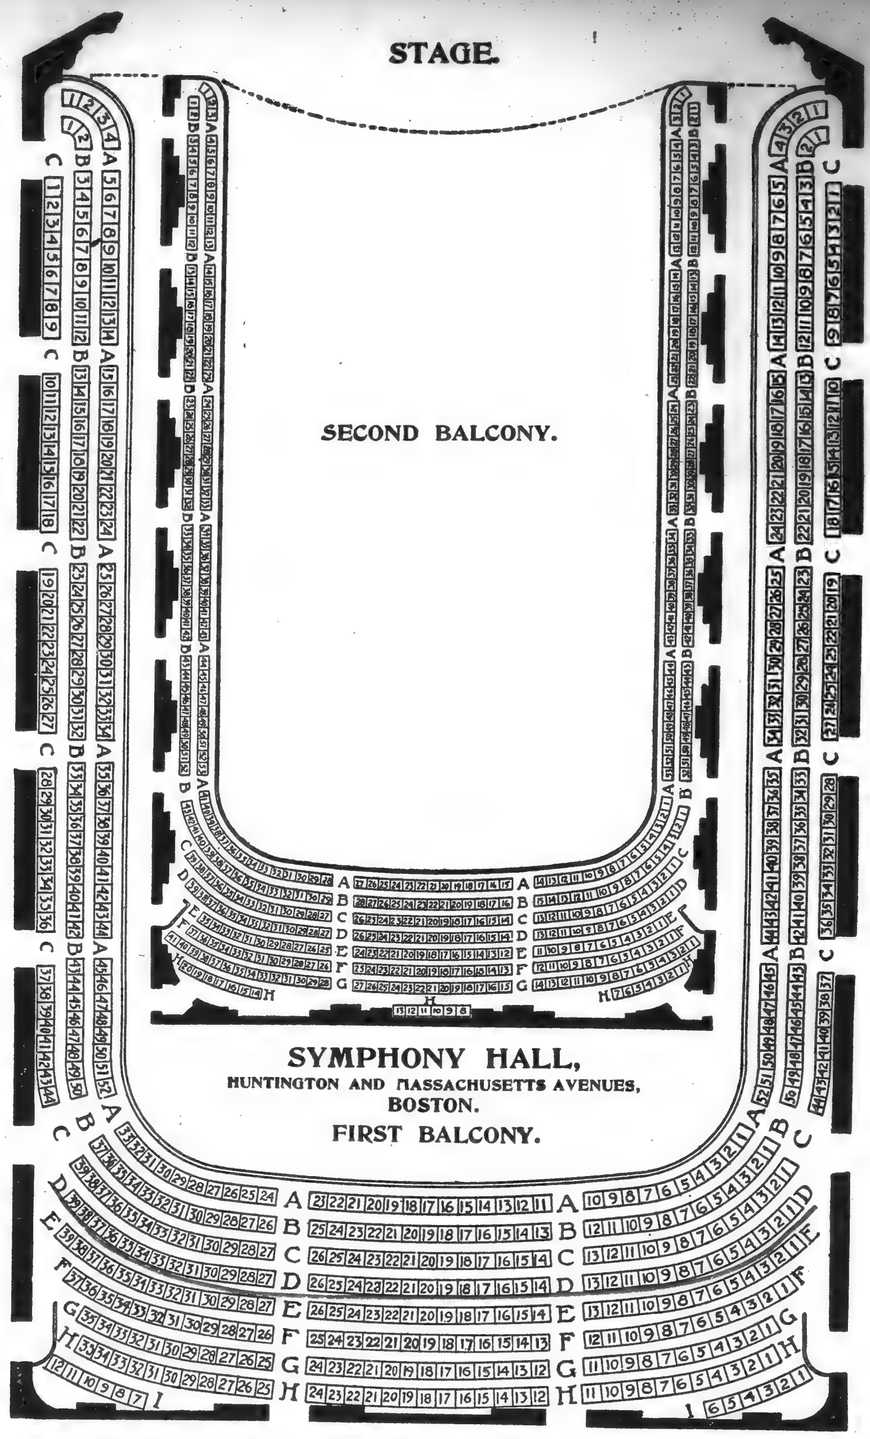
HUNTINGTON AVENUE CORRIDOR,

SYMPHONY HALL,

HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVENUES, BOSTON.

FLOOR PLAN.

The red line marks the division between the $12 and $7.50 seats.



SYMPHONY HALL,

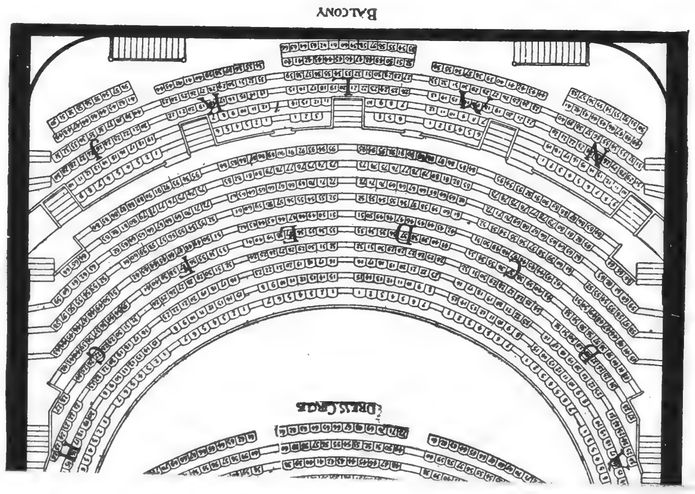
HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVENUES,
BOSTON.

FIRST BALCONY.

The red line marks the division between the $12 and $7.50 seats.

CARNEGIE HALL
NEW YORK
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR

BALCONY
(OVER)



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
M GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

certs by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at ould be pleased to reserve the same seats for you opened.
your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed ing the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,
C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

CARNEGIE HALL
NEW YORK
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

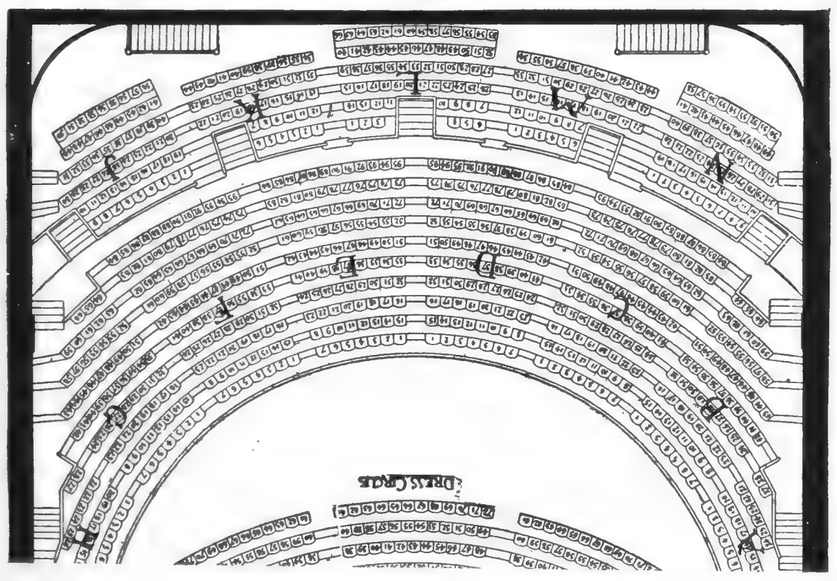
Ninety-four performers
MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

A PERMANENT ORCHESTRA, MAINTAINED SOLELY FOR CONCERT PERFORMANCES

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER — F. R. COMEE, ASSISTANT MANAGER

(OVER)

BALCONY



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

[103]

FIVE CONCERTS

THURSDAY EVENINGS AT 8.15

NOVEMBER 5
DECEMBER 10
JANUARY 14
FEBRUARY 18
MARCH 17 and

FIVE MATINEES

SATURDAY AFTERNOONS AT 2.30

NOVEMBER 7
DECEMBER 12
JANUARY 16
FEBRUARY 20
MARCH 19

Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series of five matinees or five concerts, $7.50, $6, $5, and $3, and boxes $50 and $40, according to location. Programme books, with descriptive notes on the works to be performed, will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

☞ The programmes for the afternoon and evening series will be entirely different.

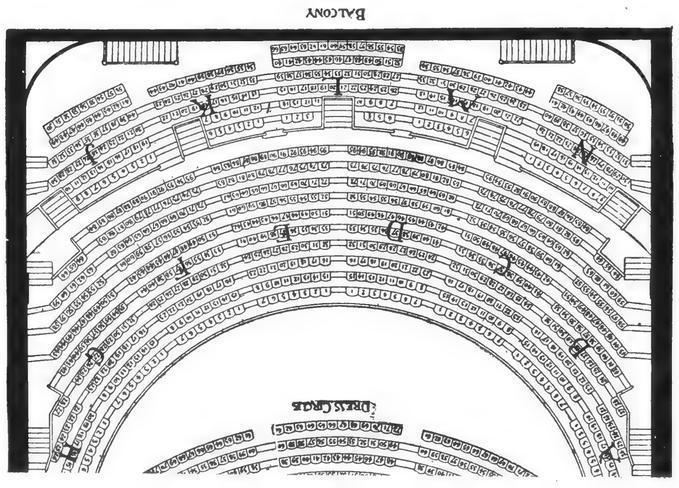
SOLO ARTISTS

MME. MELBA
Positively her only appearance in New York this season
MME. GADSKI
MR. GILIBERT
MR. BUSONI
MISS MACCARTHY
MISS MEAD
MR. ARBOS
MR. KRASSELT

AND OTHERS TO BE ANNOUNCED

(OVER)



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

1037

SYMPHONY HALL
HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVENUES

TWENTY-THIRD SEASON, 1903-1904

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

94 Performers. Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

"This company of great artists gives a distinction to whatever

"Something more than mere virtuosity in its noble interpretation."— Philadelphia Press.

"To speak frankly, New York has found the Boston concerts a safe vehicle for admiration."— New York Sun.

"It affords a pleasure distinct in degree and kind."— New York Times.

"This virtuoso organization spread a noble feast."— New York Herald.

"This virtuoso organization spread a noble feast."— New York Tribune.

"The visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has left a feeling of admiration and gratitude keener, more tender, and more fragrant than ever before."— New York Tribune.

1902-1903

Ninety-four performers
Mr. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL
NEW YORK
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR

Dress Circle

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

1031

SYMPHONY HALL

HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVENUES

TWENTY-THIRD SEASON, 1903-1904

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

94 Performers. Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

CARNEGIE HALL

NEW YORK

TWENTY-THIRD SEASON

NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR

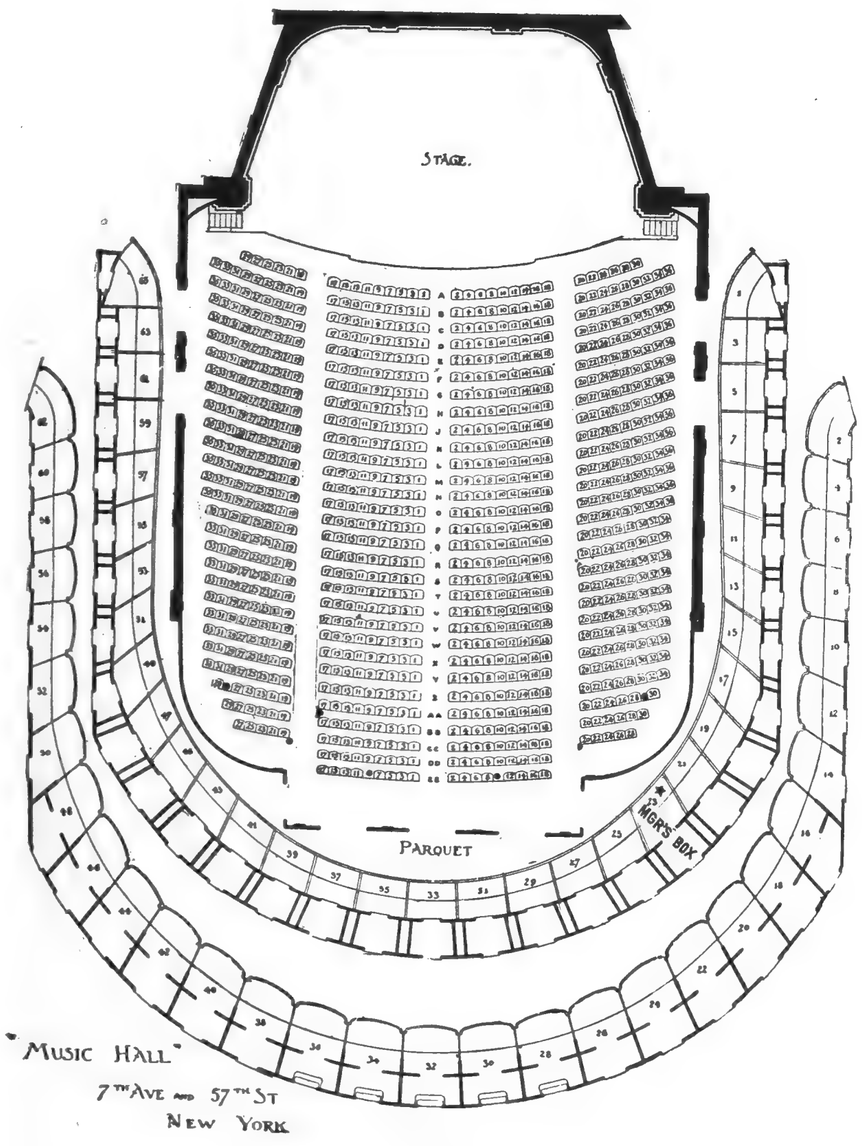

DIAGRAM.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

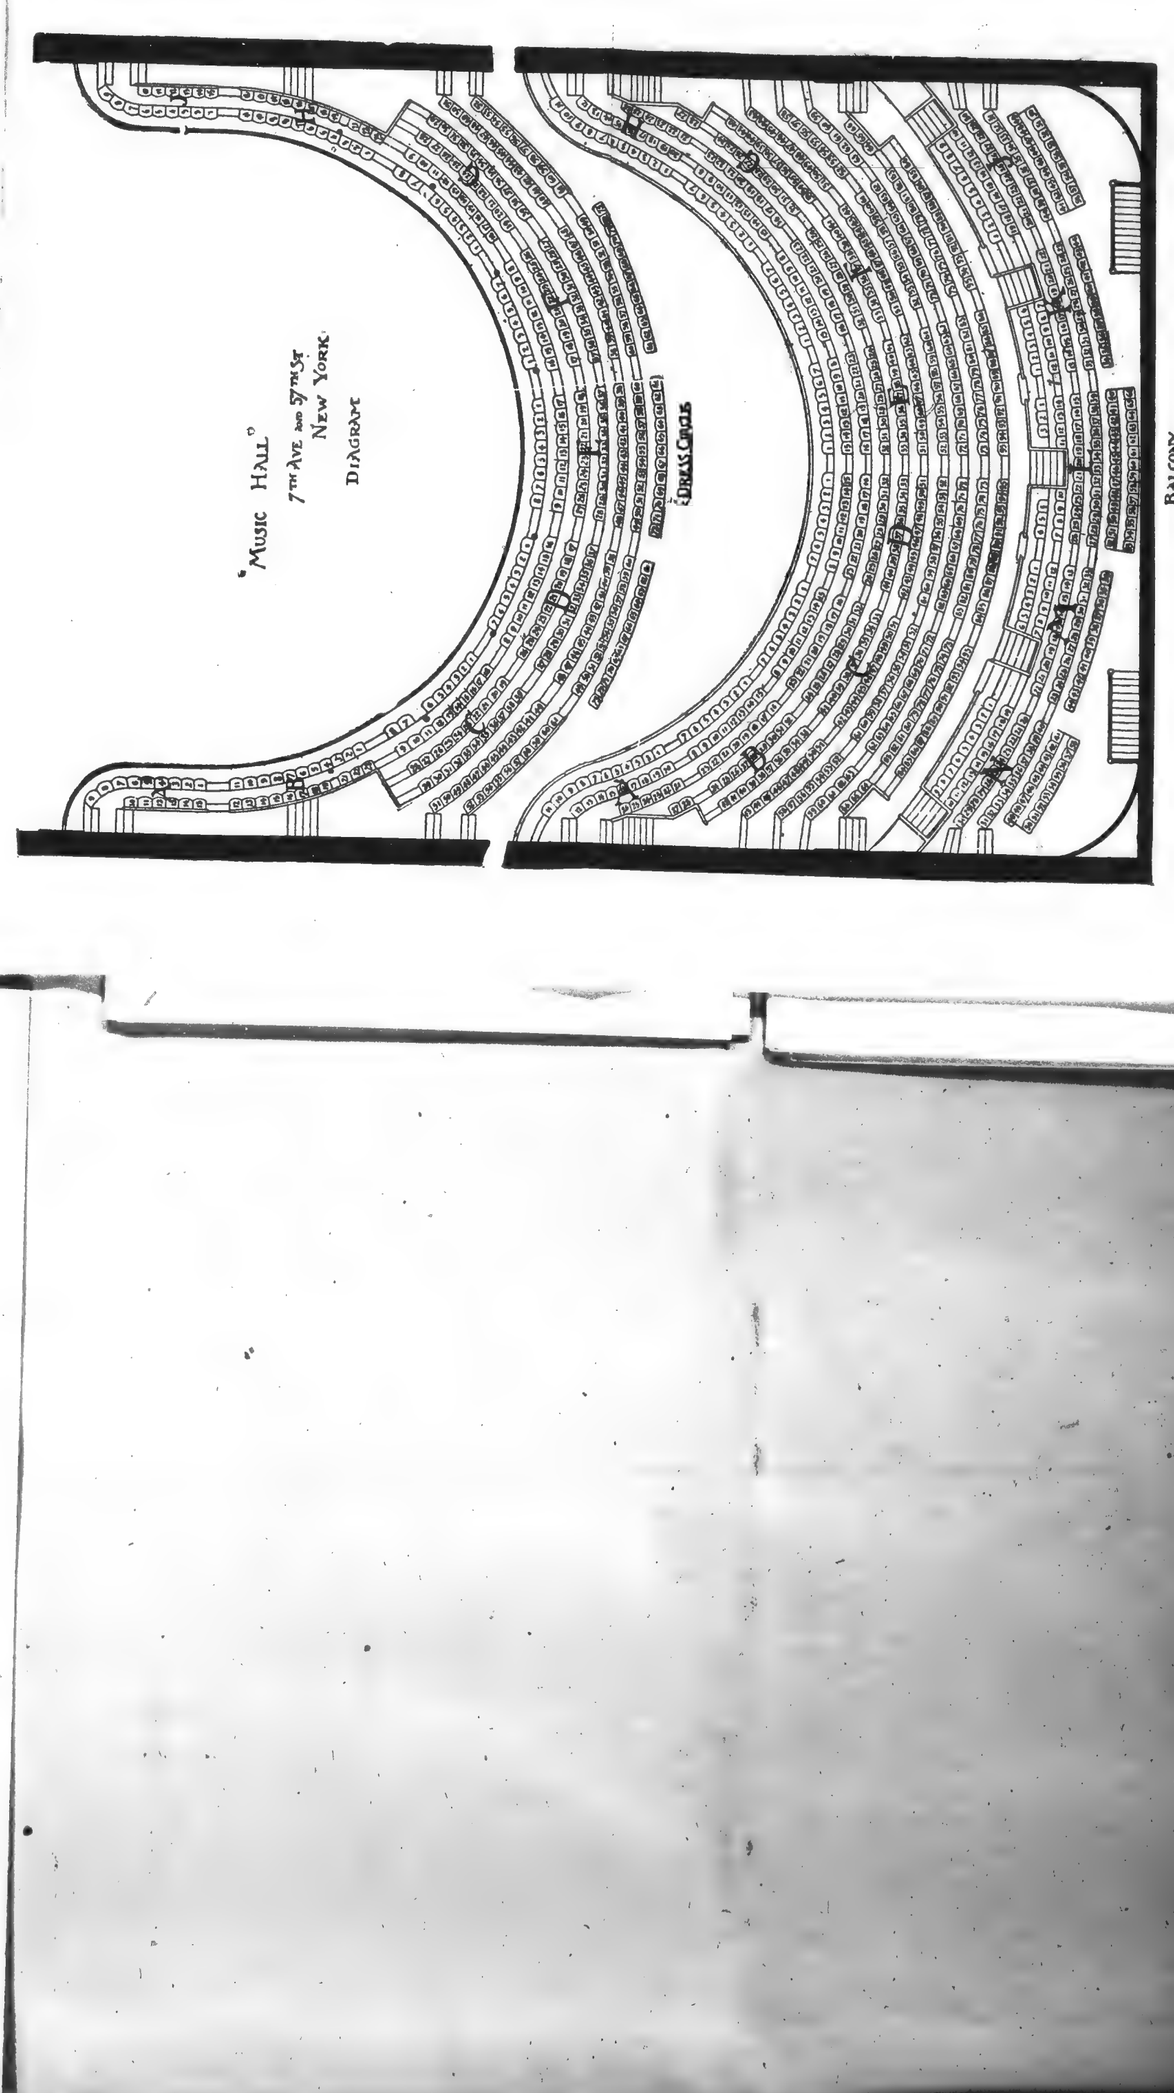
[103]



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

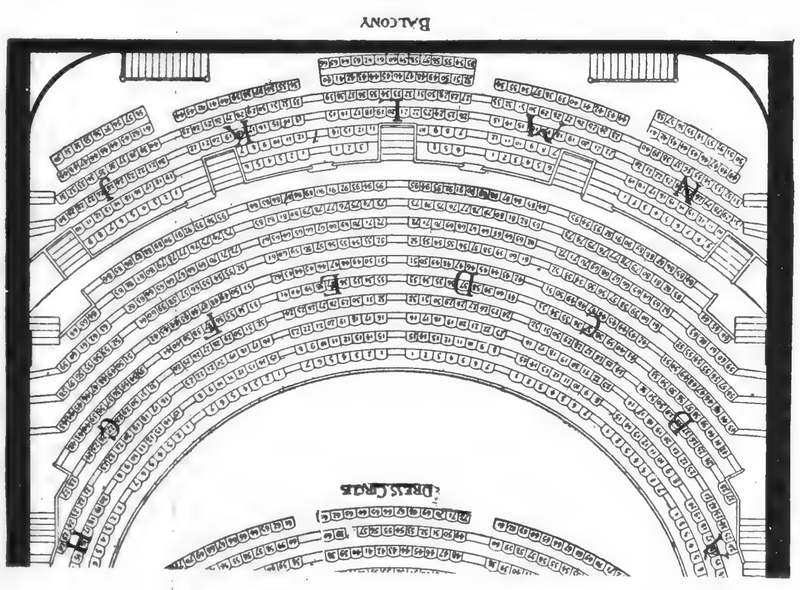
SYMPHONY HALL
HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVENUES

TWENTY-THIRD SEASON, 1903-1904

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

94 Performers. Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

CARNEGIE HALL
NEW YORK
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR



NEW YORK, September 21, 1903.

I hereby subscribe for ..... season tickets for the series of five { Thursday Evening / Saturday Afternoon } Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall.

Location desired, as near as possible

.....

☞ Unless you wish to subscribe for both, please indicate your choice between the Afternoon and Evening series.

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON,
Tuesday, October 13, 1903

Boston Symphony Orchestra

NEW YORK CONCERTS

We beg to courteously remind you as a subscriber of last season that your tickets are held at the box office, Carnegie Hall, subject to your renewal previous to our sale to the general public next Friday morning, October 16.

As there is every indication of a very heavy sale on Friday, if you wish to retain your seats kindly send check to C. A. Ellis, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, before the above date.

CHARLES A. ELLIS, Manager.
FREDERIC R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

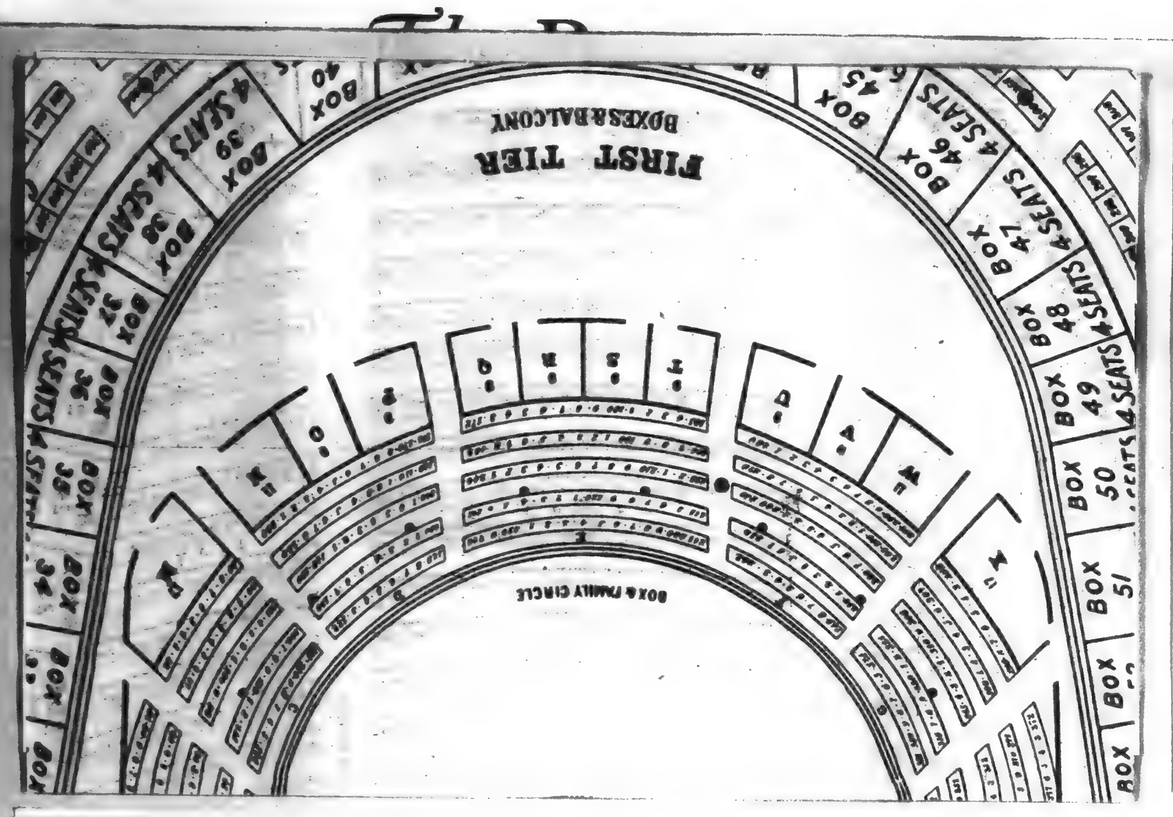
3

ACADEMY of MUSIC
PHILADELPHIA
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserved the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserved the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 17, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 17, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

[104]

ACADEMY of MUSIC
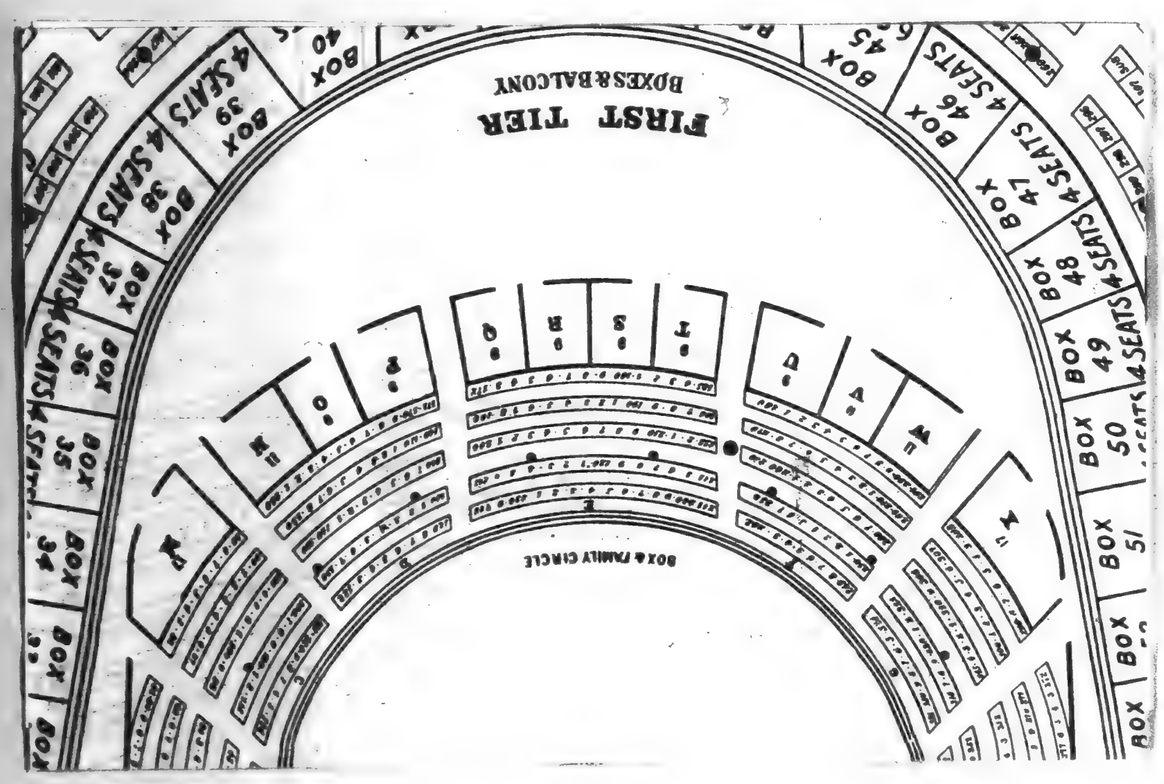
PHILADELPHIA
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Ninety-four performers
MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

A PERMANENT ORCHESTRA, MAINTAINED SOLELY FOR CONCERT PERFORMANCES

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER — F. R. COMEE, ASSISTANT MANAGER



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserved the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserved the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 17, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

TWO SERIES OF

FIVE CONCERTS EACH

First Series Monday Evenings at 8.15	Second Series Wednesday Evenings at 8.15
November 2	November 4
December 7	December 9
January 11	January 13
Friday Evening, February 19	February 17
March 14	March 16

The scale of prices will be the same for each series.

Proscenium boxes seating eight, and boxes seating six and four, will be sold at $75, $63, and $42, respectively, for the series of five concerts. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series of five concerts, $7, $5, and $3.50, according to location.

The public sale of tickets for the first series will open Monday morning, October 12, and for the second series on the following Wednesday morning, October 14, at the Heppe Piano Rooms, 1115 Chestnut Street.

Programme books, with descriptive notes on the works to be performed, will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

SOLO ARTISTS

MME. MELBA

MME. GADSKI

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK

MISS AUS DER OHE

MR. BAUER

MR. BUSONI

MISS MEAD

MR. ARBOS

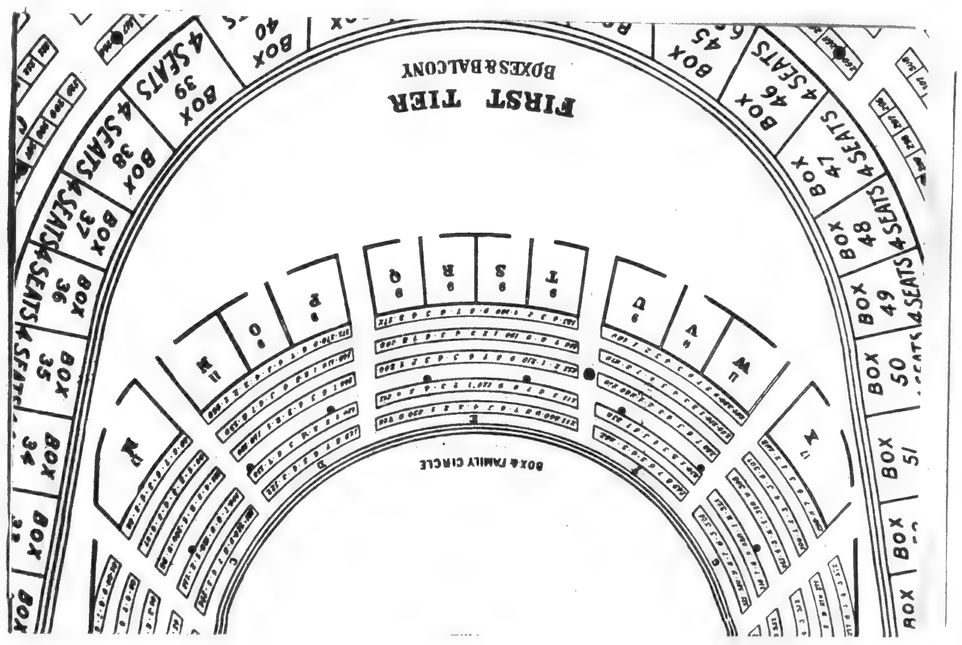
MR. KRASSELT

AND OTHERS

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Both series of concerts will be the same in character and equally attractive, but with different programmes and soloists.

Season ticket holders of last season will be allowed to retain the same seats for both the first and second series, payment for the same to be made on or before Saturday, October 10, for the first series, and Monday, October 12, for the second series, by cash, money order, or check, made payable to Miss H. Harris, to whom all renewals of seats should be sent, at 1115 Chestnut Street.



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public sub-

BOSTON SYMPHON
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HU
WILHELM GERI

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Acade be pleased to reserved the same seats for you
opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscri order before October 10, indicating the locati

Yours res

BOSTON SYMPHON
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HU
WILHELM GERI

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday e
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academ be pleased to reserved the same seats for you
opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscript order before October 10, indicating the locatio

Yours resp

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public sub-

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 17, indicating the location of seats.

Yours

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we desired to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 17, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday eve
Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy be pleased to reserved the same seats for you be opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscriptio
order before October 10, indicating the location

Yours respec

BOSTON SYMPHONY
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED
WILHELM GERICKE

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday eve
Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy
be pleased to reserved the same seats for you be opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscriptio
order before October 10, indicating the location

Yours respec

BOSTON SYMPHONY
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED
WILHELM GERICKE

1902-1903

"The visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has left a feeling of admiration and gratitude keener, more tender, and more fragrant than ever before."— New York Tribune.

"This virtuoso organization spread a noble feast."— New York Herald.

"It affords a pleasure distinct in degree and kind."— New York Times.

"To speak frankly, New York has found the Boston concerts a safe vehicle for admiration."— New York Sun.

"Something more than mere virtuosity in its noble interpretation."— Philadelphia Press.

"This company of great artists gives a distinction to whatever

ACADEMY of MUSIC
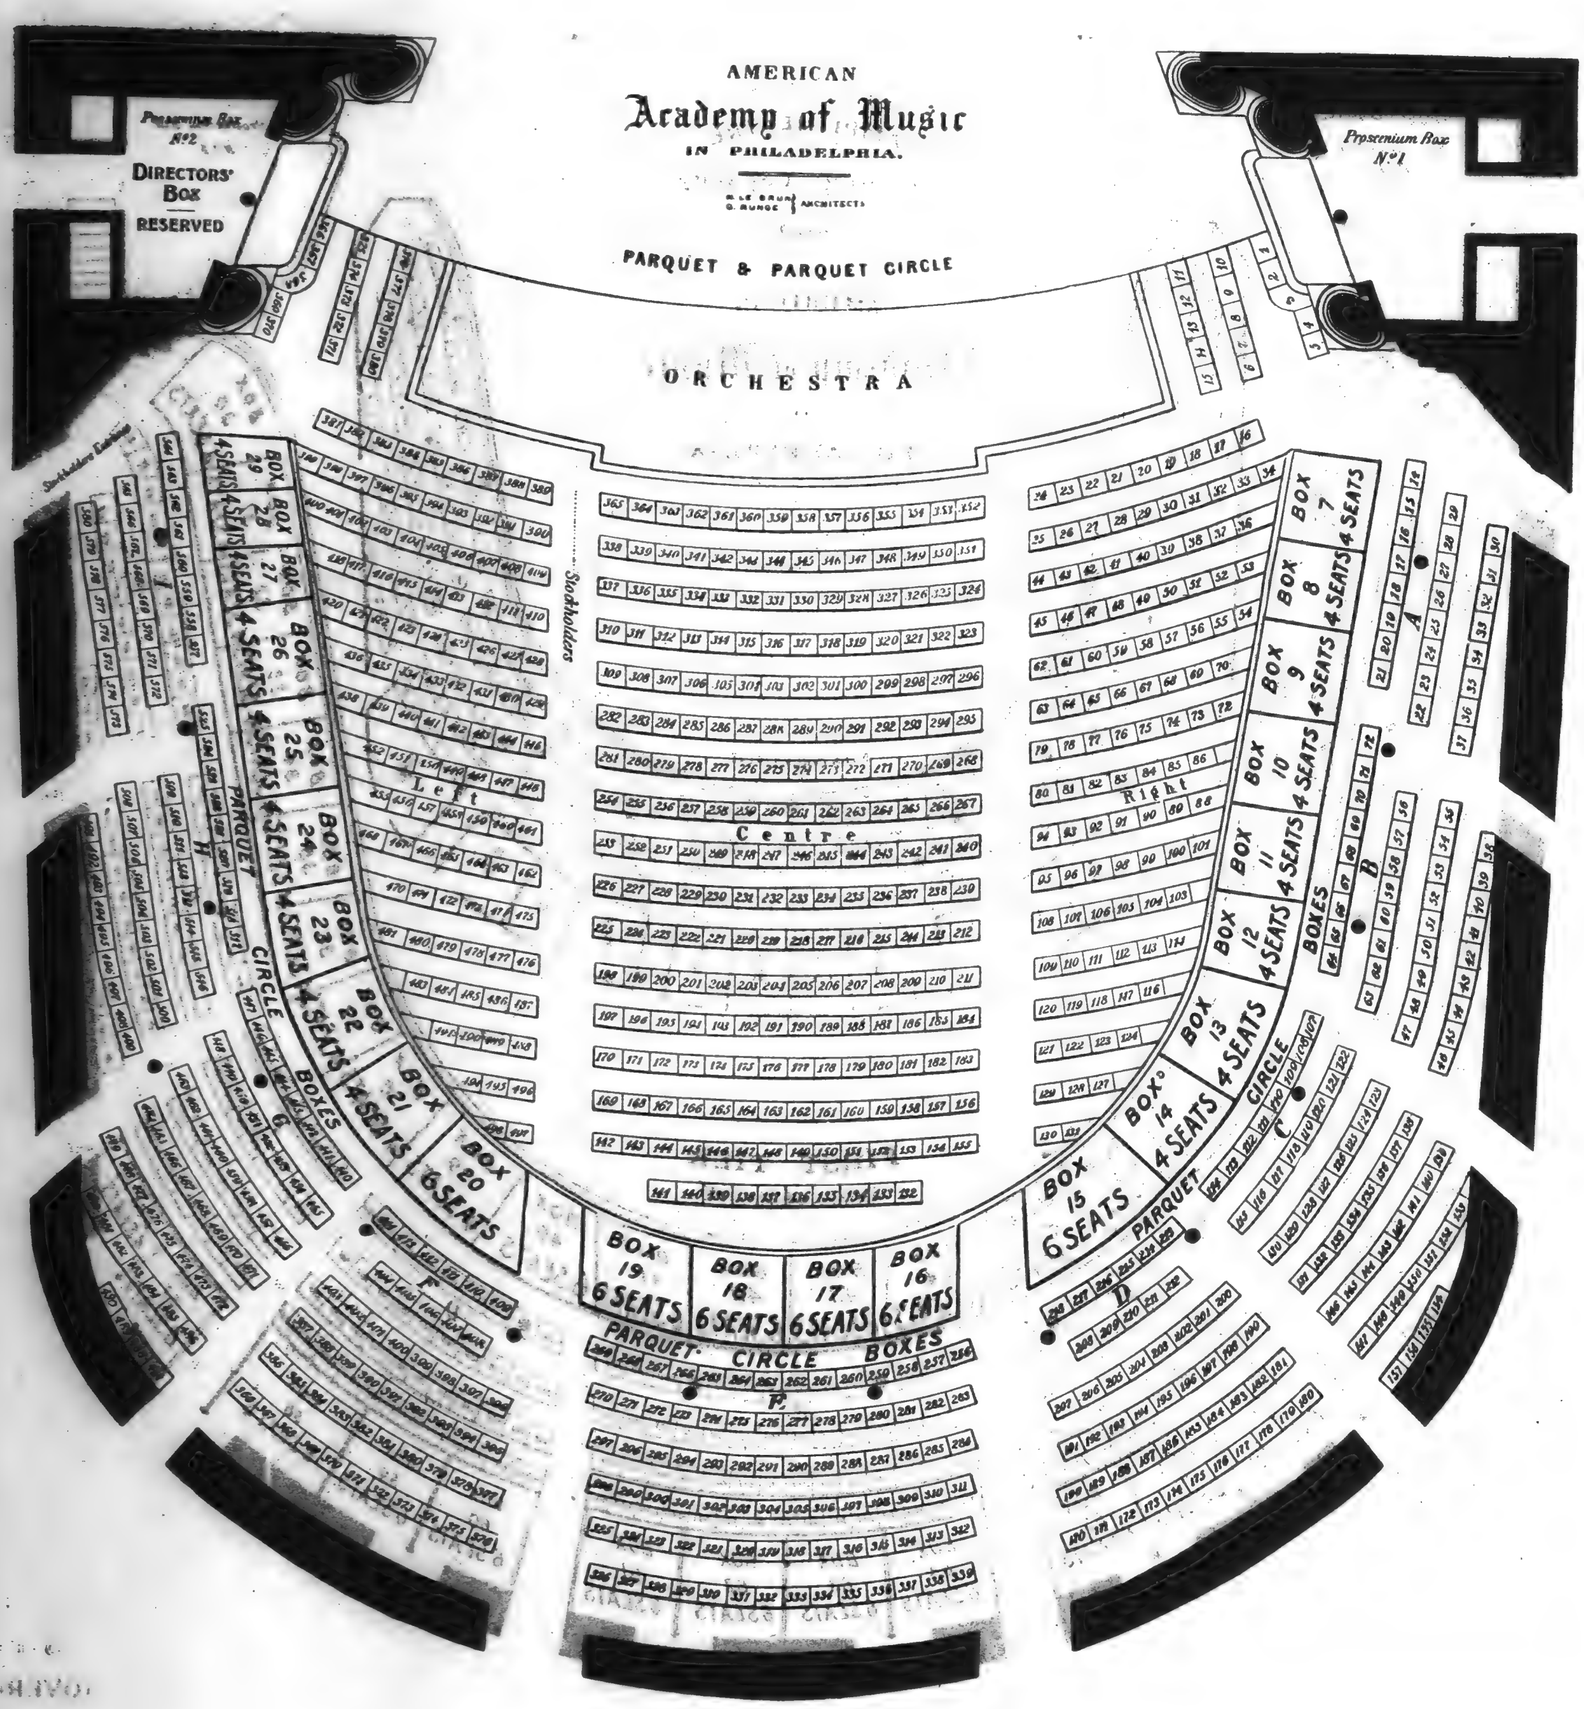
PHILADELPHIA
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Ninety-four performers
MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

ACADEMY of MUSIC
PHILADELPHIA
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR



STON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
UNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
ILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

r to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should ed the same seats for you before the public subscription is ire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed r 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

STON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
UNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
ILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

r to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should ed the same seats for you before the public subscription is ire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed r 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 17, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYM
FOUNDED A.D. EIG
WILHELM

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 17, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

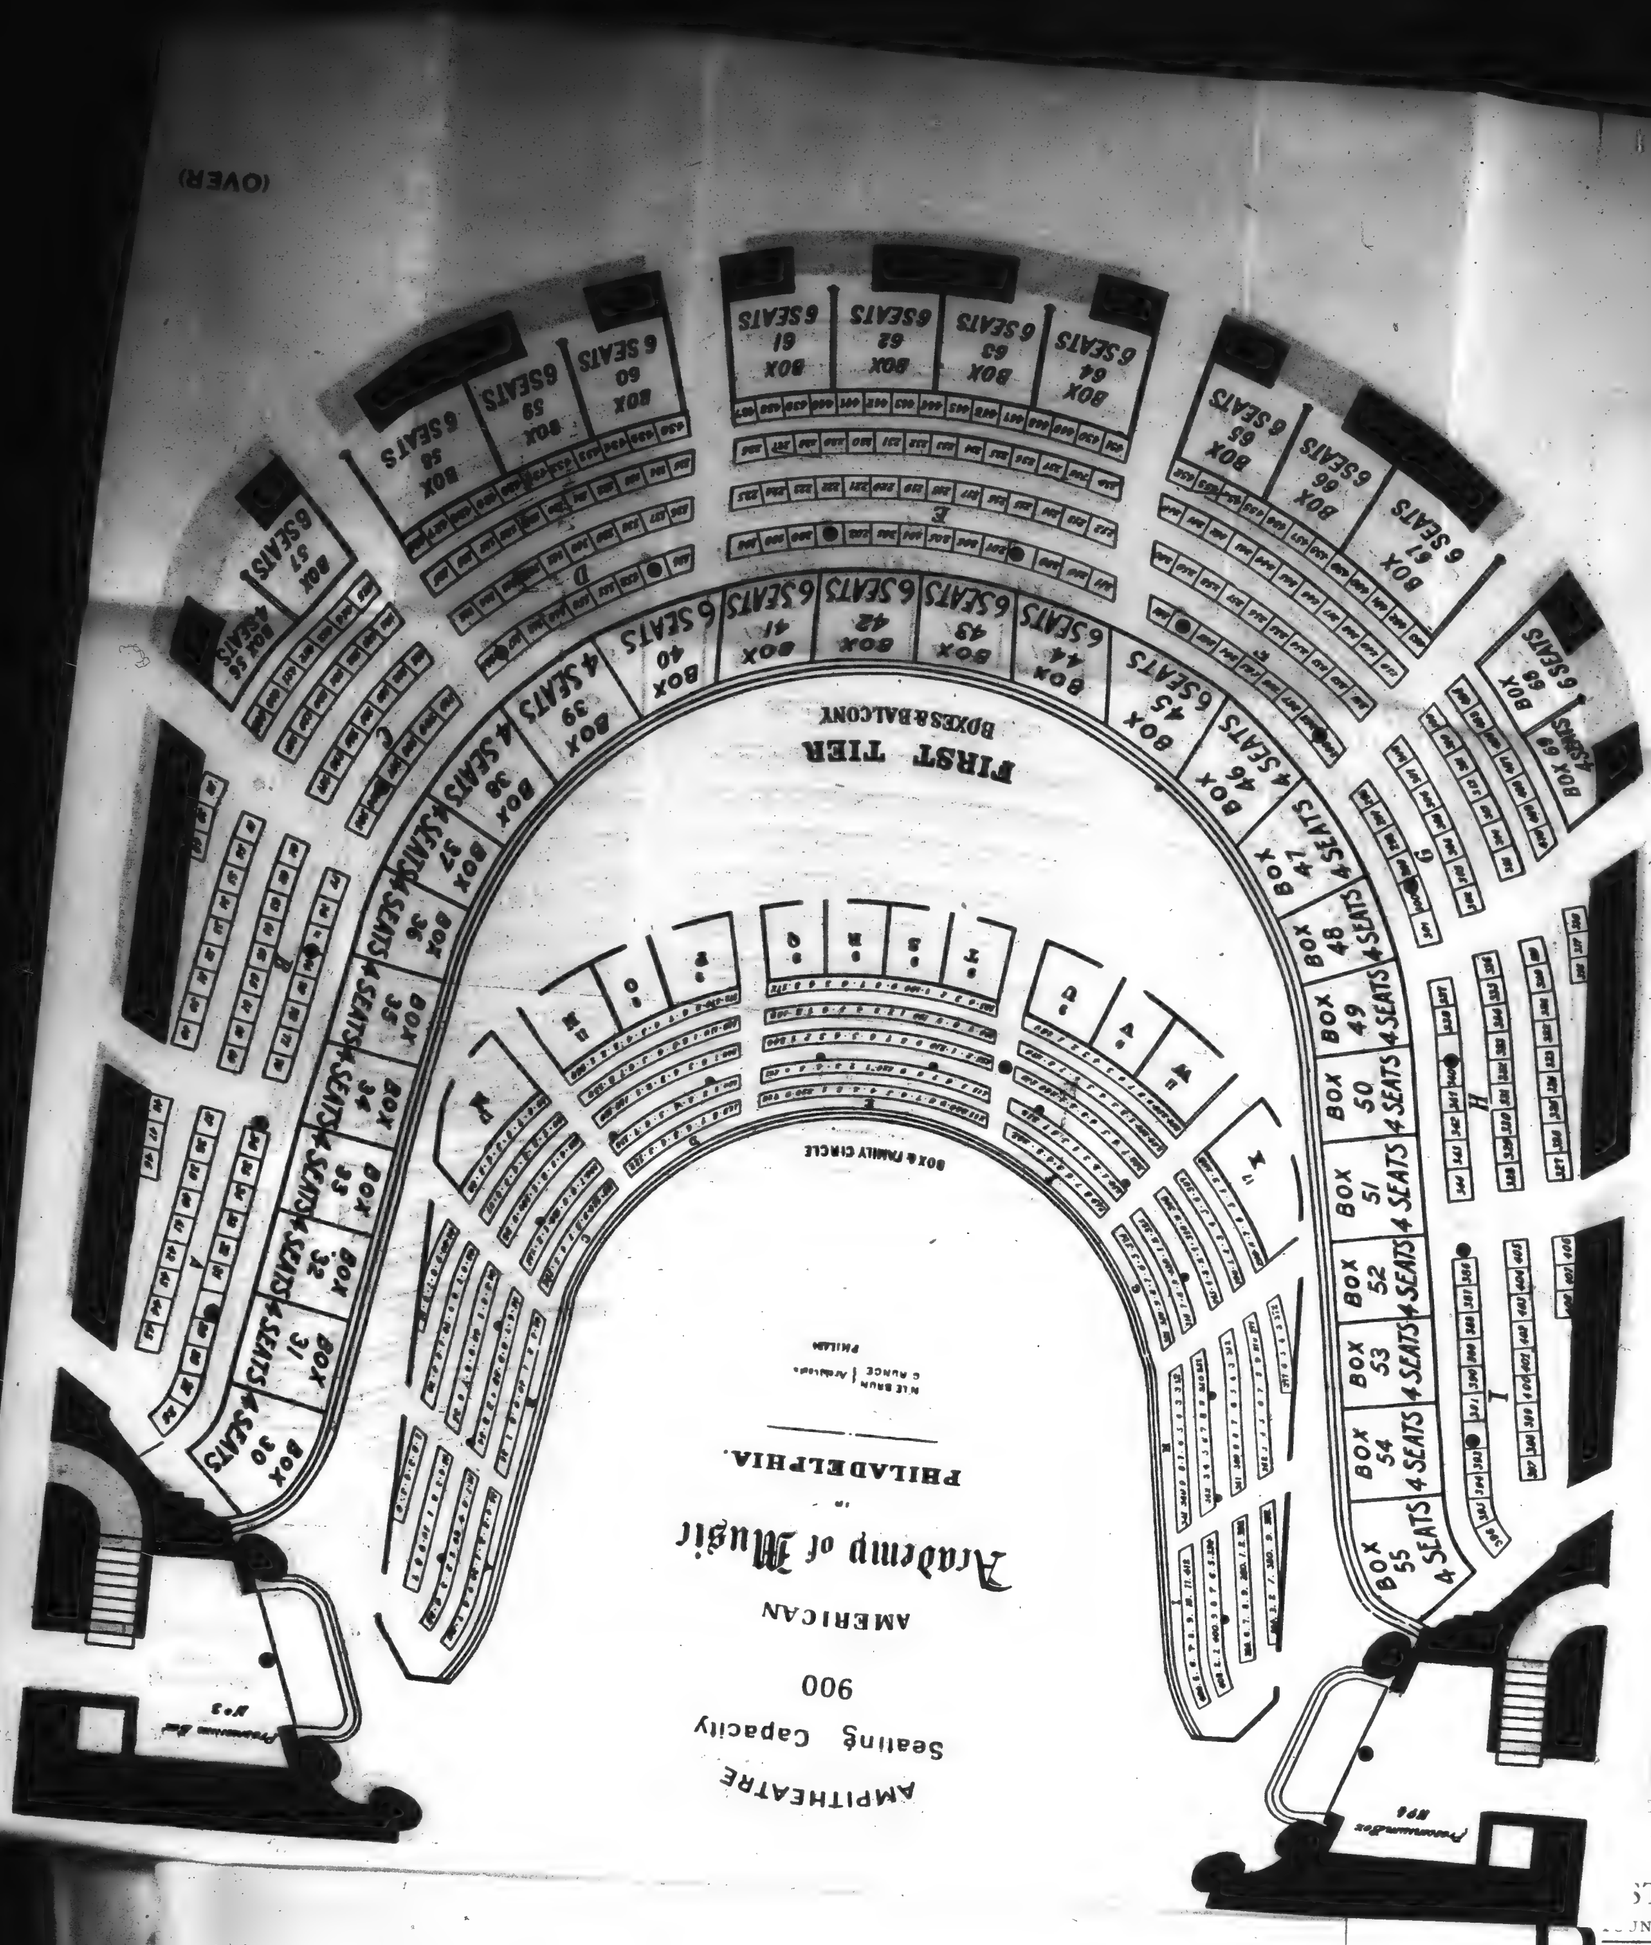
[104]



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserved the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserved the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 17, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

ACADEMY of MUSIC
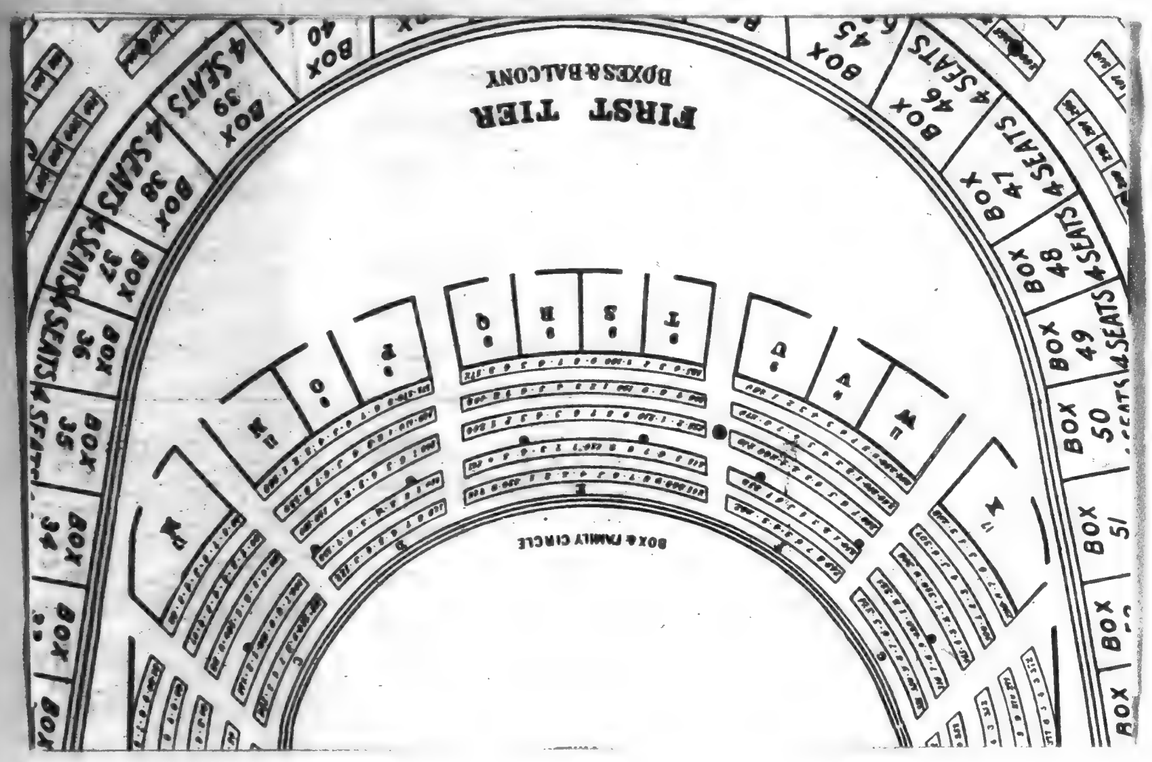
PHILADELPHIA
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR



PHILADELPHIA, September 21, 1903.

I hereby subscribe for ..... season tickets for the first series of four Monday Evening Concerts and one Friday Evening Concert, February 19, to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music.

Location of seats last season .....

.....

order before October 17, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserved the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserved the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 17, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

ACADEMY of MUSIC
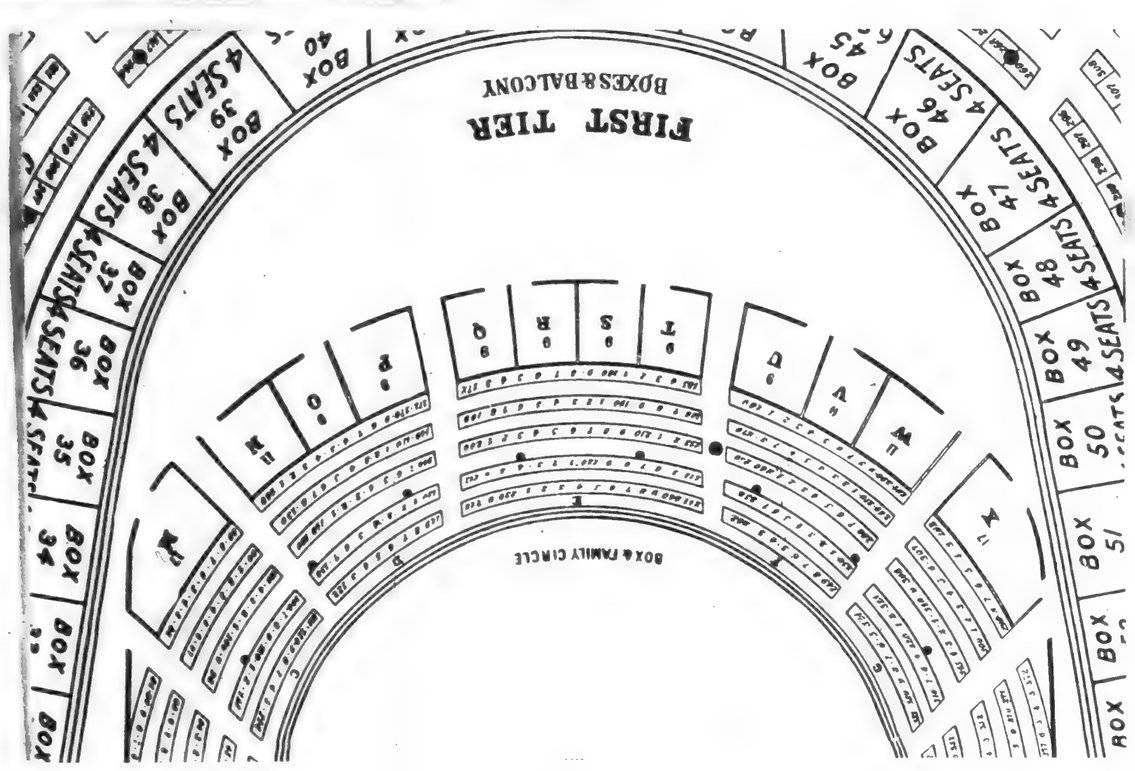
PHILADELPHIA
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR



PHILADELPHIA, September 21, 1903.

I hereby subscribe for season tickets for the second series of five Wednesday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music.

Location of seats last season

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserved the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserved the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 17, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

[104]

ACADEMY of MUSIC
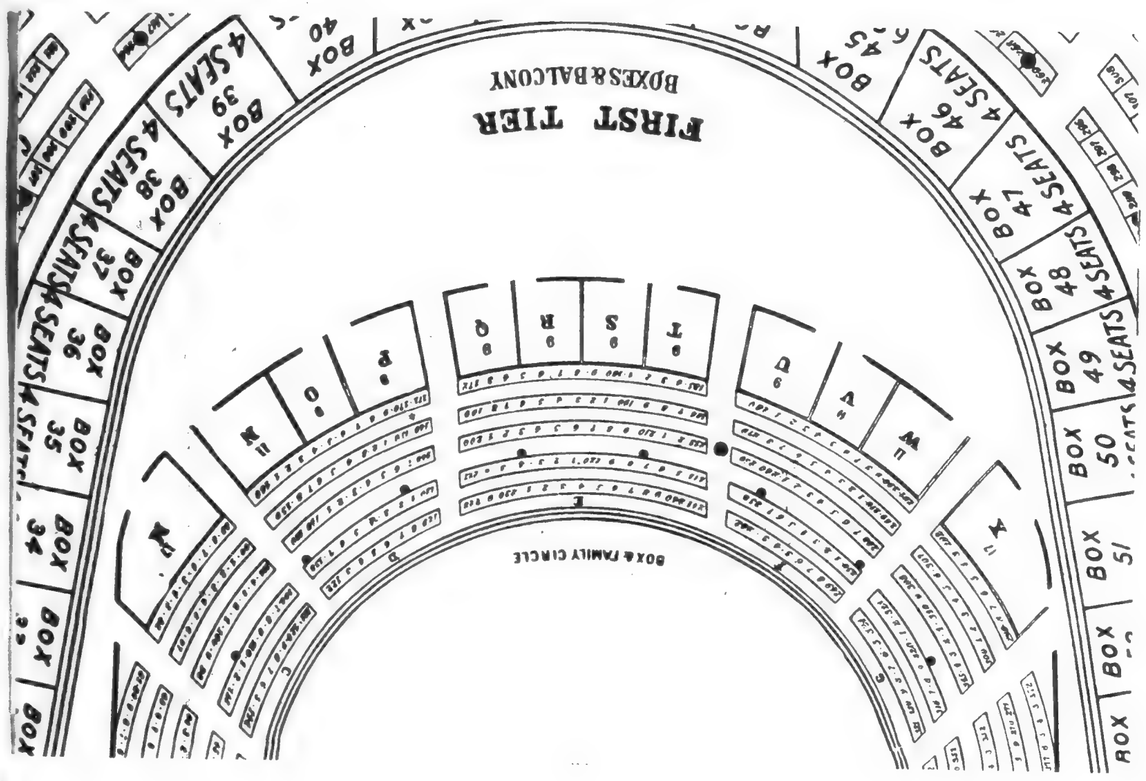
PHILADELPHIA
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR



PHILADELPHIA, September 21, 1903.

I hereby subscribe for season tickets for the second series of five Wednesday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music.

Location of seats last season

[104]

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserved the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserved the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 17, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

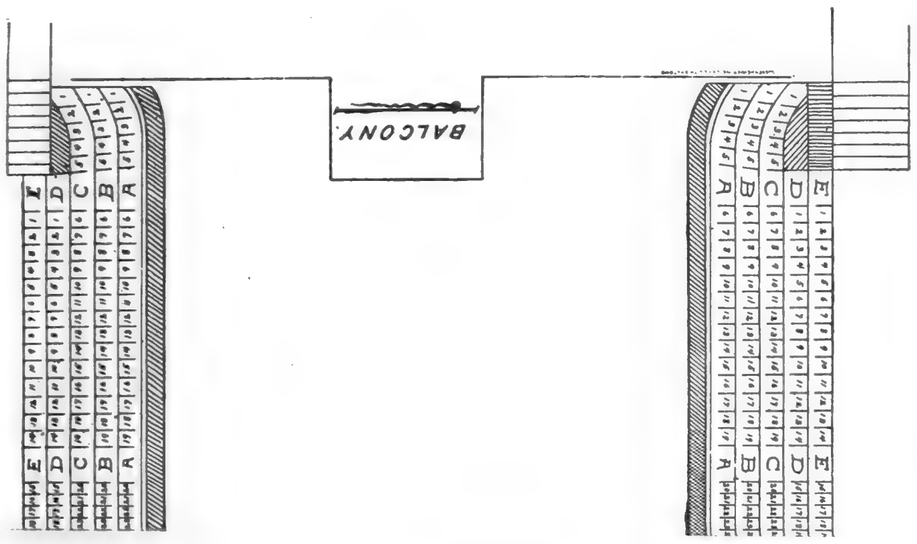
MUSIC HALL
BALTIMORE
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Music Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Music Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

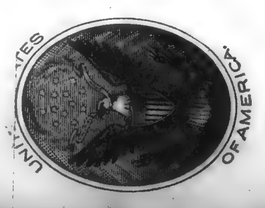
THE SPACE ABOVE IS RESERVED FOR POSTMARK.

POSTAL CARD.

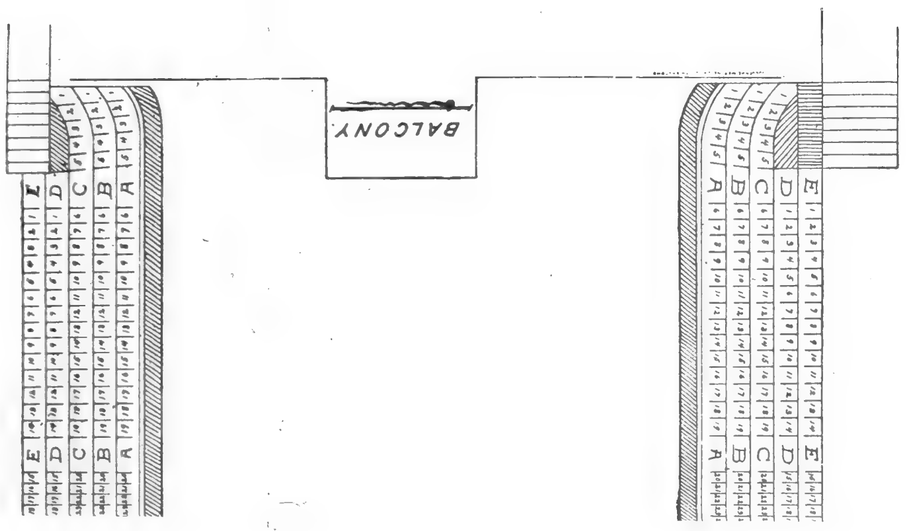
THE SPACE BELOW IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY.



P. O. Box.....

Baltimore, Md.

MUSIC HALL
BALTIMORE
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Music Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Music Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

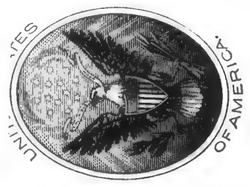
THE SPACE ABOVE IS RESERVED FOR POSTMARK.

POSTAL CARD.

THE SPACE BELOW IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY.

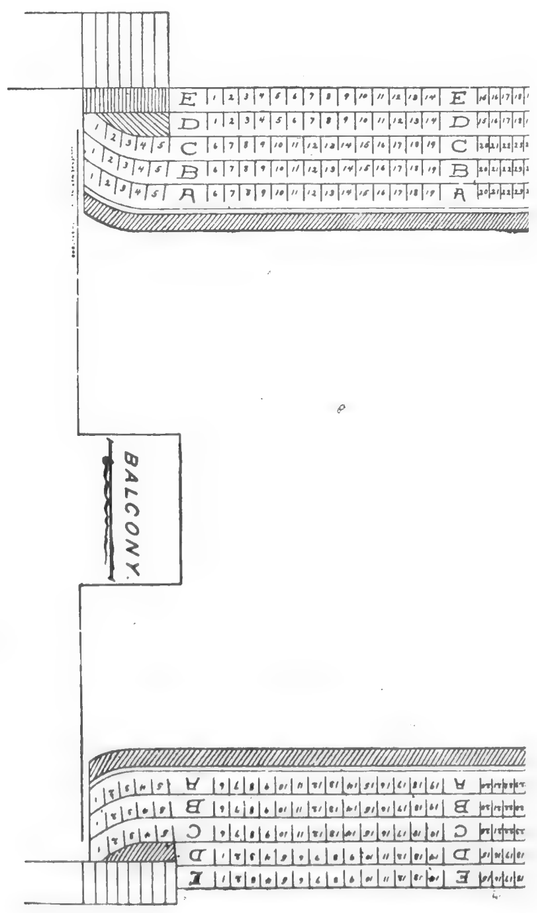
P. O. Box .....

Baltimore, Md.



[105]

MUSIC HALL
BALTIMORE
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR



MUSIC HALL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SEASON TICKETS
—AT—
$7.00 and $5.00

For the 5 Tuesday Evening Concerts.

November 3rd.
December 8th.
January 12th.
February 16th.
March 15th.

With Mme. MELBA (her only appearance in Baltimore).
Mme. GADSKI.
Mr. BUSONI.
Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK.
Miss MEAD.
AS SOLOISTS.

NOW ON SALE AT
Albaugh's Ticket Office, 15 N. Charles St.
(IN SANDERS & STAYMAN'S.)

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

DEAR SIR:
As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening con
ORCHESTRA at Music Hall last season, we should seats for you before the public subscription is op
Should you desire to renew your subscription order before October 8, indicating the location of Yours respec
C
F

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

DEAR MADAM:
As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening con
ORCHESTRA at Music Hall last season, we should seats for you before the public subscription is op
Should you desire to renew your subscription
order before October 8, indicating the location of Yours respec
C
F

[105]

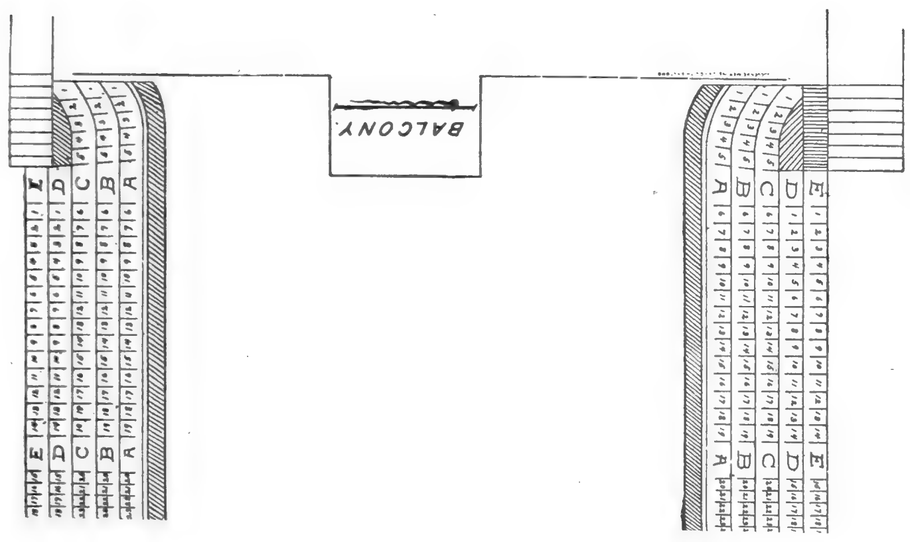
MUSIC HALL
BALTIMORE
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Ninety-four performers
MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

A PERMANENT ORCHESTRA, MAINTAINED SOLELY FOR CONCERT PERFORMANCES

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER — F. R. COMEE, ASSISTANT MANAGER



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Music Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

THIS SPACE ABOVE IS RESERVED FOR POSTMARK.

POSTAL CARD.

THIS SPACE BELOW IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY.

Box

Baltimore, Md.

FIVE CONCERTS

TUESDAY EVENINGS AT 8.15 O'CLOCK

NOVEMBER 3

DECEMBER 8

JANUARY 12

FEBRUARY 16

MARCH 15

Boxes seating six, $60 each, for the series of five concerts.

Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series of five concerts, $7 and $5, according to location.

The sale of tickets will open Monday morning, October 12, at Albaugh's, 15 North Charles Street.

Programme books, with descriptive notes on the works to be performed, will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

SOLO ARTISTS

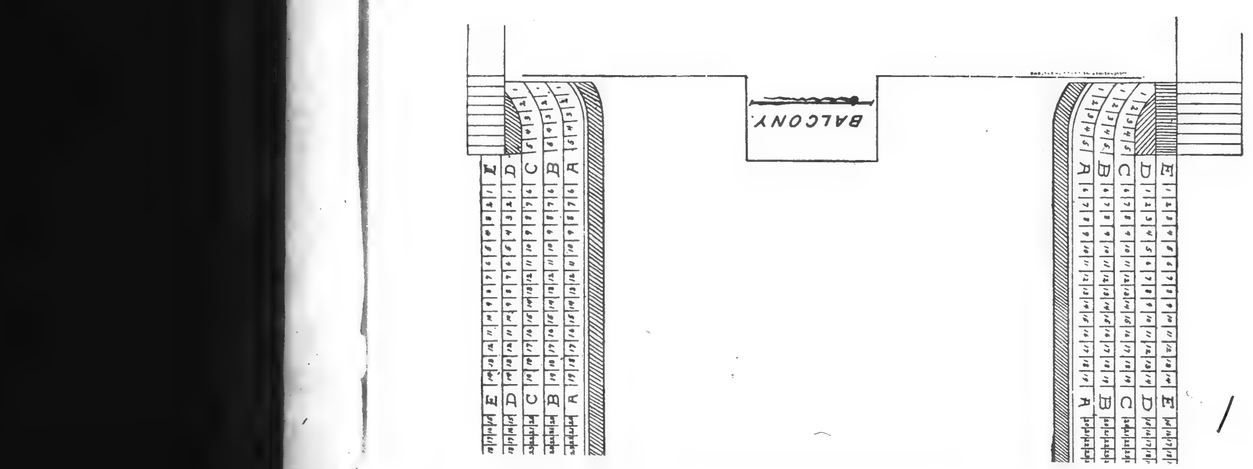
MME. MELBA
Her only appearance in Baltimore this season

MME. GADSKI

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK

MR. BUSONI

MISS MEAD



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Music Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE

AL CARD.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Music Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

DEAR MADAM:

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Music Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

[105]

THE SPACE ABOVE IS RESERVED FOR POSTMARK.

POSTAL CARD.

THE SPACE BELOW IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY.

P. O. Box .....

Baltimore, Md.

1902-1903

"The visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has left a feeling of admiration and gratitude keener, more tender, and more fragrant than ever before."— New York Tribune.

"This virtuoso organization spread a noble feast."— New York Herald.

"It affords a pleasure distinct in degree and kind."— New York Times.

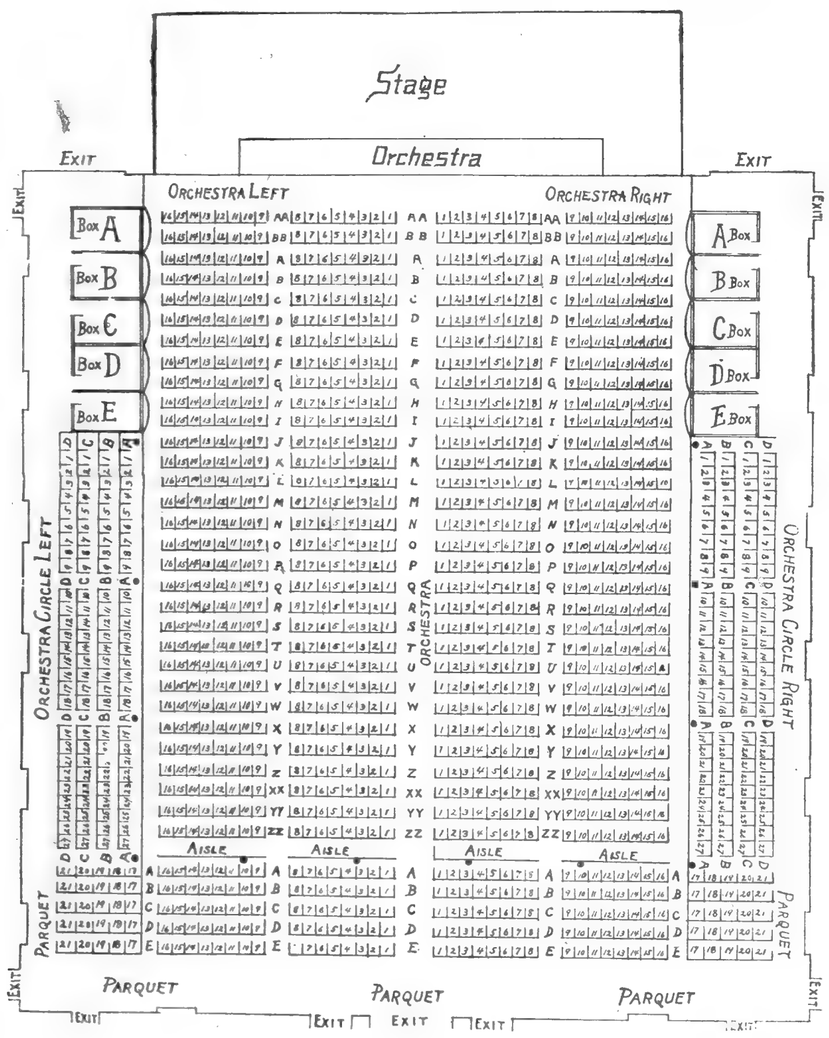
"To speak frankly, New York has found the Boston concerts a safe vehicle for admiration."— New York Sun.

"Something more than mere virtuosity in its noble interpretation."— Philadelphia Press.

"This company of great artists gives a distinction to whatever

MUSIC HALL
BALTIMORE
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR

MUSIC HALL, BALTIMORE.



(Over)

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Music Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Music Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

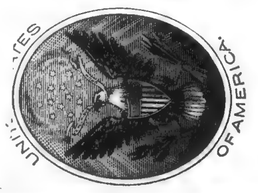
THE SPACE ABOVE IS RESERVED FOR POSTMARK.

POSTAL CARD.

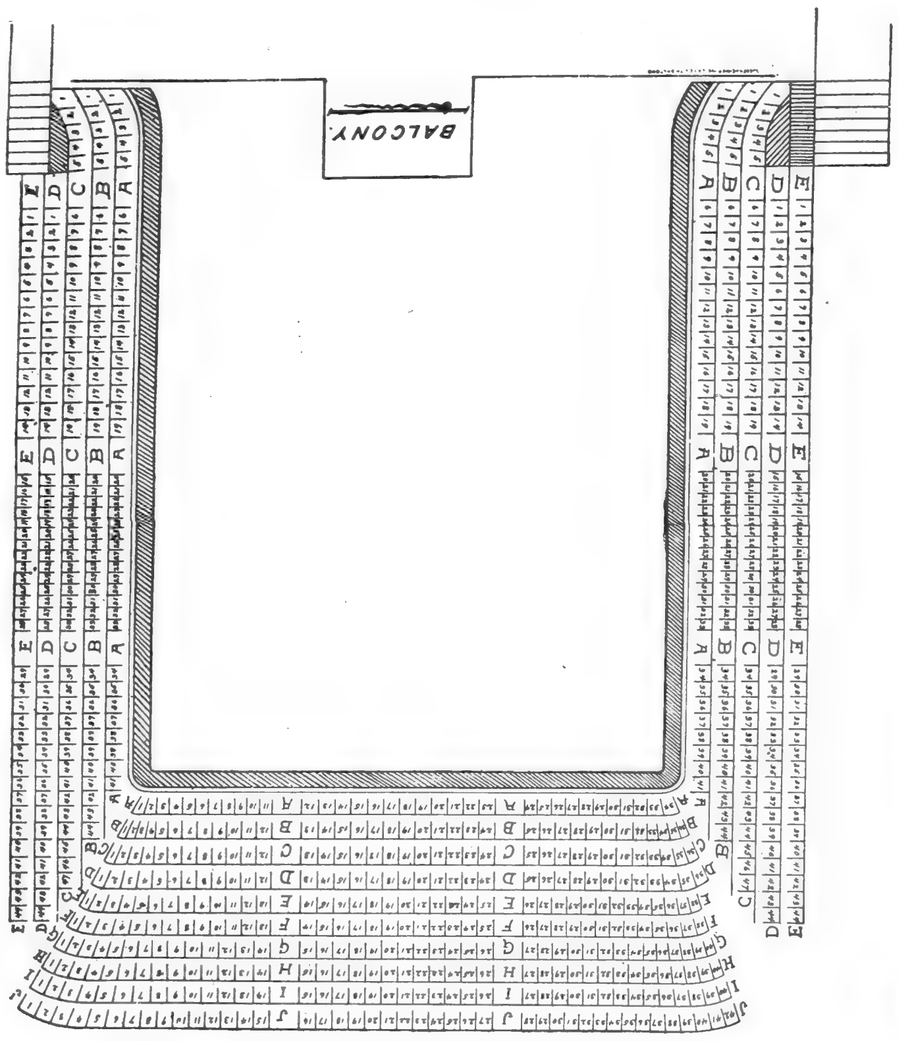
THE SPACE BELOW IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY.

P. O. Box

Baltimore, Md.



[105]



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Music Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Music Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

THE SPACE ABOVE IS RESERVED FOR POSTMARK.

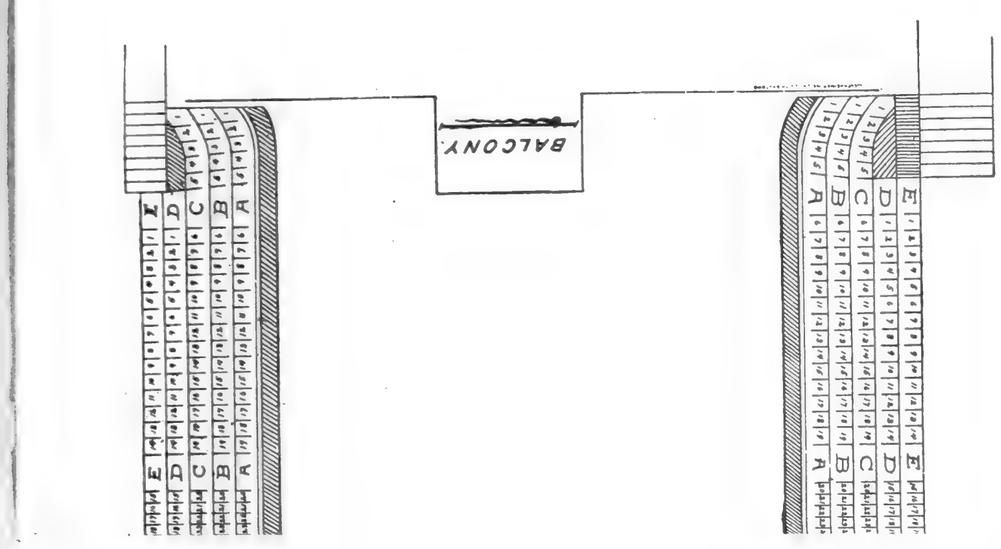
POSTAL CARD.

THE SPACE BELOW IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY.

P. O. Box.....

Baltimore, Md.

MUSIC HALL
BALTIMORE
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR



BALTIMORE, October 1, 1903.

I hereby subscribe for season tickets for the series of five Tuesday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Music Hall.

Location of seats last season

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

[105]

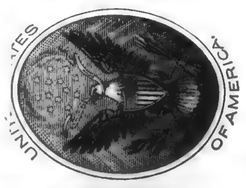
THE SPACE ABOVE IS RESERVED FOR POSTMARK.

POSTAL CARD.

THE SPACE BELOW IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY.

P. O. Box.....

Baltimore, Md.



ANDERS THEATRE
CAMBRIDGE
TWENTY-THIRD SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR

C. W. SEVER & Co.,

University Bookstore,

Harvard Square,

Cambridge, Mass.

mailed by Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT TO SEASON TICKET HOLDERS

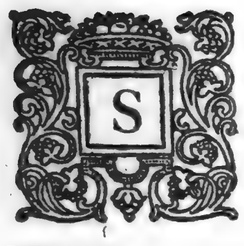
THE BROOKLYN PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS

BY THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

On account of the destruction by fire of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, the Boston Symphony Concerts of December 11th, January 15th, February 15th and March 18th will be given at the Baptist Temple, corner Schermerhorn street and Third avenue, one-half block from Flatbush avenue.

The Academy of Music had 1,660 numbered seats, and 60 sittings in boxes.
The Baptist Temple has 1,716 numbered seats. Omitting therefore the amphi-



ANDERSTHEATRE CAMBRIDGE

TWENTY–THIRD SEASON

NINETEEN HUNDRED THREE AND FOUR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Seventy performers

MR. WILHELM GERICKE

CONDUCTOR

A PERMANENT ORCHESTRA, MAINTAINED SOLELY FOR CONCERT PERFORMANCES

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER — F. R. COMEE, ASSISTANT MANAGER

C. W. SEVER & Co.,

University Bookstore,

Harvard Square,

Cambridge, Mass.

600 mailed to Subscribers

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT TO SEASON TICKET HOLDERS

The destruction by fire of the Brooklyn Academy of Music compels the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give elsewhere the remaining four Concerts on Friday Evening, December 11th and January 15th; Monday Evening, February 15th, and Friday Evening, March 18th.

Acting jointly with the Officers of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, and of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society,

THE BAPTIST TEMPLE,

Third Ave. and Schermerhorn St.,

has been selected as the audience room—of all those available—best adapted to the concerts and most easily adjusted to the original seating of the Academy of Music.

On or before Wednesday, December 9th, tickets as near to the original location as possible will be mailed to the holders of season tickets.

Under circumstances obviously beyond control, the Management respectfully asks the indulgence of the Subscribers:

FRANKLIN W HOOPER,
Director, Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

JOHN S. FROTHINGHAM,
Secretary, Brooklyn Philharmonic Society.

MRS. CAMDEN C. DIKE,
President, Ladies' Auxiliary Board.

CHARLES A. ELLIS,
FREDERIC R. COMEE,
For Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THE BROOKLYN PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS

BY THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

On account of the destruction by fire of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, the Boston Symphony Concerts of December 11th, January 15th, February 15th and March 18th will be given at the Baptist Temple, corner Schermerhorn street and Third avenue, one-half block from Flatbush avenue.

The Academy of Music had 1,660 numbered seats, and 60 sittings in boxes.

The Baptist Temple has 1,716 numbered seats. Omitting therefore the amphi-

TEN CONCERTS

THURSDAY EVENINGS AT 7.45

OCTOBER 29
NOVEMBER 19
DECEMBER 3
DECEMBER 17
JANUARY 7
JANUARY 28
FEBRUARY 11
MARCH 10
APRIL 7
APRIL 21

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

SEASON TICKETS for the ten concerts, $7.50.
The sale will be conducted according to the plan in use for several years in other cities.
Subscribers of last season may secure the same seats by filling out and mailing the enclosed blank, with check payable to C. W. Sever & Co., on or before October 20, 1903. On receipt of check, tickets will be mailed.
The unclaimed seats will be offered for sale in the usual manner at Sever's University Bookstore, Harvard Square, Cambridge, on Saturday morning, October 24, 1903, at 8 o'clock. A limited number of seats have been reserved for college officers and invited guests.

SOLO ARTISTS

MR. BUSONI

MR. ARBOS

MISS MAUD MacCARTHY

MISS OLIVE MEAD

MR. KRASSELT

AND OTHERS TO BE ANNOUNCED

C. W. SEVER & Co.,

University Bookstore,

Harvard Square,

Cambridge, Mass.

1881–1903

C. W. SEVER & Co.,
University Bookstore,
Harvard Square,
Cambridge, Mass.

[106]

mailed to Subscribers

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT TO SEASON TICKET HOLDERS

THE BROOKLYN PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS

BY THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

On account of the destruction by fire of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, the Boston Symphony Concerts of December 11th, January 15th, February 15th and March 18th will be given at the Baptist Temple, corner Schermerhorn street and Third avenue, one-half block from Flatbush avenue.

The Academy of Music had 1,660 numbered seats, and 60 sittings in boxes.

The Baptist Temple has 1,716 numbered seats. Omitting therefore the amphi-

THE BROOKLYN PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS

BY THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

1881–1903

On account of the destruction by fire of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, the Boston Symphony Concerts of December 11th, January 15th, February 15th and March 18th will be given at the Baptist Temple, corner Schermerhorn street and Third avenue, one-half block from Flatbush avenue.

The Academy of Music had 1,660 numbered seats, and 60 sittings in boxes.

The Baptist Temple has 1,716 numbered seats. Omitting therefore the amphitheatre in the top of the Academy of Music, the Baptist Temple will seat comfortably as many as the Academy of Music, lacking four.

Those holding season tickets to the Philharmonic Concerts will have assigned to them seats in the Baptist Temple corresponding, as nearly as possible, in location to those occupied by them in the Academy. This assignment of seats will be made by a Committee representing the Philharmonic Society and the Institute, and the interests of each individual subscriber will be carefully conserved.

The Baptist Temple is supplied with orchestra chairs, is well lighted, and has good acoustic properties.

The patrons of the Philharmonic Concerts are to be congratulated that so good an Auditorium, so well located, has been secured for the Boston Symphony Concerts. Reserved Seat Tickets will be mailed to old subscribers on or before Wednesday, December 9th, to take the place of tickets now held by them. Any subscriber who fails to receive a ticket before December 10th is respectfully requested to call at the office of the Institute, 502 Fulton street, to secure in person such tickets as are due him.

Persons who have purchased tickets for the single concert of December 11th will be able to exchange at the office of the Institute their Academy tickets for tickets in the Baptist Temple, to correspond with the location in that auditorium.

The patrons of the Philharmonic concerts, appreciating the emergency that exists, will doubtless be willing to make some sacrifice of individual comfort in order that the giving of the Philharmonic Concerts in Brooklyn may be continued in the future as in the past.

FRANKLIN W. HOOPER,
Director Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

JOHN S. FROTHINGHAM,
Secretary of the Philharmonic Society.

MRS. CAMDEN C. DIKE,
President Women's Auxiliary Board.

CHARLES A. ELLIS, Manager,
FREDERIC R. COMEE, Assistant Manager,
} Boston Symphony Orchestra.

mailed to subscribers

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT TO SEASON TICKET HOLDERS

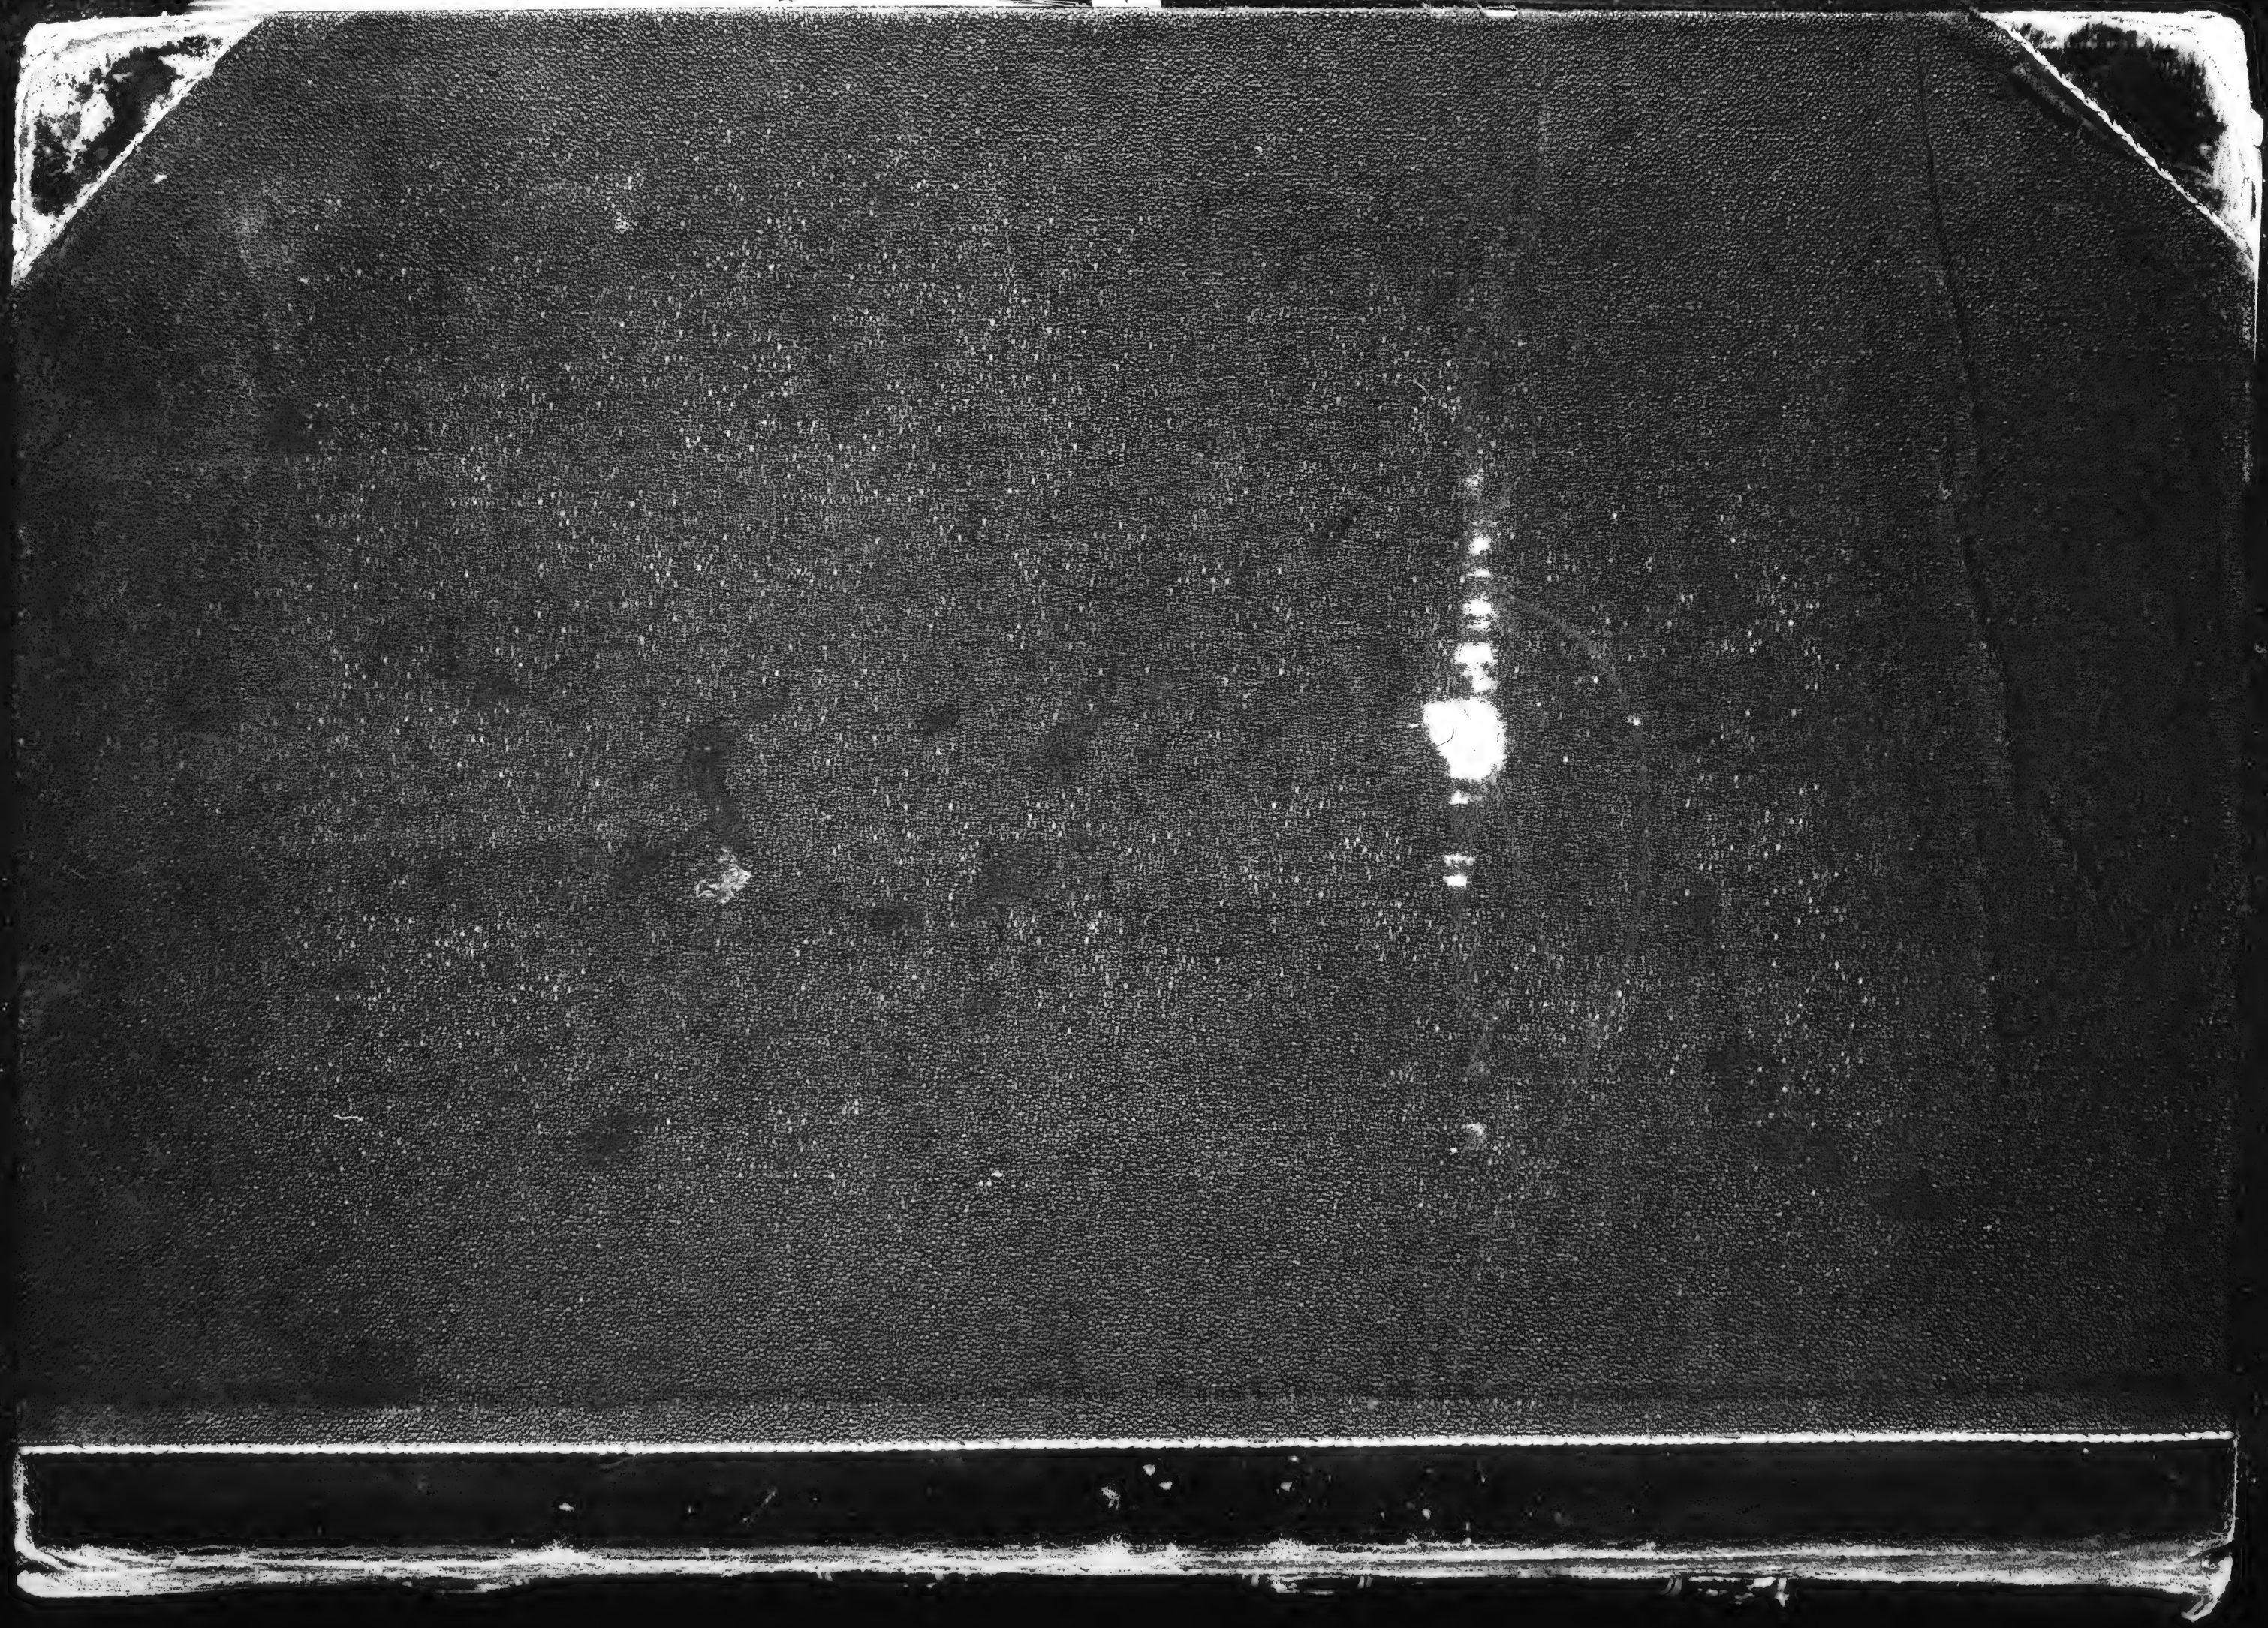
BLANK PAGE

HILL, SMITH & CO
STATIONERS
180 DEVONSHIRE ST.
BOSTON

VOLUME 21

BSO

1904 - 1905



SHIPMAN'S
Invoice & Scrap
BOOK

BLANK PAGE

TICKET

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SALES

Soloists: Miss MURIEL FOSTER, Mme. JOHANNAH CADSKI, Mme. LOUISE HOMER, Miss EDITH WALKER, Mrs. GRACE B. WILLIAMS, Mr. L. B. MERRILL, Mr. THEODORE VAN YORX, Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT, Mme. FANNY BLOOMFIELD-ZEISLER, Mr. C. BUONAMICI, Mr. RAFAEL JOSEFFY, Mr. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN, Mr. C. RUBNER, Mr. ERNEST SCHELLING, Mr. H. GEBHARD, Mr. FRITZ KREISLER, Miss MARIE NICHOLS, Mr. EUGEN YSAYE, Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Mr. C. BARLEBEN, Mr. WILLY HESS, Mr. H. SCHMEDES, Mr. RUDOLF KRASSELT, and Mr. PADEREWSKI

Auction Sale of $12 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at SYMPHONY HALL

Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues

Next Monday, Beginning at 10 o'Clock

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Rehearsals,	Tuesday, October 4, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of 12.00 Seats for Concerts,	Thursday, October 6, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of 7.50 Seats for Concerts,	Friday, October 7, at 10 A. M.

SYMPHONY HALL

Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

94 PERFORMERS

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1904-1905

24 CONCERTS

On Consecutive Saturday Evenings from Oct. 15, 1904, to April 29, 1905, Omitting Nov. 5, Dec. 10, 1904, Jan. 14, Feb. 18, and March 18, 1905, and

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 14, 1904, to April 28, 1905, Omitting Nov. 4, Dec. 9, 1904, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17, 1905

Soloists: Miss MURIEL FOSTER, Mme. JOHANNA GADSKI, Mme. LOUISE HOMER, Miss EDITH WALKER, Mrs. GRACE B. WILLIAMS, Mr. L. B. MERRILL, Mr. THEODORE VAN YORX, Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT, Mme. FANNY BLOOMFIELD-ZEISLER, Mr. C. BUONAMICI, Mr. RAFAEL JOSEFFY, Mr. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN, Mr. C. RUBNER, Mr. ERNEST SCHELLING, Mr. FRITZ KREISLER, Miss MARIE NICHOLS, Mr. EUGENE YSAYE; Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Mr. C. BARLEBEN, Mr. WILLY HESS, Mr. H. SCHMEDES, Mr. RUDOLF KRASSELT, and Mr. PADEREWSKI.

TICKETS for the Series of Concerts and for the Series of Rehearsals, 12.00 and 7.50 according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Monday, Oct. 3, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall. Tuesday, Oct. 4, at 10 A. M.
The $12 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, on Thursday, Oct. 6, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner, at the same place, on Friday, Oct. 7, at 10 A. M.
Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets Will Be Delivered in the Hall, and Must Be Paid for as Soon as Bought, or They Will Be Immediately Resold

---

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

Auction Sale of $12 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at Symphony Hall This Monday Morning at 10 O'clock, continuing through the day.

Soloists:
Miss MURIEL FOSTER,
Mme. JOHANNA GADSKI,
Mme. LOUISE HOMER,
Miss EDITH WALKER,
Mrs. GRACE B. WILLIAMS,
Mr. L. B. MERRILL,
Mr. Theodore Van Yorx,
Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT,
Mme. FANNIE BLOOMFIELD-ZEISLER
Mr. C. BUONAMICI,
Mr. RAFAEL JOSEFFY,
Mr. Vladimir DePachmann,
Mr. C. RUBNER,
Mr. ERNEST SCHELLING,
Mr. H. GEBHARD,
Mr. FRITZ KREISLER,
Miss MARIE NICHOLS,
Mr. EUGEN YSAYE,
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI,
Mr. C. BARLEBEN,
Mr. WILLY HESS,
Mr. H. SCHMEDES,
Mr. RUDOLF KRASSELT,
Mr. PADEREWSKI.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Rehearsals, Tuesday, October 4, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $12.00 Seats for Concerts, Thursday, October 6, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Concerts, Friday, October 7, at 10 A. M.

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE SERIES OF PUBLIC REHEARSALS AND CONCERTS BY THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, OCT. 3 AND 4 (REHEARSALS), OCT. 6 AND 7 (CONCERTS), BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

s27 29 30

SYMPHONY HALL

Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON 1904-05

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

94 PERFORMERS

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On Consecutive SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 15, 1904, to April 29, 1905, Omitting Nov. 5, Dec. 10, 1904, Jan. 14, Feb. 18, and March 18, 1905, and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On Consecutive FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 14, 1904, to April 28, 1905, Omitting Nov. 4, Dec. 9, 1904, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17, 1905

SOLOISTS:

Miss Muriel Foster, Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mr. L. B. Merrill, Mr. Theodore van Yorx, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, Mme. Mr. Rafael Joseffy, Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann, Mr. C. Rubner, Mr. Ernest Schelling, Mr. Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols, Mr. Eugene Ysaye, Mr. T. Adamowski, Mr. C. Barleben, Mr. Willy Hess, Mr. H. Schmedes, Mr. Rudolf Krasselt, and Mr. Paderewski.

TICKETS for the series of CONCERTS, and for the series of REHEARSALS, $12.00 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, MONDAY, Oct. 3, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, TUESDAY, Oct. 4, at 10 A. M.

The $12 seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, on THURSDAY, Oct. 6, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner, at the same place, on FRIDAY, Oct. 7, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be immediately resold.

[4]

SYMPHONY HALL

Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

94 PERFORMERS

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1904-1905

24 CONCERTS

On Consecutive Saturday Evenings from Oct. 15, 1904, to April 29, 1905, Omitting Nov. 5, Dec. 10, 1904, Jan. 14, Feb. 18, and March 18, 1905, and

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 14, 1904, to April 28, 1905, Omitting Nov. 4, Dec. 9, 1904, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17, 1905

Soloists: Miss MURIEL FOSTER, Mme. JOHANNA CADSKI, Mme. LOUISE HOMER, Miss EDITH WALKER, Mrs. GRACE B. WILLIAMS, Mr. L. B. MERRILL, Mr. THEODORE VAN YORX, Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT, Mme. FANNY BLOOMFIELD-ZEISLER, Mr. C. BUONAMICI, Mr. RAFAEL JOSEFFY, Mr. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN, Mr. C. RUBNER, Mr. ERNEST SCHELLING, Mr. FRITZ KREISLER, Miss MARIE NICHOLS, Mr. EUGENE YSAYE; Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Mr. C. BARLEBEN, Mr. WILLY HESS, Mr. H. SCHMEDES, Mr. RUDOLF KRASSELT, and Mr. PADEREWSKI.

TICKETS for the Series of Concerts and for the Series of Rehearsals, 12.00 and 7.50 according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Monday, Oct. 3, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Tuesday, Oct. 4, at 10 A. M.
The $12 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, on Thursday, Oct. 6, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner, at the same place, on Friday, Oct. 7, at 10 A. M.
Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets Will Be Delivered in the Hall, and Must Be Paid for as Soon as Bought, or They Will Be Immediately Resold

---

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

Auction Sale of $12 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at Symphony Hall This Monday Morning at 10 O'clock, continuing through the day.

Soloists:
Miss MURIEL FOSTER,
Mme. JOHANNA CADSKI,
Mme. LOUISE HOMER,
Miss EDITH WALKER,
Mrs. GRACE B. WILLIAMS,
Mr. L. B. MERRILL,
Mr. Theodore Van Yorx,
Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT,
Mme. FANNIE BLOOMFIELD-ZEISLER
Mr. C. BUONAMICI,
Mr. RAFAEL JOSEFFY,
Mr. Vladimir DePachmann,
Mr. C. RUBNER,
Mr. ERNEST SCHELLING,
Mr. H. GEBHARD,
Mr. FRITZ KREISLER,
Miss MARIE NICHOLS,
Mr. EUGEN YSAYE,
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI,
Mr. C. BARLEBEN,
Mr. WILLY HESS,
Mr. H. SCHMEDES,
Mr. RUDOLF KRASSELT,
Mr. PADEREWSKI.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Rehearsals, Tuesday, October 4, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $12.00 Seats for Concerts, Thursday, October 6, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Concerts, Friday, October 7, at 10 A. M.

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE SERIES OF PUBLIC REHEARSALS AND CONCERTS BY THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, OCT. 3 AND 4 (REHEARSALS), OCT. 6 AND 7 (CONCERTS), BECINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

s27 29 30

SYMPHONY HALL

Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON 1904-05

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

94 PERFORMERS

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On Consecutive SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 15, 1904, to April 29, 1905, Omitting Nov. 5, Dec. 10, 1904, Jan. 14, Feb. 18, and March 18, 1905, and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On Consecutive FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 14, 1904, to April 28, 1905, Omitting Nov. 4, Dec. 9, 1904, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17, 1905

SOLOISTS:

Miss Muriel Foster, Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mr. L. B. Merrill, Mr. Theodore van Yorx, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, Mme. Mr. Rafael Joseffy, Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann, Mr. C. Rubner, Mr. Ernest Schelling, Mr. Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols, Mr. Eugene Ysaye, Mr. T. Adamowski, Mr. C. Barleben, Mr. Willy Hess, Mr. H. Schmedes, Mr. Rudolf Krasselt, and Mr. Paderewski.

TICKETS for the series of CONCERTS, and for the series of REHEARSALS, $12.00 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, MONDAY, Oct 3, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, TUESDAY, Oct. 4, at 10 A. M.

The $12 seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, on THURSDAY, Oct. 6, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner, at the same place, on FRIDAY, Oct. 7, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be immediately resold.

COLORED PAPER

799.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$12 REHEARSALS.

FLOOR,

Premium,

Name,

999.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$12 REHEARSALS.

First Bal. Right

Premium,

Name,

1199.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$12 REHEARSALS.

First Bal. Left,

Premium,

Name,

1399.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$12 REHEARSALS.

First Bal. Centre,

Premium,

Name,

299.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$7.50 REHEARSALS.

FLOOR,

Premium,

Name,

499.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$7.50 REHEARSALS.

First Bal. Centre,

Premium,

Name,

799.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$12 CONCERTS.

FLOOR,

Premium,

Name,

999.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$12 CONCERTS.

First Bal. Right

Premium,

Name,

COLORED PAPER

PROGRAMMES.

FIRST CONCERT, OCTOBER 14 and 15.

IN MEMORY OF ANTON DVORAK.

Dvorak
- Overture to "Othello"
- Aria from "Stabat Mater"
  Mme. LOUISE HOMER
- Suite in D major, Op. 39
- Quartette from "Stabat Mater"
  Mrs. GRACE B. WILLIAMS
  Mme. LOUISE HOMER
  Mr. THEODORE VAN YORX
  Mr. L. B. MERRILL
- Symphony No. 5, "From the New World"

SECOND CONCERT, OCTOBER 21 and 22.

Beethoven . . . . . Symphony in B-flat major, No. 4

Joachim . . . . . Hungarian Concerto for Violin
Mr. WILLY HESS
(First appearance in America.)

Paul Dukas . . . . . Scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier"
(First time.)

Wagner . . . . . Overture, "Tannhäuser"

THIRD CONCERT, OCTOBER 28 and 29.

Weber . . . . . Overture, "Oberon"

Bach . . . . . Three Movements, orchestrated by W. GERICKE

Chopin . . . . . Concerto for Pianoforte in F minor, No. 1
Mr. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN

Joseph Suk . . . . . Symphony in E major, Op. 14
(First time.)

It is the intention to present the following novelties during the season:—

Hugo Wolf . . . . . Symphonic Poem, "Penthesilea"

Saint-Saëns . . . . . Symphony No. 1

Liszt . . . . . "Vogelpredigt des heiligen Franz von Assisi"

J. Fauré . . . . . "Pellias and Mellisande"

Van Der Stucken . . . . . "Pax Triumphans"

Debussy . . . . . Prelude, "L'Après-midi d'une Faune"

Converse . . . . . Two Pieces for Piano and Orchestra

R. Caetani . . . . . Prélude Symphonique, Op. 11

C. Goldmark . . . . . Overture

Sinding . . . . . Suite, Op. 35

Rimsky-Korsakoff . . . . . "Sadkow"

Hadley . . . . . Symphony

Gluck (Mottl) . . . . . Ballet Music from Suite II.

Guy Ropartz . . . . . Fantasie in D major

Schillings . . . . . "Der Vespertag"

SYMPHONY HALL
HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVENUES

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1904-1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

94 Performers. Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive SATURDAY EVENINGS from October 15, 1904, to April 29, 1905, omitting November 5, December 10, 1904, January 14, February 18, and March 18, 1905, and

Twenty-four Public Rehearsals

On consecutive FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from October 14, 1904, to April 28, 1905, omitting November 4, December 9, 1904, January 13, February 17, and March 17, 1905.

SOLOISTS

Miss Muriel Foster, Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mr. L. B. Merrill, Mr. Theodore Van Yorx, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, Mr. C. Buonamici, Mr. Rafael Joseffy, Mr. Vladimir De Pachmann, Mr. C. Rubner, Mr. Ernest Schelling, Mr. Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols, Mr. Eugene Ysaye, Mr. T. Adamowski, Mr. C. Barleben, Mr. Willy Hess, Mr. H. Schmedes, Mr. Rudolf Krasselt, and Mr. Paderewski.

TICKETS for the series of CONCERTS and for the series of REHEARSALS, $12.00 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, MONDAY, October 3, at 10 a.m.

The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, TUESDAY, October 4, at 10 a.m.

The $12 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction at Symphony Hall on THURSDAY, October 6, at 10 a.m.

The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, October 7, at 10 a.m.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

TICKETS WILL BE DELIVERED IN THE HALL, AND MUST BE PAID FOR AS SOON AS BOUGHT, OR THEY WILL BE IMMEDIATELY RESOLD

(OVER)

1199.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Season 1904-1905.
$12 CONCERTS.
First Bal. Left,
Premium,
Name,

[illegible]
$12 CONCERTS.
First Bal. Centre,
Premium,
Name,

499.
[illegible]
Season 1904-1905.
$7.50 CONCERTS.
First Bal. Centre,
Premium,

299.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Season 1904-1905.
$7.50 CONCERTS.
FLOOR,
Premium,
Name,

6

COLORED PAPER

PROGRAMMES.

FIRST CONCERT, OCTOBER 14 and 15.

IN MEMORY OF ANTON DVORAK.

Dvorak

SECOND CONCERT, OCTOBER 21 and 22.

Beethoven

Lachner

Paul Dukas

Wagner

THIRD CONCERT, OCTOBER 28 and 29.

Weber

Bach

Chopin

Joseph Suk

It is the intention to present the following [illegible] during the season:

Hugo Wolf

Saint Saens

Liszt

Franz

Richard Strauss

Brahms

Goldmark

Dvorak

Tschaikowsky

Grieg

Charles Martin Loeffler

Rubinstein

Elgar

SYMPHONY HALL

HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVENUES

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1904-1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

94 Performers. Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive SATURDAY EVENINGS from October 15, 1904, to April 29, 1905, omitting November 5, December 10, 1904, January 14, February 18, and March 18, 1905, and

Twenty-four Public Rehearsals

On consecutive FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from October 14, 1904, to April 28, 1905, omitting November 4, December 9, 1904, January 13, February 17, and March 17, 1905.

SOLOISTS

Miss Muriel Foster, Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mr. L. B. Merrill, Mr. Theodore Van Yorx, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. C. Buonamici, Mr. Rafael Joseffy, Mr Vladimir De Pachmann, Mr. C. Rubner, Mr. Ernest Schelling, Mr. Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols, Mr. Eugene Ysaye, Mr. T. Adamowski, Mr. C. Barleben, Mr. Willy Hess, Mr. H Schmedes, Mr. Rudolf Krasselt, and Mr. Paderewski.

TICKETS for the series of CONCERTS and for the series of REHEARSALS, $12.00 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, MONDAY, October 3, at 10 a.m.

The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, TUESDAY, October 4, at 10 a.m.

The $12 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction at Symphony Hall on THURSDAY, October 6, at 10 a.m.

The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, October 7, at 10 a.m.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the Choice, and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be put up at so much per seat as sold.

TICKETS WILL BE DELIVERED IN THE HALL AND MUST BE PAID FOR AS SOON AS SOLD, OR THEY WILL BE IMMEDIATELY RESOLD

(OVER)

1199.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$12 CONCERTS.

First Bal. Left,

Premium,

Name,

1399.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$12 CONCERTS.

First Bal. Centre, ...

Premium, ...

Name, ...

499.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

First Bal. Centre, ...

Premium, ...

Name, ...

299.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

FLOOR,

Premium, ...

Name, ...

[6]

599.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second Bal. Right, ...

Premium, ...

Name, ...

699.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second Bal. Left, ...

Premium, ...

Name, ...

[illegible]

Season 1904-1905.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second Bal. Centre, ...

Premium, ...

Name, ...

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVES.

BOSTON, October 6, 1904.

AUCTION SALE of $12 Season Tickets for the SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS, at Symphony Hall, this (THURSDAY) morning, at TEN o'clock.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

THE SPACE ABOVE IS RESERVED FOR POSTMARK.

POSTAL CARD.

THE SPACE BELOW IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY.

POSTAGE ONE CENT. 1843-McKINLEY-1901.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

THE SPACE ABOVE IS RESERVED FOR POSTMARK.

POSTAL CARD.

THE SPACE BELOW IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY.

POSTAGE ONE CENT. 1843-McKINLEY-1901.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVES.

BOSTON, October 3, 1904.

AUCTION SALE of $12 Season Tickets for the FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS, at Symphony Hall, this (MONDAY) morning, at TEN o'clock.

599.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second Bal. Right,

Premium,

Name,

999.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second Bal. Centre,

Premium,

Name,

699.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1904-1905.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second Bal. Left,

Premium,

Name,

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1904

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Year after year the concerts and public rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, maintained always at the highest standard of artistic excellence, appeal to the cultured public as occasions of rare musical enjoyment, and the thousands of music-lovers who are accustomed to listen to the performances annually await with eager interest the announcement of dates of ticket sales to arrange for securing their favorite seats. Details as to soloists who will appear and orchestral works to be performed the coming season have not been announced, but it may safely be said the list of solo-artists will be a strong and attractive one, and that the programmes will contain a fair proportion of novelties and new compositions, together with a wide variety of standard works.

The performances will be given as usual on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 14 and ending April 29, with omissions in the weeks when the orchestra is on its monthly tour to New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Brooklyn.

The season ticket sale will be held on Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 3 and 4, for the rehearsals, and on Thursday and Friday, Oct. 6 and 7 for the concerts. The sale will take place at Symphony Hall, beginning at 10 A. M. and continuing through each day.

SUNDAY HERALD

Published Every Sunday in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 80.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 18, 1904.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

It seems a safe statement that you can count on the fingers of one hand the institutions in Boston in which its people take greater pride than in the Boston Symphony orchestra. Conceded everywhere to be the model organization in this country, and as good as any abroad, it has given in this city alone in its 23 years' existence, 19 in the old Music Hall and four in the new Symphony Hall, the striking total of 1141 concerts of a quality almost beyond criticism.

The sale of season tickets will begin at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 3 and 4, for the 24 Friday afternoon rehearsals, and on Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 6 and 7, for the 24 Saturday evening concerts. The sales will begin at 10 o'clock A. M. and continue through the day.

SUNDAY HERALD

Published Every Sunday in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 73.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 11, 1904.

THE SYMPHONY SEASON.

It seems hardly possible that the coming season is the 24th in the existence of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and it is also equally worthy of comment that Mr. Gericke at the end of this season, by virtue of his 12 years' service, five in his former regime and seven under the present term, will have directed the orchestra for exactly one-half its career. The other 12 years were divided into three with Georg Henschel, four with Arthur Nikisch and five with Emil Paur. But through all these years, to old friends and to the newcomers of another generation, the Boston Symphony orchestra remains always the same splendid organization, perhaps the peer of any orchestra in the world.

Complete details as to programmes, soloists and new compositions will be announced at an early date. The auction sales of season tickets will begin at Symphony Hall on Monday, Oct. 3, continue through the week, omitting Wednesday, Oct. 5, and close on Friday, Oct. 7.

WORCESTER FESTIVAL.

The 47th annual festival of the

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be called together for rehearsals early next month and the 24th season of the famous organization will begin Oct. 14 and 15. Mr. Gericke who is still at his summer home in Maine has devoted much time and thought to the arrangement of the programmes to be offered the great audiences that assemble from week to week for these superb concerts. His first programme will be devoted to the music of Dvorak and will include vocal numbers by a quartette of singers specially engaged.

The presence in this country of an unusual number of celebrated artists will enable the management to present an exceptionally strong list of soloists during the winter and a brilliant musical season may be anticipated

The Boston Journal

FOUNDED 1833

As striking evidence of the practically unchanged personnel to which the Boston Symphony Orchestra owes in large part its artistic success as an organization, it is worthy of note that the great majority of European artists brought into its ranks when Mr. Gericke reorganized the orchestra early in his regime, beginning twenty years ago, will welcome his return to the conductor's desk the coming season. The only changes from last season in this wonderful aggregation of cultured musicians is the new concert master, Mr. Hess, and a new first clarinetist, Mr. Grisez.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1904

Symphony Hall will open its doors Oct. 14, when the concert season will begin with the first public rehearsal of the twenty-fourth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This celebrated organization was the pioneer, and is the most successful of permanent orchestras in this country. It is safe to assert that no better orchestra exists anywhere, and the thousands of subscribers who attend its superb performance have cause to anticipate an exceptionally enjoyable musical season this winter. Many musical celebrities have been engaged and will appear as soloists in these concerts, among whom none will awaken greater interest than the Orchestra's new concertmeister, Professor Willy Hess, whose record as concertmeister of several of the great European orchestras attests the wisdom of his selection. The Orchestra will number ninety-four performers, and with the exception of the new concertmeister and a new first clarinet there will be no changes of importance in its membership. The ticket sales will be held at Symphony Hall, Oct. 3, 4, 6 and 7.

The Boston Post

The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Symphony hall will open its doors Oct 14, when the concert season will begin with the first public rehearsal of the 24th season of the Boston symphony orchestra. Many musical celebrities have been engaged and will appear as soloists in these concerts, among whom none will awaken greater interest than the orchestra's new concertmeister, Prof Willy Hess, whose record as concertmeister of several of the great European orchestras attests the wisdom of his selection.

The orchestra will number 94 performers and with the exception of the new concertmeister and a new first clarinet there will be no changes of importance in its membership. The ticket sales will be held at Symphony hall, Oct 3, 4, 6 and 7.

BOSTON HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 75.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 13, 1904.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Symphony Hall will open its doors on Oct. 14, when the concert season will begin with the first public rehearsal of the 24th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Many musical celebrities have been engaged and will appear as soloists in these concerts, among whom none will awaken greater interest than the orchestra's new concertmeister, Prof. Willy Hess, whose record as concertmeister of several of the great European orchestras attests the wisdom of his selection. The orchestra will number 94 performers, and, with the exception of the new concertmeister and a new first clarinet, there will be no changes of importance in its membership. The ticket sales will be held at Symphony Hall Oct. 3, 4, 6 and 7.

The Boston Journal

FIRST SYMPHONY CONCERT IS FIXED FOR OCT. 14

Conductor Gericke Will Devote the Program to Dvorak's Work.

The members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be called together for rehearsals early next month and the twenty-fourth season of the famous organization will begin with performances at Symphony Hall, Oct. 14 and 15. Mr. Gericke's first program will be devoted to the music of Dvorak and will include vocal numbers by a quartet of singers specially engaged. Season tickets for the Friday afternoon rehearsals and the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at auction as usual. The ticket sales will be held at Symphony Hall, Oct. 3, 4, 6 and 7.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, SEPT 11, 1904.

The Boston symphony orchestra, 94 performers, will gather together from Europe and all parts of this country in a few weeks for the 24th season, 19 in the old Music hall and the fifth in the new Symphony hall. Mr Gericke will again direct the orchestra for the 12th year, five in his first regime, and the seventh in his present term of service. With the exception of the new first violin and concert master and a new first clarinet, the orchestra will remain the same as last season. The auction sales of season tickets will begin at Symphony hall Monday, Oct 3, continue through the week, omitting Wednesday, Oct 5, and close Friday, Oct 7.

The Handel and Haydn society will soon take up the work of rehearsal for the regular season. The voice com-

The Boston Post

The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 11, 1904.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

It seems hardly possible that the coming season will be the 24th in the existence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and it is also equally worthy of comment that Mr. Gericke, at the end of this season, by virtue of his 12 years' service, five in his former regime and seven under the present term, will have directed the orchestra for exactly one-half its career. The other 12 years were divided into three with Georg Henschel, four with Arthur Nikisch and five with Emil Paur.

But through all these years, to old frfends and to the newcomers of another generation, the Boston Symphony Orchestra remains always the same splendid organization, perhaps the peer of any orchestra in the world.

Complete details as to programmes, soloists and new compositions will be announced at an early date. The auction sales of season tickets will begin at Symphony Hall on Monday. Oct. 3, continue through the week, omitting Wednesday, Oct. 5, and close on Friday, Oct.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1904

ber of years ago Mr. [illegible] humble member of one of his companies. Mr. Elton, although an Englishman, prefers to make his home in this country and spends his summers at his villa on the Hudson.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, ninety-four performers, will gather together from Europe and all parts of this country in a few weeks for the twenty-fourth season, the nineteenth in the old Music Hall and the fifth in the new Symphony Hall. Mr. Gericke will again direct the orchestra for the twelfth year, five in the first régime and seven in his present term of service. With the exception of the new first violin and concert-master and a new first clarinet, the orchestra will remain the same. Complete details as to programmes, soloists and new compositions will be announced at an early date. The auction sales of season tickets will begin at Symphony Hall on Monday, Oct. 3, continue through the week, omitting Wednesday, Oct. 5, and close on Friday, Oct. 7.

[illegible]

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1904

It seems a safe statement that you can count on the fingers of one hand the institutions in Boston in which its people take greater pride than in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Conceded everywhere to be the model organization in this country and as good as any abroad, it has given in this city alone in its twenty-three years' existence (nineteen in the old Music Hall and four in the new Symphony Hall), the striking total of 1141 concerts of a quality almost beyond criticism. The sale of season tickets will begin at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 3 and 4, for the twenty-four Friday afternoon rehearsals, and on Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 6 and 7, for the twenty-four Saturday evening concerts. The sales will begin at ten o'clock A. M. and continue through the day.

Considerable interest is shown in the coming production in November of the new two-act comic opera, "The Lark

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, SEPT 13, 1904.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be called together for rehearsals early next month, and the 24th season of the famous organization will begin with performances at Symphony Hall, Oct. 14 and 15. Mr. Gericke, who is still at his summer home in Maine, has devoted much time and thought to the arrangement of the programmes to be offered the great audiences that assemble from week to week for these superb concerts.

The presence in this country of an unusual number of celebrated artists will enable the management to present an exceptionally strong list of soloists during the winter.

Season tickets for the Friday afternoon rehearsals and the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at auction as usual.

The ticket sales will be held at Symphony Hall, Oct. 3, 4, 6 and 7.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Seldom, if ever, in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has an announcement been made regarding a season which has included more or stronger attractions than these put forward as the features of the concerts of the coming months.

The remarkable list of soloists secured for the coming season includes Miss Muriel Foster, Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Mrs. Grace Williams, L. B. Merrill, Theodore Van Yorx, Eugen D'Albert, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, C. Buonamici, Rafael Joseffy, Vladimir De Pachmann, C. Rubner, Ernest Schelling, Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols, Eugene Ysaye, T. Adamowski, C. Barleben, Willy Hess, H. Schmedes, Rudolf Krasselt and Paderewski.

The auction sale of seats for the public rehearsals occurs at Symphony hall on Monday and Tuesday of next week, beginning at 10 a.m., and that for seats for the concerts on Thursday and Friday following, at the same hour.

[8]

MUSICIANS IN SYMPHONY HAD TO JOIN UNION

Strike Threatened at Worcester Concerts, and All But One Man Yielded.

By refusing to play with non-union men, in the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, to be given in Worcester this week, the members of the American Federation of Musicians have forced six of the non-union men in the orchestra to join the organization, and the seventh man, Secretary Keleher declares, will either be a member of the union in good standing before the concerts are held or he will be missing when the performance commences.

A strike of the union men was narrowly averted, owing to the new men refusing to yield. T. C. Keleher, recording secretary of Boston Union No. 9, has given out the following statement:

"This matter has been settled in a way that may be considered a triumph for union musicians. We have been assured by the committee of the Worcester County Musical Association that none but federated musicians will play the engagement. There were several Symphony Orchestra men who did not belong to the federation, and against whom we objected, but of these I now have six applications for membership in our local union, and I feel safe in saying that the seventh man will be in good standing with the union before the first concert in Worcester.

"We have to insist that all musicians with whom we play an engagement belong to the union or we would be heavily fined. These fines would be imposed by members of the local union at Worcester, and would go into the treasury of the national federation. These fines might be $25, $50 or $100, levied against every Boston union musician who played with the non-union musicians. If the Worcester union musicians came to Boston and played an engagement with non-union players it would be our business to levy fines against them in the same manner."

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra asserts that the orchestra as an organization will not play at Worcester, but that about fifty of the ninety-four members will do so. The regular orchestra season will not open until October. Any labor trouble he said was the concern of the men themselves.

The Boston Journal

FOUNDED 1833

Published Every Week Day at The Journal Building, 262-268 Washington St.

BRILLIANT ARRAY OF MUSICAL STARS

List of Soloists Secured for the Symphony Orchestra Concerts Defies Comparison.

The announcement of the soloists who will appear at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the coming season gives assurance that these fine musical entertainments will continue to be of great charm and value to music lovers. The list includes almost all of the notable artists who are to visit America this winter, as well as many resident players and singers of high rank, as follows:

Miss Muriel Foster, Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mr. L. B. Merrill, Mr. Theodore van Yorx, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, Mr. Rafael Joseffy, Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann, Mr. C. Rubner, Mr. Ernest Schelling, Mr. Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols, Mr. Eugene Ysaye, Mr. A. Adamowski, Mr. C. Barleben, Mr. Willy Hess, Mr. H. Schmedes, Mr. Rudolf Krasselt and Mr. Paderewski.

The auction sales for season seats, which are always such interesting and typically Bostonese events, will begin at Symphony Hall Oct. 4, when the $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold. On Tuesday the cheaper rehearsal seats will be run off, while on Oct. 6 and 7 will be put up the two grades of Saturday evening concert seats.

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1904

The unusual interest shown in the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives promise of large attendance at the sales of seats for these events next week. The announcements of the prominent attractions of the season indicate that patrons will have a rich musical feast and one well worthy the high repute of this organization. The auction sales occur at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday and Thursday and Friday of next week, beginning each day at ten o'clock, and continuing until the seats put on sale for the day are all bid off.

Boston Daily Globe.
TUESDAY, SEPT 27, 1904.

Symphony Concert Season.

The preliminary announcements regarding the Symphony concert season promise to fully sustain the high standard established in the long and honorable history of this organization by its public performances. It has come to be a recognized fact that the promises made regarding the Boston Symphony orchestra's concerts will be fulfilled to the letter, and in this confidence, so honestly won, is found a logical reason for the loyalty with which the public has continued these many years to contribute to the support of this great Boston institution. The programs will include a vast array of all that is best in the modern and classical schools of composition, and their presentation, under Mr Gericke's baton, can be awaited with pleasant anticipation.

The remarkable list of soloists includes Miss Muriel Foster, Mme Johanna Gadski, Mme Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Mrs Grace B. Williams, Mr L. B. Merrill, Mr Theodore Van Yorx, Mr Eugen d'Albert, Mme Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, Mr C. Buonamici, Mr Rafael Joseffy, Mr Vladimir DePachmann, Mr C Rubner, Mr Ernest Schelling, Mr Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols, Mr Eugene Ysaye, Mr T. Adamowski, Mr C Barleben, Mr Willy Hess, Mr H. Schmedes, Mr Rudolf Kraeselt and Mr Paderewski.

The auction sale of seats for the public rehearsals occurs at Symphony hall Monday and Tuesday of next week, beginning at 10 a m, and that for seats for the concerts on Thursday and Friday following at the same hour.

May Irwin's New Play

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

SYMPHONY CONCERT

The preliminary announcements regarding the Symphony concert season have created an intense interest in musical circles and the attractions planned for these events promise to fully sustain the high standard established in the long and honorable history of this organization by its public performances. The programmes of the coming season will include a vast array of all that is best in the modern and classical schools of composition and their presentation, under Mr. Gericke's baton, can be awaited with pleasant anticipation.

The remarkable list of soloists secured for the coming season includes Miss Muriel Foster, Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mr. L. B. Merrill, Mr. Theodore Van Yorx, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, Mr. C. Buonamici, Mr. Rafael Joseffy, Mr. Vladimir De Pachmann, Mr. C. Rubner, Mr. Ernest Schelling, Mr. Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols, Mr. Eugene Ysaye, Mr. T. Adamowski, Mr. C. Barleben, Mr. Willy Hess, Mr. H. Schmedes, Mr. Rudolf Krasselt and Mr. Paderewski.

The auction sale of seats for the public rehearsals occurs at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday of next week, beginning at 10 a. m., and that for seats for the concerts on Thursday and Friday following at the same hour.

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

There is no feature of the musical season in Boston which is awaited with more eager and pleasurable anticipation than the symphony concerts. Few cities of the world are favored with a permanent musical organization which has reached so high a standard of attainment in performance as the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Conductor Gericke's plans for the coming season of orchestral entertainment are nearly completed, and details as to programmes and soloists provided by the management, and novelties to be performed, will soon be announced.

The season's performances will consist of the usual Friday afternoon public rehearsals, and the Saturday evening concerts, 24 each, beginning Oct. 14 and ending April 29, with several omissions during the absence of the orchestra in other cities.

The auction sale of seats will take place at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 3 and 4, for the rehearsals, and on Thursday and Friday, Oct. 6 and 7, for the concerts, beginning at 10 a. m.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The announcement of works scheduled for performance and details of soloists who will be heard at the forthcoming concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is awaited with keen interest by the musical public. This will be the 24th season of the orchestra.

Wilhelm Gericke will wield the baton, as usual, this being the 7th year of his second term as conductor, and that he will be ably seconded by his new concertmaster and first violin, Mr. Hess, with the latter's European reputation, leaves little room for doubt.

One other new-comer, Mr. Grisez, first clarinet, completes the changes in personnel from last season.

The performances the coming season will consist of the usual 24 rehearsals and 24 concerts, to be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings consecutively—except for occasional intermissions when the orchestra is on tour—beginning Oct. 14 and ending Apr. 29.

The auction sale of seats is announced for the week after next, for the rehearsals, on Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 3 and 4; and for the concerts on the following Thursday and Friday, Oct. 6 and 7. The sale will [illegible] a.m. and continue through the

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Announcements of the Famous Organization That Has Been Most Important in Making Musical History in America During the Past 23 Years.

NEW CONCERT MASTER

And Some of the Soloists of the Coming Symphony Season.

The 24th season of the Boston symphony orchestra begins with the 2186th performance and the 1142d in Boston Friday afternoon, Oct 14.

Such striking totals indicate most clearly and conclusively that this organization is making the musical history of America and in a most satisfactory and complete manner. A second generation of patrons can attest with their elders to the high standard of performance, for, with a slight variation of the old proverb, the proof of the performance is in the playing. And 23 years of hearing good music played in the best way has resulted in a most exacting clientele, who demand and always get the very highest achievements of which the orchestra is capable.

A personnel practically unchanged for more years than most other American orchestras have existed is a potent factor in the splendid ensemble, and it is a pleasure to announce that a new concert master and first violin, Mr Willy Hess, and a new first clarinet, Mr Georges Grises, are the only changes of sufficient importance to deserve mention.

There will be the usual 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals and 24 Saturday evening concerts, beginning Oct 14 and 15. The orchestra will make the customary five trips to New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Baltimore, necessitating the omission of the performances which would otherwise be given on Nov 4 and 5, Dec 9 and 10, Jan 13 and 14, Feb 17 and 18 and March 17 and 18. There will be the usual Harvard university concerts in Sanders theatre, Cambridge.

Three concerts guaranteed by 30 ladies and gentlemen, headed by Pres Faunce of Brown university, will be given in Providence, and three concerts, also guaranteed by a public spirited citizen, are booked for Hartford. Yale university duplicates her courtesy of last year and allows the use of her beautiful new Woolsey hall for a concert in March. Smith college, with a most commendable enterprise and the ambition to feature her department of music, repeats her guarantee of last season. Two concerts, one each in Troy and Albany, are undertaken by a prominent musician to whom the concert goers of these two cities have been indebted for similar events for several years.

The list of soloists is, as usual, as attractive as can be secured, including many of the greatest artists in the world. It will come as a very pleasant surprise that Mr Ignace Paderewski will be the soloist toward the close of the season, and some time during the month of April, in the Boston series. Of the lady singers, Mme Gadski and Mme Louise Homer are too well known to Symphony patrons to require further exploiting here. Miss Muriel Foster, the beautiful English contralto, will undoubtedly duplicate the charming impression made last season, and Miss Edith Walker of the Metropolitan opera company of New York adds much strength to the list. Of the pianists there are Mr D'Albert, who comes to this country after several years' absence; Mr De Pachmann, possibly the greatest Chopin player living; Mr Joseffy and Mme Bloomfield-Zeisler, who are always favorites; Mr Buonamici, who received such a flattering reception at his previous appearance with the orchestra; Mr Ernest Schelling, a pupil of Paderewski, and Mr Rubner, who comes from Europe to take the position as the head of the department of music of Columbia college vacated by Mr E. A. MacDowell. For violinists there are Mr Ysaye, whose last appearance with the Boston Symphony orchestra was 10 years ago; Mr Fritz Kreisler, whose remarkable triumph two years ago will be readily recalled; Miss Marie Nichols, a Boston artist who has already gained distinction; Mr Willy Hess, the new concert master of the orchestra, and Mr T. Adamowski, Mr C. Barleben and Mr H. Schmedes, also from the ranks of the orchestra. It is also sure to be a welcome announcement that Mr Rudolf Krasselt, the first violoncellist of the orchestra, will again appear as soloist during the season.

The sale of season tickets for the 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be held at Symphony hall Monday and Tuesday, Oct 3 and 4, and for the 24 Saturday evening concerts Thursday and Friday, Oct 6 and 7; each sale beginning at 10 a m and continuing throughout the day.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice, and no more than four seats will [illegible] one bid. [illegible] open to

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Mr. Willy Hess, the new concert master and first violin of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, although a native of Germany, whose professional career of more than 30 years has been pursued on the other side of the Atlantic, received his earliest musical training in America, where his parents resided for seven years. At 13 he returned with his family to Europe, settling in Holland, where he immediately distinguished himself in public performance by leading the celebrated Harfen Quartet. From that time his public career has been continuous, as concert violinist, orchestra leader and professor. Mr. Hess is a pupil of Vieuxtemps and Joachim and is now about 45 years of age.

Even more than the usual richness and variety of programme is promised for the symphony concerts of the coming season, as will be seen by the announcement of performances and soloists to be given to the public in a few days. The opening concert will be given on Saturday evening, Oct. 15, and the auction sale of tickets will be held at Symphony Hall on [illegible] Thursday and Friday,

BOSTON HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 89.
TUESDAY, SEPT. 27, 1904.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Seldom in the history of the Boston Symphony orchestra has the announcement of a season included more or stronger attractions than those featured for the concerts of the coming months. The character of the programmes arranged by Conductor Wilhelm Gericke and the excellence of the presentations by the Symphony orchestra are accepted as a standard the world over.

The soloists secured for the coming season include Miss Muriel Foster, Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Mrs. Grace B. Williams, L. B. Merrill, Theodore Van Yorx, Eugen D'Albert, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, C. Buonamici, Rafael Joseffy, Vladimir De Pachmann, C. Rubner, Ernest Schelling, Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols, Eugene Ysaye, T. Adamowski, C. Barleben, Willy Hess, H. Schmedes, Rudolf Krasselt and Mr. Paderewski.

The auction sale of seats for the public rehearsals occurs at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday of next week, beginning at 10 A. M., and that for seats for the concerts on Thursday and Friday following at the same hour.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD,
309-11 Washington St.
Entered at the Post Office as second-class mail matter.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The unusual interest shown in the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives promise of large attendance at the sales of seats for these events next week. The announcements of the prominent attractions of the season indicate that patrons will have a rich musical feast and one well worthy the high repute of this organization. The auction sales occur at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday and Thursday and Friday of next week, beginning each day at 10 and continuing until the seats put on sale for the day are all bid off.

Boston Daily Globe.
TUESDAY, SEPT 27, 1904.

Symphony Concert Season.

The preliminary announcements regarding the Symphony concert season promise to fully sustain the high standard established in the long and honorable history of this organization by its public performances. It has come to be a recognized fact that the promises made regarding the Boston Symphony orchestra's concerts will be fulfilled to the letter, and in this confidence, so honestly won, is found a logical reason for the loyalty with which the public has continued these many years to contribute to the support of this great Boston institution. The programs will include a vast array of all that is best in the modern and classical schools of composition, and their presentation, under Mr Gericke's baton, can be awaited with pleasant anticipation.

The remarkable list of soloists includes Miss Muriel Foster, Mme Johanna Gadski, Mme Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Mrs Grace B. Williams, Mr L. B. Merrill, Mr Theodore Van Yorx, Mr Eugen d'Albert, Mme Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, Mr C. Buonamici, Mr Rafael Joseffy, Mr Vladimir DePachmann, Mr C Rubner, Mr Ernest Schelling, Mr Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols, Mr Eugene Ysaye, Mr T. Adamowski, Mr C Barleben, Mr Willy Hess, Mr H. Schmedes, Mr Rudolf Krasselt and Mr Paderewski.

The auction sale of seats for the public rehearsals occurs at Symphony hall Monday and Tuesday of next week, beginning at 10 a m, and that for seats for the concerts on Thursday and Friday following at the same hour.

May Irwin's New Play

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

SYMPHONY CONCERT

The preliminary announcements regarding the Symphony concert season have created an intense interest in musical circles and the attractions planned for these events promise to fully sustain the high standard established in the long and honorable history of this organization by its public performances. The programmes of the coming season will include a vast array of all that is best in the modern and classical schools of composition and their presentation, under Mr. Gericke's baton, can be awaited with pleasant anticipation.

The remarkable list of soloists secured for the coming season includes Miss Muriel Foster, Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mr. L. B. Merrill, Mr. Theodore Van Yorx, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, Mr. C. Buonamici, Mr. Rafael Joseffy, Mr. Vladimir De Pachmann, Mr. C. Rubner, Mr. Ernest Schelling, Mr. Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols, Mr. Eugene Ysaye, Mr. T. Adamowski, Mr. C. Barleben, Mr. Willy Hess, Mr. H. Schmedes, Mr. Rudolf Krasselt and Mr. Paderewski.

The auction sale of seats for the public rehearsals occurs at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday of next week, beginning at 10 a. m., and that for seats for the concerts on Thursday and Friday following at the same hour.

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

There is no feature of the musical season in Boston which is awaited with more eager and pleasurable anticipation than the symphony concerts. Few cities of the world are favored with a permanent musical organization which has reached so high a standard of attainment in performance as the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Conductor Gericke's plans for the coming season of orchestral entertainment are nearly completed, and details as to programmes and soloists provided by the management, and novelties to be performed, will soon be announced.

The season's performances will consist of the usual Friday afternoon public rehearsals, and the Saturday evening concerts, 24 each, beginning Oct. 14 and ending April 29, with several omissions during the absence of the orchestra in other cities.

The auction sale of seats will take place at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 3 and 4, for the rehearsals, and on Thursday and Friday, Oct. 6 and 7, for the concerts, beginning at 10 a. m.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The announcement of works scheduled for performance and details of soloists who will be heard at the forthcoming concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is awaited with keen interest by the musical public. This will be the 24th season of the orchestra.

Wilhelm Gericke will wield the baton, as usual, this being the 7th year of his second term as conductor, and that he will be ably seconded by his new concertmaster and first violin, Mr. Hess, with the latter's European reputation, leaves little room for doubt.

One other new-comer, Mr. Grisez, first clarinet, completes the changes in personnel from last season.

The performances the coming season will consist of the usual 24 rehearsals and 24 concerts, to be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings consecutively—except for occasional intermissions when the orchestra is on tour—beginning Oct. 14 and ending Apr. 29.

The auction sale of seats is announced for the week after next, for the rehearsals, on Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 3 and 4; and for the concerts on the following Thursday [illegible], Oct. 6 and 7. The sale will [illegible] a.m. and continue through the

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Announcements of the Famous Organization That Has Been Most Important in Making Musical History in America During the Past 23 Years.

NEW CONCERT MASTER

And Some of the Soloists of the Coming Symphony Season.

The 24th season of the Boston symphony orchestra begins with the 2186th performance and the 1142d in Boston Friday afternoon, Oct 14.

Such striking totals indicate most clearly and conclusively that this organization is making the musical history of America and in a most satisfactory and complete manner. A second generation of patrons can attest with their elders to the high standard of performance, for, with a slight variation of the old proverb, the proof of the performance is in the playing. And 23 years of hearing good music played in the best way has resulted in a most exacting clientele, who demand and always get the very highest achievements of which the orchestra is capable.

A personnel practically unchanged for more years than most other American orchestras have existed is a potent factor in the splendid ensemble, and it is a pleasure to announce that a new concert master and first violin, Mr Willy Hess, and a new first clarinet, Mr Georges Grises, are the only changes of sufficient importance to deserve mention.

There will be the usual 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals and 24 Saturday evening concerts, beginning Oct 14 and 15. The orchestra will make the customary five trips to New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Baltimore, necessitating the omission of the performances which would otherwise be given on Nov 4 and 5, Dec 9 and 10, Jan 13 and 14, Feb 17 and 18 and March 17 and 18. There will be the usual Harvard university concerts in Sanders theatre, Cambridge.

Three concerts guaranteed by 30 ladies and gentlemen, headed by Pres Faunce of Brown university, will be given in Providence, and three concerts, also guaranteed by a public spirited citizen, are booked for Hartford. Yale university duplicates her courtesy of last year and allows the use of her beautiful new Woolsey hall for a concert in March. Smith college, with a most commendable enterprise and the ambition to feature her department of music, repeats her guarantee of last season. Two concerts, one each in Troy and Albany, are undertaken by a prominent musician to whom the concert goers of these two cities have been indebted for similar events for several years.

The list of soloists is, as usual, as attractive as can be secured, including many of the greatest artists in the world. It will come as a very pleasant surprise that Mr Ignace Paderewski will be the soloist toward the close of the season, and some time during the month of April, in the Boston series. Of the lady singers, Mme Gadski and Mme Louise Homer are too well known to Symphony patrons to require further exploiting here. Miss Muriel Foster, the beautiful English contralto, will undoubtedly duplicate the charming impression made last season, and Miss Edith Walker of the Metropolitan opera company of New York adds much strength to the list. Of the pianists there are Mr D'Albert, who comes to this country after several years' absence; Mr De Pachmann, possibly the greatest Chopin player living; Mr Joseffy and Mme Bloomfield-Zeisler, who are always favorites; Mr Buonamici, who received such a flattering reception at his previous appearance with the orchestra; Mr Ernest Schelling, a pupil of Paderewski, and Mr Rubner, who comes from Europe to take the position as the head of the department of music of Columbia college vacated by Mr E. A. MacDowell. For violinists there are Mr Ysaye, whose last appearance with the Boston Symphony orchestra was 10 years ago; Mr Fritz Kreisler, whose remarkable triumph two years ago will be readily recalled; Miss Marie Nichols, a Boston artist who has already gained distinction; Mr Willy Hess, the new concert master of the orchestra, and Mr T. Adamowski, Mr C. Barleben and Mr H. Schmedes, also from the ranks of the orchestra. It is also sure to be a welcome announcement that Mr Rudolf Krasselt, the first violoncellist of the orchestra, will again appear as soloist during the season.

The sale of season tickets for the 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be held at Symphony hall Monday and Tuesday, Oct 3 and 4, and for the 24 Saturday evening concerts Thursday and Friday, Oct 6 and 7; each sale beginning at 10 a m and continuing throughout the day.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice, and no more than four seats will [illegible] one bid. [illegible] open to

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Mr. Willy Hess, the new concert master and first violin of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, although a native of Germany, whose professional career of more than 30 years has been pursued on the other side of the Atlantic, received his earliest musical training in America, where his parents resided for seven years. At 13 he returned with his family to Europe, settling in Holland, where he immediately distinguished himself in public performance by leading the celebrated Harfen Quartet. From that time his public career has been continuous, as concert violinist, orchestra leader and professor. Mr. Hess is a pupil of Vieuxtemps and Joachim and is now about 45 years of age.

Even more than the usual richness and variety of programme is promised for the symphony concerts of the coming season, as will be seen by the announcement of performances and soloists to be given to the public in a few days. The opening concert will be given on Saturday evening, Oct. 15, and the auction sale of tickets will be held at Symphony Hall on [illegible], Thursday and Friday,

BOSTON HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 89.
TUESDAY, SEPT. 27, 1904.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Seldom in the history of the Boston Symphony orchestra has the announcement of a season included more or stronger attractions than those featured for the concerts of the coming months. The character of the programmes arranged by Conductor Wilhelm Gericke and the excellence of the presentations by the Symphony orchestra are accepted as a standard the world over.

The soloists secured for the coming season include Miss Muriel Foster, Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Mrs. Grace B. Williams, L. B. Merrill, Theodore Van Yorx, Eugen D'Albert, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, C. Buonamici, Rafael Joseffy, Vladimir De Pachmann, C. Rubner, Ernest Schelling, Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols, Eugene Ysaye, T. Adamowski, C. Barleben, Willy Hess, H. Schmedes, Rudolf Krasselt and Mr. Paderewski.

The auction sale of seats for the public rehearsals occurs at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday of next week, beginning at 10 A. M., and that for seats for the concerts on Thursday and Friday following at the same hour.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD,
309-11 Washington St.
Entered at the Post Office as second-class mail matter.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The unusual interest shown in the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives promise of large attendance at the sales of seats for these events next week. The announcements of the prominent attractions of the season indicate that patrons will have a rich musical feast and one well worthy the high repute of this organization. The auction sales occur at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday and Thursday and Friday of next week, beginning each day at 10 and continuing until the seats put on sale for the day are all bid off.

REDUCTION RATIO 14x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AND ITS FAMOUS SOLOISTS

wenty-Fourth Season of the Celebrated Boston Orchestra—Character of Programmes as Indicated by Those of Other Years; Annual Musical Festival at Worcester; the Gloucester Festival—Old and New Operas—Personals.

HE 24th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra, 94 performers, Mr. Wilhelm Gedicke conductor, will open with the public rehearsal of Oct. 14 and the concert of Oct. 15.

Willy Hess and Mr. Grises will be ated with the orchestra for the ime. Mr. Hess, the new concert r, was born at Mannheim on July 0. He studied the violin with his and with Joachim. At the age of was concert master at Frankfort-Main, and he kept this position 1886, when he was called as concert r to Rotterdam. In 1888 a like po- was offered him in England. In e went to Cologne, where he was rt master of the Guerzenich con- first violin and leader of the enich quartet and violin teacher e Cologne Conservatory. About a ago Mr. Hess accepted an invita- to settle in London as a teacher. as a widespread European reputa- as a virtuoso. He will, naturally, e first violin of a string quartet in on. Mr. Georges Grises of Paris be the first clarinet.

other respects the orchestra will be same—that is to say, a band of ers that is unsurpassed in the musi- world, and we doubt whether it is alled. There are few orchestras that established on such a sure founda- there are few orchestras, if there y one, in which so many virtuoso ers of the first rank are so well dis- ned for the purposes of perfect en- ble. It should also be remembered Mr. Gericke, who has been the one trainer of the orchestra, who has it the distinguishing and pre-emi- qualities of sonority, balance, pro- on, finesse in detail, is the conduc- of 12 of the 24 seasons.

Programmes of the Season.

has not been the custom of the man- ment to announce before the begin- of a season the chief works to be performed. The programmes of the last sons may in this instance give an of the character of those of the s in the past, the classic, the dern and the ultra-modern composers will be represented.

The maker of programmes has a most difficult task, and in whatever city he may live, in Berlin, London, Paris, Chicago, St. Petersburg, there is always complaint. Some in the audience would not listen to any music save that by the long approved masters. To them even Schumann is an experimenter, not always to be applauded. The younger are as unreasonably impatient; they would hear only the latest works of the most adventurous. Then there are some who would have an American represented at each concert, simply because he is an American, and without regard to the quality of his music.

They that protest against novelties allege that many new pieces introduced during the last three years were of a disappointing character. "Why should we not always listen to music that we know is good?" They forget that many contemporaries of the composers of this "good" music protested at the time against the "eccentrics" and the "revolutionaries" who now are ranked as conservatives. The music lovers of this city have a right to know what is now doing. Richard Strauss, Mahler, Debussy, d'Indy, Dukas and other men now living should be something more than names in a city that prides itself on its musical interest. Saint-Saens wrote an opera, "The Barbarians." It is doubtful whether the opera will ever be performed in this country. Mr. Gericke introduced the overture. It gave little pleasure; it will never be ranked among the composer's best works. But should not the musicians and the music-lovers of Boston have had the opportunity of judging for themselves concerning the merits of this overture? Concerts devoted exclusively for a season to the acknowledged masterpieces of classic composers would be intolerable. Even the greatest works lose through undue familiarity. The moderns have their rights. The most outrageously modern may yet turn out to be a sane and conservative classic. Honor should be paid to all that have a reasonable claim on the attention. If a new symphonic poem excites fierce discussion, if it is to some the abomination of desolation and to others a thing of wondrous beauty, so much the better for conductor, orchestra and audience. Smug and constant approval is a symptom of stagnation in art.

Coming Soloists.

Some of the soloists announced for the coming season will no doubt be also heard in recital, but a great soloist needs a great orchestra and the excitement and the brilliance of a great audience to call forth the full display of his powers. The concert stage is then his field of triumph; concerto is his battle horse on which he rides to glory.

The singers will be Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mrs. Louise Homer, Miss Muriel Foster, probably Miss Edith Walker, Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mr. Theodore Van Yorx, Mrs. S. B. Merrill. Mme. Cadski will not sing in opera in America this season, but she will make a concert tour throughout the country. She sang with pronounced success in operas by Mozart and Wagner at the Munich Festival this last summer. Mrs. Homer is well known and warmly appreciated in Boston. She is the chief singer at the Worcester festival this week. Miss Foster, who is highly esteemed in England—she has also sung in Germany—was heard here toward the end of last season. Her second appearance will be awaited with interest. Miss Edith Walker, a noble and commanding singer in opera, will make her first appearance in this city in concert. Her artistry in Mr. Conried's company was one of the features of last season. The local singers will be used ensemble.

The pianists will be Messrs. d'Albert, Buonomici, Joseffy, De Pachmann, Ruebner, Schelling. D'Albert, who first visited Boston in company with Sarasate, and afterward gave some memorable performances, has of late years been busied chiefly with composition, yet he has played from time to time in European cities and the reports of his performance are such as to revive the interest which he wakened here during his preceding visits. Mr. Buonamici is a pianist who should be heard more frequently. He has abundant technic, dash, enthusiasm. The name of Joseffy is always a lodestone, and it is a pleasure to note that he has determined to enter again the lists in which he has so often triumphed.

Vladimir de Pachmann.

And what shall be said at this late day of Vladimir de Pachmann, the supreme interpreter of Chopin, the composer of all composers for the piano? Let us listen for a moment to the eulogy pronounced not long ago by Mr. Arthur Symons:

"When Pachmann plays Chopin the music sings itself, as if without the intervention of an executant, of one who stands between the music and our hearing. The music has to intoxicate him before he can play with it; then he becomes its comrade, in a kind of very serious game; himself, in short, that is to say, inhuman. • • • • Pachmann gives you pure music, not states of soul or of temperament, not interpretations, but echoes. He gives you the notes in their own atmosphere, where they live for him in an individual life, which has nothing to do with emotions or ideas. Thus he does not need to translate out of two languages: first, from sound to emotion, temperament, what you will; then from that back again to sound. The notes exist; it is enough that they exist. They mean for him just the sound, and nothing else. You see his fingers feeling after it, his face calling to it, his whole body imploring it. Sometimes it comes upon him in such a burst of light that he has to cry aloud, in order that he may endure the ecstasy. You see him speaking to the music; he lifts his finger, that you, too, may listen for it not less attentively. But it is always the thing itself that he evokes for you, as it rises flower-like out of silence and comes to exist in the world. Every note lives, with the whole vitality of its existence. • • • • Chopin had no intentions. He was a man, and he suffered; and he was a musician, and he wrote music; and very likely George Sand and Majorca, and his disease, and Scotland, and the woman who sang to him when he died, are all in the music; but that is not the question. The notes sob and shiver, stab you like a knife, caress you like the fur of a cat; and are beautiful sound, the most beautiful sound that has been called out of the piano. Pachmann calls it out for you, disinterestedly, easily, with ecstasy, inevitably; you do not realize that he has had difficulties to conquer, that music is a thing for acrobats and athletes. He smiles to you, that you may realize how beautiful the notes are, when they trickle out of his fingers like singing water; he adores them and his own playing, as you do, and as if he had nothing to do with them but to pour them out of his hands."

Truly a poetic praise.

Mr. Ruebner and Others.

Mr. Cornelius Ruebner, the successor of Mr. MacDowell at Columbia University, was born at Copenhagen in 1853. He studied with Reinecke and Gade at Leipsic, practised his profession for a time at Baden-Baden, and in 1892 settled at Carlsruhe, where he conducted the Philharmonic Society. He has composed a symphonic poem, "Friede, Kampf und Sieg," a festival overture, a piano trio, songs and piano pieces.

The Herald spoke of Mr. Schelling last Sunday. A pupil of Paderewski, he has been highly praised for his piano playing in London and in continental cities.

The violinists will be Miss Marie Nichols and Messrs. Ysaye, Kreisler, Hess, Adamowski, Schmedes and Barleben. Miss Nichols is a Bostonian by adoption and she was taught in this city by Mr. Emil Mollenhauer. She studied also for a time in Berlin with Halir and in Paris with Debroux. She was already an accomplished violinist when she went to Europe, and she had played with orchestras in several American cities. Her performances in Berlin, Paris and London excited the lively admiration of the critics. She is one of the soloists at the Worcester Festival this week. Mr. Ysaye and Mr. Kreisler will be most heartily welcomed. Each in his own way is a great artist. Messrs. Barleben and Schmedes will play for the first time at these concerts, and Mr. Hess will make his first appearance in this country. Mr. Rudolf Krasselt, the first 'cellist, is also one of the soloists.

The Circuit Concerts.

This orchestra, founded and maintained by Maj. Henry L. Higginson with a disinterested and a noble purpose, is something more than an honor to the city that is its abiding place. Its fame is national, one might well say international, although the orchestra has not yet crossed the Atlantic. Other cities than Boston eagerly await its concerts. There will be 10—five matinees and five evenings—in New York, 10 in Philadelphia, five in Brooklyn and five in Baltimore, three in Hartford and three in Providence and one concert in Worcester, New Haven, Springfield, Poughkeepsie, Albany, Troy, Portland, Northampton—44 concerts in all outside of Boston; nor should the concerts in Cambridge be overlooked.

That these concerts are an educational force is a fact recognized by some of the leading educational institutions. The Cambridge concerts are under the auspices of Harvard University; the concert in New Haven is given in Woolsey Hall, Yale University; President Faunce of Brown is interested in the success of the concerts in Providence, President Seelye of Smith College is likewise interested in Northampton, and Vassar College is most liberally represented at the concert given in Poughkeepsie.

Nor is it merely the soloist, however distinguished he or she may be, that crowds the halls in the cities of the circuit. The appearance of an Ysaye or a de Pachmann is indeed a musical event, but the great virtuoso, the one long anticipated and gratefully remembered, is the orchestra itself.

The auction sales for the 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be held at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 3 and 4, and for the 24 Saturday evening concerts on Thursday and Friday, Oct. 6 and 7, each sale commencing at 10 A. M. and continuing through the day. Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold. Tickets will be delivered in the hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be immediately resold.

Sassoli, harpist; Mr. Van Hoose, tenor, and Mr. Gillibert, baritone. Melba will sing in four performances with Mr. Conried's company at the Metropolitan Op[illegible]

[10]

BOSTON HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 84.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 22, 1904.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Among the unique features of the annual symphony season in Boston none is more striking in its significance than the feeling of absolute confidence manifested by its devotees in the satisfying nature of the entertainment which awaits them. Everybody knows that the coming musical feast will at least equal its predecessors, and is pretty certain to exceed them. Hence the curious fact that the annual announcement of the auction sale of seats for the season's performances of the Boston Symphony orchestra is awaited by the musical public with even more eager expectancy than the details as to programme and soloists, which it is taken for granted are safe in the hands of Conductor Gericke and the orchestra management.

The orchestra's 24th season of performances will consist of the annual 24 rehearsals and a like number of concerts, given on consecutive Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, respectively, beginning Oct. 14 and ending April 29, with occasional omissions when the organization is on its customary monthly tour to other cities. Details as to soloists, novelties and notable works to be performed will shortly be made public.

The sale of season tickets will be held at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 3 and 4, for the afternoon performances, and on Thursday and Friday, Oct. 6 and 7, for the evening concerts, beginning at 10 A. M.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1904.

As a forerunner of one of the winter's staple delights comes the announcement of the soloists to appear and many of the novelties to be presented during the twenty-fourth season of the Symphony Orchestra. With the average Boston individual going to these concerts annually, quite as a matter of course, it is hardly necessary for the management to send these advance agents through the mails; still, it is well probably to allow the concert public to have besides all the pleasure the performances afford them, the joy of anticipation. And this joy may be given all the license it wants in this instance, for the array of soloists is perhaps the most brilliant ever composed for a symphony season, and the novelties to be heard are sufficient in numbers and in promised interest to gratify even those who have in past seasons been apparently much exercised because the moderns were forgotten in the worship of the old masters.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1904

The preliminary announcements regarding the symphony concert season have created an intense interest in musical circles and the attractions planned for these events promise fully to sustain the high standard established in the long and honorable history of this organization by its public performances. It has come to be a recognized fact that the promises made for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts will be fulfilled to the letter, and in this confidence, so honestly won, is found a logical reason for the loyalty with which the public has continued these many years to contribute to the support of this great Boston institution. The programmes of the coming season will include a vast array of all that is best in the modern and classical schools of composition and their presentation, under Mr. Gericke's baton, can be awaited with pleasant anticipation. The remarkable list of soloists secured for the coming season includes Miss Muriel Foster, Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mr. L. B. Merrill, Mr. Theodore Van Yorx, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, Mr. C. Buonamici, Mr. Rafael Joseffy, Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann, Mr. C. Rubner, Mr. Ernest Schelling, Mr. Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols, Mr. Eugene Ysaye; Mr. T. Adamowski, Mr. C. Barleben, Mr. Willy Hess, Mr. H. Schmedes, Mr. Rudolf Krasselt and Mr. Paderewski. The auction sale of seats for the public rehearsals occurs at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday of next week beginning at 10 A. M. and that for seats for the concerts on Thursday and Friday following, at the same hour.

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

2.5 mm
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

...BER 25, 1904

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(Photos copyrighted by Aime Dupont.)

SOLOISTS IN THE COMING SERIES OF SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERTS.

The 24th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin with the 2186th performance and the 1142d in Boston on Friday afternoon, Oct. 14. Such striking totals indicate clearly and conclusively that this organization is making the musical history of America and in a most satisfactory and complete manner. A second generation of patrons can attest with their elders to the high standard of performance, for, with a slight variation of the old proverb, the proof of the performance is the playing. And 23 years of hearing good music played in the best way has resulted in a most exacting clientele, who demand and always get the very highest achievements of which the orchestra is capable. A personnel practically unchanged for more years than most other American orchestras have existed is a potent factor in the splendid ensemble, and it is a pleasure to announce that a new concert master and first violin, Willy Hess, and a new first clarinet, Georges Grisez, are the only changes of sufficient importance to deserve mention.

There will be the usual 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals and 24 Saturday evening concerts, beginning on Oct. 14 and 15. The orchestra will make the customary five trips to New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Baltimore, necessitating the omission of the performances which would otherwise be given on Nov. 4 and 5, Dec. 9 and 10, Jan. 13 and 14, Feb. 17 and 18 and March 17 and 18. There will be the usual Harvard University concerts in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

Three concerts guaranteed by 30 ladies and gentlemen, headed by President Faunce of Brown University, will be given in Providence, R. I., and three concerts also guaranteed by a public-spirited citizen are booked for Hartford, Conn. Yale University duplicates her courtesy of last year and allows the use of her beautiful new Woolsey Hall for a concert in March. Smith College, with a most commendable enterprise and the ambition to feature her department of music, repeats her guarantee of last season. Two concerts, one each in Troy and Albany, are undertaken by a prominent musician to whom the concert-goers of these two cities have been indebted for similar events for several years.

The list of soloists is, as usual, as attractive as can be secured, including many of the greatest artists in the world. It will come as a very pleasant and possibly startling surprise that Ignace Paderewski will be the soloist toward the close of the season and some time during the month of April in the Boston series. Of the lady singers, Mme. Gadski and Mme. Louise Homer are too well known to Symphony patrons to require further exploiting here; Miss Muriel Foster, the beautiful English contralto, will undoubtedly duplicate the charming impression made last season, and Miss Edith Walker of the Metropolitan opera company of New York adds much strength to the list. Of the pianists there are Mr. D'Albert, who comes to this country after several years' absence; Mr. De Pachmann, possibly the greatest Chopin player living; Mr. Joseffy and Mme. Bloomfield-Zeisler, who are always favorites; Mr. Buonamici, who received such a flattering reception at his previous appearance with the orchestra; Mr. Ernest Schelling, a pupil of Paderewski, and Mr. Rubner, who comes from Europe to take the position as the head of the department of music of Columbia College, vacated by Mr. E. A. McDowell. For violinists there are Mr. Ysaye, whose last appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra was 10 years ago; Mr. Fritz Kreisler, whose remarkable triumph two years ago will be readily recalled; Miss Marie Nichols, a Boston artist who has already gained distinction; Mr. Willy Hess, the new concert master of the orchestra, and Mr. T. Adamowski, Mr. C. Barleben and Mr. H. Schmedes, also from the ranks of the orchestra. It is also sure to be a welcome announcement that Mr. Rudolf Krasselt, the first violoncellist of the orchestra, will again appear as a soloist during the season.

The sale of season tickets for the 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be held at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 3 and 4, and for the 24 Saturday evening concerts on Thursday and Friday, Oct. 6 and 7; each sale beginning at 10 a. m. and continuing throughout the day.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the hall and must be paid for as soon as bought or they will be immediately resold.

BOSTON HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 91.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 29, 1904.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The interest shown in the concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra gives promise of large attendance at the sales of seats for these events next week. The announcements of the prominent attractions of the season indicate that patrons will have a rich musical feast and one well worthy the high repute of this organization. The auction sales occur at Symphony Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday of next week, beginning each day at 10 o'clock and continuing until the seats put on sale for the day are all bid off.

BOSTON HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 93.

SATURDAY, OCT. 1, 1904.

SYMPHONY CONCERT TICKETS.

The annual sales at auction of the seats for the public rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra, to be held at Symphony Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday of next week, will undoubtedly again show the intense interest in these events on the part of the musical public hereabout. An exceptionally brilliant list of soloists has been announced for the coming season and Conductor Gericke has a great number of new compositions to present in his programmes. The sales begin at 10 o'clock each morning.

BOSTON HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 95.

MONDAY, OCT. 3, 1904.

SYMPHONY TICKET SALES.

At Symphony Hall, this morning at 10 o'clock, will begin the auction sale of seats which heralds the opening of the Boston Symphony orchestra's 24th season. There are many indications of an unusually spirited bidding for the seats which the dictates of fashion or fancy have fixed upon as the choice locations.

The sale will continue through four days of this week—Monday and Tuesday for the afternoon rehearsals, Thursday and Friday for the evening concerts. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram and marked off as sold. No more than four seats will be sold on one bid, and bids will be accepted only for seats in their regular order, not for the choice. All tickets will be delivered in the hall and must be paid for when bought or they will be resold immediately.

The Boston Post

The annual sales at auction of the seats for the public rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be held at Symphony Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday of next week, will, without doubt, again show the intense interest in these events on the part of the musical public hereabout. An exceptionally brilliant list of soloists has been announced for the coming season. The sales begin at 10 o'clock each morning.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1904

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Season of 1904-1905—Willy Hess, the New Concertmaster

The twenty-fourth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra begins with the 2186th performance and the 1142d in Boston on Friday afternoon, Oct. 14. Such striking totals indicate most clearly and conclusively that this organization is making the musical history of America and in a most satisfactory and complete manner. A second generation of patrons can attest with their elders to the high standard of performance, for, with a slight variation of the old proverb, the proof of the performance is in the playing. And twenty-three years of hearing good music played in the best way has resulted in a most exacting clientele, who demand and always get the very highest achievements of which the orchestra is capable. A personnel practically unchanged for more years than most other American orchestras have existed is a potent factor in the splendid ensemble, and it is a pleasure to announce that a new concert master and first violin, Mr. Willy Hess, and a new first clarinet, Mr. Georges Grisez, are the only changes of sufficient importance to deserve mention.

There will be the usual twenty-four Friday afternoon public rehearsals and twenty-four Saturday evening concerts beginning on Oct. 14 and 15. The orchestra will make the customary five trips to New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Baltimore, necessitating the omission of the performances which would otherwise be given on Nov. 4 and 5, Dec. 9 and 10, Jan. 13 and 14, Feb. 17 and 18 and March 17 and 18. There will be the usual Harvard University concerts in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. Three concerts guaranteed by thirty ladies and gentlemen, headed by President Faunce of Brown University, will be given in Providence, R. I., and three concerts also guaranteed by a public-spirited citizen are booked for Hartford, Conn. Yale University duplicates her courtesy of last year and allows the use of her beautiful new Woolsey Hall for a concert in March. Smith College, with a most commendable enterprise and the ambition to feature her department of music, repeats her guarantee of last season. Two concerts, one each in Troy and Albany, are undertaken by a prominent musician to whom the concert goers of these two cities have been indebted for similar events for several years.

The list of soloists as usual is as attractive as can be secured, including many of the greatest artists in the world. It will come as a very pleasant and possibly startling surprise that Mr. Ignace Paderewski will be the soloist toward the close of the season and some time during the month of April in the Boston series. Of the lady singers Mme. Gadski and Mme. Louise Homer are too well known to Symphony patrons to require further exploiting here; Miss Muriel Foster, the beautiful English contralto, will undoubtedly duplicate the charming impression made last season, and Miss Edith Walker of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York adds much strength to the list. Of the pianists there are Mr. D'Albert, who comes to this country after several years' absence; Mr. De Pachmann, possibly the greatest Chopin player living, Mr. Joseffy and Mme. Bloomfield-Zeisler, who are always favorites, Mr. Buonamici who received such a flattering reception at his previous appearance with the orchestra; Mr. Ernest Schelling, a pupil of Paderewski, and Mr. Rubner, who comes from Europe to take the position as the head of the department of music at Columbia College vacated by Mr. E. A. MacDowell; for violinists there are Mr. Ysayë, whose last appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra was ten years ago; Mr. Fritz Kreisler, whose remarkable triumph two years ago will be readily recalled; Miss Marie Nichols, a Boston artist who has already gained distinction; Mr. Willy Hess, the new concert master of the orchestra, and Mr. T. Adamowski, Mr. C. Barleben and Mr. H. Schmedes, also from the ranks of the orchestra. It is also sure to be a welcome announcement that Mr. Rudolf Krasselt, the first violoncellist of the orchestra, will again appear as soloist during the season.

The sale of season tickets for the twenty-four Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be held at Symphony Hall on Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 3 and 4, and for the twenty-four Saturday evening concerts on Thursday and Friday, Oct. 6 and 7; each sale beginning at 10 A. M. and continuing throughout the day.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be immediately resold.

Mr. Willy Hess, who will soon take up his residence in Boston, to assume the position of concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, comes from London, where he is well known through his connection with the Halle Orchestra and the Royal Academy of Music, where he has just resigned his position as professor.

Born in Mannheim in 1859, his family left for America in 1865, and resided here for seven years, during which time young Hess pursued his studies. In 1872 his father left America for Holland, where his young son began his public appearances. On one occasion, the boy, then thirteen, distinguished himself by leading the celebrated "Harfen Quartet." The proverb, "A rolling stone gathers no moss," does not appear to apply to Mr. Hess, who has certainly had experience of many lands, but has not suffered thereby. On the contrary, he seems to have gained a knowledge of men and music which stands him in good stead today.

At the end of twelve months another move was made, this time to Germany, where Heidelberg was chosen as a place of residence. The young violinist toured extensively through Germany, Holland, Belgium and France. In Paris he was fortunate enough to attract the notice of Vieuxtemps, who not only interested himself in the lad, but conducted the orchestra for him at his first Philharmonic concert there.

In 1876 it was decided that he should go to Berlin for two years to profit by instruction from Joachim, and at the end of this time he received the valuable appointment of leader of the Opera and Museum's orchestra at Frankfurt-am-Maine. Eight happy years, of work and interest, were passed in this city where, in addition to his orchestral duties and teaching, Mr. Hess also found time to found a quartet and a trio with Kwast and Hugo Becker.

In 1886 he accepted a post at the conservatory in Rotterdam as professor and leader of the orchestra, and also succeeded to the well-known string quartet formerly led by Professor Wirth. After two years Sir Charles Halle secured his services for the Halle Orchestra in Manchester in the place of Ludwig Straus, an appointment which kept him in England for seven years. In addition to his work in Manchester he also led for the Philharmonic Society in Liverpool, and travelled a great deal, playing at various concerts.

In 1895 Mr. Hess again returned to the fatherland, this time to the conservatory at Cologne, where he stayed till his recent appointment to the Royal Academy of Music. Not the least interesting part of his work in Cologne was the leadership of the famous Gurzenich Quartet and concerts.

Certainly want of interest and variety has no part in the life of this artist. His rooms are crowded with autographed photographs, his friends seem to be legion, and his reminiscences are highly entertaining. Life in Frankfort, from a musical point of view—in constant companionship with Rubinstein, Brahms, Clara Schumann, and the many artists attracted to the town—offered great enjoyment to a young musician, and left memories not easily forgotten.

In England, Mr. Hess's musicianly qualities were much appreciated by the royal family. He played many times at Clarence House for the late Duke of Edinburgh, and has special remembrance of one evening spent there with Paderewski and Hollman. After playing one night at a Royal Amateur Orchestral Society's concert, the present king (then Prince of Wales) personally congratulated him, and himself decorated the artist with the honorary badge of membership. On one memorable occasion he was summoned to Osborne by the late Queen while leading at the Chester Festival.

Mr. Hess was impressed with Queen Victoria's kindness and love of music, and he mentions the fact that her majesty not only addressed him in faultless German, but carried on a conversation with the other artists in French and Italian equally well.

The Grand Duke of Luxembourg conferred on Mr. Hess the Order of the Ritterkranz von Adolph, and from the German emperor he received the title of Konigliche Preussische Professor on the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Cologne Conservatory, where on the death of Dr. Wullner, he filled the place of director till the appointment of Fritz Steinbach.

Many interesting tours were made with the Max Pauer and the Grunfeld trio, in which Mr. Hess replaced the well-known virtuoso, Florian Zajic. The violinist and Max Pauer also utilized one summer holiday in organizing a concert tour in Norway, during which they travelled as far north as Tromsoe, and in company with the artist of the Illustrated London News, visited Nansen's yacht, the Fram.

As a conductor, Mr. Hess shows marked ability, having acted in that capacity as deputy for Halle, for Gernsheim, in Holland, and for three summers wielding the baton for the Gurznich Orchestra. The artist is the fortunate possessor of a magnificent Guadagnini violin, which he acquired some years ago, and the instrument is highly treasured by its owner.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

SYMPHONY SEAT SALE.

Highest Premium Bid Was $95 for $12 Friday Afternoon.

About 300 persons attended the sale of $12 symphony orchestra seats for Friday afternoons. Bidding started at $2 premium for A1, and the seat was finally knocked down at $17. Last year an $11 premium was obtained for this seat, and in 1902 the premium for A1 was $11.50.

The bidding for the end seats in the first few rows lacked enthusiasm, but when center seats were reached competition became very spirited.

Seats in row A ranged from $18.50 to $13. Seats in row B near the end averaged about $12, while center seats sold as nigh as $29.50. The range in row D was $41 to $11.

Last year the highest price paid for a $12 Friday afternoon seat was $77, for M 19; the highest price during the previous year was $305.

The highest premium bid was $95 for H 18, sold to a Mr. Pratt.

Other high bids were: $92 for K 18, and $86 each for seats I 19, 20, 21, and 22, also taken by Mr. Pratt.

THE BOSTON JOURNAL

Notes Of The Musical World

After the preliminary announcement of the dates, soloists and other details of the coming season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which have recently been made public, symphony patrons naturally await with interest the announcement of the first three concert programs, which are given below. Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, who will again direct the orchestra for the seventh season of his present regime, has given much time and study in the preparation of these programs. It is a most interesting and significant statistic that with the five years of his first term—from 1884 to 1889—Mr. Gericke at the close of the coming season will have held the position of conductor for twelve years, exactly one-half the twenty-four years' existence of the organization.

It is the intention of Conductor Gericke to present some most attractive novelties throughout the season, chosen from the following list:

Hugo Wolf, symphonic poem, "Penthesilea;" Saint-Saens, Symphony No. 1; Liszt, "Vogelpredigt des heiligen Franz von Assisi;" J. Faure, "Pellias and Melisande;" Van Der Stucken, "Pax Triumphans;" Debussey, prelude, "L'Apreemidi d'une Faune;" Converse, two pieces for piano and orchestra; R. Caetani, Prelude Symphonique, op II.; C. Goldmark, overture; Sinding, suite, op. 35; Rimsky-Korsakoff, "Sadkow;" Hadley, symphony; Gluck (Mottl), ballet music from Suite II.; Guy Ropartz, Fantasie in D major, and Shillings, "Der Vespertag."

The programs for the first three concerts are as follows: First concert (in memory of Dvorak, and consisting of works by him): Overture to "Othello," aria from "Stabat Mater," Mme. Louise Homer; Suite in D major, op. 39; quartet from "Stabat Mater," Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mme. Louise Homer, Mr. Theodore Van Yorx, Mr. L. B. Merrill; Symphony No. 5, "From the New World." Second concert: Beethoven, Symphony in B flat major, No. 4; Joachim, Hungarian Concerto for violin, Mr. Willy Hess; Paul Dukas, Scherzo l'Apprenti Sorcier (first time); Wagner, overture, "Tannhauser." Third concert: Weber, overture, "Oberon;" Bach, three movements orchestrated by W. Gericke; Chopin, concerto for pianoforte in F minor, Mr. Vladimir de Pachman; Joseph Suk, Symphony in E major, op. 14 (first time).

The auction sales of season tickets begin next Monday morning, Oct. 3, in Symphony Hall at 10 o'clock. The $12 seats for the twenty-four Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be sold on Monday; the $7.50 seats for the same series on Tuesday; there will be no sale on Wednesday; the $12 seats for the twenty-four Saturday evening concerts will be sold on Thursday, and the $7.50 seats for the same series, which will be offered on Friday, will end the sale.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

B. Reynolds of Boston.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

After the preliminary announcement of the dates, soloists and other details of the coming season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which have recently been made public, symphony patrons naturally await with interest the announcement of the first 3 concert programmes which are given below.

It is the intention of Conductor Gericke to present some most attractive novelties throughout the season.

The programme for he first 3 concerts are.—

First concert, Oct. 14, 15—Overture to "Othello"; aria from "Stabat Mater," Mme. Louise Homer; suite in D major, op. 39; in memory of Anton Dvorak, quartette from "Stabat Mater"—Mrs. Grace Williams, Mme. Louise Homer, Theodore Van Yorx, L B. Merrill; symphony No. 5, "From the New World."

Second concert, Oct. 21 and 22—Symphony in B flat major, No. 4, Beethoven; Hungarian concerto for violin, Mr. Willy Hess, Joachim; Scherzo L Apprenti Sorcier (first time), Paul Dukas; overture, "Tannhauser," Wagner.

Third concert, Oct. 28 and 29—Overture, "Oberon," Weber; three movements, orchestrated by W. Gericke. Bach; concerto for pianofort in F minor, Vladimir De Pachmann, Chopin; symphony in E major, op. 14 (first time), Joseph Suk.

The auction sales of season tickets begin next Monday morning, Oct. 3, in Symphony hall, at 10 o'clock. The $12 seats for the 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be sold on Monday; the $7.50 seats for the same series on Tuesday; there will be no sale on Wednesday; the $12 seats for the 24 Saturday evening concerts will be sold on Thursday, and the $7.50 seats for the same series, which will be offered on Friday, will end the sale.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1904

Boston Symphony Orchestra

After the preliminary announcement of the dates, soloists and other details of the coming season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which have recently been made public, symphony patrons naturally await with interest the announcement of the first three concert programmes which are given below.

Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, who will again direct the orchestra for the seventh season of his present régime, has given much time and study to the preparation of these programmes. It is a most interesting and significant statistic that with the five years of his first term, from 1884 to 1889, Mr. Gericke at the close of the coming season will have held the position of conductor for twelve years, exactly one-half the twenty-four years' existence of the organization. When one recalls his invaluable services in the early years in building and shaping the orchestra into the almost flawless technical condition which it has steadily maintained ever since, and again when the remarkable total of over eleven hundred concerts will have been conducted by Mr. Gericke at the close of the coming season, it is only simple justice to acknowledge his tremendous influence and endeavor toward the best in music. Always mindful of the magnificent material at his disposal, thanks to the lavish generosity of a public-spirited founder and patron, Mr. Gericke deserves the admiration and gratitude of thousands of concert-goers throughout the United States for his unswerving loyalty and devotion to the highest ideals. It is the intention of Conductor Gericke to present some most attractive novelties throughout the season chosen from the following list:

Hugo Wolf: Symphonic Poem, "Penthesilea."
Saint-Saëns: Symphony No. 1.
Liszt: "Vogelpredigt des heiligen Franz von Assisi."
J. Fauré: "Pellias and Mellisande."
Van Der Stucken: "Pax Triumphans."
Debussy: Prelude, "L'Après-midi d'une Faune."
Converse: Two pieces for Piano and Orchestra.
R. Cætani: Prelude Symphonique, Op. II.
C. Goldmark: Overture.
Sinding: Suite, Op. 35.
Rimsky-Korsakoff: "Sadkow."
Hadley: Symphony.
Gluck (Mottl): Ballet Music from Suite II.
Guy Ropartz: Fantasie in D major.
Schillings: "Der Vespertag."

The programmes for the first three concerts are as follows:

I. CONCERT, OCT. 14 AND 15

Overture to "Othello."
Aria from "Stabat Mater."
Mme. Louise Homer.
Suite in D major, Op. 39.
In memory of Anton Dvorak: Quartette from "Stabat Mater."
Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mme. Louise Homer, Mr. Theodore Van Yorx, Mr. L. B. Merrill.
Symphony No. 5, "From the New World."

II. CONCERT, OCT. 21 AND 22

Beethoven: Symphony in B-flat major, No. 4.
Joachim: Hungarian Concerto for Violin.
Mr. Willy Hess.
Paul Dukas: Scherzo L'Apprenti Sorcier.
(First time.)
Wagner: Overture, "Tannhauser."

III. CONCERT, OCT. 28 AND 29

Weber: Overture, "Oberon"
Bach: Three Movements orchestrated by W. Gericke.
Chopin: Concerto for Pianoforte in F minor.
Mr. Vladimir De Pachmann.
Joseph Suk: Symphony in E major, Op. 14.
(First time.)

The auction sales of season tickets begin next Monday morning, October 3, in Symphony Hall at 10 o'clock. The $12 seats for the twenty-four Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be sold on Monday; the $7.50 seats for the same series on Tuesday; there will be no sale on Wednesday; the $12 seats for the twenty-four Saturday evening concerts will be sold on Thursday; and the $7.50 seats for the same series which will be offered on Friday will end the sale.

SUNDAY HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 94.

SUNDAY, OCT. 2, 1904.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The 24th season of the concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, will begin in Symphony Hall Saturday evening, Oct. 15. The first public rehearsal of the season will be on Friday afternoon, Oct. 14. The 24 concerts will be on consecutive Saturday evenings from Oct. 15, 1904, to April 29, 1905, omitting Nov. 5, Dec. 10, 1904, Jan. 14, Feb. 18 and March 18, 1905. The 24 public rehearsals will be on consecutive Friday afternoons from Oct. 14, 1904, to April 28, 1905, omitting Nov. 4, Dec. 9, 1904, Jan. 13, Feb. 17 and March 17, 1905.

The soloists will be as follows: Singers, Miss Muriel Foster, Mme. Gadski, Mrs. Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Messrs. L. B. Merrill, Theodore Van Yorx.

Violinists, Miss Marie Nichols, Messrs. T. Adamowski, C. Barleben, Willy Hess, Fritz Kreiseler, H. Schmedes, Eugene Ysaye.

'Cellist, Mr. Rudolph Krasselt.

Pianists, Mrs. Bloomfield-Zeisler, Messrs. Eugen d'Albert, Carlo Buonamili, Rafael Joseffy, Vladimir de Pachmann, Ignace Paderewski, Cornelius Ruebner, Ernest Schelling.

The programme of the opening concerts, Oct. 14-15, will be in memory of Anton Dvorak.

Overature to "Othello."
Aria from "Stabat Mater," "Inflammatus"
Mrs. Louise Homer.
Suite in D major, op. 39.
Quartet from "Stabat Mater," "Quis est homo"
Mrs. Grace B. Williams.
Mrs. Louise Homer.
Mr. Theodore Van Yorx.
Mr. L. B. Merrill.
} Dvorak
Symphony No. 5, "From the New World"

SECOND CONCERT, OCT. 21 AND 22.

Symphony in B-flat major, No. 4.....Beethoven
Hungarian Concerto for violin.....Joachim
Mr. Willy Hess.
(First appearance in America.)
Scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier".....Paul Dukas
(First time.)
Overture, "Tannhaeuser".....Wagner

THIRD CONCERT, OCT. 28 AND 29.

Overture, "Oberon".....Weber
Three movements orchestrated by W. Gericke.....Bach
Concerto for pianoforte in F minor, No. 1.....Chopin
Mr. Vladimir De Pachmann.
Symphony in E major, op. 14.....Joseph Suk
(First time.)

It is the intention to produce the following novelties in the course of the season:

American: Two pieces for piano and orchestra, Converse; symphony (the one that won the Paderewski prize), Hadley; "Pax Triumphans," Van der Stucken.

French: Prelude to Mallarme's "The Afternoon of a Faun," Claude Debussy; suite from Gabriel Faure's incidental music to Maeterlinck's "Pelleas and Melisande," written for the production by Mrs. Patrick Campbell of the play in London; Fantasia in D major, J. Guy Ropartz a pupil of Cesar Franck, now director of the Nancy Conservatory and conductor of the conservatory concerts; symphony No. 1, Saint-Saens.

German: Ballet music from suite No. 2, Gluck-Mottl; overture, Goldmark; "St. Francis of Assisi Preaching to the Birds," Liszt; "Der Vespertag," Schillings; "Penthesilea," symphonic poem, Hugo Wolf.

Italian: Prelude symphonique, op. 11, R. Caetani.

Russian: "Sadkow" symphony, Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Scandinavian: Suite, op. 35, Sinding.

The prelude by Debussy has been played in Boston at a concert of the Boston Orchestral Club (amateur) and some at least of Fadre's incidental music was played here when Mrs. Patrick Campbell produced Maeterlinck's play.

Tickets for the series of concerts and for the series of rehearsals, $12.00 and $7.50, according to location. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Symphony Hall, Monday, Oct. 3, at 10 A. M.; the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals, Tuesday, Oct. 4, at 10 A. M.; the $12 seats for the concerts, Thursday, Oct. 6, at 10 A. M.; the $7.50 seats for the concerts, Friday, Oct. 7, at 10 A. M.; bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold; tickets will be delivered in the hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be immediately resold.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCT 2, 1904.

MUSICAL.

Concerts of the Next Symphony Season.

Elaborate Plans for the Production of "Parsifal."

Notes and Personal Gossip About Musicians.

After the preliminary announcement of the dates, soloists and other details of the coming season by the Boston Symphony orchestra which have recently been made public, Symphony patrons naturally await with interest the announcement of the first three concert programs which are given below.

Mr Wilhelm Gericke who will again direct the orchestra for the seventh season of his present regime, has given much time and study in the preparation of these programs. It is a most interesting and significant statistic that with the five years of his first term from 1884 to 1889, Mr Gericke at the close of the coming season will have held the position of conductor for 12 years, exactly one-half the 24 years' existence of the organization.

When one recalls his invaluable services in the early years in building and shaping the orchestra into the almost flawless technical condition which it has steadily maintained ever since, and again when the remarkable total of over 1100 concerts will have been conducted by Mr Gericke at the close of the coming season, it is only simple justice to acknowledge his tremendous influence and endeavor toward the best in music. Always mindful of the magnificent material at his disposal, thanks to the lavish generosity of a public-spirited founder and patron, Mr Gericke deserves the admiration and gratitude of thousands of concert-goers throughout the United States for his unswerving loyalty and devotion to the highest ideals.

It is the intention of conductor Gericke to present some most attractive novelties throughout the season chosen from the following list:

Hugo Wolf, symphonic poem, "Penthesilea."
Saint-Saens, symphony No. 1.
Liszt, "Vogelpredigt des heiligen Franz von Assisi."
J. Faure, "Pellias and Mellisande."
Van Der Stucken, "Pax Triumphans."
Debussy, prelude, "L'Apres-midi d'une Faune."
Converse, two pieces for piano and orchestra.
R. Cætani, prelude symphonique, op 11.
C. Goldmark, overture.
Sinding, suite, op 35.
Rimsky-Korsakoff, "Sadkow."
Hadley, symphony.
Gluck (Mottl), ballet music from suite 11.
Guy Ropartz, fantasie in D major.
Schillings, "Der Vespertag."

The program for the first three concerts are as follows:

OCT 14, 15.

Overture to "Othello."
Aria from "Stabat Mater," Mme Louise Homer.
Suite in D major, op 39.
In memory of Anton Dvorak, quartet from "Stabat Mater," Mrs Grace B. Williams, Mme Louise Homer, Mr Theodore Van Yorx, Mr L. B. Merrill.
Symphony No. 5 "From the New World."

OCT 21 AND 22.

Beethoven, symphony in B flat major, No. 4.
Joachim, Hungarian concerto for violin, Mr Willy Hess.
Paul Dukas, scherzo "L Apprenti Sorcier" (first time).
Wagner, overture "Tannhauser."

OCT 28 AND 29.

Weber, overture "Oberon."
Bach, three movements orchestrated by W. Gericke.
Chopin, concerto for pianoforte in F minor, Mr Vladimir de Pachmann.
Joseph Suk, symphony in E major, op 14 (first time).

The auction sales of season tickets begin tomorrow morning, in Symphony hall, at 10 o'clock. The $12 seats for the 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be sold on Monday; the $7.50 seats for the same series on Tuesday; there will be no sale on Wednesday; the $12 seats for the 24 Saturday evening concerts will be sold on Thursday and the $7.50 seats for the same series, which will be offered on Friday, will end the sale.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

After the preliminary announcement of the dates, soloists and other details of the coming season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which have recently been made public, Symphony patrons naturally await with interest the announcement of the first three concert programmes, which are given below.

Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, who will again direct the orchestra for the seventh season of his present regime, has given much time and study in the preparation of these programmes. It is a most interesting and significant statistic that with the five years of his first term, from 1884 to 1889, Mr. Gericke at the close of the coming season will have held the position of conductor for 12 years, exactly one-half the 24 years' existence of the organization.

When one recalls his invaluable services in the early years in building and shaping the orchestra into the almost flawless technical condition which it has steadily maintained ever since, and again when the remarkable total of over 1100 concerts will have been conducted by Mr. Gericke at the close of the coming season, it is only simple justice to acknowledge his tremendous influence and endeavor toward the best in music. It is the intention of Conductor Gericke to present some most attractive novelties throughout the season, chosen from the following list:

Hugo Wolf, symphonic poem, "Penthesilea"; Saint-Saens, Symphony No. 1; Liszt, "Vogelpredigt des heiligen Franz von Assisi"; J. Faure, "Pellias and Mellisande"; Van der Stucken, "Pax Triumphans"; Debussy, prelude, "L'Apres-midi d'une Faune"; Converse, two pieces for piano and orchestra; R. Caetani, prelude, Symphonique, op. 2; C. Goldmark, overture; Sinding, suite, op. 35; Rimsky-Korsakoff, "Sadkow"; Hadley, Symphony; Gluck (Mottl), Ballet Music from Suite 2; Guy Ropartz, Fantasie in D major; Schillings, "Der Vespertag."

The programmes for the first three concerts are as follows: First concert, Oct. 14 and 15: Overture to "Othello"; Aria from "Stabat Mater," Mme. Louise Homer; Suite in D major, op. 39; quartet from "Stabat Mater"—Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mme. Louise Homer, Mr. Theodore Van Yorx, Mr. L. B. Merrill; Symphony No. 5, "From the New World."

Second concert, Oct. 21 and 22: Beethoven, Symphony in B flat major, No. 4; Joachim, Hungarian Concerto for violin, Mr. Willy Hess; Paul Dukas, Scherzo l'Apprenti Sorcier (first time); Wagner, overture, "Tannhauser."

Third concert, Oct. 28 and 29: Weber, overture, "Oberon"; Bach, Three Movements orchestrated by W. Gericke; Chopin, Concerto for Pianoforte in F minor, Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann; Joseph Suk, Symphony in E major, op. 14 (first time).

The auction sales of season tickets will begin next Monday morning, Oct. 3, in Symphony Hall, at 10 o'clock. The $12 seats for the 24th Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be sold on Monday; the $7.50 seats for the same series on Tuesday; there will be no sale on Wednesday; the $12 seats for the 24th Saturday evening concerts will be sold on Thursday, and the $7.50 seats for the same series, which will be offered on Friday, will end the sale.

Post Oct 1-1904

[12]

Boston Daily Globe.
MONDAY, OCT 3, 1904.

7:30 O'CLOCK

PREMIUM OF $95 EACH

For Two Symphohy Concert Seats.

Average of Prices About Same as Last Year's Charge.

Dealers Got Most of the Desirable Chairs.

While a premium of $95 each was paid this morning for two seats for the Boston Symphony orchestra Friday afternoon public rehearsals, as compared with $77 paid last year for a single seat, the average of the prices obtained by the auctioneer this morning was on the whole about the same as last year, which was considered far below that of the season two years ago.

The top-notch premium was paid this morning by Mr Pratt for the two end seats in row G, the seats being on either side of the center aisle. That premium, as has been the custom in past years, does not represent what the seat will cost its owner, for all of the seats sold today were of the $12 class on the main floor, and the regular price of $12 has to be added to the premium for each seat to get the cost of each, and then the dealer's commission must be added to that.

When the sale opened at 10 this morning, the auctioneer announced that only the $12 seats were for sale today, and that the premiums would be added to the regular price of each seat. He then proceeded with the task before him.

There was a fair crowd present, about the same as last year, and all of the regular tickets dealers were on hand to look after the interest of their clients. They did most of the purchasing and in fact all of the high premiums were paid by dealers for clients. At 1:30 there was an intermission for luncheon, and then the sale proceeded until all of the seats back to and including row JJ had been sold. Tomorrow the $7.50 seats, that is, those on the main floor in the rear of JJ, will be sold.

Row A opened this morning at $17 for the first two seats, the price paid last year being $11.50, but the highest price obtained in this row last year was $20, and the highest paid this morning in premiums was only $18.50.

Row B opened today at $12, and for the four center Mr Herrick paid a premium of $29 each. The highest in the row last year was $26. In the next row the opening price was $11, but for the two seats on the right of the central aisle a premium of $41 each was paid, and ap remium of $39 each for the two on the opposite side of the aisle. Last year the highest priced seats in the row sold for a premium of $26.50.

Row D opened at a premium of $13.50, and the highest premium paid was $42 for a single seat, although three sold for premiums of $39.50 each, two for $39, three for $38 each, seven for $26 each, each. Last year $36.50 was the high-water mark in this row, although the average was much the same.

It was about at this stage in the proceedings that a young woman, in going up to the desk to make payment on some tickets she had bought, injured her ankle by stepping off the aisle boards suddenly. She was carried out by two policemen and sent to her home in a cab. Scarcely 10 minutes elapsed before an elderly woman fell flat on her face at the same point. She was not injured, apparently, as she picked herself up immediately, but the management at once had a couple of carpenters attend to the trouble with the aisle boards.

Row D opened at the same premium as the preceding row, and the two end seats at the right aisle sold for $40 premium each. The two center seats and one adjoining sold for premiums of $36 each and the end seats in the left aisle sold at premiums of $33 each. For four seats $36.50 each was paid, and for seven seats the premium was $36 apiece.

Row F opened at $15, and $42 premium was paid on each of four seats. Four others in this row sold for $41 each, two brought $36 each and the others in the central part of the aisle sold at premiums of $35, $33 and $32.

Last year $53 was paid as the highest premium in row G and that was for a single seat. This morning $53.50 was paid for each of four seats, starting at the center aisle and running in toward the left of the row. The premium for the end seat on the opposite side of the center row was $51. Three seats sold at premiums of $38, two at $42, and then dwindled down to $18 for the left end seat of the row.

The highest premium of the morning was paid for the two end seats at the center of row H, the sum being $5[illegible]. They were the seats on either side of the aisle. For the four next to the left of those Mr Pratt paid the fancy sum of $54 premium each. The other seats in this row sold for $34, $32, $29 and $27.50, being disposed of mostly in groups of threes and fours. The first two seats in the row sold for $18, while last year the same two seats brought $25 each in premiums.

Mr Pratt bought a group of four seats in the next row for $74 premium each, four others for premiums of $86 each, and the rest in the row sold chiefly about $36, dwindling to $17 for the end seat on the left side. The highest price paid in this row last year was $34 for a group of four seats.

In row J four seats sold at premiums of [illegible], one at $60, two at $50, seven at $[illegible] and the rest at about 28. Four seats in [illegible] row sold for $70 premium of $93 each for two seats, Mr Pratt paid $60 each for a group of three and others sold at $45, $43, $40, etc. A premium of $36 was the highest paid in this row last year.

In the next row the premiums began to drop off in size and probably will continue to do so until the last of those to be sold today have been disposed of.

BOSTON HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVII, NO. 97.
WEDNESDAY, OCT. 5, 1904.

SYMPHONY SEAT SALES SURPRISE

Two or Three Times as Much Secured as Last Year—Interest of Public Substantially Increasing—New Faces Seen.

The auction sale yesterday of the $7.50 seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra furnished something of a gratifying surprise to the managers, the seats selling for two and three times what they brought last year. The ticket brokers were not so much in evidence. Those who were present were made up for the most part of those sincere lovers of music with somewhat lean purses.

The sale began with row KK on the floor, nine rows from the back. The highest bid was $20 for seats 22 and 23 in row LL. There was but little spirited bidding, but the prices were remarkably steady. An average of about $14 premium was paid on the first two or three rows offered, and this fell, with only sudden rallies, about $1 a row.

Rows E, G, F and H, in the first balcony centre, brought prices ranging from $11 to $15 and $17. A block of four seats in F cost the purchaser a premium of $19, inasmuch as some one else happened also to want the same seats. The greater part of the purchasers were for single seats.

The auction sale affords palpable evidence that the interest of the musical public in the annual season of Symphony concerts is substantially increasing. Many new faces are seen among the participants in the spirited bidding for seats and many new names have been added to the regular list of patrons. The orchestra's new concert master and first violin, Mr. Hess, has just arrived from London and will make his first solo appearance in America at the rehearsal and concert of Oct. 21 and 22.

The sale of seats will continue through Thursday and Friday for the season of evening concerts, tickets for the afternoon rehearsals having been disposed of.

Boston Transcript
MONDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1904

HIGHEST PREMIUM WAS $95

Sale of Seats for the Public Rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Coming Season Opened This Morning at Symphony Hall

This morning, in Symphony Hall, the opening of the sale at auction of season tickets for the Symphony Orchestra's public rehearsals opened soon after ten o'clock with a fairly good number of people present to bid on seats, or merely watch the proceedings. The crowd was by no means so large as in some years, and the bidding was comparatively slow, but the highest premium, $95, was an increase over last year. This will be the twenty-fourth season of these concerts, and today only the higher-priced, or $12, seats for the twenty-four public rehearsals were put on sale. Walter Jackson, as in former years, was the auctioneer.

The sale began with the disposal of seat No. 1, in row A, and then in regular consecutive order all the sales were made, buyers having the usual privilege, on their bid, of taking any part of four seats. Seat No. 1 was begun on a bid of $2 and gradually was run up to $17, and at this figure the buyer took two seats. For two years past the premium on this first seat has been $11, so today's price is an advance of several dollars. The first year that Symphony Hall was opened, this identical seat at the auction sale brought a premium of $280, the purchaser making a record for himself as the first buyer of the first seat sold in the then new hall. Other seats in row A next were started on a bid of $10 and sold at $17.50, while $18.50 was the highest premium paid in this row, with $13 as the lowest, for the seat on the extreme left end of the row.

Inn row B, beginning at a $10 bid, seats sold at from $12 to $29.50 premium, several ticket brokers securing several seats on orders. In the third row $6 was the opening bid, with a sale at $11 for three seats, and then the prices reached $39 for two end seats in the middle of the hall, and $41 for a single aisle seat in the centre. Then the price fell to $27 and recovered to higher before the row was finished, and fell again to as low as $12 for the extreme left end seat. Row D showed a range of from $13 as the price of the first seat in the row, to $39.50, the seats on the centre aisle bringing the highest premiums. The last seat, left wall, brought $12. In rows E and F prices ran from $14.50 to as high as $42, which a broker paid for seats. Bids in these rows began at $15, and later were started at $25. In row G seats could be had as low as $14.50, in comparison to $53.50 paid for premiums on four choice centre seats. In row H the first really high price was paid, after the first seat had sold for $15.50 premium, and the same buyer, a broker, paid $59 premium on the next four adjoining seats. This same buyer took seats in the next line, row I, for $74, and also $86, while other seats in the row went for about $30, after a start at $26. In J the first bid was $21, and the sales ran up to as high as $61 premium, while in row K $20 was the start, and soon $60 was reached, then $45 for two aisle seats, centre, while across the aisle the corresponding seats fetched $93.

Prices then went down gradually to as low as $17, for the odd end seat, on the wall aisle, but the buyer took his privilege of four, and secured three good seats on the first end of the next row behind, which was to his advantage. In row L $34, $47, $40, 35 and $26 were the chief prices, and in row M the first sale was at $22, which increased by degrees to $68. Many ticket brokers bought hereabout, this being a favorite place in the hall.

The bidding was no so spirited as in some years, nor was there the strong rivalry to secure this or that coveted place which has marked some previous years at these sales. Ladies were prominent among the bidders, who for once did not seem afraid to "speak right out in meeting." They seem to have overcome former diffidence in making their bids, so they manage to pick up some pretty good seats here and there in the hall. The sale did not progress as rapidly as sometimes, and when intermission was declared, at 1.30 o'clock, by no means half of the seats had been sold. There were no special features to mark the sale this morning, and it went on quietly and with not over-lively bidding.

When the sale was resumed this afternoon, following the intermission, the prices seemed to strike an average premium of about $30 for seats in row L and back of that, with about $50 as the average for the choicest seats on the main aisles, and smallest premiums as the rows neared the extreme left wall of the hall.

The Boston Journal

SYMPHONY CONCERT SEATS ARE SELLING BRISKLY

Splendid Array of Talent for This Season Causes Unusual Interest.

The auction sale of season tickets in progress at Symphony Hall this week affords palpable evidence that the interest of the musical public in the annual season of Symphony concerts, far from being on the wane, is undergoing a substantial increase. The unusual interest evidenced in the sales can be partly traced to the array of distinguished solo-artists and the forecasting of notable orchestral attractions this season.

The orchestra's new concertmaster and first violin, Mr. Hess, has just arrived from London and will make his first solo appearance in America at the rehearsal and concert of Oct. 21 and 22.

The sale of seats will continue through Thursday and Friday for the season of evening concerts, tickets for the afternoon rehearsals having been dispos[illegible]

BOSTON HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 95.
MONDAY, OCT. 3, 1904.

PREMIUM OF $95

Good Prices at Symphony Seat Sale This Morning.

UNCONSCIOUS BIDDER THERE

About the same prices as last year wer bid this morning at Symphony Hall at the first public auction of tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra season. The prices bid were added to the $12 on each seat, and no more than four seats were allowed on each bid.

The highest bid was given by Pratt, the ticket broker, who paid $95 premium for each of two seats in row H, numbered 18 and 19, end seats, across the centre aisle from each other.

Shortly after the sale began two ladies suffered mishops while approaching the desk where the money was paid for the seats after the bidding. One of these ladies overlooked a slight step-off in the floor aisle, and fell, injuring her ankle so that she had to be carried from the hall and taken home in a cab. Shortly after this another lady missteped at the same place, and fell flat upon her face. After these two incidents a rail was put up so that those approaching the desk could do so in safety.

She Nodded to the Cost of the Rival Bidders for Seats.

There was one humorous incident, which cost some of the bidders dearly. Not far from the front row sat a lady who apparently suffers a nervous affliction which causes her head to nod involuntarily. It so chanced in the mutations of the bidding war this morning, which went here and there among the large assembling of society people and music lovers who filled the larger portion of the floor of the hall, that one of the brisk auction skirmishes took place near this woman.

Auctioneer Henry Jackson, glancing over the hall keenly searching for bidders to pit against an enthusiastic broker, saw this woman nodding away as though she meant to have the seat at any price.

"Twenty dollars," said he, pointing the ebony baton at the man.

"Twenty dollars and a half?" pointing at the woman.

"Twenty-one dollars?" to the man.

And then back and forth swung the baton until the man got the seat at a nice premium, when the woman, becoming interested in something else, took her eyes from the auctioneer.

The sale started shortly after 10 A. M. and continued until 1:30 o'clock, when a recess of half an hour broke the continuous bidding. At 2 P. M. the sale continued.

Most of the choice sections were bought through the bids of ticket brokers. The first offer on No. 1, row A, was $2, and the seat was knocked down at $17. In row B, when the centre aisle seats were reached the first enthusiasm began. Pratt took two on the centre aisle for $29.50 each. In row C, Pratt secured for a client a centre aisle seat at $11 premium.

Prices in Row D Ranged from $12 up to $42 in Premium.

In row D, Herrick got a seat near the centre aisle for $42 premium. The lowest premium in the row was $12, on the end seat, 36; 1 and 2 sold for $13 premium. Through the row extra prices were $30.50, $38, $39.50 and $39.

In row E, right aisle seats went at $40. Centre aisle seats were at $30. Four seats in this row were at $16 premium.

In row F, Heard, the broker, bought four aisle seats at $42 premium on each one.

In row G, seat 18, on the centre aisle, sold for $51, and four seats across the aisle sold at $53.50 premium on each.

The highest bid of $95 premium on each of two seats split by the centre aisle, was preceded by four seats selling at $29, and was followed by the sale of four seats at $59 premium. This row sold high throughout.

In the next row Pratt bought four seats at $74 premium on each, and four at $86.

Seats 18 and 19 split by the centre aisle were reserved in rows L and N; in row J they sold at premium of $61 and $60 to Connelly; in row K at $93 to Herrick; in row M at $68 to Heard.

The sale tomorrow at 10 A. M. will dispose of the $7.50 seats to the Friday afternoon rehearsals.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

SYMPHONY TICKETS.

Keen interest is manifested by the music-loving public in the auction sale of season tickets for the Symphony concerts, which opens this morning at Symphony hall.

The sale will begin at 10 a.m., and continue through the day, for the 4 days of Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday—the first 2 days for the afternoon rehearsals and the last 2 for the evening concerts. Bids will be accepted only for seats in their regular order, not for the choice, and not more than 4 seats will be sold on the same bid. Tickets will be delivered in the hall, and must be paid for when bought, or they will be at once resold.

[13]

BOSTON EVENING RECORD,
309-11 Washington St.
Entered at the Post Office as second-class mail matter.

SYMPHONY SEAT SALE

$95 High Bid for $12 Friday Seat

About 300 persons attended the sale of $12 symphony orchestra seats for Friday afternoons. Bidding started at $2 premium for A1, and the seat was finally knocked down at $17. Last year an $11 premium was obtained for this seat, and in 1902 the premium for A1 was $11.50.

The bidding for the end seats in the first few rows lacked enthusiasm, but when center seats were reached competition became very spirited.

Seats in row A ranged from $18.50 to $13. Seats in row B near the end averaged about $12, while center seats sold as nigh as $29.50. The range in row D was $41 to $11.

Last year the highest price paid for a $12 Friday afternoon seat was $77, for M 19; the highest price during the previous year was $305.

The highest premium bid was $95 for H 18, sold to a Mr. Pratt.

Other high bids were: $92 for K 18, and $86 each for seats I 19, 20, 21, and 22, also taken by Mr. Pratt.

Boston Transcript
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1904

PREMIUMS HIGHER THIS YEAR

Sale of Seats for the Symphony Orchestra's Public Rehearsals Shows a Greater Average of Prices Than Those Paid Last Year

Continuation this morning of the sale begun yesterday of seats for the twenty-four public rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought out, at Symphony Hall, about the same number of people as attended yesterday's auction sale. Both days show a higher average of premiums than those paid last year. Today's sale was for the lower-priced, or $7.50 seats, the premiums paid being added in all cases to this price. As compared with yesterday, the sale was soon over, occupying only the forenoon hours, whereas yesterday's sale lasted till well after dark.

There are only a few more than four hundred tickets of the $7.50 class. They include seats on the floor beginning with row KK and extending back through row SS, nine rows. They also include rows E, F, G, H and I in the rear part of the first balcony. The opening sale today, seat No. 1, on the right-hand end of row KK, was made at $16 premium, the buyer taking three seats out of the four which any bid gives the purchaser the privilege of doing. Other seats in this row sold up to as high as $23 premium for what may be considered as the best places in the line. In the next following row the premiums ranged from $15 to $20, and about the same figures were obtained for premiums in succeeding rows, where in some places the premiums fell to $10 and a number of seats at this figure and others at $12 were sold.

When it came to the seats in the first balcony the first sale was made at $13 premium, and this figure increased to $18 as the centre of the row, which was E, was reached. In the next row the prices were a little better, running to $19 and $20, with more tickets sold at these higher figures than at the lower prices in the preceding row. Back of these rows very good seats, commanding a clear view of the stage and players and in all ways desirable for people who do not care especially to be very near the stage, could be had at $10, $12 and $13 premiums on the average.

The sale was somewhat livelier than that of yesterday, because of the fewer number of tickets offered and a larger number of buyers in proportion who wished to secure something. The sale of the $12 seats will be held on Thursday, and that of the $7.50 seats on Friday, each day beginning at ten in the morning at Symphony Hall.

There has been awakened widespread interest in this season's concerts and public rehearsals, because of the notable list of distinguished soloists engaged to appear, including Miss Muriel Foster, Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Edith Walker, Theodore Van Yorx, Eugene D'Albert, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, Carlo Buonamici, Rafael Joseffy, Vladimir De Pachmann, C. Rubner, Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols, Eugene Ysaye, T. Adamowski, Igance Paderrewski and other eminent

Boston Transcript
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1904

Symphony Orchestra Tickets

The announcements which have partly forecasted the work and special attractions planned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its coming season's performances have aroused an interest in this musical event which seems to be even keener and more widespread than usual. A marked evidence of the eager expectancy on the part of the musical public is seen at the auction of season tickets which is progressing this week at Symphony Hall, where the number of people appearing among the bidders for the first time, and the quick disposal of seats at substantial premium prices, have been a noticeable feature of the sale.

This increased interest is no doubt partly due to the unusually brilliant attractions announced as special features of the orchestra's twenty-fourth season. Mr. Hess, the new concert master and first violinist of the organization, who has just arrived from London, will be heard in solo performance for the first time in America, at the second rehearsal and concert of Oct. 21 and 22. The list of soloists who will appear during the season is in itself sufficient to excite the enthusiastic interest of the concert-going public, including as it does many of the world's greatest artists in their respective domains of pianoforte, violin and vocal music, while the performances of the orchestra itself, besides the usual varied and choice selections from the greatest works of the masters composers, will comprise more than the ordinary number of orchestral novelties and innovations, the first of which will be an entire programme of Dvorak music, scheduled for the opening concerts of Oct. 14 and 15.

Tomorrow (Thursday) and Friday will be devoted to the sale of season tickets for the evening concerts, seats for the afternoon performances having been closed out at the auction sales of Monday and Tuesday.

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

SYMPHONY CONCERT TICKETS

The auction sale of season tickets in progress at Symphony Hall this week affords evidence that the interest of the musical public in the Symphony concerts, far from being on the wane, is undergoing a substantial increase. Many new faces are noted among the participants bidding for seats.

The unusual interest evidenced in the ticket sales of this week can be partly traced to the array of distinguished solo artists, and to the forecasting of notable orchestral attractions.

The orchestra's new concert master and first violin, Mr. Willy Hess, has just arrived from London and will make his first solo appearance in America at the rehearsal and concert of Oct. 21 and 22.

The sale of seats will continue through Thursday and Friday for the season of evening concerts, tickets for the afternoon rehearsals having been disposed of at the Monday and Tuesday sales.

BOSTON HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 98.
THURSDAY, OCT. 6, 1904.

PREMIUMS ARE HIGHER

Symphony Concert $12 Seats Selling Today.

When the auctioneer stepped upon the platform of Symphony Hall today he found a goodly sized gathering waiting to bid on the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Bids on the first row started off with a dash, the premiums paid averaging about $6. This row is in demand by elderly people hard of hearing, and the demand did not extend to the second row. The first seats in row B sold for only a $2 premium, and a block of four brought $13. Although the average from this time on during the forenoon sale was 20 per cent. higher than last year, according to the report of the managers, there were plenty of chances for bargains.

In row C, for instance, the premiums ranged all the way from $3 to $14. One woman who bid energetically on two seats in this row until the price was raised to $14 secured the next two seats, which had the advantage of being end seats, for $9.

"And that is $3 less than I paid for them last year," she exclaimed triumphantly to her friend.

The prices picked up a little as the middle of the hall was reached, but up to row H $30 was the highest premium paid, a general average of $15 being maintained.

Boston Transcript
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1904

HIGHEST PREMIUM WAS $36

Auction Sale of Seats for the Saturday Evening Concerts by the Symphony Orchestra

At today's sale of the $12 seats for the evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opened in Symphony Hall, at ten o'clock, by no means as many people were present as was the case on Monday, when the sale of public rehearsal tickets took place. As a whole, much smaller premiums were obtained today than were paid at the rehearsal sale, and the bidding often lacked the spirit and eagerness shown earlier in the week and at times it really lagged.

The highest premium paid this forenoon was $36, which was paid for seats Nos. 18 (an end seat), 19 and 20 in row K. At the rehearsal sale, seats 18 and 19 brought, in comparison, $93 premium, or $2 less than the highest premium paid at the previous sale. The next highest price this morning was at $35.50 premium, which Mr. Herrick, the broker, paid for seats 19 and 20 in row G, these same seats for rehearsals selling on Monday last at $53.50 premium. Whereas seats 18 and 19 in row H, which are separated by the centre aisle of the hall, went at $95 premium on Monday, the very highest price of the entire sale, these same places today were sold at $18 premium for seat No. 18 (the buyer taking also Nos. 15, 16 and 17) and across the aisle seat 19 went for $26, to Mr. Herrick, who took No. 20 also, to get a pair. The first sale today, seat No. 1 in row A, right-hand end of the line, was made at $7.50 premium and the second sale was half a dollar less than that. The beginning was rather slow and without wild desire on the part of anybody to secure front row places, but later in the sale the activity inreased.

When rows H and I were reached the first general eagerness was shown to secure places. In H the prices ran from $9, as the opening premium, up to $26 and down to $6 on the left end. In I from $9 up to $28 and back to $8 was the range of premiums. At the rehearsal sale it was in this row that $95 was obtained for Nos. 18 and 19, and at that time $59 was paid for Nos. 20, 21, 22 and 23. As against $28 for the highest premium today in row I, as high as $74 and $86 represented prices paid on Monday last.

In row J prices were from $10 to $30 and back to $9, and in K, with brisk bidding, they ranged from $9.50 to $36, with several sales at about $17 and off to $11.50. Brokers bought extensively in this row, as they did in L, where premiums were from $9.50 to $25 for seats Nos. 28 (end) and 29. Row M brought out lively competition, with premiums running from $11, at the start, up to $26 and back to $11 for the left end. The highest price in row O was $31 for centre aisle seats Nos. 18 and 19, bought by Mr. Connelly, who secured many other places in various rows.

Shortly after noon the hall thinned out considerably, and prices were then at what might be termed normal premiums, without the occasional flights to unreasonable figures which in this part of the hall marked the rehearsal sale. All in all, the average prices obtained for the evening concerts show much higher premiums than last year, just as was the case at the rehearsal sales. Music lovers had ample opportunity today to secure fine seats at most reasonable rates, or even cheap prices, comparatively, when one considers that in so many instances really modest premiums secured desirable places, which, added to the regular price of tickets, $12, as is done in all cases, makes the average cost of each concert per night remarkably low, especially when it is realized the very high character of the entire course and the chance to hear at these concerts some of the world's greatest and most famous musical artists. The sale of $7.50 seats, including the second balcony, wil ltake place Friday.

Philadelphia Ledger

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Except for a few preliminary announcements there has been little as yet to suggest any great activity in the musical life of Philadelphia, and only the interest shown in the sale of seats and subscriptions for the orchestra concerts indicates that it is a time for the music lover and concertgoer to give due consideration to such affairs when planning the engagements of the season. The Boston Orchestra, as heretofore, will, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, give ten concerts in the Academy of Music, five on Monday evenings and five on Wednesday evenings, at which an imposing list of soloists, already spoken of in the PUBLIC LEDGER, will be heard. This celebrated company of players, making up an orchestra of almost technical perfection, holds an important place in the musical life of each season, and at the sale of seats for the first series of concerts, which opened on Monday last, there was every indication of a still greater interest than has been shown in these concerts in recent years. The sale of seats for the Wednesday concerts opens today. The first concert of the first series will take place on the last day of October, and the first Wednesday concert on the 2d of November.

* * *

Boston Daily Globe.
THURSDAY, OCT 6, 1904.

SYMPHONY SALE.

Average Premiums High at Today's Auction.

Attendance Fair and Bidding Spirited —$36 Biggest Bonus.

While the premiums never rose to the hight of the best at the sale last year, the average premiums obtained this morning for the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts of the Boston symphony orchestra were considerably above those secured last season. Last year the highest premium paid for a seat at the regular concerts of the orchestra was $50, and the best secured this morning was a premium of $36 for three seats in the center of row K.

There was a fair attendance and bidding was quite spirited, with the dealers much in evidence, although there were plenty of individual bids.

Mrs John L. Gardner will have the same seats she had last year, for her arrangement with the management, made in former years, still holds good, and her seats were reserved for her as in the last few years. The management alone knows the premium she pays for this privilege.

Tomorrow the $7.50 seats will be offered for sale.

This morning's sale took in all the seats on the main floor as far back as and including row JJ. The first two seats in row A sold at premiums of $7.50, which was about the average for the whole row. The second row started in at $2, and the highest premium paid was $13.50 each on a group of four seats in the center of the aisle.

The highest premium in row C was $14.50, in the next row the best was $13 for two seats, the average being about $8 premium each for the row.

Then in row E a premium of $16 for one seat was the best secured and the average was a little above $9 for the row. In the next row a premium of $22.50 was paid for two chairs and the average was about $10 for the row.

In row G a premium of $35.56 was paid for two center seats, and in row H $18 premium each was paid on a group of four chairs. In row I a premium of $28 each was paid for two seats and in row J four seats went at a premium of $30 each, the highest figure in that tier.

It was in row K that the highest premium of the sale was paid, $36 each for three central chairs, and the lowest premium in the row was $10 paid for a single chair, the first on the right. In the next tier Mr Herrick paid a premium of $20 each on four seats and $9.50 was the lowest premium in that row.

In row M $11 was the lowest premium paid and $26 the highest. In the next row, $10 was the lowest premium and $27.50 each for a group of three, the highest.

In row O the highest premium paid was $31, for two seats at the center, and the lowest was $10.50 for the end seat at the left of the row. From then on the premium gradually dropped off in size as the distance from the stage increased.

SUNDAY HERA

BOSTON, SUNDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1904.

PERSONALITY OF PROF. WILLY HESS, THE NEW CONCERT MASTER OF THE SYMPHONY

PROF. WILLY HESS, SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERT MASTER.

A single glance at Prof. Willy Hess, who succeeds Mr. Fernandes Arbos as concert master of the Boston Symphony, would be sufficient to satisfy a stranger that a man stood before him who could do something. If wholly ignorant of the musician's identity, the stranger might be a little puzzled to guess what. The somewhat fierce expression lent by the beard of martial type, and a certain air of authority might lead him to suggest the soldier; but a second glance would reveal the expanse of white forehead speaking nothing but gentleness. The keen eyes, the quick, nervous movements might suggest the modern man of business, but here again the correction would be made by the eyes, the brow and quicker still by the conversation. His thoughts are all of his art, and when practical matters in regard to his present movements are mentioned he is apt to turn quickly aside with, "Oh, Mr. Ellis arranges all that!"

Of middle height, a bit inclined to droop when at ease, with a face concealed by a bushy beard sprinkled with gray and of German cut, a broad sweep of white forehead from which the hair is brushed back—every feature sparkling with life as though charged with electricity—such is Mr. Hess. He is full of energy. As a man he is of the type who makes friends quickly, and keeps them. Good humor, kindliness and evenness of temper, in contradistinction to many musical leaders, have all contributed to make for him a wide circle of friends wherever he has been. His disposition, together with what we have come to look upon as almost a national characteristic, make him a strong lover of home. That he had to leave his wife and four beautiful children behind him is at present his greatest personal concern.

"If I remain," he said, after a quick glance at a group picture of his children, "they shall come, and I shall settle down here. I do not like this bachelor life."

His professional record is proof of the amount of hard work of which he is capable. To many it will be something of a surprise to learn that this is not his first appearance in Boston. He played here in 1869 with Thomas' orchestra.

"No," he said, "I do not remember much of th t. I was only about 10-years old. I was here two days. Little I thought then that I should ever come back."

Prof. Hess was born in Mannheim in 1859, and began his musical studies under his father when 6 years old. When 10 years old he was touring Holland and was looked upon as an infant prodigy. When 13 he distinguished himself by leading the famous "Harfen quartet." From Holland he extended his trips through Germany, Belgium and France. When in Paris he attracted the notice of Vieuxtemps, who at once became interested in him, and at his first Philharmonic concert there conducted the orchestra for him.

In 1876 he went to Berlin, where he studied under Joachim, and at the end of two years he received the appointment of leader of the opera and museum orchestra at Frankfort-on-the-Main. He remained here eight years. He then accepted the position of professor and leader of the orchestra at Rotterdam, which succeeded to the well known string quartet formerly led by Prof. Wirth. The leadership of the Halle orchestra of Manchester was the next post he accepted, and here he succeeded Ludwig Straus. He remained seven years.

In 1895 he returned once more to Germany to accept a post at the Cologne conservatory. His work there as leader of the Guerzenich quartet won him national fame. His next appointment was to the Royal Academy of Music in London, and this he resigned to take up his work in Boston.

When Prof. Hess chooses to become reminiscent he can tell with rare interest of experiences as a player to royalty. He has many autograph portraits of people of exalted rank, and his friends among members of royal families seem to be without number. He played frequently at Clarence House for the late [illegible] of Edinburgh. There he had for companions one evening Paderewski and Hollman. Once at a Royal Amateur Orchestral Society's concert the Prince of Wales, now King Edward, personally offered him praise and decorated him with an honorary badge of membership.

Then the distinguished musician remembers keenly to this day his experience in playing before Queen Victoria. At the time he was leading the orchestra at the Chester festival. In order to obey the summons from her majesty he had to leave the quaint little cathedral town at 4 A. M. He reached Osborne at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, played to the delight of her majesty, started for Chester at 5 the next morning, travelled all that day, and that night led the orchestra at the festival. However, he declares, the Queen's praise, expressed in faultless German amply repaid him for his trouble.

Among the insignia which Prof. Hess is entitled to wear is that of the Order of the Ritterkranz von Adolph, conferred by the Grand Duke of Luxembourg. He bears also the title of Koenigliche Preussische Professor, received on the celebration of the 50th anniversary of the Cologne Conservatory.

Prof. Hess is already busy on plans for his work here, arranging programmes and doing much practicing. He is the fortunate possessor of a magnificent Guadagnini violin, which he acquired some time ago.

"I have been teaching a great deal of late," he said wearily, "and that takes a great deal out of a man. I am glad to give it up."

When asked if he thought he would like his new post and surroundings, he exclaimed frankly: "Oh, I am sure I shall. And I hope the people will like me."

Sunday Globe, Oct. 9

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The 24th season of symphony concerts will begin this week with the regular Friday afternoon rehearsal and Saturday evening program, Mr Gericke conducting. The preliminary announcement of the dates, solosts and other details of the coming season which have recently been made public indicate that there will be no deviation from the high standard of former years, and so patrons of the concerts await with the usual interest the beginning of the annual musical feast.

The first program will be as follows:

Overture to "Othello."

Aria from "Stabat Mater," Mme Louise Homer.

Suite in D major, op 39.

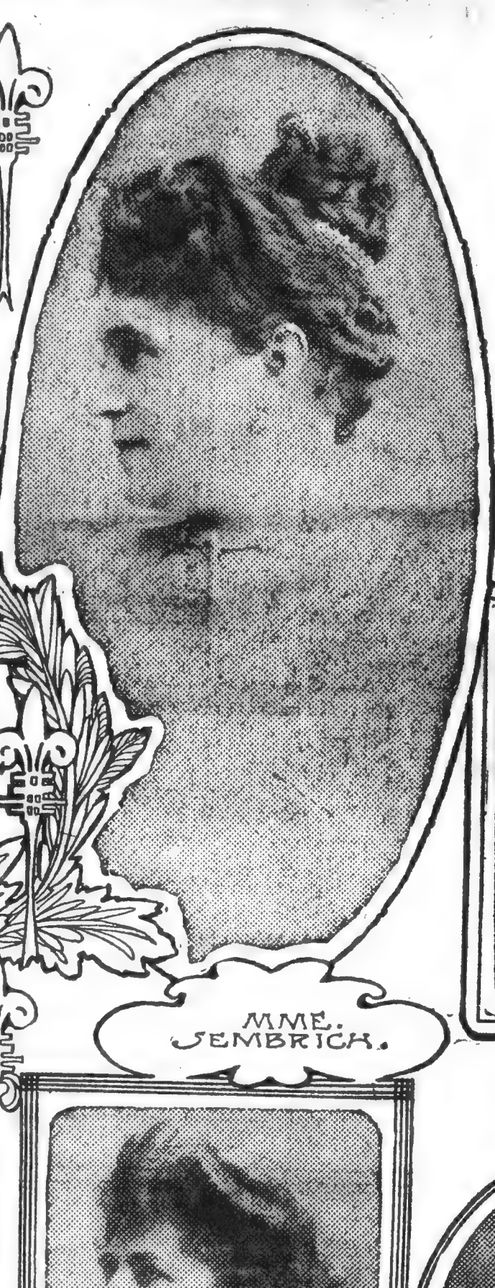
In memory of Anton Dvorak, quartet from "Stabat Mater," Mrs Grace B. Williams, Mme Louise Homer, Mr Theodore Van Yarx, Mr L. B. Merrill.

Symphony No. 5 "From the New World."

EUGENE YSAYE,
PHOTO COPYRIGHT 1898 BY A. DUPONT.

PADEREWSKI

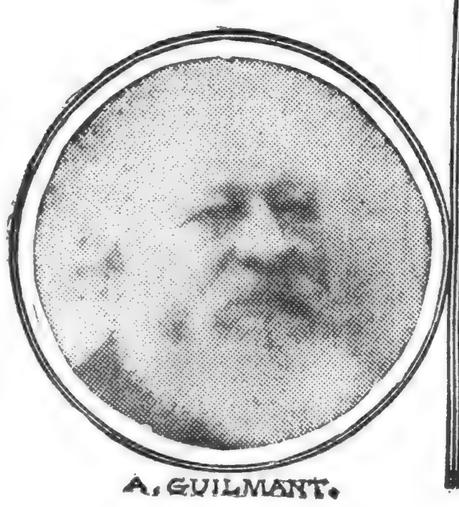
MME. MELBA.



MME. SEMBRICH.

VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN,
PHOTO COPYRIGHT BY A. DUPONT.

FRITZ KREISLER.



A. GUILMANT.

DAVID BISPHAM.
PHOTO COPYRIGHT BY A. DUPONT.

JOHANNA GADSKI,
PHOTO COPYRIGHT BY A. DUPONT.

FRANZ VON VECSEY.

Details About the Performances of Wagner's Sacred Play—Coming Concerts at Symphony and Music Halls Under Mr. Mudgett's Management—A Roll of Celebrated Singers, Violinists and Pianists—Operas New and Old.

THE concert season of 1903--04 was not profitable to singers, players or managers. Excellent performers often played to a few, or they faced a papered hall. Various reasons were given for this neglect of art. "People felt poor," "Music is no longer the fashion," "There are too many concerts," "The prices are too high," etc., etc.

There is already promise of a more brilliant season this winter. There was much more interest shown in the sale of seats for the Symphony concerts and rehearsals than there was a year ago, and this in itself is a favorable sign. Already have concerts been announced, in many instances with fixed dates, and the list of visitors is one of unusual strength.

As many are obliged to limit their enjoyment, or the range of their curiosity, it may be a good thing to discuss the nature of the concerts, that there may be both choice and anticipation.

We confine ourselves today to concerts that will be under the management of Mr. Louis H. Mudgett, and if further information be desired concerning any particular concert, he will no doubt be glad to furnish it.

Visiting Singers.

Three women well known on the operatic stage and in the concert hall will visit Boston. Mme. Melba will be the first. She will sing at Symphony Hall on the afternoon of Dec. 10. Her company is made up of Mr. Van Hoose, who is probably now the leading American tenor; Mr. Gilibert, a singularly accomplished master of diction—let us hope that he has added to his repertory, for although he can, unlike the young woman in the pathetic ballad, sing the old songs, we have a right to demand a further exhibition of his artistry—and Miss Sassoli, a harp player, who almost persuades the purist that the harp is, after all, something more than an orchestral instrument. We naturally associate Mme. Melba with brilliant arias, but this singer with the golden voice has shown us, by the qualities of her performance in "La Boheme" and in "The Damnation of Faust," that she is more than a great mistress of pure and sustained song and dazzling bravura. The photograph published today was taken at Monte Carlo, where she created the part of Helen in Saint-Saens' latest opera.

Mme. Sembrich is to some now more distinguished in concert hall than on the operatic stage, for the exquisite finish of her art, her perfect phrasing, her rare musical intelligence as displayed in "The Marriage of Figaro," are shown in still greater variety in a song recital. Her programmes are catholic and interesting, and there is a personal, womanly quality that makes her interpretation of poetic and musical sentiment memorable. Her recital will be in Symphony Hall on the afternoon of Jan. 14.

Mme. Gadski, who will come later in the season, has not yet given a recital in Boston. She has sung here at Symphony orchestra concerts and with the Handel and Haydn, but we have yet to know her as an interpreter of songs. This summer she sang at the Munich operatic festival with conspicuous success, and it may truly be said that her artistic development has been constant and gratifying since her debut in this city in 1895 as Elsa.

Mr. David Bispham, who has introduced many songs of the old and the new schools to music lovers, has prepared for this season a series of "cycle recitals." Nothing by Richard Strauss, nothing by Hugo Wolf; the programmes are eminently orthodox.

His recitals will be in Jordan Hall. At the first, on Tuesday afternoon, Oct. 25, he will be assisted by Miss Marguerite Hall, and the programme will include Beethoven's "Air die ferne Geliebte" and Schumann's "Frauenliebe und Leben" and "Dichterliebe"; at his second, on Monday afternoon, Nov. 7, he will sing Schubert's "Muellerlieder"; at the third, on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 16, the programme will consist of Schubert's "Die Winterreise"; at the fourth, on Monday afternoon, Nov. 28, when he will be assisted by Mrs. Shotwell-Piper, "Four Serious Songs" and "Die Schoene Magelone," by Brahms, will be given. Mr. Bispham will read the story of "Magelone."

Mr. George Henschel will be here early in January, when he will lecture on Brahms and give his reminiscences of that composer. He will be assisted by Mr. Hans Schroeder, a baritone from Frankfort-on-the-Main.

Violinists Young and Old.

The violinists will be Messrs. Ysaye and Kriesler, the boy Vecsey, Miss Marie Nichols, and Miss Olive Mead. Of Ysaye what can be said at this late day? He disputes with Sarasate the pre-eminence in the world of violinists; but Ysaye is the younger man and he is at the zenith of his power. He spent last summer at his country home, the villa Chanterelle, where he had promised himself quiet, with few callers, with little music, and he had a fishing boat that he might be safe by himself in the middle of the stream, but there were invaders, pupils, would-be pupils and virtuosos, and there was much music. Among the visitors were Kreisler, Gerardy and Lovensohn, Mark Hambourg and his brother Jean, the violinist, and Boris, the 'cellist, Jean ten Have and Crickboom, and Rosa Zamels, the young American violinist who was in Boston as a member of the Patti company. Ysaye will play in Symphony Hall on the evening of Dec. 14 and the afternoon of Dec. 17.

Mr. Kreisler last season played in European cities with a success that enlarged even his reputation and was most gratifying to his many friends and admirers in this city. He is now justly put in the long catalogue of violinists among the players of the very first rank. He will give concerts in Jordan Hall on Jan. 10 and 13. The 11-year-old Vecsey, whose performances have astonished not only the gapers at concerts in Berlin, London, St. Petersburg, but musicians and virtuosos, will play in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening, Feb. 14, and on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 18. The severely critical in Europe gladly admitted that he is more than a boy wonder.

Miss Marie Nichols, in whom Bostonians should take more than an ordinary interest, for she was reared here musically before her European successes, will play in Jordan Hall early in December, and Miss Olive Mead, a violinist to whom the saying about the prophet cannot be applied—witness her appearances at Symphony concerts—will give concerts with her quartet of young ladies in January and in March.

Pianists and Others.

Mr. Paderewski will not be here until late in the season. His tour will begin at San Francisco Dec. 19, and he will play here with the Symphony orchestra in April. But two of his pupils, Mme. Szumowska and Mr. Ernest Schelling, will be heard. Mr. Gebhard will give a concert in which works of Mr. Loeffler will be performed.

Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann will play at the third Symphony concert and with the orchestra in concerts on the trip. His recitals will be in Jordan Hall on the afternoons of Nov. 10, 17 and 21.

Mr. Alexandre Guilmant, who has been giving organ recitals at the St. Louis exposition, will play in Symphony Hall on the evening of Nov. 14. This will be the third visit of the distinguished French master to this city, and in Symphony Hall he will no doubt be heard to still greater advantage.

Band concerts will be given in Symphony Hall by Creatore on Sunday evenings, Oct. 23 and 30. The famous Grenadier Guards band, 61 musicians, will give two concerts on the afternoon and evening of Nov. 10.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1904

Manager Mudgett of Symphony Hall has cable advices of the sailing of Mme. Marcella Sembrich for America on the 25th inst., on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its usual series of ten concerts at Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, the coming season, on Thursday evenings, Nov. 10, Dec. 1 and 15, Jan. 1 and 26, Feb. 9, March 9 and April 6 and 27.

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor
NINE CONCERTS
On Thursday Evenings at 7.45, Oct. 27, Nov. 10, Dec. 1, Dec. 15, Jan. 26, Feb. 9, March 9, April 6, April 27.
Soloists: MRS. WETHOVD, MR. BACHNER-MR. HESS, MR. BUONAMICI, MR. ADAMOWSKI, MR. KRASSELT, and others to be announced.
Season Tickets, $7.00. On sale at Sever's University Bookstore, Harvard Sq., Saturday, Oct. 22, at 8 o'clock. A limited number of seats have been reserved for college officers and invited guests. (A)

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, Oct. 14, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, Oct. 15, at 8.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor
Programme, in Memory of Anton Dvorak—Overture to "Othello"; Aria from "Stabat Mater"; Suite in D major, op. 39; quartet from "Stabat Mater"; Symphony No. 5, "From the New World."
Soloists—Mme. Louise Homer, Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mr. Theodore Van Yorx, Mr. L. B. Merrill.
A limited number of tickets for the Saturday evening concert only on sale. 2t(A) o 14

During the coming season Mr. Heinrich Gebhard will play twice with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city. On the first occasion he will play two new pieces by F. S. Converse, entitled "Night and Day." The second time he will play Vincent D'Indy's Symphony on a mountain air.

[16]

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

OPENING OF BOSTON'S 24TH SYMPHONY SEASON

The 24th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened last evening at Symphony Hall. Wilhelm Gericke was again the conductor, and the new concert master, Willy Hess, made his initial appearance here on this occasion. The programme, in memory of Anton Dvorak, who died last May at Prague, included the following numbers, all by this composer:

Overture, "Othello," op. 93.
"Inflammatus" and "Quis est Homo," from the "Stabat Mater," op. 58.
Suite in D, op. 39.
Symphony No. 5, "From the New World," op. 95.

The soloists were Mme. Homer, Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Theodore Van Yorx and L. B. Merrill. Numerous faces of the old patrons of these concerts were noticed, and there were also many that were apparently present for the first time.

Mr. Gericke was enthusiastically applauded upon his entrance. There were one or two new faces noted in the orchestra besides that of the new concert master; otherwise everything in this direction was familiar.

The programme was of moderate interest and it was much too long. If two of the familiar Slavonic dances, by which Dvorak became known to the musical public here, had been substituted for the suite, and the vocal quartet also omitted, the programme would have been more enjoyable and equally as representative of the composer's genius.

The "Othello" overture, the best of the three written together as one, was finely played and made a good impression. The suite proved enjoyable in two of the movements, but otherwise the music is not among the composer's best.

The symphony seemed better than ever and apparently is a work that will outlive many other things that Dvorak gave to the world.

It is truly a superb example of a modern symphony, and, although written when the composer was a resident of New York (1892-95), at a time when he is described as being out of sympathy with his temporary environment, and longing to be again in his old home at Prague, the work bears the earmarks of real genius, being spontaneous in thought, clear in outline and in every detail of workmanship most effective.

The work of the orchestra throughout the evening was worthy of its great reputation.

Mme. Homer sang the "Inflammatus" in rather indifferent manner, and the quartet's "Quis est Homo," though sung in a highly respectable manner, left something to be desired. The several soloists were well received.

The programme of the second rehearsal and concert this week will include Beethoven's fourth symphony, a new scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier," by Paul Dukas, Wagner's "Tannhauser" overture, and Joachim's Hungarian concerto for violin, played by Willy Hess—his first appearance in America.

Boston Transcript
MONDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1904

MUSIC AND DRAMA

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

Without the usual preliminary flourish of stray pianoforte or song recitals, on Saturday evening, the musical season in Boston was opened by the first symphony concert of the year, the twenty-fourth of the orchestra's existence. Mr. Wilhelm Gericke is again the conductor of the organization, in the ranks of which there are but two important changes: the accessions of Mr. Willy Hess as concert master and of Mr. Georges Grisez as first clarinet player. This opening concert was, very appropriately, made a memorial to the composer, Anton Dvorak, who died, at his home in Prague, the first day of May. With the assistance of Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mrs. Louise Homer, Mr. Theodore Van Yorx and Mr. L. B. Merrill, the following programme of works by Dvorak was presented:

Overture, "Othello."
Aria, "Inflammatus," from the "Stabat Mater."
Suite in D major, Op. 39.
Quartet, "Quis est Homo," from the "Stabat Mater."
Symphony No. 5, in E minor, from the "New World," Op. 95.

To do honor to the memory of the famous Bohemian composer, who once lived in New York, Mr. Gericke evidently thought it best to bring to a hearing those works with which we are most familiar. From certain points of view, furthermore, the "New World" symphony and the "Othello" overture are among Dvorak's most admirable compositions, both being musicianly, carefully written, logically developed and free from the redundant prolixity to which he was unfortunately prone, to an extent often found in his earlier, or later, opuses. In the symphony, especially, Dvorak most closely approaches Mendelssohn in excellence of workmanship and mastery of form. So severely has the man been taken to task for his not very exhaustive study of the rudiments of composition, for his leanings toward the trivial in music, and for his general lack of powerful intellect, that Mr. Gericke may well have regarded it as a pious duty, when the time came for honoring his memory, to arrange a concert of works that would show how clearly, logically and intelligently Dvorak could write when he chose. If this was his aim, Mr. Gericke could not have made a more judicious selection.

But almost the entire programme of Saturday displayed the Dvorak who tried to compose music like other people. Of Dvorak, the Bohemian butcher's son, who earned his living by playing for country dances, who listened with keen delight to the legends of old peasant women, who would stand many minutes listening to a hodcarrier sing old songs his mother taught him, of Dvorak the friend of gypsies, of Dvorak the semi-civilized product of a half-barbaric people, of Dvorak the passionate patriot, there was little to be heard Saturday. And yet, surely, it is this Dvorak, who, with subtle feeling for the picturesque, translated into symphonic poems old wives' tales of Bohemia, who set all the world a-dancing with his boisterous rhythms of polkas and furiants, who wrote down songs that picture for us gypsies and their life, who wrote Biblical songs—breathing forth genuine, honest piety—this Dvorak, one must think, will live through his music long after the accomplished follower of Mendelssohn is forgotten. At the concert in his memory one would gladly have heard certain works that savor strongly of Bohemia.

Since Dvorak wrote and achieved more or less success with choral compositions on a large scale, it was probably necessary that a concert of the character of Saturday's should contain excerpts from these works. Whatever the intrinsic worth of the aria and the quartet from the "Stabat Mater" may be, it was inevitable that on Saturday they should make no effect at all, for an audience cannot at once jump from a consideration of the adventures of Othello to that of the divine mother's sorrows. Nor can one feel that Dvorak himself wrote of these sufferings with the sincerity which he put into the writing of the Biblical songs. The quartet went very smoothly, and Mrs. Homer, in the aria, was much admired for the exquisite purity and skilful handling of her voice. The audience, after welcoming Mr. Gericke cordially, showed no overwhelming interest in the concert.

On Saturday evening next Mr. Willy Hess will make his first appearance in Boston. This is to be the programme: Symphony in B-flat major, No. 4, Beethoven; Hungarian Concerto for violin, Joachim; Scherzo, "l'Apprenti Sorcier," Paul Dukas; overture, "Tannhäuser," Wagner.

R. R. G.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, OCT 16, 1904.

FIRST SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Mr Gericke opened the 24th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra with a program in memory of Anton Dvorak, the five selections being of his composition. The members comprised the overture, "Othello"; suite in D-major, the "New World" symphony and two excerpts from "Stabat Mater," the solo "Inflammatus et Accensus" and "Quis est Homo," for quartet. Mrs Louise Homer sang the "Inflammatus" and with Mrs Grace B. Williams, Theodore van Yorx and L. B. Merrill made up the quartet. Symphony hall held the usual concourse of patrons at the rehearsal and concert that have been regular in attendance for many seasons. Mr Gericke was welcomed with the usual polite demonstrations, the orchestra played as it always does, which leaves little or nothing to be desired in the way of interpretation, and the winter's musical feast opened as auspiciously as those of former years. There are but few changes in the personnel of the orchestra, the new concert master, Mr Willy Hess, being the most conspicuous, of course, and so the ensemble work didn't vary from that of the past.

From the nature of the selections, which are quite familiar to patrons of the Symphony concerts, it will be seen that there was little to awaken more than respectful enthusiasm. It was solid, dignified music, rather somber as a whole, with the "New World" symphony the nearest approach to anything frivolous on the program. Mrs Louise Homer, whose rich mezzo-soprano voice has so often been heard and praised in concert and grand opera, sang the "Inflammatus" admirably, and in the "Quis est Homo" the quartet—Mrs Williams, Mrs Homer and Messrs Van Yorx and Merrill—were very satisfactory, for their voices blended well and each performed the solo work commendably.

The "Othello" overture was given with due regard to the nature of the theme—smoothly, with contrasts well preserved and each contingent in harmonious accord. The prayer of Desdemona was beautifully played by the muted strings, and the Othello interruptions, fortissimo and mainly by the full orchestra, displayed to the usual advantage the well-known ensemble playing of the men. The solemn and measured accompaniments to the "Stabat Mater" music were given with good effect, and the understanding between the orchestra and singers appeared to be perfect.

The orchestral suite is so thoroughly characteristic of the Bohemian composer and is so oddly phrased and modulated that there are many musical "surprises" in each of the five parts and the rhythmic changes, unless given perfectly, appear inharmonious and harsh. In this familiar number the various woodwinds may be credited with delightful phrase work, their parts being quite prominent. In the finale the whole orchestra played the elaborate movement as brilliantly and vigorously as one could reasonably wish. The "New World" symphony went about as usual and calls for no special comment.

The new concert master, Mr Willy Hess, will appear as soloist at this week's concerts, playing Joachim's Hungaria concerto for violin. The other numbers will be Beethoven's fourth symphony, scherzo, "L'Aprenti Sorcier," Paul Dukas, first time, and the overture to Wagner's "Tannhauser."

The Boston Journal
FOUNDED 1833
Published Every Week Day at The Journal Building, 262-268 Washington St.

Symphony Orchestra Pays High Tribute To Dvorak

Program of Twenty-Fourth Season's Opening Night Devoted to the Works of the Great Musician.

The opening of the season of Saturday night concerts by the Boston Symphony, which has most properly come to mean the beginning of the musical year in Boston, was made the occasion for paying the tribute of art to Antonin Dvorak, whose music formed the entire program. Such recognition was but just, for the eminent Bohemian who died last May, took out of the world with him a great light. Master of melody, a genius in form, a wonderful man in his appeal to the heart, he still lives and will live long.

Unequal, as all geniuses are, Dvorak produced much that we do not care to hear but once; yet for the other things—the glories of his richly dowered nature, we can be grateful without waxing argumentative.

An Interesting Overture.

The "Othello" overture, which had first place on the program, is one of the finer examples of Dvorak's work. It need not, of course, be taken as an accurate tone picture of the killing of Desdamona, for its other significance and title is "Love." But the beauty of the fair wife's prayer, the frenzied entrance of the Moor, the murder and the remorse, are each portrayed with sure touches and great musicianship. The overture is an interesting bit of writing, although giving no special intimation of Dvorak's peculiar national style. It was played rather coldly, and with that lack of emotional "tang" that often descends upon this splendid orchestra. Perhaps there was lack of sympathy with it, perhaps the beginning of the season finds emotion yet unthawed. At any rate, a more poignant effect might have been made.

The Suite in D contains much of gentle interest rather than of great originality or power. Of the five movements, the polka and the finale are most characteristic and fine. The romanze is an over-sweet and dawdling thing, reminding one alternately of that once beloved of the people "The Shepherd Boy," and of the English horn melody in the "William Tell" overture.

Dvorak's Greatest Work.

"The New World" symphony, which came as the benediction, wears so wondefully well that it warrants the prophecy that it is to be considered the greatest of all Dvorak's orchestral writings. Its composer is now in his grave; dead, too, should be the sneers of those who could not find it in their souls to admire this marvel of life and beauty because, forsooth, they thought that Dvorak intended by it to establish an American school of music. Nothing was further from his mind; he gave musical voice merely to certain impressions he received in this country. Yet how truly he painted the picture of the South. In the first movement, who can listen and not hear the modulations of the plantation darkies in the evening? In the exquisite largo, is there not the vision of the bayou in the red of sunset, the odor of the magnolia, as the English horn sings that tender song? After these two movements, the rest is merely pleasant music, but they are as entertaining as anything that modern music can show.

The playing of the symphony was less fine than it has had on other occasions. There was occasional roughness, and a horn phrase in the first movement was cracked and blurred.

Some Vocal Music.

There was vocal music of Dvorak's as befitted an occasion of the kind. Mrs. Louise Homer sang the "Inflammatus" from his "Stabat Mater," a not especially interesting selection. Mrs. Homer's voice is as large as ever and, it seemed, a bit more strident and aciduous than of yore. At all events, it is best fitted for grand opera. The quartet, "Quis est Homo" went very well, although the voices were not perfectly balanced.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Twenty-fourth season, first concert. Louise Homer, Grace B. Williams, T. Van Yorx and L. B. Merrill, soloists.

THE PROGRAM.

Overture, "Othello," Op. 93...Dvorak
Solo, "Inflammatus et Accensus," from the "Stabat Mater," Op. 58.....Dvorak
Suite in D major, Op. 39....Dvorak
Quartet, "Quis est Homo," from the Stabat Mater," Op. 58.Dvorak Symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World," Op. 95.....Dvorak place.

The Boston Symphony quartet—Messrs. Hess, Roth, Ferir, Krasselt—will be assisted this season by Mrs. Bloomfield-Zeisler and Eugene d'Albert, pianists, and by members of the Symphony orchestra. The date of the opening concert has been changed from Oct. 24 to Nov. 7. The following works will be performed during the season: Beethoven, quartet in G major, No. 2; septet in E flat major, op. 20; quintet in C major, op. 29; quartet in C major, op. 59; Bach, ciaconna for violin alone; Brahms, quartet in A minor, op. 51, No. 25; quintet in F major, op. 88; Cherubini, scherzo from quartet in D minor, No. 3; Dittersdorf, quartet in E flat major; Dvorak, sextet in A major, op. 48; Glazounoff, quintet in A major, op. 39 (first time); Haydn, quartet in D minor, op. 76, No. 2; Leclair, sonata for violin and viola, with piano (first time); Mendelssohn, octet (strings), in E flat major, op. 20; Mozart, quartet in B flat major; divertimento (two horns), in D major (first time); Saint-Saens, sonata for piano and 'cello in C minor, op. 32; Schubert, quartet in D minor, op. posth; Schumann, quartet in A minor, op. 41, No. 1; Richard Strauss, sonata for piano and violin in E flat major, op. 18; Tschaikowsky, quartet in F major, op. 22.

The concert to be given by Creatore and his famous Italian band, next Sunday evening, Oct. 30, will be of special interest by reason of the performance of Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust."

Sunday
Oct 16

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET.

Mme Bloomfield-Zeisler and Mr Eugene d'Albert, pianists, and artists from the Boston Symphony orchestra will assist the Boston Symphony quartet, Prof Willy Hess leader, in their series of Monday evening concerts at Jordan hall already announced. The date of the first concert has been changed from Oct 24 to Nov 7, owing to the late arrival of Mr Krasselt, the cellist, from Europe. The sale of season tickets will open at Symphony hall Friday morning, Oct 14. The program for the opening concert of the series is as follows: Quartet in D minor (Op posth), Shubert; ciaconna for violin alone, J. C. Bach; quintet in C major, Beethoven. Mr Max Zach will assist.

BOWDOIN-SQ THEATRE CONCERT.

[17]

HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 108.
SUNDAY, OCT. 16, 1904.

OPENS SEASON IN SYMPHONY HALL

Programme of First Concert of Boston Orchestra Chosen in Memory of Anton Dvorak — Wilhelm Gericke Conductor.

GEORGES LONGY SITS IN ACCUSTOMED SEAT

Selections Exhibit Variety of Work by Composer, Who Died in Prague Last May, Including Stabat Mater Pieces.

The 24th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra began last night with the concert in Symphony Hall. Mr. Wilhelm Gericke was the conductor. Mr. Willy Hess, the new concert master, and Mr. Georges Grisez, the new first clarinet, played for the first time at these concerts. It has been stated in New York, and with an insistence and a passion which now seem pathetic, that Mr. Georges Longy would live in Paris this winter, but the master of the oboe sat in his accustomed seat. Mr. Gericke was warmly greeted, and the audience applauded heartily in the course of the performance.

The programme was chosen as a tribute to the memory of Anton Dvorak, who died at Prague on May 1, the Sunday following the last Symphony concert of last season. This programme was as follows:

Overture, "Othello".....Dvorak
Aria, "Inflammatus," from the "Stabat Mater".....Dvorak
Suite in D major, op. 39.....Dvorak
Quartet, "Quis est Homo," from the "Stabat Mater".....Dvorak
Symphony No. 5 in E minor, "From the New World," op. 95.....Dvorak

"Let us now praise famous men, and our fathers that begat us * * * such as found out musical tunes and recited verses in writing."

It was a good and proper thing to pay tribute, publicly in Boston to the memory of Dvorak, not by pomp of spoken praise, not by the reading of papers on Bohemian musicians in general and on Dvorak in particular, but by listening to the composer's music. He then, though dead, spoke for himself; others did not praise with reservation or apology. No one came between him and the hearer.

This tribute was not due to Dvorak simply because he lived for a time in New York, because he taught in this country, because he once visited Boston, because, pleased with plantation tunes, he used some of them or imitated others as thematic material for the symphony performed last night and for two chamber works, one of which was played for the first time in this city. The tribute was one to a composer who knew both poverty and success and was prepared for either fortune; to a composer of indubitable native talent, who at his best said things worth hearing in his own speech; to a patriotic composer, whose name, often based on Bohemian themes and charged with Bohemian spirit, was nevertheless by reason of melody and rhythm and emotional quality universal, not parochial music; to a man of simple, natural honesty in his art and in his life.

The winning and endearing qualities of childhood were in his best music: artless simplicity, irresistible frankness, delight in nature and life. His music was best when it smacked of the soil, when he remembered his early days, the strains of vagabond musicians, the dances dear to his folk. One of a happily primitive people, he delighted in rhythm and color. He was not the man to translate pictures, statues, poems, a system of metaphysics, a gospel of pessimism into music. He was least successful when he would be heroic, mystical, profound. It was an evil day for him when England "discovered" him, patronized him, ordered oratorios from him for her festivals, made him a doctor of music (as though he were a cathedral organist, the composer of a sacred work, "Job's Daughters" in three parts: "Jemima," "Kezia" and "Keren-happuch"), and tried to turn this "Naturmensch" into a drawing room and church celebrity. When Dvorak is dull, he is very dull. His Slavonic Dances and such a song as "Als die alte Mutter" are worth a wilderness of "St. Ludmilas" and "Heldenlieds." And his work as a creative musician was no doubt at an end when he left this country to go back to his beloved Prague.

Some have been inclined to think lightly of Dvorak because his best and vital qualities were recognized by the people. This popularity irritated those who believe that pure art is only for the few—the purists; they forget Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Chopin, Verdi, Wagner, Tschaikowsky. But this popularity was based on the quick recognition of essential qualities; melody, rhythm, color. Slavonic intensity frets the nerves of the genteel, unless they are told by lecturers and other learned men that this intensity has a purpose, an esoteric meaning. Dvorak might have replied to lecturers, essayists, and the genteel in Whitman's words:

> Do you guess I have some intricate purpose?
> Well, I have—for the Fourth-month showers have, and the mica on the side of a rock has.
> Do you take it I would astonish? Does the daylight astonish? Does the early redstart, twittering through the woods?

Dvorak had his faults and they were tiresome and exasperating. His naivete became a mannerism. Like a child, he delighted in vain repetitions; he was at times too much pleased with rhythms and colors, so that he mistook the exterior dress for the substance and forgot that after all there was little or no substance behind the brilliant trappings. We believe that he will ultimately be ranked among the minor poets of music. His complete works may gather dust in libraries; but no carefully chosen Anthology will be without examples of his piquancy, strength and beauty in thought and expression.

We prefer now to speak of the composer rather than of this particular programme or of the performance, for the music itself was for the most part familiar to concertgoers, and the first performance of the season is seldom fully abreast of the high reputation of the orchestra. Yet it may be said that the music of this programme showed as in a looking glass the strength and the weakness, the originality of beauty and the platitudinous side of the composer. The Dvorak of the "Othello" overture is a much more sophisticated being than is the singer and dancer of the suite. The mood of Desdemona's prayer music is strongly reminiscent of Verdi's incomparable scene, and Dvorak's Othello is often a Slavonic Moor, not unacquainted with the furiant. The suite reveals the true Dvorak before attempts were made to tame and educate him. Fortunately the symphony is now removed from the field of politics. It may be discussed as music, not necessarily as an argument for or against the possibility of an American school, founded on Congo-American Indian-Creole folk tunes. There is much in it that gives pleasure, there are are also pages that seem meretricious and too sentimental.

The quartet of singers was made up of Mrs. Grace B. Williams, Mrs. Louise Homer, Messrs. Theodore Van Yorx and L. B. Merrill. The "Stabat Mater" is not one of Dvorak's best works, and where fragments are thus given the audience is hardly in a sympathetic mood. Here the thought of the virgin's woe was sandwiched between that of a Bohemian dance and that of a plantation breakdown, and the prayer of a worshipper at her shrine followed Othello's murderous deed. Yet the programme perhaps would not have been complete without some exhibition of Dvorak's vocal composition. No singer, however gifted, can make much out of Dvorak's "Inflammatus." In the "Quis est Homo" there is greater vocal opportunity. The quartet was sung with understanding, but the voices were not well balanced.

My Times, Oct 30

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The programme for the first two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall this week are as follows:

THURSDAY EVENING.

Symphony in B flat major, No. 4.....Beethoven
Hungarian concerto for violin.....Joachim
Mr. Willy Hess.
Scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier".....Paul Dukas
(First time.)
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner

SATURDAY MATINEE.

Overture, "Oberon".....Weber
Concerto for pianoforte in F minor, No. 2...Chopin
Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann.
Symphony in E major, Op. 14.....Josef Suk
(First time.)

The novelties are the symphony in E major by Joseph Suk and the scherzo "L'Apprenti Sorcier," by Paul Dukas.

Josef Suk's first teacher was his father, an excellent musician. The son entered the Prague Conservatory in 1885, where he studied the violin under Bennewitz and composition under Dvorak, who later became his father-in-law. "A Dramatic Overture," written after study of two years, was highly praised; and a piano quartet brought from the Government a stipend. Suk has written a suite, "A Fairy Tale," made up chiefly of material taken from the entr'actes and incidental music composed by him for J. Zeyer's "Radüz and Mahulena," (produced at Prague, April 10, 1898;) a pianoforte quartet in A minor, (New York, November, 1901;) a string quartet in B flat major, an overture to Shakespeare's "Winter's Tale," a serenade for strings, a ballade and serenade for 'cello and piano, a suite for pianoforte, songs for three-voiced female chorus and pianoforte, (four hands,) &c.

Suk has always been the second violinist of the Bohemian Quartet, which made a sensation on its first appearance in Vienna in the season of 1892-93, and is now famous throughout Europe.

Paul Dukas was born in Paris, Oct. 1, 1865, and is now living in the same city. "L'Apprenti Sorcier," an orchestral scherzo, was performed for the first time at a concert of the Société Nationale, Paris, May 18, 1897. The scherzo was produced at Chicago by the Chicago Orchestra, Mr. Thomas, conductor, Jan. 14, 1899.

Paul Abraham Dukas studied at the Paris Conservatory. He was a pupil of Dubois in harmony and of Guiraud in composition. In 1888 he took the second Prix de Rome.

During his school years Dukas wrote dramatic overtures, "Le Roi Lear" and "Goetz de Berlichingen," which were not published. His first work performed in public was his overture "Polyeucte," (Lamoureux concert, Paris, Jan. 24, 1892.) His symphony in C major was produced at the concerts of the Opéra, Jan. 3 and 10, 1897. He is one of the few Frenchmen that have written a sonata for the pianoforte. His sonata, dedicated to Saint-Saëns, a formidable work—the performance takes forty minutes—was produced at a concert of the Société Nationale, Paris, May 11, 1901, when it was played by Edouard Risler. He has been for several years music critic of The Revue Hebdomadaire, and he was also the critic of The Chronique des Arts. As a composer of orchestral music he is ranked in Paris among the first of French composers now living.

My Mail, Oct 27

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which reserves the right to change its programmes when it likes, will have Willy Hess, the new concertmaster, as violin soloist next Thursday night at Carnegie Hall, Vladimir de Pachmann having been switched off to the Saturday afternoon concert.

Wilhelm Gericke will conduct the following programmes:

THURSDAY EVENING.

Symphony, in B flat major, No. 4, Beethoven
Hungarian concerto for violin...Joachim
Mr. Willy Hess.
Scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier".Paul Dukas
(First time.)
Overture, "Tannhauser" .....Wagner

SATURDAY MATINEE.

Overture, "Oberon" .. ..Weber
Concerto for pianoforte in F minor, No. 2 .....Chopin
Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann.
Symphony in E major, op. 14...Josef Suk

Friday, November 4, is the date of the first of the People's Symphony Concerts at Carnegie Hall, at popular prices. F. X. Arens, the conductor, will offer the first Beethoven Symphony, Weber's "Frieschutz," overture and the suite, "L'Arlesienne" of Bizet. David Bispham will sing.

The first of the six chamber concerts of the People's Symphony Auxiliary Club will take place at Cooper Union on Thursday evening, November 17.

My Evening Sun, Oct 29

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, now in its twenty-third year, will reappear next week, playing on Thursday and Saturday at Carnegie Hall, in Manhattan borough, and on Friday at the Baptist Temple, in Brooklyn. Vladimir de Pachmann is the principal soloist, Willy Hess the new first violin, and Wilhelm Gericke the conductor. Mr. Gericke, in fact, having led the orchestra during half of its existence, is said to yield in seniority to none but Mr. Henry L. Higginson, the musical Mæcenas of Boston's Symphony Hall.

My Herald, Oct 30

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert and matinee in Carnegie Hall, on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon of this week, may be regarded as the opening guns of a rather tardy musical campaign—although, to be sure, a few scattering shots from enterprising artists on the skirmish line, as it were, broke the quiet last week. Mr. Gericke presents the orchestra in two highly interesting programmes. The chief features of that on Thursday evening will be the first American performance of Joseph Suk's E major symphony and three movements of a Bach suite, which Mr. Gericke has orchestrated.

The soloist at this concert will be Willy Hess, the orchestra's new concertmeister a violinist whom New York hears for the first time as a mature artist. In Boston he played as long ago as 1869, as a boy prodigy, with the Thomas Orchestra. He will present the Hungarian concerto of his master, Joachim, the same work with which he made his début in Boston ten days ago.

On Saturday Vladimir de Pachmann will be the soloist, playing the Chopin pianoforte concerto, probably with his old exuberance and fire, for he has been storing up energy in the Catskills all summer.

My Press, Oct 30

Boston's symphony orchestra will open its season here this week with the usual Thursday night concert and Saturday matinee. Willy Hess, the orchestra's new concert master, will be the soloist at the first performance, and Vladimir de Pachmann will be the keyboard artist on Saturday. Here are the programmes: Thursday evening—Beethoven's symphony in B flat major, No. 4; Joachim's Hungarian Concerto for violin (Willy Hess); Scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier" (first time), Paul Dukas; Wagner's "Tannhauser," overture. Saturday matinee—Weber's "Oberon," overture; Chopin's F minor, piano concerto (De Pachmann); Symphony in E major, opus 14 (first time), by Josef Suk.

My Staats, Oct 30

Die Solisten für die beiden Konzerte des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters haben ihre Plätze getauscht: am Donnerstag Abend wird Herr Willy Heß, der neue Konzertmeister des Orchesters, und am Samstag Nachmittag Wladimir de Pachmann spielen. Im Uebrigen bleiben die Programme, wie sie am vorigen Sonntag an dieser Stelle veröffentlicht wurden. —

My Globe, Oct 30

The Boston Orchestra, at Carnegie Hall, on Thursday evening, plays Beethoven's fourth symphony, the overture to "Tannhäuser," and Dukas's scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier." The soloist is Willy Hess, the new concert master, in his teacher's, Joachim's, Hungarian concerto. On the programme for Saturday afternoon are a new symphony by Suk, the overture to Weber's "Oberon," and Chopin's second concerto, with Pachmann for the piano part.

My Sun, Oct 30

The corrected programmes of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concerts here are as follows: Thursday evening, Nov. 3, Beethoven's B flat symphony, Joachim's Hungarian concerto for violin, Paul Dukas's scherzo, "L'Apprenti Soveier," and the "Tannhäuser" overture. Saturday afternoon, Nov. 5, Weber's "Oberon," overture, Chopin's E minor concerto and Suk's symphony in E major. The violinist will be Willy Hess and the pianist Vladimir de Pachmann.

My World, Oct 30

The balance of the week's musical affairs must be treated briefly. The two Boston Symphony Concerts open the present season of this famous orchestra. At the first one Willy Hess, the orchestra's new concert master, is to be heard as a solo violinist; at the second concert De Pachmann, the famous pianist, reappears here. In addition to these features the programmes of both concerts are interesting.

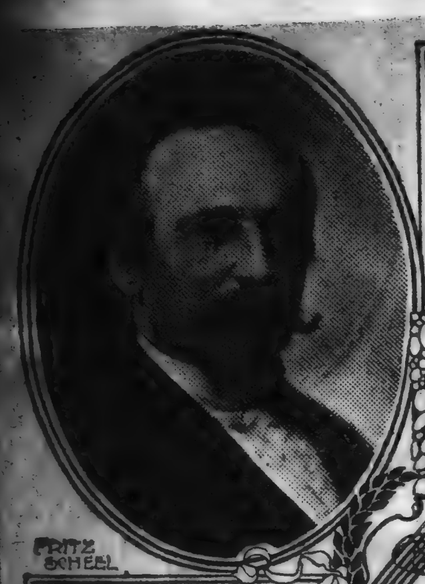
My Tribune Oct 30

Willy Hess will play Joachim's Hungarian concerto for violin at the Thursday evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, instead of at the Saturday afternoon performance, as announced last week.

---

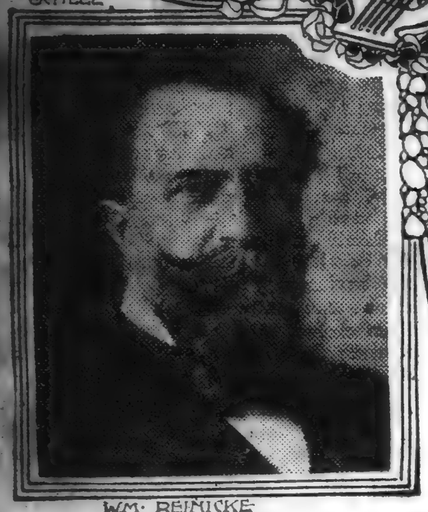
[18]

Philadelphia



FRITZ SCHEEL

WILLY HESS



WM. REINICKE

COPYRIGHT BY AIMÉ DUPONT

DE PACHMANN

* * *

The twentieth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Philadelphia, which is to begin on Monday, October 31, at the Academy of Music, will include the usual two series of five Monday evenings, October 31, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13, and five Wednesday evenings, November 2, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15. Mr. Wilhelm Gericke will again direct the orchestra for the seventh season of his present regime. The list of soloists includes Miss Muriel Foster, contralto, who is most highly esteemed in England and Germany, and who was very successful in her first appearances in this country toward the close of last season, and Miss Edith Walker, whose work in Mr. Conreid's company was one of the features of last season. The pianists will be Messrs. D'Albert, Joseffy, De Pachmann and Schelling. D'Albert, who last played with the orchestra thirteen years ago, and who has meantime give much of his time to composition, returns to repeat his former triumphs. Mr. Joseffy is always a lodestone, and it is a pleasure to note that he has determined to enter again the lists in which he has so often triumphed. Vladimir de Pachmann is recognised as the supreme interpreter of Chopin. Mr. Schelling is a pupil of Paderewski, who has been highly praised for his piano playing in London and in continental cities.

The violinists will be Miss Marie Nichols and Messrs. Ysaye, Kreisler and Hess. Miss Nichols is a Bostonian by adoption and she was taught in this city by Mr. Emil Mollenhauer. She studied also for a time in Berlin with Halir and in Paris with Debroux. She was already an accomplished violinist when she went to Europe, and she had played with orchestras in several American cities. Her performances in Berlin, Paris and London excited the lively admiration of the critics. Mr. Ysaye and Mr. Kreisler will be most heartily welcomed. Each in his own way is a great artist. Mr. Willy Hess, who arrived in this country early in October to assume the position of concertmaster and first violin of the orchestra, has an established reputation of several years in Europe.

The first series concerts are to be given Monday evenings, October 31, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13. The dates fixed for the second series are Wednesday evenings, November 2, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15. Both series of concerts will be the same in character and equally attractive, but with different programs and soloists.

Season ticket holders of last season will be allowed to retain the same seats for both the first and second series, payment for the same to be made on or before Friday, October 7, for the first series, and Monday, October 10, for the second series, by cash, money order or check, made payable to Miss H. Harris, to whom all renewals of seats should be sent, at 1115 Chestnut street.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Wilhelm Gericke, will visit Philadelphia as usual this season, giving five concerts on Monday evenings and five on the following Wednesday evenings. The first concert will occur on October 31, so that it will precede that of the Philadelphia Orchestra and will thus open the musical season. The dates of the other Monday evening concerts are December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13. The Wednesday concerts will be on November 2, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15. This will be the twentieth season of this fine orchestra in Philadelphia and the twenty-fourth of its continuous existence, and during twelve of the twenty-four years it has been under Mr. Gericke, whose careful discipline has impressed itself upon the well-established character of the organization. This year the orchestra has a new concert master, Willy Hess, a young violinist of repute from Cologne. It is not probable that other individual changes will be noticed. We are indebted to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to Mr. Gericke for a first hearing of a great deal of modern music within these twenty years, and his announcements of novelties are always important. The list which he has prepared for Boston, and some of which, at least, will probably be given here, includes: Hugo Wolf's symphonic poem, "Penthesilea"; a symphony by Saint-Saens, Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande"; Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Sadkow"; a prelude by Debussy and an overture by C. Goldmark; "Pax Triumphans," by van der Stucken; a suite by Sinding; "Der Vespertag," by Schillings; also two piano pieces by Conouse and a symphony by Hadley. These last are probably for New England. The "Penthesilea" is one of the compositions just now on many European programmes, Wolf having come to his own since his death, and several other of the works mentioned will be very well worth hearing.

The list of soloists at the Boston Orchestra concerts runs in a large measure parallel with that of the Philadelphia Orchestra. It includes D'Albert and De Pachmann among the pianists, with Joseffy and young Schelling, who should naturally have made his first appearance here under home auspices. The violinists are Ysaye and Kreisler, with Miss Marie Nichols, a young Bostonian, and Mr. Hess. The vocalists are Muriel Foster, contralto, and Edith Walker, who has been heard in opera. The programme of the first concert is not yet announced. It is interesting to note that Mr. Gericke's opening concert in Boston is to be entirely of the works of Dvorak, by way of memorial.

* * *

MISS MURIEL FOSTER, WHO WILL APPEAR HERE WITH THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

GERICKE'S ORCHESTRA OPENS CONCERT SEASON

THE opening of the concert season, on Monday, October 31, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will mark the 122d performance in Philadelphia of this highly disciplined band of instrumentalists.

Until kindly fate had favored Philadelphia with an orchestra all its own, the annual visits of the Boston musicians were red-letter days for all lovers of music here, and their placid perfection of interpretation under Herr Gericke still commands grateful hearing and pleased acquiescence. In truth, the music-lovers of Philadelphia owe this orchestra a debt of gratitude that could scarcely be repaid. It kept the lamp of classic music burning dimly at the Academy of Music through years of neglect, and when at length the people had awakened to the artistic merit and importance of its concerts, the number of annual performances here was steadily increased, until the Philadelphia series of concerts became the most extensive in the country, outside of the Symphony Hall series in Boston.

Although no longer the chief musical events of the season, the annually recurring concerts here of Mr. Gericke's band constitute a magnet of artistic attraction no less praiseworthy and potent than in former years, before Fritz Scheel, with his mighty orchestra, began to dominate the local musical situation. Contrary to sordid box-office opinion, there cannot be too much really good music by symphony orchestras during the brief musical season. The really capable orchestras of the country can be counted upon the fingers of one hand, while the eager appetite of the public for their performances has grown by what it fed upon.

Then, too, there is much weight and value in the unquestioned prestige of the Boston organization—implying a high standard of excellence attained at great cost and resolutely and carefully maintained.

Some Prominent Soloists.

During the coming season Herr Gericke and his band will present, in addition to the more familiar numbers of the classic repertory, a dozen or more compositions new to Philadelphia concertgoers. Among these are Hugo Wolf's "Prometheus," a splendid symphonic poem; Saint-Saens' First Symphony; Vander Stuckens' "Pax Triumphaus," a symphonic prelude by Gaetani; a new Goldmark overture, a suite for orchestra, by Sinding, and other almost equally interesting works by modern composers.

The list of soloists with the orchestra includes some highly distinguished names—De Albert, De Pachmann, Joseffy and Schilling, pianists; Ysaye, Kreisler and Marie Nichols, violinists; Edyth Walker and Muriel Foster, contraltos. All these are well known to the musical public of Philadelphia save, perhaps, Miss Foster, who is highly esteemed in England and Germany, and sang with marked success at the last May Festival in Cincinnati.

NEW CONCERT MASTER OF BOSTON SYMPHONY

Willy Hess, Who Made First Public Appearance When 13 Years Old.

The new concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Willy Hess—it's Willy, not William, nor Wilhelm—made his first public appearance in Holland when but 13 years old. He is 45 now. He has been a wanderer through many lands—including seven years of America during his early youth.

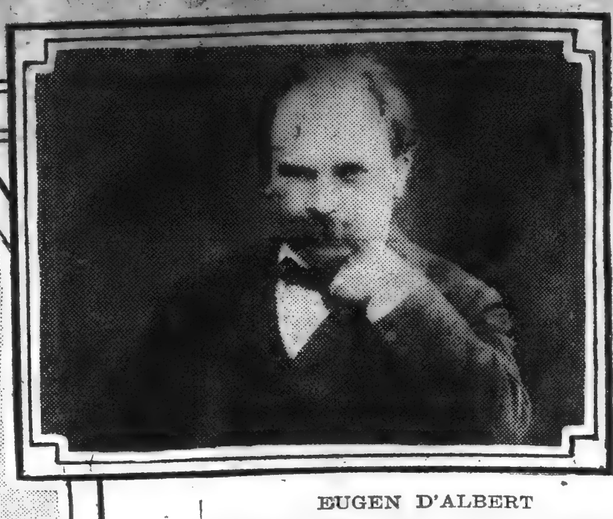
When 20 years old, after two years' study under Joachim, Hess was appointed leader of the opera at Frankfurt-am-Main, where he remained for eight years.

Then began a series of travels for art's sake through the chief musical centres of Germany. From Rotterdam, where he led the Conservatory Orchestra, the young violinist went to England to lead the Halle Orchestra, at Manchester. He made many concert tours in England during his seven years' stay at Manchester, playing often before the royal family.

Ten years ago Hess went to Cologne, where he conducted the famous Gurzenich Quartette and Orchestra. Last year he accepted a professorship at the London Royal Academy of Music, which he resigned last spring to accept his present engagement with Herr Gericke's Orchestra at Boston.

Mr. Hess has made many concert tours on the Continent—notably with the Max Paur and Grunfeld trio, in which he replaced the famous virtuoso, Florian Zajic. In company with Max Paur, he concertized through Norway two years ago, going north to Tromsoe, city of the midnight sun.

The violin used by Mr. Hess—a magnificent Guadagnini—is one of the world's few priceless instruments, acquired by chance several years ago, and treasured as though it were the Kohinoor.



EUGEN D'ALBERT

Berlin's great pianist, soloist with Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Ten symphony concerts are to be given at the Academy of Music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the forthcoming season.

The Monday dates are October 31, December 5, January 9, February 23 and March 15; the Wednesday concerts will be on November 2, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15.

Among the stars who will be heard with Herr Gericke's band are Fritz Kreisler, Eugene Ysaye and Willy Hess—the latter the new concert master of the orchestra—De Pachmann, D'Albert, Joseffy and Schelling, Marie Nichols, Edyth Walker and Muriel Foster.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will, during the impending season, gives its usual ten concerts at the Academy of Music under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke. They will take place on Monday evenings, October 31, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13, and on Wednesday evenings, November 2, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15. The assisting artists are to be Miss Muriel Foster, Miss Edith Walker, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann, Mr. Rafael Joseffy, Mr. Schelling, Mr. Ysaye, Mr. Fritz Kreisler, Miss Marie Nichols and Mr. Willy Hess.

This will be recognized as a particularly strong list. It includes the names of several great artists who have not been heard here for a long time and whom it will be a pleasure to welcome back. Several years have elapsed since either Ysaye, the distinguished Belgian violinist, or D'Albert, the wonderfully brilliant pianist, or de Pachmann, who, besides being admittedly the greatest living interpreter of Chopin, is a thorough master of the keyboard, has appeared in this city, but during the interval not one of them has suffered the least eclipse.

The orchestra remains substantially the same body as before, which is equivalent to saying that man by man it is the equal of any similar organization in the world. It should be noted, however, that Mr. E. Fernandez-Arbos, who preferred life on the other side of the Atlantic, has been succeeded as concert master by Mr. Willy Hess, an excellent musician, admirably qualified by ability and experience to discharge in an effective manner the duties of his post.

* * *

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its usual ten concerts at the Academy under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke. They will take place on Monday evenings, October 31, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 15, and on Wednesday evenings, November 2, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15. The assisting artists are to be Muriel Foster, contralto; Edith Walker, leading contralto of the Metropolitan Opera; Eugen D'Albert, Vladimir de Pachmann, Rafael Joseffy, Mr. Schelling, a brilliant pupil of Paderewski; Mr. Ysaye, Fritz Kreisler, Marie Nichols, violinist, and Willy Hess, the new concertmeister.

The orchestra remains substantially the same exquisitely balanced organization as before. It should be noted, however, that E. Fernandez-Arbos, who preferred life on the other side of the Atlantic, has been succeeded as concertmeister by Willy Hess, an excellent musician, admirably qualified by ability and experience to discharge in an effective manner the duties of his post. During the season a number of interesting novelties will be performed.

[19]

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

OCTOBER 24.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Programme.

Symphony in B flat major, No 4.....Beethoven
Hungarian Concerto for Violin.....Joachim
Mr. Willy Hess.
Scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier".....Paul Dukas
(First time.)
Overture to "Tannhauser".....Wagner

Let us remember that in 1807 the critics considered Beethoven's Fourth symphony quite as crazy music as the conservatives of today regard "Heldenleben" or the "Sinfonia Domestica" to be. Weber scorned the work and ridiculed it, and many a lesser musician followed his lead. The symphony at this concert was admirably read and not a single repeat was spared. The finale was whipped up to a furious speed. This was well enough for the violins, but when the figure (founded on the first 4 notes) came to the bassoons, they were almost overthrown, while the contrabasses struggled vainly with that sting in the symphony's tail. It was pleasant to notice that the performance was enthusiastically applauded. Beethoven and symphonic form are not fading perceptibly, as yet.

Can any reader imagine the nervous strain of a "first appearance" of a new Boston symphony first violinist! He comes to Boston imagining that he is well in advance of his brother-musicians, and finds a phalanx of artists back of him, each one a soloist of ability, some even of high rank. He has the memory of great predecessors to contend with, and a hall not especially favorable for solo violin effects. Mr. Hess added to these another handicap—a concerto of great length, really a symphony upon the heels of a symphony! He was greeted with so much cordiality that he must have gained courage, if he needed any, and he began the brilliant passages of double-stopping with splendid effect.

Everyone felt, in a moment, that there was a great artist and a thorough musician in the "concertmeister" post this year. Flawless intonation, as sympathetic a tone as the work allowed, excellent work in the high positions, great delicacy of shading in the Romanza—one might give a long catalogue of artistic merits. There was a little lack of breadth in G string work, we thought, but this may have been the instrument or the hall; we shall know definitely when Mr. Hess plays the Bach Chaconne at his string quartette concert.

The concerto ends with a furiously difficult movement, and this was conquered without a trace of blur or of weakness. Spite of the length of the work the audience seemed deeply interested to the very end, and then burst out in wild enthusiasm. A laurel wreath and many recalls (5, we believe,) rewarded the artist.

Next followed the musical tale of an enchanted broomstick, with which Mr. Gericke made a sweeping success. If this is a fair example of his work, Dukas may be the chief of the young French orchestral school. The story told is of a sorcerer's assistant, who, in his master's absence, succeeds in turning a broomstick into a servant to carry water to his bath.

He forgets how to dissolve the spell, and the slave brings bucket after bucket, threatening inundation. He seizes the broomstick and cuts it in 2. All in vain, for now there are 2 servants to bring water! At last the master returns and turns the servants back into a broomstick. This is a very different kind of a water-carrier from Cherubini's; it is fully as effective, in the modern vein, as St. Saëns in his "Danse Macabre", it has the humor of Richard Strauss, which it somewhat resembles.

Not only is Dukas master of his vast orchestral forces, but he presents lucid and graphic ideas. There are several composers now alive who have achieved the acme of orchestral coloring, but, of these, only a few—Strauss, Hausegger, etc.—have strong musical thoughts back of their powerful instrumentation. We hope that Dukas may be added to the list.

The interpretation was excellent. Mr. Gericke is a wonderful master of the minutiae of these complex modern works, as well as a great classical conductor. His reading of "Don Quixote" last year, for example, brought out some points of the picture better than the composer himself was able to do. There was nothing lost of the meaning of the work at this concert.

One heard the broomstick give a few bassoon grunts and come to life; equally graphic was the cutting in 2 of the waterman; easily grasped, also, the return of the magician and the disenchantment of the stick. A musical joke as graphic as "Till Eulenspiegel" and a splendid contribution to the repertoire of humorist music.

In listening to the noble performance of the "Tannhauser" overture, we could not but think that the Wagner of "Tannhauser" was greater than the Wagner of "Parsifal." Wagner himself affected to look down upon this early work, but the world at large will not share his opinion.

There is not, in "Parsifal," any climax as great and intense as the final entrance of the Pilgrim's chorus in this overture. Like "Parsifal," too, this overture draws a sharp contrast between religion and vice, between purity and sensuality; the scheme of the "Tannhauser" overture would make a perfect introduction to the later opera, and a more powerful one than it possesses at present.

How our orchestra plays this work, how the woodwind shivers, the flutes trill, the trombones blare and the violins give their descending hailstorm of chromatics, every Boston concert-goer knows.

Louis C. Elson.

SUNDAY HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 115.

SUNDAY, OCT. 23, 1904.

A NEW SCHERZO AT SYMPHONY

For Its Second Concert the Famous Orchestra Produced "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," by Paul Dukas, with Success.

WILLY HESS MADE FIRST APPEARANCE

Was Cordially Welcomed and Made Favorable Impression — Presented with Wreath—Whole Performance Polished.

The programme of the second Symphony concert given last night in Symphony Hall, Mr. Gericke, conducter, was as follows:

Symphony in B flat, No. 4.....Beethoven
Hungarian Concerto for violin.....Joachim
Scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice"...Dukas
Overture to "Tannhaeuser".....Wagner

Paul Dukas' "Sorcerer's Apprentice" is now seven years old—at least it was first played at Paris in 1897. Theodore Thomas' orchestra has played it twice in Chicago, and Mr. Van der Stucken produced it in Cincinnati last season. The composer, who was born at Paris in 1865 and studied at the conservatory of that city, has written comparatively little, but that little has excited attention and commanded respect: an overture to "Polyeucte"—two other overtures have not been published—a symphony, and a formidable piano sonata that takes 40 minutes in performance even when the pianist is urged to do his best.

All these works are eminently serious. But Mr. Dukas, like many serious persons, has his light moments. The "Sorcerer's Apprentice" is his best joke.

It is a musical illustration of Goethe's ballad of the same name, the story of the apprentice who, in the absence of his master, tried to work one of his more remarkable tricks, that of turning a broom into a water-carrier, and by not knowing the words to end the spell was nearly drowned. The tale is a pleasant one, and it was told still more delightfully by Lucian, the satirist, centuries before Goethe. Where did Lucian hear it, or who told it before him?

Dukas has made a singularly picturesque and effective transliteration into music. Many young Frenchmen have glib and colored orchestral expression, but, unfortunately, their thought is insignificant or scrappy. Dukas has striking thoughts, the gift of developing them logically; he is clear even when he is most fantastic in his orchestral speech, and, above all, he has fancy and imagination. There is no attempt at mosaic work; there is no interlinear translation.

"You know the poem?" asks the composer; "now what do you hear in this?"

After the introduction which prepares the mood for witchcraft of haunted Thessaly or of mysterious Egypt, the spell works, and the chief theme, developed, varied, swells with the wretched apprentice's terror, and then enters the vexed and saving sorcerer. The spell is broken. The broom is again a broom.

The scherzo was played brilliantly and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked for producing here this excellent example of the better modern French school and congratulated for the performance itself.

Mr. Willy Hess, the new first concert master, made his first appearance in America since he attained man's estate. When he was 10 years old he played here in Music Hall with Theodore Thomas' orchestra (in 1869), as "Master Willy Hess." He chose last night Joachim's "Hungarian" concerto, a very long and for the most part labored and tedious work. Mr. Listemann, who delighted in Herculean feats, played the whole of it at a symphony concert in 1881.

Insatiate violinist! Could not one movement suffice?

Messrs. Kneisel and Winternitz were more discreet and compassionate; they were content with one movement. But perhaps Mr. Hess wished to perform a pious duty in honoring his master, Joachim.

Mr. Hess, who was cordially welcomed and heartily applauded after each movement, made a most favorable impression in spite of the handicap of the concerto itself. He displayed the confidence and the agility of the virtuoso and the phrasing and the musical intelligence of the experienced concert master. The music did not call for, did not allow, in fact, any exhibition of deep emotion, but whenever there was opportunity, there was a display of amiable sentiment without trickery or exaggeration. The volinist was presented with a wreath.

The symphony was played with the care bestowed by Mr. Gericke on all classic compositions, and the performance, as a whole, was polished and yet vital. The finale was taken with much spirit. The ever stirring overture to "Tannhaeuser" brought the close.

The program of the concert this week will be as follows: Overture to "Oberon," Weber; concerto in F minor No. 2 for piano, Chopin (Mr. de Pachmann, pianist); three sonata movements, Bach (scored by Mr. Gericke); symphony in E major, op. 14, Suk (first time).

32

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCT 23, 1904.

MUSICAL.

Willy Hess Soloist at Symphony Concert.

Last Week of "Parsifal" in English at Tremont Theatre.

Recitals of Note Soon to Be Given Here.

The second Symphony program introduced the new concert master as soloist, Prof Hess playing the Joachim Hungarian concerts for violin, a work so difficult and long that one of those movements usually serves as a solo number for a violinist. The other selections included Beethoven's wonderful fourth symphony, a scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," by Dukas, given for the first time at these concerts, and Wagner's "Tannhauser" overture. A Symphony audience evinces but little enthusiasm for a soloist unless the artist displays abilities of unusual merit and although anyone to become a concert master must necessarily be a man of very high musical attainments, and especially so to become associated with Mr Gericke's orchestra, but few in the audience expected a performance of Joachim's concerto that would create a sensation. A more spontaneous and overwhelming tribute of appreciation is seldom heard at these concerts than that which greeted Prof Hess after each movement of the concerto, culminating at the close in demonstrations which evidently embarrassed the performer, who was called and recalled to the platform midst showers of plaudits from auditors and the members of the orchestra.

Evidently nervous during the orchestral introduction the new violinist showed no traces of trepidation as soon as his work began, and then for more than a half hour he was master of himself, and held his auditors spellbound by a wondrous art which at a single performance established him in the foremost rank of violin virtuosos of the present day. He is an artist combining grace with dignity, sentiment and power, with a strong masculine style, with every difficulty in fingering thoroughly mastered, a tone big, resonaut and pure, and, in short, a man whose musical endowments seem liberal enough to compass successfully the whole field of violin literature.

He played the immensely intricate concerto with full appreciation of its beauty, its strength and suggestions of babaric nature. The breadth of the first movement was splendidly shown, the romantic daintiness of the second part was an exquisite exploitation of the composer's ideas and the queer, rapid staccato scoring of the last movement was brought out with a crispness and clarity that was very effective in its dynamic variations. His three and four-finger chord passages and double stops in the first movement were in perfect harmony, the lighter and lightning like jumps and runs in the second part, in single fingerings chiefly, showed no deviations from pitch, and throughout the whole performance his bowing was free and without exaggeration, despite the fact that forte and fortissimo passages are very frequent and call for great arm power. He is an artist whose advent adds dignity to the season's concert schedule, and his coming appearances at the head of the Boston Symphony quartet will be welcome events.

The orchestra played very beautifully with Prof Hess, making the performance of the concerto a memorable one. The ever-welcome Beethoven symphony, which opened the program auspiciously, and the "Tannhauser" overture were each given in splendid style, especially the former, which appeared to be faultless in interpretation. The Dukas scherzo is a grotesque piece, pleasing in spots, but not particularly interesting except as an illustration of the skill of the modern composer in arranging orchestral effects that a few years ago would hardly pass muster as harmonious combinations. It was played admirably.

Vladimir de Pachmann will be the soloist this week, playing Chopin's F minor concerto for piano. Joseph Suk's E major symphony will be given for the first time at these concerts and the other numbers will be the overture of Weber's "Oberon" and Mr Gericke's orchestration of three movements by Bach.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1904

MUSIC AND DRAMA

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

On Saturday evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Gericke conductor, gave their second concert of the season. The occasion was unusually interesting because Mr. Willy Hess, the new concert-master, made his first appearance here. This was the programme:

Beethoven: Symphony in B-flat major, No. 4, Op. 60.
Joachim: Concerto (in the Hungarian manner) for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 11.
Paul Dukas: Scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." (After a ballad by Goethe.) (First time.)
Wagner: Overture to "Tannhäuser."

The programme contained a work played here for the first time, Dukas's scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," after a ballad by Goethe. This ballad rehearses in poetical form an ancient tale of a sorcerer's apprentice who, one day when his master was abroad, himself undertook to practise the magic art. At first all went well; a broom in the corner, promptly obeying his magical words, hastened to the well to fetch a pail of water. Again and again it went to the well for water, and its course could not be arrested, for the sorcerer's boy had learned no formula that would serve. By good fortune, however, for the world, at all events, if not for the apprentice, the aged warlock returned to his house in time to save too much of a flood, and, by the use of the proper words of enchantment, the broom once more became a broom, with only a broom's attributes.

Although Dukas has written other works that have been produced in Paris concerts of importance, in Boston he can be judged only by his scherzo. For the opportunity of hearing it we must be grateful. Orchestral music at present so largely consisting of doubtful experiments, it is a distinct pleasure once in a way to hear a composition manifestly written for the sole purpose of pleasing. The scherzo is indeed delightful to listen to, even if it attempts no more than to give a musical impression of a picturesque episode. No effort has been made to depict details of Goethe's ballad through music. But the composer Dukas is evidently a man who possesses imagination. He has at his command, furthermore, remarkable skill at writing for a large modern orchestra. His scherzo, therefore, very properly opening with a cleverly suggested air of mystery and enchantment, soon develops into a rushing, whirling movement that presents a lively picture of the silly boy's adventure. For music of this simple, pleasure-giving nature, written with technical skill and imaginative feeling, let us be thankful. The scherzo was brilliantly played.

So was the "Tannhäuser" overture, remembered from last season as one of Mr. Gericke's highest achievements. This year it went still more excitingly than last, the chorus with great dignity, the Venus music passionately, all with splendid rhythm and rich tone; in short, a triumph of orchestral playing.

The lovely Beethoven symphony, on the other hand, proved disappointing. A large share of the time devoted to the preparation of this concert was spent, perhaps, on the new scherzo, at the expense of the symphony. Whatever the cause, at all events, the symphony was performed without the needful animation, without the keenness of rhythm that made the playing of the overture remarkable, and with decidedly more of prose than of poetry in its interpretation. Yet this symphony, surely, is worthy of high pains.

Mr. Hess, for his first performance here, was so ill-advised as to play Joachim's Hungarian concerto, a composition exceptionally dull and of inordinate length. So long is it, in fact, that other violinists, notably Mr. Winternitz, have been content with one movement from it. From his playing of a work of this calibre it is difficult to judge of Mr. Hess's musical characteristics. It is clear, however, that he is an artist of highly developed technique, with a strong tone and brilliancy of execution—a musician of intelligence and energy. His success with the audience was immediate and great. It will be interesting to hear Mr. Hess in more worthy music than the concerto by Joachim.

At the coming concert Mr. de Pachmann is to play. This will be the programme: Overture to "Oberon," Weber; Three Movements (orchestrated by W. Gericke), Bach; Concerto for pianoforte in F minor, No. 2, Chopin; Symphony in E major, op. 14 (first time), Joseph Suk. R. R. G.

[20]

Journal Monday

OCTOBER 24, 1904.

Violinist Of High Rank Is Professor Willy Hess

His First Appearance as a Soloist Crowned With Success Despite His Choice of the Joachim Concerto.

What a naive and simple thing is the fourth Beethoven symphony with which Mr. Gericke began the second concert of the Symphony Orchestra. How artless its prattle, how sweetly garrulous and poetically tender its romancing. Almost the weakest of the nine sisters, it still has the right to be called great if for its beauty alone. Not once after the rather solemn introduction does it strike under the most suave emotions, but such as it is we can afford to welcome it—not too often. The reading was in Mr. Gericke's gentlest style—one might almost say genteelest. A pretty performance, but not eminently Beethovenish.

Mr. Hess, the new concertmeister, who made an excellent impression so far as could be judged from his impersonal work in the first concert, lost no time in coming before his Boston public as a soloist. And he chose that ponderous, unimaginative, machine-made thing, the Joachim violin concerto "in the Hungarian manner." Appalling in length, generally dull and unattractive, it is bestrewn with difficulties that are scarcely worth while.

Yet Mr. Hess made it almost interesting, and thus triumphed emphatically. He has a refined, yet powerful tone, a cleancut mastery over technical matters, an earnest style that might, as a moment or two in the andante showed, become poetic if opportunity should present itself. He is not a virtuoso, in the showy and popular sense; he is a violin player of nigh rank, a man to whom art seems more than the plaudits of a crowd. Of these latter, however, he received full many, as well as a huge wreath, and he may feel perfectly that he has made a success. Of the accompanying work of the orchestra, it need only be said that it was occasionally more ragged than one would expect of such a body of men.

The scherzo of Paul Abraham Dukas, the French composer, whose works are very little known in this country, is a curious bit of program music, wierd, but not grotesque, distinctive in its approaches to melody, fascinating in its main theme and enormously clever in a technical way. It is frankly a musical picture; the sorcerer's apprentice, in the absence of his master, decides that he, too, can work magic. He knows just enough to command a broomstick to fetch water, but not enough to stop the performance. So he is half-drowned before his chief returns and breaks the aqueous spell. All this is told with jocular rhythm, odd uses of the woodwind, a wild whirl of brass and strings and some bits of color that, of course, might mean anything, but which, when one knows, are pretty well adapted to the illusion. The piece was played in masterly fashion. Here shows at its best the great technique of our orchestra.

The splendid "Tannhauser" overture, that made a glowing finale to the concert, once more proved how absolutely unimpaired by age is the genius of Wagner. Yesterday, today and tomorrow he is without a peer.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Twenty fourth season; second concert, Oct. 22, 1904. Professor Willy Hess, soloist.

THE PROGRAM:

Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60..... Beethoven
Concerto (in the Hungarian manner) for violin and orchestra, Op. 11..... Joachim
Scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," ..... Dukas
(After a ballad by Goethe—first time.)
Overture to "Tannhauser"...Wagner

Philadelphia

MR. WILLY HESS,
Soloist with Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN,
Soloist with Boston Symphony Orchestra.
(Photo Copyright by Aime Dupont)

The programs for the first two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music are as follows:

MONDAY EVENING, OCT. 31.
Beethoven....Symphony in B flat major, No. 4
Joachim.....Hungarian Concerto for violin
Mr. Willy Hess.
(First appearance in Philadelphia.)
Paul Dukas—Scherzo....."L'Apprenti Sorcier"
(First time.)
Wagner—Overture .....Tannhauser
WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOV. 2.
Weber—Overture ....."Oberon".
Bach—Three movements, orchestrated by W. Gericke
Chopin—Concerto for pianoforte in F minor, No. 2
Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann.
Joseph Suk—Symphony in E major, Op. 14.
(First time.)

The novelties are the symphony in E major by Josef Suk and the scherzo "L'Apprenti Sorcier," by Paul Dukas.

Josef Suk's first teacher was his father, an excellent musician. The son entered the Prague Conservatory in 1885, where he studied the violin under Bennewitz and composition under Dvorak, who later became his father-in-law. "A Dramatic Overture," written after study of two years, was highly praised, and a piano quartet brought from the government a stipend.

Paul Dukas was born at Paris October 1, 1865, and is now living in the same city. "L'Apprenti Sorcier," an orchestral scherzo, was performed for the first time at a concert of the Societe Nationale, Paris, May 18, 1897. The scherzo was produced at Chicago by the Chicago Orchestra, Mr. Thomas conductor, January 14, 1899. Paul Abraham Dukas studied at the Paris Conservatory. He was a pupil of Dubois in harmony and of Guiraud in composition. In 1888 he took the second prix de Rome.

* * *

The opening concert of the Boston Syphony Orchestra's twentieth season in Philadelphia will be given at the Academy of Music on the evening of Monday, October 31, the others of the first series following on Monday evenings, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13. The dates of the second or Wednesday evening series are November 2, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15. Although the musical enthusiast finds ample satisfaction in the performance of this superb orchestra itself, yet an unusually strong and attractive list of soloists will appear, to be announced shortly.

The programs for the first two concerts are as follows:—

MONDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 31.
Beethoven .....Symphony in B flat major, No. 4
Joachim .....Hungarian concerto for violin
Willy Hess.
(First appearance in Philadelphia).
Paul Dukas .....Scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier"
(First time).
Wagner .....Overture, "Tannhauser"
WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 2.
Weber .....Overture, "Oberon"
Bach .....
Three movements, orchestrated by W. Gericke
Chopin
Concerto for piano forte, in F minor, No. 2
Vladimir de Pachmann.
Joseph Suk .....Symphony in E major, Op. 14
(First time).

The novelties are the symphony in E major by Josef Suk and the scherzo "L'Apprenti Sorcier" by Paul Dukas.

* * *

Plain

Boston Symphony Programmes.

The programmes for the first two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music are as follows:

MONDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 31.
Symphony in B flat major, No. 4..Beethoven
Hungarian Concerto for violin.....Joachim
Mr. Willy Hess.
(First appearance in Philadelphia.)
Scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier"....Paul Dukas
(First time.)
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 2.
Overture, "Oberon".....Weber
Three movements, orchestrated by W. Gericke
Bach
Concerto for pianoforte in F minor, No. 2
Chopin
Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann.
Symphony in E major, op. 14.....Josef Suk
(First time.)

The novelties are the symphony in E major, by Josef Suk, and the scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier," by Paul Dukas.

Josef Suk is a Bohemian, a graduate twenty years ago of the Prague Conservatory, and has been long the second violinist of the famous Bohemian quartette, which has been a musical sensation in Europe for ten years past.

Paul Dukas is Parisian born, a Frenchman through and through. He is an indefatigable composer of orchestral music and writes critically into the bargain for the public press. At the French capital he is ranked among the greatest of living composers. "L'Apprenti Sorcier" was composed seven years ago. Theodore Thomas performed it in Chicago two years later.

The first orchestral concert of the season will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music on Monday evening, October 31. Mr. Gericke's programme for this occasion contains Beethoven's fourth symphony, in B flat major; Joachim's Hungarian concerto for violin, in which Willy Hess, the new concertmaster of the orchestra, will make his first appearance here; a scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier," by Paul Dukas, one of the young French composers, and the "Tannhaeuser" overture.

The programme for the concert of the second series, on the Wednesday evening following, is rather more important. It opens with Weber's lovely "Oberon" overture, followed by a suite from Bach, which Mr. Gericke has orchestrated. De Pachmann will play the Chopin piano concerto in F minor, and the programme closes with the symphony in E major by Josef Suk, the Bohemian violinist, a beautiful composition, which excited great interest when played by the Philadelphia Orchestra two seasons ago, and which it will be a pleasure to hear again.

* * *

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

The opening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on October 31 and November 2 will be rich in novelty. On the former occasion Willy Hess, the new concert-meister, will make his local debut in Joachim's Hungarian Concerto, while an orchestral scherzo by Paul Dukas, the French composer, entitled "L'Apprenti Sorcier," will be given its first hearing in this city. Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and the "Tannhauser" overture will also be played.

At the initial concert of the second series on Wednesday, November 2, Vladimir De Pachmann, the pianist, rated as without rival among interpreters of Chopin, will play that composer's F minor Concerto; while Joseph Suk's Symphony in E major will be the leading orchestral novelty. Weber's "Oberon" overture, and the movements from Bach, orchestrated by Conductor Gericke, will open the program.

Philadelphia Inquirer
Sunday, Oct. 30

This may fairly be described as the opening week of the musical season, as it will re-introduce each of the two symphony orchestras which are to be heard in this city during the impending winter. Of these the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its appearance first. It will begin its twentieth season at the Academy of Music to-morrow evening, when it will be heard in a program of exceptional interest and importance.

The symphony upon this occasion will be that beautiful work of Beethoven in B flat major, which was written as an expression of the composer's happiness over his marriage engagement, and which is full to overflowing with sweetness and light. This is the fourth, which comes between the epic elevation of the "Eroica" and the tragic grandeur of the C minor as a gleam of sunshine between two storms. Its production will be all the more welcome and enjoyable because the fourth, for some reason, is less frequently presented than most others in the great series to which it belongs. The other orchestral numbers on the program are a scherzo by the brilliant young French composer, Paul Kukas, entitled "L'Apprenti Sorcier," which has not yet been played in this city, and which is said to be an extremely significant and original piece of work, and the "Tannhaeuser" overture.

The assisting artist at this Monday evening concert will be Mr. Willy Hess, who is to be heard in the Hungarian Concerto of Joseph Joachim. Mr. Hess, who is the new concert master of the orchestra (Mr. E. Ferdinand Arbos having accepted a position in Madrid), is a violinist of distinguished ability and a musician of the very highest reputation. He made his debut in Boston a few days ago and there was no dissenting voice in the chorus of enthusiastic eulogy which his playing elicited. All the critics—and Boston is nothing if not critical—agreed in acclaiming him an artist of the first class. It is not worth while repeating the terms of their praise, seeing that we shall so soon have an opportunity of judging Mr. Hess for ourselves.

Not less valuable and attractive is the program announced for the performance on Wednesday evening. The symphony upon this occasion will be that in E major, Op. 14, by Joseph Suk, a suave, melodious and graveful composition, which was successfully produced at one of the concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra and which then produced an extremely favorable impression. It is sure to be given to perfection under Mr. Gericke's sympathetic and intelligent direction. The orchestra will also be heard in the charming "Oberon" overture of Weber; and in an arrangement by Mr. Gericke of some music by Bach. Vladimir de Pachmann is to be the soloist and is to play Chopin's lovely concerto for the pianoforte in F minor, No. 2. Concert-goers do not need to be told of De Pachmann's merits. They know that he ranks among the greatest of living pianists and that he is especially great, many say unsurpassably great, in the music of Chopin. His in-

Sunday Post
Oct. 30

DE PACHMANN'S OVATION AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

The principal feature of the third Symphony concert last evening was the reappearance, after several years' absence, of the pianist, Vladimir de Pachmann. The programme included these numbers:

Overture, "Oberon".....Weber
Three movements (arranged by Gericke)....Bach
Concerto for pianoforte, No. 2.....Chopin
Symphony in E major, op. 14.....Joseph Suk

Mr. de Pachmann has not visited Boston for several seasons, and it is over 13 years since he appeared at a Symphony concert.

The work is not difficult technically, but is one where the highest artistic sense is demanded, and without this the pianist would be unequal to such a work, however eminent he might be in the works of other writers. Mr. de Pachmann satisfies the listener as no one else can, and his performance will be remembered for many a day. He received an immense ovation and numerous recalls, which he fully deserved.

The various orchestral numbers were finely played. The symphony of Joseph Suk is new to this city. Judged by a single hearing, it is a work of strength and with many pages of great beauty. The slow movement and the scherzo impressed one the best, but the whole work deserves another hearing in the near future, for it is a clever symphony by the son-in-law of the late Anton Dvorak. There will be no rehearsal and concert this coming week.

SOCIETY APPLAUDS DE PACHMANN

There was a splendid audience at the Symphony rehearsal yesterday afternoon, and society was out in fullest force for one of the best programmes of the season. Among those in attendance were: Mrs. William P. Fay, in navy blue, and a black and white toque; Mrs. Curtis Guild, in brown; Miss Mollie Johnson, attired in black, with a red turban; Mrs. Oliver Ames, Jr., wearing black velvet, with chinchillas, and a white and black toque; Miss Priscilla Stackpole, in navy blue, with a black hat; Miss Mollie Sargent, in black, with gardenia corsage, and black and white picture hat; Miss Susie Dabney, in brown, with large black hat; Miss Ethel Stone, just home from Europe, in dark green cloth, with violet corsage, and hat to match; Miss Juliet Higginson, wearing navy blue broadcloth and a green turban; Mrs. James W. Kenney, in a beautifully fitting gown of black; Miss May Kenney, in brown; also Miss Barbara Higginson, Mrs. Neal Rantoul, with her little daughter; Miss Marion Lawrence, Miss Marion Lewis, Miss Dorothy Quincy, Miss Estelle Kimball, Miss Holden, Mrs. Stephen Williams, Mrs. James Jackson, Mrs. Matthew Luce, Mrs. Philip Dalton, Mrs. William F. Humphrey, Mrs. Boylston Beal, Miss Catherine Foote, Mrs. C. H. Greenleaf, Miss Mary Russell, Miss Alice Stackpole, Miss Rosamond Gibson, Miss Marian Ladd, Miss Mollie Coolidge and Mrs. Frederick P. Carpenter.

[21]

Sunday Herald Oct. 30

THIRD SYMPHONY CONCERT IS HELD

Reappearance of Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann Hailed by Boston Music Lovers—Triumph He Achieved Is Overwhelming.

The programme of the third Symphony concert, given last night, under Mr. Gericke's leadership, was as follows:

Overture to "Oberon".....Weber
Three movements.....Bach-Gericke
Concerto in F minor No. 2.....Chopin
Symphony in E major.....Suk
(First time.)

Mr. de Pachmann played last night at a symphony concert in Boston for the first time since 1891. His last visit here as a giver of recitals was in 1900. During the last four years his triumphs in foreign cities have been many and distinguished. Last night his triumph was overwhelming.

There is no pianist like him. There is no pianist who has such an exquisite, marvellous touch, and after all that may be said about intellectuality, nobility of conception, astounding technic, etc., the first and chief distinguishing characteristic of the truly great pianist is touch. There is no touch like that of this interpreter of Chopin; the terms "velvet," "pearl," "liquid"—there are here inexpressive. Tones played by de Pachmann are music without regard to any relation to the phrase. They haunt by their beauty. This pianist also excels in spontaneity and continuity of song. A phrase of Chopin, to borrow a fine thought of Hazlett inspired by a Mozartian melody, when it is invoked by de Pachmann, comes from the air and then returns. The fingers work the spell; but when the phrase is heard, the effect is not as one produced by mortal hands.

The melancholy song—one of eternal passion, eternal pain—floats and is sustained; it takes its flight, and is lost; yet, through the mysterious artistry of the pianist, the hearer longs for its return, and in its return the song is still more beautiful in its expression of longing and sadness than before. Incomparable touch, continuity of heart-melting song—and rhythm, which, however capricious it may seem at times, is as the rhythm of Nature—these qualities make the performance of de Pachmann pre-eminent.

But this pianist of extraordinary gifts and acquirements will soon give a series of recitals here, and further analysis or eulogy—the terms in this instance are convertible—must be deferred for the present. It is enough to say that the performance was memorable, and that the enthusiasm of the audience was at its height.

Josef Suk's symphony was played here for the first time, and it was played with extreme brilliance. The composer was a pupil of Dvorak, and he married a daughter of his teacher. It is not, therefore, surprising to find here and there the spirit of the late composer in this symphony; and, as Dvorak worshipped Schubert, there are also suggestions of that lyric writer, especially in the first movement, which is strongly thought and euphoniously expressed. If the spirit of Dvorak be in this music, it is the spirit of Dvorak, careful and prudent, rather than reckless and throwing about dance-phrases and folk-tunes as a madman scattering firebrands.

The second movement, a series of variations, is the least interesting and the most labored. When a modern symphonist comes to his variations we tremble for him, as Cobbett trembled for the user of adjectives. Such in the slow movement is scholastic, not imaginative; while in the first and third movements he displays fancy, at least, if not the higher quality. The symphony is not one to be dismissed carelessly. It has strong pages; there is often the expression of genuine individuality.

When Mr. Gericke's orchestral version of movements from chamber music by Bach was first played here, some objected to the liberty taken with the old master. We doubt whether this objection would be made seriously today. It is now not blasphemous to say that Bach wrote an enormous amount of music, both vocal and instrumental; that a good deal of it is perfunctory, built after a fixed pattern, dull; that much of the music composed for solo voices is more effective when played by instruments, and that certain instrumental airs might well be sung. All but hardened fetishists will applaud Mr. Gericke's orchestration, which is ingenious, mindful of the ancient period, effective.

The performance of the orchestra throughout was of a very high order of excellence.

The programme of the concert of Nov. 12 will be as follows: Haydn's symphony in E-flat major, No. 1; Vieuxtemps' concerto for violin, No. 4, in D minor (Mr. Hakon Schmedes violinist); introduction to act 1 of "Guntram," R. Strauss; Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice."

Sunday Globe Oct. 30

MUSICAL.

De Pachman Soloist at Symphony Concert.

Many Interesting Recitals Will Be Given This Week.

Notes and Personal Gossip About Musicians.

The soloist at the third rehearsal and concert by the Symphony orchestra was the celebrated pianist Vladimir de Pachmann, who played the second piano concerto by Chopin. The other numbers were three selections from chamber music by Bach, orchestrated by Mr Gericke; Weber's overture to his "Oberon" and Josef Suk's E major symphony. De Pachmann's fame as an interpreter of Chopin's works rests upon such artistic grounds that to many people there is no pianist his peer in this particular field, and in this music he is at his best. To hear him play Chopin is to hear Chopin played probably more satisfactorily on the whole than by anyone else, especially, when, as was the case in the second concerto, works in the more delicate and lighter mood are performed. At the concerts there were but few of Mr de Pachmann's peculiar mannerisms and affectations shown, and as the eminent artist appeared to be in exceedingly good humor there was nothing to mar the effect of his superb playing.

As the concerto gives but little opportunity for any exhibition of strong emotional power being mainly written in a gentle and delicate vein, it was for many years very prominent in the repertory of women pianists; but it is in this style of composition that de Pachmann is specially fascinating, and his playing was as wonderfully crisp and impeccable in accuracy and celerity in execution as of yore, and showed no loss in finish of phrasing, technique, sweetness, exquisite tonal coloring and velvet-like daintiness in fingering. His orchestral support was very fine, especially in the second movement, in which the muted strings furnished a beautifully shaded accompaniment. The audience was very cordial in its reception of the artist.

The Bach excerpts were taken from sonatas for clavier and flute, flute and violin and flute; andante, Siciliano and rondeau. In his orchestration Mr Gericke has preserved admirably the characteristics of Bach. The first is rather precise in form, the second is a flowing melody with muted strings, accentuated strongly at times, and the third is a series of short dancing refrains, some, of which have several repetitions. They are pleasing bits of compositions, and the orchestra gave them with good effect.

The Suk symphony changes in the first movement from pastoral to an entirely different tone picture at the end. The second part is composed of some pretty idyllic material, with delicate song phrases given to the clarinet, and later to other wind instruments; the third movement is very gay and blithesome, and the final part is puzzling in its frequent changes in rhythm, modulations and tonal vigor.

The symphony was generally satisfactory as far as the composer was concerned, excepting, possibly, in the final movement, which does not appear to be fully worked out. The wind instruments deserve credit for their harmonious work in the themes allotted them in the first part; the clarinet and oboes did well their parts in the second movement, so did the cellos, and the forte passages by the full orchestra were smoothly played. The third movement was delightfully interpreted, joyous and vivacious throughout, with a capital scherzo. In the last part the orchestra handled the material scored skilfully enough, but the matter seemed to be lacking in coherency and was rather uninteresting. The Weber overture was played well, of course.

The soloist at the concerts Nov 11 and 12 will be Mr Hakon Schmedes, who will play the Vieuxtemps D minor violin concerto. Haydn's first symphony, introduction to act 1 of "Guntram," by Richard Strauss, and Tschaikowsky's "Capriccio Italien" will complete the program.

Mr Gustav Strube of the Symphony orchestra and director of the promenade and city concerts, is to open a school for instruction in harmony and conducting at an early day. He may be addressed at Symphony hall.

Advertiser Monday, Oct 31

MUSICAL MATTERS

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Programme.
Weber, Overture to "Oberon."
Bach, Three movements.
Orchestrated by W. Gericke.
Chopin, Concerto for pianoforte in F minor, No. 2.
Mr. Vladimer de Pachmann.
Joseph Suk, Symphony in E major, op. 14 (First time).

It was in some degree a conservative concert, given entirely by an orchestra that did not exceed the classical proportions. Suk's symphony, to be sure, added trombones, piccolo and tuba, but there were none of the extra instruments with which modern colorists expand their scores. It was conservative in its forms and melodies too, until Mr. Suk became the "enfant terrible" of this happy family, and began alternately crashing and whispering in a rather sensational manner. But even he did not depart from the accepted sonata form, so that this enjoyable programme may go on record as being almost free from puzzling vagaries and ultra-modern innovations.

The overture was most brilliantly played, and we may speak a word of commendation for the clarinette work, which is fairly prominent in this composition. Weber and Mendelssohn were the real discoverers of what the clarinette could do, although Mozart introduced it first into the symphonic orchestra.

The Bach movements were calm and reposeful counterpoint scored in just the right spirit by Mr. Gericke. The first movement was the gem of the set, and the Siciliano the least important and attractive. Such music is never fully appreciated by a large audience, it is for the select few, the "cognoscenti," yet it was heartily applauded and the earnest orchestrator and conductor recalled with much enthusiasm at its end. Mr. Gericke has certainly caught the spirit of the old numbers.

The chief point of the concert was the appearance of De Pachmann. The concerto that he played is one that we do not often hear, and it cannot be given at its best in a very large hall. But in spite of handicaps the great artist made an entire success. He is the perfect master of the "rubato," of that elastic tempo which is the life and soul of Chopin, and the orchestra seconded this freedom of movement splendidly. It meant more than a perfunctory compliment when the pianist shook hands with the conductor at the end of the work, for such an ensemble was almost miraculous when the unfettered vein of the interpretation is considered.

De Pachmann was never mawkish or weakly sentimental, not even in the slow movement, where there is some danger of sugar-coating the love sentiments which Chopin here poured out to Constantia Gladkowska. The finale was brilliant and exciting. Occasionally there was more of loudness than one is accustomed to associate with this flimsily scored work. It may be remembered that Chopin was anything but a master of the orchestra, and although the score has been tinkered at, and improved, by Tausig, Klindworth and Burmeister, the composition still remains rather a piano solo with occasional orchestral support than a true concerto, which should be first of all symphonic.

De Pachmann played from notes, a proceeding so unusual that it ought to be recorded. It is a plan which has much to commend it. Why should the pianist be forced to display his memory as well as his technique in such a performance? Placing the music on the rack is much better than placing the musician there. Many an artist is made unnecessarily nervous by the preconceived idea that he must discard reference to the printed music in his performance.

De Pachmann was recalled again and again with great and thoroughly deserved enthusiasm. It was a memorable performance.

Suk's new symphony was largely in the accepted form, yet it had its hazardous attempts at originality. The pupil and son-in-law of Dvorak once in a while imitates his leader, as in the melancholy theme of the adagio, which suggests the English horn of the American Symphony. But, on the whole, the new composer is not an imitator. He has a tendency to military grandeur and to very sharp contrasts. He serves up tender melodies alternated with fierce martial progressions. Sometimes there is great power displayed. The very free Scherzo, for example, is grotesque rather than playful, and is so intense that it might have been danced by "Sansculottes" around the guillotine. Nor are phrases of terror wanting; terror as abject as might exist in a Russian war fleet on meeting a fishing vessel.

Without enjoying the entire symphony, the reviewer can pay tribute to its earnestness and to its greater moments. Its lack of coherent development is its chief fault, but Suk is a young composer who may go very far, and his efforts to combine modern passion with classic form deserve recognition and commendation.

Louis C. Elson.

Transcript Monday, Oct. 31

MUSIC AND DRAMA

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

The third Symphony concert of the season was made notable by the reappearance in Boston of that famous pianist Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann. This was the programme of the concert:

Weber: Overture to "Oberon."
Bach: Three Movements, orchestrated by W. Gericke.
Chopin: Concerto for Pianoforte in F minor, No. 2, Op. 21.
Joseph Suk: Symphony in E major, Op. 14. (First time.)

Despite the fact that on the programme was a symphony by a composer of no mean talent, still unheard here, the main feature of the concert was the wonderful playing of Mr. de Pachmann. The distinguished artist, glorying in his amazing powers, dared to risk his reputation on the F minor concerto of Chopin, a work that, never of the strongest, has now grown strangely old-fashioned; indeed, it sounds quite roccoco, and only perfect playing can make it tolerable. But Mr. de Pachmann might with impunity, if he so chose, venture before an audience armed only with scales, trills, arpeggios and odd snatches of song, for tone of such entrancing beauty as his never is heard from others. It glows. It sparkles with color, like snow, now warm, as when the noon sun shines brightly, now cool, again cold, sometimes melting. Mr. de Pachmann's song is like that of a Sembrich—and when perfection has been called into comparison, no more need be said. Rhythm, too, must not be forgotten in recalling the remarkable qualities of Mr. de Pachmann. In short, the artist was at his best, in very different case from his last visit here, when his work seemed a curious mixture of the beautiful and the meretricious. At the end of the concerto he received an ovation.

The symphony, even as the concert's novelty, cannot be discussed before mention has been made of the extremely brilliant performance of the "Oberon" overture. Never before last Saturday has the supernatural character of the overture's opening pages been brought out so sympathetically, never has the quick movement rushed along with such fire and fury. This brilliancy of performance lasted all the evening, right through the symphony, as well as the Bach pieces so pleasantly orchestrated by Mr. Gericke. The playing was all a triumph. If only Mozart, Haydn and early Beethoven symphonies could always be played with the warmth, spirit and carefulness that went into Saturday's performance of the Weber overture! It was an event to be remembered.

The symphony, coming late in the evening, when nearly enough music had been heard for a single sitting, proved somewhat tiresome. The work is very melodious, logically developed and written with studied avoidance of the bizarre. For this much be all thanks! In the year 1904, however, one cannot help feeling doubtful as to the original qualities of a composer who sets out to write a four-movement symphony (Suk's symphony, to be sure, was made several years ago). The third movement seems best, for in it are strains of Bohemia, vital and animated, and the opening allegro is not without the same character. Least interesting are the very long adagio, and the finale, both examples of conscientious effort, straightforward music that one must respect, even when their monotony becomes wearisome. However, Suk is a composer whose productions must be heard, that we may all judge for ourselves, and the symphony's performance was amazingly brilliant. Few concerts, all in all, are so satisfactory as was this third symphony concert of the year. Everybody must have been pleased, classicists and those interested in the new alike.

This week there will be no concert. On Saturday, the 12th, Mr. Hakon Schmedes is to appear as soloist, the programme of the evening being as follows: Haydn, Symphony No. 1, in E-flat major; Vieuxtemps, concerto for violin, No. 4, in D major; Richard Strauss, introduction to Act I. of "Guntram"; Tchaikovsky, Capriccio Italien, op. 45.

R. R. G.

[22]

BOSTON HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 126.
THURSDAY, NOV. 3, 1904.

Boston American Mon, Oct 31.

UNION MUST LET ORCHESTRA ALONE

Maj. Higginson Says Interference with His Plans Will Cause Symphony Organization to Perish and He Will Tell Reasons.

Regarding the statements, emanating from various sources, that the welfare of the Boston Symphony orchestra is threatened, through the demands of the Musicians' Federated Union, Maj. Henry L. Higginson said, yesterday, to a Herald representative: "Musicians' unions are good, if they are for proper motives; and proper motives seem to me charity, brotherhood, and social purposes. When, however, they adopt the 'closed door,' I am absolutely opposed to them. Whether or not the members of the Boston Symphony orchestra belong to the union is not for me to decide, providing that they live up to their bargain with me, and to the spirit of the orchestra.

"The orchestra was intended for the enjoyment and education of the public and has been carried on by the employment of much pains and work, until it has become a very good band. By the bylaws of the union, the union men are not allowed to play with non-union men. I object to any interference with the playing of the members of the orchestra, either for the symphony concerts or for any outside work. I want the men to earn what they can, both from me and from outsiders.

"Our men who joined the union were told that they could do our work, without regard to the bylaws of the union, but the representative of the union said to me that the point was waived until explained to me. The explanation consisted simply in telling me the fact. Nobody has thought of disintegration unless the union causes it. There is no discontent among the members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and I don't know how many belong to the union, if any. The members now know all the facts and understand them fully.

"If allowed to carry out this work, in the original manner and spirit, I shall go on, and I expect that my death will not limit the life of the orchestra. If, however, there is an interference in my plans, which prevents unity and harmony in the orchestra, or among its members, the organization will perish, and I shall state publicly how the organization was broken up, and by whom. It has been a great joy to forward this work, and I hope that it has been worth while. It is clear, however, that I must have a free hand. I trust that the work of the orchestra may continue."

THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson's statement concerning the relations of the Boston Symphony orchestra to the Musicians' Federated Union shows how easy it might be to push the "closed shop" or "closed door" theory of service to a point which would cause serious public loss. The Boston Symphony orchestra was not established as a money-making enterprise, and if Maj. Higginson, contrary to his original intentions, has found a balance to the good in the annual account of this enterprise, it has been with good reason assumed that this was to be made a part of a fund out of which the orchestra was to be maintained through an indefinite future. In order to develop this idea along the lines originally laid down and thus far adhered to, of providing the citizens of eastern Massachusetts with the finest orchestral music at cost and without profit, it is necessary that those in control should select their musicians on the score of merit and without regard to such artificial restraints as any self-constituted outside body might see fit in its own interest to endeavor to impose. There is no question about the generous payment given to those who are members of this orchestra, for it is doubtful if any musicians receive as a body as large remuneration. It is only a question of whether as non-union men other musicians shall be prohibited from having professional relations with them. Maj. Higginson plainly announces that if these barriers are to be thrown in the way of his public-spirited enterprise, it must be brought to an end this coming as the result of what we think almost every one will concede to be entirely unwarrantable interference

MUST LEAVE THE UNION OR THE SYMPHONY

Musicians Soon to Be Given Choice by Union; Orchestra Is Threatened.

HIGGINSON IS DISPLEASED

High officials of the Musicians' Protective Union say that members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who are not now members of the union, must join it at once or the union members will leave the orchestra. There are members of the orchestra who say they will not join a labor union, and others, who are union men, say they will not leave the musical organization in which membership gives them prestige, and the organization of the famous orchestra is threatened.

Major F. L. Higginson, who has been the mainstay and financial backer of the organization, says he is not interested in whether the players are trades unionists or not, and that the disagreement will not cause his interference unless too much trouble is stirred up. In that event the inference from his remarks is that he would withdraw his support, and without Major Higginson to make up the deficits in the orchestra's treasury it is feared that the organization would go to pieces.

Trouble Long Brewing.

This trouble between union officials and the orchestra as a body has been brewing for a long time. There have been members who would not become union members, yet the unionists in the band have hesitated about withdrawing, because of the manifest advantage that it is to a man to be recognized as competent enough to play in the Symphony.

International President Weber of the Musicians' Protective Union has been in Boston and interviewed Major Higginson, and the result, which neither side will give out for publication, is, in fact, unsatisfactory in an extreme degree.

Major Higginson said to-day, through his private secretary, to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter:

"I will not withdraw my support of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

But he said this with the significant proviso:

"Unless trouble is stirred up so that the matter becomes a nuisance to me."

Higginson Displeased.

Beyond this no statement can be obtained from Major Higginson. Unofficially, however, it was ascertained that Major Higginson is not overpleased with the present condition of the agitation by union musicians in the orchestra, and has approached more than half of the seventy odd members of the orchestra who are also members of the union. Pressure has been brought to bear upon them to the end that they resign their membership in the union or else relinquish their position in the orchestra.

The Boston Musical Protective Union will take the matter up at an early meeting and there is no question as to the result. One member of the union, an official high in the councils of the organization, said to-day to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter:

"It is not right that we should discriminate in favor of the members of the Symphony orchestra as against the musician who has not so good an engagement. Major Higginson has laid down certain conditions that are far from satisfactory. You tell me that Major Higginson declares that he does not care whether a man is a member of the union or not. Why did he not tell Mr. Weber that? You may say that the matter is reaching a serious crisis, and it is far from impossible that the orchestra will be in such trouble that it may disband.

"Major Higginson is anxious that we should start a fight against him, but we have nothing to do with that. We are not fighting Major Higginson at all. He is looking after his own business, and we do not wish to meddle in it. But the members of our organization have got either to live up to the conditions of their membership or leave the organization."

The orchestra is now absent from the city, and International President Weber left soon after his interview with Major Higginson. The question may not be taken up finally until after the return of the orchestra, but officials of the union anticipate an exciting meeting of thie organization Thursday afternoon.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA CRISIS.

Unionism Threatens Disruption of Famous Musical Organization.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Nov. 1.—There is apparently a crisis in the affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the celebrated organization of musicians which has been chiefly supported by the public spirit of Major Henry L. Higginson.

The Musicians' Protective Union is at the bottom of the trouble, the exact nature of which is as yet kept from the public. It is said that a majority of the players have become members of the union, and threaten to quit unless the others follow them. It is even said that the disintegration of the orchestra is threatened.

Major Higginson is understood to be strongly opposed to unionism and to have made some very emphatic remarks which the union officials resent.

One of two things seems to be probable, either the disbanding of the orchestra by the desertion of its union members or the refusal of Major Higginson to longer continue his financial support.

When Wilhelm Gericke raises his baton at to-morrow evening's Boston Symphony concert in the Academy the local musical season of 1904-5 may be regarded as formally opened. Its inauguration promises to be brilliant. The current week will bring us four symphony concerts—two by our own orchestra and two by the Boston players—and will introduce a new widely-heralded violin virtuoso, besides witnessing the return of two piano soloists of the first rank. Vladimir de Pachmann, acknowledged as the most sympathetic interpreter of Chopin in the world of music, will appear at the Wednesday Boston Symphony concert, while Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, perhaps the leading American pianist and one of the most brilliant exponents of the methods of Theodor Leschetizky now before the public, will play both at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Fittingly enough, Beethoven will figure on the programs of both the local and New England orchestras. Mr. Scheel's men will interpret the famous "Eroica," or No. 3, Symphony, while the symphony in B flat, No. 4, will constitute the chief orchestral number of Mr. Gericke's opening concert. Here are the two programs of the Boston players in full:

MONDAY EVENING.

Symphony in B flat, No. 4.....Beethoven
Hungarian Concerto for violin .....Joachim
Scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice.....Dukas
Overture to "Tannhaeuser" ..... Wagner

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Overture "Oberon" ..... Weber
Concerto in F minor, No. 2..... Chopin
Three sonata Movements (scored by Mr. Gericke) Bach
Symphony in E major op. 14 .....Suk

It will be seen that these programs are rich in promise. On Monday evening the Beethoven symphony is assured of a scholarly interpretation, and the

Sunday, Oct 30

THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD,

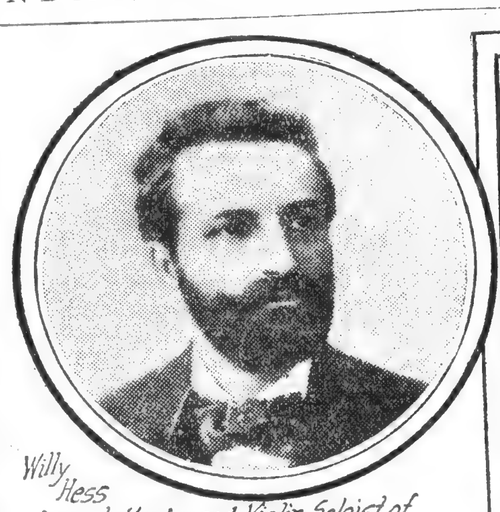
EEK'S SYMPHONY SOLOISTS.

Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler.

Willy Hess

hmann, pianist, will play with the Boston Symphony on Monday and Wednesday, will appear at the Philadelphia Orchestra's opening concerts on Friday after-

UNDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1904. Philadelphia North American 13



Willy Hess
Concert Master and Violin Soloist of Boston Symphony Orchestra

TRIO OF STARS IN THE DOMAIN OF MUSIC

John Mahnken,
General Manager of Phila Orchestra.

Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler
Solo Pianiste with
Philadelphia Orchestra

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OPENS CONCERT SEASON

Under Direction of Herr Gericke, Well-Known Boston Organization Appears To-Morrow Night at Academy of Music

TO-MORROW evening the symphony concert season will open at the Academy of Music—the first appearance for the season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Herr Gericke, as heretofore.

The programme includes Beethoven's fourth symphony in B flat major and the "Tannhaeuser" overture. An orchestral novelty will be presented in Paul Dukas' scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," composed in 1897, and first performed in the United States by Thomas' Chicago Orchestra in 1899.

The new concert master, Willy Hess, is to be the soloist, playing Joachim's difficult Hungarian concerto for violin.

The Wednesday concert will introduce De Pachmann as soloist, in Chopin's F minor concerto. On this occasion will be performed, for the first time here, Josef Suk's symphony in E major, opus 14. This composer is the most poetic of living Bohemian musicians. The other concert numbers are the "Oberlin" overture and three Bach movements, orchestrated by Mr. Gericke.

Philadelphia Orchestra Concerts.

Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, past grand mistress and supreme poetess of the piano, is to be the soloist at the opening concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra's forthcoming season, opening with next Friday afternoon's rehearsal, followed by the usual Saturday evening concert.

The programme will be identical for both entertainments—the Goldmark overture, "Spring," which is perennially popular; Beethoven's superb "Eroica" symphony, which Conductor Scheel interprets with rare spirit and skill; Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," which was last heard here under the composer's baton, and the lovely, spirituelle Henselt concerto for pianoforte.

The long-scattered instrumental stars of Mr. Scheel's orchestra have all answered the director's call, and are here ready for rehearsals—for concerts, indeed, so far as classic programmes are concerned. It is an assemblage of virtuosi, from the view-point of mere technical proficiency. The mere fact that a composition so bristling with musical difficulties as "Till Eulenspiegel" is put on the first programme is in itself a denotement of assured excellence.

Much of the work of the Philadelphia Orchestra this season will be strictly for the home market. Last year it made wearisome and profitless tours—a plan now permanently abandoned. Manager Mahnken will take the band to a few large cities, where guarantees are provided; but the bulk of its performances will be given here in Philadelphia.

Boston Orchestra's Concert Master.

Willy Hess, the new concert master and solo violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, comes from London, where he is well known through his connection with the Halle Orchestra and the Royal Academy of Music, where he recently resigned his position as professor.

Born in Mannheim in 1859, his family left for America in 1865, and resided here for seven years, during which time young Hess pursued his studies. In 1872 his father left America for Holland, where his young son began his public appearances. On one occasion the boy, then 13, distinguished himself by leading the celebrated Harfen Quartette.

At the end of twelve months another move was made, this time to Germany, where Heidelberg was chosen as a place of residence. The young violinist toured extensively through Germany, Holland, Belgium and France. In Paris he was fortunate enough to attract the notice of Vieuxtemps, who not only interested himself in the lad, but conducted the orchestra for him at his first Philharmonic concert there.

In 1876 it was decided that he should go to Berlin for two years to profit by instruction from Joachim, and at the end of this time he received the appointment of leader of the Opera and Museum's orchestra at Frankfurt-on-Main. Eight years were passed in this city, where, in addition to his orchestral duties and teaching, Mr. Hess also found time to found a quartette and a trio with Kwast and Hugo Becker.

In 1886 he accepted a post at the Conservatory in Rotterdam as professor and leader of the orchestra, and also succeeded to the well-known string quartette formerly led by Professor Wirth. After two years Sir Charles Halle secured his services for the Halle Orchestra in Manchester in the place of Ludwig Straus, an appointment which kept him in England for seven years. In addition to his work in Manchester he also led for the Philharmonic Society in Liverpool, and traveled a great deal, playing at various concerts.

In 1895 Mr. Hess again returned to the fatherland, this time to the conservatory at Cologne, where he stayed till his recent appointment to the Royal Academy of Music. Not the least interesting part of his work in Cologne was the leadership of the famous Gurzenich Quartette and concerts.

In England Mr. Hess' musicianly qualities were much appreciated by the royal family. He played many times at Clarence House for the late Duke of Edinburgh, who was himself a notable violinist. After playing one night at a Royal Amateur Orchestral Society's concert the present King (then Prince of Wales) personally congratulated him, and decorated the artist with the honorary badge of membership. On one occasion he was summoned to Osborne by the late Queen while leading at the Chester festival.

The Grand Duke of Luxembourg conferred on Mr. Hess the Order of the Eichenkranz von Adolph, and from the German Emperor he received the title of Konigliche Preussische Professor, on the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Cologne Conservatory, where, on the death of Dr. Wullner, he filled the place of director till the appointment of Fritz Steinbach.

Many interesting tours were made with the Max Paur and the Grunfeld trio, in which Mr. Hess replaced the well-known virtuoso, Florian Zajic. The violinist and Max Paur also utilized one summer holiday in organizing a concert tour in Norway, during which they traveled as far north as Tromsoe, city of the "midnight sun."

As a conductor Mr. Hess is experienced having acted in that capacity as deputy for Halle, for Gernsheim in Holland, and for three summers wielding the baton over the Gurznich Orchestra. He is the fortunate possessor of a magnificent Guadagnini violin, which he acquired some years ago.

Musical Notes.

A new string quartette, recently organized to give chamber music in Philadelphia, comprises Frederick Hahn, first violin; H. Van der Beemt, second violin; John Grolle, viola, and Hendrick Hahnmann, cello. The latter three are well-known Philadelphia orchestra musicians. Mr. Hahn was formerly with the Boston Orchestra. The first public concert of the quartette will be given at Griffith Hall at an early date.

[23]

BOSTON HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 126.
THURSDAY, NOV. 3, 1904.

Boston American
Mon, Oct 31.

UNION MUST LET ORCHESTRA ALONE

Maj. Higginson Says Interference with His Plans Will Cause Symphony Organization to Perish and He Will Tell Reasons.

Regarding the statements, emanating from various sources, that the welfare of the Boston Symphony orchestra is threatened, through the demands of the Musicians' Federated Union, Maj. Henry L. Higginson said, yesterday, to a Herald representative: "Musicians' unions are good, if they are for proper motives; and proper motives seem to me charity, brotherhood, and social purposes. When, however, they adopt the 'closed door,' I am absolutely opposed to them. Whether or not the members of the Boston Symphony orchestra belong to the union is not for me to decide, providing that they live up to their bargain with me, and to the spirit of the orchestra.

"The orchestra was intended for the enjoyment and education of the public and has been carried on by the employment of much pains and work, until it has become a very good band. By the bylaws of the union, the union men are not allowed to play with non-union men. I object to any interference with the playing of the members of the orchestra, either for the symphony concerts or for any outside work. I want the men to earn what they can, both from me and from outsiders.

"Our men who joined the union were told that they could do our work, without regard to the bylaws of the union, but the representative of the union said to me that the point was waived until explained to me. The explanation consisted simply in telling me the fact. Nobody has thought of disintegration unless the union causes it. There is no discontent among the members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and I don't know how many belong to the union, if any. The members now know all the facts and understand them fully.

"If allowed to carry out this work, in the original manner and spirit, I shall go on, and I expect that my death will not limit the life of the orchestra. If, however, there is an interferenee in my plans, which prevents unity and harmony in the orchestra, or among its members, the organization will perish, and I shall state publicly how the organization was broken up, and by whom. It has been a great joy to forward this work, and I hope that it has been worth while. It is clear, however, that I must have a free hand. I trust that the work of the orchestra may continue."

THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson's statement concerning the relations of the Boston Symphony orchestra to the Musicians' Federated Union shows how easy it might be to push the "closed shop" or "closed door" theory of service to a point which would cause serious public loss. The Boston Symphony orchestra was not established as a money-making enterprise, and if Maj. Higginson, contrary to his original intentions, has found a balance to the good in the annual account of this enterprise, it has been with good reason assumed that this was to be made a part of a fund out of which the orchestra was to be maintained through an indefinite future. In order to develop this idea along the lines originally laid down and thus far adhered to, of providing the citizens of eastern Massachusetts with the finest orchestral music at cost and without profit, it is necessary that those in control should select their musicians on the score of merit and without regard to such artificial restraints as any self-constituted outside body might see fit in its own interest to endeavor to impose. There is no question about the generous payment given to those who are members of this orchestra, for it is doubtful if any musicians receive as a body as large remuneration. It is only a question of whether as non-union men other musicians shall be prohibited from having professional relations with them. Maj. Higginson plainly announces that if these barriers are to be thrown i the way of his public-spirited enter prise, it must be brought to an end this coming as the result of what w think almost every one will concede t be entirely unwarrantable interference

MUST LEAVE THE UNION OR THE SYMPHONY

Musicians Soon to Be Given Choice by Union; Orchestra Is Threatened.

HIGGINSON IS DISPLEASED

High officials of the Musicians' Protective Union say that members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who are not now members of the union, must join it at once or the union members will leave the orchestra. There are members of the orchestra who say they will not join a labor union, and others, who are union men, say they will not leave the musical organization in which membership gives them prestige, and the organization of the famous orchestra is threatened.

Major F. L. Higginson, who has been the mainstay and financial backer of the organization, says he is not interested in whether the players are trades unionists or not, and that the disagreement will not cause his interference unless too much trouble is stirred up. In that event the inference from his remarks is that he would withdraw his support, and without Major Higginson to make up the deficits in the orchestra's treasury it is feared that the organization would go to pieces.

Trouble Long Brewing.

This trouble between union officials and the orchestra as a body has been brewing for a long time. There have been members who would not become union members, yet the unionists in the band have hesitated about withdrawing, because of the manifest advantage that it is to a man to be recognized as competent enough to play in the Symphony.

International President Weber of the Musicians' Protective Union has been in Boston and interviewed Major Higginson, and the result, which neither side will give out for publication, is, in fact, unsatisfactory in an extreme degree.

Major Higginson said to-day, through his private secretary, to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter:

"I will not withdraw my support of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

But he said this with the significant proviso:

"Unless trouble is stirred up so that the matter becomes a nuisance to me."

Higginson Displeased.

Beyond this no statement can be obtained from Major Higginson. Unofficially, however, it was ascertained that Major Higginson is not overpleased with the present condition of the agitation by union musicians in the orchestra, and has approached more than half of the seventy odd members of the orchestra who are also members of the union. Pressure has been brought to bear upon them to the end that they resign their membership in the union or else relinquish their position in the orchestra.

The Boston Musical Protective Union will take the matter up at an early meeting and there is no question as to the result. One member of the union, an official high in the councils of the organization, said to-day to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter:

"It is not right that we should discriminate in favor of the members of the Symphony orchestra as against the musician who has not so good an engagement. Major Higginson has laid down certain conditions that are far from satisfactory. You tell me that Major Higginson declares that he does not care whether a man is a member of the union or not. Why did he not tell Mr. Weber that? You may say that the matter is reaching a serious crisis, and it is far from impossible that the orchestra will be in such trouble that it may disband.

"Major Higginson is anxious that we should start a fight against him, but we have nothing to do with that. We are not fighting Major Higginson at all. He is looking after his own business, and we do not wish to meddle in it. But the members of our organization have got either to live up to the conditions of their membership or leave the organization."

The orchestra is now absent from the city, and International President Weber left soon after his interview with Major Higginson. The question may not be taken up finally until after the return of the orchestra, but officials of the union anticipate an exciting meeting of thie organization Thursday afternoon.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA CRISIS.

Unionism Threatens Disruption of Famous Musical Organization.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Nov. 1.—There is apparently a crisis in the affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the celebrated organization of musicians which has been chiefly supported by the public spirit of Major Henry L. Higginson.

The Musicians' Protective Union is at the bottom of the trouble, the exact nature of which is as yet kept from the public. It is said that a majority of the players have become members of the union, and threaten to quit unless the others follow them. It is even said that the disintegration of the orchestra is threatened.

Major Higginson is understood to be strongly opposed to unionism and to have made some very emphatic remarks which the union officials resent.

One of two things seems to be probable, either the disbanding of the orchestra by the desertion of its union members or the refusal of Major Higginson to longer continue his financial support.

When Wilhelm Gericke raises his baton at to-morrow evening's Boston Symphony concert in the Academy the local musical season of 1904-5 may be regarded as formally opened. Its inauguration promises to be brilliant. The current week will bring us four symphony concerts—two by our own orchestra and two by the Boston players—and will introduce a new widely-heralded violin virtuoso, besides witnessing the return of two piano soloists of the first rank. Vladimir de Pachmann, acknowledged as the most sympathetic interpreter of Chopin in the world of music, will appear at the Wednesday Boston Symphony concert, while Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, perhaps the leading American pianist and one of the most brilliant exponents of the methods of Theodor Leschetizky now before the public, will play both at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Fittingly enough, Beethoven will figure on the programs of both the local and New England orchestras. Mr. Scheel's men will interpret the famous "Eroica," or No. 3, Symphony, while the symphony in B flat, No. 4, will constitute the chief orchestral number of Mr. Gericke's opening concert. Here are the two programs of the Boston players in full:

MONDAY EVENING.

Symphony in B flat, No. 4.....Beethoven
Hungarian Concerto for violin.....Joachim
Scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice".....Dukas
Overture to "Tannhaeuser".....Wagner

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Overture "Oberon".....Weber
Concerto in F minor, No. 2.....Chopin
Three sonata Movements (scored by Mr. Gericke).....Bach
Symphony in E major op. 14.....Suk

It will be seen that these programs are rich in promise. On Monday evening the Beethoven symphony is assured of a scholarly interpretation, and the same may be said of the familiar but always welcome "Tannhaeuser" overture. The leading novelty of the occasion will be the scherzo by Paul Dukas. The composer is a young Parisian, whose work has of late aroused a great deal of interest and much favorable comment. "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" is reported as a picturesque and colorful musical setting of Goethe's ballad of the same name. It was played with much success in Boston last week, and has also been given in Chicago by Theodore Thomas and in Cincinnati by Mr. Van der Stucken. Dukas wrote it in Paris seven years ago.

Monday's soloist will be Willy (the management protests against William) Hess, the new concertmeister, who will play Joachim's long and difficult "Hungarian" concerto. On Wednesday evening De Pachmann may be expected to give a charming interpretation of the Chopin F minor concerto, while a semi-novelty in the shape of Mr. Gericke's orchestral arrangement of these Bach movements an an absolute one in the form of Joseph Suk's symphony in E major will lend distinction to a program of notable interest.

Concert Master and Prima Donna of Boston Symphony Orchestra

TRIO OF STARS IN THE DOMAIN OF MUSIC

Sunday, October 30

THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD,

EEK'S SYMPHONY SOLOISTS.

Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler.

Willy Hess

hmann, pianist, will play with the Boston Symphony on Monday and Wednesday, will appear at the Philadelphia Orchestra's opening concerts on Friday after-

1904. Philadelphia North American 13

John Mahnken, General Manager of Phila Orchestra.

Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler
Solo Pianiste with
Philadelphia Orchestra

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OPENS CONCERT SEASON

Under Direction of Herr Gericke, Well-Known Boston Organization Appears To-Morrow Night at Academy of Music

TO-MORROW evening the symphony concert season will open at the Academy of Music—the first appearance for the season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Herr Gericke, as heretofore.

The programme includes Beethoven's fourth symphony in B flat major and the "Tannhaeuser" overture. An orchestral novelty will be presented in Paul Dukas' scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," composed in 1897, and first performed in the United States by Thomas' Chicago Orchestra in 1899.

The new concert master, Willy Hess, is to be the soloist, playing Joachim's difficult Hungarian concerto for violin.

The Wednesday concert will introduce De Pachmann as soloist, in Chopin's F minor concerto. On this occasion will be performed, for the first time here, Josef Suk's symphony in E major, opus 14. This composer is the most poetic of living Bohemian musicians. The other concert numbers are the "Oberlin" overture and three Bach movements, orchestrated by Mr. Gericke.

Philadelphia Orchestra Concerts.

Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, past grand mistress and supreme poetess of the piano, is to be the soloist at the opening concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra's forthcoming season, opening with next Friday afternoon's rehearsal, followed by the usual Saturday evening concert.

The programme will be identical for both entertainments—the Goldmark overture, "Spring," which is perennially popular; Beethoven's superb "Eroica" symphony, which Conductor Scheel interprets with rare spirit and skill; Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," which was last heard here under the composer's baton, and the lovely, spirituelle Henselt concerto for pianoforte.

The long-scattered instrumental stars of Mr. Scheel's orchestra have all answered the director's call, and are here ready for rehearsals—for concerts, indeed, so far as classic programmes are concerned. It is an assemblage of virtuosi, from the viewpoint of mere technical proficiency. The mere fact that a composition so bristling with musical difficulties as "Till Eulenspiegel" is put on the first programme is in itself a denotement of assured excellence.

Much of the work of the Philadelphia Orchestra this season will be strictly for the home market. Last year it made wearisome and profitless tours—a plan now permanently abandoned. Manager Mahnken will take the band to a few large cities, where guarantees are provided; but the bulk of its performances will be given here in Philadelphia.

Boston Orchestra's Concert Master.

Willy Hess, the new concert master and solo violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, comes from London, where he is well known through his connection with the Halle Orchestra and the Royal Academy of Music, where he recently resigned his position as professor.

Born in Mannheim in 1859, his family left for America in 1865, and resided here for seven years, during which time young Hess pursued his studies. In 1872 his father left America for Holland, where his young son began his public appearances. On one occasion the boy, then 13, distinguished himself by leading the celebrated Harfen Quartette.

At the end of twelve months another move was made, this time to Germany, where Heidelberg was chosen as a place of residence. The young violinist toured extensively through Germany, Holland, Belgium and France. In Paris he was fortunate enough to attract the notice of Vieuxtemps, who not only interested himself in the lad, but conducted the orchestra for him at his first Philharmonic concert there.

In 1876 it was decided that he should go to Berlin for two years to profit by instruction from Joachim, and at the end of this time he received the appointment of leader of the Opera and Museum's orchestra at Frankfurt-on-Main. Eight years were passed in this city, where, in addition to his orchestral duties and teaching, Mr. Hess also found time to found a quartette and a trio with Kwast and Hugo Becker.

In 1886 he accepted a post at the Conservatory in Rotterdam as professor and leader of the orchestra, and also succeeded to the well-known string quartette formerly led by Professor Wirth. After two years Sir Charles Halle secured his services for the Halle Orchestra in Manchester in the place of Ludwig Straus, an appointment which kept him in England for seven years. In addition to his work in Manchester he also led for the Philharmonic Society in Liverpool, and traveled a great deal, playing at various concerts.

In 1895 Mr. Hess again returned to the fatherland, this time to the conservatory at Cologne, where he stayed till his recent appointment to the Royal Academy of Music. Not the least interesting part of his work in Cologne was the leadership of the famous Gurzenich Quartette and concerts.

In England Mr. Hess' musicianly qualities were much appreciated by the royal family. He played many times at Clarence House for the late Duke of Edinburgh, who was himself a notable violinist. After playing one night at a Royal Amateur Orchestral Society's concert the present King (then Prince of Wales) personally congratulated him, and decorated the artist with the honorary badge of membership. On one occasion he was summoned to Osborne by the late Queen while leading at the Chester festival.

The Grand Duke of Luxembourg conferred on Mr. Hess the Order of the Hohenterkranz von Adolph, and from the German Emperor he received the title of Konigliche Preussische Professor, on the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Cologne Conservatory, where, on the death of Dr. Wullner, he filled the place of director till the appointment of Fritz Steinbach.

Many interesting tours were made with the Max Paur and the Grunfeld trio, for which Mr. Hess replaced the well-known virtuoso, Florian Zajic. The violinist and Max Paur also utilized one summer holiday in organizing a concert tour in Norway, during which they traveled as far north as Tromsoe, city of the "midnight sun."

As a conductor Mr. Hess is experienced having acted in that capacity as deputy for Halle, for Gernsheim in Holland, and for three summers wielding the baton for the Gurznich Orchestra. He is the fortunate possessor of a magnificent Guadagnini violin, which he acquired some years ago.

Musical Notes.

A new string quartette, recently organized to give chamber music in Philadelphia, comprises Frederick Hahn, first violin; H. Van der Beemt, second violin; John Grolle, viola, and Hendrick Hartmann, cello. The latter three are well-known Philadelphia orchestra musicians. Mr. Hahn was formerly with the Boston Orchestra. The first public concert of the quartette will be given at Griffith Hall at an early date.

[23]

BOSTON HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVI., NO. 126.
THURSDAY, NOV. 3, 1904.

Boston American Mon, Oct 31.

UNION MUST LET ORCHESTRA ALONE

Maj. Higginson Says Interference with His Plans Will Cause Symphony Organization to Perish and He Will Tell Reasons.

Regarding the statements, emanating from various sources, that the welfare of the Boston Symphony orchestra is threatened, through the demands of the Musicians' Federated Union, Maj. Henry L. Higginson said, yesterday, to a Herald representative: "Musicians' unions are good, if they are for proper motives; and proper motives seem to me charity, brotherhood, and social purposes. When, however, they adopt the 'closed door,' I am absolutely opposed to them. Whether or not the members of the Boston Symphony orchestra belong to the union is not for me to decide, providing that they live up to their bargain with me, and to the spirit of the orchestra.

"The orchestra was intended for the enjoyment and education of the public and has been carried on by the employment of much pains and work, until it has become a very good band. By the bylaws of the union, the union men are not allowed to play with non-union men. I object to any interference with the playing of the members of the orchestra, either for the symphony concerts or for any outside work. I want the men to earn what they can, both from me and from outsiders.

"Our men who joined the union were told that they could do our work, without regard to the bylaws of the union, but the representative of the union said to me that the point was waived until explained to me. The explanation consisted simply in telling me the fact. Nobody has thought of disintegration unless the union causes it. There is no discontent among the members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and I don't know how many belong to the union, if any. The members now know all the facts and understand them fully.

"If allowed to carry out this work, in the original manner and spirit, I shall go on, and I expect that my death will not limit the life of the orchestra. If, however, there is an interferenee in my plans, which prevents unity and harmony in the orchestra, or among its members, the organization will perish, and I shall state publicly how the organization was broken up, and by whom. It has been a great joy to forward this work, and I hope that it has been worth while. It is clear, however, that I must have a free hand. I trust that the work of the orchestra may continue."

THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson's statement concerning the relations of the Boston Symphony orchestra to the Musicians' Federated Union shows how easy it might be to push the "closed shop" or "closed door" theory of service to a point which would cause serious public loss. The Boston Symphony orchestra was not established as a money-making enterprise, and if Maj. Higginson, contrary to his original intentions, has found a balance to the good in the annual account of this enterprise, it has been with good reason assumed that this was to be made a part of a fund out of which the orchestra was to be maintained through an indefinite future. In order to develop this idea along the lines originally laid down and thus far adhered to, of providing the citizens of eastern Massachusetts with the finest orchestral music at cost and without profit, it is necessary that those in control should select their musicians on the score of merit and without regard to such artificial restraints as any self-constituted outside body might see fit in its own interest to endeavor to impose. There is no question about the generous payment given to those who are members of this orchestra, for it is doubtful if any musicians receive as a body as large remuneration. It is only a question of whether as non-union men other musicians shall be prohibited from having professional relations with them. Maj. Higginson plainly announces that if these barriers are to be thrown i the way of his public-spirited enter prise, it must be brought to an end this coming as the result of what w think almost every one will concede t be entirely unwarrantable interference

MUST LEAVE THE UNION OR THE SYMPHONY

Musicians Soon to Be Given Choice by Union; Orchestra Is Threatened.

HIGGINSON IS DISPLEASED

High officials of the Musicians' Protective Union say that members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who are not now members of the union, must join it at once or the union members will leave the orchestra. There are members of the orchestra who say they will not join a labor union, and others, who are union men, say they will not leave the musical organization in which membership gives them prestige, and the organization of the famous orchestra is threatened.

Major F. L. Higginson, who has been the mainstay and financial backer of the organization, says he is not interested in whether the players are trades unionists or not, and that the disagreement will not cause his interference unless too much trouble is stirred up. In that event the inference from his remarks is that he would withdraw his support, and without Major Higginson to make up the deficits in the orchestra's treasury it is feared that the organization would go to pieces.

Trouble Long Brewing.

This trouble between union officials and the orchestra as a body has been brewing for a long time. There have been members who would not become union members, yet the unionists in the band have hesitated about withdrawing, because of the manifest advantage that it is to a man to be recognized as competent enough to play in the Symphony.

International President Weber of the Musicians' Protective Union has been in Boston and interviewed Major Higginson, and the result, which neither side will give out for publication, is, in fact, unsatisfactory in an extreme degree.

Major Higginson said to-day, through his private secretary, to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter:

"I will not withdraw my support of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

But he said this with the significant proviso:

"Unless trouble is stirred up so that the matter becomes a nuisance to me."

Higginson Displeased.

Beyond this no statement can be obtained from Major Higginson. Unofficially, however, it was ascertained that Major Higginson is not overpleased with the present condition of the agitation by union musicians in the orchestra, and has approached more than half of the seventy odd members of the orchestra who are also members of the union. Pressure has been brought to bear upon them to the end that they resign their membership in the union or else relinquish their position in the orchestra.

The Boston Musical Protective Union will take the matter up at an early meeting and there is no question as to the result. One member of the union, an official high in the councils of the organization, said to-day to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter:

"It is not right that we should discriminate in favor of the members of the Symphony orchestra as against the musician who has not so good an engagement. Major Higginson has laid down certain conditions that are far from satisfactory. You tell me that Major Higginson declares that he does not care whether a man is a member of the union or not. Why did he not tell Mr. Weber that? You may say that the matter is reaching a serious crisis, and it is far from impossible that the orchestra will be in such trouble that it may disband.

"Major Higginson is anxious that we should start a fight against him, but we have nothing to do with that. We are not fighting Major Higginson at all. He is looking after his own business, and we do not wish to meddle in it. But the members of our organization have got either to live up to the conditions of their membership or leave the organization."

The orchestra is now absent from the city, and International President Weber left soon after his interview with Major Higginson. The question may not be taken up finally until after the return of the orchestra, but officials of the union anticipate an exciting meeting of thie organization Thursday afternoon.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA CRISIS.

Unionism Threatens Disruption of Famous Musical Organization.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Nov. 1.—There is apparently a crisis in the affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the celebrated organization of musicians which has been chiefly supported by the public spirit of Major Henry L. Higginson.

The Musicians' Protective Union is at the bottom of the trouble, the exact nature of which is as yet kept from the public. It is said that a majority of the players have become members of the union, and threaten to quit unless the others follow them. It is even said that the disintegration of the orchestra is threatened.

Major Higginson is understood to be strongly opposed to unionism and to have made some very emphatic remarks which the union officials resent.

One of two things seems to be probable, either the disbanding of the orchestra by the desertion of its union members or the refusal of Major Higginson to longer continue his financial support.

regarded [illegible]

Sunday, Oct 30

THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD,

THIS WEEK'S SYMPHONY SOLOISTS.

Copyrt Dupont

V. De Pachmann.

Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler.

Willy Hess

Willy Hess, violinist, and Vladimir de Pachmann, pianist, will play with the Boston Symphony on Monday and Wednesday, respectively. Mme. Bloomfield-Zeisler, pianist, will appear at the Philadelphia Orchestra's opening concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

Willy Hess
Concert Master and Violin Soloist of Boston Symphony Orchestra

TRIO OF STARS IN THE DOMAIN OF MUSIC

John Mahnken,
General Manager of Phila Orchestra.

Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler
Solo Pianiste with
Philadelphia Orchestra

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OPENS CONCERT SEASON

Under Direction of Herr Gericke, Well-Known Boston Organization Appears To-Morrow Night at Academy of Music

TO-MORROW evening the symphony concert season will open at the Academy of Music—the first appearance for the season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Herr Gericke, as heretofore.

The programme includes Beethoven's fourth symphony in B flat major and the "Tannhaeuser" overture. An orchestral novelty will be presented in Paul Dukas' scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," composed in 1897, and first performed in the United States by Thomas' Chicago Orchestra in 1899.

The new concert master, Willy Hess, is to be the soloist, playing Joachim's difficult Hungarian concerto for violin.

The Wednesday concert will introduce De Pachmann as soloist, in Chopin's F minor concerto. On this occasion will be performed, for the first time here, Josef Suk's symphony in E major, opus 14. This composer is the most poetic of living Bohemian musicians. The other concert numbers are the "Oberlin" overture and three Bach movements, orchestrated by Mr. Gericke.

Philadelphia Orchestra Concerts.

Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, past grand mistress and supreme poetess of the piano, is to be the soloist at the opening concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra's forthcoming season, opening with next Friday afternoon's rehearsal, followed by the usual Saturday evening concert.

The programme will be identical for both entertainments—the Goldmark overture, "Spring," which is perennially popular; Beethoven's superb "Eroica" symphony, which Conductor Scheel interprets with rare spirit and skill; Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," which was last heard here under the composer's baton, and the lovely, spirituelle Henselt concerto for pianoforte.

The long-scattered instrumental stars of Mr. Scheel's orchestra have all answered the director's call, and are here ready for rehearsals—for concerts, indeed, so far as classic programmes are concerned. It is an assemblage of virtuosi, from the view-point of mere technical proficiency. The mere fact that a composition so bristling with musical difficulties as "Till Eulenspiegel" is put on the first programme is in itself a denotement of assured excellence.

Much of the work of the Philadelphia Orchestra this season will be strictly for the home market. Last year it made wearisome and profitless tours—a plan now permanently abandoned. Manager Mahnken will take the band to a few large cities, where guarantees are provided; but the bulk of its performances will be given here in Philadelphia.

Boston Orchestra's Concert Master.

Willy Hess, the new concert master and solo violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, comes from London, where he is well known through his connection with the Halle Orchestra and the Royal Academy of Music, where he recently resigned his position as professor.

Born in Mannheim in 1859, his family left for America in 1865, and resided here for seven years, during which time young Hess pursued his studies. In 1872 his father left America for Holland, where his young son began his public appearances. On one occasion the boy, then 13, distinguished himself by leading the celebrated Harfen Quartette.

At the end of twelve months another move was made, this time to Germany, where Heidelberg was chosen as a place of residence. The young violinist toured extensively through Germany, Holland, Belgium and France. In Paris he was fortunate enough to attract the notice of Vieuxtemps, who not only interested himself in the lad, but conducted the orchestra for him at his first Philharmonic concert there.

In 1876 it was decided that he should go to Berlin for two years to profit by instruction from Joachim, and at the end of this time he received the appointment of leader of the Opera and Museum's orchestra at Frankfurt-on-Main. Eight years were passed in this city, where, in addition to his orchestral duties and teaching, Mr. Hess also found time to found a quartette and a trio with Kwast and Hugo Becker.

In 1886 he accepted a post at the Conservatory in Rotterdam as professor and leader of the orchestra, and also succeeded to the well-known string quartette formerly led by Professor Wirth. After two years Sir Charles Halle secured his services for the Halle Orchestra in Manchester in the place of Ludwig Straus, an appointment which kept him in England for seven years. In addition to his work in Manchester he also led for the Philharmonic Society in Liverpool, and traveled a great deal, playing at various concerts.

In 1895 Mr. Hess again returned to the fatherland, this time to the conservatory at Cologne, where he stayed till his recent appointment to the Royal Academy of Music. Not the least interesting part of his work in Cologne was the leadership of the famous Gurzenich Quartette and concerts.

In England Mr. Hess' musicianly qualities were much appreciated by the royal family. He played many times at Clarence House for the late Duke of Edinburgh, who was himself a notable violinist. After playing one night at a Royal Amateur Orchestral Society's concert the present King (then Prince of Wales) personally congratulated him, and decorated the artist with the honorary badge of membership. On one occasion he was summoned to Osborne by the late Queen while leading at the Chester festival.

The Grand Duke of Luxembourg conferred on Mr. Hess the Order of the Hirterkranz von Adolph, and from the German Emperor he received the title of Konigliche Preussische Professor, on the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Cologne Conservatory, where, on the death of Dr. Wullner, he filled the place of director till the appointment of Fritz Steinbach.

Many interesting tours were made with the Max Paur and the Grunfeld trio, in which Mr. Hess replaced the well-known virtuoso, Florian Zajic. The violinist and Max Paur also utilized one summer holiday in organizing a concert tour in Norway, during which they traveled as far north as Tromsoe, city of the "midnight sun."

As a conductor Mr. Hess is experienced, having acted in that capacity as deputy for Halle, for Gernsheim in Holland, and for three summers wielding the baton for the Gurznich Orchestra. He is the fortunate possessor of a magnificent Guadagnini violin, which he acquired some years ago.

Musical Notes.

A new string quartette, recently organized to give chamber music in Philadelphia, comprises Frederick Hahn, first violin; H. Van der Beemt, second violin; John Grolle, viola, and Hendrick Hartmann, cello. The latter three are well-known Philadelphia orchestra musicians. Mr. Hahn was formerly with the Boston Orchestra. The first public concert of the quartette will be given at Griffith Hall at an early date.

[23]

Phila. Ledger, Oct. 30

WILLY HESS

Concertmaster and first violin, Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

The really notable event of Monday evening will be the first of this season's concerts to be given here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke. This will be the first "big" concert of the present season which it practically "opens," and on this occasion Willy Hess, the new concertmeister of the organization, will make his Philadelphia debut. This player was born at Mannheim, Germany, in 1859. He gave concerts when he was 10 years old in Belgium, France and Germany. He was also in America with Thomas's Orchestra. In 1876 he went to Berlin and became a pupil of Joachim. In 1878 he was appointed concertmeister at the Frankfort Opera and also concertmeister of the Museumgesellschaft Orchestra. Then he went to Rotterdam and afterward to Manchester, England. In 1885 he settled at Cologne as professor of violin at the Conservatory and concertmeister of the Guerzenich concerts and leader of the Guerzenich Quartet. He comes to the Boston Orchestra direct from the Royal Academy of Music, in London, where for the past year he has been a member of the faculty. It will be interesting to hear this player, who possesses no little European reputation. That his "technic" is perfect goes without saying, otherwise he certainly would not be a concertmeister; but it takes a great deal of "temperament" to overcome the colorless perfection of the Joachim school of violin playing, and on the question of just how much of this intangible quality the Mannheim player possesses will depend the impression that he makes here tomorrow evening. Mr. Hess will be heard in the unusual and wonderful "Hungarian" violin concerto, by Joachim, of which Paul David, writing in Grove, says:

"Undoubtedly his most important and most successful work is the Hungarian Concerto (Op. 11), a creation of real grandeur, built up in noble symphonic proportions, which will hold its place in the first rank of masterpieces for the violin."

It has not been played here recently, and this opportunity of hearing a work that is so long that a single movement only usually is played by concert violinists, will make the concert a notable one.

* * *

The symphony at this concert is to be Beethoven's fourth, in B-flat major. It is one of the most delightful of compositions and it is not very frequently played, as it is, musically considered, of much less importance than so many of the other symphonies by the same composer. Classic in treatment, it is characterized by an extraordinary spirit of happiness and is such a beautiful composition that one is always glad of an opportunity of hearing it. It was first played in Vienna in 1807.

The symphony will be played first, and after the brief intermission which is a feature of the Boston concerts, the violin concerto will be played. This will be followed by a little bit of modern French programme music, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," by Paul Dukas, in which is described the "raising" of certain spirits by a magician's boy, who afterward finds that he is unable to "lay" them until his master returns and does it for him. This interesting concert will close with the Tannhaeuser Overture.

* * *

The Wednesday evening Boston Symphony concert is no less important in that it will serve to reintroduce to Philadelphians Vladimir de Pachmann, the famous Chopin exponent, who will be heard in the second Chopin concerto, the one in F minor. This is, perhaps, the most famous of the Chopin piano concertos, and is usually spoken of as the "second," although it was written before that in E minor, but not published until later. The F minor concerto is exceedingly romantic, and, like all of Chopin's work, full of lovely melodies. As it was written during the height of the composer's passion for Constantia Gladowska, it is most romantic in its characteristics. It will be of great interest to hear De Pachmann once more, as it has been many seasons since he played in Philadelphia. He was born at Odessa, in Russia, in 1848, and remained there until he was 18, when he was sent to Vienna to the conservatory, where he received the gold medal. He returned to Russia in 1869, and gave a number of successful concerts, but he was much dissatisfied with his work, and retired for some eight years and devoted himself to study. He then gave more concerts, retiring again for some years. After this he again gave concerts in Vienna and Paris which were satisfactory to himself. Since then he has frequently been heard in public. Without [illegible] in many respects [illegible] of modern pi[illegible] ordinarily eccentric and has gained the epithet of the "mad pianist." He has devoted a great number of years to the study of Chopin, and is famous for his interpretations of the Polish musician, but he is quite liable to stop in the midst of his performance and tell the audience not to talk so much, or to call their attention to some particular phrase or passage which he believes that they have overlooked or failed to appreciate. However, he is a great artist, and can afford to do as he pleases.

* * *

The concert on this occasion will open with the familiar "Oberon" overture, by Weber, and this will be followed by Mr. Gericke's own orchestration of three movements from some chamber music by Bach, an Andante, a Siciliano and a Rondeau. The concert will close with the symphony in E major, by Joseph Suk, the young Bohemian, which Mr. Gericke will interpret here for the first time, although it was played with great success by Mr. Scheel in February of 1903. It will be recalled as a wonderfully rich and suggestively Slavic composition, full of themes of Bohemian song and intimation of things conceived in the Dvorak manner. To so many concertgoers in these days modern music is especially appealing, and Slav music particularly so, so that this Wednesday evening programme will be distinctly worth while, and in many respects one of the most interesting that will be offered by Mr. Gericke this season.

Phila. Inquirer Tuesday, Nov. 1

OPENING OF THE MUSICAL SEASON

Reappearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Debut of Willy Hess at the Academy

The Philadelphia musical season may be said to have opened last evening, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra reappeared at the Academy of Music and rendered a valuable and interesting program in a manner which amply sustained its high reputation and afforded great enjoyment to the large and brilliant audience which the occasion had attracted. It may have been because the Boston Orchestra has not been heard here lately, but at this concert the merits for which it is distinguished seemed to be more than usually conspicuous and admirable and the nature and extent of its superiority to most other similar organizations more than ordinarily apparent.

The symphony was that by Beethoven in B-flat major No. 4, and this beautiful work was interpreted with a clearness of intelligence, an eloquence of expression and a perfection of artistic finish which left no part of its significance unexpressed and no phase of its varied loveliness unexhibited. Under Mr. Gericke's sympathetic and masterly direction the orchestra played with a unity of purpose, a clarity of utterance and a nicety of dynamic balance which could not be too highly praised and which made its performance in the highest degree illuminative and delightful. Each of the four movements was competently and appreciatively given, but perhaps it was in the heavenly adagio that the orchestra was quite at its best and that the various excellencies for which it is noted, the quality of its tone, the precision of its execution, the refinement of its methods, were most convincingly and impressively illustrated. No better orchestral playing than this can be imagined or need be desired.

The other orchestral numbers were a scherzo by Dukes called "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" and the "Tannhauser" overture. The Dukes scherzo had not previously been produced here and it proved to be very well worth hearing. It is ingeniously and effectively though not extravagantly scored and it unites a good deal of humor with not a little melodic charm. Any one who chooses to do so can without much trouble follow the allusions of the score and trace its relation to the ballad with which it is associated, but the music can be enjoyed without any reference to its literary subject matter and perhaps it can be enjoyed that way best. It is genuine music in that its inspiration is rather subjective than objective and that it is directed to the expression of a sentiment rather than to the portrayal of a scene or the suggestion of an action, and there can be no doubt as to the favorable character of the opinion which it elicited.

The assisting artist was the new concert master of the orchestra, Mr. Willy Hess, a violinist with a great European reputation, who has not been in this country since he was a boy. His selection was the Hungarian concerto by Joachim, by no means the best he might have made, and he played this difficult and largely ungrateful music with the utmost brilliancy, facility and power Joachim wrote this concerto for the purpose of showing his mastery of the instrument, and it bristles with every kind of difficulty that the violin presents. None of these seemed, however, to impose any strain upon Mr. Hess' technical resources. He played the music with a fine, full tone, with a faultlessly true intonation, and with unfailing freedom and authority, and all the heartiness of an applause which insisted upon several recalls was thoroughly well deserved. Mr. Willy Hess is a violinist of real distinction and extraordinary attainments.

At the second concert, to be given tomorrow evening, the orchestra will play Weber's "Oberon" overture and a symphony by Suk, and Vladimir de Pachmann will be heard in Chopin's F minor concerto for the pianoforte, a work of which he is the supreme interpreter.

Phila. Ledger, Nov. 1

THE OPENING OF THE MUSICAL SEASON

The First Concert at the Academy of Music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra

The musical season of 1904-5, which promises to be one of unusual interest and activity, was agreeably and successfully introduced last evening, at the Academy of Music, with a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This is the twentieth season in which this fine organization has played in Philadelphia and for one-half of this long time it has been conducted by Mr. Gericke, who was once more cordially welcomed by a large audience last night. Usually the first concert of the orchestra has been given in November. An earlier date was probably chosen this year to avoid election week, and the concert was thus the first important musical event of the season. The programme was:

Symphony, No. 4 B flat major.....Beethoven
Concerto for violin, "Hungarian".....Joachim
Scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier".....Dukas
Overture, "Tannhaeuser".....Wagner

The familiar symphony was beautifully played. It is one of the clearest of the nine, with no problems of interpretation, and it lends itself well to the suave and balanced execution that Mr. Gericke exacts. It was for the most part played in an unusually stately manner, with a quite exquisite refinement. The melting melody of the wonderful slow movement was most beautifully delivered, and by contrast the trio and the finale were fair examples of agile and exact playing, both in detail and in ensemble, though with not all of the vivacious joyousness usually associated with these movements.

The orchestra is evidently in unimpaired form. Mr. Adamowski led the violins, and the new concertmaster, Willy Hess, appeared as the soloist. He is a slim man, with dark hair and a partly grizzled beard, and an aspect not unsuited to the title of "professor" prefixed to his name on the programme. He is known, indeed, as a professor of the violin, and his technical accomplishment might be assumed both from his position and from his choice of the Joachim concerto for his battlehorse, one of those exacting exercises that are usually more interesting to the performer than to the listener, and make their effect largely by the sense of difficulties overcome. It is an accompanied solo in three movements, as long as a symphony, introducing nearly every known complexity and eccentricity, both of fingering and bowing "in the Hungarian manner." It is the kind of music that a gifted Hungarian might improvise without caring for accuracy. To play it throughout as written, not only with precision, but with nearly unfailing purity of tone, and to maintain this for forty minutes by the watch, is a tour de force worthy of a professor. Most violinists are content with one movement at a time.

But Mr. Hess did more than this. He not only played the long concerto with unflagging facility; he developed a warm and sympathetic temperament that compelled attention and interest. He has a lovely tone, rich and pure, and he "sang" the delicious romance of the second movement not merely as a virtuoso, but as an artist. This is much more like Joachim's own playing; in his prime, than the cold nicety he has imposed on most of his later pupils, and it showed Mr. Hess to be the most distinct and individual acquisition that Mr. Higginson has made to his forces. His sincerity of temperament, not less than the freedom and firmness of his bowing, should be of great value to the orchestra.

The impression he made upon the audience was unmistakable, and the warmth with which he was repeatedly recalled was a just expression of appreciation. When it is recorded that Mr. Hess had learned only yesterday of the death of his father, in Germany, a touch of sentiment is given to his personal success. The composition by Paul Dukas, one of the younger Frenchmen, which followed the concerto, did not prove important. It is a piece of programme music, suggested by Goethe's ballad of the youth who invoked the spirits to bring water and forgot how to tell them to stop. The expression of this subject appeared, on a first hearing, to be mainly a noisy cumulation of instrumental effects, with special reliance on the contra-faggot. The concert closed with the "Tannhaeuser" overture.

Phila. American, Nov. 1

BOSTON ORCHESTRA PLEASES AUDIENCE

Musicians Make Renewed Disclosure of Their Admirable Qualities.

The first orchestral concert of the season, given at the Academy of Music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Gericke's direction, made renewed disclosure of the admirable quality of this proficient body of instrumentalists.

In the opening symphony Beethoven's fourth, in B flat major, as in the concluding "Tannhaeuseer" overture, there was evinced the technical flexibility, great dynamic power and perfect balance of tone that have so long distinguished this orchestra.

Professor Hess, the new concert master, officiated as soloist on this occasion, playing Joachin's long, difficult and highly elaborated "Hungarian" concerto for violin with orchestra.

Professor Hess is a Bohemian, and his racial instincts and acquired musical equipment alike contribute to render dignified, effective and characteristic his interpretation of Joachim's lengthy and complicated tour de force for violin.

Undoubtedly, judging from Professor Hess' performance last evening, Mr. Gericke has procured a chef d'attaque who should lend added distinction to the string department of the big band from Boston town.

The concert of to-morrow evening will introduce as soloist Vladimir de Pachmann, pianist, and also a symphony new here, Josef Suk's, in E major.

Phila. Press, Nov. 1

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

The First Concert of the Twentieth Season—Hess the Soloist.

Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, not exactly his most interesting work in this form; Joachim's overlong concerto for the violin in the Hungarian manner, with Prof. Willy Hess as the soloist; a weirdly descriptive Scherzo by Duhas of the French school, in the style of Saint-Saens' "Danse Macabre" and "Rouet d'Omphale" with the "Tannhauser" overture as the glowing finale, formed the program at the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last evening.

This splendid virtuoso organization enters upon its twentieth season here with Mr. Gericke still at the academic helm, but with a new concert meister, dear to our Teutonic and British friends, in the shape of Willy Hess, once a wonder-child in the early 70's, now a finely equipped violinist of superb technique and an emotional range that bespeaks the artistic temperament. Although having just learned of the death of his father yesterday, the artist triumphed over the man and the Joachim number was interpreted in flawless manner, though one wearies of its show effects, difficult though they may be and one wishes the Hungarian idea and his youth had not tempted Joachim to write so endlessly with so many musical anti-climaxes. Prof. Hess has a fine tone, he handles his bow with vigor and grace and his technical accomplishments are of the highest, while in the slower, singing effects and in the double-stopping, his expressive phrases were beautifully read without being too sentimental. One might have wished, however, a more expressable number for his debut, but the interpretation was a revelation of a master of his art.

The orchestra was in fine condition in the Dukas Scherzo which, depicting the troubles of a sorcerer's apprentice, was diabolic enough to suit any one well or ill-disposed and called for all the resources of a modern orchestra, including our old friends, the cymbals, which might have been hit with a little more abandoned emphasis and more percussive noise, for that is what the composer's intent calls for; no lady-like pandemonium for us moderns if you please! The symphony was read with rare analytic skill, but with no special effects, while although Mr. Gericke does not quite tear a passion to tatters in the Wagner overture he invariably gives it a noble reading and did so in his best manner last evening. The concert was an auspicious opening of the musical season. On Wednesday night De Pachmann will be soloist and the program will be as follows: Weber, overture, "Oberon;" Bach, three movements, orchestrated by W. Gericke; Chopin, concerto for pianoforte in F minor, No. 2; Joseph Suk, symphony in E major, Op. 14. First time at these concerts.

Phila. Record, Nov. 1

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Gericke's Band Brings a Fine New Concert-Meister Soloist.

The local musical season was formally opened last evening at the Academy by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with all the customery eclat that is now the natural concomitant of the reappearance of this magnificent organization, and with an added feature of genuine importance in the introduction of a new soloist and concertmeister of the first rank. The program comprised Beethoven's wonderfully beautiful Fourth Symphony, Joachim's brilliant and intricate Hungarian Concerto for violin, a rather inconsequential orchestral novelty in Paul Dukas' Scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," and the familiar, though always welcome, "Tannhaeuser" Overture.

The pre-eminent single feature was the appearance of Willy Hess as violin soloist and also as concert-meister of the orchestra. Herr Hess has been widely heralded, and this premiere demonstrated at once that he has not been overrated. The Joachim composition is too long for the great majority of music lovers—in fact, many soloists are content to give but one movement of it—but it has no small beauty, particularly in the romantic and dainty second part, and it offers a remarkably complete test of the performer's equipment, both temperamental and technical. Herr Hess combines dignity and artistic power with a well-marked manly vigor, and in breadth of tone as well as mere technique compares very favorably with his contemporaries. That he scored last evening a genuine artistic and popular triumph cannot be gainsaid.

It is unnecessary at this period to discuss the work of the Boston Symphony as an orchestra. It is the standard, as hitherto, in this country, and if Herr Gericke is more the academician than the inspired recreator of great musical works, he at least retains all his ability in the matter of bringing out the best that is in his men. The Beethoven Symphony and the "Tannhaeuser" number were faultlessly rendered, while the Dukas novelty was given with great brilliancy. The piece itself, founded upon Goethe's poem, is interesting for its grotesque humor and oddities, but, while enjoyable enough, is of no great importance.

On Wednesday Vladimir De Pachmann will make his new appearance, playing Chopin's pianoforte Concerto in F minor. The orchestral numbers will be Weber's "Oberon" Overture, three movements by Bach, orchestrated by Herr Gericke, and Josef Suk's Symphony in E major (opus 14), which will then be heard here for the first time.

[24]

Phila. N. American, Thursday, Nov. 3

MUSICIANS RUSHED THROUGH SYMPHONY

Then Fine Boston Orchestra Placidly Performed Three Bach Movements.

NO DISCORD IN BAND

At the Academy of Music last evening the admirers of Mr. Gericke's Boston Orchestra listened with strained ears while the musicians ripped and rushed, almost tumultuously, through Josef Suk's E major symphony; placidly performed Mr. Gericke's orchestral setting of three Bach movements, and impressively resurrected the "Oberon" overture in all its melodic richness and harmonic poverty.

The soloist was M. de Pachmann, in a skillful and sympathetic interpretation of Chopin's F minor concerto. There was not an instant of uncertainty in De Pachmann's reading; he still plays Chopin with the expressive grace and refined idealism of a true virtuoso of the pianoforte.

"Nothing in it," said Manager Comee, when asked about current rumors of dissension in the band over Musical Union restrictions and demands. "Some of the men are at odds with the Musical Protective Union; but that does not concern the orchestra management. It's an annual scrap, soon over. We'll fill all our dates, never fear."

Phila. Press, Nov. 3

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

First Concert of the Second Series at the Academy of Music.

De Pachmann tinkled and purled and trilled in his most approved Chopinesque manner in the familiar F minor concerto at the first concert of the second series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last evening, and made himself, as he always does, the feature of a very charming concert. That is to say, he was the feature so far as any soloist is a feature at these concerts, where the superb orchestral finish given to everything interpreted is really the feature.

De Pachmann is, however, unique, and in his delicious phrasing and lovely tonal effects unequaled, while the naive abandon, the artless art of unconscious consciousness with which he throws himself into the spirit of such a work, is most refreshing and ever a delight. The whole work was artistically interpreted, both by the soloist and the orchestra, but the orchestral accompaniment in the beautiful larghetto, meant to be a shimmer of strings, was almost too refined at times, indeed, refined almost to inaudibility, which was a little too tenuous even for so filmy a web of sound. This, however, left the melting strains of the soloist in even larger relief. As was to be expected, the reception of the pianist was enthusiastic and somewhat ecstatic.

Aside from the Chopin number the program was not strikingly notable, though most agreeable. Weber's overture to "Oberon," one of Mr. Gericke's specialties, was a stirring opening bit, and Mr. Gericke himself babbled pleasantly of green fields and running brooks in the Eighteenth Century manner in three movements by Bach, orchestrated by himself, and then, for the close, came a symphony by one of the moderns, Josef Suk's opus 14, in E major, which was heard for the first time here last Winter when given by Mr. Scheel and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Like all the new school composers Suk's work reflects and refracts the music of his period. Some find the influence of one, others of another, and the truth is that he suggests all of the moderns, with, of course, the strongest leanings toward Dvorak, his father-in-law. The first movement of the symphony is very eclectic in its manner, but in the slow movement the style of the New World symphony is most marked, while the allegro vivace is so much of a plantation breakdown (or is it a Nubian folk dance?) that a large part of it might be accompanied by the scraping of feet and the rattling of dried peas in a gourd, to say nothing of tam-tams.

The symphony was beautifully read and brought the concert to a delightful close, and is a work that is well worth hearing as a study in contrasts with the older forms and classic composers.

DE PACHMANN PLAYS HERE

Appears With the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Concert, as a Whole, Rather Disappointing

The reappearance of Vladimir de Pachmann, the celebrated Chopin exponent, who played last evening in the Academy of Music with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was an occasion of no little interest. That it was recognized as of importance to the students of the piano was shown by the large number of persons who crowded the upper part of the house, although downstairs the audience was unusually light and not a little apathetic. The programme presented was: "Oberon" overture, Weber; three movements, orchestrated by Gericke, Bach; Concerto No. 2, F minor, Chopin; Symphony in E major, Suk.

So much has been heard of late about the extraordinary playing of De Pachmann and his many eccentricities, that it was almost a shock when the little pianist came demurely forward and started in to play from the notes. The beautiful first movement was presented almost entirely without any special effect, leaving the audience unmoved. While technically perfect, there was no individuality or accent, the entire movement being strangely unsatisfying.

From the very first note of the second movement, however, the real greatness of De Pachmann showed itself. The exquisite larghetto, played in a pure, limpid style, with extraordinary sentiment and breadth, rang out clear and in soft singing tones over the fine pianissimo accompaniment of the orchestra, and this beautiful cantabile aroused the house to thunderous applause.

In the last movement, unfortunately, this clear impression was again lost in the rather mediocre effect of an academic technical ability that was neither remarkable nor particularly interesting. The playing of the slow movement was a masterpiece, but in the display of pure technical ability the floriture passages were without color and seemed quite "old-fashioned," especially when one recalls some of the younger players who have been heard in more recent years.

Nothing lovelier could have been asked for than the exquisite presentation of the "Oberon" overture with which the concert opened. In this the fine chorus of strings was heard to the greatest advantage, and the familiar work was played with a fervor and warmth that made an immediate impression. This was followed by three bits of Bach, movements taken from two flute sonatas and a clavier and violin composition, which Mr. Gericke had orchestrated many years ago. Though they were faultlessly played, there seemed no particular reason for their being.

The concert closed with the exceedingly interesting Suk symphony, which made such an impression when it was played by Mr. Scheel last year. Like all modern works of this kind, it is rather a work of moods than of form, and in its rich barbaric suggestion, with its exquisite bits of melody and rhythmic cadences, its suggestion of modern Italian phrases and memories of the later Frenchman, it is unquestionably music that must be played with fire and inspiration. Its presentation last evening in the strictly academic and precise manner for which Mr. Gericke is so famous was a distinct disadvantage, and the symphony failed of its effect. The first movement is so splendid and so full of beautiful melodies that it made a very agreeable impression, but the playing of the adagio was uninspired and the curious allegro vivace, with its suggestion of a witches' Sabbath, seemed lacking in accent. Even the fine fourth movement failed to reach any great heights in Mr. Gericke's interpretation. Taken as a whole the concert was rather a disappointment.

Mr. Comee, the acting manager of the orchestra, declined last evening to say anything whatever with reference to a dispatch from Boston, which reported "a crisis in the affairs" of the organization. He intimated that there was no particular occasion for such a statement at this time, but he would not discuss the business of the orchestra. It is known that the musical union, of which about one-fourth of the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are members, has been for a long time trying to extend its influence in the engagement of musicians. The attitude of Mr. Higginson, the financial supporter of the orchestra, has not changed from the beginning and is well understood. He does not care whether the musicians belong to the union or not as long as it does not interfere with the artistic excellence of the band. He has, however, more than once said that whenever the orchestra and its membership and direction ceased to be under the absolute control of the conductor, its usefulness would be at an end, and it would no longer be maintained. There has been friction growing out of the employment of nonunion members of the orchestra in outside cities, but it is not learned that there has been any unusual developments just now.

Phila. Record, Nov 3

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Vladimir De Pachmann Makes His Reappearance.

Vladimir De Pachmann, an acknowledged leader among interpreters of Chopin, was the stellar feature of the concert inaugurating the Boston Symphony's second series of the current season last evening at the Academy of Music. Since his last appearance among us several years ago it cannot be said that Mr. De Pachmann has changed greatly as a pianist. He is still as unrivalled in his interpretation of the refined, ultra-delicate aspects of Chopin's work as he is unfitted to cope with the great Pole's more tremendous moods. The concerto last evening was Chopin's No. 2 in F minor, and it served strikingly to illustrate the performer's admitted defects, as well as his supreme virtues. Its delicate larghetto was rendered with a silken, gossamer-like touch that seems fairly outside the scope of even Rafael Joseffy or Ignace Paderewski. The other two movements were of course well given save where sonority or resonance was demanded. At these points Mr. De Pachmann seems to fail, and the desire is thus increased to hear him alone at a recital, where his attention can be directed solely toward such waltzes, etudes and other Chopin compositions as he can interpret in unrivaled fashion. Oddly enough for such a Chopin expert, Mr. De Pachmann played last evening with the score of the concerto directly in front of him. True, he had recourse to it but seldom, but the event was a curious one, inasmuch as one prime qualification of a public performer is his ability to rely implicitly upon his memory.

The orchestral numbers on the program were Weber's beautiful "Oberon" overture given by Mr. Gericke's men with unusual freshness, vivacity and poetic feeling; three movements from Bach, cleverly orchestrated by the conductor, and the Joseph Suk Symphony in E major, last played here by the Philadelphia Orchestra. Though scholarly and ambitious in design, this symphony can scarcely be called an inspiring composition. At times it suggests Brahms, but hardly Brahms in his highest moments—the moments of the "Tenth" Symphony. To add that the work of the orchestra last night left nothing to be desired is to indulge once more in praise that, however familiar, is, regarding these Boston players, always freely justified.

BOSTON MUSICIANS SCORE A TRIUMPH

Famous "Symphony" Society Gives One of the Finest Concerts Ever Heard Here.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra brilliantly opened its nineteenth local season at Carnegie Hall last night before one of the largest gatherings of its clientèle which can be remembered. Not a vacant box or an empty chair showed anywhere in the room, and the carriage crush outside suggested a première at the opera. Ample reason for the character and constantly growing size of this orchestra's following could be found in the matter and the performance of last night's programme, which well represented the best traditions of the organizations and the conductor.

Mr. Gericke's list was headed by Beethoven's little known fourth symphony in B flat major, opus 60. On this work there had been lavished evidently an extravagance of pains, and its interpretation in consequence proved one of the most wonderfully finished pieces of playing the men from Boston have ever put to their credit here. Considering, for instance, the terrific pace of the last movement, the finished work of the strings was little short of marvellous. Here, by the way, for the first time in man's memory, Mr. Gericke forgot his pose and grew positively animated. The whole four movements were uniformly admirable.

A highly interesting novelty was Dukas' scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," a miniature tone poem based on a ballad of Goethe. For originality of plan and for vleftness and novelty of orchestration this work is noteworthy and is well worth a frequent place in concert programmes.

The soloist of the occasion was Willy Hess, the orchestra's new concert master, who played the Hungarian Concert of Joachim It needed but a few moments of the concerto's first movement to show Mr. Hess as a thoroughly worthy sucessor to Franz Kneisel, and long before its close he had proved himself an artist of big attainments. The audience fairly rose to him at the end. He has a dignified presence, a composed, authoritative manner and an easy flowing style.

In point of tone and interpretation he recalls Hugo Heermann. His bowing is remarkable for its freedom and his left hand technique for its exactitude. He is altogether an acquisition to the Boston Orchestra and its public.

A fine performance of the Tannhauser Overture closed the programme.

My Press, Nov. 4

WILLY HESS PLAYS WELL.

New Concert Master Soloist at Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert.

Opening the season of orchestral concerts, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played in Carnegie Hall last night. As usual there was a large audience; as usual, too, the great gathering was made up in great part of deep admirers of the Boston players. Aside from its intrinsic importance the chief feature of the concert was the first appearance here of Mr. Gericke's new concert master. Willy Hess, who last night was introduced to the New York public, not in his official capacity, but as a soloist. No small ordeal this, for Mr. Hess, if one considers how high a standard was set by the orchestra's former concert master, Mr. Kneisel, and how nearly Fernandez Arbos, who had that post last season, came to suffering a fiasco when he appeared as a soloist.

Little wonder, then, Mr. Hess was nervous. Joachim's "Hungarian" concerto, opus 11, is exceedingly difficult, and it must be said Mr. Hess played it remarkably well. But was his work worthy of all the applause it received? He has a good, sound tone; his finger technique seems remarkably accurate, his intonation almost

My American, Nov 4

BOSTON SYMPHONY INTRODUCES A NOVELTY

Many music-lovers were at the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening. It was beautiful and distinctive. Under Wilhelm Gericke's leading the Beethoven Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major was majestic. The Joachim concerto, in the Hungarian manner, for violin and orchestra, seemed full of new ideas.

Dukas's scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," played for the first time was charming and Wagner's overture to "Tannhauser" made new admirers enthusiastic. Willy Hess, the soloist, concert-master of the Orchestra achieved a distinct success.

My World, Nov. 4

THE Boston Orchestra was at its best last night, and that is the best that any band in America, and only one or two in Europe, have to give. Mr. Gericke showed unusual warmth of feeling. The new concertmaster, Willy Hess, proved himself a notable violinist. There was an interesting bit of music new to New York, Dukas's scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." The flower of our concert-going public filled Carnegie Hall. Visiting virtuosi and singers sprinkled the audience. The applause was quick, warm, and intelligent. A more satisfying concert is hard to recall.

My Herald, Nov 4

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester.

Einen bis zum letzten Platz besetzten Saal fand das Bostoner Symphonieorchester vor, als es gestern Abend in Carnegie Hall seine New Yorker Saison eröffnete. Dieser ungeschwächte Besuch mag als Beweis dafür gelten, daß die Majorität der hiesigen Musikverständigen zu der Einsicht gekommen ist, ein musterhaftes Orchester sei an sich schon Anziehungskraft genug, eben schon wegen seiner Seltenheit. Große Befriedigung aber mußte die Entdeckung verursachen, daß alle jene Gerüchte über verhängnisvolle Personalveränderungen in dieser Organisation nur Gerüchte gewesen waren. Die erste Oboe und die erste Flöte klangen ebenso süß wie zuvor, und der Streichkörper entfaltete sogar mehr Tonschönheit, als in der letzten Saison, wo er bekanntlich eine Art von Krisis durchzumachen gehabt hatte.

Mit der ersten Nummer, der vierten Beethoven'schen Symphonie, hatte Herr Gericke allerdings auch eine Auswahl getroffen, die seiner konservativen Eigenheit zu statten kam. Wenn man davon absieht, daß der Dirigent das Adagio ganz unbegreiflich schnell nahm und das Allegro vivace bis zum Presto trieb, läßt sich nur Lob über die Ausführung ausschütten. Zu einem zündenden Virtuosen-Stücke wurde das Schlußallegro, und man kann sich schon vorstellen, daß Beethoven, wenn er solch' ein Orchester, und speziell solchen Fagottisten zur Verfügung gehabt hätte, auf dem beigefügten "ma non troppo" nicht allzu eigensinnig bestanden hätte. Aber überraschend war, was Herr Gericke für die Interpretation einer Novität von Paul Dukas, einem jungen französischen Komponisten, that. Soviel Sympathie für die moderne französische Instrumentalisten-Schule hätte man ihm garnicht zutrauen mögen. Da war nicht nur die gewohnte Delikatesse im Vortrag, sondern auch eine gewisse Pikanz, ausreichende Tonfülle bei den Steigerungen und vor Allem eine wohlthätige Abwesenheit von Pedanterie. Deshalb braucht nicht die Möglichkeit ausgeschlossen zu sein, daß diese kleine Symphonie mit noch keckerem Esprit interpretirt werden kann; aber man durfte mit der gestrigen Darbietung mehr als zufrieden sein.

Dukas hat sich für sein Werk Goethe's „Zauberlehrling" zum Programm genommen, es ist aber durchaus nicht nöthig, daß der Zuhörer das auch thut. Und wenn man fragt, ob der Komponist denn auch wirklich musikalisch illustrire, wie man die Geister, die man gerufen, nicht wieder los werden könne, so muß das entschieden verneint werden. Wenn etwa die zauberischen Dissonanzen als musikalische Repräsentanten der heraufbeschworenen Zaubergeister gelten sollen, so beweist der Komponist gerade durch hervorragendes Geschick und schneidige Logik in der Harmonisirung, daß er kein „Lehrling" mehr ist. Er steht zwar ziemlich weit links von Saint-Saëns, aber er kann dessen Einfluß doch nicht verleugnen. Er ist nirgends tief, aber immer interessant, und auf der Farbenpalette des Orchesters weiß er wie wenige Bescheid. Daß die Bostoner Virtuosen in dieser schillernden Musik zu glänzen verstanden, läßt sich denken. — Den Schluß der Orchesternummern machte die „Tannhäuser"-Ouverture.

Als Solist trat der neue Konzertmeister des Orchesters, Herr Willy Heß, auf. Heß hat in Deutschland und England mehrere bedeutende ähnliche Positionen inne gehabt, so in Frankfurt, Köln und Manchester, während er als Solist weniger bekannt geworden ist. Er überzeugte gestern auch die Mißtrauischen, daß er in der letzteren Eigenschaft ebenfalls sehr Achtenswerthes zu leisten vermag. Außer allen den technischen und musikalischen Eigenschaften, die zum tüchtigen Geiger gehören, besitzt er auch noch ein erkleckliches Maß von Virtuosentemperament. Er ist nicht immer vollständig unter Kontrolle, denn manche Passage geräth ihm so schnell, daß das rhythmische Ebenmaß leidet und die Begleiter ins Gedränge kommen, aber das mag sich mit häufigerer Gelegenheit zum Solospiel geben. Heß ist zwar nicht besonders poetisch im Vortrage, aber er legt überall einen gesunden und gereiften musikalischen Geschmack an den Tag. Seine Technik aber geht sogar über das gewöhnliche Virtuosenmaß noch hinaus, — sonst hätte er sicherlich nicht Joachim's „Concert in ungarischer Weise" zum Debut-Vortrag gewählt. In dieser merkwürdigen Komposition versuchte Joachim den ungarischen Musikgeist in klassisch-symphonische Formen zu bannen, und daß ihm ein solch' seltsames Bemühen gelungen ist, werden auch diejenigen kaum zu behaupten wagen, die das Konzert noch vom Komponisten selbst spielen gehört haben. Es ist soviel unerfreuliche Zähigkeit darin, hauptsächlich in den beiden Eckſätzen, daß nur selten ein Geiger Lust verspürt, sich damit öffentlich abzugeben. Dabei sind die Schwierigkeiten hauptsächlich in Doppelgriffen, ganz ungeheure. Wenn gestern Herr Heß nicht immer ganz intonationsrein blieb, so mag er sich damit trösten, daß auch einem Joachim das manchmal nicht gelang. Alles in Allem machte der neue Konzertmeister einen sehr günstigen Eindruck, und das Publikum belohnte ihn mit wohlverdientem Beifall und manchen Hervorrufen. Die Scharte, die Arbos geschlagen, kann nun als ausgewetzt betrachtet werden.

Am Samstag Nachmittag findet das zweite Konzert des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters statt.

Volkssymphonie-Konzert.

Heute Abend findet unter Leitung des Herrn Arens das erste Volkssymphonie-Konzert in Carnegie Hall statt.

[25]

The Sun

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1904.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEARD.

ITS NINETEENTH SEASON IN THIS CITY BEGUN.

Willy Hess, the New Concertmaster, Makes a Successful Debut—A Virtuoso of High Ability—A New Scherzo on a Goethe Theme by M. Paul Dukas, a Critic.

The first pilgrimage of the music loving part of Gotham to Carnegie Hall was made last night, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra began its nineteenth season here. The audience was worthy of the occasion. It filled the auditorium and it demonstrated its delight in terms unmistakable. The programme consisted of Beethoven's fourth symphony, Joachim's Hungarian concerto for violin and orchestra, a new scherzo entitled, "The Apprentice of the Sorcerer," by Paul Dukas, and Wagner's "Tannhauser" overture. The soloist was Willy Hess, the newly engaged concert master of the orchestra.

When Franz Kneisel severed his connection with the organization a year ago last spring, the conductor, Wilhelm Gericke was at no small pains to secure a violinist to fill his place. E. Fernandez-Arbos, a Spanish player living in London, was brought over, and achieved one of those tolerable successes which are more embarrassing than outright failure. Fortunately Mr. Fernandez-Arbos was very unhappy in this country and was glad to return to London at the close of his first season.

Mr. Gericke made no more experiments, but set out to secure a virtuoso of acknowledged rank. He was fortunate in engaging Mr. Hess, who has long enjoyed a position among the leading players of Germany. He has recently been professor of the violin in the Royal Academy of Music in London and some time before that he was in England as concert master of Sir Charles Hallé's Manchester Orchestra. He resigned his post in the Royal Academy to take the first seat among the Boston strings.

His performance last night of Joachim's concerto was such as to satisfy a New York audience that the right man had been found at last. Mr. Hess is a genuine virtuoso with a warm temperment to back his musicianly accomplishments. He has a large and rich tone, the result of a very good violin and a fine art. His stopping is that of a brilliant performer and his bowing is bold, dashing, elastic and assured.

It would be superfluous to enumerate all the excellent qualities of his playing, for mere technical skill, however brilliant it may be, is not all that is demanded of the concert master of the Boston orchestra. The Joachim composition is a violinist's concerto and affords ample scope for an exhibition of pretty nearly all the stock in trade of a virtuoso. Mr. Hess played its with admirable mastery. From the bristling double stops of the opening movement, through the cantabile of the second and the flashing staccati of the third he passed triumphantly. He surmounted all difficulties with ease, assurance and abandon.

Better than all this, however, was the infectious warmth of his style. Temperament communicated itself through his technic. The polish of a high musicianship showed itself in his phrasing and his nuancing. In short, Mr. Hess brought with him a European name, and to-day he will be in possession of an American reputation, which is something that every newcomer from abroad has to earn for himself by right of art divine. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has now a concertmaster of the first rank, and a soloist who can face any audience with the certainty of receiving its thanks for what he has to give.

M. Paul Dukas is the music critic of the Revue Hebdomadaire. Despite that fact, he is a musician. He studied at the Paris Conservatoire, where his masters were Dubois and Guiraud. His orchestral scherzo, heard last night for the first time here, was produced in Paris in 1897. It was given to American ears for the first time at Chicago by that eminent importer of novelties, Theodore Thomas.

The topic of the scherzo is a ballad by Goethe. Its gist is that the apprentice, who has long observed the doings of the sorcerer takes advantage of his absence to set up in business for himself. The sorcerer returns home and catches him, whereupon he ceases his experiments with fortissimo suddenness and an acidulous suspension.

It is not a very important composition, but it is far from being devoid of cleverness. The introduction is ingenious and may be accepted as depicting the timidity of the apprentice until he is sure his master is out of sight. The themes of the scherzo proper are clearly drawn and the first one suggests by its lumbering heaviness and croaking bassoon tones that the apprentice is awkward at his art. The working up of the scene is good and there are some smart orchestral color bits in the middle. The crash is effective, but of course on a model long ago established.

Last, but not least, the Boston Symphony Orchestra returns like a breath from the garden of the gods. It was good to hear again the luscious tone of its strings, the mellow pipings of its wood wind, the discreet blasts of its well disciplined brass, and the splendid richness and homogeneity of its massed sound.

Its beautiful precision, its firmness and delicacy of touch, its refined nuancing and the reposeful elegance of its entire style are never failing sources of delight to those who know good orchestral playing when they hear it. Mr. Gericke's reading of Beethoven's B flat symphony was admirable, and the orchestra played the lovely classic with evident affection. Altogether it was a notable evening.

The orchestra's second concert will take place to-morrow afternoon, when Joseph [illegible] Concert in Carnegie Hall last night.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA'S FUTURE.

Major Higginson Says He Will Not Tolerate Interference by Union Labor.

BOSTON, Nov. 5.—Regarding the statements that the welfare of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is threatened through the demands of the Musicians' Federated Union, Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra, said to-day:

"Musicians' unions are good if they are for proper motives, and proper motives seem to me charity, brotherhood and social purposes. When, however, they adopt the 'closed door' I am absolutely opposed to them. Whether or not the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra belong to the union is not for me to decide, providing that they live up to their bargain with me and to the spirit of the orchestra.

"The orchestra was intended for the enjoyment and education of the public and has been carried on by the employment of much pains and work, until it has become a very good band. By the by-laws of the union, the union men are not allowed to play with non-union men. I object to an interference with the playing of the members of the orchestra, either for the symphony concerts or for any outside work. I want the men to earn what they can, both from me and from outsiders.

"Our men who joined the union were told that they could do our work without regard to the by-laws of the union, but the representative of the union said to me that the point was waived until explained to me. The explanation consisted simply in telling me the fact. Nobody has thought of disintegration, unless the union causes it.

"There is no discontent among the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and I don't know how many belong to the union, if any. If allowed to carry out this work in the original manner and spirit, I shall go on, and I expect that my death will not limit the life of the orchestra. If, however, there is an interference in my plans which prevents unity and harmony in the orchestra or among its members the organization will perish, and I shall state publicly how the organization was broken up and by whom. I trust that the work of the orchestra may continue."

My Mail, Nov. 4

MUSIC BY THE BOSTON BAND

Symphony Orchestra Is Growing Older Under Gericke's Lead—New Concertmaster's Local Debut.

Once the Boston Symphony was an orchestra of young men. It is twenty-three years since Henry L. Higginson started its splendid career, and when Wilhelm Gericke came over to lead it, in 1884, he, too, was a very young man. So were Arthur Nikisch and Emil Paur, who, in turn, succeeded Mr. Gericke's first administration. Theodore Thomas was still in his adolescence when he began to loom large as a conductor in New York; the late Anton Seidl was but thirty-five when he came to the Metropolitan Opera House to launch the then new Wagner music dramas. Victor Herbert, to cite another European musician at work conducting in this country, was young in years when he began to be heard of here, and he bids fair to remain a boy in feeling to the end of his days.

Throughout Mr. Gericke's second term with the Boston Symphony, which began in 1898 and, so Mr. Higginson has announced, will last as long as this able and learned conductor wishes, the band has been taking on an aspect more and more settled and mature. Its agility has been that of a well-conditioned, healthy man of first class, rather spare, physique; its brilliancy has been that of an accomplished man with white hair and neatly built waistcoat, talking wittily in a drawing room after dinner. Its leaning toward a classic calm has been disturbed but seldom, despite the admirable frequency of musical novelties on its programmes.

Now, all this is excellent in its way, but it is not enough in touch with the American spirit to accomplish its best mission. Youth and buoyancy are, after all, vital characteristics of this nation's young and old members. When a European enters fully into the American spirit he may approach seventy, as Mr. Thomas is fast doing, and yet remain temperamentally and essentially in early middle life.

Mr. Gericke commands hearty respect and admiration, but as a conductor he has not grasped this overwhelmingly important phase of American life. His point of view is European; his readings, especially of the romantic composers, are those of a cool-blooded autocrat, wholly conversant with what he sets forth, but missing the bite and urgency, the headstrong impetuosity, the deep-seated energy that inhere in much of what Wagner, for instance, and a host of other great folk knew to be the propulsive force of their inspiration.

No one wants Mr. Gericke to fall into the vice of over-accentuation, but that is not the only alternative to his cool, wise, deftly balanced and precisely formulated readings. It is merely worth remarking that this stern disciplinarian from Boston rarely plays any music, new or old, in a way to bring home to Americans the distinctive full-bloodedness of their own spirit. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its present leadership, had to be relied upon to fan the still modest blaze of American national art appreciation into a consuming flame, native composers, and those who hope to be composers, might as well seek other than musical expression for their ideas.

Would that this earnest and distinguished musician could escape from the attitude of the taxpayer, of the "vested interest;" that he could be a little more human!

It was a splendid audience that welcomed Mr. Gericke and the Boston men at Carnegie Hall last night. There was applause in plenty for the conductor and for the new concertmaster, Mr. Willy Hess, who, however, appeared only as soloist and not at the first violin desk. The fourth Beethoven symphony was played with the wonderful perfection of nuance, the precise control of every string and reed and brass tube that has made the orchestra famous.

The novelty, a scherzo by Paul Dukas, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," after a ballad by Goethe, proved an entertaining piece of picture music, full of a lively French humor, which means that it could not fail to be a little sardonic. It is not very valuable. The "Tannhauser" overture, last of the list, went with a measured vigor which just fell short of effectiveness.

My Globe & Commercial Advertiser, Nov. 4

Musical Notes

Friday, Nov. 4—People's Symphony concert, Carnegie Hall, 8.15. "Parsifal," New York Theatre, 7.15.

Saturday, Nov. 5—Symphony concert, Boston Orchestra, Carnegie Hall, 2.30. "Parsifal," New York Theatre, 11 and 7.15.

Sunday, Nov. 6—Symphony concert, Damrosch, Carnegie Hall, 3. Orchestral concert, Herbert, Majestic Theatre, 8.15.

Monday, Nov. 7—"Parsifal," New York Theatre, 7.15.

Tuesday, Nov. 8—Piano recital, Pachmann, Mendelssohn Hall, 3. "Parsifal," New York Theatre, 7.15.

Wednesday, Nov. 9—Song Recital, Bispham, Mendelssohn Hall, 3. Recital of archaic music, Dolmetsch, Manhattan Theatre, 3. "Parsifal," New York Theatre, 11 and 7.15.

Thursday, Nov. 10—Song recital, Gadski, Carnegie Hall, 3.15. Song recital, Bridewell, Mendelssohn Hall, 8.15. "Parsifal," New York Theatre, 7.15.

WILLY HESS.

THE Boston Orchestra was at its best last night, and that is the best that any band in America, and only one or two in Europe, have to give. Mr. Gericke showed unusual warmth of feeling. The new concertmaster, Willy Hess, proved himself a notable violinist. There was an interesting bit of music new to New York, Dukas's scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." The flower of our concert-going public filled Carnegie Hall. Visiting virtuosi and singers sprinkled the audience. The applause was quick, warm, and intelligent. A more satisfying concert is hard to recall.

Somehow, somewhere, Mr. Gericke has renewed his temperament. For three weeks the Bostonians have been wondering at his new ardor. Had the criticisms of his conducting last season at home stirred him? Had his summer holiday reanimated him? It does not matter. He is striking fire for the first time in a season or two. He has become elastic, even gay. The most Wagnerian of the professional Wagner conductors could not have bent his band to every mood of the overture to "Tannhäuser" with more directness of feeling and fulness of expression than Gericke did his men. He and they made that broom dance in Dukas's scherzo. They smiled in their tones at the mock heroics of the sorcerer's return and the mock fears of that quavering apprentice. The zest with which they whirled through the finale of Beethoven's fourth symphony made its phrases catch the ear and the fancy as the dance of leaves in a summer wind and sunshine fascinates the eye. The adagio Gericke took too fast, to pour out all its beauty, but that was a detail.

The band itself showed all its old virtues at their clearest and fullest. Never has it seemed a more responsive or more flawless instrument. The tone of the strings melted like a thing without an edge. The tone of the wood winds was flowing beauty. The tone of the brasses rang sonorously mellow. The fusing of all these instrumental voices was perfectly proportioned. Where other orchestras merely contrast, the Boston men shaded. Where other orchestras shade, they spun as many and as varied threads of tone color as the silks in a basket of embroidery. They rose as one voice through senorous progressions. They receded as one man into the delicatest of diminuendos. The elasticity of it all matched its precision. The musical feeling that pervaded it possessed the audience. At moments pure beauty of sound could hardly have gone further. And when there was need of other emotions to enrich or color it, they came at the conductor's call, no matter what the mood.

The new concert master chose one of the most exhaustive of concertos—Joachim's "in the Hungarian manner." He wrote it fifty years ago, and since then two generations have learned the real "Hungarian manner" from Liszt, Dvorák, and twenty other Czechs, who were not sicklied o'er as Joachim was, with the pale classicism of Berlin and London. But in that concerto Joachim has asked the violinist to do all that he and his instrument technically may do. It is half an hour of exalted technique—technique that is not mere dazzling dexterity, like Paganini's, but that requires mental grasp, musical feeling, and largeness of temperament behind.

Hess met nearly every one of its requirements very fully. Since César Thomson played here ten years ago there has been no such display of the technique of brain and temperament in contrast to that of mere manual dexterity. Hess's fingers, hands, and wrists answered every call that he made upon them. The skill of his left hand will be wonderful to students [illegible] virtuosi of the violin. [illegible] ght to expect all this in the concert master of the Boston orchestra. Rather, it is Hess's distinction that a very keen and pliant musical intelligence, now supple and subtle, and now large and weighty, directs his playing. That makes its intellectual appeal and the clear curves in which he outlined the contours of the music. Meanwhile, temperament is warming and softening this mental grasp—the temperament that gives feeling for rhythm and variety of curve and tonal color that suggests and charms.

Dukas's scherzo is a clever, amusing trifle. Goethe's verses, of which we were writing the other day, gave him a diverting fancy that is capable of musical illustration. He has taken the fancy in a becomingly light vein. He has tried to catch moods in his music, and not to draw detailed pictures in tones. He has the technical resources of a modern orchestra at his command, like all the youngsters in Paris, but he has imagination and discretion, as well as scholarship and restlessness, in his use of them. You felt the joyous trepidation of the magician's boy when he tries the charm. You heard the broom dance to a theme that is at once gay and wooden. You smiled at the boy's fears, you were ready to laugh when the sorcerer himself came thundering in and sent that troublesome broom back to its corner. And musical humor and light fancy like Dukas's in this trifle isn't the commonest thing in these too serious musical days.

My Telegraph Nov. 4

CARNEGIE HALL IS EXORCISED

Echoes of the Spellbinders Give Way to Strains of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WILLY HESS SCORES TRIUMPH

New Concert Master Plays Joachim's Hungarian Concerto and Proves Worthy Successor of Kneisel.

The thunder and the shouting is dead. The candidates and the spellbinders have departed. The Boston Symphony Orchestra last night reconsecrated Carnegie Hall to music, exorcised the spell of politics with a flood of sounds—diverse and delicate—and opened what promises to be the busiest orchestral season New York has ever known. Would that the high level of artistic performance reached last evening could be maintained throughout the season, but the look ahead discloses more quantity than quality in prospect.

Mr. Gericke chose vivacity as the keynote for the introduction of the great Boston band's nineteenth New York season. Beethoven's B-flat Symphony was as inspiring as a hearty handshake between long-parted friends, and how the orchestra reveled in its vivacities of sound, the delicate touch and go of the opening movement, the compelling tenderness of the adagio and the sparkle and occasional splash of passion in the finale! Mr. Gericke read it with unwonted exuberance. Evidently the atmosphere of this Land of Promise for prima donna conductors disturbs even the classic serenity of our Boston contemporaries.

Willy Hess, the orchestra's new concert master, was soloist, and scored impressively. He set himself no easy task in challenging critical appreciation with his master Joachim's Hungarian Concerto—as difficult a work as there is in the violin repertoire. Mr. Hess played it with amazing facility, and splendid insight. If his tone were as good as his technique, his style more temperamental, he would rank with the greatest of virtuosi. But Mr. Hess is a great artist, one of the very few who could essay so exacting a work as the Joachim Concerto and play it so flawlessly as he did last night. He is a worthy successor to Franz Kneisel.

Though a stranger to the latter-day American audiences, Mr. Hess played here thirty-five years ago as a "Wunderkind" of ten years—a post-bellum Vecsey, who was good enough to be honored with appearances with Theodore Thomas' orchestra.

Mr. Gericke showed the audience that musical critics can write music as well as abuse it by presenting a scherzo by Paul Abraham Dukas, the critic of the Weekly Review of Paris. The scherzo is a descriptive setting inspired by Goethe's poem, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." It was ingeniously scored, full of quaint inventions and subtleties of sound. An inspiring performance of the "Tannhauser" overture closed the programme.

The popularity of the Boston players was attested by an overflow audience, with every box filled, and as many standees in the rear as the fire regulations would permit. Gustav Kogel, of Frankfort-on-the-Main, who is here to conduct next week's Philharmonic concert, and Mr. Conried's new foreign conductors, Paul Eisler and Hugo Bryck, heard the orchestra for the first time and had their eyes opened. At Saturday afternoon's concert Vladimir de Pachmann is to be the soloist, and he has chosen to play Chopin's great F minor concerto.

[26]

New-York Daily Tribune

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 4

MUSIC.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A high tribute to the thrice admirable excellence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Wilhelm Gericke, was challenged by the concert in Carnegie Hall last night. It might, perhaps, be paid by saying that in all the nineteen years in which its ministrations have delighted New-York's music lovers, refining their tastes and helping them to an appreciation of charm of orchestral euphony, no occasion can be recalled which contained greater enjoyments than were provided last night. The middle numbers of the programme piqued curiosity inasmuch as they presented a new composition and a solo performer who is a vital factor in the organization. But beginning and end were old acquaintances, and these, in spite of their familiarity, were the features on which it is most pleasurable to dwell in retrospection. Especially the beginning, which consisted of Beethoven's fourth symphony—a work whose individuality asserts itself, and always compels admiration, in spite of the fact that it eschews the dramatic and romantic elements which have given greater prominence in the world's lists to the third, fifth, sixth, seventh and ninth symphonies of its creator. A more fascinating and compelling performance than that of last night we cannot recall. One more replete with the charm of tonal euphony, elasticity, homogeneity and precision we cannot even imagine. It was a miracle of loveliness, and had but one defect, which it seems almost an injustice to mention. This was the misconception of the tempo of its idyllic slow movement. Why so fast? The piece stands alone even among Beethoven's instrumental supplications and ascriptions of praise, and no body of musicians that we know could have given it so perfect an utterance as the men from Boston.

The concert introduced the new concert master of the organization, Mr. Willy Hess, as a solo performer. He played Joachim's concerto in the Hungarian style. On a venture it might be said that it is his especial war horse. Most virtuosi avoid it for an obvious reason—it requires a marvellous mastery of the violin to show forth its beauties. But Mr. Hess has that mastery. He stirred his listeners to a demonstration of enthusiasm such as is seldom witnessed at a concert of this character. There was a verve, an impetuosity, an authority, a fulness and perfection of tone and phrasing in his performance that left no room for faultfinding. He had his listeners captive from the beginning, and held them so to the end. Again we have a master at the head of the Boston violins. The other novelty was a scherzo by Dukas, a piece of descriptive music based on Goethe's poem, "Der Zauberlehrling," called in French "L'Apprenti Sorcier"—a delightful bit of humor in music, clear and eloquent in purpose and fascinatingly scored.

My Press, Nov. 4

WILLY HESS PLAYS WELL.

New Concert Master Soloist at Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert.

Opening the season of orchestral concerts, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played in Carnegie Hall last night. As usual there was a large audience; as usual, too, the great gathering was made up in great part of deep admirers of the Boston players. Aside from its intrinsic importance the chief feature of the concert was the first appearance here of Mr. Gericke's new concert-master. Willy Hess, who last night was introduced to the New York public, not in his official capacity, but as a soloist. No small ordeal this, for Mr. Hess, if one considers how high a standard was set by the orchestra's former concert master, Mr. Kneisel, and how nearly Fernandez Arbos, who had that post last season, came to suffering a fiasco when he appeared as a soloist.

Little wonder, then, Mr. Hess was nervous. Joachim's "Hungarian" concerto, opus 11, is exceedingly difficult, and it must be said Mr. Hess played it remarkably well. But was his work worthy of all the applause it received? He has a good, sound tone; his finger technique seems remarkably accurate, his intonation almost impeccable, his playing of chords—the stumbling block of so many—correct to a hair's breadth. With his bow, too, Mr. Hess is expert, as was particularly evident in the rapid staccato passages of the "Finale alla Zingara." But withal his playing seems wanting in sensuous beauty, warmth and color.

Nothing of the exulting joy and freedom of the open air and sunshine in this performance. All was carefully calculated, measured out with mathematically perfect instruments in angles and squares. One longed for a few rounded, artistically shaded surfaces, but apparently this violinist, whose work savored of the midnight oil, was unable to give them. There was a certain fire and temperament which too often drifted into ungoverned haste; but of tenderness and heart-pulse hardly a trace.

Of the purely orchestral music—comprising Beethoven's beautiful Symphony No. 4, in B flat major; a scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," by Dukas, and Wagner's overture to "Tannhaeuser"—the Dukas composition attracted the most interest, as it had its first performance at these concerts. The work is an exceedingly clever tone-painting of a ballad by Goethe, applying with astonishingly realistic effect all manner of orchestral resources to that end, but woven out of meagre thematic threads. The Beethoven symphony was played admirably on the whole, though the third movement seemed a bit leaden-footed, and a little more pliability of tempo throughout would have been received gratefully. In the "Tannhaeuser" overture the conductor again showed he was temperamentally unfitted for interpreting Wagner.

My Times, Nov 4

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA HERE

Superb Playing at Its First Concert in Carnegie Hall.

PROF. WILLY HESS AS SOLOIST

The New Concert Master Makes a Highly Favorable Impression on First Appearance.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, given last evening in Carnegie Hall, was a greeting of old and well beloved friends. The hall was filled to its utmost capacity, and there was enthusiasm that signified in every way the delight that the concert gave. And, indeed, the orchestra never so fully justified or so irresistibly compelled enthusiasm as it did in its performance last evening. It is the same orchestra, with very few changes, as last year; it has recovered its greatest perfection of form after the Summer vacation, and has not yet lost the freshness that a vacation is intended to restore. Its playing seemed the very paragon and perfection of orchestral art—brilliant, mellow, of golden beauty in its tone, absolutely plastic under the conductor's hand, never for an instant faltering from the flexible precision that is the ideal of orchestral ensemble.

The symphony was the fourth of Beethoven's, one of the less familiar, yet one of the most youthfully beautiful. Mr. Gericke's rendering of it was one that showed his highest qualities. It was glowing and pulsing with life; its movement was elastic, and it was a marvel of exquisite proportion, not only in its larger outlines, but also in the adjustment of every phrase and of every instrumental value in the whole color-scheme. It had the sweep of spontaneity—yet such perfection in that of the art that conceals art. Mr. Gericke's tempo in the adagio was inexplicably fast—a tempo that robbed it of its pregnant significance; but the movement was at least made to cohere logically and stood for a definite conception.

The other orchestral pieces were Paul Dukas's scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," and the overture to "Tannhäuser." The scherzo is a brilliant and altogether fascinating product of the modern French school. It is programme music in the more suggestive style, not slavishly depicting details, but stimulating the listener's imagination as it satisfies his sense of musical beauty. Its vein is humorous, and the wit and raillery of the musical representation keeps pace with Goethe's ballad "Der Zauberlehrling," upon which it is based. The composer plays delightfully with the most subtle combinations of instrumental timbre, and makes each instrument yield characteristic expression. It is all done with finesse and a certainty of touch that are a delight, and it was played with a virtuoso brilliancy that was dazzling.

The concert was made especially notable by introducing the new concert master of the orchestra, Prof. Willy Hess, as a soloist, and by confirming the good reports of his skill and resource that had preceded him. Prof. Hess is a man approaching middle age, and we are reminded by his biographer that this was not his first appearance here, for he played with Theodore Thomas's orchestra in 1869 as a "wonder child" of ten. He has put away childish things long since, however, and comes as a ripe artist of authority and of uncommon technical accomplishment. He chose for his introduction, strangely enough, Joachim's Hungarian concerto, a work that must be regarded as little more than a display piece, uncomfortably long for listeners as well as player, and bristling with difficulties of every sort.

Prof. Hess can scarcely be blamed that he did not show the deepest qualities of musicianship, poesy, sentiment, passion, fiery temperament, for Joachim was little moved by these things when he wrote the work. But he showed much that stamps him as an artist of the highest rank, and one worthy to occupy the responsible post he does. Strength, solidity and firmness of bowing, remarkable fluency and accuracy with the left hand, a fine and masculine tone, even if not, as it was disclosed last evening, always warm or capable of poignant expression, are his. His style is vigorous and masterful, and quite without affectation; his taste is sound, his performance on the whole finely poised.

There were times last evening when his intonation was not absolutely perfect, but the masters are few who can be certain of their intonation in this piece. Yet Prof. Hess is a master—of that there was left no doubt—and there will be a general desire to hear him in music that will allow him higher flights of imagination, and that will set his remarkable technique to the service of the finer side of art.

Boston Herald, Nov. 11

SYMPHONY CONCERT PLANS.

Mr. Willy Hess Will Take the Place of Mr. Schmedes, Who Is Prevented by Sickness.

Mr. Hakon Schmedes, who was announced as the soloist at the public rehearsal of the Symphony orchestra this afternoon, is sick and will be unable to appear. Mr. Willy Hess has kindly volunteered to take his place, and he will play Bruch's violin concerto in G minor.

The orchestral pieces will be Haydn's symphony in E flat major, the one with the opening drum-roll, written for Solomon's concerts in London; the prelude to Richard Strauss' singular opera, "Guntram," and Tschaikowsky's tuneful and sonorous Italian Caprice, based on Italian folk songs and composed during the composer's sojourn at Rome.

[27]

BOSTON SYMPHONY OPENS CITY'S MUSICAL SEASON

FAMOUS ORCHESTRA DOES ITSELF FULL CREDIT.

Professor Willy Hess as Soloist, Though a Little Nervous at First, Wins Many "Bravos" for His Performance — "Bird Center" Disappoints.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its first concert here this season, in Carnegie Hall, last evening. There is an unwritten law that we await the coming of our musical friends from Back Bay for the formal opening of our musical season, and now that they have come and have given us permission: on with the dance!

Come on ye recital-givers. Ye singers and players upon divers instruments, ye choirs and other musical combinations, ye performers of opera, ye musicians of high and low degree—come and glut us with your concourse of sweet sounds, for there be arid days coming when we shall long for other than the jingles of the roof garden and the hurdy-gurdy.

As a musical preface the concert last night was most assuring. And if the season's tale be but half as enjoyable as this first chapter we may congratulate ourselves upon a winter of rare musical pleasure. As usual, the orchestra played with a precision and boldness, born of many years of careful drilling and patient rehearsals. The weather was perfect for the strings and the entire army obeyed the slightest wish of their metronomic general. There were no slips, no false notes, no exaggerated tempi, no blunders of any kind. Everything from the preliminary symphony to the final crash in the "Tannhauser" overture was "as advertised."

The fact of the matter is that it would be such a relief if our Bostonian perfectionists would but halt by the wayside just once! If a bit of extraneous enthusiasm should waft them out of themselves for the moment and compel them to tread an occasional false measure; if they could be charged with a little of the old Seidl heart throbs—but, we cannot hope for everything, even from the Boston Symphony.

The programme consisted of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, a concerto for violin by Joachim; an orchestral Scherzo by Paul Dukas and the "Tannhauser" overture. Briefly summarized, the symphony was very nearly perfectly played and gave great elight as it naturally should, for it breathes of love and joy from its graceful adagio to its final burst of jubilant song.

Professor Willy Hess was the soloist and had a grateful task in the Joachim concerto. "Written in an Hungarian manner," said the programme, and so thoroughly Hungarian it seemed that one fancied he was listening to one of Liszt's own sketches, so saturated it seemed with the true Magyar spirit. The orchestration abounded in those queer tonal vagaries that speak so unmistakably of the presence of the gypsy.

At the start Professor Hess was exceeding nervous and struck notes not in the score and was far from perfect as to intonation, but no sooner had he passed his first bridge than the musician found himself and completely dominated the situation—to such an extent that faint "bravos" were whispered by the listeners.

The Scherzo, heard here for the first time, was one of those piquant little Parisian touches that make one rejoice that there are sunshine and an entire absence of care somewhere at least.

"Tannhauser" formed a fitting close to this most delightful concert.

At tomorrow's matinee concert, Mr. de Pachmann will be the soloist and the symphony will be a novelty by the young Bohemian, Josef Suk.

My Commercial Nov 4

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Were it not that some of the warmest, most passionate music in existence was written by far northern composers like Tchaikovsky, Rubinstein, and Grieg, one might fancy that latitude had something to do with musical emotion. Boston lies 233 miles northward of New York, and is noted for its chill east winds. Something of this chilliness was manifested in the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra given at Carnegie Hall last night; there were even moments when the "musical atmosphere" suggested the need of precautions against pneumonia. Apart from this coldness, the playing of the Boston musicians was truly admirable; marked by a precision, a polish, a brilliancy that spoke of many and painful rehearsals; and the audience paid cordial tribute to these qualities, which often suffice to evoke loud applause, as does the cold but brilliant warbling of a colorature singer.

The unemotional programme had something to do with the result indicated. Beethoven's fourth symphony is not one of that master's titanic works; it is almost as sunny and simple as Mozart. How singularly devoid of sensuous charm its orchestration is, compared with the exquisite and glowing tints of a Schubert symphony! Beethoven may be, on the whole, the greatest of the symphonists, but in orchestration as well as in modulation (the most powerful engine of emotion) he is second not only to Schubert, but to some modern masters, like Dvorák and Tchaikovsky. This, of course, is whispered as an "aside"; it is not permissible to make such a criticism in public.

After the Beethoven symphony had been played and applauded, and Mr. Gericke called out, the new concert-master of the Bostonians, Mr. Willy Hess, came forward. Why he should have chosen Joachim's "Hungarian" concerto for his local début is incomprehensible. It gave him an opportunity to show that he has thoroughly mastered all the tricks of the fiddler's trade (a catalogue of which it is not necessary to give), but that was all. Among all the uninspired show pieces ever perpetrated in the name of music it would be difficult to find one more dreary than Professor Joachim's. No violinist can make forty minutes of such fiddle gymnastics anything but a bore. Mr. Hess has yet to show whether he has been initiated into the inner arcana of the divine art.

A scherzo by Dukas, and Wagner's "Tannhäuser" overture were the final numbers on the programme. The latter has been heard here before; the scherzo was a novelty—"The Sorcerer's Apprentice," based on a ballad by Goethe, composed by a Frenchman little known to fame, Paul Abraham Dukas. It is programme music, and the influence of Saint-Saëns is obvious in its general style and spirit. M. Dukas could not have chosen a better model. He lacks the melodic gift of that master, but in the devising of novel, striking orchestral effects appropriate to the subject of the poem his imagination is fertile. This composition was played with remarkable virtuosity.

Mr. Gericke devoted his first Boston programme this season entirely to a commemoration of the late Antonin Dvorák. It was hoped that he would repeat that programme in New York, or at least part of it. Brooklyn, to-night is to be favored with a Dvorák number, but Manhattan is ignored, although it was here that Dvorák lived three years and wrote his three greatest works. The omission is hardly atoned for by the fact that to-morrow afternoon's Carnegie Hall programme of the Boston orchestra includes a symphony by Dr. Dvorák's pupil, Josef Suk; for Suk is far from being a Dvorák. So we must look to the Philharmonic concert next week for a performance in memory of Dvorák.

Telegram Nov. 4

Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall.

For a large and loyal following the musical season opens rightly with the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is a point of precedence they cannot concede to any other performance, even to an opera, however widely heralded. So it happens that this first night each year fills Carnegie Hall with two exceedingly familiar groups of faces on either side of the leader's desk. The audience, from long familiarity, scanned the close ranks of the violins, which present scarcely a new face, while the more bulky instruments in the rear were found to be still in familiar hands. There was the same crowd last night taxing the utmost capacity of the hall, the rich glow of the instruments, the same hum of expectation instantly arrested by the leader's baton and the loud voice of the symphony.

The programme offered last night was a characteristic one. And Mr. Gerrike, of course, conducted. The concert opened with Beethoven's Symphony in B flat major, No. 4. The interpretation of a Beethoven symphony under Mr. Gerrike's leadership is of course familiar. The criticism that the leader lacks personality and enthusiasm, sacrificing in this way the personal note to perfect technique, is obviously a criticism that in part at least answers itself. The fault, if it is not too harsh a term, was less obvious last night than at some concerts. The novelties of the programme were the symphonies in E major, by Joseph Suk, and the scherzo L'Apprenti Sorcier, by Paul Dukas. The latter was played last night for the first time. The soloist of the evening was Mr. Willie Hess. He played a Hungarian concerto for the violin, by Joachim. His number aroused the most enthusiastic applause of the evening.

For the closing number Mr. Gerrike had selected the familiar overture to Wagner's immortal "Tannhäuser." After a long concert even by the Boston Symphony Orchestra the enthusiast finds himself in a mood for just such a number. The arrangement of the programme is a return in part to the method of some years since. Last year, it will be remembered, the symphonies usually came at the close of the performance. Before a large audience, and obviously a descriminating one, the orchestra more than sustained its high reputation.

My Evening Sun Nov. 4

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

BEETHOVEN BOMB WHERE POLITICAL HARMONY KILLED.

Boston Orchestra, With Never a Note of Recent Union Contest, Opens Its New York Season as Happily as if No Dvorak Memorial Had Proved Its Hoodoo at Home—A New Soloist in the Ranks and a New Dancing Scherzo by Dukas.

Carnegie Hall came to its own last night, or, rather, they came to it, just as once happened in the case of Mohammed and his mountain. The pilgrims arrived in purple and fine linen, not to say also in carriages and automobiles. They left their lamps a-burning along Fifty-seventh street and Seventh avenue. For the first time this season they woke the halls of music from a nightmare of campaign rallies and crowds tumultuous and spellbinders long on talk. O tempora! O mores! Oh, the wind and the brass of these town criers, and the stringing they doubtless gave one another from the same stage. With one or two recent meetings contributing a few choice Richard Strauss effects to the New York political harmony, it was no wonder that the bomb of Beethoven burst with sensational effect over these silent places of the local concert field.

Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, which Berlioz characterized as "lively, nimble, joyous, of a heavenly sweetness," opened the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new year. Its scherzo and skipping finale were played with dizzy virtuosity, tempered with discretion. After ten minutes of chattering intermission, Prof. Willy Hess, Mr. Gericke's new concert master, played the forty minute Hungarian Concerto of Joachim, and was four times heartily, almost noisily, recalled. Then a mere novelty was received with raised eyebrows. And, finally, the orchestra showed how a "Tannhäuser" overture might be played. With grand opera yet two weeks off, the piece was welcome. Everybody and everything was welcome, the house to its big band of familiar faces at every viol and horn, the orchestra to its big audience that packed every last row.

There was not a jarring note. In the reestablishment of music's sway, who could have guessed that here of late had been the Port Arthur of isms and anti-isms? Who could have thought that, while the political fight ends in a few days more, there was another contest between Major Henry L. Higginson and the Boston musical unions, in which there was no election day, no end in sight at all?

The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its twenty-fourth year this fall, and its nineteenth in New York last night. Conductor Gericke began his twelfth. There was reason enough why the performance of a body of men so long and so intimately associated should be a finished product of mutual understanding. The particular programme had already been performed in Boston two weeks ago, just as to-morrow's entire matinée bill was given at Symphony Hall last week. Both concerts had been repeated in cities south of here, Baltimore, Washington, Philadelphia, on the monthly tour. Indeed, the orchestra has played but one programme, in addition to these two, on its home stage this season.

Conductor Wilhelm Gericke arranged for the opening concert of the Boston season a memorial to Anton Dvorak. Conductor Gericke is as absolute in artistic control as Managers C. A. Ellis and F. R. Comee in practical affairs under Mr. Higginson's organization. No one could veto the memorial plan. There is nothing particularly funereal about the Dvorak "New World" symphony either. But it has a graveyard rabbit's foot dirge for its adagio, which, taken at the same time with Dvorak's "Stabat Mater," was one too many for the superstitious among Mr. Gericke's merry men. There were those who declared that they had started the year with a funeral, and that the hoodoo was bound to work out somewhere. It was a matter of days only before the union dispute became public.

To a listener who heard that memorial concert, a startling contrast was offered last evening. The New York season, at least, started under all the good auspices. If music is a medicine, here was tonic for a dozen orchestras suffering from internal complications. Beethoven and Wagner were the main prescription.

Paul Dukas's Scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," after a ballad of Goethe, and that in turn after a classic original, was a novelty that called up the quixotic musical fairy tales of Richard Strauss. But, like the perfect "Dance of Death" of Saint Saëns, this was a gallop from start to finish, even if a bewitched broomstick was supposed to set the pace. Its fin de siècle harmonies would arouse the most weary routinière.

Dukas himself, one of the few Frenchmen who ever wrote a piano sonata, is 30 years old. His master, Guiraud, was born not in "old" but New Orleans. Dukas "has been for several years music critic of the 'Revue Hebdomadaire' and he was also the critic of the 'Chronique des Arts.'" like a Roman senator, this critic may smile when he meets himself among the Immortals, but we only hope his critiques are as smart as his music, and as refreshing.

Prof. Willy Hess is not a man to be considered as a soloist alone. Tall, quiet, bearded, dark and determined, he is evidently a player who counts in the ensemble as well as on a pedestal. His solo performance was true and forcible beyond the dreams of most concert masters, and his applause from conductor and orchestra showed that he is not what the Yankees call a square peg in a round hole. Hess is a fit. Born in 1859 at Mannheim, he played with the Thomas Orchestra in America at 10 years of age and went back to Europe seven years later to study with Joachim.

In Europe he stayed, with responsible appointments at Frankfort, Rotterdam, Cologne, Manchester and London. It was a Royal Conservatory professorship that he gave up to come to Boston. His local introduction last night was a personal success of no mean proportions. The concerto is most interesting in its first movement and least so in its last, but the quiet intervening "Romanze" disclosed an unexpected vein of poetic feeling in Hess's make-up. As for the Gypsy airs, he looked quite civilized enough to know better. But either his ringing tone dominated the orchestra, or else Conductor Gericke's musical background was itself a work of art.

Nov. 6,

THE WORLD: SUND

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHARMS ONCE MORE

Audience Enthusiastically Welcomes the Eccentric Pianist De Pachmann.

The first of this season's Boston Symphony matinees occurred yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. The event drew a big audience; also did it serve to reintroduce to our ears and eyes the beloved but loquacious pianist Vladimir de Pachmann.

De Pachmann has been missing from the familiar local concert route for several seasons, but evidently his memory has been kept much alive, for there was great interest displayed in his reappearance yesterday.

This pianist has always had the trick of interlarding his performance with comments that are not to be found in the score of the music nor in the programme books. This habit has grown much worse with him. He chattered and grimaced incessantly yesterday afternoon; he found fault with the height of the piano stool and made no secret of it to any one in the hall, nor did he think it at all immodest to comment favorably whenever a fleet, smooth run had been purled out under his Russian fingers. With the man who turned the music—for this eccentricissionist requires that music be placed on the rack, although he hardly glances at it—he conversed unreservedly. He grinned at the audience, and during the last movements of Chopin's Second Concerto he bobbed up and down as energetically as the piston of a Sandy Hook boat.

Between smirks, bobs and monologues De Pachmann managed to play the Chopin Concerto No. 2 with marvellously even technique and admirably velvety touch. True, he exaggerated wofully, taking liberties with the composer as he did with the audience. But it is mellifluous playing, nevertheless, and that beauty of touch atones for many musical, unmusical and personal eccentricities. It would be much more enjoyable and less comical if De Pachmann were made to play behind a screen.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra filled the balance of the music-laden afternoon with Weber's "Oberon" Overture and Suk's E major symphony. Both works have been heard here—the former on numberless times—so they were exciting in no way save to force into notice the wonderful tonal quality of the orchestra. Willy Hess was the concert-master, and it seemed that his presence lent a virility to the strings that had been missing all last season. Mr. Gericke conducted, with a greater show of temperament than has been his wont. Especially in the Weber Overture was there admirable swing and force.

The audience was enthusiastic, applauding De Pachmann with particular vigor. The little man of grotesque manners bowed and smirked, but a couple of unmusical porters closed the piano and pushed it out of the way of tempting encores.

My Sun, Nov. 6. N

THE BOSTON PLAYERS AGAIN.

VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN THE SOLOIST AT THE MATINEE.

He Plays Chopin's F Minor Concerto According to His Own Sweet Will—Joseph Suk's E Minor Symphony Heard for the Second Time in This City—Weber's "Oberon" Overture Also Played.

The first matinée concert of the nineteenth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city took place yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. The programme consisted of Weber's "Oberon" overture, the F minor piano concerto of Chopin and Joseph Suk's E minor symphony. The solo performer was Vladimir de Pachmann, the Russian pianist.

The solo feature of the concert deserves to be dismissed without consideration. It was unworthy of the dignity of criticism, of the occasion, of the orchestra and of art. But it would be idle to deny that many sincere lovers of music, who nevertheless do not take the trouble to study the works brought before them, are befooled by the exquisite technical delicacy of such a player as Pachmann, by his reticence in tone, by his fluent treatment of cantabile passages and above all by the unsurpassed smoothness and crystalline clearness of his scales.

Therefore such an assertion as that herein made has to be supported by some explanation. Let it stand, then, as the record of the hour that yesterday's performance of the F minor concerto was in its general conception and in most of its particulars false not only to the spirit, but to the letter of the composer. Scarcely a single page of it was not falsely read, and the entire interpreation was marred by freakish eccentricities of tempo, dynamics, accentuation and coloring.

It was simply another of those disclosures of the personal idiosyncrasies of this pianist, of which thoroughly informed students of piano literature have become quite weary in the course of years. Mr. Pachmann is set up by many as the leading specialist in Chopin. As a matter of fact he apparently has no settled convictions as to the reading of any of the master's works, but plays them according to the fancy of the moment. This is not the method of an artist.

Mr. Suk's symphony was made known to New Yorkers by the Philharmonic Society and Emil Paur, its then conductor, at the concerts of Nov. 16 and 17, 1900. It made a favorable impression and its reproduction was worth while. Suk is still young, only 31, and it is well that his works should have the benefit of hearings. A Bohemian and a pupil of Antonin Dvorak, he exhibits in his composition the fluent melody, the clearness of form, the firm grasp of polyphonic method and the richness of instrumentation found in the writings of his master.

The E minor symphony contains in place of a scherzo an intermezzo which is deliciously piquant in thematic subject and charmingly written throughout. The finale has only one principal motive; the second is subsidiary and episodical, so much so, indeed, that some critics have denied that there is a second subject at all.

The matter is of small moment, except in so far as it points to a departure from the classic idea of duality of subject. Some of the earliest symphonists used but one theme for a movement, and the resultant barrenness was often the fruit of small orchestral technic and inelastic methods of composition rather than of the form itself.

Suk's second movement, a development of a folk song theme in a series of orchestral combinations, shows a fine command of the technic of orchestral composition. The climax is stirring and the closing passage of the elegiac finale is beautiful in color and treatment.

The chief fault of the composition is one not unnatural in a young man rejoicing in his strength. The composer is too prodigal of heaped up effects. Doubtless he will in the course of time, if he has not done so already, find it wise to be more continent.

The performance of the symphony was admirable in every respect. Mr. Gericke conducted the music with manifest sympathy and the players entered upon their part of the task with enthusiasm. Of the performance of the Weber overture, too, only words of praise can be printed. It is an old battle horse of Mr. Gericke's and as long as the Boston orchestra has such a body of strings it will never be played without brilliant effect. Possibly when he put it on the programme Mr. Gericke was thinking of that happy day nineteen years ago when he first conducted it in this town in the old Steinway Hall and the audience rose to its feet and cheered him and his men as the last chord clanged upon the vibrant air.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA'S SECOND CONCERT

Weber's Oberon Overture and Suk's Symphony Played.

A GOOD INTERPRETATION

Brilliant Performance by the Orchestra —The Pianist's Wonderful Art and Its Blemishes.

The second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its first visit to New York, given yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall, was quite as brilliant as the first so far as the playing of the orchestra itself was concerned. Nothing could have surpassed the dazzling splendor of Weber's "Oberon" overture as it was performed.

The work has begun to lose the bloom of its romantic freshness for many modern ears, and the "Weber flourish" has a certain suggestion of an old-fashioned glory. Yet Mr. Gericke's reading was one of absolute conviction. The symphony was Josef Suk's in E major, which the Boston Orchestra had not played here before, though it had been heard four years ago from the Philharmonic Society under Mr. Paur very soon after its publication. This, too, was played with a remarkable intensity of expression, gorgeous tonal color, and an absolute identification with all the composer's moods. It was a superb interpretation.

Suk is Dvorak's son-in-law, and the suggestion of Dvorak's influence is inevitable. But there is very much more than this relationship to suggest the great Bohemian composer. Suk discloses in the symphony a close spiritual and artistic kinship with him. He not only exploits the same national traits and with a similar warmth of imagination, but he also has submitted to Dvorak's influence in his general scheme of treatment, in turns of expression, in melodic characteristics, the persistent recurrence of certain figures and rhythmic peculiarities, and especially in the richness of his instrumentation.

It is easy to push the suggestion too far, given the starting point of the connection between the two men; but it seems certain that without Dvorak Suk's symphony would never have become what it is. It has many delightful pages; there are strong ideas in it, vigorously and euphoniously expressed. The first movement seems to mark the composer's highest sustained flight; the slow movement, which is a series of variations on a theme of folk-song character, though not formally so designated, is the least spontaneous. The third movement has something of the character of the furiant, that peasant dance that Dvorak appropriated and developed in his own symphonic writing. Suk cannot lay any serious claim to the highest originality in this work, for all its cleverness and its ingenious employment of rich resources; but he has given something in it that can afford much pleasure and is likely to survive considerably more than four years longer.

It is difficult to discuss with patience the performance of the soloist of this concert. Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann is in his own way remarkable, wonderful, unique in his powers and in the magic of his art. Such a man has responsibilities above others; but he has never been made to realize them, and he has yielded to the temptations of the Unpardonable Sin against the spirit of music in a peculiarly pitiful manner. He has chosen to make all he does go for the exploitation of himself. It would be an impertinence to speak of the grotesque antics with which he accompanied his playing yesterday except for the effect they had upon the quality of his performance; for to such an audience as the Boston orchestra's they are merely a wearisome and annoying distraction to the eye. But when they help to blemish his playing, as was evidently the case yesterday, they are something worse.

Mr. de Pachmann played Chopin's F minor concerto. The marvelous, thrice marvelous, beauty of his touch was there, (though the instrument upon which he played did not permit of its full realization,) and the exquisite perfection of his technique, that mocks all the literary metaphors that can be applied to it. There were poetic moments in his reading of the concerto when it seemed as if the spirit of Chopin himself was embodied in it. There was much of the characteristic rhythm of the final rondo. But the first movement was on the whole inexpressively played. Rhythms were distorted or left uncertain, and the singing theme was set forth without warmth or conviction.

The slow movement had little nobility, little breadth, and the whole effect seemed fragmentary and petty. The truth was that the player's attention was often elsewhere. It is difficult to call him a great artist, even at his best, for great artistry implies qualities beyond and above sensuous charm. What Mr. de Pachmann offered was enthusiastically appreciated at its true worth.

My Herald, Nov 6, 1904.

MR. DE PACHMANN IS HEARD AGAIN

Russian Pianist in Carnegie Hall Receives Notable Welcome After Several Years' Absence.

The first matinee concert of the Boston Orchestra was given at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, the audience duplicating the great size and brilliance of that on Thursday night. Mr. Gericke's programme was short and was performed splendidly. The chief feature of interest was the reappearance after several years of Vladimir de Pachmann, a Russian pianist, and the remarkable welcome he received.

The programme's three numbers were cleverly chosen and put together admirably. Weber's overture to "Oberon," which headed the list, led naturally into the poetic F minor concerto of Chopin, and found a suitable conclusion in Joseph Suk's fanciful and highly colored E major symphony. The "Oberon" overture has never been more charmingly played here. So interpreted it will hold its title to a place in the concert room.

The Suk symphony was once played four years ago at a Philharmonic concert. The composer's originality is undeniable, but it relates rather to workmanship than to invention. The work is full of really fascinating periods, but is equally full of reminiscences; now Beethoven, now Mendelssohn, now Schumann, now Dvorak are suggested. For all that, it is well worth the pains with which Mr. Gericke and his men presented it.

Mr. de Pachmann plays Chopin always as he plays nothing else, and yesterday at certain points he surpassed himself. Every one, of course, was on the look out for his eccentricities at the piano, and every one was rewarded.

He quarrelled with his stool at the outset, chatted unconcernedly during the orchestral prelude and interludes and went through his usual series of gestures while playing, the most amusing of these being his triumphant look at the audience at the close of each difficult passage.

There was ample reason for self-satisfaction. His interpretation was at once a prodigious technical feat and a splendid exhibition of musicianship. The audience, after recalling him many times, continued a pattering of hands half through the intermission.

The room was unpleasantly warm and close yesterday.

[28]

My Post, Nov 7

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

Two Concerts.

For the opening number of Saturday afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Mr. Gericke close Weber's "Oberon" overture. This overture is both brilliant and romantic, but while its brilliant features were admirably displayed, the romantic side was barely hinted at by the Bostonians and their leader. What that romantic side is may be found admirably revealed by those interested in a most suggestive little book, 'Der Moderne Dirigent,' by Arthur Laser, recently published by Breitkopf & Härtel, an essay ranking in interest with Wagner's and Seidl's on that subject.

The second number on the programme introduced the famous Chopin specialist, Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann, who had not been heard here for several seasons. He was most cordially greeted and was repeatedly recalled after his performance, but gave no extras, as that is against the Boston Orchestra's rules. He chose Chopin's F minor concerto, and played it daintily but rather superficially. To be sure, it is not by any means one of that master's deepest works. The eminent Russian pianist will have a better opportunity to display his talent at his Mendelssohn Hall recital tomorrow afternoon.

As for the concluding number of this concert, the E minor symphony of Josef Suk, it seemed a pity to waste the time of so good an orchestra and so large and good-natured an audience on such an uninspired work. Suk, the son-in-law and pupil of Dvorák, learned from that master the technique of composition and orchestration, but what Dvorák could not teach him was how to create original melodies. The Suk symphony was played once before in this city; that was only fair, but as it was found to be mere Kapellmeistermusik it should have been allowed to rest in peace thereafter. Brahms said of Dvorák: "Dem fällt immer etwas ein." The same, alas! can be said of few of the composers now living; most of them have nothing new to tell us.

Regrettable proof of this assertion was also given at the first concert of the New York Symphony Society yesterday afternoon. Mr. Walter Damrosch did his best to make this a notable occasion, and if he failed it was due to circumstances beyond his control. He produced two novelties—Elgar's "In the South" and Mahler's fourth symphony—and both proved to be of the species of Kapellmeistermusik—skilfully written, but utterly uninspired, and painfully long drawn out. "Will he never stop?" was probably the dominant thought in the minds of most of those who heard these two novelties. Instead of calling his new overture "In the South," Sir Edward Elgar might have more appropriately called it "Hay Music." He is evidently making hay while the sun of popularity shines for him, and he works as hard as any harvester. For melodic originality one looks in vain. Dem fällt nie etwas ein. Why waste time describing or discussing such ephemeral music?

As for Herr Mahler, we plead guilty of having repeatedly, during recent years, urged our conductors to give us a sample of his music, since he is much talked about in Germany, and it seemed unjust to ignore him while giving his colleague Richard Strauss so much of our attention. Having heard this symphony, we plead, contrary to the usual policy of the Evening Post, for a prohibitive import duty on his other works. Whatever those works may be, in writing his fourth symphony Herr Mahler committed the unpardonable sin of being dull. For a whole hour he talks, talks, talks, without having anything to say; it is water, water, everywhere, and not a drop to drink. One marvels at the self-complacency and lack of self-criticism with which so excellent a musician can write, write, write, without any audible plan or object; for that Mahler is an excellent musician is well known. He probably has no superior among living interpreters of the great masters, and he has shown remarkable gifts as an operatic manager in Vienna; but the creative gift is a thing apart, which is given to very, very few.

Like Richard Strauss, Herr Mahler is given to making fantastic orchestral noises when nothing in the way of musical ideas occurs to him. Like Strauss, too, he must have his fantastic "programme" (always a good thing for advertising purposes, as it gives the journalists something to write about); in the present case a Bavarian folksong; but we shall take care to avoid this trap for the unwary. By far the best thing in the symphony is the last movement—a soprano solo; but this, too, is spoiled by its excessive length. Less would have been infinitely more; all that is worth hearing in Mahler's symphony could have been compressed into five minutes.

The soprano solo was sung by Mme. Etta de Montjau, who also contributed some dull songs by Bassani, Dupare, and Strauss. She has a voice of pleasant quality, but no [illegible] body, and she sings with considerable [illegible] not choose [illegible] under the circumstances, the only good music of the afternoon was one of the Liszt rhapsodies; Mr. Damrosch and his orchestra fell far short of playing this with the requisite virtuosity, yet it aroused a storm of enthusiasm—for here, for once, was genuine melody in an inspired artistic setting.

My Staats, Nov. 6

Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie Orchesters.

Gestern gab das Bostoner Symphonieorchester sein erstes Nachmittagskonzert in Carnegie Hall. Da Wladimir de Pachmann als Solist auf dem Programm stand, mochten gar manche Leute mit etwas bangen Erwartungen gekommen sein. Diejenigen, die sein Abschiedskonzert vor vier Jahren, in demselben Saale, noch in der Erinnerung hatten, mußten mit Recht befürchten, daß dieser talentvolle, aber, wie es scheint, rettungslos einer unästhetischen Faxenmacherei verfallene Pianist sich nicht derjenigen Würde befleißigen würde, die zu einem ernsten Konzert gehört. Und in dieser bangen Erwartung wurden sie leider nicht angenehm enttäuscht. Es ist wahr, Pachmann hat sich in manchem Konzert, in dem er zu spielen hatte, schon viel unerträglicher geberdet, aber was er gestern in Bezug auf ungehörige Zuthaten und musikalische Verzerrungen leistete, war wahrlich auch genug, um dem andächtigen Zuhörer die Zornesröthe auf die Stirn zu treiben. Es ist falsch, anzunehmen, daß dieser irritirte und irritirende Mensch nicht anders könne, daß er seine Nerven nicht unter Kontrolle habe; denn als er bei seinem letzten Hiersein schließlich von maßgebender Seite eine ernste Verwarnung bekam, ließ er seine Gesichtsverdrehungen, Konzertreden und sonstigen Mätzchen bei Seite und spielte wunderschön, bis er eben in jenem Abschiedskonzert seiner frivolen Gewohnheit die Zügel schießen ließ. Er hätte gestern, wenn er gewollt, das Chopin'sche F-moll Concert ebenfalls wunderschön spielen können, denn er besitzt, wie alle Welt weiß, eine ganz außerordentliche Technik, die sich grade für das Chopinspiel eignet, und er hat musikalische Instinkte, die ihn gerade auf das Chopinspiel verweisen. Diese seltenen Vorzüge nicht auszunutzen, sondern sie gradezu zu ironisiren, ist aber eine Sünde gegen den heiligen Geist der Kunst, für die es keine Verzeihung giebt.

Eingeweihte wissen längst, daß Pachmann's mimische und sonstige Mätzchen nicht unwillkürlich Folgen einer hypersensitiven Künstlernatur, sondern beabsichtigt und berechnet sind. Pachmann will auffallen, will Aufsehen erregen, und während er das durch sein Spiel zu thun vermöchte, zieht er es vor, diesen Zweck durch alle möglichen Ungehörigkeiten zu erreichen. Selbst wenn man ihm das Grimassenschneiden als unüberwindliche Gewohnheitssklaverei hingehen lassen wollte, bleibt doch noch gar zu viel übrig, für das sich nicht einmal mildernde Umstände beibringen lassen. Pachmann spielte nach Noten, trotzdem er das zweite Chopin'sche Concert doch schon etliche hunderte von Malen öffentlich gespielt hat; spielt er doch fast niemals ein anderes als dieses Concert! Aber der junge Mann, der neben ihm am Clavier saß, schien weniger zum Notenumschlagen bestimmt zu sein, als um Herrn Pachmann Gelegenheit zu geben, sich während der Tutti und sogar während seiner Soli mit ihm zu unterhalten. Wenn man diese Unterhaltung auch nicht im ganzen Saale hören konnte, so verstand man sie doch so ziemlich aus der lebhaften Mimik des doppelt Beschäftigten. Als zum Beispiel die kleine Hornfanfare zum Beginn der Coda im letzten Satze wie gewöhnlich mißglückte, mußte man aus Pachmann's Gestikulation annehmen, daß er eine Bemerkung wie „da haben wir die Pastete" machte.

Ist bei einem solchen Gebahren Hingebung an die künstlerische Aufgabe möglich? Ist unter solchen Umständen ein harmonisches Zusammenwirken mit dem Orchester denkbar? Gewiß nicht; und in der That war davon denn auch gestern nichts zu spüren. Nie zuvor hat Pachmann dieses Konzert hier weniger gut gespielt. Daß er alle diese Filigranpassagen beherrscht, wie wenige andere Pianisten, rettet ihn nicht; ebensowenig retten ihn seine seltenen Anschlagskünste. Der erste Satz, den Pachmann übrigens niemals groß und nobel genug interpretirt, verlangt Ernst und Würde der Auffassung, und das Passagenwerk insbesondere muß als integrirender Bestandtheil des architektonischen Baus, und nicht als Geläufigkeitsübung dargestellt werden. Pachmann spielte es gestern mit einer Indifferenz, die sensitive Zuhörer förmlich insultirt haben muß. Manchmal schien's, als habe er nur den Zweck, dem Orchester davonzulaufen. Und selbst der letzte Satz, den derselbe Pianist hier schon mehrere Male mit ganz unvergleichlich pikanntem Rhytmus gespielt hat, wurde von ihm gestern an manchen Stellen förmlich ironisirt.

Aber was nützt das Protestiren? Pachmann wird wahrscheinlich nicht eher zum Bewußtsein kommen, als bis einmal ein entrüstetes Publikum ihn auszischt. Es ist ein Jammer, zuzusehen, wie ein Mann das ihm verliehene köstliche Pfund vergräbt!

Im Uebrigen war das gestrige Concert

My American, Nov. 6

PACHMANN TRIUMPH IS SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Noted Pianist Scores Extraordinary Success with Boston Orchestra, Being Recalled Six Times by Enraptured Hearers

Vladimir de Pachmann made amazing grimaces at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert yesterday, but he played like an enchanter, or an angel.

It was Chopin's F minor Concerto No. 2, and the player was never in a finer mood to make it entirely expresive. His eyes and mouth, his hair and beard, the movements of his body mimicked and parodied his thought.

The artist and the mocker were united in him. All the intensity of passion, the individuality of art of Chopen's work was in the pianist's execution of it. All the mimicry of caricatures was in his face. At moments the smile of the rapture was on one side of it only. And so, after the concert, he was asked:

"Did you make your grimaces on one side of your face purposely?"

He laughed and looked with question marks in his eyes.

"Were you affected by the fact that when SChopin wrote the concerto that you were playing he let his whiskers grow out on the right side, saying 'The public sees only the right side of my face?'"

Vladimir de Pachmann laughed aga'n, but refused to answer. His success had been extraordinary. Six times the audience had recalled him with applause. Weber's "Oberon" overrose and Suk's E Major Symphony attained under Wilhelm Gericke's leadership great heights of elegance and charm.

My Globe, Nov 7

Saturday and Sunday are the working days of our musical week. On Saturday afternoon, at the concert of the Boston Orchestra, Suk's unfamiliar symphony in E-major was played for the first time here under favorable conditions, and Pachmann, the Russian pianist, reappeared after some years' absence. An audience of fine quality filled Carnegie Hall, gave the pianist four or five recalls, and applauded the symphony heartily.

Sunday afternoon, in the same room, Damrosch and his orchestra began their series of fortnightly concerts at the moderate prices that succeeded well ten months ago, and the hall was nearly full. The programme was more severe than those that Damrosch chose last winter. On it were Elgar's new overture, "In the South," for the first time in New York, and the fourth symphony of Mahler, the Viennese conductor and composer, for the first time in America. The house applauded the overture eagerly, but in spite of its obvious interest the length of one or two movements in the symphony wearied it. To De Montjau, a French soprano, who sang for the first time in New York, it was cordial.

A new symphony and an unfamiliar one, a new overture, a returning virtuoso, and a new singer, all in twenty-four hours, ought to be a record for New York. It is almost worthy of Berlin, with its 800 concerts a year.

My Sun, Nov. 7

DE PACHMANN'S [illegible]

Gericke Surpasses Himself at Concert of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Such a performance as the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall evokes unbounded enthusiasm. It is not an everyday affair, for even Mr. Gericke's band of virtuosos does not attain equal heights on every trip to this city. There were two incidents of great interest—the first appearance this season of Vladimir de Pachmann and the performance, for the first time at these concerts, of Josef Suk's symphony in E major, opus 14. Both the Chopin concertos, No. 2 in [illegible], which Mr. De Pachmann had chosen to play, and the talented Bohemian's composition, were given almost without flaw, the only offering of the concert not proclaimed with perfect eloquence being the opening number, Weber's "Oberon" overture, which Mr. Gericke's careful methods robbed of much of its exultant joy.

De Pachmann's work will be noticed at greater length later, for the pianist will appear soon in three recitals. His reputation rests mainly on his remarkable interpretations of Chopin music and the laughable eccentricities of manner with which he favors his audiences. His title to fame was revealed to the utmost yesterday afternoon. Nothing more ludicrous can be imagined than De Pachmann making grimaces, now toward the auditorium, now toward the man who turned the pages for him—for this pianist, like Pugno, kept the printed music before his eyes. At the same time it would be difficult to conceive of a more ideal interpretation of the Chopin concerto than that which he offered. A strange genius this—externally bristling with affectations, inwardly, at least as revealed in his Chopin, as genuine as the purest gold.

To the ear De Pachmann's performances was absolutely without affectation and pregnant with true poetic eloquence. This artist manipulates the keyboard tenderly, gracefully. He avoids mere display. Like Joseffy, he weaves a tonal web as fine as gossamer. Yet there is not a suggestion of coldness or exaggerated sentimentality. Tender, yet manly; emotional, yet reserved, he tells a story on the piano that speaks to the heart in unmistakable terms. Every note, it would seem, has dramatic significance for him, and by means of his wonderful art of phrasing he conveys it to the understanding of his listeners.

Suk's symphony, which has been played in New York by the Philharmonic Society under Emil Paur, looms up among the most interesting and original orchestral compositions Mr. Gericke has given here within recent years. The distinctive characteristics are not on the surface. The themes, though Slavic in suggestion and not without meaning, are not of great individuality, and the orchestration is not astonishing in the modern sense. It is rather in the subtle treatment of his material that Suk excels—in his rhythmical contours, his unexpected modulations, his refined contrapuntal work. Much of the simple expressiveness and exuberance of Dvorak is in this symphony; much, also, of the depth and artistic care of Brahms. Withal, the work is of great beauty and melodic appeal.

Mr. Gericke surpassed himself. He was actually enthusiastic and worked unsparingly. The result was a performance not alone impeccable in ensemble, but stirring as well.

My Town & Country, Nov. 12

The first two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have given the greatest pleasure to audiences that have filled every seat in Carnegie Hall, from floor to gallery. When Prof. Willy Hess, the new concert master of the orchestra, played the violin solo in Joachim's concerto, the orchestra joined in the spontaneous and generous applause, and he returned again and again to acknowledge the greeting.

My Post, Nov. 7

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

Two Concerts.

For the opening number of Saturday afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Mr. Gericke close Weber's "Oberon" overture. This overture is both brilliant and romantic, but while its brilliant features were admirably displayed, the romantic side was barely hinted at by the Bostonians and their leader. What that romantic side is may be found admirably revealed by those interested in a most suggestive little book, 'Der Moderne Dirigent,' by Arthur Laser, recently published by Breitkopf & Härtel, an essay ranking in interest with Wagner's and Seidl's on that subject.

The second number on the programme introduced the famous Chopin specialist, Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann, who had not been heard here for several seasons. He was most cordially greeted and was repeatedly recalled after his performance, but gave no extras, as that is against the Boston Orchestra's rules. He chose Chopin's F minor concerto, and played it daintily but rather superficially. To be sure, it is not by any means one of that master's deepest works. The eminent Russian pianist will have a better opportunity to display his talent at his Mendelssohn Hall recital tomorrow afternoon.

As for the concluding number of this concert, the E minor symphony of Josef Suk, it seemed a pity to waste the time of so good an orchestra and so large and good-natured an audience on such an uninspired work. Suk, the son-in-law and pupil of Dvorák, learned from that master the technique of composition and orchestration, but what Dvorák could not teach him was how to create original melodies. The Suk symphony was played once before in this city; that was only fair, but as it was found to be mere Kapellmeistermusik it should have been allowed to rest in peace thereafter. Brahms said of Dvorák: "Dem fällt immer etwas ein." The same, alas! can be said of few of the composers now living; most of them have nothing new to tell us.

Regrettable proof of this assertion was also given at the first concert of the New York Symphony Society yesterday afternoon. Mr. Walter Damrosch did his best to make this a notable occasion, and if he failed it was due to circumstances beyond his control. He produced two novelties—Elgar's "In the South" and Mahler's fourth symphony—and both proved to be of the species of Kapellmeistermusik—skilfully written, but utterly uninspired, and painfully long drawn out. "Will he never stop?" was probably the dominant thought in the minds of most of those who heard these two novelties. Instead of calling his new overture "In the South," Sir Edward Elgar might have more appropriately called it "Hay Music." He is evidently making hay while the sun of popularity shines for him, and he works as hard as any harvester. For melodic originality one looks in vain. Dem fällt nie etwas ein. Why waste time describing or discussing such ephemeral music?

As for Herr Mahler, we plead guilty of having repeatedly, during recent years, urged our conductors to give us a sample of his music, since he is much talked about in Germany, and it seemed unjust to ignore him while giving his colleague Richard Strauss so much of our attention. Having heard this symphony, we plead, contrary to the usual policy of the Evening Post, for a prohibitive import duty on his other works. Whatever those works may be, in writing his fourth symphony Herr Mahler committed the unpardonable sin of being dull. For a whole hour he talks, talks, talks, without having anything to say; it is water, water, everywhere, and not a drop to drink. One marvels at the self-complacency and lack of self-criticism with which so excellent a musician can write, write, write, without any audible plan or object; for that Mahler is an excellent musician is well known. He probably has no superior among living interpreters of the great masters, and he has shown remarkable gifts as an operatic manager in Vienna; but the creative gift is a thing apart, which is given to very, very few.

Like Richard Strauss, Herr Mahler is given to making fantastic orchestral noises when nothing in the way of musical ideas occurs to him. Like Strauss, too, he must have his fantastic "programme" (always a good thing for advertising purposes, as it gives the journalists something to write about); in the present case a Bavarian folksong; but we shall take care to avoid this trap for the unwary. By far the best thing in the symphony is the last movement—a soprano solo; but this, too, is spoiled by its excessive length. Less would have been infinitely more; all that is worth hearing in Mahler's symphony could have been compressed into five minutes.

The soprano solo was sung by Mme. Etta de Montjau, who also contributed some dull songs by Bassani, Dupare, and Strauss. She has a voice of pleasant quality, but no great body, and she sings with considerable taste, but why not choose better songs? Under the circumstances, the only good music of the afternoon was one of the Liszt rhapsodies; Mr. Damrösch and his orchestra fell far short of playing this with the requisite virtuosity, yet it aroused a storm of enthusiasm—for here, for once, was genuine melody in an inspired artistic setting.

My Staats, Nov. 6

Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie Orchesters.

Gestern gab das Bostoner Symphonieorchester sein erstes Nachmittagskonzert in Carnegie Hall. Da Wladimir de Pachmann als Solist auf dem Programm stand, mochten gar manche Leute mit etwas bangen Erwartungen gekommen sein. Diejenigen, die sein Abschiedskonzert vor vier Jahren, in demselben Saale, noch in der Erinnerung hatten, mußten mit Recht befürchten, daß dieser talentvolle, aber, wie es scheint, rettungslos einer unästhetischen Faxenmacherei verfallene Pianist sich nicht derjenigen Würde befleißigen würde, die zu einem ernsten Konzert gehört. Und in dieser bangen Erwartung wurden sie leider nicht angenehm enttäuscht. Es ist wahr, Pachmann hat sich in manchem Konzert, in dem er zu spielen hatte, schon viel unerträglicher geberdet, aber was er gestern in Bezug auf ungehörige Zuthaten und musikalische Verzerrungen leistete, war wahrlich auch genug, um dem andächtigen Zuhörer die Zornesröthe auf die Stirn zu treiben. Es ist falsch, anzunehmen, daß dieser irritirte und irritirende Mensch nicht anders könne, daß er seine Nerven nicht unter Kontrolle habe; denn als er bei seinem letzten Hiersein schließlich von maßgebender Seite eine ernste Verwarnung bekam, ließ er seine Gesichtsverdrehungen, Konzertreden und sonstigen Mätzchen bei Seite und spielte wunderschön, bis er eben in jenem Abschiedskonzert seiner frivolen Gewohnheit die Zügel schießen ließ. Er hätte gestern, wenn er gewollt, das Chopin'sche F-moll Concert ebenfalls wunderschön spielen können, denn er besitzt, wie alle Welt weiß, eine ganz außerordentliche Technik, die sich grade für das Chopinspiel eignet, und er hat musikalische Instinkte, die ihn gerade auf das Chopinspiel verweisen. Diese seltenen Vorzüge nicht auszunutzen, sondern sie grabezu zu ironisiren, ist aber eine Sünde gegen den heiligen Geist der Kunst, für die es keine Verzeihung giebt.

Eingeweihte wissen längst, daß Pachmann's mimische und sonstige Mätzchen nicht unwillkürlich Folgen einer hypersensitiven Künstlernatur, sondern beabsichtigt und berechnet sind. Pachmann will auffallen, will Aufsehen erregen, und während er das durch sein Spiel zu thun vermöchte, zieht er es vor, diesen Zweck durch alle möglichen Ungehörigkeiten zu erreichen. Selbst wenn man ihm das Grimassenschneiden als unüberwindliche Gewohnheitssklaverei hingehen lassen wollte, bleibt doch noch gar zu viel übrig, für das sich nicht einmal mildernde Umstände beibringen lassen. Pachmann spielte nach Noten, trotzdem er das zweite Chopin'sche Concert doch schon etliche hunderte von Malen öffentlich gespielt hat; spielt er doch fast niemals ein anderes als dieses Concert! Aber der junge Mann, der neben ihm am Clavier saß, schien weniger zum Notenumschlagen bestimmt zu sein, als um Herrn Pachmann Gelegenheit zu geben, sich während der Tutti und sogar während seiner Soli mit ihm zu unterhalten. Wenn man diese Unterhaltung auch nicht im ganzen Saale hören konnte, so verstand man sie doch so ziemlich aus der lebhaften Mimik des doppelt Beschäftigten. Als zum Beispiel die kleine Hornfanfare zum Beginn der Coda im letzten Satze wie gewöhnlich mißglückte, mußte man aus Pachmann's Gestikulation annehmen, daß er eine Bemerkung wie „da haben wir die Pastete" machte.

Ist bei einem solchen Gebahren Hingebung an die künstlerische Aufgabe möglich? Ist unter solchen Umständen ein harmonisches Zusammenwirken mit dem Orchester denkbar? Gewiß nicht; und in der That war davon denn auch gestern nichts zu spüren. Nie zuvor hat Pachmann dieses Konzert hier weniger gut gespielt. Daß er alle diese Filigranpassagen beherrscht, wie wenige andere Pianisten, rettet ihn nicht; ebensowenig retten ihn seine seltenen Anschlagskünste. Der erste Satz, den Pachmann übrigens niemals groß und nobel genug interpretirt, verlangt Ernst und Würde der Auffassung, und das Passagenwerk insbesondere muß als integrirender Bestandtheil des architektonischen Baus, und nicht als Geläufigkeitsübung dargestellt werden. Pachmann spielte es gestern mit einer Indifferenz, die sensitive Zuhörer förmlich insultirt haben muß. Manchmal schien's, als habe er nur den Zweck, dem Orchester davonzulaufen. Und selbst der letzte Satz, den derselbe Pianist hier schon mehrere Male mit ganz unvergleichlich pikanntem Rhytmus gespielt hat, wurde von ihm gestern an manchen Stellen förmlich ironisirt.

Aber was nützt das Protestiren? Pachmann wird wahrscheinlich nicht eher zum Bewußtsein kommen, als bis einmal ein entrüstetes Publikum ihn auszischt. Es ist ein Jammer, zuzusehen, wie ein Mann das ihm verliehene köstliche Pfund vergräbt!

Im Uebrigen war das gestrige Konzert mäßig genußreich. Das Orchester spielte durchweg mit großer Tonschönheit und technischer Perfection. Die Oberon-Ouverture kam allerdings mehr geschniegelt und polirt, als temperamentvoll heraus, aber die Suk'sche Symphonie erfuhr eine nicht nur genaue, sondern auch kraftvolle Interpretation. Es kann nicht gesagt werden, daß dieses Werk von Dvorak's Schwiegersohn bei erneuter Bekanntschaft gewinnt. Es ist doch mehr Arbeit und Nachahmung von Dvorak, Smetana und Brahms, als eigenes starkes Empfinden und Erfinden darin. Immerhin, die Symphonie ist ein Stück Arbeit, das Achtung verdient. Sie wurde hier zuerst vor etwa vier Jahren unter Emil Paur's Leitung in einem Philharmonischen Konzert gespielt.

My American, Nov. 6

PACHMANN TRIUMPH IS SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Noted Pianist Scores Extraordinary Success with Boston Orchestra, Being Recalled Six Times by Enraptured Hearers

Vladimir de Pachmann made amazing grimaces at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert yesterday, but he played like an enchanter, or an angel.

It was Chopin's F minor Concerto No. 2, and the player was never in a finer mood to make it entirely expresive. His eyes and mouth, his hair and beard, the movements of his body mimicked and parodied his thought.

The artist and the mocker were united in him. All the intensity of passion, the individuality of art of Chopen's work was in the pianist's execution of it. All the mimicry of caricatures was in his face. At moments the smile of the rapture was on one side of it only. And so, after the concert, he was asked:

"Did you make your grimaces on one side of your face purposely?"

He laughed and looked with question marks in his eyes.

"Were you affected by the fact that when SChopin wrote the concerto that you were playing he let his whiskers grow out on the right side, saying 'The public sees only the right side of my face?'"

Vladimir de Pachmann laughed again, but refused to answer. His success had been extraordinary. Six times the audience had recalled him with applause. Weber's "Oberon" overrose and Suk's E Major Symphony attained under Wilhelm Gericke's leadership great heights of elegance and charm.

My Globe, Nov. 7

Saturday and Sunday are the working days of our musical week. On Saturday afternoon, at the concert of the Boston Orchestra, Suk's unfamiliar symphony in E-major was played for the first time here under favorable conditions, and Pachmann, the Russian pianist, reappeared after some years' absence. An audience of fine quality filled Carnegie Hall, gave the pianist four or five recalls, and applauded the symphony heartily.

Sunday afternoon, in the same room, Damrosch and his orchestra began their series of fortnightly concerts at the moderate prices that succeeded well ten months ago, and the hall was nearly full. The programme was more severe than those that Damrosch chose last winter. On it were Elgar's new overture, "In the South," for the first time in New York, and the fourth symphony of Mahler, the Viennese conductor and composer, for the first time in America. The house applauded the overture eagerly, but in spite of its obvious interest the length of one or two movements in the symphony wearied it. To De Montjau, a French soprano, who sang for the first time in New York, it was cordial.

A new symphony and an unfamiliar one, a new overture, a returning virtuoso, and a new singer, all in twenty-four hours, ought to be a record for New York. It is almost worthy of Berlin, with its 800 concerts a year.

My Press, Nov. 6

DE PACHMANN'S GENIUS SHOWN.

Gericke Surpasses Himself at Concert of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Such a performance as the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall evokes unbounded enthusiasm. It is not an everyday affair, for even Mr. Gericke's band of virtuosos does not attain equal heights on every trip to this city. There were two incidents of great interest—the first appearance this season of Vladimir de Pachmann and the performance, for the first time at these concerts, of Josef Suk's symphony in E major, opus 14. Both the Chopin concertos, No. 2 in F minor, which Mr. De Pachmann had chosen to play, and the talented Bohemian's composition, were given almost without flaw, the only offering of the concert not proclaimed with perfect eloquence being the opening number, Weber's "Oberon" overture, which Mr. Gericke's careful methods robbed of much of its exultant joy.

De Pachmann's work will be noticed at greater length later, for the pianist will appear soon in three recitals. His reputation rests mainly on his remarkable interpretations of Chopin music and the laughable eccentricities of manner with which he favors his audiences. His title to fame was revealed to the utmost yesterday afternoon. Nothing more ludicrous can be imagined than De Pachmann making grimaces, now toward the auditorium, now toward the man who turned the pages for him—for this pianist, like Pugno, kept the printed music before his eyes. At the same time it would be difficult to conceive of a more ideal interpretation of the Chopin concerto than that which he offered. A strange genius this—externally bristling with affectations, inwardly, at least as revealed in his Chopin, as genuine as the purest gold.

To the ear De Pachmann's performances was absolutely without affectation and pregnant with true poetic eloquence. This artist manipulates the keyboard tenderly, gracefully. He avoids mere display. Like Joseffy, he weaves a tonal web as fine as gossamer. Yet there is not a suggestion of coldness or exaggerated sentimentality. Tender, yet manly; emotional, yet reserved, he tells a story on the piano that speaks to the heart in unmistakable terms. Every note, it would seem, has dramatic significance for him, and by means of his wonderful art of phrasing he conveys it to the understanding of his listeners.

Suk's symphony, which has been played in New York by the Philharmonic Society under Emil Paur, looms up among the most interesting and original orchestral compositions Mr. Gericke has given here within recent years. The distinctive characteristics are not on the surface. The themes, though Slavic in suggestion and not without meaning, are not of great individuality, and the orchestration is not astonishing in the modern sense. It is rather in the subtle treatment of his material that Suk excels—in his rhythmical contours, his unexpected modulations, his refined contrapuntal work. Much of the simple expressiveness and exuberance of Dvorak is in this symphony; much, also, of the depth and artistic care of Brahms. Withal, the work is of great beauty and melodic appeal.

Mr. Gericke surpassed himself. He was actually enthusiastic and worked unsparingly. The result was a performance not alone impeccable in ensemble, but stirring as well.

My Town & Country, Nov. 12

The first two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have given the greatest pleasure to audiences that have filled every seat in Carnegie Hall, from floor to gallery. When Prof. Willy Hess, the new concert master of the orchestra, played the violin solo in Joachim's concerto, the orchestra joined in the spontaneous and generous applause, and he returned again and again to acknowledge the greeting.

[29]

Town Topics, Nov. 10

CROTCHETS AND QUAVERS

DE PACHMANN, PROFESSOR OF SIMIAN ANTICS, AND A MAHLER SYMPHONY

IF the jibbering, grimacing figure of Vladimir de Pachmann had actually appeared at the end of a long, red-painted stick, instead of being seated at the ivory end of a concert piano, at the Boston Symphony matinee, no sensible person would have been in the least surprised and more of us might have been amused. This virtuoso of eccentricity has been away from us for several seasons, during which time—it would appear—he has been frequenting primates' houses in foreign Zoos and has been practicing mimicry before a hand glass. His efforts were crowned with simian success, for the exhibition he gave here the other afternoon was worthy of a museum or a zoological garden. If his work showed that he did not bring over a whole cage of new tricks, they at least were tricks that should be performed in a cage. It looked almost every moment as though he might leave the piano and with a leap suspend himself agilely from the electrolier over the disgusted head of Wilhelm Gericke; and nothing but a fervent regard for the rules of Carnegie Hall prevented me from offering a bag of peanuts to the little man with the prehensile habits.

It began immediately he came out, when with many gestures and catarrhic snorts he found the seat too high or too low or too something. De Pachmann is an epicure in the matter of seats. But I still fail to find that this is an excuse for his chattering about it to the audience and to the turn-over gentleman at his left—all the while Mr. Gericke was playing the introduction to Chopin's F minor Concerto. From the moment this work began until it was completed de Pachmann busied himself composing a libretto to the music and reciting the words to himself, the audience and the amiable gentleman at his left. There is no need of my going into detail about it, as the public can see it duplicated in Bronx or Central Park any day if they will stand in front of that cage where boys are gathered the thickest.

Don't fancy for a moment that I am indulging my merriment at the expense of this pianist's affliction. De Pachmann is not nearly so idiotic as he acts—if he were, no community would allow him at large. He is simply a spoiled pianist with disgusting public manners that he cultivates because they interest the public and attract attention to de Pachmann. He can stop it easily if it is made worth his while, but so long as he finds public approval for turning a concert-room into a Zoo he is going to continue his performances and even add to his stock of antics. That he has a wonderful touch is well known; also has the fact been heralded abroad that when he wishes to he can play Chopin as can probably no other man alive; but while cutting pranks with the audience he is also cutting pranks with Chopin. There were moments in the larghetto that were simply heavenly—that is, they would have been if the grimacing figure on the platform had not filled the eye with his facial contortions. As it was, the whole ring-tailed exhibition was simply a disgusting one which should not be repeated; de Pachmann should be put into the hands of some animal trainer before he is allowed at large on a concert platform again—either that, or his manager should have a heart-to-heart talk with him before letting down the bars again. Money should not be coaxed from the public on the pretense of hearing a pianist when in reality they are to be shown de Pachmann. Besides, it is a crying shame that so artistic a pianist as de Pachmann should be allowed to go into symphonic vaudeville. He is all too rare a player for that, and I hope that his manners may be curbed so that we really will be permitted to hear once more what a wonderful player he is.

I regretted that the above had to happen at a Boston Symphony concert. The remaining and serious part of the program was devoted to Weber's "Oberon" overture, played exquisitely and with much more dash than Mr. Gericke has liberated here for some time. Also was there the Suk symphony that Paur introduced to us at a Philharmonic concert several seasons ago. Suk is a son-in-law of the late Dvorak; and this symphony is a great-grandchild of the "New World" symphony. There was a greater swing to the work of the strings at this concert than we heard all of last season from this marvelous organization. It may easily have been due to the fact that Willy Hess, the new concert master, was at work. He appeared a few evenings previously as solo performer, playing the fearfully difficult Joachim Hungarian concerto, a composition that sounds as though it were composed principally for the purpose of proving how few violinists there are who can master its difficulties. Hess has a good, firm tone, and his technique is admirable. There was lacking the charm of poetry; but to make one's bow here with so difficult a work is no laughing matter; hence the player's extreme nervousness. Hess is a valuable addition to the orchestra, and Fredericque Comee's philanthropic features were smiling to Brooklyn and back in answer to the congratulations and the dollars that poured into the box office.

Musical Leader, Nov. 10

The Philadelphia Choir.

shine drifting through the foliage of a tree upon the ground. The heavier passages Mr. de Pachmann invested with a skilfully calculated resonance, and the wealth of detail which characterizes the Concerto be brought out with the proper dynamic accentuation which the refined genius of Chopin absolutely demands.

The orchestral numbers on Wednesday's programme were of an agreeable but not notable character. The symphony was the E major composition by Joseph Suk, the young Bohemian, which received its premier in Philadelphia two seasons ago with the local orchestra. The pleasant impressions of Suk's symphonic quality left on that occasion were renewed at this second playing. Distinctly not a great work, it is certainly an enjoyable one. In it the composer has not yet found himself, but throughout it are outcroppings of considerable musical promise. Suk does not reveal a settled, to say nothing of a completed, orchestral style, yet, as far as form goes, he reveals a due scholastic acquaintance with the technical requirements of his art. In spirit the E major Symphony is a compromise between the classic and the romantic, a blending of Beethoven and Brahms. These two composers, indeed, seem to be the musical masters of the young Bohemian, and it can be said with some justice that he has been a faithful disciple, though not a servile follower of his preceptors, for he has palpably approximated their style without often descending to slavish imitation.

Mr. Gericke for the thousandth time demonstrated himself as the strict academic schoolman, and again showed that he is not and never will be the Gospeller of musical inspiration. His reading was careful and interesting, and in the Beethovenesque portions highly enjoyable. A polished reading of Weber's fine "Oberon" overture and a novelty in the shape of three Bach movements orchestrated by Mr. Gericke himself, with a classic precision and purity which would have pleased even the Father of Classic Music, completed the evening's pleasure.

Music in New York

By EMILIE FRANCES BAUER, 22 Manhattan Avenue.

With the opening of the season come a good many new features, some of which are interesting and agreeable and others are quite the contrary. One thing is positive and it is that something should be devised for the late-comers at Mendelssohn Hall. The construction of the house is not such as to permit late-comers to enter even if they do not take their seats, as is the case in all the theaters. It was due to this fact that last year several musical affairs and lectures were taken to the theaters instead of to Mendelssohn Hall, where the doors are closed and the tardy ones closed out, huddled together like abandoned sheep in the cold. It is well enough when a short song is under way, but when a long sonata, without breaks in the movements is being played, it is anything but agreeable. No one is in a fit humor to enjoy calmly, the way music must be heard to be enjoyed, after having been locked out for a half or three quarters of an hour. The matter of being on time has not always a bearing in the case, because sometimes there are mistakes made, as was the case recently when a concert advertised for 3 o'clock began at 2:30. Now, there is no objection to beginning concerts at 2:30, in fact it is very welcome, since it makes it possible to have another hour at the end of the day instead of recitals with their subsequent encores, lasting until 6 o'clock. Once this will be understood, it will be a very welcome change from the earlier hour, but until it is generally accepted half of the audience will be locked outside, which is decidedly disagreeable for all parties concerned.

* * *

Boston Symphony Affairs.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is facing a peculiar condition, and we will hope that it is not a crisis in the life of this tremendous organization. The matter of the Musicians' Union again comes up, and it threatens to disrupt this famous musical body. It is learned that a number of the players have become members of the Union, and these threaten to quit unless the others join. Major Higginson, who has created the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and who has supported it through every situation and condition, is strongly opposed to Unionism, and it is understood that he threatens to withdraw his support unless all negotiations and operations cease immediately. Everybody knows that without Major Higginson, even powerful as the organization is at the present moment, it cannot stand, in so far as no other organization upon its own resources has been able to do so in this country. The latest report is that twenty-seven of the fifty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who had joined the Musicians' Protective Union have quit the Union, and it is now expected that the rest of those fifty men will follow suit.

Whenever this matter comes up for discussion there are always those who say that musicians have their side, and that under the present conditions no musician can get along financially, as is the right and desire of every free man. The question is too deep to be understood by everybody, as it involves the deepest depths of those feelings which are mysteries, and which will continue to be mysteries as long as life is enveloped in its mysterious beginning and its mysterious end. The "me" of every man is what he makes it, and he makes it because he is peculiarly constructed from the standpoint of tendencies and instincts which, being himself, he cannot fight. The man who is great enough musician to be a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is that because he could not be anything else. The instincts of music were in him as some of us believe seasons before he was born, and if he has been fortunate enough to have this God-given art, this noble æsthetic sense, he has something which he should consider as great as the millions of the banker and the luxuries attending. That he could be both artist and millionaire is not possible, since the one must take supremacy over the other. He may rail at fate, at his condition, at the incongruousness of life—at whatever he may please, but he cannot get away from that which is one of the first laws in ethical philosophy. He has chosen art and he must take what accompanies it—a comfortable living does not always go with it.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Concerts.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony season was given on Thursday night at Carnegie Hall before the usual large house, whose enthusiasm was at the top notch, and well it might have been, for this glorious organization played superbly, in fact, flawlessly. The opening symphony was Beethoven's No. 4 in B flat major, and while less familiar than some of the others, its winsome beauties were rare delights under Mr. Gericke's masterful and magical baton. The contrast between the pure classicality of the Beethoven number and the brilliant glow and vigor of the "Tannhauser" overture disproved all attempts to make Mr. Gericke purely a classicist, as has too often been attempted. The novelty of the programme was an Orchestral Scherzo by Paul Dukas, one of the modern French composers, written after a ballad by Goethe, called "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." This was produced in Chicago by Theodore Thomas and his orchestra January 14, 1899. The instrumentation and orchestration are delightfully colored and handled with a deftness which makes the modern French school pre-eminent in its class. The virtuosity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this work was at its height. The soloist on Thursday night was Prof. Willy Hess, who holds the chair of concertmaster of that organization. Prof. Hess selected the Hungarian Concerto of Joachim, his teacher, and in this proved himself a mature artist possessed of enough technic to be accepted as soloist anywhere and among the greatest. The audience accorded him the cordial reception due any artist of his calibre

It was Brooklyn and not New York that was first to hear de Pachmann as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and this exceptional artist carried the audience into the highest realms of delight in the beauties of the Chopin Concerto, as he did in New York on Saturday afternoon in a concert that was in no way inferior to that of Thursday evening. The playing of de Pachmann was never more exquisite in all the details for which he is so noted and, indeed, notorious. His scale work was dazzling in its perfection and his delicacy was fairly marvelous. The orchestral numbers on Saturday afternoon were Weber's overture to "Oberon," played with consummate skill and beauty of effects, and Soseph Suk's delightful Symphony in E major. This splendid work is not exactly reminiscent of Dvorak in his different moods, but no one is at all surprised to know that he is a son in-law and pupil of the older and better known Bohemian. Suk is a member of the great Bohemian Quartet, and that he understands the treatment of the orchestra at its best will not be doubted after hearing such an interpretation as it received at the hands of Mr. Gericke and the Boston Orchestra. The audience was intensely interested and made its interest and its pleasure manifest very forcibly.

* * *

[30]

Town Topics, Nov. 10

CROTCHETS AND QUAVERS

DE PACHMANN, PROFESSOR OF SIMIAN ANTICS, AND A MAHLER SYMPHONY

IF the jibbering, grimacing figure of Vladimir de Pachmann had actually appeared at the end of a long, red-painted stick, instead of being seated at the ivory end of a concert piano, at the Boston Symphony matinee, no sensible person would have been in the least surprised and more of us might have been amused. This virtuoso of eccentricity has been away from us for several seasons, during which time—it would appear—he has been frequenting primates' houses in foreign Zoos and has been practicing mimicry before a hand glass. His efforts were crowned with simian success, for the exhibition he gave here the other afternoon was worthy of a museum or a zoological garden. If his work showed that he did not bring over a whole cage of new tricks, they at least were tricks that should be performed in a cage. It looked almost every moment as though he might leave the piano and with a leap suspend himself agilely from the electrolier over the disgusted head of Wilhelm Gericke; and nothing but a fervent regard for the rules of Carnegie Hall prevented me from offering a bag of peanuts to the little man with the prehensile habits.

It began immediately he came out, when with many gestures and catarrhic snorts he found the seat too high or too low or too something. De Pachmann is an epicure in the matter of seats. But I still fail to find that this is an excuse for his chattering about it to the audience and to the turn-over gentleman at his left—all the while Mr. Gericke was playing the introduction to Chopin's F minor Concerto. From the moment this work began until it was completed de Pachmann busied himself composing a libretto to the music and reciting the words to himself, the audience and the amiable gentleman at his left. There is no need of my going into detail about it, as the public can see it duplicated in Bronx or Central Park any day if they will stand in front of that cage where boys are gathered the thickest.

Don't fancy for a moment that I am indulging my merriment at the expense of this pianist's affliction. De Pachmann is not nearly so idiotic as he acts—if he were, no community would allow him at large. He is simply a spoiled pianist with disgusting public manners that he cultivates because they interest the public and attract attention to de Pachmann. He can stop it easily if it is made worth his while, but so long as he finds public approval for turning a concert-room into a Zoo he is going to continue his performances and even add to his stock of antics. That he has a wonderful touch is well known; also has the fact been heralded abroad that when he wishes to he can play Chopin as can probably no other man alive; but while cutting pranks with the audience he is also cutting pranks with Chopin. There were moments in the larghetto that were simply heavenly—that is, they would have been if the grimacing figure on the platform had not filled the eye with his facial contortions. As it was, the whole ring-tailed exhibition was simply a disgusting one which should not be repeated; de Pachmann should be put into the hands of some animal trainer before he is allowed at large on a concert platform again—either that, or his manager should have a heart-to-heart talk with him before letting down the bars again. Money should not be coaxed from the public on the pretense of hearing a pianist when in reality they are to be shown de Pachmann. Besides, it is a crying shame that so artistic a pianist as de Pachmann should be allowed to go into symphonic vaudeville. He is all too rare a player for that, and I hope that his manners may be curbed so that we really will be permitted to hear once more what a wonderful player he is.

I regretted that the above had to happen at a Boston Symphony concert. The remaining and serious part of the program was devoted to Weber's "Oberon" overture, played exquisitely and with much more dash than Mr. Gericke has liberated here for some time. Also was there the Suk symphony that Paur introduced to us at a Philharmonic concert several seasons ago. Suk is a son-in-law of the late Dvorak; and this symphony is a great-grandchild of the "New World" symphony. There was a greater swing to the work of the strings at this concert than we heard all of last season from this marvelous organization. It may easily have been due to the fact that Willy Hess, the new concert master, was at work. He appeared a few evenings previously as solo performer, playing the fearfully difficult Joachim Hungarian concerto, a composition that sounds as though it were composed principally for the purpose of proving how few violinists there are who can master its difficulties. Hess has a good, firm tone, and his technique is admirable. There was lacking the charm of poetry; but to make one's bow here with so difficult a work is no laughing matter; hence the player's extreme nervousness. Hess is a valuable addition to the orchestra, and Fredericque Comee's philanthropic features were smiling to Brooklyn and back in answer to the congratulations and the dollars that poured into the box office.

Musical Courier, Nov. 10

The Philadelphia Choir.

shine drifting through the foliage of a tree upon the ground. The heavier passages Mr. de Pachmann invested with a skilfully calculated resonance, and the wealth of detail which characterizes the Concerto be brought out with the proper dynamic accentuation which the refined genius of Chopin absolutely demands.

The orchestral numbers on Wednesday's programme were of an agreeable but not notable character. The symphony was the E major composition by Joseph Suk, the young Bohemian, which received its premier in Philadelphia two seasons ago with the local orchestra. The pleasant impressions of Suk's symphonic quality left on that occasion were renewed at this second playing. Distinctly not a great work, it is certainly an enjoyable one. In it the composer has not yet found himself, but throughout it are outcroppings of considerable musical promise. Suk does not reveal a settled, to say nothing of a completed, orchestral style, yet, as far as form goes, he reveals a due scholastic acquaintance with the technical requirements of his art. In spirit the E major Symphony is a compromise between the classic and the romantic, a blending of Beethoven and Brahms. These two composers, indeed, seem to be the musical masters of the young Bohemian, and it can be said with some justice that he has been a faithful disciple, though not a servile follower of his preceptors, for he has palpably approximated their style without often descending to slavish imitation.

Mr. Gericke for the thousandth time demonstrated himself as the strict academic schoolman, and again showed that he is not and never will be the Gospeller of musical inspiration. His reading was careful and interesting, and in the Beethovenesque portions highly enjoyable. A polished reading of Weber's fine "Oberon" overture and a novelty in the shape of three Bach movements orchestrated by Mr. Gericke himself, with a classic precision and purity which would have pleased even the Father of Classic Music, completed the evening's pelasure.

Music in New York

By EMILIE FRANCES BAUER, 22 Manhattan Avenue.

With the opening of the season come a good many new features, some of which are interesting and agreeable and others are quite the contrary. One thing is positive and it is that something should be devised for the late-comers at Mendelssohn Hall. The construction of the house is not such as to permit late-comers to enter even if they do not take their seats, as is the case in all the theaters. It was due to this fact that last year several musical affairs and lectures were taken to the theaters instead of to Mendelssohn Hall, where the doors are closed and the tardy ones closed out, huddled together like abandoned sheep in the cold. It is well enough when a short song is under way, but when a long sonata, without breaks in the movements is being played, it is anything but agreeable. No one is in a fit humor to enjoy calmly, the way music must be heard to be enjoyed, after having been locked out for a half or three quarters of an hour. The matter of being on time has not always a bearing in the case, because sometimes there are mistakes made, as was the case recently when a concert advertised for 3 o'clock began at 2:30. Now, there is no objection to beginning concerts at 2:30, in fact it is very welcome, since it makes it possible to have another hour at the end of the day instead of recitals with their subsequent encores, lasting until 6 o'clock. Once this will be understood, it will be a very welcome change from the earlier hour, but until it is generally accepted half of the audience will be locked outside, which is decidedly disagreeable for all parties concerned.

* * *

Boston Symphony Affairs.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is facing a peculiar condition, and we will hope that it is not a crisis in the life of this tremendous organization. The matter of the Musicians' Union again comes up, and it threatens to disrupt this famous musical body. It is learned that a number of the players have become members of the Union, and these threaten to quit unless the others join. Major Higginson, who has created the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and who has supported it through every situation and condition, is strongly opposed to Unionism, and it is understood that he threatens to withdraw his support unless all negotiations and operations cease immediately. Everybody knows that without Major Higginson, even powerful as the organization is at the present moment, it cannot stand, in so far as no other organization upon its own resources has been able to do so in this country. The latest report is that twenty-seven of the fifty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who had joined the Musicians' Protective Union have quit the Union, and it is now expected that the rest of those fifty men will follow suit.

Whenever this matter comes up for discussion there are always those who say that musicians have their side, and that under the present conditions no musician can get along financially, as is the right and desire of every free man. The question is too deep to be understood by everybody, as it involves the deepest depths of those feelings which are mysteries, and which will continue to be mysteries as long as life is enveloped in its mysterious beginning and its mysterious end. The "me" of every man is what he makes it, and he makes it because he is peculiarly constructed from the standpoint of tendencies and instincts which, being himself, he cannot fight. The man who is great enough musician to be a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is that because he could not be anything else. The instincts of music were in him as some of us believe seasons before he was born, and if he has been fortunate enough to have this God-given art, this noble æsthetic sense, he has something which he should consider as great as the millions of the banker and the luxuries attending. That he could be both artist and millionaire is not possible, since the one must take supremacy over the other. He may rail at fate, at his condition, at the incongruousness of life—at whatever he may please, but he cannot get away from that which is one of the first laws in ethical philosophy. He has chosen art and he must take what accompanies it—a comfortable living does not always go with it.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Concerts.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony season was given on Thursday night at Carnegie Hall before the usual large house, whose enthusiasm was at the top notch, and well it might have been, for this glorious organization played superbly, in fact, flawlessly. The opening symphony was Beethoven's No. 4 in B flat major, and while less familiar than some of the others, its winsome beauties were rare delights under Mr. Gericke's masterful and magical baton. The contrast between the pure classicality of the Beethoven number and the brilliant glow and vigor of the "Tannhauser" overture disproved all attempts to make Mr. Gericke purely a classicist, as has too often been attempted. The novelty of the programme was an Orchestral Scherzo by Paul Dukas, one of the modern French composers, written after a ballad by Goethe, called "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." This was produced in Chicago by Theodore Thomas and his orchestra January 14, 1899. The instrumentation and orchestration are delightfully colored and handled with a deftness which makes the modern French school pre-eminent in its class. The virtuosity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this work was at its height. The soloist on Thursday night was Prof. Willy Hess, who holds the chair of concertmaster of that organization. Prof. Hess selected the Hungarian Concerto of Joachim, his teacher, and in this proved himself a mature artist possessed of enough technic to be accepted as soloist anywhere and among the greatest. The audience accorded him the cordial reception due any artist of his calibre

It was Brooklyn and not New York that was first to hear de Pachmann as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and this exceptional artist carried the audience into the highest realms of delight in the beauties of the Chopin Concerto, as he did in New York on Saturday afternoon in a concert that was in no way inferior to that of Thursday evening. The playing of de Pachmann was never more exquisite in all the details for which he is so noted and, indeed, notorious. His scale work was dazzling in its perfection and his delicacy was fairly marvelous. The orchestral numbers on Saturday afternoon were Weber's overture to "Oberon," played with consummate skill and beauty of effects, and Soseph Suk's delightful Symphony in E major. This splendid work is not exactly reminiscent of Dvorak in his different moods, but no one is at all surprised to know that he is a son in-law and pupil of the older and better known Bohemian. Suk is a member of the great Bohemian Quartet, and that he understands the treatment of the orchestra at its best will not be doubted after hearing such an interpretation as it received at the hands of Mr. Gericke and the Boston Orchestra. The audience was intensely interested and made its interest and its pleasure manifest very forcibly.

* * *

[30]

Town Topics, Nov. 10

CROTCHETS AND QUAVERS

DE PACHMANN, PROFESSOR OF SIMIAN ANTICS, AND A MAHLER SYMPHONY

IF the jibbering, grimacing figure of Vladimir de Pachmann had actually appeared at the end of a long, red-painted stick, instead of being seated at the ivory end of a concert piano, at the Boston Symphony matinee, no sensible person would have been in the least surprised and more of us might have been amused. This virtuoso of eccentricity has been away from us for several seasons, during which time—it would appear—he has been frequenting primates' houses in foreign Zoos and has been practicing mimicry before a hand glass. His efforts were crowned with simian success, for the exhibition he gave here the other afternoon was worthy of a museum or a zoological garden. If his work showed that he did not bring over a whole cage of new tricks, they at least were tricks that should be performed in a cage. It looked almost every moment as though he might leave the piano and with a leap suspend himself agilely from the electrolier over the disgusted head of Wilhelm Gericke; and nothing but a fervent regard for the rules of Carnegie Hall prevented me from offering a bag of peanuts to the little man with the prehensile habits.

It began immediately he came out, when with many gestures and catarrhic snorts he found the seat too high or too low or too something. De Pachmann is an epicure in the matter of seats. But I still fail to find that this is an excuse for his chattering about it to the audience and to the turn-over gentleman at his left—all the while Mr. Gericke was playing the introduction to Chopin's F minor Concerto. From the moment this work began until it was completed de Pachmann busied himself composing a libretto to the music and reciting the words to himself, the audience and the amiable gentleman at his left. There is no need of my going into detail about it, as the public can see it duplicated in Bronx or Central Park any day if they will stand in front of that cage where boys are gathered the thickest.

Don't fancy for a moment that I am indulging my merriment at the expense of this pianist's affliction. De Pachmann is not nearly so idiotic as he acts—if he were, no community would allow him at large. He is simply a spoiled pianist with disgusting public manners that he cultivates because they interest the public and attract attention to de Pachmann. He can stop it easily if it is made wor r turning a c ormances and ful touch is when he wis live; but wl nks with Ch e simply he figure on th ons. As it sting one wh into the ha on a con-
cer have a hea s again.
Mo of hearing chmann.
Bes le Pachma He is all too may be cur e what a wor

I tunity to welcome back the fine Boston band, which has pho n Sym-was added attraction for the past score of years to the Phila- program and delphia musical season, interest centered in the debut both quisitely som as concertmaster and soloist of Willy Hess, who has been here for duc known by repute in America for many years. Mr. Hess r intro-is a immediately made good the favorable reports that have). Suk gra been wafted over sea concerning his abilities. a greatswi greater of l eard all hav easily was master, perf as solo cert an con-
prin mposed who ere are his t le, and but poetry;
mat ughing able a valuthro philanthe swer to office.

Boston Symphony Concerts.

The formal opening of the Philadelphia musical season occurred on Monday last, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first concert of its Monday series. The programme was both eclectic and choice. The classic was presented by the Symphony, Beethoven's altogether lovely Fourth, with its conservative arrangement, which makes more marked its many orchestral beauties, and by the well known "Tannhauser" overture, which makes up in effective orchestration and inherent melodic worth what it lacks nowadays in novelty; the romantic by the wild, weird, dazzling beauty and enormous intricacy of Joachim's long Hungarian Concerto, and the purely modern by a pretty but not musically profound novelty—the young French composer, Paul Dukas' transcription as a Scherzo of Goethe's droll and quaint "Sorcerer's Apprentice."

Next to the fact that the concert afforded an opportunity to welcome back the fine Boston band, which has added attraction for the past score of years to the Philadelphia musical season, interest centered in the debut both as concertmaster and soloist of Willy Hess, who has been known by repute in America for many years. Mr. Hess immediately made good the favorable reports that have been wafted over sea concerning his abilities.

The Beethoven symphony, the Wagner overture and the Dukas novelty received the scholarly if somewhat uninspired reading which one can always depend upon from Mr. Gericke. The cold, calm, impersonal attitude of classicism was particularly notable in his reading of Beethoven's classic work.

First place in the review of Wednesday evening's inauguration of the Boston Symphony's second series must be accorded to Vladimir de Pachmann, for as stellar feature in a concert in itself remarkably brilliant, it cannot be gainsaid that first honors were won by the great Chopin interpreter par excellence. His appearance was little less than a triumph and fitted well with his triumphant reading of the vehicle selected to display his virtuosity and temperament—the great Second Concerto in F minor—orchestrated with subtlety of harmony, built upon dainty and delicate melody, and enveloped with the rich-woven and mellow charm of rare old lace, and reflecting in every bar the glittering sheen of musical brilliancy. It is a work of power and beauty and de Pachmann's reading will long be memorable in the minds of his audience. With touch as light and airy as the zephyr's caress of summer flowers, he translated the gossamer-like beauty of the dainty passages into a fabric as fragile and airy as an Arachnidian web. The nice nuances of the composition were brought out with the artistic sense of contrast that suggested the ever-changing and subtly shifting shade and

Music in New York

By EMILIE FRANCES BAUER, 22 Manhattan Avenue.

With the opening of the season come a good many new features, some of which are interesting and agreeable and others are quite the contrary. One thing is positive and it is that something should be devised for the late-comers at Mendelssohn Hall. The construction of the house is not such as to permit late-comers to enter even if they do not take their seats, as is the case in all the theaters. It was due to this fact that last year several musical affairs and lectures were taken to the theaters instead of to Mendelssohn Hall, where the doors are closed and the tardy ones closed out, huddled together like abandoned sheep in the cold. It is well enough when a short song is under way, but when a long sonata, without breaks in the movements is being played, it is anything but agreeable. No one is in a fit humor to enjoy calmly, the way music must be heard to be enjoyed, after having been locked out for a half or three quarters of an hour. The matter of being on time has not always a bearing in the case, because sometimes there are mistakes made, as was the case recently when a concert advertised for 3 o'clock began at 2:30. Now, there is no objection to beginning concerts at 2:30, in fact it is very welcome, since it makes it possible to have another hour at the end of the day instead of recitals with their subsequent encores, lasting until 6 o'clock. Once this will be understood, it will be a very welcome change from the earlier hour, but until it is generally accepted half of the audience will be locked outside, which is decidedly disagreeable for all parties concerned.

* * *

Boston Symphony Affairs.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is facing a peculiar condition, and we will hope that it is not a crisis in the life of this tremendous organization. The matter of the Musicians' Union again comes up, and it threatens to disrupt this famous musical body. It is learned that a number of the players have become members of the Union, and these threaten to quit unless the others join. Major Higginson, who has created the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and who has supported it through every situation and condition, is strongly opposed to Unionism, and it is understood that he threatens to withdraw his support unless all negotiations and operations cease immediately. Everybody knows that without Major Higginson, even powerful as the organization is at the present moment, it cannot stand, in so far as no other organization upon its own resources has been able to do so in this country. The latest report is that twenty-seven of the fifty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who had joined the Musicians' Protective Union have quit the Union, and it is now expected that the rest of those fifty men will follow suit.

Whenever this matter comes up for discussion there are always those who say that musicians have their side, and that under the present conditions no musician can get along financially, as is the right and desire of every free man. The question is too deep to be understood by everybody, as it involves the deepest depths of those feelings which are mysteries, and which will continue to be mysteries as long as life is enveloped in its mysterious beginning and its mysterious end. The "me" of every man is what he makes it, and he makes it because he is peculiarly constructed from the standpoint of tendencies and instincts which, being himself, he cannot fight. The man who is great enough musician to be a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is that because he could not be anything else. The instincts of music were in him as some of us believe seasons before he was born, and if he has been fortunate enough to have this God-given art, this noble æsthetic sense, he has something which he should consider as great as the millions of the banker and the luxuries attending. That he could be both artist and millionaire is not possible, since the one must take supremacy over the other. He may rail at fate, at his condition, at the incongruousness of life—at whatever he may please, but he cannot get away from that which is one of the first laws in ethical philosophy. He has chosen art and he must take what accompanies it—a comfortable living does not always go with it.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Concerts.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony season was given on Thursday night at Carnegie Hall before the usual large house, whose enthusiasm was at the top notch, and well it might have been, for this glorious organization played superbly, in fact, flawlessly. The opening symphony was Beethoven's No. 4 in B flat major, and while less familiar than some of the others, its winsome beauties were rare delights under Mr. Gericke's masterful and magical baton. The contrast between the pure classicality of the Beethoven number and the brilliant glow and vigor of the "Tannhauser" overture disproved all attempts to make Mr. Gericke purely a classicist, as has too often been attempted. The novelty of the programme was an Orchestral Scherzo by Paul Dukas, one of the modern French composers, written after a ballad by Goethe, called "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." This was produced in Chicago by Theodore Thomas and his orchestra January 14, 1899. The instrumentation and orchestration are delightfully colored and handled with a deftness which makes the modern French school pre-eminent in its class. The virtuosity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this work was at its height. The soloist on Thursday night was Prof. Willy Hess, who holds the chair of concertmaster of that organization. Prof. Hess selected the Hungarian Concerto of Joachim, his teacher, and in this proved himself a mature artist possessed of enough technic to be accepted as soloist anywhere and among the greatest. The audience accorded him the cordial reception due any artist of his calibre

It was Brooklyn and not New York that was first to hear de Pachmann as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and this exceptional artist carried the audience into the highest realms of delight in the beauties of the Chopin Concerto, as he did in New York on Saturday afternoon in a concert that was in no way inferior to that of Thursday evening. The playing of de Pachmann was never more exquisite in all the details for which he is so noted and, indeed, notorious. His scale work was dazzling in its perfection and his delicacy was fairly marvelous. The orchestral numbers on Saturday afternoon were Weber's overture to "Oberon," played with consummate skill and beauty of effects, and Soseph Suk's delightful Symphony in E major. This splendid work is not exactly reminiscent of Dvorak in his different moods, but no one is at all surprised to know that he is a son in-law and pupil of the older and better known Bohemian. Suk is a member of the great Bohemian Quartet, and that he understands the treatment of the orchestra at its best will not be doubted after hearing such an interpretation as it received at the hands of Mr. Gericke and the Boston Orchestra. The audience was intensely interested and made its interest and its pleasure manifest very forcibly.

* * *

NY Tribune, Nov. 6 NY World, Nov. 6. Boston Post, Nov. 13 Boston Traveller, Nov. 14

LEAVE MUSICAL UNION.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Not Yet Owned by Labor Leaders.

As intimated in a dispatch from Boston printed in The Tribune yesterday, Major Higginson has won his fight against the musical union, and instead of the Boston Symphony Orchestra becoming unionized the union will be minus sixty members. A year ago the union threatened to invade the orchestra, and Major Higginson put his foot down hard, declaring he would not allow his men to join the union. But later he evidently relented a bit, so that between fifty and sixty of the seventy or more members of the Boston band joined the union, but with the understanding that the union was to have jurisdiction over them only when they were not playing in the Symphony Orchestra concerts; that is, only during the summer season, when the orchestra is resting.

This fall Mr. Kneisel took most of the Boston orchestra out to Worcester to the festival there, but as individuals, not as an official organization. The union seized the technical opportunity, and compelled several players Mr. Kneisel had engaged to join the union before it would allow the already union members to play. Evidently this victory elated the union, and it did something this last week in Boston to tighten still further its grip on Mr. Higginson's band, for last Wednesday matters came to a head, and the union members of the orchestra were told that they must choose to abide either by the union or the orchestra. Of the sixty union members, all but twelve resigned from the union on the spot, and the other twelve will resign in a few days, or, if they do not, the union will doubtless expel them. Mr. Higginson's victory is complete.

My mail, Nov 8

The Orchestra as an Open Shop.

Boston has had the credit of taking the lead in a good many things since the tea was thrown overboard. She seems to have taken it again, and quite worthily, in the matter of the unionizing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This orchestra stands at the head of the musical organizations of the country, for the very simple reason that a very liberal and also very intelligent millionaire puts up the money to pay its director and its members, and also gives the orchestra an excellent chance to make money on its own account. If Mr. Higginson were a less discriminating and less cultivated man than he is, his virtual proprietorship of the orchestra might be a blight instead of an advantage. Its director might in that case be ill chosen, or, being well chosen, might be limited in his freedom. But Mr. Higginson has the wisdom to pick out the best possible leader in the first place and then to leave him perfectly free to run the orchestra as he chooses. The result is an organization which makes merit its first aim, and large audiences only a secondary aim. It is to the credit of the American public that it gets the audiences, too.

But neither a millionaire patron nor a gifted director could keep an orchestra from running on one rock which has wrecked a good deal of pure musical art in this country of late—the rock, that is, of the Musicians' Protective Union. This organization, which has been genuinely useful to a great many struggling musicians, was never meant to forward musical art, but rather to keep up a sort of general level of employment for the common run of musicians. It seems to accomplish this purpose, and so long as it does it justifies itself. But that perfectly legitimate purpose is really antagonistic to the aim of a great symphony orchestra, which is highest artistic excellence, regardless of the interests of individual musicians.

Art is, in the abstract, a master, not a servant. For the average musician or painter it is indeed the servant of his needs. Considered in its public relation, it is a lofty ideal, to which all considerations of the immediate personal advantage in any case have to yield. Just as we could not possibly consider whether the pictures fit for a great museum were "union painted" or not, the manager of such an organization as the Boston orchestra could not consider whether his symphonies were exclusively union played or not.

Mr. Higginson has, therefore, given his orchestra the option of being an "open shop" or of going out of existence. It has accepted the horn of the dilemma which means existence, and its union members, being forced to choose between going out of the orchestra and going out of the union, have decided to stay in the orchestra.

Even though every symphony orchestra cannot have a Higginson, it is probable that this solution of the Boston problem will serve as a precedent in the case of musical organizations which make excellence in art their chief aim. Boston will not have thrown its musical tea over-

While the beloved Boston Symphony Orchestra has been tickling the tonal palate of New York audiences, its founder and financier, Henry L. Higginson, has in Boston uttered some startling words about the future of this aggregation of virtuosi. Mr. Higginson has recently encountered the fine unreasonableness of the Musical Union. To most orchestral managers and to nearly all conductors these difficulties are perfectly familiar, and in nearly every instance are the men at the heads of orchestras helpless in the grasp of rule-bound conditions.

But Mr. Higginson is one of the noble exceptions. He has uttered the liberal opinion that musical unions are good so long as their motives are good. He also wants his musicians to earn as much money as possible, both from him and by outside engagements, that do not conflict with the work of the Symphony Orchestra. In addition he hints at the encouraging sentiment that this orchestra will continue even after his death.

Then, finally, he takes the bit of the situation firmly between his teeth by declaring: "If, however, there is any interference in my plans which prevents unity and harmony in the orchestra or among its members, the organization will perish, and I shall state publicly how the organization was broken up and by whom."

There cannot possibly be a second meaning to these prophetic words; there is no evasive sentiment to be read between the lines. It means simply that if the unions attempt to dictate to Mr. Higginson, then the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be disbanded. And such an event would be a fearful blow to the cause of music in this country. Mr. Higginson owns this orchestra; it is his private enterprise; and the disposition of it is entirely in his own hands, so there is no reason for believing that for an instant will he toy with this union game.

Of course the omnipresent optimist will arise at such a juncture and declare that if this orchestra were suddenly disbanded it could be brought together again at short notice under new management. Possibly it could, but as a business venture this organization is probably not so profitable as it would appear to be. It is an accumulation of very rare players: the running expenses are no silly bagatelle, and few people know what the orchestra's profit-earning capacity is. To a few it is known that because of business depression last year in Boston this celebrated organization lost more than $30,000, despite the fact that its business in other cities was large—in New York even brilliant. Men do not arise every day who are prepared to meet such losses with equanimity. New York has been searching for such a man for years and it has yet to find him.

However this be, it would appear in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that the musical union has met its Waterloo. Mr. Higginson frankly states that it concerns him but little whether or not the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra belong individually to a musical union so long as they live up to their bargain with him and up to the spirit of the orchestra. But he positively refuses to be made a managerial martyr by petty by-laws. He has given the musical unions something to think about—even something to keep them awake at nights. And some well-balanced mind among the members realize that the osBton Symphony Orchestra means more to the welfare of music in this country than all the musical unions that ever were created.

WHY MUSICIANS LEFT UNION

President Kingman Reports on Symphony Trouble

President F. C. Kingman of the Boston Musicians' Protective Association last night announced that the 77 members of the association that belonged to the Symphony Orchestra have resigned from the association.

He said: "There are 94 players in the Symphony Orchestra, and of this number 77 were members of the union. Their resignations have been coming in regularly for a month. We have done nothing to prevent the members from resigning.

"Peculiar conditions confronted those men. They have been given to understand that Major Higginson does not wish them to belong to the union. I understand that he said that he has given no order nor instructions to the men to the effect that members of the orchestra should not belong to the union.

"The union does not want to antagonize the Symphony Orchestra or Major Higginson. Because of that we have said nothing."

94 MUSICIANS LEAVE UNION

President F. C Kingman of the Musicians' Protective Association No. 9 announced yesterday that all of the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who were members, have resigned from the union. He stated that there are 94 players in the orchestra, of which 77 were members of the union.

The resignations began to come in more than a month ago and have been coming in ever since, until there is not a member of the orchestra who is now a member of the union.

"We have put no obstacle in the way of their resigning," said Mr. Kingman. "As soon as they were presented they were accepted. Peculiar conditions confront these men. They have been practically given to understand that Major Higginson does not desire them to belong to the association. We do not desire to antagonize Major Higginson and have tried to keep the matter a secret."

When asked if it would be possible for any of the players who have resigned to gain readmittance to the union, Mr. Kingman said they could, but it would be a very expensive business, as they would find the initiation fee considerably larger than when they first entered.

At their meeting yesterday officers were nominated and the election will be held December 1.

NY Tribune, Nov. 6

LEAVE MUSICAL UNION.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Not Yet Owned by Labor Leaders.

As intimated in a dispatch from Boston printed in The Tribune yesterday, Major Higginson has won his fight against the musical union, and instead of the Boston Symphony Orchestra becoming unionized the union will be minus sixty members. A year ago the union threatened to invade the orchestra, and Major Higginson put his foot down hard, declaring he would not allow his men to join the union. But later he evidently relented a bit, so that between fifty and sixty of the seventy or more members of the Boston band joined the union, but with the understanding that the union was to have jurisdiction over them only when they were not playing in the Symphony Orchestra concerts; that is, only during the summer season, when the orchestra is resting.

This fall Mr. Kneisel took most of the Boston orchestra out to Worcester to the festival there, but as individuals, not as an official organization. The union seized the technical opportunity, and compelled several players Mr. Kneisel had engaged to join the union before it would allow the already union members to play. Evidently this victory elated the union, and it did something this last week in Boston to tighten still further its grip on Mr. Higginson's band, for last Wednesday matters came to a head, and the union members of the orchestra were told that they must choose to abide either by the union or the orchestra. Of the sixty union members, all but twelve resigned from the union on the spot, and the other twelve will resign in a few days, or, if they do not, the union will doubtless expel them. Mr. Higginson's victory is complete.

NY Mail Nov 8

Boston has had the credit of taking the lead in a good many things since the tea was thrown overboard. She seems to have taken it again, and quite worthily, in the matter of the unionizing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This orchestra stands at the head of the musical organizations of the country, for the very simple reason that a very liberal and also very intelligent millionaire puts up the money to pay its director and its members, and also gives the orchestra an excellent chance to make money on its own account. If Mr. Higginson were a less discriminating and less cultivated man than he is, his virtual proprietorship of the orchestra might be a blight instead of an advantage. Its director might in that case be ill chosen, or, being well chosen, might be limited in his freedom. But Mr. Higginson has the wisdom to pick out the best possible leader in the first place and then to leave him perfectly free to run the orchestra as he chooses. The result is an organization which makes merit its first aim, and large audiences only a secondary aim. It is to the credit of the American public that it gets the audiences, too.

The Orchestra as an Open Shop.

But neither a millionaire patron nor a gifted director could keep an orchestra from running on one rock which has wrecked a good deal of pure musical art in this country of late—the rock, that is, of the Musicians' Protective Union. This organization, which has been genuinely useful to a great many struggling musicians, was never meant to forward musical art, but rather to keep up a sort of general level of employment for the common run of musicians. It seems to accomplish this purpose, and so long as it does it justifies itself. But that perfectly legitimate purpose is really antagonistic to the aim of a great symphony orchestra, which is highest artistic excellence, regardless of the interests of individual musicians.

Art is, in the abstract, a master, not a servant. For the average musician or painter it is indeed the servant of his needs. Considered in its public relation, it is a lofty ideal, to which all considerations of the immediate personal advantage in any case have to yield. Just as we could not possibly consider whether the pictures fit for a great museum were "union painted" or not, the manager of such an organization as the Boston orchestra could not consider whether his symphonies were exclusively union played or not.

Mr. Higginson has, therefore, given his orchestra the option of being an "open shop" or of going out of existence. It has accepted the horn of the dilemma which means existence, and its union members, being forced to choose between going out of the orchestra and going out of the union, have decided to stay in the orchestra.

Even though every symphony orchestra cannot have a Higginson, it is probable that this solution of the Boston problem will serve as a precedent in the case of musical organizations which make excellence in art their chief aim. Boston will not have thrown its musical tea over-

NY World, Nov. 6.

While the beloved Boston Symphony Orchestra has been tickling the tonal palate of New York audiences, its founder and financier, Henry L. Higginson, has in Boston uttered some startling words about the future of this aggregation of virtuosi. Mr. Higginson has recently encountered the fine unreasonableness of the Musical Union. To most orchestral managers and to nearly all conductors these difficulties are perfectly familiar, and in nearly every instance are the men at the heads of orchestras helpless in the grasp of rule-bound conditions.

But Mr. Higginson is one of the noble exceptions. He has uttered the liberal opinion that musical unions are good so long as their motives are good. He also wants his musicians to earn as much money as possible, both from him and by outside engagements, that do not conflict with the work of the Symphony Orchestra. In addition he hints at the encouraging sentiment that this orchestra will continue even after his death.

Then, finally, he takes the bit of the situation firmly between his teeth by declaring: "If, however, there is any interference in my plans which prevents unity and harmony in the orchestra or among its members, the organization will perish, and I shall state publicly how the organization was broken up and by whom."

There cannot possibly be a second meaning to these prophetic words; there is no evasive sentiment to be read between the lines. It means simply that if the unions attempt to dictate to Mr. Higginson, then the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be disbanded. And such an event would be a fearful blow to the cause of music in this country. Mr. Higginson owns this orchestra; it is his private enterprise; and the disposition of it is entirely in his own hands, so there is no reason for believing that for an instant will he toy with this union game.

Of course the omnipresent optimist will arise at such a juncture and declare that if this orchestra were suddenly disbanded it could be brought together again at short notice under new management. Possibly it could, but as a business venture this organization is probably not so profitable as it would appear to be. It is an accumulation of very rare players; the running expenses are no silly bagatelle, and few people know what the orchestra's profit-earning capacity is. To a few it is known that because of business depression last year in Boston this celebrated organization lost more than $30,000, despite the fact that its business in other cities was large—in New York even brilliant. Men do not arise every day who are prepared to meet such losses with equanimity. New York has been searching for such a man for years and it has yet to find him.

However this be, it would appear in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that the musical union has met its Waterloo. Mr. Higginson frankly states that it concerns him but little whether or not the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra belong individually to a musical union so long as they live up to their bargain with him and up to the spirit of the orchestra. But he positively refuses to be made a managerial martyr by petty by-laws. He has given the musical unions something to think about—even something to keep them awake at nights. And some well-balanced mind among the members realize that the osBton Symphony Orchestra means more to the welfare of music in this country than all the musical unions that ever were created.

Boston Post, Nov. 13

WHY MUSICIANS LEFT UNION

President Kingman Reports on Symphony Trouble

President F. C. Kingman of the Boston Musicians' Protective Association last night announced that the 77 members of the association that belonged to the Symphony Orchestra have resigned from the association.

He said: "There are 94 players in the Symphony Orchestra, and of this number 77 were members of the union. Their resignations have been coming in regularly for a month. We have done nothing to prevent the members from resigning.

"Peculiar conditions confronted those men. They have been given to understand that Major Higginson does not wish them to belong to the union. I understand that he said that he has given no order nor instructions to the men to the effect that members of the orchestra should not belong to the union.

"The union does not want to antagonize the Symphony Orchestra or Major Higginson. Because of that we have said nothing."

Boston Traveller, Nov. 14

94 MUSICIANS LEAVE UNION

President F. C Kingman of the Musicians' Protective Association No. 9 announced yesterday that all of the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who were members, have resigned from the union. He stated that there are 94 players in the orchestra, of which 77 were members of the union.

The resignations began to come in more than a month ago and have been coming in ever since, until there is not a member of the orchestra who is now a member of the union.

"We have put no obstacle in the way of their resigning," said Mr. Kingman. "As soon as they were presented they were accepted. Peculiar conditions confront these men. They have been practically given to understand that Major Higginson does not desire them to belong to the association. We do not desire to antagonize Major Higginson and have tried to keep the matter a secret."

When asked if it would be possible for any of the players who have resigned to gain readmittance to the union, Mr. Kingman said they could, but it would be a very expensive business, as they would find the initiation fee considerably larger than when they first entered.

At their meeting yesterday officers were nominated and the election will be held December 1.

Boston Sunday Herald Nov. 13

OLD SYMPHONY FOR MODERNS

Boston's Famous Orchestra First Plays Works of Haydn and Bruch, and Then Those of Strauss and Tschaikowsky.

WILLY HESS PLAYS THE CONCERTO

Performance Distinguished by Excellent Qualities, Straightforward, Broad, Sturdy and Full of Sentiment.

The programme of the fourth Symphony concert, given last night in Symphony all, Mr. Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

Symphony in E flat major (B. & H., No. 1).....Haydn
Concerto in G minor for violin.....Bruch
Prelude to act I. of "Guntram".....R. Strauss
Italian Caprice.....Tschaikowsky

There are symphonies and piano concertos that are out of proportion in a huge concert hall. They are built on such a scale, with a view to the orchestra and the piano of the period, that played by a modern full orchestra or with a modern concert grand, they seem dwarfed or trifling or dull when brought into, say, Symphony Hall. The woodwind instruments may be doubled to preserve the due balance with the present body of strings, but the effect of the whole is lost. There is no true intimacy of thought between performers and hearers. The musical fluid, to use the phrase of Berlioz, does not enwrap the listener.

But let a symphony by Haydn or Mozart be performed by a comparatively small band in a small hall, and, unless the music itself be one of the younger works of these composers, there is contagious enjoyment. The antique charm, melodic simplicity, contrapuntal rush or downright jollity then make their way. The ideal music hall has two rooms: one for the dramatic intensity, the roar and the bustle of the mighty of today; and one—it should be in the rococo style—for the music that charmed cavaliers in wigs and noble dames adorned with powder and patches. It may also be said that the smug cheerfulness of Haydn, which puts one in good humor when the orchestra and the hall are small, aggravates when it is proclaimed by a great band of players.

Richard Strauss' "Guntram" has a symbolical libretto, and as his stage characters were not creatures of flesh and blood, the opera quickly died. No opera that is purely symbolical will have a better fate. There are some ingenious persons who are prating constantly about the symbolism in Wagner's music-dramas; but the characters in the "Ring" and in "Tristan" are first of all human, often shabbily human, in their godlike disguises. Bruennhilde and Fricka and Sieglinde and Isolde are women; they are something more than mouthpieces for symbolism. "Guntram" is an opera of renunciation, and where there should be action there's nothing doing. Audiences are impatient with such librettos, and, unless the music be incongruously dramatic and imaginative at the same time, Time smiles on the few months or even weeks that bear the work of so much labor and anxiety and prayer and hope to his enormous dustbin.

The prelude to the first act of "Guntram," played last night, was naturally intended to put the opera audience into the suitable mood for receptivity; but Strauss also looked toward the concert hall for fame and applause, and thoughtfully provided an explanatory note for such performance. It might be better for a concert hearer to be let alone, to be unacquainted with any purpose of the composer as with any knowledge of the operatic story, so that listening to the music he might dream dreams and create the world in which Guntram should play the hero. The music itself, as absolute music without any thought of the tale about to be told, is not stamped with the individuality of the Strauss now famous, or according to some sensitive souls, infamous.

The composer of "Guntram" had shaken off the influence of Schumann and Brahms, but he was under the spell of Wagner. Still here and there are hints at the future Strauss, as in the fleeting suggestion of two conflicting tonalities, and there are certain orchestral effects that are Strauss' own. The work, however, is too evidently a prelude—not a sharply defined overture; and it is doubtful, even when it is played as well as it was last night, whether it would be effective thus taken from its proper place.

Tschaikowsky, ailing in mind and in body, sojourned in Rome in 1880 and found pleasure in Italian music only in the folk songs sung in the streets or sung to him by an acquaintance, a guitarist. He used some of these tunes, sentimental or passionate, in this caprice. The sentiment is often characteristically Italian sentimentalism, and some of the tunes are characteristically banal; but the caprice is full of ingenious detail; there are many reminders of the Italian opera of the fifties—witness the brass accompaniment that recalls the last scene of "La Traviata" or the "Misere" in "Il Trovatore"; and the swing, the drunkenness of the rhythm should be irresistible.

The performance last night, while brilliant in mechanical detail, might well have been more elastic and extravagant. When a great man is coarse, his coarseness might as well be accentuated; there is nothing gained by endeavoring to soften or refine. And it is not too much to say that in every elemental man there must be a streak of coarseness.

Mr. Schmedes was announced as the solo violinist, but a slip in the proand Mr. Hess would take his place and play Bruch's concerto in G minor. Mr. Hess was warmly applauded. His performance was straightforward, broad and sturdy, rather than one distinguished by fine or overpowering emotional quality, yet it was conspicuous by reason of many excellent qualities; it was the performance of a well equipped, accomplished, experienced violinist and musician, and in the interpretation of the slow movement there was sentiment.

Boston Globe, Nov. 1

MUSICAL MATTERS.

Fourth of the Season's Symphony Concerts.

Recital by Mons Guilmant, the Noted French Organist.

Other Interesting Recitals of the Week.

There was a change made almost at the last minute in the program of the fourth rehearsal and concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Danish violinist, Hakon Schmedes, pupil of Tofte, Wirth and Ysaye, who was announced as soloist, being too ill to fill his engagement, and Mr Willy Hess, the new concertmeister, volunteering to play the lovely and always welcome concerto for violin in G minor, by Max Bruch. This noble composition was a worthy substitute for the Vieuxtemps concerto, described with much elaboration in the programs, and was never played with deeper feeling or under more perfect conditions. It is a powerfully impressive and uncommonly colorful concerto; and its evident familiarity to the members of the orchestra gave the piece a support and background which was perfection itself. The soaring melody, phrased most poetically and exquisitely bowed, was given a memorable rendring by Mr Hess. The orchestration at times barely more than a whispered suggestion of the glowing nether-theme with which Bruch commences the andante, was given in a way that could not have failed to win praise from the composer himself. It was received, as it deserved to be, with pronounced favor.

There was variety enough to please any one in the program, which began with the dignified four-movement Haydn symphony in E flat major, opening with martial drum roll. A music student was heard explaining to one who inquired why it was always marked "R. and H., No. 1," in the programs, that it had "something to do with work done by Bach and Haydn in collaboration," he thought! The initials allude to the Breitkopf and Hartel catalog, and the symphony's relative rank. This was the symphony's second hearing in Boston, it having been first given here in November, 1891. The massive beauty of the theme, its splendid delivery by the company of musicians playing as one man, gave the delightful impression of absolute confidence so necessary to perfect enjoyment of such a sterling number. In the crisp rendition of the menuetto movement, as well as in the majestic climax, it was worthy of the initial place it commonly receives in program-making.

But it is not to be denied that the two selections after the intermission were in some respects the most eagerly anticipated numbers of the program. Doubtless the recent appearance of Dr Richard Strauss in this city has had much to do with his extraordinary popularity as composer. The performance of his "Introduction to Act I" of his first opera "Guntram," was of especial interest from the fact that the lady who afterward became the wife of Dr Strauss, Pauline de Ahna, was the heroine "Freihild" of its first hearing in Weimar in 1894, and that she is personally known to many here. The piece has a strong Wagnerian trend, and yet is sufficiently individual to warrant particular praise for its poetic power. The music which aroused everybody's desire to dance was the amazing Tschaikowsky "Italian Caprice for Orchestra," with a military opening, varying from the Haydn number in that the "challenge" was by trumpets, rather than by the drums.

The composer placed at the very head of his "Caprice" this stirring reminiscence of the Roman chivalry which he admired during his visit to the Eternal City in 1879. Suggestions of Neapolitan folk-songs and dance music, wild "gitana" melodies, and a "tarantella," full of Paganini-like capriciousness up to its startling prestissimo finale, and sufficiently vivacious to cure a dozen spider bites, are characteristic of this tuneful description of what the imaginative composer saw and heard almost in the shadow of the vatican. Its playing showed what the orchestra can do with a sprightly theme, filled with the lightsome street songs of the people, threaded together with scoring which of itself was at once masterful and delightful. The more one hears of the work of this intensely emotional Russian the more his genius appears. His name is used on an increasing number of programs and his works are always well received.

Mme Joanna Gadski is announced as the soloist at the fifth symphony rehearsal and concert on Nov 18 and 19, singing a Mozart aria. The closing scene of Wagner's "Die Gotterdammerung"; a "first time" symphonic poem, "Penthesilea," by Hugo Wolf, and the favorite Brahms "No. 3" symphony in F major are included in the program. The special announcement is made that the concert which has been widely advertised to be given on Christmas eve will instead be given on the previous Thursday evening, Dec 22.

Advertiser, Nov 14

MUSICAL MATTERS

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Haydn. Symphony in E flat.
Bruch. Violin Concerto in G minor.
Professor Willy Hess, soloist.
Richard Strauss. Introduction to Act I. of "Guntram."
Tschaikowsky. Capriccio Italien.

We can congratulate Mr. Gericke upon a programme that was interesting and well-contrasted, not too great in length, and admirably performed. Perhaps exception might be made of the symphony. But even this was more modern than much of Haydn's orchestral music, and the pleasing character of Mr. Adamowski's "obbligato" in the variations, and the strong effect of the kettle-drums, not only in the opening trills but in other movements, must be chronicled.

Nevertheless there were many of the composer's formulas before the end was reached, repetitions and conventionalities which are not for the 20th century auditor. One may accept Johnson's "Rasselas," or Richardson's "Clarissa Harlowe," as masterpieces in their day, without poring long over their pages, and, in the same manner, we may realize that the "Symphony with the kettle-drum trill" may have been very exciting in its time, without being entertained by it at present.

Mr. Hakon Schmedes, who was to have appeared as solo violinist, has evidently yielded to the exigencies of our climate and taken to his bed; wherefore the Vieuxtemps Concerto was quickly changed into Bruch's beautiful G minor work and Hakon Schmedes transformed into Willy Hess. Certainly the audience was the gainer as regards the composition, for Bruch's first concerto is worth all the violin music that Vieuxtemps ever wrote.

With such a sudden change there must have been scant opportunity for rehearsal, yet the work went with an abandon and breadth that aroused great enthusiasm.

There was perhaps a little less of tenderness in the second movement than Mr Adamokski used to invest it with, but the virile power, the lofty interpretation, were something to hold in memory for a long time. We have seldom heard the preluding of the introduction so effectively performed, and the Ossianic finale, full of the warlike ardor characteristic of Bruch, was magnificently done. The work is reminiscent of other compositions of the same pen; "Odysseus" has some phrases almost identical with certain passages in this concerto.

The audience were thoroughly aroused by the time the end was reached and the brilliant violinist was recalled four times in the midst of considerable excitement—a great Hessian victory over the Americans, even if a century or so belated.

The prelude to "Guntram" showed Strauss in the early stages of his musical reforms. Oddly enough, the radical opera is dedicated to his father, who was a conservative of conservatives. In this work we find the Wagner influence very distinctly marked; Lohengrin has merely disguised himself as Guntram. The development of two figures (one of 3 and one of 4 notes) is entirely in the Wagnerian vein.

But there are touches of orchestration that foreshadow the Strauss of that fearful battlefield of "Heldenleben." We should have liked the second prelude also; it made a good impression under Paur, years ago, when the two were given together.

Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice has the advantage of being really Italian, or rather Neapolitan. From the cavalry signal of the beginning, through the folk-song that forms the body of the work, up to the wild Tarantella which ends it, the auditor is in a real Naples. In the "Italian Symphony," which Strauss wrote, we are in a Naples where all the inhabitants speak only German! Even in the Tschaikowsky Caprice one wishes that there had been a less inflated character.

The Italian does not thunder out his pretty folk-tunes in such a portentous manner. Occasionally Tschaikowsky treats the pretty central theme with becoming simplicity, with thirds and sixths in simprogression, such as a Neapolitan might enjoy, but sometimes also he magnifies them unduly and begins to cook his maccaroni in a Samovar.

Perhaps some day the Italian will become symphonic and will possess more than a single classical instrumental composer (Sgambatti), and then we may hope to have Italian music served in the Italian manner, even in an orchestral work.

Nevertheless the Caprice was throughout interesting and it was performed in a manner that calls for renewed commendation of Mr. Gericke and his men.

Louis C. Elson.

HAKON SCHMEDES, VIOLINIST.

Boston Sunday Herald Nov. 13, 1904

Boston Post, Nov. 13

FOURTH SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The programme of the fourth Symphony concert last evening included the following numbers:

Symphony in E flat major.....Haydn
Concerto for violin, G minor.....Bruch
Introduction to Act I. of "Guntram"..R. Strauss
Italian Caprice, Op. 45.....Tschaikowsky

Hakon Schmedes, violinist, was announced as the soloist, in Vieuxtemps' concerto in D minor, but owing to illness Mr. Schmedes was unable to make his initial appearance in this city. In consequence Concert Master Willy Hess was the soloist for the second time.

His success upon the former occasion was very marked and last evening he played the familiar Bruch concerto in masterly manner. Nothing was lacking either in technic, tone or artistic interpretation, the result being all that one could well desire. Mr. Hess was enthusiastically applauded and several times recalled.

There was nothing strictly in the way of novelties offered in the remainder of the programme, yet none of the various numbers has been heard here for some time.

The Haydn symphony, except for a drum roll, which opens the first movement, resembles in general character all the others. And also for some reason it is rarely given, the performance last evening being the second at these concerts. It made a pleasing opening number, but in any event Haydn's symphonies are better adapted for a moderate orchestra in a small hall, as they were originally intended.

The prelude to "Guntram," opera by Richard Strauss, was heard here for the first time nine years ago. The performance last evening was the second, but to many in the audience it proved to be a novelty.

The prelude as a concert excerpt conveys little impression as absolute music, for one must hear the opera to realize any meaning from the introduction. It is a brilliant piece of orchestral writing and not much else, viewed as a concert number. The performance was very effective.

The closing number was Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice," Op. 45, which has had two previous performances in this city. The composer wrote it nearly 25 years ago, during an extended visit to Rome and other Italian cities. The themes have more or less of the characteristics of sunny Italy, but the treatment is Russian from the first to the last, and while not among the greatest of Tschaikowsky's works, is brilliant, forceful and interesting. The performance was excellent in every way.

The programme of the fifth rehearsal and concert this coming week will include Brahms' symphony, No. 3, a new symphonic poem, "Penthesilea," by Hugo Wolf, a Mozart aria and the final scene from Wagner's "Gotterdammerung." Mme. Gadski will be the soloist.

November 13.

TRANSCRIPT, MONDAY.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

After their recent visit to New York the Boston Symphony Orchestra returned to town and gave a concert, the fourth of the season, in Symphony Hall Saturday evening. Owing to the illness of Mr. Hakon Schmedes, who was to have made his first appearance here as a solo player, Mr. Willy Hess very kindly offered to be the soloist of the occasion. This was the programme.

Haydn: Symphony in E-flat major (B. & H. No.1).
Bruch: Concerto for Violin, in G minor.
Richard Strauss: Introduction to Act I. of "Guntram."
Tchaikovsky: Capriccio Italien, Op. 45.

The Haydn symphony has not often been heard in Boston; why, it would be hard to tell, if ancient symphonies are to be performed at all in an auditorium like Symphony Hall, for it surely compares favorably with the orchestral works of Haydn more frequently produced. In its place, indeed, the introduction to the symphony, with its roll of drum and the sombre color of its first theme, must make a really dramatic effect. All the first movement, in fact, has much about it that charms, and so have certain of the variations of the andante; the minuet and the finale, too, stand the test of time as well as most of Haydn's minuets and closing movements. But in Symphony Hall Haydn's tone color, which is truly much varied, all is lost. It is no disrespect to the memory of a genuinely great composer to protest against the producing of his works under conditions manifestly wrong. Since Haydn and Mozart symphonies are well worth hearing, why would it not be worth while to afford Bostonians an opportunity of hearing them properly? In place of twenty-four orchestral concerts in Symphony Hall, would it not be practicable to give perhaps four in Jordan Hall or Chickering Hall, when the programmes could consist of compositions, ancient and modern, that demand, for their adequate performance, a small music room? The artistic results of such a scheme have already been partially proved. Is the plan impracticable? If so, there is no more to be said, but, at least, it is not necessary to put the old masters in a false position by attempting to play their pieces in a hall of vast dimensions. Haydn symphonies are probably put on symphony concert programmes today with the idea of pleasing certain portions of his audiences. If the audience Saturday was pleased with the symphony offered, they successfully hid their pleasure. The silence at the end of the first movement was quite as "audible" as that which greeted Hausegger's "Barbarossa," a few years ago.

The remainder of the concert demands few words of comment. The work by Strauss is a prelude to an opera that has shown itself lifeless, and the prelude is as lifeless as the opera it precedes. In it there is little to be found of the Strauss we are interested in today, although there is a very good deal of Wagner as he was imitated by his disciples. The themes, if there are any themes, are vague and meaningless; the orchestration is not particularly effective; the composition, in short, is dull and dreary, with less vitality in its whole length than there is in one page of the gay, animated, vulgar capriccio of Tchaikovsky. Nearly all Northern composers show themselves vulgar when they attempt to strum airs of Italy, but, to write vulgarly of a vulgar subject, it is useless to try to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear. Common as it is, the capriccio can be made immensely effective if it be performed in the right spirit, with the sort of rythm Mascagni once showed us. Mr. Gericke tried to refine Tchaikovsky's music, thereby taking away from its effect and making it sound even coarser than usual. A former performance from Mr. Gericke was far more brilliant.

The greatest enthusiasm of the evening was aroused by Mr. Hess's playing of the Bruch G minor concerto. On this, his third appearance here as a soloist, Mr. Hess strengthened the impression he made when he first played here; he is unquestionably a musician of parts, with a highly developed technique and a keen intellect. That he is a player of strong appeal, of warmth or of charm he has not yet demonstrated. On Saturday he was most cordially applauded.

There will be a symphony concert this coming Saturday evening, when Mme. Gadski is to be the soloist. The programme follows: Brahms, Symphony in F major, No. 3; Mozart, Aria; Hugo Wolf, Symphonic Poem, "Penthesilea" (first time); Wagner, closing scene from "Die Götterdämmerung."

R. R. G.

[32]

Troy Record
Nov. 15

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

That Splendid Band of Musicians Gave a Delightful Concert at Music Hall Last Evening—David Bispham the Assisting Artist.

The validity of a declaration that Troy is distinctively a musical center would hardly be unquestionable were an event of such importance as that of last evening allowed to pass by without full and generous patronage. It was a pilgrimage of the music loving part of the city to Music hall and the attraction was the Boston Symphony orchestra. The generous welcome this peerless organization was accorded was in itself further substantiation of the fact that Troy is unmistakably musical and that the demand of the musi l cult is for the highest standard of music the world offers. The Boston Symphony orchestra is the greatest organization of its kind in this country, not in size, perhaps, but indisputably so in its achievements. There are those who claim for it its superiority to any symphonic band in the world and even this may be so. The audience was worthy of the occasion; it filled practically the auditorium and demonstarted its delight in positive and emphatic terms.

A concert of the character of that of last evening is not a common occurrence in Troy and while the real music loving public hope and look forward to the coming of this organization once a year the magnificence and grandeur of the program makes the event nothing short of a rare musical feast.

It may have been disappointing to some to hear the announcement that William Gericke, the famous conductor, would be unable to assume his usual position on account of illness but there was some satisfaction in learning that Willy Hess would stand before the mighty body and lead the orchestra to another musical victory. Mr. Hess is the new concert master and until recently was professor of violin in the Royal Academy of Music in London and prior to that time he was the concert master of Sir Charles Halle's Manchester orchestra. It was his first appearance in this country as a conductor and the audience seemed to obtain some soothing draughts from this situation. There is no question as to his musicianly ability and it is only just to say that it is doubtful if the concert would have been more pleasing had Mr. Gericke been at the conductor's desk. The orchestra was assisted by David Bispham, barytone, well and favorably known to Trojans.

Mr. Hess was given a cordial reception when he strode to the front of the platform to clutch the baton and give his reading of the overture to the opera "Oberon" by Weber. The theme of the romantic opera is plaintive and soothing and while delightfully fluent some of the phrases are strikingly brilliant. Naturally all the varied coloring was given delicately and the motive works up to a spirited end. Mr. Hess was repeatedly encored but those demanding encores were convinced quickly that encores were not to be. The second contribution by the orchestra was the Dvorak Suite in D major Op 39 including Praeludium (Pastorale), Polka: Trio, Menuett (Sousedska), Romanze, Finale (Furiant).

Probably as much interest centered in the Beethoven Fourth Symphony in B flat, major, Op 60, as any number on the program, and perhaps more. Of the famous composer's works this is one of the mose brilliant and joyful. Every movement was given the most artistic reading one could ask for and there were frequent evidences of pleasure displayed by the audience. The whole work is full of melodic expression and it suggests irresistible tenderness. To attempt an analysis of the work would be superfluous as it was one consecutive presentation of beautiful harmonies. The movements played were: Adagio; allegro vivace, Adagio, Allegro vivace, Trio: Un poco meno allegro. Finale: Allegro ma non troppo.

To those who love orchestral music it was a treat to hear the luscious tones of the strings, the mellow pipings, the careful blasts of well governed brass and the elegant richness of massed sound. Every measure this orchestra plays is marked by beautiful precision and in every phrase there is noticeable delicacy of touch. Refined nuancing and reposeful elegance of its entire style are never failing sources of delight.

Mr. Bispham was down for two numbers on the program and he sang with his usual artistic finish. No one will dispute his dramatic ability and but few will gainsay his able interpretations. Nevertheless, Mr. Bispham has not the voice to work with that he had when he sang here the first time years ago for the Chromatic club, but he is no less the artist. He was heartily received. There seemed to be a disposition on the part of the audience to hear him sing for an encore some of the ballads he has been heard sing here many times, but he contributed none whatever. His numbers were "Wo berg ish mich," from "Euryanthe," "Hymnus," Strauss, and Pilger's "Morgenlied." The concert was a fine success and was under the management of Ben Franklin.

Troy Press
Nov. 15

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Brilliant Performance by Boston Orchestra at Music Hall.

The incomparable Boston Symphony orchestra was greeted by an audience last evening almost as large as Music hall could accommodate. The gathering was a brilliant one from both a musical and society standpoint, and included music lovers from Albany, Schenectady, Hoosick Falls, Rutland, Vt., Bennington, Vt., and other places. The music public of Troy and vicinity holds this superb organization at its true value, and gives it an intelligent appreciation as well as liberal patronage whenever it appears in Music hall.

Previous concerts can be recalled for which the programmes were more acceptable and appealing than the one offered last night, but nevertheless great enjoyment was provided despite the inability of Director Wilhelm Gericke to be present in person and guide his instrumentalists. It was ascertained at a late hour yesterday afternoon that Mr. Gericke had contracted a severe cold, which incapacitated him. His place was taken by Willy Hess, the new concert master of the orchestra, and it reflects not at all on the ability of Mr. Gericke to assert that his musicians were at their best under the baton of his solo violinist. Mr. Hess naturally attracted attention, as much has been recorded in his praise as a violin virtuoso since his arrival in this country only a few weeks ago. His dignified and authoritative style of conducting caused the musicians to respond to every move of baton or hand, and it was very evident that as an artistic musician he had searched the scores of the orchestral numbers on the programme and was capable of revealing all their beauties. His readings were doubtless identical with those of Mr. Gericke, and with such a band of thinking, enthusiastic musicians under his control perfect interpretation naturally followed.

The playing was all a triumph. The claim that the Boston Symphony stands among the two or three best orchestras in all the world was again fully justified. Its superior excellence received appreciative recognition and was never more apparent. The offerings of the band included Weber's "Oberon" overture, Dvorak's suite in D major and Beethoven's symphony No. 4 in B flat major.

Supplemental to the orchestra was David Bispham, the favorite barytone, who was heard in Lysiart's scena "Wo Berg Ich Mich," from Weber's "Euryanthe" and Richard Strauss' "Hymnus."

It was an extremely brilliant performance of the Oberon overture by the orchestra. The opening measures were brought out sympathetically and the quick movement was rushed along with fire and enthusiasm. This brilliancy of performance continued throughout the evening right through the suite and the symphony.

The playing of the Dvorak suite was an illustration of perfection in orchestral art. The melodious second theme, especially, was played with a beauty of tone, technical precision, extraordinary variety of expression and a finish and refinement which call for only unstinted praise.

The finale was given with a spirit that exhilarated and a perfect balance of all the parts was distinctly conspicuous. Throughout the suite the richly colored orchestration was beautifully treated.

The Beethoven symphony came late in the evening, when nearly enough music had been heard for a single sitting, but its interpretation by such an unrivalled band commanded, held and increased attention and interest. It is not one of the most familiar of the Beethoven symphonies, but is a strikingly marked work. It was played with surpassing beauty of tone and that perfection of ensemble for which the orchestra is noted. The beautiful adagio was given exquisitely, while in the third movement the superb choirs of strings and wood winds did grand work.

David Bispham is an admirable vocalist and a thoroughly sincere and artistic musician. He has proved that to Trojans on several previous occasions, and did so again last night. He has an excellent equipment in voice, understanding and technique, and sings with a fine insight into the emotional and musical contents of his songs. The directness and sincerity with which he goes to the heart of all he undertakes are good to note. His selections last night were more calculated to disclose him as a scholarly singer than to please the ear attuned only to melody.

The concert was given under the management of Ben Franklin, who thus added another to the list of high class musical entertainments that have been vouchsafed Trojans under his auspices. Mr. Franklin has arranged another rare musical function for February 7, 1905, when he will bring Paderewski, the master of all pianists, to Music hall.

Troy Times
Nov. 15

The Boston Symphony Concert.

Last night in Music Hall appeared for the sixth time in Troy the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The first two of these concerts were given about twenty years ago, or shortly after the orchestra was organized, and the last four have been distributed over the last five years, the concert last year having been given in Albany. The last four concerts and the one in Albany—five in all—were managed by the well known tenor, Ben Franklin, who assumed the entire responsibility of the events, a task that not one of the musical organizations of either Troy or Albany would attempt. The audience last night was a splendid tribute to Mr. Franklin's judgment, and also showed that the interest in symphony concerts here does not wane, but rather increases as each concert is given—an excellent test of our musical advancement. Finer concerts than those given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra cannot be heard, either in this country or Europe, and local music lovers cannot too deeply appreciate this fact. The Boston Symphony has long been known as the greatest of all orchestras, and it is certainly a golden opportunity that presents itself and is a distinct compliment to Trojans when the great band decides to appear here.

The audience last night was greatly disappointed when it was announced from the stage that Wilhelm Gericke, the Conductor of the orchestra, had been taken suudenly ill and would be unable to conduct, but its disappointment was only short lived, as Willy Hess, the new concert master, was all that could be desired, and it is not too much to say that he met every requirement so well, the orchestra responding to his baton so finely and his interpretations of the different works were so correct that Mr. Gericke was entirely forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. In the leadership of Mr. Hess Troy was signally honored, as it was the first time that he has conducted the orchestra in this country, he having been here only a month, and when it is known that he conducted last night without a rehearsal his work is all the more remarkable. The news of Mr. Gericke's illness was not received until the arrival of the orchestra yesterday afternoon, as all telegraphic communication was at a standstill on account of the storm.

In regard to the program of the concert it is hardly necessary to go into detail. Each number was given as only the Boston Symphony Orchestra could give it, each arousing great enthusiasm and calling for the heartiest applause. This was so after the overture to Weber's "Oberon," Mr. Hess having to bow his acknowledgments to the plaudits. It was more so after the splendid reading of the D Major Suite of Dvorak, the Conductor having to bow again and again before the applause ceased, and Mr. Hess and his orchestra achieved a distinct triumph in the interpretation of the No. 4 Beethoven Symphony in B flat major, the reading being perfect in every detail and meeting with prolonged applause at its close. The soloist last night was the great favorite, David Bispham, and he was in splendid voice, but he, too, suffered from Mr. Gericke's illness, as the latter had the orchestration to Mr. Bispham's last song, and it had to be omitted. Encores are not permitted in Symphony concerts, so all Mr. Bispham could do was to bow to the hearty appreciation as shown by the applause. The concert was in every way a great success and an event long to be remembered. In Mr. Hess the Boston Symphony has a concert master who is perfection itself. He has all the ability of Franz Kneisel, so long famous as the Symphony's concert master, and he excels him in warmth of feeling and temperament. More, too, every member of the orchestra is in sympathy with him, and this was demonstrated in no small degree last night.

The audience at the concert was a most brilliant one, and there were box parties, theatre parties and the like innumerable, all adding to the brilliancy of the occasion. Mr. Franklin, in keeping with his determination to bring attractions of only the very highest type, now announces the appearance of that greatest of all pianists, Ignace J. Paderewski, who will appear in Music Hall early in February. The event will make the third appearance here of the great artist under Mr. Franklin's management.

Providence Journal
Wednesday, Nov 23

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Season Opened with a Fine Programme Brilliantly Performed.

The first concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last evening in Infantry Hall. A large audience was present, although the overflowing houses of last year were not quite equalled. Considerable enthusiasm was aroused by the brilliant performance of the orchestra, and the soloist, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, who appeared here last night for the first time, also received generous and appreciative recognition. The programme was as follows:

Overture to the opera "Oberon".....Weber
Concerto in F-minor, for pianoforte and orchestra, Op. 16.....Henselt
Suite in D-major, Op. 39.....Dvorsk
Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60 .....Beethoven

This was an admirable programme, the four numbers being well contrasted, each a masterpiece of its kind, while none of them—with the single exception of the overture—was sufficiently familiar from previous performances as to lack some charm of novelty. And if any stock piece was to appear in the list none could be more welcome than the "Oberon" overture, certainly one of the most brilliantly scored, melodious and thoroughly charming of all operatic overtures. The orchestra was on its mettle in this, playing with the utmost delicacy, spirit and feeling, and setting a mark that was well kept up throughout the whole evening. The Dvorak suite is a fine example of the Bohemian master's style. He was always at his best when dealing with his native melodies, in which the sharply defined rhythms and sometimes almost bizarre flavor of the melodic construction seem to make a special appeal to his genius. This suite abounds in originality of style and that vivid orchestral coloring in which Dvorak is not surpassed by any modern composer. Beethoven's fourth symphony, though by no means one of his greatest, is yet a well-balanced and worthy composition, rich in melodic inspiration and constructive skill. One or two of the movements—the adagio, for example—might stand comparison with any similar movement among his more famous symphonies. Both these, the principal orchestral numbers of the programme, were played with the greatest sympathy and technical finish.

The concerto by Henselt, which Madame Bloomfield-Zeisler chose for her solo number, calls for a robust and thoroughly trained technic, a demand which was completely met. She is apparently one of those for whom technical difficulties do not exist. Her tone is powerful without being coarse, and her command of dynamics is complete. While brilliancy is the main thing called for in this concerto, there were indications enough that Mme. Bloomfield-Zeisler is equally at home in cantabile. She has the ability to make the piano sing, which, after all, is the final test of a pianist. The audience was not slow to recognize a great artist, and several hearty and prolonged recalls followed her very enjoyable performance.

The orchestra is playing distinctly better than last season. The withdrawal of Messrs. Kneisel, Loeffler, Schroeder and several other leading players last year was severely felt, and in the case of the concert-master the loss seemed almost irreparable. Mr. Arbos, though undoubtedly a good player and able musician, did not seem able to fill the gap. In the person of Mr. Willy Hess the orchestra seems to have gained a valuable member, and the places of the other men have been apparently filled with success. Certainly the orchestra played last night with all its old-time certainty, vigor, unanimity and delicacy, a fact which it is most gratifying to record. The second concert in this city will be given on the evening of Tuesday, Jan. 3.

Sunday Herald Boston, Nov. 20

Sunday Globe Nov. 20

Advertiser Nov. 21

Transcript Nov. 21

"PENTHESILEA" DISAPPOINTING

Wolf's Symphonic Poem Given Its First Performance in Boston at the Concert of the Symphony Orchestra.

MME. GADSKI NEVER MORE SATISFACTORY

Sings Admirably Music by Mozart and Wagner — Brilliant Programme for the Coming Pension Fund Concert.

The programme of the fifth Symphony concert, Mr. Gericke, conductor, given last night in Symphony Hall, was as follows:

Symphony in F major, No. 3.....Brahms
"Dove Sono," from "Marriage of Figaro".....Mozart
Symphonic poem, "Penthesilea".....Wolf
(First time.)
Finale of "Goetterdaemmerung".....Wagner

Hugo Wolf, who died early in 1903, after he had spent about five years in a Viennese madhouse, was from his youth an enthusiastic admirer of Heinrich von Kleist, whose powerful and horrible tragedy, based on the story of the Amazon and Achilles, urged the composer to music. Not only did Wolf read the tragedy constantly, he insisted on reading it to others. He composed his symphonic poem, his only orchestral work of long breath; his thoughts were on his "Penthesilea" during his first stay in an asylum, and he was anxious to compose an opera with the erotically cruel woman as the heroine.

The symphonic poem is in three sections: "The Departure of the Amazons for Troy"; "Penthesilea's Dream of the Festival of Roses" (it was the traditional and rigid law of the Amazons that only conquered foes should celebrate with them this feast in their own town, Themiscyra); and the third section, which Wolf wished to amplify, portrays "Combats, Passions, Frenzy, Annihilation," for after Achilles had determined to yield to her in the fight, she, suspecting his design, and her amorous frenzy turning to raging hate, slew him with an arrow, and, setting her hands on his body, tore with them his flesh and rejoiced in his blood; then, with the return to reason, she stabbed herself and fell on the mutilated corpse.

Wolf composed "Penthesilea" in 1883, when he was 23 years old. He never heard it performed except once at a slipshod rehearsal that was for the purpose of deriding him. The work was produced at Halle in November of last year, and it has since gone the round of German cities. Theodore Thomas produced it in Chicago last April.

The subject tempted Goldmark, whose overture is not wholly successful, and Felix Draeseke wrote to Kleist's tragedy a symphonic prologue which we have never heard. Did Wolf find the adequate musical expressions of the emotions that undoubtedly surged within him?

His talent, from what we know by his music and through hearsay, was lyrical, not dramatic, and in this overture the lyrical episodes are those most poetic and effective. The opening measures of the symphonic poem immediately fix the attention and the interest is well maintained in spite of certain crudities until the dream section, which is prettily sonorous and contains some beautiful measures, but the individuality of the music is not pronounced, and there is little suggestion of the wild sensuousness of the festival. The last section, which should have been stirringly dramatic, poignantly tragic, disappointed, and it did not apparently satisfy Wolf.

There are a few ingenious details in the battle music, there are tragic strokes toward the end, and the last measures are impressive, but throughout this section the composer, to borrow a homely phrase, is revealed as one sparring for wind. No doubt there was in his mind the fitting musical expression, but he had not then the ability to formulate it, and his orchestral speech was often thick and stammering.

Mr. Gericke, it was plain, had taken great pains in rehearsal; his reading was sympathetic; the superb orchestra did all in its power to second him; but the music itself disappointed. Perhaps this female Sadist, this queen of masochismus, whose full-length portrait deserves the place of honor in the gallery of royal perverts, will never find a supreme eulogist in music. As for poor Wolf, he was not the first composer to glow with enthusiasm over a literary work and then to fail in an attempt at transliteration.

Nevertheless, Mr. Gericke deserves hearty thanks for acquainting us with the symphonic poem, much of which, at a first hearing, seemed ordinary or futile and both futile and ordinary; for Wolf's music has excited attention since his death; already there is a Wolf bibliography; his sworn admirers praise him preposterously; and it is always a good thing for a Symphony audience to receive impressions from a work rather than from what has been written about it.

The symphony was played with what might be called Brahms bravura. The exposition was clear, yet not coolly anatomical; the nuances were skilfully prepared and delicately contrasted; the rhythmic treatment was spontaneous, and the continuity of the long line was admirably preserved. The performance was most euphonious, and it is impossible to refrain from mentioning with special praise the work done by flutes, oboes and clarinets.

Mme. Gadski reached and maintained a higher standard of excellence than ever before at these concerts, and in fact she has never sung here so well as she sang last night the music by Mozart and Wagner. In the air of the countess she displayed a beautiful quality of tone and a pure and sustained legato. Her interpretation was Mozartian, for the music of Mozart is not so emotional in its melodic thought as in the suggestion. His vocal passion has the self-restraint, the classic calm of the figures on Grecian frieze or urn.

In the finale of "Goetterdaemmerung" Mme. Gadski was dramatic within the frame of the concert stage. She did not try to convert the concert hall into an opera house, yet her discretion did not choke emotion. She was a mortal Bruennhilde, a woman who had known life's joys and sorrows, not a shrieking goddess of viragoes.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

Gadski the Symphony Orchestra Soloist.

"Parsifal" Will Return Next Week to the Tremont Theatre.

Concerts and Recitals in Great Number.

Mme Gadski was the soloist at the fifth symphony concert, singing the recitation and aria, "Flown Forever," from Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," and Brunnhilde's music from the finale of Wagner's "Gotterdammerung." The orchestral numbers were Brahms' third symphony and Hugo Wolf's symphonic poem, "Penthesilea," the latter for the first time here. The prima donna, who temporarily has deserted the grand opera stage, has returned to America with a voice which appears to be fuller and more resonant than when heard here last season. Not being tired by the exacting demands of opera all the vocal beauties are in evidence; the tones are almost faultless, the execution is as fluent as ever and there is an evident gain in dramatic breadth, as shown in the Brunnhilde music, which was delivered with splendid effect and was a distinct advance over her singing the same music in opera last April.

The great contrast between the Wagner and Mozart style of song enabled the singer to show the versatility of her art and the wide range of her abilities, and in the familiar excerpt from the latter composer's opera Mme Gadski achieved even greater success than in Brunnhilde's aria, the dainty legato passages being sung with exquisite beauty of tone, especially in the mezzo voice, and without an apparent effort in the highest vocal parts. It was a delightful interpretation, and the cordial welcome the great artist received on her entrance was more than duplicated at the close of her first number.

The orchestra played the Mozart accompaniments admirably, of course, and Mr Gericke made the "Gotterdammerung" music as effective as could be looked for when the makeup of the orchestra is considered. In the Brahms' symphony all the work was of the usual high standard, the fortissimo development of the finale being the most striking because of its vigorous and complicated nature.

Hugo Wolf's symphonic poem was played here for the first time. The grewsome subject chosen for musical illustration is skilfully, at times brutally, treated as the story requires, and many of the orchestral combinations are fairly startling in their presentation. All the weird, uncanny effects were characteristically set forth, and although the poem isn't very pleasing to hear, there is no denying its strength, orchestral cleverness and consistency to the sentiments of the story.

This week's soloist will be Mme Bloomfield-Zeisler, who will play Henselt's F minor piano concerto. The other program numbers will include Saint-Saens first symphony, first time here; Liszt's symphonic poem, "Hunnenschlacht," and Goldmark's "Sappho" overture.

Ad, Nov. 18

SYMPHONY REHEARSAL.

The novelty this afternoon at the Symphony rehearsal will be Hugo Wolf's "Penthesilea," a symphonic poem based on von Kleist's tragedy of the same name. Wolf died early in 1903 after five years in a madhouse, and "Penthesilea" was not produced till November of that year. Mr. Thomas introduced it in Chicago. The work is in three sections: The departure of the Amazons for Troy—the dream of the garden of roses, to which the Amazons took the male captives who pleased them—and a finale which portrays Penthesilea's rage, the slaying of Achilles, the maltreatment of his dead body, and her own death. The other orchestral piece is Brahms' Symphony No. 3. Mme. Gadski will sing "Dove Sono," from "Le Nozze di Figaro," and Bruennhilde's monologue from the finale of "Goetterdaemmerung."

MUSICAL MATTERS

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Symphony in F major, No. 3, op. 90:....Brahms
Recitative, "How Susanna delays!" and Aria "Flown forever" from "The Marriage of Figaro".....Mozart
Mme. Gadski.
Symphonic Poem, "Penthesilea," after the like named tragedy of Heinrich von Kleist.....Hugo Wolf
(First time.)
Finale of "The Dusk of the Gods".....Wagner
Mme. Gadski.

The Brahms symphony was glorious. Such music is a bulwark against the musical hysteria that mars so much of the most recent composition. It was finely performed and at its close Mr. Gericke was recalled to acknowledge the plaudits of the audience. There was a time when Brahms was thought abstruse, but this delicate work seemed brimful of melody and was "like an open book

That he who runs may read."

Was it sarcasm that induced the conductor to place Hugo Wolf's symphonic poem almost in juxta-position with this shapely symphony?

Mme. Gadski was in excellent voice, but we are not convinced that "Dove Sono" is the best number for her style of singing. She seemed more successful in the great finale to "Gotterdammerung." Nevertheless the audience became enthusiastic over the first number and recalled the singer three times.

Then came the problem of the concert, Wolf's remarkable "Penthesilia." The work plunged into "medias res" in its very first measures, with the fiercest and most forcible of chords. There was originality even in the fanfares which pictured the war-like Amazons on their way to Troy.

The episode of the Dream of the Feast of Roses is very tender and tuneful enough (in the "continuous melody" vein) to be attractive even in a piano transcription. But the final fury is the dramatic nub of the whole work and is graphic in a high degree. Its battle-scene is more intelligible than the bewildering combat of "Heldenleben," and as a whole the symphonic poem is not as labyrinthine as some of the puzzle-music of the present.

There is more in the score, however, than the ear can clearly grasp. It is another illustration of Herbert Spencer's remark that modern music often demanded physical impossibilities of the human brain, that it presented more than the mind could possibly comprehend simultaneously. Although we greatly admired some portions of the work we must admit that it is strangely unequal, that there are occasional passages of commonplace beside the loftiest thoughts.

It is quite possible that the reviewer (as every auditor) is swayed somewhat by sympathy in forming a judgment of the composition. It is impossible to shut out from one's mind the story of the composer's pathetic career, the bitter injustice which he so often suffered, the wretched poverty, the final scourging into insanity,—one of the saddest tales in the tear-stained pages of musical history. But allowing for this favorable bias it is still quite certain that there are flashes of genius in this "Penthesilia."

Of course it was dimmed, as was all the rest of the concert, by the great finale to "Gotterdammerung." If there is anything quite as great as this scene, in "Parsifal," we have failed to perceive it. We doubt whether there is such another summing-up in music anywhere.

Mme. Gadski sang it with much dramatic fervor, although occasionally strident in the highest passages. Her artistic triumph was heartily acknowledged by the audience, which did not rush out at the end of the programme, but stayed to applaud vociferously.

The conductor and the orchestra, of course, shared in this ovation. The work is pre-eminently orchestral, and it was performed with utmost effect. Altogether then, this concert was either beautiful or interesting in every part of every number.

Louis C. Elson.

[34]

Sunday Herald
Nov. 27

SIXTH SYMPHONY SUCCESS SCORED

Famous Orchestra Plays Saint-Saens' First Symphony—It Is a Boyish Work, Performed in Boston for First Time.

MRS. BLOOMFIELD-ZEISLER SOLOIST

Plays an Antiquated Concerto of Henselt's with Musical Intelligence and Imagination—Did Not Modernize It.

The programme of the sixth Symphony concert, Mr. Gericke, conductor, in Symphony Hall last night, was as follows:

Symphony in E flat major, No. 1, op. 2.. (first time.) Saint-Saens
Concerto in F minor.....Henselt
Symphonic poem, "The Battle of the Huns".....Liszt
Overture, "Sappho".....Goldmark

Saint-Saens' symphony was played here for the first time. It was produced in Paris when the composer was 17 years old, and it was produced anonymously. Some, after the performance last night—and it may here be said that Mr. Gericke and the orchestra bestowed on this work the care with which they would treat a symphony by Brahms or Bruckner—may wonder why the symphony was played at all; for the purely musical interest of this youthful work is indeed slight. The march-scherzo is pretty in its naivete, and its opening is Haydnesque; the adagio is mellifluous, and now and then escapes from the salon; but the first movement is like unto the church of the Laodiceans, and we doubt whether the entrance last night of the sax instruments added by Saint-Saens in the finale would have made the last movement any less inherently common.

It may also be said by some that it is a wrong to a distinguished composer to revive works of his young years; that he himself, if living, would gladly see them forgotten. Two of Saint-Saens' symphonies, performed in 1857 and 1860, were dropped overboard; they disappeared, as the boy Xury in "Robinson Crusoe"; but this one in E flat was revived in Paris as lately as 1896. Perhaps the composer, reversing the order, loves this work as his little Benjamin.

It should be remembered that young French composers in the fifties did not instinctively look to the concert hall for glory; they strained every effort to gain a hearing in the opera house, and, failing in that, they began with operettas. Saint-Saens was serious in his youth; his irony as revealed in the "Danse Macabre" and in "Omphale's Spinning Wheel" came later, and it has remained until some may be excused for believing that he is now ironical when most serious.

It was a surprising thing in 1853 for a young Frenchman to write a symphony; and there is much in this particular work that was then creditable to a lad. Let us not forget musical perspective. We are inclined to judge a work that is 50 years old by comparing it with some stupendous machine, "The Day of Judgment," or "Kosmos," which will be completed next year. A boy of 17 wrote in 1853 a symphony. He knew his Haydn, his Mendelssohn, and he appreciated at least Mozart and Beethoven. He did not attempt to out-Berlioz Berlioz, as some young composers of today endeavor to go beyond Richard Strauss and Claude Debussy. He remembered the traditions and he tried to do his best in the approved way. Yet here and there, not often it is true, are hints at the mature Saint-Saens, in the use of wind instruments, in a certain elegance of expression that distinguishes him from all other composers.

Mrs. Bloomfield-Zeisler gave an exceedingly fine performance of a concerto that is for the most part antiquated. When she is at her best she has few rivals in the expression of passion. Some years ago an enthusiastic admirer hailed her as the Duse of the piano—or was she the Bernhardt of the piano? She outlived this praise. She is a heroic pianist, yet not such a reckless Amazon as Sophie Menter. The color of her passion glows, it is not that of the white heat which we associate with Miss Aus der Ohe. Mrs. Bloomfield-Zeisler has warmth and strength and the nervousness of woman. To call her a virile player would be to misunderstand her, to fail in appreciation.

She chose Henselt's concerto, which has long been dear to her. She played it years ago in New York when she made her first appearance there after study in Europe. The concerto was famous in its day. It was considered in the '40s superbly romantic. Nothing is so short-lived as the modernity of romanticism. That which made Byron famous in his day and generation now makes him intolerable to many. The Byron that lives is the poet of "Beppo" and "Don Juan," the writer of the letters, not the creator of Lara, Manfred and the rest of the scowling band.

Mrs. Bloomfield-Zeisler showed her musical intelligence and imagination by playing Henselt's music in the manner of its period. She did not attempt to modernize its spirit. Her beautiful tone, her brilliant technic, her song and dash, her control of the phrase and her cunning preservation of the flowing line—all this display of rare talent almost persuaded one that Henselt's concerto still has vitality.

Liszt's "Battle of the Huns" improves on acquaintance. There is no doubt concerning the man's sincerity in composing as he did. No one can do as much as he did and be constantly a poseur in his works, his letters—Liszt was an amazing correspondent—his life. He heard the symbolical battle in his music; he saw the triumph of the cross. The mere attempt to portray such things in a symphonic poem would have staggered a lesser man of his [illegible] be[illegible] Hall Saturday afternoon makes an impression by this work is much. And how constantly composers now living are in his debt! How grateful Wagner should have been to him!

Goldmark has written several overtures, and his latest will be produced here this season. "Sappho" is unmistakably Goldmarkian; but does this music really put the little dark woman with a beautiful smile before one? To us the one overture of Goldmark is still the "Sakuntala." The most passionate and yet the most reserved, the most human of women poets, whose sex cried out in lines that have mocked the centuries, should have more rapt and growing music associated with her name.

The performance of the orchestra throughout was of the highest order.

Sunday Post
Nov. 27

SIXTH SYMPHONY CONCERT

Saint-Saens' First Symphony Given as the Novelty

The programme of the sixth Symphony concert last evening included the following numbers:
Symphony No. 1, Op. 2.....Saint-Saens
Concerto for pianoforte, Op. 16.....Henselt
Symphonic poem, "Battle of the Huns"....Liszt
Overture. "Sappho".....Goldmark
Mme. Bloomfield Zeisler was the soloist.

The performance of the Saint-Saens symphony was probably the first in the United States. It is a product of the composer's early thought, and written at 18 years of age. The work is of historic interest mainly, though the scherzo shows indications of that skill in orchestration that is so manifest in Saint-Saens' later productions.

But it is hardly worth a place on a Symphony programme, although the performance last evening satisfied the curiosity of many who wished to hear the early work of the most eminent among living French composers.

The other works for orchestra heard at this concert are not especially noteworthy. The overture, however, has pleasant moments, although much inferior to the composer's "Sakuntala."

Mme. Zeisler played the Henselt concerto with her old-time brilliancy and technical proficiency. The slow movement, the gem of the entire work, was played in well-nigh ideal manner, and was most enjoyable in every way. Mme. Zeisler was loudly applauded for her superb performance, and several times recalled.

The programme of the seventh rehearsal and concert this coming week will include the "King Lear" overture of Berlioz; Liszt's piano piece, "St. Francis' Sermon to the Birds," orchestra led by Felix Mottl; the third Schumann symphony, and the Beethoven violin concerto, played by Ysaye, who makes his return here after several years' absence.

Herald, Nov. 27

PENSION FUND CONCERT.

The pension fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Gericke conductor, at Symphony Hall next Sunday night should crowd the hall to the doors, by reason of the purpose for which the concert is given and by reason of the programme itself. The programme will include Meyerbeer's overture to "The Star of the North," which has not been heard here for a long time; a scene from the Hungarian suite of Massenet; selections from Humperdinck's "Haensel und Gretel," for voices and orchestra; Sgambati's "Te Deum," for strings and orchestra, which was produced here by the Cecilia March 20, 1896 (the work is also known as "Andante Solenne," and when it was played at the Crystal Palace in 1894 other instruments were introduced); Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice.

Mr. De Pachmann will play Liszt's brilliant concerto in E flat, and his performance is looked forward to with more than ordinary anticipation. He will also play solo piano pieces. Mr. Wallace Goodrich will be the organist.

It is an indisputable fact that no orchestra in the world surpasses the Boston Symphony; it is doubtful whether any European orchestra equals it in euphony of tone, in discipline, and in virtuoso qualities. Perhaps we are all too much in the habit of taking the superb performances of this orchestra as a matter of course; perhaps we do not always realize what an honor this organization is to the city, what an important factor it is in the life of the town. New York and Philadelphia, cities that have their own orchestra, appreciate this band of players as highly as do Bostonians who have seen the growth of the organization founded and maintained by Maj. Higginson. What higher compliment could be paid this orchestra than the appeal made early this month to the citizens of Providence by Dr. Faunce of Brown, who asked them to show this season "the same interest in fine music and the same civic pride" as last year. "We do not ask much," wrote Dr. Faunce to the Providence Journal: "We ask only that each citizen who believes that life is more than bread and butter, who believes in the things of the spirit, shall give his patronage and his influence to this unselfish enterprise. Let every music teacher be there and interest his or her pupils. Let every serious student of music seize the opportunity. Let every man who would be a leader in the activities of our city be found there."

And now the members of the Boston Symphony orchestra give a concert that their pension fund may gain thereby. The years pass; one by one those who by their skill have given so much pure pleasure will be forced to retire through physical disability or by reason of old age. Nor does death spare players on instruments of strings, wood or brass; he sounds his pipe or beats his drum as in the mediaeval dances, and they must follow his call. This concert is given that the incapacitated, that the wives and children left behind may not suffer from material want. It is the orchestra's own concert; it is for the players and their families. Can there be any save a generous response?

Sunday Globe
Nov. 27

Sixth Symphony Concert—Pension Fund Benefit Tonight.

Announcement of the Week's Many Recitals.

SIXTH SYMPHONY PROGRAM.

The program for the sixth Symphony rehearsal and concert had for a novelty Saint-Saens E flat major symphony, which was given for the first time here. Mme Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler was the soloist, playing the Henselt F minor concerto for piano. "The Battle of the Huns," by Liszt, and Goldmark's "Sappho" overture completed the program. Henselt's concerto is a show piece of immensely difficult proportions, the composer having written it to suit his own abilities. He had unusually large hands and many of the chord passages, which he could finger readily, prove almost insurmountable obstacles to players whose stretch of fingers are of the average range. Mme Zeisler fulfilled the requirements in this direction admirably, playing the massive octave runs with a dexterity and sustained power that was really masculine, and showing a technique and finger strength very, very seldom displayed by women pianists.

In the lighter passages, such as the cantabile theme in the first movement the melody in octaves and arpeggios in the earlier part of the second movement and in the various graceful ornamentations of the finale there was a splendid display of tonal beauty in fingering, the passages being played with a skill, delicacy and clarity that showed Mme Zeisler's well-known abilities to the greatest advantage. Very brilliant and very powerful were the bravura phrases of the first part, the octave chords and left-hand arpeggios of the larghetto and the elaborate fortissimo runs of the allegro; yet such a vast amount of piano "thunder" with but few contrasting episodes arouses wonder more than it does a sustained interest, and an auditor is liable to be more impressed by the physical than by the artistic abilities of the performer, which of course is a disadvantage to the player. All in all, Mme Zeisler gave a wide and rather unusual exhibition of the pianistic art of a woman and her interpretation won her much applause and many recalls to the stage.

The Saint-Saens symphony, his first, contains a great deal of melody, which probably will not enhance the worth of the composition in the minds of music lovers prone to advanced ideas. It should find favor though with many concert patrons, for it is skilfully scored, there is a lot of real good music in each of the four movements and the melodies are worked out and not chopped off short, as is so frequently the case in the larger compositions of the present day.

The first part impresses one as being a charming score without much depth of motive, but pleasing, rather light and of a pastoral nature, the latter being suggested, but the dainty harmonies given to the horns. In the march one simple theme is fully developed by the single instruments and afterwards by ensemble work, with possibly a touch of a Mendelssohn march in its motif. The scherzo is very delicate in its construction, gay, tripping and delicate and in fine contrast to the following adagio, which is more grave in character and contains a captivating background of united string accompaniments and quaint throbbing phrases given out at times by the brasses. One finale, in which some of the fugal writing finds parallel in Sullivan's march of the peers, in "Iolanthe," is fairly effective, but rather too boisterous in some portions of the working out.

The orchestral work was up to the usual standard. The "accompaniments" for the piano were not so vigorous as to cloud the work of the soloist, and the symphony offered no obstacles to a sympathetic and thoroughly delightful interpretation. The violin part of the third movement calls for special praise. "The Battle of the Huns" was a musical conflict which raged in a manner to please everyone, and the "Sappho" overture was given with beautiful results, all the lights and shades being splendidly preserved. Mr Hess performed his violin part artistically, and Mr Schencker deserves a good word for his playing of the harp passages, which are very prominent in the score.

The celebrated violinist, Ysaye, will be this week's soloist, playing Bach's E major concerto and the "Scotch Fantasy," by Bruch. The other selections on the program will comprise the "King Lear" overture Berlioz; "St Francis' Sermon to the Birds," Liszt-Motti, and Schumann's "Rhenish" overture.

Symphony Hall: Pension Fund Concert

Symphony Hall was rather sparsely filled yesterday evening on the occasion of the Pension Fund concert. The programme included the overture to Meyerbeer's "Star of the North"; a suite by Massenet called "Hungarian Scenes," played for the first time; a Te Deum Laudamus for strings and organ by Sgambati, Mr. Wallace Goodrich at the organ, and Tchaikovsky's "Capriccio Italien." There were also selections from Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel," in the course of which Mrs. Grace Williams sang the sandman's song (if memory serves) and Mrs. Williams and Mrs. Helen Hunt sang the evening prayer. Mr. de Pachmann contributed the E-flat concerto of Liszt, and three Chopin solo pieces —nocturne in F minor, the berceuse, and the A-flat study, Op. 25

The feature of the evening was Mr. de Pachmann's playing. When it was not beautiful, as once in a while it was not, it was very interesting to see what Mr. de Pachmann of the limpid scales would make of the thundering chords and wickedly contrived springs of the E-flat concerto. In this work he was not always comfortably at home, but it was astonishing to hear the depth of beautiful tone he produced in chord passages when he chose to. And throughout the conçerto there was much playing that can never be forgotten; Robin Goodfellow might have been by to cast his influence on the keys, so elfin-like was much of Mr. de Pachmann's music, so uncanny. The end of the concerto, by the way, was not happy. Even more beautiful still was the berceuse from Mr. de Pachmann, for, after all, emotions that are simply, broadly human are the highest. The scherzo movement of the concerto made one shiver, but the berceuse might easily have made one cry.

R. R. G.

Advertiser
Nov. 28

MUSICAL MATTERS

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Programme.
Saint-Saens.....Symphony No. 1, in E flat major (First time.)
Henselt.....Concerto for Pianoforte, in F minor Mme. Bloomfield-Zeisler.
Liszt.....Symphonic Poem, "Hunnenschlacht"
Goldmark.....Overture to "Sappho"

There was no very great necessity for a hearing of Saint-Saens' first symphony. It is interesting to know that Saint-Saens was, chronologically as well as intrinsically, the first of French symphonic composers. One also feels some interest in the fact that a youth of 18 could write so good a musical work. But, in music, very young men never write important orchestral works. Bryant wrote "Thanatopsis" at 19 years; Dante G. Rossetti achieved "The Blessed Damosel" at the same age; but music is a deeper language than words and no one who has not lived and suffered sufficiently can deliver an important message in this emotional field. In this domain, more than in any other, the words of Goethe are true:—

Who ne'er in tears hath broken bread,
Who never through the night's dark hour
Sat tortured, weeping, on his bed,
He knows ye not, ye heavenly Powers!

The only musical masterpiece that we can recall as having been composed by a youth (pace, Pergolesi!) is Mendelssohn's "Midsummer-night's Dream Overture," and that deals with jollity and animal spirits not with deep emotion.

Possibly for the same reason, the Scherzo of this symphony is the best movement. It gave our great oboist, M. Longy, a chance to display his exquisite tone, and the flute and wood-wind generally were prominent in its measures. Its dainty ending, with violin obbligato, was charming.

The Adagio, however, seemed like Mrs. Winslow's soothing syrup set to music. The conductor should here have discarded his baton and led his men by waving a lace handkerchief at them. The finale grew more heroic, in fact its chief figure and parts of its development bore close relationship to the first movement of Beethoven's "Heroic" symphony. There was also some strict counterpoint displayed here, and the symphony ended in a blare of brasses which would have been still heavier if all the Saxhorns and Cornets of Saint-Saens had been there.

If the word "virile" can be applied to feminine playing, Mme. Bloomfield-Zeisler deserved it for the immense amount of force that she put into the Henselt concerto. The piano fairly dominated the orchestra. The wrist action and double octave work was simply astounding. The concerto itself has little to say to the auditor who has steeped himself in modern progressions; all the fortissimo effects in the world cannot make Henselt's ideas massive, and in his tender and more delicate touches he is left far behind by Chopin.

Mme. Bloomfield-Zeisler played with absolute mastery of every technical point, and if there was more of vehemence than of subtlety, more of technique than of poetry, in the performance, we fancy that much of the fault must be charged against Henselt himself. The pianist was recalled 4 times, responding with alacrity to the public demand.

Liszt's "Hunnenschlacht" gave the first really great example of scoring of the programme. The work is not as attractive as his great "Les Preludes," and it is scarcely one of those compositions which can appeal to the entire public. Possibly this was the first orchestral work to attempt to transcribe a painting into music. Since that time the picture gallery of the orchestra has been increased by Weingartner's symphonic poem on Boecklin's "Elysian Fields," by Hans Huber's symphony on several paintings by the same artist, by Paine's "Island Fantasy" upon a couple of paintings by J. Appleton Brown, and by other bits of pictorial music.

The introduction of the organ in the finale was very impressive and the entire interpretation was finely given. It was an especial evening for the solo flute. Before this number M. Maquarre had given some excellent obbligato passages, but in this he shone pre-eminent, the flute solo being beautifully given.

In Goldmark's "Sappho" the harp came to the front. Not once in a dozen seasons does the harp have so prominent an obligato in an orchestral work as in this overture. Yet we imagine that the original Sappho would have been rather astonished at the effects of an Erard double action harp! Mr. Schuecker played the brilliant passages with splendid power. Few can imagine how difficult it is to make the harp effective in Symphony Hall. It was played, on this occasion, not only with the necessary freedom and elasticity, but with exactly the right degree of power.

Since this concert seemed largely made up of solo points of excellence, we must add a few words of praise for Mr. Hess' breadth and brilliancy in the violin obligato at the end. There is not the lightest doubt that the concert-meister's hair is again well filled.

Louis C. Elson.

Transcript
Nov. 28

MUSIC AND DRAMA

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

Here is the programme of the sixth Symphony Concert, at which Mrs. Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler was the soloist:

Saint-Saëns: Symphony No. 1, in E-flat major, Op. 2. (First time.)
Henselt: Concerto for Pianoforte, in F minor, Op. 16.
Liszt: Symphonic Poem No. 4, "The Battle of the Huns," after Kaulbach's painting.
Goldmark: Overture, "Sappho," Op. 44.

The symphony in E-flat was written, it seems, when Saint-Saëns was eighteen years old. That a young musician should have written a symphony, even a young French musician, is not at all remarkable. It is extraordinary, however, that the work of so young an unknown person should have been produced in Paris at the time, and it is still more remarkable that Mr. Gericke should have thought it worth playing in Boston today—at least, the whole of it. The march-like scherzo is sufficiently animated and piquant to give pleasure at any time, anywhere, for its chief theme is attractive and the movement sounds well; but why the rest? The first movement is hopelessly commonplace, even if very well made for a novice. The adagio, which was admired in 1853, shows more signs than the rest of the mature Saint-Saëns, but Saint-Saëns in his sentimental, drawing-room mood. And the finale is noisy and dull. The early works of a genius of forceful originality, like Richard Strauss or Liszt, are worth hearing for the light they throw on their composers' development, but it is difficult to conceive how the early studies of a man like Saint-Saëns, who, despite his melodic charm, his grace, and his elegance, was never a great force in musical progress, can be of value. A juvenile drama by Shakspeare might repay study, but scarcely one by Mr. Stephen Phillips.

The "Battle of the Huns," too, is a composition calculated to inspire less delight than interest. It has been told before how Liszt was led to write it by his admiration for Kaulbach's frescos in Berlin. The subject is certainly enticing to an imaginative mind; spirits of dead warriors, conquered and conquered, rising to fight their battle over, without the walls of Rome. As material for a symphonic poem the world this subject is not lessened by the fact that the Huns probably never fought a battle near Rome, at least not under the guidance of Attila. Nor will music-lovers of today be disturbed by an objection that occurred to a London critic when the work was first produced at the Crystal Palace, London: "Nor do we think that the subject agrees with modern religious doctrines." Some will object, however, to the comparative dulness of the composition. Liszt well knew how to suggest the ghostliness of the atmosphere necessary for his poem; the description of battle cries and martial uproar lies entirely within his powers; and he could work up to a tremendous climax. But it was a long time before the height was reached; listeners grew weary with waiting. In this kind of piece one can do little more than admire the composer's fertile imagination, his ingenuity, and his cunning at writing music fifty years ago that sounds today more modern than the moderns. But Liszt has written much better music than that of the "Battle of the Huns." The poem was grandly played.

Mrs. Zeisler did herself an injustice in selecting to play once more Henselt's concerto, a work ever more noted for consummate technical difficulties than for its intrinsic musical beauties, although, to be sure, in its day it was held high. It is, however, it sounds hopelessly old-fashioned, but, like black walnut furniture, is not sufficiently decayed to have acquired the dignity or the fascination of an antique." Much of it, furthermore, must have been vulgar even in the concert heyday of fame. It was superbly played by Mrs. Zeisler, who took the music precisely for what it was worth, not trying to make something out of nothing. In performance there was wondrous beauty of tone, now strong and full, again sparkling coldly, sometimes as sweet and warm as Mr. de Pachmann's. Since there is no pianist at present before the public who can play a waltz with such entrancing rythm as Mrs. Zeisler, one can pardon the common little waltz that appears in the third movement of the concerto; she did play it enchantingly. Throughout the work Mrs. Zeisler was at her best, rhythmical, brilliant, and glowing with temperament. Hers was playing of a sort rarely heard, even from Mrs. Zeisler herself, much less from anyone else. At the end she was recalled four times.

This week there is to be another soloist, Mr. Ysaye. Here is the programme announced: Berlioz, overture, "King Lear"; Beethoven, concerto for violin; Liszt-Bülow, Saint Francis' sermon to the birds; Schumann, Symphony No. 3, Rhenish.

R. R.

[35]

Herald, Nov. 28

PENSION FUND CONCERT.

Vladimir De Pachmann's Interpretation of Chopin's Berceuse a Brilliant Performance.

The first concert this season in aid of the pension fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra was given last night in Symphony Hall. Mr. Gericke conducted. The programme was of a designedly popular nature. It included Meyerbeer's overture to "The Star of the North," an overture of the potpourri order, which has not been heard here for a long time; Massenet's Second Suite, "Hungarian Scenes," of which the third movement is the most interesting; a scene from Humperdinck's "Haensel and Gretel," with Mrs. Grace B. Williams, soprano, and Mrs. Helen Allen Hunt, contralto, as the praying and sleepy children in the forest; Sgambati's "Te Deum Laudamus" for strings and organ (Mr. Wallace Goodrich, organist), which was produced here some years ago at a Cecilia concert, and Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice."

Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann played, with orchestra, Liszt's piano concerto in E flat major, No 1, and Chopin's nocturne in F minor, op. 55, No. 1, "Berceuse," and etude in A flat, op. 25, No. 1. His performance of the concerto was characterized by beauty of song and exquisite ornamentation, though in the stormier passages the pianist was the brilliant virtuoso.

The feature of the concert, however, was his beautiful performance of Chopin's "Berceuse." Mr. De Pachmann's interpretation of this much abused, maltreated piece was as sane as it was poetic. It was more than a wondrous triumph of euphony; its tenderness was ineffable and it was so free from affectation of sentimentalism. The audience would gladly have heard him in other compositions, for he was recalled again and again after the group of solo pieces.

The audience was one of fair size, but the occasion should have filled the hall. There was much applause, especially after the excerpt from "Haensel and Gretel," and for Mr. De Pachmann.

Advertiser, Nov. 28

THE PENSION FUND CONCERT.

If Charity covers a multitude of sins, sometimes Beneficence embellishes a number of merits. The latter was the case last night in Symphony hall. In these days, when Labor Unions are endeavoring even to rule Art, it is surely a most important matter to have the greatest artistic organization in the American orchestral field as independent as possible, and nothing can conduce more to such an independence than a well-organized pension fund to take care of the old age of the artists constituting our orchestra.

Thus much for the excellence of the cause; the excellences of the resulting concert might be given at much greater length, save for the fact that, since animadversion is prohibited at a beneficent occasion such as this, enthusiastic praise, even when thus fully deserved, loses its force. Many artists had volunteered their services. Wallace Goodrich was at the organ, Mrs. Grace Williams and Mrs. Helen Hunt appeared in a vocal number, but the bright particular star, among the artists assisting, was that pianist who is ruling Boston at present—De Pachmann. He played the Liszt E-flat concerto, and he gave it with considerable dalliance, as regards tempo and shading, but, as it is more of a Rhapsody than a concerto, this made the work more attractive than ever. The three Chopin solos that came later were exquisitely given, without any of the eccentricities and audacious alterations that we have been obliged to censure in the recent past. There were five recalls, but the pianist resolutely refused an encore.

The programme in full:—

1. Overture, "Star of the North".....Meyerbeer
2. Concerto in E-flat major for Piano and Orchestra .....Liszt
3. Hungarian Scene (First time).....Massenet
4. Selection from "Hansel and Gretel," for Voices and Orchestra.....Humperdinck
5. Piano Solos.....Chopin
6. Te Deum Laudamus, for Strings and Organ .....Sgambati
7. Capriccio Italien.....Tschaikowsky

It was a pleasant relaxation to hear a frankly popular Meyerbeer overture given by our orchestra, and the presentation of a work by the chief orchestral genius of Italy, Sgambati, was also an unusual pleasure. The "Hansel and Gretel" number was the exquisite slumber duet, and the orchestral postlude that accompanies the descent of the 14 angels. It has never yet had so perfect a performance in Boston.

The Massenet Suite was brilliant and spicy of orchestration, but we would have preferred his Suite of "Scenes Pittoresques," those dainty pictures of French village life.

The Sgambati work was a noble one and deserves an early hearing at the symphony concerts. Its melodic charm is very marked; it confines itself largely to the soft stops of the organ, and it makes excellent use of the pizzicato effects upon the contrabasses—where they sound better than upon any other orchestral instrument.

Louis C. Elson.

Herald, Dec. 4

SPELLBOUND BY GENIUS OF YSAYE

At Seventh Symphony Concert Great Virtuoso Made Music of Bach Take on New Beauty—Surpassed Triumph of Art.

HE BEGINS WHERE TECHNIC LEAVES OFF

Face of the Violinist Transfigured While Playing—Great Audience Wished to Hear More of Such Wonderful Music.

The programme of the seventh concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Symphony Hall, last night, Mr. Gericke, conductor; Mr. Eugene Ysaye, solo violinist, was as follows:

Overture to "King Lear".....Berlioz
Concerto in E major, No. 2, for violin...Bach
St. Francis' Sermon to the Birds...Liszt-Mottl (First time.)
Concerto in D minor, No. 2, for violin..Bruch
Symphony in E flat minor, No. 3.....Schumann

Now and then a great virtuoso-musician visits us, and the Symphony concert is merely the occasion for the display of his rare qualities. There are some who cry out against the performance of any concerto in a concert of symphonic works, and in Paris the more hot-headed hiss when violinist or pianist makes his bow.

It will be a long time before audiences are trained to enjoy concerts without a pronounced solo individuality, before they are interested only in symphonies, overtures, symphonic poems. Until that time comes, and it will not be in our day and generation, the chief care should be in the selection of the singers and of the players on instruments.

Neither Mr. Ysaye nor the audience is to be blamed for wishing to hear him play as much as possible, for such violinists are rare. Sarasate is advanced in years and it is not likely that his silvery tone will be heard again in our cities. Joachim is already a tradition. Lady Halle was the last of the grand old school who showed us how Spohr should be played according to the spirit of his period.

Mr. Ysaye himself talks of abandoning the virtuoso's career to devote himself to orchestral conducting for which he has uncommon gifts. Let us then take pleasure in such artistry while we may, for Mr. Ysaye is today without a rival.

In him we find the blend of the purely classical and the ultra-modern romantic. The romanticism of his classicism is one of the most striking features of his performance, and this romanticism is by no means modernization. He does more than breathe the breath of life and beauty into old forms, into conventional figures and ornaments. By the wondrous quality of his tone, by nuances that seem as though they must have been indicated by Bach himself, in an inspired moment, by the love that the violinist himself feels for this music, that which would otherwise be a succession of formulas becomes a personal message charged with the highest poetic feeling.

Here we have nothing to do with technique. Mr. Ysaye begins where technique leaves off. In a way, he creates this music, but the creator himself does not step between the music and the rapt hearer. As the face itself of this violinist becomes illuminated with the beauty of the thoughts suggested to him by Bach, so the music itself takes on the form of beauty, and with the repetition of each formula there is a still loftier imaginative flight. The hearer is not then concerned with Bach or with Mr. Ysaye; he is conscious only of the presence of ineffable beauty, and he, too, though perhaps inherently prosaic, dreams dreams and sees entrancing visions.

This is not criticism; it is eulogy. And in this instance the eulogy of haunting impressions is the only just criticism.

This absence of the very thought of technique is the first step in the engrossing pleasure of Mr. Ysaye's performance. Whether he play music by Bach or by Bruch, the hearer is not aware of the labor of a violinist. He may remember one of the last speeches of Vieuxtemps, who, far away in enforced exile 'neath an alien sun, sighed plaintively for the sound of Ysaye's chanterelle. He may remember vaguely terms used by violinists in their discussions concerning the relative merits of the acknowledged great virtuosos, but all this is quickly forgotten. He is as absorbed as is Ysaye. The two listen to the music. The face of the violinist is transfigured, as was that of Cesar Franck when he heard celestial harmonies. Nor is the spell broken when the music ceases. Long afterward the tone, the phrase, the grace and the delicacy are remembered as by poor paralyzed Vieuxtemps in Algiers.

The word "interpretation" here seems pedantic, for the music has the spontaneity, the freedom of an improvisation. It is as though the music were for the first time called into being. Rare and flawless art! And there is that in Mr. Ysaye's performance that surpasses the triumph of art.

And here one might stop, without comment on Berlioz's "King Lear," an extraordinary work for its year, a work charged with the extravagance of the romantic period, when Shakespeare was the fetish of the revolutionaries; when Byron was a name to conjure with. The transcription by Mottl of Liszt's familiar piano piece in which St. Francis preaches to the chirping and twittering birds and turns their lightness to pious contemplation is an excellent example of imaginative scoring, and it was played with exceeding finesse. The symphony was heard by sated ears, and it is to us the least interesting of Schumann's four. The feature of the concert was the music of Bach as recreated by Mr. Ysaye, who also raised the concerto of Bruch to a higher level than that on which it naturally rests. The accompaniment to this concerto was by no means flawless.

Globe, Dec. 4

MUSICAL MATTERS

Ysaye Plays With the Symphony Orchestra.

Melba, DePachmann and Other Noted Artists This Week.

Cecilia Club and Kneisel Quartet Concerts.

The celebrated violinist, Eugen Ysaye, appeared at last week's Symphony concerts, playing the E major Bach concerto and the "Scotch Fantasie," by Bruch. The program opened with the "King Lear" overture, by Berlioz; the Liszt-Mottl legend, "The Sermon of Francis of Assisi to the Birds," was played for the first time at these concerts and Schumann's "Rhenish" overture closed the concert. Mr Ysaye returns with the same impressive presence, wonderful virtuosity and subordination of self that characterized his former appearances in this city. No virtuoso seems freer from vanity and selfconsciousness, and no violinist of the present day invests his music with more beauty and power. The simplicity, majesty and austerity of Bach's noble concerto was shown in beautiful form, technically faultless and masterful in breadth of expression, vitality and depth of feeling. The emotional appeal of the adagio, as played by Ysaye, was unusually effective; the perfection of sympathetic interpretation and accurate intonation.

The Bruch fantasia, also a familiar number, displayed the art of the great violinist in other phases; less impressive, to be sure, than in the Bach concerto, but just as wonderful. The grace and elegance, the dash and serenity with which he played the fantasia was in absolute keeping with the spirit of the work and formed a splendid contrast to the earlier selection. An unusual tribute was paid to Mr Ysaye by the members of the orchestra, who applauded vigorously after the second movement, which was given throughout its continuous legato with impeccable finish in phrasing, tonal contrasts and dexterous fingering. Mr Ysaye's perfect mastery of the violin needs no analysis. His superb attainments are well known and appear in no ways diminished. His reception was very cordial.

The novelty piece was the Liszt "legend," which was orchestrated by Felix Mottl and performed for the first time here. The suggestion of bird music, light, twittering and fantastic, coupled with the deeper tones of the "sermon," is charmingly shown in the score and the delicacy and joyousness of the whole piece makes it a very welcome addition to musical literature. The orchestra played the "legend" exquisitely, the bird music being sung by the lighter instruments in delicious harmony, with the "sermon" set forth with due resonance by the other contingents.

The orchestral accompaniments for Mr Ysaye's selections sounded particularly well, probably by reason of an incentive to good work aroused by the grand interpretations of the soloist. The "King Lear" overture and the Schumann symphony call for no special mention, each being up to the usual high standard expected of Mr Gericke's forces.

The next rehearsal and concert will be given Dec 16 and 17, with Mr Carlo Buonamici as soloist. The program will comprise Mozart's C major symphony, Rachmaninoff's piano concerto, suite, "Pelleas and Melisande," by G. Faure, and Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" overture.

Post, Dec. 4

YSAYE WINS OVATION AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

The especial feature of the seventh symphony concert last evening was the appearance of Eugene Ysaye as the solo violinist, after an absence of several years. The programme was as follows:

Overture, "King Lear".....Berlioz
Concerto for violin, E flat.....Bach
Legend, St. Francois Preaching to the Birds, Liszt-Motte
Concerto, No. 2, for violin.....Bruch
Symphony No. 3, "Rhenish".....Schumann

It was first announced that Mr. Ysaye would play the Beethoven concerto, afterwards changed to the Bach concerto, and the Bruch Scotch Fantasia, these latter being, it is nderstood, played at the rehearsal of Friday afternoon. But for last evening Mr. Ysaye played the Bruch D minor concerto instead of the Fantasia, which proved a most desirable change.

Mr. Ysaye returns the same virtuoso as before, with the same exquisite tone, ease of manner and supreme artist in every way. In his general performance he illustrates perfectly the maxim that the greatest art is to conceal art. The Bach concerto was inimitable, and the Bach concerto, not as interesting as the composer's more familiar one in G minor, was interpreted in most convincing manner. Mr. Ysaye received an immense ovation and numerous recalls.

The rest of the programme does not require extended comment. The Berlioz overture is not distinctive, and the Liszt number orchestrated by Felix Mottl, proved a very clear adaptation of a virtuoso piano piece. The Schumann symphony closed the programme. There will be no rehearsal and concert the coming week.

Baltimore Sun. December 7

YSAYE CHARMS ALL

Belgian Violinist Dominates Boston Symphony Concert.

The second Boston Symphony concert, which was given last night at the Lyric, resolved itself into an event which concerned itself chiefly with the soloist. It was Ysaye who moved the audience in a most unusual manner. It was the soloist upon whom the real interest of the concert was focused.

The beautiful Schumann Rhenish Symphony, tucked away at the end of the program, seemed almost a superfluity, and the audience appeared to be saturated with music after the Belgian violinist had left the stage.

This is a most unusual condition at a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with which the symphony is avowed by the chief item on the program.

Soloists are rarely encouraged to make themselves overconspicuous. But last night the conductor and the men in the orchestra vied with the audience in showing their regard for Ysaye.

In hearing Ysaye last night the thoughts of many of his auditors returned to a concert given at the Academy of Music, perhaps a dozen years ago. At this time his playing seemed to embody the highest ideal of the violinist's art, and to some at least his performance at that time became a sort of standard by which the playing of other violinists was judged.

At this earlier concert the program was of a varied character and could from its nature have a wider and more general application than is possible at a symphony concert. But in spite of the greater formality last night the violinist showed that he had lost none of his eloquence.

Bach and Bruch were the composers whom he expounded. They are far, far apart, both temporally and temperamentally—the former probably the most ruggedly monumental figure in musical history, the latter an excellent musical mechanic who knows the capacity of the violin to a nicety and works with an industry which produces results of considerable interest, though rarely free from the suspicion of being "platitudinous."

The man who plays Bach soon shows whether he is a pedant or a poet. Pedantry has usually had the ascendancy, but Ysaye makes of Bach a modern of the moderns. He gives him his full birthright of sentiment and imagination. And all this is done without sacrificing any of the classical atmosphere which surrounds him. The means employed are of the simplest—a tone of the most melting quality and a direct manner of accentuating the imagination side of the composition and leaving the formal side to take care of itself.

Bruch can boldly face all charges of being commonplace so long as he has such interpreters as Ysaye.

Musicians seem to have a penchant for "writing up" the music of the countries where they don't live. A Bohemian has worked on the negro melodies; Frenchmen delight in Oriental music; Germans have repeately interpreted Scotch scenes and folksongs.

Bruch in his "Scotch Fantasia" is not overly Gaelic, but that is of small consequence. It's good music to listen to when played as it was last night.

The applause which followed Ysaye's two appearances (the fact that he was permitted to play two selections of the proportions of concerti was in itself very exceptional) amounted to an ovation.

The complete program is as follows:

Overture to "King Lear," Op. 4.....Berlioz
Concerto for Violin, in E-flat major, No. 2, with accompaniment for Orchestra and Organ.....Bach
Scherzo, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice".....Dukas
(After a Ballad by Goethe).
Fantasia on Scottish Airs, for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 46.....Bruch
Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Rhenish," Op. 97.....Schumann

The Berlioz "King Lear" overture was played so well that hearers were more interested in the performance than in the work. This may be interpreted in two ways. Either Mr. Gericke devotes more attention to fine playing than to vigorous interpretation or the work is of minor interest.

In the Dukas selection the witches' cauldron boiled and bubbled and furnished a troublous time to the players, but it seemed a jeu d'esprit rather than a serious musical enterprise.

It was a pity that the symphony was not more fully enjoyed. It is a beautiful work and it was beautifully played, but the concert was large and the audience was still under the spell of Ysaye.

The audience last night was of the same generous proportions as was present at the first concert and this series continues to give promise of being the most notable ever given in Baltimore.

T. S. B.

Balt. American
Dec. 7.

YSAYE AT LYRIC

With the Boston Symphony Orchestra He Earns Applause of a Large Audience.

Ysaye and the Boston Symphony Orchestra drew a large audience to the Lyric last evening to hear their second concert for the season. Nineteen seasons of these concerts in this city have taught Baltimoreans that they are sure to get a good program whenever the organization appears, and last night was not an exception.

The program was as follows:

Berlioz, Overture, to "King Lear" op. 4.
Bach—Concerto for violin, in E-flat major, No. 2, with accompaniment for orchestra and organ.
I. Allegro.
II. Adagio.
III. Allegro.
Dukas, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," Scherzo
(After a ballad by Goethe.)
Bruch—Fantasia on Scottish airs, for violin and orchestra, op. 46.
I. Introduction: Grave.
Adagio cantabile.
II. Scherzo: Allegro.
III. Andante sostenuto.
IV. Finale: Allegro guerriero.
Schumann—Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Rhenish," op. 97.
I. Lebhaft.
II. Scherzo: Sehr massig.
III. Nicht schnell.
IV. Feierlich.
V. Lebhaft.
Soloist, Mr. Ysaye.

Baltimoreans were particularly glad to see the Berlioz overture to Shakespeare's "King Lear" as the opening number, but they were somewhat disappointed in its rendition. It was first heard in this city in 1871, soon after Mr. Hamerik's arrival in America, after his study and friendly companionship with its great composer. He put this work on one of his earliest programs, with appropriate text from Shakespeare, and, as it was enthusiastically received, he played it frequently afterward. Naturally his interpretation was with authority, and it made a most profound impression, which is not likely to be forgotten. It was a musical picture that Shakespeare himself might have enjoyed if he could only have heard the enthusiastical Frenchman's great musical composition.

Mr. Gericke began the work in proper style, but he failed in the main body of the tone-poem—the allegro disperato ed agitato. King Lear's madness was so methodical last evening that it looked deliberate and premeditated, if not actually cut and dried. It bore little resemblance to the distracted condition of the proud old mad king, and was, therefore, not received with its former enthusiasm, although there was applause.

The novelty of the evening was the "Sorcerer's Apprentice," by Paul Dukas. It is a bright orchestral scherzo in modern program style, giving a musical picturing of the broom changed into a sprite and set to drawing water, which the apprentice is unable to stop until, when a flood is threatened, the old master magician appears and turns the sprite into a broom again. The incidents of the little joke are well wrought in the music, which was daintily rendered.

However, the interest of the evening centered mainly in the ample Ysaye. His first number was not one to arouse a popular audience for its own sake. It was originally written for the solo violin and half a dozen stringed instruments, with a figured bass that could be followed by additional accompaniment; but the work gives little opportunity for the modern orchestra, for which it was not intended. Naturally, the soloist was liberally applauded for his excellent performance, in which he righteously avoided all unnecessary display of technique.

For his second number he gave the Max Bruch Scotch fantasy. It was at first called a "Scottish concerto," until designated by the critics as neither Scotch nor a concerto. It is really a free fantasy on Scotch music, which appears in the second movement in the rhythm of a Scottish dance, the "Highland Fling," and in the finale in a modification of the air "Scots Who Ha' Wi' Wallace Bled."

Brush has more liking for Scotch music than it seems to have for him. In his "Fair Ellen" he makes conspicuous use of "The Campbells Are Coming," but he seldom catches the real Scotch spirit. The music gave Ysaye good employment, and he gave it with great vim and vigor. He was recalled many times; but the Boston rules prevented an encore. To quiet applause in the orchestra he turned from the audience and applauded the musicians, giving them a very neat compliment for their excellent work.

The concert closed with the Schumann Symphony No. 3, the Rhenish in E flat major. It is a favorite in Baltimore, and there is no work in which Mr. Gericke feels himself more at home. It was given a perfect rendition.

Phila. Ledger
Dec. 6

Music and Musicians

The second of this season's first series of Boston Symphony concerts was given last evening in the Academy of Music, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, with the following programme:

Symphony No. 3, F Major.....Brahms
Recit. and Rondo from "Titus".....Mozart
Overture to "Sappho".....Goldmark
Three Scotch Songs, with piano.....Beethoven
"Italian Caprice".....Tschaikowsky

Brahms's third symphony was first heard in the United States at one of Van der Stucken's "Novelty Concerts" on October 24, 1884. Within the past few years it has been played here by Mr Scheel (in November, 1901, and also at two concerts last December) and by the Boston Orchestra in November, 1902 This symphony has been called Brahms's "Eroica," and it is characterized (in the first and last movements especially) by great breadth and by a richness of orchestration that is very interesting, but there was nothing in Mr. Gericke's reading of it last evening that in any way suggested the heroic plane. The performance throughout was marked by a suppression that was very apparent. The first movement was played in so low a key that the pianissimos of the second movement seemed an exaggeration. The exquisite instrumental details of the work were all clearly defined, but there was an entire absence of rhythm and life in the interpretation and even the lovely swinging third movement, one of the most beautiful bits in all Brahms's compositions, failed to make any particular impression. The last movement is more stirring and is particularly rich in orchestration, but Mr. Gericke's precise and academic reading of it is hardly likely to make many additional converts to Brahms, whose symphonies (except among those who have made a special study of them) have never been noticeably popular in Philadelphia.

Goldmark's "Sappho" overture, however, roused the audience to real enthusiasm. It is a beautiful composition, although less compact than most of Goldmark's works, and it is also curiously reminiscent (in its disjointed phrases) of many familiar composers. Taken as a whole it is, for all that, entirely Hellenic in its suggestion. The harp plays a prominent part, and there are some exquisite solo passages for the first violin that are especially striking. Goldmark is always interesting, though this overture is hardly in the class of the "Sakuntala" or the "Spring."

The orchestra last evening was at its best in the stirring Tschaikowsky "Italian Caprice," a brilliant rhythmic "fantasie" on Italian folk songs, which was written by the famous Russian during a sojourn in Italy. This the beautiful band played with real enthusiasm and with a joyous freedom that was entirely satisfying. The tone of this orchestra is so extraordinarily rich, when it is occassionally allowed to play "con amore," that its work in such numbers as the "Italian Caprice" only serves to accent more strongly the aforesaid suppression that characterizes so many of its performances.

The soloist of the evening was Olive Fremstad, the young singer whose dramatic work in the opera last winter made so agreeable an impression. She has a rich mezzo voice, but there is a distinct difference between the timbre of her upper and lower registers, which rendered her performance of the aria from Mozart's "Titus," which had been selected for her first number, far from pleasing. She is essentially a dramatic singer, of unusual histrionic ability, and she was not heard to the best advantage in this florid classic. The three Beethoven songs, however, she sang very beautifully, the two serious ones with a lovely sentiment and appreciation, and the other, which is particularly characteristic, with a great deal of wit. These songs are unfamiliar examples of Beethoven, with an accompaniment of violin, 'cello and piano. But none of the compositions seemed very happily chosen. One would like to hear this promising singer in some of the dramatic arias which are more obviously her particular forte.

* * *

Phila. Press
Dec. 6

Phil. Record
Dec. 6

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Olive Fremstad Makes Her Local Debut in Concert.

Novelty and conventionality each played its part in last evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Olive Fremstad, as soloist, was something new to Philadelphia, but Mr. Gericke's pedantry and strict regard for the musical proprieties was an old and familiar story. To deal first with what proved most inspiring to the occasion let it be said that Miss Fremstad on the concert stage repeated the success won here with the Metropolitan Opera forces last season. Among all the cantatrices new to this country that have been brought here during the regime of Heinrich Conried, only two may be said to be artistes of the very first rank. They are Edith Walker, contralto, and Olive Fremstad soprano. The latter is constantly winning new spurs. Her Sieglinde, as disclosed at the Academy last year, was a fine achievement, and this season she has charmed hosts of new admirers by her realistic "Carmen" and her notable Kundry in "Parsifal." Her selections last evening left no doubt as to the warmth and opulent beauty of her voice, but they might on the whole have been more appropriate. Miss Fremstad possesses above all things modernity of method, and her temperament would seem to make her anything but suited to the rendition of Mozart. Therefore the recitative "Jetzt, Vitellia!" and the rondo "Nie soll mit Rosen," from "Titus," which she sang hardly exhibited her abilities to the best advantage. Her rich, deeply moving voice did not, of course, suffer total obscuration in these songs, but it did not shine as it might, and, indeed, should have, in modern music. Miss Fremstad is not a Mozart singer by nature, training and education, as is Madame Sembrich. Nevertheless last evening's audience found much to admire in the interpretation of the "Titus" excerpts, and especially in Miss Fremstad's lower register, which is very beautiful. Her other contributions to the program were Beethoven's three Scotch songs for piano accompaniment and violin, and 'cello obligato. They were given with much feeling and no little real dramatic effect, the latter quality being especially in evidence in the difficult second song. The last one of the three is one of the most beautiful of Beethoven's not particularly distinguished collection of lieder. With Miss Fremstad's warm, colorful voice, and the delicately poetic violin obligato by Mr. Hess and 'cello obligato by Mr. Krasselt, few of its merits were left undisclosed.

The orchestra alone was heard in three numbers—Brahms' Third Symphony, Goldmark's "Sappho" overture and Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice." In all of them the work of the Boston players would have been very near perfection, but for the unfortunate effects of the restraint, repression and conventionality that are such typical concomitants of Mr. Gericke's musical make-up. In Brahms the Gericke methods wreak little harm. Hence the symphony last evening, with its calm poetry and rather soothing beauty was very well played. It is evidently easy for Mr. Gericke to slip into the usually prevailing Brahms mood. The modern spirit of unrest figures but little in the music of the great composer of the "German Requiem." With Goldmark and Tschaikowsky, however, the case is distinctly altered. The "Sappho" Overture, which is, on the whole, rather more blatantly noisy than genuinely passionate, is none the less greatly heightened in value by a really spirited rendition. Mr. Gericke, of course, obeyed all directions of the composer, but the wild spirit of abandon which the subject seems to demand was last evening absent. The Tschaikowsky caprice, which is really great music, emphasized all the more these shortcomings. It is the sort of composition that, if properly played, should fairly bring the audience to its feet. Its swing, rhythm and reckless gaiety are well nigh irresistible. The work of the orchestra, if each individual player be considered separately, in this number was superb. A little relaxation on Mr. Gericke's part would have meant perfection.

Phila. Inquirer
Dec. 6.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Its Concert at the Academy of Music Last Evening With Olive Fremstadt as Soloist.

Although the weather was so inclement, there was a large and appreciatively enthusiastic audience at the Academy of Music last evening, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, and with Miss Olive Fremstadt as the assisting artist, gave its one-hundred and twenty-fourth concert in this city. An interesting program had been arranged for the occasion. It included the third symphony of Brahms, in F major, Op. 90, Goldmark's gorgeous "Sappho" overture and the Italian Caprice of Tschaikowsky, and seldom has the orchestra been heard to better advantage than in its interpretation of this artistically contrasted selection.

Brahms appears to be a special favorite with Mr. Gericke. At any rate he always seems to play the Vienna master's music with a peculiar unction, and the performance of the third symphony, in the dignity of its spirit, the lucidity of its exposition, the eloquence of its sentiment, the finished elaboration of its details and the perfect proportion which was maintained between its various parts, was wholly satisfying and deeply impressive. There are those who think that Brahms' music is cold and dry and dull. It may be so when it is inadequately rendered, and it is certain that it makes demands upon its executants which are not easily met, but when it is presented as it was last night it has an interest, a beauty and a significance to which no ordinarily intelligent listener can be insensible and which are nowhere else surpassed. This third symphony of his is less obvious than the first and less melodious than the second, but perhaps it conveys a nobler message than either and it is in all respects and to the last degree convincing.

Miss Fremstadt's numbers comprised an air from Mozart's opera of "Titus," which, although not especially well adapted to her temperament and manner, was smoothly and effectively delivered, and three Scotch songs by Beethoven with accompaniment for violin and violoncello, played by Mr. Hess and Mr. Kresselt. Miss Fremstadt has a finely cultivated and extremely sympathetic voice of ample range and admirable quality, which is very skillfully employed, and although by reason of her great dramatic ability she belongs rather to the operatic than to the concert stage, she was heard with a great deal of pleasure and was enthusiastically applauded.

The orchestra will be here again on Wednesday evening, when the symphony will be Schumann's third, the "Rhenish," and when Ysaye will be the soloist. He will play Bruch's D minor concerto, Beethoven's Romanza, and an arrangement of his own of a waltz by Saint-Saens. This is sure to prove a great attraction.

Phil. Press
Dec. 6

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Miss Fremstadt the Soloist—Brahms' Third Symphony Interpreted.

The program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert, last evening, was excellently balanced in that Brahms' third symphony in F major, Goldmark's overture to "Sappho" and Tschaikowski's "Italian Caprice" were relieved by the delightful vocal work of Miss Olive Fremstadt.

The singer proved to have a mezzo soprano voice of rich color, with lovely quality in the lower register and brilliancy in upper tones. She sang with great breadth and sympathy, and with most excellent method, artistic in phrasing and most expressive in revealing sentiment. As it seems to be the fashion nowadays for mezzo sopranos to sing the recitative and aria, "Now Vitellia," from Mozart's opera, "Titus," Miss Fremstadt selected this for the first number and made a very pleasant impression, both as to dramatic contrast and vocal suavity, which was deepened when she sang three lovely Scotch songs by Beethoven. The songs are written for voice, piano, violin and violoncello and all four interpreters aided in a delightful rendering.

Mr. Gericke read the overture to "Sappho" with somewhat suppressed passion and Tschaikowski's pungent rhythms abandon in the Italian caprice with its noisy episodes was too modestly suggested. In the symphony, Brahms' fifth work, the elegiac and plaintive character of the composition was interpreted rather along the classic lines of formal and elegant woe, decorous and conventional rather than in the spirit of the heartache of modernism. Perhaps this is nearer the thought of Brahms than the other reading sometimes heard, but there is no question that the classic way is a little too serene for deep-blooded interest or stimulus. The orchestra revealed beautiful qualities in all its choirs and its tonal balance was, as always, a joy.

---

[37]

Phila. Ledger Dec. 8

Music and Musicians

The second of the Wednesday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last evening, in the Academy of Music, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, with the following programme:

"King Lear" overture.....Berlioz
Second violin concerto in D minor.....Bruch
"St. Francis's Sermon to Birds".....Liszt-Mottl
Romanza for violin and orchestra in F major.....Beethoven
"Caprice Waltz".....Saint-Saens-Ysaye
"Rhenish" Symphony, No. 3, E-flat major.....Schumann

The soloist of the evening was Ysaye, whose playing made such a profound impression when he was heard here a few weeks ago, with our own orchestra. The upper part of the house was well filled with enthusiasts, who were anxious to hear this great player again.

Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony, which is so rarely played nowadays, is a composition of exquisite beauty, and, considered from the modern standpoint, exceedingly rich in coloring. A romantic spirit pervades the entire work, which is supposed to represent life in the Rhineland. Its division into five short movements is unusual.

Mr. Gericke's reading of it last evening was in many respects very beautiful and in marked contrast to this essentially academic interpretation of the Brahms symphony on Monday evening. He seemed to appreciate the romanticism of the work, and the first movement was played with a great deal of breadth and warmth, while the spirited second movement was a real delight.

The plaintive third movement, however, was a disappointment, suppressed and entirely lacking in that rhythmic accentuation which is so necessary in the interpretation of works of this kind. The religious fourth movement, which is wonderfully rich and impressive, was played in a dignified though unemotional manner, but the last movement, with its festive suggestion, was very brilliant and beautiful. The symphony, unfortunately, failed a little in its final impression, as it came at the end of a very long programme when the audience was frankly somewhat restless.

The concert opened with the "King Lear" overture, by Berlioz,, which is an interesting example of the beginning of modern orchestration, and it was finely played by the orchestra. Were it not for its name it certainly would convey no particular idea of King Lear.

It is turbulent rather than tragic, and there is a constantly recurring joyous theme, which is prominent even at the end of the work. This would seem to bear no particular relation to the motive of the Shakespearean tragedy. The other orchestral number was Mottl's arrangement of Liszt's "St. Francis's Sermon to the Birds"—a rather foolish bit of "programme music," which served as a fine medium for the display of the virtuosity of the orchestra.

The interest of the evening centred in the playing of Ysaye, who was heard in the second Bruch concerto, a work much less familiar to concert-goers than the more tuneful first concerto by the same composer, and one which usually impresses one as being very dull. Played as it was last evening, it proved one of the most exquisite of compositions.

There is little to be said of Ysaye's playing at this time except that it is supremely beautiful, and to this concerto, which is very weird in its suggestion and Celtic in its characteristics, he gave a sobbing and emotional interpretation that was very moving. His clear, pure tone rang out above the orchestra in a kind of hopeless wail. The impression of sadness was hardly dispelled by the more brilliant and stirring passages with which the work closes.

At the close of the concerto the player was recalled again and again, and after the Mottl-Liszt number he was again heard, this time in two short numbers, the F major "Romanza," by Beethoven, which he played with a fine sentiment, and in his own arrangement of the Saint-Saens "Waltz Caprice." This was certainly disappointing as a waltz, but it was particularly important, as it was the first composition of the kind which the great Belgium violinist has played in Philadelphia; one of those brilliant "chevaux de bataille," with harmonic passages, double stopping, and the rest which sound like an exercise in velocity, and which become a veritable triumph when played as this one was last evening. In both of these numbers there was an orchestral accompaniment.

* * *

My Times Dec 4

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will pay its second visit to New York this week and give two concerts. On Thursday evening Mr. Ysaye will be the soloist, and will make his first appearance in New York on his present visit to this country. On Saturday afternoon Miss Olive Fremstad will be the soloist. The programmes will me as follows:

THURSDAY EVENING.
Overture, "King Lear".....Berlioz
Concerto in E major, with organ.....Bach
Overture, "Sappho," Op. 44.....Goldmark
Scotch Fantasie for violin.....Bruch
Symphony No. 3, in F major, Op. 90..Brahms
Soloist, Mr. Ysaye.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.
Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Rhenish," Op. 97.....Schumann
Recitative, "Jetzt, Vitellia!" and Rondo "Nie soll mit Rosen" from "Titus".....Mozart
Clarinet obligato by Mr. Grisez.
Symphonic poem, "The Battle of the Huns".....Liszt
Three Scotch songs with pianoforte accompaniment.....Beethoven
Violin obligato by Mr. Hess.
Violoncello obligato by Mr. Krasselt.
Italian caprice, Op. 45.....Tschaikowsky
Soloist, Miss Olive Fremstad.

Phila. Press Dec. 8

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Ysaye the Soloist in a Notable and Beautiful Program.

Berlioz .....Overture, "King Lear"
Bruch
Concerto for violin, No. 2, in D minor Op. 44
Liszt-Mottl—Saint Francis' Sermon to the Birds
a. Beethoven
Romanza for violin and orchestra, in F major, Op. 50
b. Saint-Saens—Ysaye .....Caprice waltz
Robert Schumann
Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Rhenish," Op. 97.

Soloist, Mr. Ysaye.

The appearance of Ysaye at the Boston Symphony concert last evening put the local musical world once more in the debt of this great artist. The details of his interpretation of the concerto and the two shorter numbers would exhaust the conventional description of what a genius in control of a given instrument can do.

The really valuable lesson that Ysaye drives home is, however, the great seriousness of great art. There is nothing of the vanity and frivolousness, the "excusable caprices" of genius, the "allowable eccentricities" in his work. It is noble, dignified, serene, mature, and everything is done with a sweep and a breadth that bespeaks the experience of years as well as the highest endowment in interpretative ability. And this is most refreshing and stimulating when so much that is mediocre bespeaks attention by reason of its restless trickery or its immature prodigies.

"In all the heights there is peace" scratched Goethe on a pane with a diamond, and this line is brought vividly before one as Ysaye reads such a work as the Beethoven Romanza or is heard in the adagio of the Bruch concerto, while one marvels at the fury and speed with which he unerringly brought the rondo to a close. It was all beautiful from first to last, and worthy of the enthusiasm of the audience, though this might have been restrained and less meaninglessly insistent. But Ysaye was not the only feature of the concert, for with the orchestra Mr. Gericke preached the same noble lesson of great art that the soloist exemplified. And the perfection of orchestral interpretation was reached in the Schumann symphony, which was marked by a most positive distribution of accent, the whole work being interpreted most sympathetically, with superb effects in the fourth movement and in the scherzo. The overture to King Lear was eloquently declaimed and the Liszt-Mottl number, a charming variation in lighter vein, made up a fine program, if a trifle long, but one which had reason for its make-up.

Phila. American Dec 8

YSAYE DEMONSTRATES MASTERY OF VIOLIN

With Boston Symphony Orchestra, He Charms Audience at Academy.

CHANGES HIS PROGRAM

Violinist Ysaye, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made the Academy of Music resound with entrancing melody last evening.

For Bruch's Scotch air Fantasia, previously announced, the virtuoso substituted the same composer's concerto in D minor for violin and orchestra, a modern classic of high degree, the final allegro of which—a rare test of virtuosity—Mr. Ysaye interpreted with infinite spirit and the inspiration of native genius.

After a graceful orchestral interpretation of Felix Mottl's symphonic score of Liszt's "St. Francis and the Birds" piano music, Mr. Ysaye played Beethoven's beautiful romanza in F major for violin with orchestra—an instructive demonstration of the inherent power and fadeless beauty of pure tonality as expressed by a master of musical art.

Following upon this fascinating harmony, graceful in interpretation and flawless in execution, Ysaye aroused the audience with his own arrangement for violin and orchestra of Saint-Saens' "Caprice" waltz—a miracle of deft bowing and agile fingering.

The concert opened with Berlioz's stormy "Lear" overture, and closed with Schumann's romantic "Rhenish" symphony—both familiar to concert-goers here through years of orchestral repetition.

My Staats, Dec 4

Am Donnerstag Abend und Samstag Nachmittag giebt das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester sein drittes und viertes Konzert in Carnegie Hall. Im ersten Konzert wird der berühmte belgische Geiger Ysaye ein Bach'sches Concert und die Schottische Phantasie von Bruch spielen. Es bedarf wohl kaum der Bemerkung, daß man dem ersten Wiederauftreten Ysaye's in New York mit Spannung entgegen sieht. Das Orchester wird Berlioz' „King Lear"-Ouverture, Goldmark's „Sappho"-Ouverture" und Brahms' F-dur Symphonie spielen. Am Samstag Nachmittag wird Fräulein Olive Fremstad die Solistin sein. Sie wird eine Arie aus Mozart's „Titus" und drei schottische Lieder von Beethoven singen. Die Orchesternummern für das zweite Konzert bestehen aus Schumann's Es-dur Symphonie, der Liszt'schen „Hunnenschlacht" und Tschaikowsky's „Italienischem Capriccio". — Heute

Phila. Inquirer Dec 8

MUSIC AT THE ACADEMY

Boston Orchestra Gives Schumann's Rhenish Symphony, and Isaye Plays the Violin

The Boston Symphony Orchestra returned to the Academy of Music last evening, and under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke gave a concert, in which it was assisted by the famous Belgian violinist, Eugene Isaye. The symphony upon this occasion was that by Schumann in E flat major, known as the "Rhenish," because it is supposed to embody and to a certain extent does express the thoughts and feelings aroused in the mind of the composer by what he saw while passing through the country of the Rhine.

This is not one of the most inspired or spontaneous of Schumann's works, and in these respects does not well sustain comparison with the more familiar fourth, but with a knowledge of its purpose it is easily possible to recognize the scenes which it portrays, and much that it contains is cause for both admiration and enjoyment. Owing to the unusual length of the program it was not reached until nearly 10 o'clock, by which time the attention of the conscientious listener had been somewhat wearied, so that the music was not heard to the best advantage, which may account for what seemed to be its relative ineffectiveness. One needs to be fresh properly to appreciate a Schumann symphony, especially the third. The other orchestral numbers were Berlioz's brilliant and beautiful "King Lear" overture, with its fine designation of the old king's madness and of Cordelia's devotion, and the setting by Mottl of Liszt's "Saint Francis' Sermon to the Birds." Both selections as also the symphony were splendidly performed.

Isaye was heard in Bruch's second concerto, in Beethoven's romanza in F major and in an arrangement by himself of a waltz by Saint-Saens. It is a privilege and a joy to hear Isaye in anything, for he is unquestionably the greatest of living violinists, but it cannot be said that his selections were the most satisfying that could have been made. Bruch's D minor concerto is admirably written for the instrument, which it exhibits to perfection, but it is distinctly dry, and of the other two numbers one has been overworked, while the other is without any artistic value. It is hardly necessary to remark Isaye's performance was everything that could be imagined or desired. The demand of the people who wanted him to play more was not considerate, but it was quite intelligible. He very properly refused to do so, and the time that was spent in bringing him before the curtain was time wasted, with the result of delaying the concert to the loss or inconvenience of many who had arranged to leave at 10 o'clock. 'Tis often thus.

Phila. Record Dec 8

YSAYE'S NEW TRIUMPH.

Great Belgian Violinist Returns With Boston Symphony.

Eugene Ysaye paid his second local visit of the season last evening, appearing as the soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's second concert in series No. 2. To say that this first among the world's violinists played splendidly is but to say that he played in his customary fashion; but as a matter of fact he even excelled himself last evening, with the result that the not overly-large audience was vouchsafed a fine treat, indeed. Three numbers, the Bruch Concerto No. 2, in D minor; Beethoven's Romanza, in F major, and Saint-Saens' whimsically felicitous Caprice Waltz, provided at once an opportunity for a display of virtuosity and a notably fine musical program. The Bruch composition was especially brilliantly rendered, and in it Ysaye's broadly sweeping tones disproved most conclusively the charge that his art lacks "bigness."

The orchestral numbers comprised an odd assortment. Robert Schumann's beautiful "Rhenish" Symphony, No. 3, was the piece de resistance, and its rendition was one of the most admirable things done by Herr Gericke's remarkable band this season. For once, at least, Mr. Gericke unloosened the tightly-drawn reins and the poetic beauties of the work were given their fullest expression. The one novelty, Felix Mottl's orchestration of Liszt's fantastic "Saint Francis' Sermon to the Birds," proved to be a rather inconsequential thing. There is certainly nothing remarkably pretty about it, and Herr Mottl's orchestration shows that he does not excel in the creative field, however fine he be as an interpreter. Berlioz's "King Lear" Overture, a tiresome thing at best, began the concert.

My World, Dec 4

At the Boston Symphony concert on Thursday evening at Carnegie Hall Ysaye, the famous violinist, will make his reappearance here after six years' absence. He will play the Bach concerto, with organ and string orchestra, and the Bruch Scotch fantasy. The orchestra, under Gericke, will perform Berlioz's "King Lear," Goldmark's "Sappho" overture and Brahms's Fair Symphony.

[38]

My Post Dec 3

Mr. Gericke has chosen for next Thursday evening's Carnegie Hall programme of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Berlioz's "Lear" overture, Bach's concerto in E major, with organ, Goldmark's "Sappho" overture, Bruch's Scotch Fantasie for violin, and Brahms's third symphony. Mr. Ysaye will be the soloist on this occasion. At the Saturday afternoon concert Miss Olive Fremstad will sing. The programme includes Schumann's third symphony, Liszt's symphonic poem "The Battle of the Huns," Tchaikovsky's "Italian Caprice," a Mozart aria ("Titus"), and three of Beethoven's Scotch songs with violin and violoncello obbligato—an excellent programme.

My Sun, Dec 3

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Thursday evening programme at Carnegie Hall has Eugene Ysaye for a distinguished soloist. The selections are: Berlioz, overture. "King Lear"; Bach, concerto in E major. with organ; Goldmark, overture, "Sappho," op. 44; Bruch, "Scotch Fantasie" for violin; Brahms, symphony No. 3, in F major, op. 90.

Mr. Gericke's Saturday matinée bill will include: Schumann, "Rhenish" symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, op. 97; Mozart, recitative and rondo from "Titus" with clarinet obligato by Mr. Grisez; Liszt, symphonic poem, "The Battle of the Huns"; Beethoven, three Scotch songs with piano, violin and 'cello, Mr. Hess and Mr. Krasselt playing the obligato; Tschaikowsky, Italian caprice, op. 45. The matinée soloist is Miss Olive Fremstad.

My Mail, Dec 3

Orchestral concerts within a week will be those of the Boston Symphony, New York Symphony and People's Symphony orchestras, all at Carnegie Hall.

Ysaye's return, after six years, to a public familiar with his great violin playing, will make the first Boston concert noteworthy. Here are Conductor Gericke's generous programmes:

THURSDAY EVENING.
Overture, "King Lear".....Berlioz
Concerto, for violin, in E major, with organ.....Bach
Eugene Ysaye.
Overture, "Sappho," op. 44.....Goldmark
Scotch fantasie for violin.....Bruch
Mr. Ysaye.
Symphony No. 3, in F major, op. 90, Brahms

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.
Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Rhenish," op. 97.....Schumann
Recitative and Rondo from "Titus," Mozart
Miss Olive Fremstad.
Symphonic poem, "The Battle of the Huns".....Liszt
Three Scotch songs with pianoforte, violin and violoncello.....Beethoven
Miss Fremstad.
Italian caprice, op. 45.....Tschaikowsky

My Herald, Dec 4

AT the second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Carnegie Hall, on Thursday evening, Ysaye, the Belgian violinist, will make his reappearance after several years' absence. New York remembers well enough his glowing tone and masterful style, and will doubtless give him a big welcome. He will be heard in Max Bruchs' "Scotch Fantaisie."

The orchestral numbers are to be Berlioz's "King Lear," overture; the Bach E major concerto, with organ, and Brahms' Third Symphony. At the Saturday matinee Mr. Gericke will give Schumann's "Rhenish Symphony," Tschaikowski's "Italian Caprice" and a Liszt tone poem. Miss Olive Fremstad will be the soloist.

My Tribune, Dec 4

Ysaye and Miss Fremstad will be the soloists at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week. It is Mr. Ysaye's first appearance here in six years. Thursday evening the programme will be:

Overture, "King Lear".....Berlioz
Concerto in E major.....Bach
With organ and string orchestra.
Overture, "Sapho," Op. 44.....Goldmark
Scotch fantaisie, for violin.....Bruch
Symphony No 3, in F major, Op. 90.....Brahms
Soloist, Mr. Ysaye.

Programme Saturday afternoon:
Symphony No. 3, E flat major, "Rhenish," Op. 97, Schumann
Recitative, "Jetzt, Vitellia!".....Mozart
Rondo, "Nie soll mit Rosen," from "Titus"..
Clarinet obbligato by Mr. Grisez.
Symphonic poem, "The Battle of the Huns".....Liszt
Three Scotch songs.....Beethoven
With pianoforte accompaniment. Violin obbligato, Mr. Hess. Violoncello obbligato, Mr. Krasselt.
Italian Caprice, Op. 45.....Tschaikowsky
Soloist, Miss Olive Fremstad.

My Sun, Dec 4

Ysaye, the great violinist, will make his first New York appearance at Carnegie Hall on Dec. 8 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Ysaye has already played in seven large cities of the country by reason of his contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which called for his first New York appearance with that organization. Their travelling dates were so arranged that Dec. 8 was the first available one in New York. He will make a short tour with them, playing in Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Boston and Baltimore. He will then return to New York and give his first recital on Wednesday evening, Dec. 14, at Carnegie Hall.

My Globe, Dec. 9

YSAYE.

IT was Ysaye and only Ysaye at the concert of the Boston Orchestra last night. The band poured out the flamboyant instrumental rhetoric of Berlioz's overture to "King Lear" as though all that tonal pomp and riot, that "desperately agitated" allegro, really meant something. They played with exquisite delicacy and pliancy the instrumental embroideries with which Mottl has decked Liszt's little sermon of St. Francis to the birds. True, you could hardly hear the discourse for the whirring and the trilling of those birds in the wood winds and the strings, but it didn't much matter. It was all very pretty, and full of a conductor's knowledge of what those instruments can do when they are pushed highest. There was even Brahms's third symphony, played only as Gericke and his men can play it, with a tone that bent its beauty to every curve of the music and then shaded that curve, with full understanding, with rich sympathy. Brahms the austere became Brahms the beautiful, almost Brahms the romantic.

The audience could not help applauding the symphony, and warmly, but they redoubled their clapping when Ysaye first appeared. They had him back many times when he had finished his first concerto, as many more after the second. Rarely does a virtuoso play more than once at a concert of the Boston band. Here, as at home, Mr. Gericke knew that the audience wanted to hear as much of Ysaye as possible, and for once he relaxed his programme. The band was as eager, too. Most of the men were on their feet at the end of the Bach concerto, and their applause was as warm as that of the audience. The most significant tribute of all—even the teachers of the violin applauded. But they told you in the pauses where Ysaye had slipped in his intonation and blurred a phrase.

—

To see, Ysaye is in no way changed. He keeps his large and impressive presence, the same unconsciousness of himself and of his audience, the same absorption in the music that he is playing. As it did six years ago, it warms and moulds his face as he plays. Perhaps there is a little more sobriety and a little less fire in his demeanor. Ysaye is forty-six now, and eager to renounce the playing of the violin for conducting. At home, in Brussels, and in Paris, he is doing more and more of that. He will do it once here.

The teachers and the players of the violin that sprinkled the hall talked wisely of Ysaye's technique. The average listener had the truer impression—that it is, as it has always been in recent years, a perfect medium for the musical expression of ideas and feeling. It seems wholly spontaneous. You do not think of it as Ysaye plays. There are difficulties to overcome—Bruch has strewn them through his second concerto—but Ysaye does not let you note them as difficulties. He is expressing what there is of musical idea and mood behind. His technique has become what all technique is at its highest—a means to an end.

—

In a sense, too, you are unconscious as you listen that some one has composed the music that Ysaye plays, though that some one is as great as Bach himself. Only Ysaye seems to be weaving and traeing its patterns on the air, filling them with beautiful lines, modifying their texture with every subtle shade. No violinist seems so able to vary the quantity and the quality of his tone. It can choke with its richness, pierce with its poignancy, caress with its charm, and fade into the lightest delicacies. He not only attains the pure beauty of sound. He gives it infinite variety. Yet it all has an exceeding simplicity and spontaneity. And it all has breadth and power.

Was it the largeness of Bach or the largeness of Ysaye that filled his first concert? Probably it was a mingling of both so sympathetic and intimate that none might say where the one ended and the other began. Feeling at its deepest filled the slow movement—the feeling of Bach intensified by the violinist and then imparted to the hushed audience. Lofty musical utterance through a single instrument, it seemed for the moment could hardly go higher. Yet it was wholly serene. Then came the warmer pattern weaving, the fine responsiveness to every musical shade of the last movement. Only when the high power of musical expression matches musical insight and imagination does sound become so potent.

Bruch's second concerto seemed in itself a poor and empty thing beside this music of Bach's. Ysaye had deepened the one. Now he glorified the other. He gave it a magnificence of tone. He made the lines of its melodies flow and undulate. He filled them with warmth of feeling. They and all their transformations and ornaments became plastic and significant. At moments they rose to beauty, even nobility. It was the power of Ysaye, the musician and the violinst, transfiguring them. He, not Bruch, was speaking. The German gave only the bare words.

—

My Staats, Dec 9

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester.

In Carnegie Hall war gestern Abend, beim dritten Konzert des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters, jeder Stuhl verkauft und besetzt. Diese Extra-Zugkraft mußte wohl dem Solisten, Herrn Eugene Ysaye aus Brüssel, zugeschrieben werden. Trat doch während des Konzertes das Orchester gegen den Solisten ganz entschieden in den Hintergrund. Das geschieht in diesen Konzerten gewiß selten genug, und man braucht sich nicht darüber zu beklagen, wenn der Solist von der künstlerischen Natur eines Ysaye ist.

Der berühmte Virtuose, der von Vielen für den ersten aller lebenden Geiger gehalten wird, erhielt nach dem Vortrage des E-dur Konzertes von Bach eine Ovation, an der sich nicht bloß das Publikum, sondern auch sämmtliche Mitglieder des Orchesters betheiligten, die sich in zahllosen Hervorrufen bekundete, und die wohlverdient war. Spielte er doch den langsamen Cis-moll-Satz des Konzertes in einer Weise, für die kein Lob zu hoch gegriffen erscheint. Wer so jedem Ton in der Cantilene Seele einzuhauchen, wer ihn derart sprechen lassen kann, der ist gewiß ein Geiger-Genie und hatte das Edelste erreicht, das sich durch das Streichinstrument erreichen läßt. So schön war das Alles, daß selbst die kritischen Zuhörer sich ganz dem Genuß hingeben und vergessen mußten, auf Einzelnes, wie auf die außerordentliche Ruhe und Länge des Bogenstrichs, zu achten. Hätte Ysaye weiter nichts als nur dieses Bach'sche Konzert gespielt, so hätte man nur den Bericht mit Superlativen anfangen und schließen müssen. Aber er spielte als zweite Nummer noch das zweite Bruch'sche Concert, in D-moll, womit er sich eine Aenderung des Programms gestattete, das statt dessen desselben Komponisten Schottische Phantasie angegeben hatte. Und in diesem Concert spielte Ysaye leider nicht Alles tadellos. Wohl war wieder sein großer Stil und sein feuriges Temperament an manchen Stellen zu bewundern, aber andererseits gefiel er sich auch in einer hypersentimentalen Ausführung der lyrischen Momente, und im letzten Satz wurde sein Passagenwerk durch unziemliche Hast oft unklar und verwischt. Nun, gerade solche Virtuosentemperamente wie Ysaye vermögen nicht Alles gleichmäßig gut zu spielen, und für das Außerordentliche, das sie darbieten, muß man zuweilen auch etwas in den Kauf nehmen, das einfach nicht — ordentlich ist. Und einem Bruch gegenüber läßt man sich eher ein wenig gehen, als wenn man's mit Bach zu thun hat.

Auch das Orchesterprogramm erfuhr — wie das bei den Bostonern, wenn sie nach New York kommen, eher Regel als Ausnahme ist, — eine Abänderung, insofern die Symphonie mit der Schluß-Overture die Plätze wechselte. Da es sich um die dritte Symphonie von Brahms handelte, mochte man am Ende befürchtet haben, das Publikum würde zum Schluß nicht die Geduld haben auszuharren. Auch die zuverlässigsten Brahms-Verehrer geben zu, daß diese F-Dur-Symphonie Brahms' schwächste ist. Um ein nicht eben selten gebrauchtes Bonmot zu wiederholen, mag gesagt werden, daß sie in der sorgsamen und tonschönen Ausführung wirklich besser klang, als sie ist. Gewiß enthält der erste Satz reizvolle Züge, der dritte einen interessanten thematischen Einfall, und im letzten Satz geht wenigstens etwas vor; aber im zweiten langsamen Satz schaut das Epigonenthum gar zu auffallend an allen Ecken und Enden hervor. Und dazu interpretirte Herr Gericke diesen Satz noch besonders pedantisch. In ein paar Jahrzehnten wird sich die musikalische Welt darüber einig geworden sein, daß Brahms als Symphoniker nichts thatsächlich Neues zu sagen gehabt hat.

Wie aber kam die Mottl'sche Orchestration der Liszt'schen „Vogelpredigt" in das Programm? Arrangements von Klavierstücken gehören überhaupt nicht in ein Symphoniekonzert. Und dieses besondere Arrangement ist kaum als ein gelungenes Experiment zu betrachten. Allerdings würde es möglicher Weise unter Mottl's eigner Leitung anders gewirkt haben; Herr Gericke steht ja der Liszt'schen Muse nicht besonders sympathisch gegenüber.

Den Schluß machte Berlioz' „König Lear"-Overture. Daß das Orchester während des ganzen Konzertes sich in vortrefflicher Verfassung befand und mit gewohnter Virtuosität spielte, sei der Vollständigkeit halber noch erwähnt.

Das nächste Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters findet am Samstag Nachmittag statt.

—

Sunday, Dec 9

NEW-YORK DAILY TRIBUNE.

MUSIC.

M. Ysaye and the Boston Orchestra.

The second evening concert this season in the Borough of Manhattan by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which took place in Carnegie Hall last night, brought no new music, but, instead, an old and delightful friend in some old and delightful music. The solo performer was M. Ysaye. He was announced to play Bach's concerto in E flat major and Bruch's Fantasia on Scottish Airs, but there was a change of programme, and instead of the latter number he gave Bruch's second concerto, the air in D minor. Mr. Gericke also inverted his programme, playing the third symphony of Brahms's first, and Berlioz's overture to "King Lear" last. Between the two concertos he wasted ten minutes or so on the fragmentary twiddlings, tootlings and plunkings of the Liszt-Mottl legend, "The Sermon of St. Francis of Assissi to the Birds." It was a pretty exhibition of orchestral virtuososhlp, but that is an old story with the men from Boston and had already had sufficient exploitation in the second movement of the symphony, in which the luscious quality of tone and purity of intonation of the wood-wind choir were a benison to the ear.

M. Ysaye played the Bach Concerto for the first time in New-York. It is six years since he was heard here last, and the most gracious of the mixed impressions which he left behind him then, as on his first visit, were associated with his playing of Bach's music. In the solo sonatas he soared as high as ever did artist in our concert rooms, his tone was as the tone of a dozen virtuosi playing in harmony, and his reposefulness a lofty exemplification of Ruskin's rhapsodic definition of that supreme quality in art. Hence great expectations were aroused by the announcement that he would play the concerto, one of the freshest inspirations in the literature of the violin despite its respectable age of nearly two centuries. The expectations were in no wise disappointed, though the wealth of tone and cherubic serenity came to the fore only in the slow movement, which floated in as pure an ether as the final scene of Goethe's "Faust," which plays between heaven and earth. Here we heard again the Ysaye of old, for whom we listened in vain in the Bruch concerto. The first and last movements he played with superb breadth, but also with many slips and some impurities of tone. The audience, which crowded the room to the utmost, listened to the Bach Adagio in an ecstacy, and after the concerto applauded frantically till the artist had bowed his acknowledgments a dozen times. The Bruch concerto, which has not yet won its way to the popular heart, was received with less demonstration of approval, though its finale was given with superb dash. M. Ysaye sentimentalized the sustained melodies most incomprehensibly. Mr. Gericke gave him thrice masterly accompaniments, especially in the Adagio, when the orchestral tone was an exhalation of tender harmony.

My Telegram, Dec 9

Ysaye at Carnegie Hall.

The regular concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the borrowed attraction of Ysaye, violin, was heard in Carnegie Hall last night. A somewhat varied programme, with due consideration for the violinist's presence, was offered. The orchestra was heard in the overture to Berioz's overture to "King Lear," the overture to Goldmark's "Sapho" and in Brahm's Symphony No. 3, which were rendered with the technical perfection, color and warmth the public has come to expect from this orchestra. Ysaye was heard in Bach's "Concerto" for the violin in E major, with organ accompaniment, and in Bruch's Scotch phantasy for the violin. The Boston orchestra of itself always fills the hall to overflowing; the addition of Ysaye's name to the programme could do no more. The enthusiasm of the audience was evidenced by the spontaniety of the applause.

My Evening Sun, Dec 7

The Boston Orchestra's matinée programme at Carnegie Hall to-morrow, at 2:30 o'clock, will present Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony, No. 3; an aria from Mozart's "Titus," Goldmark's "Sappho" overture, two of Beethoven's rarely heard Scottish songs, with obligato by Mr. Hess and Mr. Krasselt, and the "Italian Caprice" of Tschaikowsky. The soloist is Olive Fremstad.

[39]

NY Evening Sun, Dec. 9

YSAYE'S RETURN IS A RED LETTER DAY

Belgian Giant's Violin Playing Gets the Greatest Ovation Yet—"Parsifal" and "Lord Mulberry"—A "Lohengrin" Family Tree.

Eugene Ysaye's return after six years was the red letter day of the concert season. After his Bach concerto last night, a Carnegie Hall "capacity house" applauded for five solid minutes by the watch, while with the Bruch concerto No. 2, substituted for the Scotch fantasy when the printed bills were out, the ovation lasted eight minutes more. It resembled the late election in being just a sort of international ratification meeting.

Ysaye and his Belgian hair needed no introduction on a third visit to America. He wears the hair flowing back like a rudder, possibly a hairsbreadth longer if not darker than before. The same corkscrew locks caress the right jugular. His enormous height—an unofficial biographer in Leslie's Monthly said he measured six feet six, or thereabouts, and weighed a ton—was shown when he stood motionless, amorphous, craglike, as it were a Rodin statue or a Bartholdi sculptured cliff frowning down on the pedestalled, patient Gericke. His clothes were not the formless things of Ysaye's memorable début. Yet the Charleswagnerian simplicity, the almost missing Maeterlinck absorption of the artist in his violin were the same old Ysaye, only equalled by the way a priceless little instrument was engulfed amid the huge double chin, the massive shoulders and the bent but never broken composure of frame. He held his audience spellbound.

New York had to wait for this occasion. Boston had already welcomed the man, and Mr. Philip Hale, on a performance of the same music, had declared that Ysaye is without a rival.

"Joachim is already a tradition, Sarasate is advanced in years. Lady Hallé was the last of the grand old school. Ysaye, the blend of classic and romantic, begins where technique leaves off. The hearer is not aware of the labor of a violinist. He may remember Vieuxtemps, who in enforced exile sighed plaintively for the music of Ysaye's chanterelle. . . . He is as absorbed as is Ysaye. The two listen to the music. Nor is the spell broken when the music ceases. Long afterward the tone, the phrase, the grace and the delicacy are remembered as by poor paralyzed Vieuxtemps in Algiers. This is not criticism, it is eulogy. And in this instance the eulogy of haunting impressions is the only just criticism."

How Ysaye breathes into the classic phrase that speaking personality which we associate with the human voice, and a rare voice at that, it was a pleasure to observe again last night. Let the Beckmessers find the flaws. The soul of Bach will sing itself away to everlasting bliss, so long as giants like Ysaye are raised up on the earth. Where shall we find the successor when this man gives up the bow for the baton once for all? In a Kreisler? In a Vecsey?

Hundreds of persons turned away by firemen at the door showed that those clever Athenians down East knew what they were about when they heard of the projected tour last spring and at once cabled, "We want the first appearances." From Boston, Ysaye accompanied them to Baltimore on Tuesday, Philadelphia on Wednesday, New York last night and this evening to Brooklyn, where he plays the Beethoven concerto. This last he will repeat "on Sunday week" at Carnegie Hall.

It is an instance of that rare virtue, gratitude, among great artists, that the same manager who unearthed the Colossus of violin players years ago is the director of this triumphal return as he was of the introduction of the unknown nonentity. He fairly screamed "bravos" from a box.

As the symphony programme was turned topsy-turvy for its soloist, the audience may be pardoned for devoting its feeble energies to him also. Brahms's symphony No. 3 was shifted from last to first place and the Berlioz overture, "King Lear," vice versa. The Liszt legend, "Sermon of St. Francis of Assisi to the Birds," orchestrated by Felix Mottl, last year's opera conductor, got a polite round of applause.

NY Post, Dec 9

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

According to Virgil, it is woman who is varium et mutabile semper; but the Roman poet did not live to know Mr. Wilhelm Gericke of Boston. Hardly ever does the conductor of the Hub's Symphony Orchestra announce a programme for New York without subsequently changing either its numbers or its arrangement. The original scheme for last night's concert in Carnegie Hall was: Berlioz's "Lear' overture, Bach's concerto in E major, Goldmark's "Sappho" overture, Bruch's Scotch Fantasie, Brahms's third symphony. In the programme book distributed to the audience, the Goldmark overture was found to have been ousted to make room for Felix Mottl's orchestral version of Liszt's "Saint Francis of Assisi's Sermon to the Birds," and as a final example of mutability there was enclosed in the programme books a pale blue slip of paper with this "special announcement":

The concert this evening will begin with the Brahms Symphony No. 3, and end with the Berlioz overture, "King Lear."

Instead of the Scotch Fantasy, Mr. Ysaye will play for his second solo number Bruch's Concerto No. 2 in D minor.

No further changes were made. Why was the Brahms Symphony put first instead of last? Only one answer suggests itself. The soloist was the world-famed violinist Ysaye, and there was some danger that the audience, after hearing his brilliant performances, might find the Brahms symphony too dry to sit through. A dry composition it certainly is. Even Brahms's high priest, Dr. Hanslick, had to admit that its thematic invention is insignificant compared with the workmanship ("dasjenige was er aus den Themen entwickelt, so viel bedeutender ist, als diese selbst"); and, after all, workmanship cannot take the place of inspiration and creative power. The orchestra played the symphony with precision and elegance, which are all that it calls for.

It was applauded, but the real, cordial, overwhelming applause of the evening came after Mr. Ysaye's playing of the Bach concerto. It was wonderful playing, in which, as in Paderewski's, all thought of technique is banished and the music is revealed in its own beauty unadorned. In listening to this artist one has the delightful feeling not only that there are no difficulties of execution whatever, but that the violin itself is non-existent; the music seems to be in the air, like the fragrance in a garden, far from the flowers which emit it. The Bach adagio, in particular, was a dream of beauty, sweetness, and sentiment, which aroused unbounded enthusiasm; and after the brilliant performance of the final allegro the eminent soloist was recalled a dozen or more times; but he respected the rule of the Symphony Orchestra forbidding extras. As there will be abundant opportunity to hear Mr. Ysaye in the coming weeks, this brief notice may suffice for the present. The crowded audience was a special tribute to his art and striking proof of his popularity.

The discarded Goldmark overture has been placed on to-morrow afternoon's programme, ousting, in its turn, Liszt's "Battle of the Huns." This is another of Mr. Gericke's eccentricities. Every year he promises his New York patrons a Liszt symphonic poem, and then, at the last moment, omits it. As a sop to Cerberus he played last night the "Sermon of Saint Francis of Assisi to the Birds," which is by no means a fair equivalent, for in this piece, as in the Brahms symphony, the thematic invention is subordinate to the workmanship. If there were any danger of its being played as often as Brahms's work, one might protest against it; but to hear it once was decidedly interesting. Hans Richter played it at a Philharmonic concert in Vienna more than a decade ago. As programme music it is far superior to the much-discussed productions of Richard Strauss. How the birds twitter and chirp and sing in the harps and violins, the flutes and clarinets! To hear Liszt play this on the piano must have been enchanting, but the orchestra has fuller resources for imitating bird music; and Mottl in orchestrating Liszt's piece revealed himself a master of the art. We listen respectfully to Haydn and Beethoven in their crude, primitive efforts to imitate bird music; why sneer at Liszt and Mottl, who have done it so much better?

NY Sun, Dec 9

WITH THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

YSAYE, THE EMINENT VIOLINIST, RETURNS HERE.

His Playing of Bach's E Flat Concerto and Bruch's D Minor Concerto Arouses the Audience to Enthusiasm—Brahms's Third Symphony Beautifully Performed

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its second evening concert last night at Carnegie Hall. The audience was one of great size, and hundreds were turned away. The programme consisted of Brahms's symphony in F, No. 3; Bach's concerto in E flat for violin, orchestra and organ; Liszt's "The Sermon of St. Francis of Assisi to the Birds," Bruch's second violin concerto and Berlioz's "King Lear" overture. The soloist was Eugene Ysaye, who returned after an absence of six years.

The interest of the audience plainly enough centred in the violinist, whose reputation has got the start of the majestic world. There have been flarings and trumpetings enough to make any sensible person suspect that Mr. Ysaye was a mountebank instead of a serious artist, but it may be recorded this morning that he is still a great violinist and that red and yellow posters mean nothing.

Ysaye's technic was never perfect and it is not so now, but it is better than it was on many occasions when he was here before. His intonation still has its moments of incertitude. But in all else that goes to make a master he is most admirable. His bowing is superb, his style—barring a too generous use of the sliding finger—is elegant, and his temperament, rich and communicative, is controlled by a fine musical intelligence.

His performance of the Bach concerto opened the way for the discussion of more matters than would comport with the purpose of a morning newspaper review. Byron said that the Troad was a fine field for conjecture and snipe shooting. Bach is an equally fruitful field for conjecture and for the exchange of critical acerbities which come perilously nigh the shooting stage.

One authority argues that because Bach was not a writer for the stage but for the Church, and because the spirit of dramatic utterance did not enter into instrumental music till after his day, his music should be played and sung with relentless adherence to tempo and with only the most elementary dynamic nuances.

Another will tell you that the "Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue" and the "St. Matthew Passion" are alone sufficient to prove that Bach was for yesterday, to-day and forever, that he is a modern of the moderns.

Both are right. It depends on the composition that is to be played or sung; that is all. What is the right style for some of the clavier fugues or organ sonatas, is not proper for some of the concerto and for the Passion music. Bach was as many-sided as a diamond. He was a universal genius. Sometimes he graved musical law upon tablets of stone; again he painted sublimest tragedies with his heart's blood upon the open page of human sympathy.

If Mr. Ysaye was able to find in the E flat concerto something more than beautiful patterns of sound, who shall censure him for it? Certainly he read the slow movement of the concerto not only with sound sentiment, but with sound musicianship, with not only tenderness but also breadth and dignity of style. His performance here made Bach sound alive and human instead of dead and scholastic.

Bach was and is alive and the humanity of his music grips every understanding to-day as firmly as it must have gripped those of a century and three-quarters ago. Mr. Ysaye's performance, suave and sonorous, clear and pointed in its treatment of the old-fashioned graces, manly and sincere in its feeling, moved the audience mightily. It is not often that Bach playing evokes such enthusiasm.

The Bruch concerto is not a field for conjecture. Mr. Ysaye played it with superb warmth, with deep introspection, and at the end with a brilliant burst of staccato bowing. This concerto is the less popular of Bruch's two, but it was mighty satisfying music as Mr. Ysaye played it.

The orchestra and Mr. Gericke were in happy mood. Their offering of the lovely Brahms symphony—a mine of melody and wisdom—was so beautiful that it was a cause for gratitude rather than mere approval. Just why the Felix Mottl orchestration of the Liszt legend was performed can only be conjectured. It is a highly unimportant piano piece in its original form, and the transcription serves only to bring its nakedness into the glare of a brilliant atmosphere, where there is neither twiddling of fingers nor virtuoso worship.

NY Times, Dec 9

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PLAYS

Eugene Ysaye's Reappearance as Soloist.

GREAT VIOLINIST'S TRIUMPH

A Remarkable Performance of Concertos by Bach and Bruch — Brahms's Third Symphony Played.

Seldom has the audience of the Boston Symphony Orchestra been so stirred as last evening at the second evening concert of the season. The third symphony of Brahms was the first incitement to the unwonted enthusiasm—music of supreme beauty marvelously played, with the fresh and buoyant spirit, the poetry and romantic mood reproduced as by an immediate contact with the composer's purpose.

Flexible tempo, plastic modeling of phrase, perfect translucency in the instrumental voicing marked the performance, and the two middle movements especially were made notable by the limpidity of the wood wind instruments. It was highly appreciated and warmly applauded, and Mr. Gericke was made to feel that he had made an uncommonly deep impression.

But the occasion resolved itself chiefly into a welcome for the great master-violinist, Eugène Ysaya, who appears in New York for the first time after an absence of half a dozen years. He had rearranged the programme as it was originally announced, and played besides Bach's concerto in E major, Bruch's second concerto in D minor, instead of the same composer's fantasie on Scotch airs.

Mr. Ysaye returns in the plenitude of his powers, which are those of a supremely great master, an interpreter in the highest sense, who glorifies and ennobles all he touches, with the communicating flame of his ardent musical temperament. Greater technicians there may be, but none who have spoken with a higher and nobler eloquence, with deeper poetical insight; none who can so pluck the heart out of the mystery of great music and impart that mystery so fully and unreservedly as he. As he plays, all considerations of technique vanish, all the processes by which the deed is done are forgotten.

The personality of the executant is sunk and merged in significance of what he is doing; and it is as if the listener were put into immediate communion with the music for its own sake alone. So it was in his interpretation of Bach's concerto, a work that he played frequently at his former visits to this country.

It is music of imperishable beauty, as fresh and vital to-day as when it was written, and Mr. Ysaye's playing of it presents it with all its throbbing vitality, all its infinite tenderness. His reading of the first movement is of magnificent breadth and muscularity, romantic and deeply appreciative of the poetry that finds utterance in it.

In the adagio he voiced its ineffable tenderness with a poignancy that tugged hard at the heart strings of those who heard it—an interpretation of supreme beauty that revealed the very essence of the music. In the last allegro Bach brings us back to earth again as from celestial regions, but it is a quality in Mr. Ysaye's mastery that he can follow the master here without snapping the thread or breaking down the mood that has been previously established.

After this the concerto of Bruch seemed dull and futile. Yet the great artist's touch transfigured this music with a sort of added glory; and it seemed worth while, if only because he had done it. As to how he accomplishes this, much might be said; of his heart-searching tone, rich in indefinable shades of emotional expressiveness and color; of his broad and sensitive bowing; of his subtle plasticity of phrase, his instinctive following of the melodic line, and his infinitude of nuance. But all these things yield to the general impression and the irresistible magnetism that is the great artist's mysterious possession.

After his performance of Bruch's concerto Mr. Ysaye was recalled again and again, and the audience seemed loath to let him go in peace.

The orchestra played Felix Mottl's arrangement of Liszt's piano piece, "The Sermon of Saint Francis of Assizi to the Birds," and Berlioz's "King Lear" overture. Both seemed dwarfed into insignificance and commonplaceness after the splendor of Brahms's symphony and Bach's concerto, though both were superbly played and in a manner to make their instrumental effectiveness count for the utmost.

NY American, Dec. 9

Soloist at the Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall.

Ysaye, after an absence of six years, played at Carnegie Hall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening.

The programme was made, apparently, to make him brilliant. It began with the third symphony of Brahm's, who leads the conscientious band of the Salvation Army of Kappelmeister music.

The third Symphony shows the serious effort, the respectable sincerity and the exact learning of Brahms's three other symphonies. Mr. Gericke, the conductor, drew out of it all the venerable elegance that it has.

Then Ysaye appeared. He was fat, but the tranquil splendor of his art was reflected in his face. He had the air of a sphinx with poetic imagination. When his violin was placed under his chin and he drew his bow across it he seemed to be happier than other mortals.

The artist and his violin are one. He is in disguise when he is without it. He played Bach's concerto for violin in E flat major, No. 2, with accompaniment for orchestra and organ. And if one realizes how thoroughly Bach disconcerts the detractors of "art for art's sake," one may realize how ably Ysaye played.

Bach speaks to sentiments which we do not have in our time, perhaps, but Bach's art is imperishable because its object is art. Ysaye had the faculty last evening to make that clear. His work was admirable, and it was absolutely understood. The audience applauded with all its might. He played also Bruch's concerto No. 2 in D minor, which gave to him a similar occasion to be artistic.

The orchestra played the Liszt-Mottl "Sermon of Saint Francis" and the romantic "King Lear" overture of Berlioz. Between these and the Brahms Symphony Ysaye's work was brilliantly chased. But it needed not to be. It was, of itself, dazzlingly beautiful.

[40]

NY Herald Dec 9

PEPE HAILED AS VIOLIN'S MASTER.

Boston Symphony Audience Goes Wild Over the Big Artist's Return.

GIVES BACH CONCERTO IN AN AWE-INSPIRING WAY.

Ten Minutes' Steady Applause Following Second Number Marks His Triumph.

After an absence of six years, M. Ysaye, the most lauded of living violinists, appeared last night at Carnegie Hall, at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Ysaye is a tremendous favorite in New York, so when he stepped upon the platform he faced an audience that packed this spacious hall in every part.

The violinist was greeted tumultuously, and several minutes elapsed before he was allowed to play. When finally he began the Bach Concerto No. 2, it was with the same mastery of his instrument and the composition for which he is celebrated. In the opening movement of this concerto Ysaye had moments of blurred detail, but in the achievement of making Bach sound effective he never faltered. In the slow movement Ysaye again proved his greatness. Here his tone was massive, and his monumental reading of this adagio, with its long-breathed parases and emotional climaxes, was almost awe-inspiring. This is the Bach of noblest breadth, the composer to be loved and revered for his classic greatness. Ysaye does not believe in the pedantic, dry-as-dust Bach, but rather in the emotional one. The final part of this concerto was played with great sweep by the violinist, who by vigorous nodding of head expressed occasional displeasure at the tardy pace of the orchestral accompaniment.

For a second number Ysaye played Bouch's second concerto in place of the Bouch Scotch Fantasy originally announced. Ysaye plays a new and interesting life into this Bouch composition, which in itself is not exceedingly interesting or noble. At the close of Ysaye's first number there were full five minutes of applause, during which the violinist bowed and disappeared from the platform, only to be recalled and to bow again an endless number of times. After his second number the applause knew no bounds, and the performer tramped in and out of sight for nearly ten minutes, mutely expressing thanks. It was an unusual ovation for any artist to receive, and especially at a Boston Symphony concert, where the audience generally holds itself in noticeable reserve.

Ysaye appears to have grown stouter since his last visit here, his jowls flanking the enormous maned head heavily. This artist is heavy in everything but his fingering hand and bowing arm. He is truly a tremendous violinist.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra changed the sequence of its programme, playing Brahms's Third Symphony at the beginning of the evening. Here the work of this noble orchestra was superb in exquisiteness of tone color and in detail of solo work. A Mottl arrangement of Liszt's pianoforte composition "The Sermon of Saint Francis of Assisi to the Birds," which was more interesting than effective, was played, as was Berlioz's "King Lear" overture, which latter number concluded the concert.

YSAYE STILL A MASTER VIOLINIST

Belgian Musician, After Six Years' Absence, Wins Triumph with Boston Orchestra.

"Soloist, Mr. Ysaye." Thus tersely did the Boston Symphony Orchestra programme announce last night the return to this city's concert platform of the violinist whose supremacy it would be idle to dispute. Carnegie Hall was thronged, and after each of his appearances the Belgian giant received a tribute as insistent as his performances had been overwhelming.

Other violinists known to this public play as brilliantly as Ysaye, for Sarasate and Marteau have been heard here; his work has not always the flawless impeccability of bowing that marks the unemotional perfectness of Cesar Thomson; he does not outdo Hugo Heermann in seriousness, nor Fritz Kreisler in a certain magnificent energy of style. But Ysaye unites in one mind and one pair of hands the best of all their qualities, and to them he adds a sublime artistic restraint, a sense of balance that represents his Latin and Teuton elements of Absolute poise.

It was a remarkable test to which he submitted himself last night. Instead of the Saint-Saens B minor concerto, in which he made his American debut at a Philharmonic concert November 16, 1894, and instead, too, of the Beethoven concerto in which he had won his greatest honors in his two tours of this country (the second ended in 1898), Ysaye chose the E flat concerto of Bach, with its subdued yet masterful musical message, its lofty seriousness, its complete absence of the purely virtuosic style.

None but the greatest need attempt this inner musical citadel, for it is to be conquered not by storm, but by fasting and prayer. Nothing more serenely great that his playing of this solemn music, especially of the first two movements, has been heard in New York from a violinist for many years. And what orchestra but the admirable Boston organization could have provided such an accompaniment? Mr. Gericke conducted with an unselfish devotion that he has never excelled. Such reverential pianissimi were all but miraculous.

After this, the Bruch D minor violin concerto, Ysaye's second number, seemed close to trivial, yet it, too, was played so as to bring out the best that it contained. Always, the violinist's tone sang; and there was sunlight in it. Music lovers may await with the most pleasurable anticipations Ysaye's next appearance, on Sunday afternoon, December 18, when he will play the Beethoven concerto with Walter Damrosch's Orchestra.

The Boston Orchestra's own share of last night's concert comprised the third Brahms symphony, the Felix Mottl arrangement of Liszt's "Sermon of St. Francis of Assisi to the Birds," and Berlioz's "King Lear" overture. All were performed with the clean beauty expected from this organization. Mr. Gericke conducted the Brahms work with real sympathy, though with an occasional lack of accent. The Liszt-Mottl piece is a pretty study in tone colors, and will serve well as an occasional work. Berlioz was more intense in the "King Lear" overture than he was made out last night, but the note of the classic in it rang out clearly.

The Boston Orchestra will play again to-morrow afternoon, and Miss Olive Fremstad will be the soloist.

Town Topics, Dec. 15

Whatever gaps the Opera left were filled in by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They came, bringing back to us Ysayé, after an absence of six years. The famous Belgian has grown very heavy, and when he folds the lower flap of his face over the violin there is little left visible of the instrument. But the whole man, instrument and all, disappears when he plays Bach as he did the other evening. There were moments in the first movement of the Bach Concerto No. 2 when he blurred his work somewhat, but the heavenly way in which he played the Adagio is something to recall forever. His tone is massive and he gives it human color. Of the great sweep in his work and the effective way in which he interprets Bach there will be ample opportunity to speak later. Then he performed the Bruch D minor Concerto, which he also played very beautifully, in a manner that was worthy of a much greater work. Gericke conducted the Brahms F major Symphony with wonderful sympathy, and the orchestra played it magnificently. There also was heard a Mottl orchestration of the Liszt Legend: "The Sermon of Saint Francis to the Birds," which was not effective. Berlioz's "King Lear" Overture concluded the evening. But the orchestra returned for the usual Saturday's matinee, at which concert Olive Fremstad sang the recitative and rondo from Mozart's "Titus," but not in astoundingly good voice. Later she sang two of Beethoven's Scotch songs, which sound little Scotch and less Beethoven, and to which the violin and 'cello obbligati are almost musical jokes. These songs are most highly ineffective at such a concert and in so large a hall. The Emotionalist.

NY Herald Dec 9

YSAYE PROVES A MUSICAL TITAN

Violinist Almost the "Whole Show" of the Boston Orchestra's Concert.

RECEIVES GREAT WELCOME

Mr. Gericke's Players Give an Excellent Entertainment in Carnegie Hall Before Crowded Audience.

Soloists at concerts of the Boston orchestra are usually regarded by the "elect" as a sort of concession to vulgar custom, a box office necessity, in no wise rivalling as a real attraction the virtuoso organization itself. Therefore, let it be recorded that at last night's concert by Mr. Gericke and his men, in Carnegie Hall, the soloist for once came near being the "whole show."

It was the return of Eugene Ysaye, the Belgian violinist, and his truly wonderful playing that accomplished this marvel. The crowded house fairly thundered its applause after his two concertos, and if Mr. Gericke's rules were less fragile than those of Medes and Persians, would have succeeded in its persistent demands for an added number.

Mr. Ysaye well deserved the almost extravagant tribute which his audience paid him. He showed himself a very Titan of the violin. All his well remembered vigor and dash of style and beauty of tone were there, and added to them was an increase of assurance and a growth of repose.

He played first the E flat major concerto of Bach, later the second concerto of Max Bruch, which latter number was substituted for the same composer's "Fantasie on Scotch Airs," which had been announced.

The importance of Mr. Ysaye's share in the evening's enjoyment is the more noteworthy because the programme was otherwise one of great beauty and its performance by the orchestra unusually fine.

There were moments when Mr. Gericke's interpretation of Brahms' third symphony seemed over frigid, but the work was exquisitely finished. So also was a highly interesting orchestral arrangement by Felix Mottle, of Liszt's legend, The Sermon of St. Francis of Assisi to the Birds." Berlios' "King Lear" overture, brilliantly given, closed this remarkable concert.

NY Staats, Dec 12

Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester.

Das gestrige vierte Konzert des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters in Carnegie Hall war nicht so stark, wie das vorangegangene, aber doch recht gut besucht, vor Allem wenn man das gestern Nachmittag herrschende fröhliche Schneegestöber in Betracht zieht. Außerdem war aber auch das Programm nicht besonders anziehend ausgefallen. Schumann's Es-dur Symphonie, die sogenannte „Rheinische", bildete die Hauptnummer, und wie sehr sich nun auch das Pietätsgefühl mancher Musikfreunde dagegen sträuben mag, es läßt sich nun einmal nicht leugnen, daß Schumann's Orchesterfarben stark zu erbleichen beginnen. Die Symphonie wurde unter Herrn Gericke's Leitung mit Sorgsamkeit und Genauigkeit gespielt, aber zuweilen hätte man sich doch ein etwas inspirirenderes Tempo und entschiedenere Nüancen gewünscht. Ungleich schwungvoller und farbenreicher war dann der Vortrag von Goldmark's „Sappho"-Ouverture. Goldmark ist offenbar ein Lieblingskomponist Gericke's, und seine farbenfrohen Orchesterbilder bilden einen guten Vorwurf für die Virtuosität der Bostoner Muster-Organisation. Diese „Sappho"-Ouverture ist zwar nicht so kraftvoll und gedankenreich wie desselben Komponisten „Sakuntala", — an die sie übrigens ein wenig erinnert, — aber sie ist recht charakteristisch und dabei von wirkungsvoller Plastik der Form. Mit ihrem Vortrag machten Dirigent und Orchester den günstigsten Eindruck auf's Publikum. Dagegen erwärmte man sich nicht sehr für Tschaikowsky's recht oberflächliches „Italienisches Capriccio", trotzdem es brillant gespielt wurde.

Fräulein Olive Fremstad — deren Namen das Programmbuch mit einem überflüssigen t am Ende versah, — war die Solistin des Konzerts. Sie hatte nicht besonders günstige Nummern für ihren Vortrag ausgewählt. Die große Arie aus Mozart's „Titus": „Jetzt, Vitellia" ist noch zu gut in der Erinnerung des Publikums in jenem großen Vortragsstil, mit dem Frau Schumann-Heink sie darzubieten pflegte; und wenn man den Vergleich unwillkürlich anstellen mußte, kam Fräulein Fremstad's Leistung dabei zu kurz. Außerdem hatte Fräulein Fremstad ihre hohen Töne nicht genügend unter Kontrolle. Auch die beiden Schottischen Lieder von Beethoven, die sie im zweiten Theil sang, waren wenig für die Gelegenheit geeignet. Indessen, Fräulein Fremstad ist eine künstlerisch so sympathische Sängerin, daß sie auch dann auf warmen Beifall rechnen kann, wenn sie nicht ihr Allerbestes darbietet.

[41]

MUSIC.

Yesterday's Operas and Concert.

"Aida," at the opera, and a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Carnegie Hall, in the afternoon, and "Lohengrin" at the opera in the evening, were yesterday's offerings to the people who love music in New-York. Their name is surely legion; both hall and opera house were crowded, afternoon and evening. The performances were all worthy of the patronage, though marked by a few shortcomings which gave the judicious pause. Miss Fremstad sang the scena "Ecco il punto," in the German version from Mozart's "Clemenza da Tito," and two Scotch songs, "Faithfu' Johnnie" and "Highland Laddie," in the arrangements made by Beethoven, with pianoforte, violin and violoncello accompaniment, at the concert. In neither case did she distinguish herself. The air is not properly within her range, and the songs were little better than travesties in tempo and expression. The musical readers of The Tribune will scarcely need to be told that their choice as a feature in a symphony concert was most singular and unjustifiable; but that fact was less deplorable than the misconception of their character by the performers, who, besides Miss Fremstad, were Messrs. Willy Hess, Fritz Krasselt and Max Zach. Such lovely folksongs as these must not be robbed of their folksong spirit, even if Beethoven did aid and abet in their transmogrification. The orchestra was brilliant in tone in the performance of Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony, Bruch's "Sappho" overture, and Tschaikowsky's Italian capriccio; but that is an old story. Why try now to gild refined gold?

There were mishaps in the performance of "Aida," in which Mmes. Eames and Walker and Messrs. Caruso, Scotti, Journet and Mühlmann were implicated, but they were chiefly chargeable to Signor Vigna, who is rapidly developing an indifference to the wishes of the singers which is likely some day to lead to disaster. The evening performance of "Lohengrin" was a peculiarly fine one, with Mme. Nordica as Elsa, Mme. Homer as Ortrud, Herr Knote as Lohengrin, Mr. Blass as the King (righteous in judgment, orotund and tuneful of voice) and Herr Goritz as Telramund. A most satisfactory dramatic singer is the last; none of his associates equal him in distinctness and ease of enunciation, and none surpass him in purity of tone. Herr Knote's Lohengrin was exactly what his representations of Walther and Tannhäuser must have led the public to expect—a manly, unaffected and musically delightful performance. His voice rang true in every note. Its beauty filled the ears of the listeners, its sensuous charm their hearts and imaginations. How ravishing the duet between him and Mme. Nordica, who finds her loveliest tones in the music of Elsa, sounded may be left to the imagination of the old and new admirers of the singers. Mr. Conried's policy seems to be to make as glorified an ending to the operatic week as his fashionable patrons make a beginning. Monday for the social show; Saturday for the artistic.

NY Press, Dec 11

GERICKE'S MEN HEARD AGAIN.

Olive Fremstad Soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Concert.

Whether it be the result of a Friday in Brooklyn or of the enervating atmosphere of a matinee, coupled with the less invigorating programmes Mr. Gericke choses to offer to his daylight audiences, it is a fact the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Saturday afternoon concerts are frequently less interesting and inspiring than its performances on Thursday evenings. That proved the case yesterday in Carnegie Hall, when the Boston leader offered a list of orchestral works comprising Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony in E flat major; Goldmark's overture to "Sappho," opus 44, and Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice, opus 45, a collection of compositions delightful in themselves, but leaving something to be desired through the want of a solid, classical pedestal, such as a work of Beethoven or Brahms would present.

In Schumann music Mr. Gericke and his orchestra generally are at their best, but they did not live up to their reputation yesterday. Although the German romanticist's beautifully appealing third symphony was played with the virtuosic clarity and balance of tone that always mark the work of the men from Boston, it went its course, particularly in the first and last movements, with leaden feet. Apparently Mr. Gericke does not agree with the annotator of his programme, Philip Hall, that the themes of this movement are of "a gay character," and that the finale is "lively and energetic." What the conductor probably considered energy in his reading impressed many of his listeners as being stolidity.

Goldmark's melodically exuberant and richly orchestrated overture, a composition saturated with the sensuous colors of the East, came to a far more eloquent hearing. Indeed, it was decidedly the most impressive offering of the afternoon, though Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice, in which the composer has made charming use of national songs and rhythms, if he has not produced a work far above the level of salon music, was given with spirit and dash.

Miss Olive Fremstad showed the effects of her arduous duties in the Metropolitan Opera House. She failed to do herself justice in her performance of Mozart's Recitative and Rondo from "Titus." Evidently her singing cost her some effort, and she found difficulty in keeping to the true pitch. Miss Fremstad's dramatic intelligence and artistry went far, however, to compensate for vocal shortcomings. In two of Beethoven's Scotch songs, "Faithfu' Johnnie" and "Bonny Laddie, Highland Laddie," played with piano accompaniment and violin and violoncello obligato, Miss Fremstad was heard to much greater advantage, though a symphony concert is hardly an appropriate setting for songs of so intimate a character. Her interpretations were marked by insight, grace and good taste. For the hurried tempo of the second number Mr. Hess, who played the violin obligato, and Mr. Gericke, who gave the 'cello part, seemed responsible rather than the singer.

Wrong notes and the

NY Herald Dec 9

YSAYE HAILED AS VIOLIN'S MASTER.

Boston Symphony Audience Goes Wild Over the Big Artist's Return.

GIVES BACH CONCERTO IN AN AWE-INSPIRING WAY.

Ten Minutes' Steady Applause Following Second Number Marks His Triumph.

After an absence of six years, M. Ysaye, the most lauded of living violinists, appeared last night at Carnegie Hall, at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Ysaye is a tremendous favorite in New York, so when he stepped upon the platform he faced an audience that packed this spacious hall in every part.

The violinist was greeted tumultuously, and several minutes elapsed before he was allowed to play. When finally he began the Bach Concerto No. 2, it was with the same mastery of his instrument and the composition for which he is celebrated. In the opening movement of this concerto Ysaye had moments of blurred detail, but in the achievement of making Bach sound effective he never faltered. In the slow movement Ysaye again proved his greatness. Here his tone was massive, and his monumental reading of this adagio, with its long-breathed parases and emotional climaxes, was almost awe-inspiring. This is the Bach of noblest breadth, the composer to be loved and revered for his classic greatness. Ysaye does not believe in the pedantic, dry-as-dust Bach, but rather in the emotional one. The final part of this concerto was played with great sweep by the violinist, who by vigorous nodding of head expressed occasional displeasure at the tardy pace of the orchestral accompaniment.

For a second number Ysaye played Bouch's second concerto in place of the Bouch Scotch Fantasy originally announced. Ysaye plays a new and interesting life into this Bouch composition, which in itself is not exceedingly interesting or noble. At the close of Ysaye's first number there were full five minutes of applause, during which the violinist bowed and disappeared from the platform, only to be recalled and to bow again an endless number of times. After his second number the applause knew no bounds, and the performer tramped in and out of sight for nearly ten minutes, mutely expressing thanks. It was an unusual ovation for any artist to receive, and especially at a Boston Symphony concert, where the audience generally holds itself in noticeable reserve.

Ysaye appears to have grown stouter since his last visit here, his jowls flanking the enormous maned head heavily. This artist is heavy in everything but his fingering hand and bowing arm. He is truly a tremendous violinist.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra changed the sequence of its programme, playing Brahms's Third Symphony at the beginning of the evening. Here the work of this noble orchestra was superb in exquisiteness of tone color and in detail of solo work. A Mottl arrangement of Liszt's pianoforte composition "The Sermon of Saint Francis of Assisi to the Birds," which was more interesting than effective, was played, as was Berlioz's "King Lear" overture, which latter number concluded the concert.

NY Mail Dec 9

YSAYE STILL A MASTER VIOLINIST

Belgian Musician, After Six Years' Absence, Wins Triumph with Boston Orchestra.

"Soloist, Mr. Ysaye." Thus tersely did the Boston Symphony Orchestra programme announce last night the return to this city's concert platform of the violinist whose supremacy it would be idle to dispute. Carnegie Hall was thronged, and after each of his appearances the Belgian giant received a tribute as insistent as his performances had been overwhelming.

Other violinists known to this public play as brilliantly as Ysaye, for Sarasate and Marteau have been heard here; his work has not always the flawless impeccability of bowing that marks the unemotional perfectness of Cesar Thomson; he does not outdo Hugo Heermann in seriousness, nor Fritz Kreisler in a certain magnificent energy of style. But Ysaye unites in one mind and one pair of hands the best of all their qualities, and to them he adds a sublime artistic restraint, a sense of balance that represents his Latin and Teuton elements of absolute poise.

It was a remarkable test to which he submitted himself last night. Instead of the Saint-Saens B minor concerto, in which he made his American debut at a Philharmonic concert November 16, 1894, and instead, too, of the Beethoven concerto in which he had won his greatest honors in his two tours of this country (the second ended in 1898), Ysaye chose the E flat concerto of Bach, with its subdued yet masterful musical message, its lofty seriousness, its complete absence of the purely virtuosic style.

None but the greatest need attempt this inner musical citadel, for it is to be conquered not by storm, but by fasting and prayer. Nothing more serenely great that his playing of this solemn music, especially of the first two movements, has been heard in New York from a violinist for many years. And what orchestra but the admirable Boston organization could have provided such an accompaniment? Mr. Gericke conducted with an unselfish devotion that he has never excelled. Such reverential pianissimi were all but miraculous.

After this, the Bruch D minor violin concerto, Ysaye's second number, seemed close to trivial, yet it, too, was played so as to bring out the best that it contained. Always, the violinist's tone sang; and there was sunlight in it. Music lovers may await with the most pleasurable anticipations Ysaye's next appearance, on Sunday afternoon, December 18, when he will play the Beethoven concerto with Walter Damrosch's Orchestra.

The Boston Orchestra's own share of last night's concert comprised the third Brahms symphony, the Felix Mottl arrangement of Liszt's "Sermon of St. Francis of Assisi to the Birds," and Berlioz's "King Lear" overture. All were performed with the clean beauty expected from this organization. Mr. Gericke conducted the Brahms work with real sympathy, though with an occasional lack of accent. The Liszt-Mottl piece is a pretty study in tone colors, and will serve well as an occasional work. Berlioz was more intense in the "King Lear" overture than he was made out last night, but the note of the classic in it rang out clearly.

The Boston Orchestra will play again to-morrow afternoon, and Miss Olive Fremstad will be the soloist.

Town Topics Dec 15

Whatever gaps the Opera left were filled in by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They came, bringing back to us Ysayé, after an absence of six years. The famous Belgian has grown very heavy, and when he folds the lower flap of his face over the violin there is little left visible of the instrument. But the whole man, instrument and all, disappears when he plays Bach as he did the other evening. There were moments in the first movement of the Bach Concerto No. 2 when he blurred his work somewhat, but the heavenly way in which he played the Adagio is something to recall forever. His tone is massive and he gives it human color. Of the great sweep in his work and the effective way in which he interprets Bach there will be ample opportunity to speak later. Then he performed the Bruch D minor Concerto, which he also played very beautifully, in a manner that was worthy of a much greater work. Gericke conducted the Brahms F major Symphony with wonderful sympathy, and the orchestra played it magnificently. There also was heard a Mottl orchestration of the Liszt Legend: "The Sermon of Saint Francis to the Birds," which was not effective. Berlioz's "King Lear" Overture concluded the evening. But the orchestra returned for the usual Saturday's matinee, at which concert Olive Fremstad sang the recitative and rondo from Mozart's "Titus," but not in astoundingly good voice. Later she sang two of Beethoven's Scotch songs, which sound little Scotch and less Beethoven, and to which the violin and 'cello obbligati are almost musical jokes. These songs are most highly ineffective at such a concert and in so large a hall. The Emotionalist.

NY Herald Dec 9

YSAYE PROVES A MUSICAL TITAN

Violinist Almost the "Whole Show" of the Boston Orchestra's Concert.

RECEIVES GREAT WELCOME

Mr. Gericke's Players Give an Excellent Entertainment in Carnegie Hall Before Crowded Audience.

Soloists at concerts of the Boston orchestra are usually regarded by the "elect" as a sort of concession to vulgar custom, a box office necessity, in no wise rivalling as a real attraction the virtuoso organization itself. Therefore, let it be recorded that at last night's concert by Mr. Gericke and his men, in Carnegie Hall, the soloist for once came near being the "whole show."

It was the return of Eugene Ysaye, the Belgian violinist, and his truly wonderful playing that accomplished this marvel. The crowded house fairly thundered its applause after his two concertos, and if Mr. Gericke's rules were less fragile than those of Medes and Persians, would have succeeded in its persistent demands for an added number.

Mr. Ysaye well deserved the almost extravagant tribute which his audience paid him. He showed himself a very Titan of the violin. All his well remembered vigor and dash of style and beauty of tone were there, and added to them was an increase of assurance and a growth of repose.

He played first the E flat major concerto of Bach, later the second concerto of Max Bruch, which latter number was substituted for the same composer's "Fantasie on Scotch Airs," which had been announced.

The importance of Mr. Ysaye's share in the evening's enjoyment is the more noteworthy because the programme was otherwise one of great beauty and its performance by the orchestra unusually fine.

There were moments when Mr. Gericke's interpretation of Brahms' third symphony seemed over frigid, but the work was exquisitely finished. So also was a highly interesting orchestral arrangement by Felix Mottle, of Liszt's legend, The Sermon of St. Francis of Assisi to the Birds." Berlioz' "King Lear" overture, brilliantly given, closed this remarkable concert.

NY Staats Zeit 12.

Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester.

Das gestrige vierte Konzert des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters in Carnegie Hall war nicht so stark, wie das vorangegangene, aber doch recht gut besucht, vor Allem wenn man das gestern Nachmittag herrschende fröhliche Schneegestöber in Betracht zieht. Außerdem war aber auch das Programm nicht besonders anziehend ausgefallen. Schumann's Es-dur Symphonie, die sogenannte „Rheinische", bildete die Hauptnummer, und wie sehr sich nun auch das Pietätsgefühl mancher Musikfreunde dagegen sträuben mag, es läßt sich nun einmal nicht leugnen, daß Schumann's Orchesterfarben stark zu erbleichen beginnen. Die Symphonie wurde unter Herrn Gericke's Leitung mit Sorgsamkeit und Genauigkeit gespielt, aber zuweilen hätte man sich doch ein etwas inspirirenderes Tempo und entschiedenere Nüancen gewünscht. Ungleich schwungvoller und farbenreicher war dann der Vortrag von Goldmark's „Sappho"-Ouverture. Goldmark ist offenbar ein Lieblingskomponist Gericke's, und seine farbenfrohen Orchesterbilder bilden einen guten Vorwurf für die Virtuosität der Bostoner Muster-Organisation. Diese „Sappho"-Ouverture ist zwar nicht so kraftvoll und gedankenreich wie desselben Komponisten „Sakuntala", — an die sie übrigens ein wenig erinnert, — aber sie ist recht charakteristisch und dabei von wirkungsvoller Plastik der Form. Mit ihrem Vortrag machten Dirigent und Orchester den günstigsten Eindruck auf's Publikum. Dagegen erwärmte man sich nicht sehr für Tschaikowsky's recht oberflächliches „Italienisches Capriccio", trotzdem es brillant gespielt wurde.

Fräulein Olive Fremstad — deren Namen das Programmbuch mit einem überflüssigen t am Ende versah, — war die Solistin des Konzerts. Sie hatte nicht besonders günstige Nummern für ihren Vortrag ausgewählt. Die große Arie aus Mozart's „Titus": „Jetzt, Vitellia" ist noch zu gut in der Erinnerung des Publikums in jenem großen Vortragsstil, mit dem Frau Schumann-Heink sie darzubieten pflegte; und wenn man den Vergleich unwillkürlich anstellen mußte, kam Fräulein Fremstad's Leistung dabei zu kurz. Außerdem hatte Fräulein Fremstad ihre hohen Töne nicht genügend unter Kontrolle. Auch die beiden Schottischen Lieder von Beethoven, die sie im zweiten Theil sang, waren wenig für die Gelegenheit geeignet. Indessen, Fräulein Fremstad ist eine künstlerisch so sympathische Sängerin, daß sie auch dann auf warmen Beifall rechnen kann, wenn sie nicht ihr Allerbestes darbietet.

[41]

MUSIC.

Yesterday's Operas and Concert.

"Aida," at the opera, and a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Carnegie Hall, in the afternoon, and "Lohengrin" at the opera in the evening, were yesterday's offerings to the people who love music in New-York. Their name is surely legion; both hall and opera house were crowded, afternoon and evening. The performances were all worthy of the patronage, though marked by a few shortcomings which gave the judicious pause. Miss Fremstad sang the scena "Ecco il punto," in the German version from Mozart's "Clemenza da Tito," and two Scotch songs, "Faithfu' Johnnie" and "Highland Laddie," in the arrangements made by Beethoven, with pianoforte, violin and violoncello accompaniment, at the concert. In neither case did she distinguish herself. The air is not properly within her range, and the songs were little better than travesties in tempo and expression. The musical readers of The Tribune will scarcely need to be told that their choice as a feature in a symphony concert was most singular and unjustifiable; but that fact was less deplorable than the misconception of their character by the performers, who, besides Miss Fremstad, were Messrs. Willy Hess, Fritz Krasselt and Max Zach. Such lovely folksongs as these must not be robbed of their folksong spirit, even if Beethoven did aid and abet in their transmogrification. The orchestra was brilliant in tone in the performance of Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony, Bruch's "Sappho" overture, and Tschaikowsky's Italian capriccio; but that is an old story. Why try now to gild refined gold?

There were mishaps in the performance of "Aida," in which Mmes. Eames and Walker and Messrs. Caruso, Scotti, Journet and Mühlmann were implicated, but they were chiefly chargeable to Signor Vigna, who is rapidly developing an indifference to the wishes of the singers which is likely some day to lead to disaster. The evening performance of "Lohengrin" was a peculiarly fine one, with Mme. Nordica as Elsa, Mme. Homer as Ortrud, Herr Knote as Lohengrin, Mr. Blass as the King (righteous in judgment, orotund and tuneful of voice) and Herr Goritz as Telramund. A most satisfactory dramatic singer is the last; none of his associates equal him in distinctness and ease of enunciation, and none surpass him in purity of tone. Herr Knote's Lohengrin was exactly what his representations of Walther and Tannhäuser must have led the public to expect—a manly, unaffected and musically delightful performance. His voice rang true in every note. Its beauty filled the ears of the listeners, its sensuous charm their hearts and imaginations. How ravishing the duet between him and Mme. Nordica, who finds her loveliest tones in the music of Elsa, sounded may be left to the imagination of the old and new admirers of the singers. Mr. Conried's policy seems to be to make as glorified an ending to the operatic week as his fashionable patrons make a beginning. Monday for the social show; Saturday for the artistic.

NY Press, Dec 11

GERICKE'S MEN HEARD AGAIN.

Olive Fremstad Soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Concert.

Whether it be the result of a Friday in Brooklyn or of the enervating atmosphere of a matinee, coupled with the less invigorating programmes Mr. Gericke choses to offer to his daylight audiences, it is a fact the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Saturday afternoon concerts are frequently less interesting and inspiring than its performances on Thursday evenings. That proved the case yesterday in Carnegie Hall, when the Boston leader offered a list of orchestral works comprising Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony in E flat major; Goldmark's overture to "Sappho," opus 44, and Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice, opus 45, a collection of compositions delightful in themselves, but leaving something to be desired through the want of a solid, classical pedestal, such as a work of Beethoven or Brahms would present.

In Schumann music Mr. Gericke and his orchestra generally are at their best, but they did not live up to their reputation yesterday. Although the German romanticist's beautifully appealing third symphony was played with the virtuosic clarity and balance of tone that always mark the work of the men from Boston, it went its course, particularly in the first and last movements, with leaden feet. Apparently Mr. Gericke does not agree with the annotator of his programme, Philip Hall, that the themes of this movement are of "a gay character," and that the finale is "lively and energetic." What the conductor probably considered energy in his reading impressed many of his listeners as being stolidity.

Goldmark's melodically exuberant and richly orchestrated overture, a composition saturated with the sensuous colors of the East, came to a far more eloquent hearing. Indeed, it was decidedly the most impressive offering of the afternoon, though Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice, in which the composer has made charming use of national songs and rhythms, if he has not produced a work far above the level of salon music, was given with spirit and dash.

Miss Olive Fremstad showed the effects of her arduous duties in the Metropolitan Opera House. She failed to do herself justice in her performance of Mozart's Recitative and Rondo from "Titus." Evidently her singing cost her some effort, and she found difficulty in keeping to the true pitch. Miss Fremstad's dramatic intelligence and artistry went far, however, to compensate for vocal shortcomings. In two of Beethoven's Scotch songs, "Faithfu' Johnnie" and "Bonny Laddie, Highland Laddie," played with piano accompaniment and violin and violoncello obligato, Miss Fremstad was heard to much greater advantage, though a symphony concert is hardly an appropriate setting for songs of so intimate a character. Her interpretations were marked by insight, grace and good taste. For the hurried tempo of the second number Mr. Hess, who played the violin obligato, and Mr. Krasselt, who gave the 'cello part, seemed responsible, rather than the singer.

My American Dec 11

FREMSTAD TRIUMPH MARKS SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Grand Opera Artist Wins Great Success with Boston Orchestra in Two Simple Scotch Songs Written by Beethoven.

Olive Fremstad sang with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday at Carnegie Hall. It was crowded with musicians and people of fashion. One of them, a subscriber to the opera, who adored her as Venus in "Tannhauser," said:

"She is in disguise, now. In this gown of a modern woman, with Gainsborough hat and ostrich feathers, she is as if I were travestied as a Turk with a sun in my back and a pot of flowers on my chest.

"She is a Greek medal, escaped from the Gold Room of the Metropolitan Opera House and the loss of which J. Pierpont Morgan deplores. Let us not betray her and we shall enjoy the spectacle."

She sang the recitative "Jetzi, Vitellia," and the rondo of Mozart's "Titus." Her voice was magnificent. It had in its grave tones a splendor which seemed incomparable. It had the clearness of crystal and the solidity of bronze.

The orchestra had played with fervent art Schumann's symphony No. 3, in which the Rhenish life has its romantic expression. It played Goldmark's overture to "Sappho." Miss Fremstad sang two Scotch songs by Beethoven, "Faithfu' Johnnie" and "Bonnie Laddie, Highland Laddie." She was applauded with ardent cordiality.

The orchestra played Tschaikowski's "Italian Caprice," in which the heart of Naples palpitates. Wilhelm Gericke won new wreaths of laurels. It was a glorious afternoon at Carnegie Hall.

My Herald, Dec 11

BOSTON ORCHESTRA AGAIN.

Second Afternoon Concert in Carnegie Hall—Miss Fremstad as Soloist.

The second concert of the Boston Orchestra, which took place yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, gave an abundant pleasure, though the stimulus of the evening concert of Thursday was lacking. The symphony was Schumann's third, the Rhenish, so called from hints he dropped in some of his letters of an intention to portray certain moods that life on the Rhine had called up in the composer's mind. The value and beauty of the music as music put the question of identifying those moods into the background; a knowledge of them is not necessary for an enjoyment of the symphony, and Schumann himself was careful to take off any semblance of a label from the superscriptions to the several movements. It may be admitted at once that the instrumentation is often heavy and monotonous, and there may be discovered here and there traces of the failing spontaneity of the composer's invention. It is his last symphony, and composed only a few years before the oncoming of his fatal malady. But there is much that is fine enough to insure its life for a long time to come. The orchestra's playing of it was not on the high plane of perfection that marked that wonderful interpretation of the Brahms symphony Thursday, but it was full of life and animation; of light and shade; and certainly there could have been no more plausible showing made for its orchestration than Mr. Gericke made.

Goldmark's overture to "Sappho" is a highly colored and flowingly written piece, suggestive enough of burning Sappho's loving and singing, but making its impression more through its orchestral effects and sonorities than through the urgent interest of its musical ideas. Mr. Gericke read it superbly, with a rich store of nuance of all sorts, incisive rhythm, accent, and dramatic phrasing. And Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice" let down the musical interest still further, although its brilliancy made a stirring close for the programme. Tschaikowsky fell into the banalities that seem to beset the Northern composer who attempts to sing or to strum the tunes of Italy. Military trumpet fanfares, Neapolitan folk-songs—characteristically sentimental ditties that have little of the dignity and strength of many folk-songs—and a noisy tarentella go to make up this caprice, which, with all its skill in creating effective orchestral sound, is quite lacking in distinction.

Miss Olive Fremstad was the soloist and sang the recitative and air from Mozart's "Titus" that is beloved of mezzo-sopranos. It is somewhat high at certain points for Miss Fremstad's vocal range, but she sang it in admirable style, with vigorous and dramatic expression, and with a gorgeous richness of voice. She sang, furthermore, two of Beethoven's settings of Scotch airs, with accompaniment for violin, violoncello, and piano. "Faithful Johnie" she delivered with much simplicity and sincere sentiment. In the stirring tune, "Bonny Laddie, Highland Laddie," she appeared to have some notions as to a special dramatic effect to be made by hurrying the refrain that comes at the end of every line. The effect was, however, only a loss of character and power.

EXCELLENT BOSTON PLAYING.

Also Excellent New York Singing by Miss Fremstad of the Opera.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's matinée yesterday at Carnegie Hall was something to take the sting out of the winter wind. It was a feast of cheerfulness and light, and if there was any one in the audience who did not enjoy it, that person must have gone to a concert by mistake or else had left his soul in the stock market.

The programme consisted of Schumann's E flat symphony, the familiar recitative and air beginning "Jetzt, Vitellia," from Mozart's "Titus," Goldmark's "Sappho" overture, two Scotch songs by Beethoven, with piano accompaniment and violin and 'cello obligato, and Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice." The solo singer was Olive Fremstad, the captivating Carmen and convincing Kundry of the opera house.

She sang the Mozart music with intelligence, dramatic feeling and musical judgment, but in the rondo her cantillena suffered somewhat from the stings and arrows of outrageous German consonants. Still it was a delight to hear her rich lower tones, and to bask in the rays of her temperament. Her voice, not having to force its way over the orchestra, as it does in the opera, rang out with splendid sonority and the warmth of its many tints was especially noticeable.

It was something of a treat, too, to hear her sing the two Scotch songs with such a good accompanist at the piano as Max Zach, such an excellent 'cellist as Mr. Krasselt, and such a master as Mr. Hess to play the violin obbligato. In "Faithful Johnnie" her style was perfect and her feeling eloquently communicative.

Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony is always good to hear, and it cannot be played with more beauty of tone, more suavity of manner and greater clarity than it was yesterday played by the accomplished gentlemen from Boston. Goldmark's richly scored "Sappho" overture and Tschaikowsky's brilliant and characteristic caprice were also performed admirably. It was a good afternoon and was enjoyed by as mild a mannered audience as ever sat.

Herald, Dec 11

BOSTON ORCHESTRA CONCERT.

Mr. Gericke's Players Heard at Carnegie Hall with Miss Fremstad as Soloist.

On account of the storm a smaller audience than usual attended the Boston Orchestra's concert in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon.

The programme was a weighty and interesting one, headed by Schumann's E flat major "Rhenish Symphony," No. 3, and containing also Goldmark's "Sappho" overture, opus 44, which was substituted for Liszt's "Battle of the Huns," and Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice," opus 45. Miss Olive Fremstad was the soloist.

Mr. Gericke was not in his happiest mood nor his men in quite their usual fine feather. The first movement of the symphony for example, lacked flexibility, and its last movement lagged miles behind the spirit of Carneval, which should animate it. The wind instruments were frequently less precise and smooth than usual. On the other hand the Scherzo and the following slow movement were played admirably, and the "Cathedral Scene" was played superbly.

The orchestra's most telling, and, at the same time, most finished work was done in the Goldmark overture and in portions of Tschaikowsky's highly colored score. Miss Olive Fremstad, the soloist, has frequently been heard to better advantage. She showed doubtful wisdom in choosing the Recitative and Rondo from Mozart's "Titus," which imperfectly suits her vocal range. Neither did two Scotch songs of Beethoven, "Faithfu' Johnie" and "Bonny Laddie," entirely fit the occasion, but she sang them well and was warmly applauded.

My Evening Sun Dec 12

The Boston Symphony matinée on Saturday at Carnegie Hall got back to plain music with Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony, elegant in its simplicity. The "Cathedral" episode showed where Wagner first heard the march to Monsalvat. Goldmark's "Sappho" was an ideal selection for its audience, and Tschaikowsky's "Italian" dances almost equally happy. Miss Fremstad, the soloist, needed all the excuse of beautiful low tones like Schumann-Heink's for singing the Mozart "Titus" aria, while the two "Scotch and Beethoven" songs will never seem either Scotch or Beethoven to our ears. They are interesting as what botanists call a "sport" in the anthology of song, but at rare intervals, if you please. Beethoven's Scotch is poorer than Arthur Foote's Irish.

My Globe, Dec. 12

Even the Boston Orchestra has its weary moments. It could not help playing Schumann's Rhenish symphony well on Saturday afternoon, but it seemed a mechanical excellence. From the conductor no one warmed to it as every one did to Brahms's symphony two days before. It all had a dutiful monotony. Goldmark's overture to "Sappho" had life and color and something of Mr. Gericke's new ardor. Tschaikowsky's "Italian caprice" was only virtuosity cloaking commonplace by its easy brilliancy. Fremstad sang twice. The first time you suspected that her true place is on the stage of the opera house. The second you were sure of it. The richness of her voice and the eagerness of her dramatic feeling are not for the restraints of the concert room.

EIGHTH SYMPHONY CONCERT GIVEN

Gabriel Faure's Music to a Play by Maeterlinck Produced with Poetic Charm and Rare and Subtle Beauty by Orchestra.

CARLO BUONAMICI THE SOLO PIANIST

His Performance Glowed with Virtuoso Blood—Brilliant and Forceful—Given Wreath by a Very Applausive Audience.

The eighth concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Gericke conductor, was given in Symphony Hall last night. Mr. Carlo Buonamici was the solo pianist. The programme was as follows:

Symphony in C major, No. 34.....Mozart
Concerto in F sharp minor No. 1, op 1, for piano and orchestra.....Rachmaninoff
(First time.)
"Pelleas and Melisande," suite from stage music to Maeterlinck's tragedy..Gabriel Faure
(First time at these concerts.)
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"...Wagner

Mr. John Sargent once made a drawing of Gabriel Faure and Mrs. Patrick Campbell. The white-haired composer was sketched in a peculiarly meditative mood. The face of the play-actress is seen over Faure's shoulder. She has a far-away expression and her eyes are langourous. Had the two been discussing the question of music for her production of Maeterlinck's "Pelleas and Melisande," that tragedy of infinite pathos, the tragedy of poor souls in an unnamed land who were chosen by malevolent inhabitants of the air as the victims of wanton cruelty?

Mrs. Patrick Campbell produced the play in London in 1898, and Faure composed the prelude, entr'actes and incidental music for this performance. When she produced the play at the Boston Theatre, April 12, 1902, this music was played. Faure based the suite performed last night on this stage music, and the suite was played in Paris early in 1901, and at a New England Conservatory orchestra concert in Boston last March.

Stage music almost always suffers when it is transferred from the theatre to the concert hall. The prelude is no longer the quickener of anticipation. It cannot serve to prepare a sympathetic mood. It no longer contains hints and auroral flushes. The entr'actes become in the concert hall absolute music; they neither comment on the scene that preceded nor prepare for that which is to follow. On the other hand, there is this compensation: the music when performed in the concert hall is heard, while in the playhouse it is generally lost in the din of assembling and in the chatter.

The suite is in three movements. The first is the prelude to the first act; it is simple and suggestive; there is passion, but it is the passion of Maeterlinck, which when at its height is supreme resignation to the will of the unseen who direct the action of the human puppets. There is no wild melancholy. Only toward the end is there the irresistible impression of bodement; the mysterious horn calls and the listening and the disquieted, hopeless answer. The second movement is entitled "Fileuse"; for at the beginning of the third act the curtain rises on Melisande spinning with a distaff, and Pelleas is with her.

The music is exquisite in its refinement; in the refinement of its sadness. The third movement is the final entr'acte, the prelude to the death scene. It is funeral music—but how far removed it is from commonplace and formulated lamentation! Perhaps in its most forcible expression there is the suggestion of Golaud and his importunate questioning of the dying woman, but for the most part the musical thought is of the old and dazed Arkel, who looks on with wondering sadness, and of Melisande herself. "She must no longer be disturbed. The human soul is very silent. The human soul likes to depart alone. It suffers so timidly. But the sadness, Golaud—but the sadness of all that one sees * * * She wishes silence now. It was a little being, so peaceful, so timid, and so silent. It was a poor little mysterious being like all of us."

The music has the shadowy charm and the shifting and vague beauty that characterize Faure. The performance was poetic. The work is of small dimensions, but it is of rare and subtle beauty, one of the most imaginative and truly musical works that have been heard here of late years.

Mr. Buonamici gave a very brilliant performance of a brilliant concerto. The composition itself is fresh and interesting, a most grateful work to the pianist, a pleasure to the hearer. It is frankly a virtuoso piece, but it is neither conventional nor bizarre. There is the exotic flavor of the Russian folksong in certain themes, and the occasional oriental delight in changing and strongly accentuated rhythms is most pleasing.

Mr. Bounamici's performance was glowing with virtuoso blood. He has gained in his command of rhythm, in his poise, and also in quality of tone. His brilliance is not mere glitter; his force is not brute strength; his speed is no longer enthusiastic recklessness; his song is emotional, very human. He has learned the value of tonal contrasts and gradations. All in all, his performance was an extraordinary one, and he richly deserved the applause and the wreath.

Mozart's symphony has more than historical interest. While many pages of it are only decorative according to the old formula of the Italian theatre overture, there are passages that foretell the composer of "Figaro's Marriage" and the three great symphonies. The work was played with both the appropriate vivacity and grace. Wagner's overture brought the close to a concert that gave marked enjoyment and was not too long.

MUSICAL MATTERS

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Mozart—Symphony No. 34, in C major.
S. Rachmaninoff—Concerto for Pianoforte.
Soloist, Mr. Carlo Buonamici.
G. Faure—Suite: "Pelleas and Melisande."
First time.
Wagner—Overture to "The Flying Dutchman."

The Mozart symphony was played with much spirit, so that the finale seemed quite fiery even to ears accustomed to "1812" overtures and "Rides to Hades." Mozart himself probably never dreamed of so perfect a performance of any of his orchestral works. We were glad to note the cordial applause evoked by the work. The fact that brandy punch exists need not utterly abolish claret.

And the punch aforesaid came with the Rachmaninoff Concerto; a work spicy beyond belief, and brimful of technique and displays of virtuosity. It is a modern successor to Liszt's E-flat concerto, but is not as coherent even as its predecessor. It plunged into double octaves and fortissimo chords at once, and from the first measures it was evident that bravura was to rule the day. It had as many changes of tempo as a New England spring has changes of weather, yet amidst all the bizarrerrie there were those melodic touches which ("for this relief, much thanks!") the Russian composers have not yet learned to disdain. Even the cadenza was thematic and tuneful, and the first movement evoked great and deserved applause.

The second movement made but a vague impression upon the reviewer, but the finale, spite of its constantly shifting tempi and rhythms, its glittering patches and spasmodic changes, had some strong climaxes, its coda being particularly impressive.

Mr. Buonamici played the work very effectively, without any mannerisms, and with manly sincerity and power. He won enthusiastic applause and a laurel wreath. He is evidently advancing rapidly in his artistic work. He was recalled many times at the close of the performance. We may add to the sketch of his life that he was for a time a pupil of Prof. Carl Baermann.

The Faure suite made a very favorable impression. Here is a Gallic composer who is not infected with the passion for ugliness! He does not score to Brobdingnagian dimensions, and is content occasionally to use melody and to introduce beauty into his work. There is a pathetic sweetness in the Prelude which might picture the discovery of the weeping girl, by the spring in the forest, the timid one who cares not for the crown that she has dropped in the water, and there is some suggestion in it of the threatening sea which Maeterlinck has woven like a thread through all the fabric of this depressing play.

The second movement pictures that spinning scene, where Melisande is using the distaff in the dark room, with Pelleas by her side, where Yniold has the first presentiment of coming evil, and where his "little mother" sings him to sleep. Something of these things we could discern in the tender oboe melody with its tema ostinata of strings.

The death scene of the finale was of most delicate sadness, more beautiful than the sketchy play itself. Possibly the music was the stronger because the Maeterlinck work is such an outline, such a series of mere impressions.

Although one can praise the originality, the melodic charm and the brevity of the French work, it certainly paled somewhat before the "Flying Dutchman" overture. Wagner may insist upon his theories as much as he pleases, yet the "Flying Dutchman," which was composed before he mounted his hobby-horse, will live as long as "Tristan and Isolde." It contains all the essentials of what he afterwards elaborated with extreme detail; it has continuity; its poetry and music are perfectly wedded; it has dramatic power; freedom of modulation; and it has even a graphic use of "leitmotif."

If the reader cares to compare the guiding motive of the Dutchman with the chief figure of Beethoven's 9th symphony, first movement, he will find that the earlier composer made some good use of the same figure, but upside down. The overture was performed with splendid power and was, musically, the peak of the concert, even if some mountain heights were attained in each of the other works presented. It was a programme of sustained interest and of just the right length. The public should bear in mind that this week, on account of the festivities of Christmas eve, the concert precedes its own public rehearsal, and will take place on Thursday evening.

Louis C. Elson.

Boston Post, Dec 18

BUONAMICI'S SUCCESS AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

The programme of the eighth Symphony concert last evening was as follows:

Symphony C major, No. 34.....Mozart
Concerto for pianoforte, Op. 1.....Rachmaninoff
Suite "Pelleas and Melisande".....Faure
Overture, "Flying Dutchman".....Wagner

The chief event of the concert was the appearance of Carlo Buonamici, a resident pianist, who has become favorably known in the last few years. This was his second appearance at these concerts, and his choice of a concerto was a happy one. It was the opus 1 of Rachmaninoff, one of the younger school of Russian composers. Mr. Buonamici has grown rapidly yet consistently in his art and proved himself one of the best of the younger pianists resident in America. His technique is superb, his tone delightful and there was a repose of manner and maturity of artistic perception that made his interpretation at all times convincing and enjoyable. The pianist was enthusiastically applauded, recalled several times, and presented with two elaborate wreaths.

The concert this week will be on Thursday instead of Saturday evening, the rehearsal being on Friday as usual. Mr. Gilibert will be the soloist.

[42]

Globe, Dec 18

In other Scrap Book by mistake

Boston Globe, Dec 18 Boston Transcript, Dec. 19

Musical Courier, Dec 14 - Musical Leader, Dec. 15

The Boston Symphony.

Let us take it all back; Mr. Gericke proved in his conducting of the Brahms symphony that he is gifted with the finest instinct of directorial interpretation, and it is rare that one hears such a noble symphony dissected, analyzed and delineated as was done with Brahms' F major on Thursday night. Clear, lucid construction was illustrated, and all the inner tracings shown outlined, with an eye always to the sense of the work and its logic. He or she who could not then understand how and why it was that Brahms was pedestaled in Europe can never be made to understand it. It was absolute music to a degree of perfection.

That old Roman piano composition of Franz Liszt, written to display piano scintillations, "The Sermon of Saint Francis of Assisi," has been adapted by Mottl as a study for orchestration, and that is what it was. Berlioz's "King Lear" overture stands with the "Carnaval Romain" and the "Francs Juges" as a fine piece of writing. He also wrote early in his days, an overture, "Waverley," and a rewritten overture, "The Corsair," but these are not performed. The overture, "Rob Roy," is seldom heard. We are not interested just now in the Berlioz controversy. His aims may have been a mistaken art tendency. I am sure I do not know; but I do know that his contributions to the art of music have been invaluable aids to others—Richard Wagner not to be forgotten—and that we have not yet heard sufficient of Berlioz to enable us to decide—I mean sufficient properly produced. The "Damnation of Faust," very crudely performed, and the "Requiem," never done as it might be, are the limit here, and the orchestral works, such as the overtures, the "Symphonie Fantastique," the "Harold in Italy" and "Romeo and Juliette" and a few minor works are among our acquaintances. No Berlioz opera has ever been given here. Mottl arranged a Berlioz cycle in Carlsruhe a few years ago, which proved a great success. Von Bülow, when he had an opportunity, produced "Benvenuto Cellini" and introduced the "Carnaval Romain" overture. "Les Troyéns"—a grand opera in five acts, two parts, and "Beatrice and Benedict" are works which must be heard in order to acquire a judgment on Berlioz.

The Boston Symphony program of the Saturday afternoon concert consisted of Schumann's always graceful third symphony, E flat major (dubbed the "Rhenish"), Goldmark's overture, "Sappho," and Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice." There was singing by Miss Olive Fremstad, recitative and aria from Mozart's "Titus," and three Scotch songs by Beethoven, never sung here. Beethoven wrote fifty-seven Irish songs, twenty-six Welsh songs and twelve Scottish songs, some of them duets. Miss Fremstad's voice is in the throes of Wagner, and such a voice needs special preparation for concert work. She is doing good enough work in opera, and should not risk concert engagements. The inroads of ten or more years of the declamatory style in Wagner make any concert singing superfluous, and Miss Fremstad has sufficient to do in opera.

The engagement of Willy Hess as concertmaster is proving a most profitable investment, for the orchestra is back in the old form. A concertmaster to do effective work must give all of his time to his orchestral position and do it justice to it if his mind is speculating upon his private musical schemes. Such a division of mental energy made itself too perceptible in the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the past years, when the concertmaster had separate interests that attracted his attention. Now we can again look forward to the former skillful and concentrated effort with its fine string quartet, a predominant [illegible]

The Boston Symphony Concerts.

On Thursday night, there was another of those outbreaks at Carnegie Hall, which only occur in the presence of something great in the superlative degree. This means the programme and the soloist presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Gericke. It is not often that a soloist is accorded two places upon the programme, yet this was done upon this occasion to make the most of the services of Eugen Ysaye. The programme itself was a masterpiece in arrangement and selection, and never was the virtuosity of the orchestra more masterful, never were the effects immediately within the hands of its great conductor more superbly handled. The programme was opened with an absolutely flawless presentation of Brahms' Third Symphony, which won four or five recalls for Mr. Gericke. It is impossible to describe the flood of light which Mr. Gericke lets into the reading of this magnificent work and coming after such of Brahms' compositions as we heard during the previous week, it seemed wonderfully lucid, clear and flowing. Would that all those who insist that Brahms has no melody might have heard these beautiful themes woven in and out with deftness and skill that baffle description, let alone imitation. It was a veritable cyclone of applause that emanated from the enormous audience after the most supremely noble performance of the Bach Concerto in E major for violin that has been heard within a decade in this city. The fulness of Ysaye's powers was shown at their height, as he stood a soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. One might almost rejoice that such Bach playing is the unique thing that it is, as too great intimacy with it would rob us of the possibility of such keen enjoyment as that given by Ysaye on Thursday night. Columns might be written about his Bach, as also about the Bruch Second Concerto in D minor, but it would be useless, for the entire thing may be summed up in a few words with which to say that Ysaye has returned an artist in the highest possible sense and a violinist such as is only given to the world at very great intervals. It became impossible to count his recalls, but he certainly had more than twenty-five.

Other orchestral numbers upon this magnificent programme were Berlioz' "King Lear" overture and an orchestral arrangement by Mottl of Listz' "Sermon of St. Francis of Assisi to the Birds," originally written for piano.

On Friday evening the programme given in New York was repeated in Brooklyn at the Baptist Temple, with the exception of a substitution of a Beethoven Violin Concerto in place of the numbers played on this side of the bridge. M. Ysaye displayed the same qualities and the same splendid interpretation of Beethoven as he did in the numbers above mentioned and nothing more satisfying from the standpoint of artist and accompaniment can possibly be conceived. The audience was very large and very enthusiastic over orchestral numbers and soloist alike.

The concert of Saturday afternoon was another delight in the way of a programme, and Miss Olive Fremstad, who was the soloist upon this occasion, sang two numbers that were well in place upon the beautiful programme, notwithstanding the fact that vocal music rarely is. Miss Fremstad has a beautiful voice of dramatic quality, and in a recitative and rondo from Mozart's "Titus" she carried the audience into real ecstasies and followed this with an exceptionally artistic presentation of three Scotch songs by Beethoven. These were accompanied by piano with violin obligato by Mr. Hess and 'cello obligato by Mr. Krasselt.

The orchestral numbers included Schumann's Rhenish Symphony, No. 3, Goldmark's brilliantly colored overture to "Sapho" and Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice." It is absolutely needless to state that every number was given with those qualities which have made the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Mr. Gericke, second to no organization on either continent.

* * *

Portland Express, Wed., Dec. 21

PORTLAND HEARS FINEST CONCERT IN MANY YEARS

Audience of Extreme Cultivation at City Hall Attends Treat Offered by Boston's Great Orchestra.

The audience at City Hall last evening, while of excellent size, did not correspond to the worth of the attraction offered, probably owing to the numerous demands of the season. It is many years since we have had the Boston Symphony Orchestra with us and the treat offered was second to no musical attraction in the world. The enormous and perfectly trained orchestra, playing as one man, and the splendid program, were of immense interest to all who know, or wish to know, good music.

Led byMr. Gericke, the body of 65 musicians played in unequalled style a program which had its interest for both the musician and the layman. The audience was one of extreme culture, and gave appreciative attention and applause, filing away at 10 o'clock with appetite only whetted by the taste of good things. No encores were given which would have been appreciated.

During the progress of the second number, the attention was somewhat diverted by the pealing of the fire alarm bells and the subsequent working of the engines in the near vicinity, plainly audible above the orchestral strains. A delegation left the house to investigate and it was only with their return that the audience settled itself once more to the enjoymnt of the music and forgot the apprehensions aroused.

The program included, in fact commenced, with a Beethoven number after the usual custom in concerts of note. In this case, the Symphony No. 4 in B flat major was chosen, called the most "tenderly classical" of all the works of its kind. Beethoven is the "giant of music" conceded to be the master of musical construction and harmony. To appreciate Beethoven's works, perhaps requires more intimate knowledge and study than any other composer. The student of the pianoforte, drilled in his Beethoven, discovers continually new beauties which grow in force as the knowledge deepens, and, once making themselves felt, are a never ending delight. The symphony has four movements commencing with the allegro with its interesting themes, displayed in the orchestra's usual masterly style. All the accomplishments of the orchestra made themselves evident at the beginning and a wave of satisfaction swept over the audience as the first musical phrases proclaimed its high proficiency. Attack, shading, crescendo, rhythm and other attainments of technique were demonstrated to the highest degree. The violins playd as one man and, in the ensemble, there was the sureness, force and effect which are the achievements of many yars of musicianly training, proving the claim of the orchestra to be first in the world.

The second movement of the symphony, the adagio, excels in melodic expression, and tender emotion..

The scherzo, with its vigorous cadences and syncopated rhythms, and the gay finale, conclude the masterly work, which after its performance last evening called forth enthusiastic applause, prolonged as long as politeness would allow.

Madame Szumowska-Adamowski, the soloist of the evening, next appeared, was warmly welcomed and seated herself at the pianoforte for a Chopin number for which she is so well suited temperamentally and by birth.

The concerto has three movements, including the exquisite romance written by the master to convy the impression received when the eye rests on a beautiful moonlit spring night. It was given with all the mystical suggestiveness of the theme, the air for piano being accompanied by the muted violins, and was exceedingly impressive. The finale, an effective movement, concluded the composition.

Madame Szumowski has been heard here before, playing with the Adamowski Quartet at a concert in the Rossini course at which time she showed herself to be a finished musician, playing with convincing effect. In the concerto her facility of execution and the beauty of her musical expression impressed themselves on her hearers. Her tone is forceful and distinct and she easily carried the solo themes above the sweeping orchestral movemnt.

The Saint-Saens number, the allegretto movement from the Symphony number No. 1, which commenced the second half of the program, waz in Saint-Saens' characteristically fascinating style.

The concluding selection was Tschaikowsky's brilliant Italian Caprice, which was the popular number of the evening. Its themes portray in turn the fanfare of the Italian cavalry, a Neapolitan folk song, a folk song, a mournful gypsy melody and the wild, graceful Neapolitan dance, the last haunting the memory for long afterwards. The caprice is full of life and color and its spectacular features contrast admirably in a program made up largely of classical numbers.

Our friends, Milly Hess, Krasselt and others of the Hess Quartet, were recognized in the orchestra. Mr. Gericke controls his distinguished musicians with quiet force. His leadership is persuasive and magnetic.

Portland Press., Dec 21

THE THIRD ELLIS CONCERT.

Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major Op. 60 ..... Beethoven
I.—Adagio; Allegro vivace.
II.—Adagio.
III.—Allegro vivace.
Trio: Un poco meno allegro.
IV.—Finole: Allegro ma non troppo.
Concerto for Pianoforte in E minor, Op. 11 ..... Chopin
Allegro maestoso.
Romance: Larghetto.
Rondo: Vivace.
Allegretto from Symphony No. 1 ..... Saint-Saens
Italian Caprice, Op. 45. ..... Tschaikowsky
Soloist Mme. Szumowska; conductor, William Gericke.

Another great audience was in City hall Tuesday evening to hear the third of the Ellis concerts, the program being played by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Mr. Gericke, and by Madame Szumowska-Adamowski. Again we have to be grateful to the makers of the Ellis program for an evening of surprising pleasure. The performance in every way exceeded the reach of adequate criticism. Mr. Gericke's ample accomplishments were given the widest range, as will be seen by a glance at the program. From the angelic sweetness of Beethoven's Adagio to the characteristically barbaric splendor of Tschaikowsky's well-remembered Italian Caprice (performed here by the Boston orchestra in the autumn of 1899), as well as in the accompaniments for the pianiste, he had plenteous opportunity, which he did not waste a whit. The blend of individuality into one great unity of spirit, the boldness of attack, the facility of expression, the beautiful and musically quality of finish, the rich and flawless tone in which the multitude of voices are focussed into one—these things which have made the Boston orchestra famous throughout the continent could hardly have been afforded a more complete if brief exemplification. The Beethoven was wonderfully done. Its essentially pure and artless nature was never misrepresented in the reading of a single phrase. The allegretto from Saint-Saens' first symphony was played to the full of its graceful, fashionable beauty, and the Italian Caprice made a striking close to the concert. Mr. Gericke reads his Tschaikowsky with a notably strong flavor—as it ought, indeed, to be read. He gave a high native color to this inspiring work, and sent his audience home with the joyous, fervid dash which many who essay the rough and uncouth Russian have sought and lost.

So much for the orchestra—which had 30 strings and as many others. Madame Szmowska's Chopin is an art by itself. She played his colossal concerto with the strong and confident intelligence which makes her work worth while, and to a satisfying if no greater degree sought out and consistently presented the conception of the composer. She was recalled (as Mr. Gericke was), again and again, and should regard her performance as a triumph of no provincial sort; for her audience was critical and keen.

So everybody is awaiting the fourth concert with a ravenous appetite.

Portland Argus, Dec. 21

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Superb Performance by Boston Orchestra at City Hall.

In one of his delightful essays Charles Lamb suggests t hat there should be a form of grace to be used before reading Shakespeare or Milton, or other great masters of literature. After last night's experience at City Hall one feels that Charles Lamb's quaint conceit might be carried farther, to include a grace before hearing a Boston Symphony concert. For surely there can be no finer or more opulent musical fare for man's enjoyment and intellectual and artistic nourishment than a concert by this incomparable orchestra. It gives us the very best this country affords, and its best is equalled by few and excelled by none even in the old world, with its musical traditions and training that go back to the dawn of music. It is true that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the product of this old-world training, but it is a product brought and welded together here—forming a perfect whole, the credit and honor of which belongs to Boston, U. S. A.

The first concert for several years in this city by this famous orchestra under the lead of their superb conductor, Gericke, was an event of the highest musical importance, a fact recognized in the large and distinguished audience at last night's concert. It was the great musical event of the season, and the performance measured fully up to that unique standard. It was a performance above criticism. One had only to sit and listen and enjoy in perfect content. Music of whatever style and demand is so sanely, so intellectually considered and brought to such cool, crystal-clear demonstration that one gets to the very core of it. Air, ornament, figuration and mass effects, develop so lucidly that, with these superb academic effects, one does not miss the excesses of color and temperamental force that may distinguish others, but responds to such artistic measure as the leader permits, and markedly but carefully initiates. Expression is conveyed in the last perfection of finish and finesse, by nicely balanced methods that hold a mean of artistic beauty under all the varied movements of the greatest composition. The technic is simply inspiring. No musician can hear those strings or winds without being touched to finer issues, inspired to high ambitions of emulation. No music-lover can listen without joy in their perfection of tone, their control of dynamics, their beauty of combination, their innate sympathy. And the broadest climaxes as well as the most delicate shadings alike evidence a finish that is of the highest and a clarity of expression that is beyond praise.

The first and most important number was the Beethoven No.4 Symphony, in B-flat major, Op. 60, a work less known than several other of his nine symphonies. It is in four movements: an Allegro vivace with an Adagio introduction; Adagio; Allegro vivace and trio, and an Allegro ma non troppo for finale. Needless to say, the rendition was worthy of a Beethoven symphony, and that includes everything. Conductor and orchestra were in their proper element, and Beethoven's music was revealed in all its dignity, its classic beauty, its perfection of form and rich tonal color. In the allegro the theme is worked out with marvelous variety and lightness of effect, while the whispered dialogue between the first and second strings is the perfection of musical charm. The Adagio is, as Berlioz puts it, "so pure in form, the melodic expression is so angelic, and of such irresistible tenderness, that the prodigious art of the workmanship disappears completely." It is instinct with that combined dignity and ineffable beauty which are the distinguishing mark of Beethoven's adagios. It was played exquisitely, with an entrancing phrasing that revealed the whole beauty of the movement. The second allegro with its trio attachment in which the winds developed the melodic theme, is a marvel of technical skill, curiously effective in its broken-up rhythms, which, after running through a maze of cadences, are all brought together again to a broadly harmonious conclusion. The symphony closed in a vivacious finale with crashing chords by way of contrast, all played with a swing and vigor that were exhilarating.

The second number was Chopin's great concerto for pianoforte, in E minor, Op. 11 with orchestral accompaniment, the soloist being Mme. Szumowski. This E minor concerto is one of Chopin's masterpieces, and in it develops a more virile composer than the Chopin of the Nocturnes and the Preludes. Yet in the second movement, the Romance, Larghetto, one came under his poetic spell, so lovely is it, and of such ethereal texture. Mme. Szumowska's rendition of the concerto was authoritative, solid and admirable throughout. It was a rendition not only perfect in technique, but perfect in feeling and perfect in reproduction. Never, for a moment, did the audience lose the thread of the music. Never did they cease to hear the leading theme become flesh and blood before it was rendered. And the art was all assured, restrained, beautiful, combining masculine force with a velvet touch—all the work clear, clean-cut, of a distinction that compels conviction. Mme. Szumowska won rounds of applause by her splendid performance, to which she had to bow her acknowledgments again and again. And her distinguished and charming personality heightened the impression she created. Throughout the concerto the exquisite ochestral effects were in delightful evidence.

Then came the Allegretto from Saint-Saens Symphony No. 1, an early work important as an indication of the Frenchman's graceful style; a pretty melodic theme worked out with fetching ingenuity through all the instruments, and brought to a picturesque close by the first violin.

Last came the wonderful Tschaikowsky in his Italian Caprice, Op. 45, and the orchestra fairly revelled in a riot of tone color and quick-glancing sound. Opening with the brasses, the measure is taken up in broad phrase by the violins on the G strings, progressing in crescendo to a clashing climax on the cymbals—and then the fun begins! We are hurried into sunny Italy, where life is full and brimming over, and light-hearted gaiety rules supreme—at least in poetic ideals. Snatches of sunny melody, the shrill pipings of the piffari, the droning of the hurdy-gurdy, and all the bustle and stir, lightness and gaiety of Italy in holiday mood, are presented with a richness, an elan, a glowing picturesqueness that are fairly intoxicating! And this is Tschaikowsky in lighter vein! A magnificent ending to a glorious concert.

Portland Advertiser Dec. 21

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

At City hall last evening the Boston Symphony orchestra again delighted a Portland audience, after four or five years, during which we have not been favored by their presence. The coming of this organization was always regarded as the musical event of the season appealing to the most refined musical taste, and being a distinct education in itself. Last evening the program was entirely classical, indeed it never has been anything else, but on some occasions the selections have been taken from those works which have for years been loved both by educated musicians and by the common people as well, on account of their grandeur or sweetness. Last evening there was not a strain that the unmusical portion of the audience recognized. The closing Tschaikowsky caprice was by all means best liked by the major part of those present. It brought out some of the latent force of the orchestra, and there was music as well as strength in it. The Beethoven symphony, No. 4, was played with the characteristic gentle expression and accuracy of the orchestra, not a tone being out of place and not a single note being attached harshly. The interpretation was in every degree artistic, and there was a general feeling that all had heard a rare composition rarely played. The allegretto from Saint-Saen's symphony, No. 1, was of the same general character and nothing was left to be desired in its rendering.

Mme. Szumowska-Adamowski was the piano soloist of the evening and her playing was the event of the concert. She has a method that is at once cultured and forceful and with the accompaniment of the orchestra she gave the audience a treat that Portland does not often have. The Chopin concerto was admirably calculated to bring out the expression and execution which she has attained through many years of practice. The presence of Mr. Gericke, who has for so long been at the head of this organization, was interesting in itself. He is a conductor of the first ability and ranks as one of the foremost in the world. His individuality has been indelibly stamped on the orchestra and this is one of the secrets of its wide reputation.

LOCAL PEOPLE ATTEND

Concert Given by Boston Symphony Orchestra at Portland.

Biddeford and Saco were well represented in the audience at city hall, Portland, Tuesday evening, to hear the third of the Ellis concerts, the programme being played by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Mr. Gericke, and by Madame Szumowska-Adamowski. The performance in every way exceeded the reach of adequate criticism. Mr. Gericke's ample accomplishments were given the widest range. From the angelic sweetness of Beethoven's Adagio to the characteristically barbaric splendor of Tschaikowsky's well-remembered Italian Caprice (performed at Portland by the Boston orchestra in the autumn of 1899,) as well as in the accompaniments for the pianiste, he had plenteous opportunity, which he did not waste a whit. The blend of individuality into one great unity of spirit, the boldness of attack, the facility of expression, the beautiful and musically quality of finish, the rich and flawless tone in which the multitude of voices are focused into one—these things which have made the Boston orchestra famous throughout the continent could hardly have been afforded a more complete if brief exemplification.

Portland Sunday Times Dec. 25

One woman gives as a reason for desiring to live in Boston that she would thus be able to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra frequently and must be confessed that, after hearing the concert last Tuesday evening, her feelings can be understood. The audience, while not as large as the attraction deserved, was nevertheless one of extreme culture which gave appreciative attention and applause, filing away at 10 o'clock with appetite only whetted by the taste of good things. The enormous and perfectly trained orchestra, playing as one man and the splendid program, were of immense interest to all who know, or wish to know, good music. The three orchestral numbers were Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, the allegretto movement from Saint-Saen's First Symphony, and Tschaikowsky's brilliant and fascinating Italian caprice. For orchestra and piano there was a Chopin concerto with Madame Szumowska-Adamowski at the piano. Madame Szumowski has been heard here before, playing with the Adamowski Quartet at a concert in the Rossini course at which time she showed herself to be a finished musician, playing with convincing effect. In the concerto her facility of execution and the beauty of her musical expression impressed themselves on her hearers. Her tone is forceful and distinct and she easily carried the solo themes above the sweeping orchestral movement. Madame Szumowska, who is a rarely attractive woman, was beautifuly gowned in white brocaded silk with angel sleeves of spangled lace falling from the shoulders.

Boston Symphony Orchestra In Portland, Tuesday

Lewiston Journal 1904.

PORTLAND, Me., Dec. 21 (Special).—The audience at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in this city last evening, was large and very enthusiastic. The Beethoven Symphony No. 4 in E flat was probably almost a novelty to the larger part of the audience as the Second, Fifth, Eighth and Ninth are the ones more generally played. If Mr. Gericke's reading of the symphony was somewhat conservative, he certainly had his orchestra under great control and made his points and nuances with delightful ease and certainty. The influence of the concert-master, Willy Hess, was very evident in the attack, the phrasing and finish of the first violins. At the close of the symphony Mr. Gericke was recalled five times and gracefully bowed his acknowledgements.

Mme. Szumowska was the soloist of the evening and gave a delightful rendition of Chopin's E Minor Concerto. One could see the influence of her training under Paderewski and her conception of the concerto evidently followed along the lines of this great master. While her tonal power could not be expected to equal that of this great master, her touch was very beautiful. In the second movement, the "Romance" was exquisite and Gericke kept the muted strings in the background with such masterly art, that the effect was unusually impressive. It was during this movement that the fire alarm called engines into the immediate vicinity of City Hall. The noise of whirring wheels and the droning sub-bass from the fire engine might have dampened the ardor of a less enthusiastic audience and inferior performers; but both pianist and orchestra maintained their artistic pose and serenity and the fires of musical enthusiasm ran high in spite of the showers of water that descended upon adjacent buildings. At the close of the concerto, the artist was recalled a number of times.

The next number, the "Allegretto" from Saint-Saens Symphony [illegible] showed this French composer's [illegible] toward the style of Handel [illegible] earlier masters, and its quaintness [illegible] just the requisite variety in a [illegible] which included a symphony and [illegible] certo.

Tschaikowsky's Italian "Caprice" [illegible] the last number on the program [illegible] brought the entertainment to a [illegible] close. The sweep of the grand [illegible] tive reminds one strongly of [illegible] matic introduction to his second [illegible] rhapsody. After this there is a [illegible] cornucopia of brilliant Italian [illegible] folk songs which were played [illegible] verve and dash that entire[illegible] the audience. The delighted [illegible] carried away with them as [illegible] memorable evening there [illegible] and inspiring strains of [illegible] sian master whose compositions [illegible] to leave an impression of melancholy [illegible] the hearer.

This is the first time for many years that the Boston orchestra have been East and we wish that the next time they come, Lewiston and Auburn may be included in their itinerary. Only a limited number went down from Lewiston and Auburn and while the audience was large it is a pity that the hall should not have been crowded to hear one of the world's greatest orchestras—perhaps, the greatest.

This was the program:
Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major Op. [illegible]
Beethoven
I—Adagio; Allegro vivace
II—Adagio
III—Allegro vivace
Trio—Un poco meno allegro.
IV—Finole—Allegro ma non troppo [illegible] to for Pianoforte in E minor, Op. [illegible]
Chopin
Allegro maestoso.
Romance—Larghetto
Rondo—Vivace
Allegretto from Symphony No. 1—[illegible]
Saens
Italian Caprice, Op. 45—Tschaikowsky
Soloist Mme. Szumowska;
William Gericke.

[45]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Worcester

Telegram, Dec. 30

PROGRAM BY MUSICIANS.

Boston Symphony Orchestra and Joseffy Play at Mechanics Hall.

Mechanics hall was the scene, last night, of one of the most brilliant concerts ever given in Worcester. The performers were the members of the Boston symphony orchestra, with Wilhelm Gericke conductor, and Rafael Joseffy pianist. The mere mention of those names is the best assurance that the Worcester people who bought tickets received the full value for their money.

It was a fashionable audience, much of the kind which attends the music festival, the only distinction being that it was not up to festival attendance, there being about 1200 people present. It was considered a flattering audience, so flattering that the managers of the Boston symphony orchestra stated last night that they will, in all probability, come again to Worcester next winter, and give two concerts.

The orchestra and Joseffy received a magnificent ovation, and they deserved it. Worcester music lovers know when they are listening to the top notch article in music, and they are never slow to show appreciation. They did last night, and Conductor Gericke and Joseffy were kept busy acknowledging the marks of appreciation for their work.

The program presented was of a high class, and it was played as it should be, which is about the highest compliment that can be paid to the orchestra.

This was the program, which took nearly two hours in performance:—

Overture to the opera "Oberon," Weber; concerto for piano, No. 2, in B flat major, op. 83, allegro non troppo, allegro appassionato, andante and allegretto grazioso, Brahms; legend, "The sermon of St. Francis of Assisi to the birds," by Liszt-Mottl, and symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the new world," op. 95, adagio, allegro molto, largo, scherzo and allegro con fuoco.

When it has been stated that the Boston symphony orchestra played, and that its selections were those indicated, it will be apparent to everyone that the entertainment was a brilliant interpretation of equally brilliant music, music that has charmed thousands on both sides of the Atlantic for scores of years, and that is as fresh and vivid and melodious, as full of life when played by the Boston symphony orchestra as when the pen of the composer first wrote the score.

The orchestra has earned the reputation it enjoys of being one of the best orchestras in the United States. It is a stupendous task to weld together into one harmonious whole 80 or 30 men, and bring forth from such a combination of players the music of last night. There is a beauty and perfection about the work of the men that is rarely excelled. Therefore it is that the audience simply listened, and absorbed the delightful music.

Conductor Gericke gently led the listeners through all the rythmic mazes of Weber's "Oberon" overture.

The second number on the program was the Brahms concertto by Joseffy. This great pianist is no stranger to Worcester concertgoers, although it is four or five years since his last visit. He was warmly welcomed, as he made his way through the orchestra to the piano. He has a delicate touch and his technic is exquisite.

His playing was a revelation, and for all the beautiful music, for all the fine touch and pathos, the life, the rythm, he carried away with him to Boston the unstinted thanks of an appreciative audience. When his work was done, he bowed and bowed again, but he declined to respond. With such a superb program of music to digest, it seems absurd to make any distinction, because all the numbers were played with rare taste, and the musicianly capacity possessed by such an orchestra. It is simply a matter of taste as to which of the artistic numbers was enjoyed the most. Among them was that beautiful little gem, "Sermon to the birds," and which many would pick out for its beautiful touches of bird song, as among the most enjoyable.

Then came the last number, like a whiff of heather from Scotland, part of which has been called the Scotch snap, and then the second theme in the first movement, of which, it has been said, was derived from the familiar melody, "Swing low, sweet chariot," music that possesses a charm incomparably sweet and delightful.

The second movement is said to attempt the suggestion of the mood in the story of Hiawatha's wooing, as told by Longfellow. It seems one of the most beautiful conceptions of the composer, and, like all the others, was played with rare skill.

Frederic R. Comee, assistant manager of the orchestra, accompanied it to Worcester last night. One day each month the orchestra plays in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. Next week it plays in Providence.

Gazette, Dec. 30

THE SYMYHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERT

Gazette 12/30/04

A Musical Treat Given in Mechanics Hall.

The finest concert of instrumental music that has been heard in Worcester for some time was given in Mechanics hall last night. The complete Boston Symphony orchestra, with Wilhelm Gericke as cnductor and Rafael Joseffy as piano soloist, played to an audience that nearly filled the hall. The complete orchestra has not been heard in Worcester for a long time, and the concert proved to be one of the finest of the C. A. Ellis course.

The program opened with the overture to the opera of "Oberon," a romantic opera in three acts by Carl Maria von Weber. After a little march there is a short dreamy passage for strings, ending in the violas, then an orchestral crashing chord, and the main body of the overture begins.

Joseffy was the artist of the second number, Brahms' Concerto for pianoforte No. 2 in B-flat major, op. 83. If ever a pianist was appreciated and applauded it was Joseffy last night as he entered. His movement and technique were wonderful and he played with a grace and ease that charmed his audience. The selection comprised four movements. The first, allegro non troppo, opens with a slow introduction and is worked out in three themes, showing the skill of the director and orchestra in bringing out every minute detail. The second movement, allegro appassionato in D major, was regular in form and development. The third movement, andante in B-flat major, possesses rhythm and harmony that could not fail to appeal to the most untrained ear. The fourth, allegretto grazioso in B-flat major, is in a free rondo form, with three distinct and contrasted themes, the first bright and sprightly by the piano, the second very Hungarian in character and the third light and joyful. The score is dedicated to Edward Marxson, Brahms' teacher.

The legend, "The Sermon to the Birds by Saint Francis of Assisi," by Franz Liszt, transcribed for orchestra by Felix Mottl, was considered by many to be the most attractive of the whole program. The piece begins with the horn, the theme is continued with the 'cello and then the full orchestra enters as Liszt warms up to his subject. There are a fineness and delicacy that seem to reveal the whole of the tender and passionate soul of St Francis. The flutes and stringed instruments figure largely in the movement, giving the mystical and gentle touch.

Dvorak's symphony in E minor, "From the New World," op. 95, with four movements, closed the program. Dvorak realized what many of his critics forgot, that music was characteristic of a people which gives the greatest amount of pleasure to the largest number of people, and in this way he has written his folk songs. The first theme, adagio, allegro molto, is characterized by the Scotch snap that distinguishes the first theme. The second theme was suggested to Dvorak by the wooing of Hiawatha by Longfellow. There are several melodies in the movement, but while the sentiments are diverse there is no abruptness in contrast. The scherzo opens with a theme which appears in imitation and there is much display given to the wind instruments. The score ends with the allegro con fuoco, in E minor. The first shows a contrast between the horns and trumpets and the staccato of the full orchestra.

The whole program was attractive and there were none of those drags which often characterize instrumental music.

Telegram, Dec 24

Mechanics Hall.
Thursday, Dec. 29, at 8.
THIRD GRAND CONCERT
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Wilhelm Gericke, Conductor.
The Greatest Organization in the World, Maintained for Concert Performances.
Rafael Joseffy,
Pianist.
Tickets at Leland's, 446 Main Street. $1.00 and $1.50.

WITH JOSEFFY AS PIANIST.

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Appear in Mechanics Hall.

Thursday night the Boston symphony orchestra, with Joseffy as piano soloist, will appear in Mechanics hall in a concert program. The opening number will be Weber's "Oberon" overture, by the full orchestra. Then follows the Brahm's concerto number 2, for pianoforte and orchestra, in which Joseffy will play the piano part. The third number is a legend by Franz Liszt, "The sermon of St. Francis of Assisi to the birds," composed for the pianoforte and transcribed for orchestra by Felix Mottl. The symphony to be performed is the Dvorak symphony number 5, in E minor, "From the new world," the greatest of all Dvorak's orchestral works, in which the composer gives musical voice to certain impressions he received in the United States. It is full of delightful melodies, suggestive of the negro songs of southern plantations, Hiawatha's wooing, and other pleasant musical and poetic memories.

Post, Dec. 22

Mechanics Hall
Thursday, Dec. 29, at 8.
Third Grand Concert
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Wilhelm Gericke, Conductor.
The Greatest Organization in the World, Maintained for Concert Performances.
Rafael Joseffy,
Pianist.
Tickets at Leland's, 446 Main Street, $1.00 and $1.50.

The Boston symphony orchestra, one of the delights of musical New England, with the great Joseffy as piano soloist, will be the dual attraction of the next concert in the C. A. Ellis course in Mechanics hall, Thursday evening, Dec. 29.

This organization of musicians, still under the conductorship of Wilhelm Gericke, with its personel practically unchanged from year to year, but augmented this season by a new and great concert master in the person of Prof. Willy Hess, not only maintains its standard of excellence in performance, which long ago established its rank as the foremost orchestral organization in America, if not in the world, but from all accounts is playing this year with greater finish and brilliancy than ever. Rafael Joseffy, one of the world's greatest pianists, whose playing has been the delight and astonishment of audiences in the cities of both the new and old worlds, is now seldom heard in public as he prefers to spend his time in teaching and composition in the seclusion of his Tarrytown, N. Y., home.

Tickets for the concert were placed on sale this morning at Leland's, 446 Main street.

* * *

Friday, Dec. 30

Most of the audience in Mechanics hall, last night, at the exceptionally fine concert by the Boston symphony orchestra and Rafael Joseffy, pianist, was disappointed because Joseffy did not play an encore. He responded to the clamor for more by bowing. The renowned artist was given unqualified expression of approval by the fashionable audience of 1200 persons after his playing of the Brahmns' concerto, No. 2, in B flat major Op. 83. Its every movement was appreciated. But Joseffy, who is growing more and more averse to public appearances, did not satisfy his listeners by giving them a wee bit more, in another style.

The orchestra, under the direction of the famous Gericke, whose reputation crosses the seas, gave a concert of unsurpassed excellence throughout. The program required about two hours, but the audience was not at all impatient, enjoying every minute.

* * *

Gazette, Thurs. Dec 22

Mechanics Hall
THURSDAY, Dec. 29, at 8
THIRD GRAND CONCERT.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Wilhelm Gericke, Conductor.
The Greatest Organization in the World maintained for Concert Performances.
Rafael JOSEFFY
Pianist.
Tickets at Leland's, 446 Main st.
$1.00 and $1.50.

The next concert in the C. A. Ellis course in Mechanics Hall will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the famous pianist, Joseffy, as soloist, Thursday evening, Dec 29. The Boston band of musicians, still under the masterly hand of Conductor Wilhelm Gericke, and with a new concertmeister in the person of Prof Willy Hess, who has already made good in reputation as a violin soloist and leader, will be heartily welcomed. Not alone in the city of its home, but in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Baltimore, to which musical centres it makes monthly pilgrimages, both press and public are united in asserting that the superb organization was never in better shape and its performances never more finished, brilliant and inspiring than this season.

Rafael Joseffy, one of the greatest of living pianists, although too rarely heard here, for in fact he is not often enticed from his retirement in his pleasant home in the Pocantico hills at Tarrytown, N. Y., is yet so well known that the mere mention of his name is sufficient to refresh the memory of the musical public as to his overshadowing merits as an artist.

Joseffy is a Hungarian, a piano pupil of Moscheles and Taussig, who after becoming celebrated as a virtuoso in European cities came to the United States and played with such great success that he has since made America his home, teaching in New York and living in Tarrytown. His appearances in public are rare, but his playing has lost nothing of the artistic finish and virtuosity which delighted his earlier audiences and which still sets him apart from and above most other great pianists of the day.

Friday, Dec. 30

In spite of the large number of events which were going on in society last night, Mechanics hall was well filled to hear one of the musical attractions of the season, the Boston Symphony concert. It can be judged from the size of the audience and their applause that Worcester society, as well as patrons of music, anticipated and appreciated last night's concert.

A number of people attended the Potter wedding, which took place at 8 o'clock, and went to the concert afterward. Many from the concert attended the dance given by Mrs R. Frederick Taylor in Terpsichorean hall. The light gowns of the women made a very attractive sight from the gallery. Several parties from out of town as well as those from Worcester were present at the concert.

Prominent in the audience were: Mrs F. B. Knowles, Mrs Homer Gage, C. Henry Hutchins, Arthur Hutchins, Helen Hutchins, Mr and Mrs Charles A. Merrill, Matthew J. Whittall, Miss Whittall, Mrs John L. Brand, Miss Brand, Mr and Mrs Henry F. Harris, the Misses Harris, Edith Richardson, Ruth Curtis, Mr and Mrs Chandler Bullock, Mr and Mrs C. C. Baldwin, Mr and Mrs Charles H. Banister, Mr and Mrs George Bassett, Mr and Mrs H. Ward Bates, Stephen Salisbury, Mr and Mrs Charles H. Brownell, Miss Everett, Miss Marion Whitin, Mr and Mrs Chas. Rice, Miss Gertrude Stone, Mr and Mrs Arthur C. Comins, Mr and Mrs Charles Flint, Dr and Mrs David Harrower, Mrs Luther M. Lovell, Mr and Mrs Frank Leland, Miss Leland, Mrs A. H. Mirick, Florence Mirick, Mr and Mrs Paul B. Morgan, Mr and Mrs A. C. Munroe, Mrs Frank Sessions, Miss Sessions, Mrs J. K. Warren, Mrs J. M. Travers, Oscar Messler, H. B. Pierce, Augusta F. Taft of Grafton, Miss H. E. Dougherty of Southbridge, Mr and Mrs G. W. Taylor of Southbridge, F. H. Lowell of Mendon, F. J. Corbin of Spencer, Mrs C. H. Prentice, Miss Mary Tucker, E. P. Morton, James Green, Frank Drew, F. A. Drury, Mrs A. M. Sawyer, Mrs E. F. Bisco, Miss Bisco, Mr and Mrs C. L. Clark, Miss Georgia Bacon, Mr and Mrs J. H. Howell, P. L. Walker of Milford, Mr and Mrs G. L. Brownell, F. H. Hamblin, F. L. Willis, Mrs Bayard Thayer of Lancaster, W. H. Wilder of Gardner, G. R. Hoskins of Gardner, Mr and Mrs W. W. Windle of Millbury, A. E. Wilson of Clinton, Miss M. D. Thurston of Leicester, Mr and Mrs G. A. Neudeck of Millbury, C. H. Wood of Leominster, J. S. R. Coy, Miss Vera Johnson of Oakdale, L. E. Sibley of Southbridge, B. A. Barber, Miss G. E. Clark of Westboro.

In the large and fashionable audience which attended the Boston Symphony orchestra concert last evening there was a party of 30 people from Clinton, 13 from Princeton, 15 from Gardner, 12 from Southbridge, 12 from Whitinsville, and large parties from Millbury, Upton, Grafton, Spencer and Westboro. This shows the large amount of interest out of town people have in the orchestral concerts.

[46]

Providence Journal January 4

Springfield ?

Springfield ?

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Pleasing Programme and Fine Performance by Boston Orchestra.

The second of this season's series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given in Infantry Hall last night. As has happened on more than one occasion this winter when important musical events were scheduled, the weather was of a sort to discourage attendance. Still, while the sale of single admissions at the ticket office was no doubt diminished on this account, it is not likely that many season ticket holders stayed away. There were many empty seats, and the indication seems plain that the spurt of last year in the matter of attendance cannot be maintained. This is not agreeable news, but simply an unpleasant fact that the guarantors and others interested in the continuance of these concerts will have to face.

The programme was an interesting and well-contrasted one, and the performance was thoroughly artistic and enjoyable. The order of the numbers was as follows:

Symphony No. 3, in F-major, Op. 90...Brahms
Aria, "Una Voce," from "The Barber of Seville".....Rossini
Mme. Lillian Blauvelt.
Serenade for String Orchestra, No. 3, in D-minor, Op. 69.....Volkmann
(Mr. Josef Keller, solo violoncello)
SONGS WITH PIANOFORTE.
(a) "O wusst ich doch".....Brahms
(b) "Auf Flugeln des Gesanges"...Mendelssohn
(c) "Will Niemand singen".....Hildach
Mme. Blauvelt.
Italian Caprice, Op. 45.....Tschaikowsky

Brahms's symphony in F, the chief instrumental number of the programme, is admittedly his greatest work in the symphonic form. It is genuinely melodious and graceful, compact in structure, powerful in climax.

Never was Brahms happier in his choice of orchestral tints, and nowhere does he show less of the rhythmical complexity and the angular severity of form which have bred dislike of his compositions in the minds of many listeners. By common consent, it is a masterpiece. Mr. Gericke's reading was sympathetic and appreciative, while the performance by his players was technically perfect and responsive to the subtlest shades of meaning.

The other instrumental numbers were broadly contrasted with each other and with the symphony as well. The serenade for string orchestra by Volkmann, with its charming obligato for the solo violoncello, is not a composition of great depth nor, indeed, does it make any pretensions to be anything but a smooth and sweet bit of harmony.

The solo part was taken by Mr. Josef Keller on account of the absence of Mr. Krasselt, the leading 'cellist of the orchestra. It is but fair to say that Mr. Keller played most admirably, with really beautiful tone and a smoothness and certainty of technic that left nothing to be desired.

Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice," which closed the programme, is of interest as being one of the very few instances in which the great Russian composer dealt with themes other than those of his own country or his own invention. He appreciated the beauty of Italian melody, however, and in this composition succeeded admirably in clothing it with his own peculiar and effective orchestration. The work is deservedly a favorite on concert programmes.

The soloist of the evening was Mme. Lillian Blauvelt, who gave a remarkable display of coloratura in the florid air by Rossini, for which she received prolonged and enthusiastic applause. In the group of songs with piano she was less successful. Mme. Blauvelt has one of the purest of soprano voices, and her method of vocalization is an admirable illustration of what good singing should be.

The third and last concert of the symphony series will be given in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, Feb. 21.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Miss Aus der Ohe to Play With the Famous Organization at a Concert in Court Square Theater.

The promised concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra is to be given Tuesday evening, the 17th, at Court Square theater, and the music lovers of the city will do well to begin at once to help work up an audience which will suffice to pay expenses and insure a concert next year. Every one who is specially interested in music will go as a matter of course—the mere announcement of the date is sufficient. But there are hundreds of others who really enjoy a splendid concert, but are so little accustomed to thinking of musical affairs that they do not realize the opportunity till it is past. Last year a considerable number of people set themselves to call their friends' attention to the rare privilege afforded, and the result was a very large and well-pleased audience. A concert of this kind is very expensive indeed, and unless the theater is practically full there is a loss.

There will be general satisfaction that the soloist at this concert is to be Miss Adele Aus der Ohe, an admirable pianist, who has been a warm favorite in this city ever since she played at the first of the Hampden county May festivals, and has been heard here so seldom in recent years that her appearance will be all the more welcome. What she is to play is not stated, but it will no doubt be one of the great concertos for piano and orchestra in which this distinguished pupil of Liszt really appears to better advantage than in a piano recital. She has plenty of tone and solid and satisfactory technic, and plays with a refinement and poise not found in all of the Lisztians. Wilhelm Gericke will conduct, as last year, and the new concert master, Prof Willy Herr, who comes from London to take the place held for a single year by Mr Arbos, and for many years before that by Mr Kneisel. It is to be hoped that the program will give a chance to hear Prof Hess in solo, or in a snatch of obligato at the least. This is the 11th concert which the orchestra has given in this city, and its 2238th public performance.

THEATRICAL HAPPENINGS

Concert by Boston Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, assisted by Miss Adele Aus der Ohe as piano soloist, will give a concert in this city on the evening of Tuesday, Jan. 17, at the Court Square theater, which may easily be considered as one of the great musical events of the season. The generous support given the concerts of this organization of instrumentalists last season and the year before are ample evidence that Springfield people are appreciative lovers of the best and highest there is in music, for there is nothing better than the performances of Conductor Wilhelm Gericke's superb orchestra. The concert announced will be the 11th which the orchestra has given in this city, and the 2238th public performance of the organization. Miss Aus der Ohe will lend added distinction to the coming entertainment, as she is recognized in America and Europe as one of the most finished, authoritative and brilliant of the international pianists of the present day.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Its Concert at the Academy of Music Last Evening With Joseffy as Soloist

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, gave the third concert for the season in its Monday evening series at the Academy of Music last night, when the program comprised the "Genoveva" overture of Schumann, the Concerto for the pianoforte in B flat major of Brahms and the B flat major symphony of Vincent D'Indy. It will be remembered that the latter work was recently produced for the first time in the United States by the Philadelphia Orchestra and the hope was then expressed that it might soon be repeated, as owing to the extreme complexity and unusual character of the score it could not be adequately appreciated at a first or single hearing. Its presentation on last night's program was, therefore, welcome.

It was played with all the beauty of tone, brilliancy of execution, nicety of finish and lucidity of statement which are so characteristic of and inseparable from the performances of the Boston organization, and it was doubtless listened to with a great deal of interest and pleasure by the large and intelligently appreciative audience in attendance. Yet, it can hardly be said that the original impression was materially modified by the repetition. The symphony contains much that is striking and significant and it displays an intimate knowledge and an assured command of the resources of the modern orchestra. Many of the effects which it attains are singularly eloquent and poetic and whatever else it may be it is far removed from the commonplace. Yet, the idea one still receives is that it is lacking in unity of design and coherence of structure. It seems that more had been undertaken than has been accomplished and for these reasons it leaves the hearer unsatisfied and but little moved.

The Brahms concerto is in a different category. It is not generally well known and it needs to be well known to be properly understood, but there is nothing vague or diffuse or impracticable about it. It is compact, symmetrical, harmonious and specific and there is no mistaking the message which it is intended to convey. It was admirably played, with discretion and sincerity and with a fine combination of delicacy and strength by Mr. Rafael Joseffy, an artist whose appearances are all too infrequent and whose distinguished powers have suffered no impairment with the passage of the years. He was much and deservedly applauded. The orchestra will be heard again to-morrow evening, when the symphony will be Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique," and when Miss Muriel Foster, the English contralto, will sing Penelope's Lament and Prayer from Bruchs' "Odysseus" and three songs from Elgar's "Sea Pictures" cycle. Other orchestral numbers will be Mendelssohn's "Camacho's Wedding" and the "Flying Dutchman" overture.

Herald
Nov. 1, 1905

TENTH SYMPHONY CONCERT GIVEN

Debussy's Prelude to Stephane Mallarme's "Afternoon of a Faun" Played for First Time by the Famous Orchestra.

JOSEFFY NOT SEEN IN HIS BEST FORM

In Brahms' Concerto He Showed a Lack of Breadth, Color and Reserve Force—First Movement Monotonous and Spineless.

The programme of the 10th Symphony concert, Mr. Gericke conductor, given last night in Symphony Hall, was as follows:

Overture to "Genoveva".....Schumann
Piano concerto in B-flat major, No. 2..Brahms
(Mr. Joseffy, pianist.)
Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"
(Eclogue by S. Mallarme).....Debussy
(First time at these concerts.)
Symphony in C minor, No. 5.....Beethoven

The name of Claude Debussy appeared last night for the first time on a Symphony programme, yet this prelude to Mallarme's poem and Debussy's "Nocturnes" have been played here in other concerts, and the performance of the prelude last evening was the third in this city. The first was at a subscription concert of the Orchestral Club in 1902; the second was at a Chickering production concert early in 1904.

Mallarme's poem is cryptic even to Frenchmen who are in sympathy with the symbolists. His aim, as Mr. Gosse puts it, was "to use words in such harmonious combinations as will suggest to the reader a mood or a condition ... is not mentioned in the text, but nevertheless paramount in the poet's mind at the moment of composition." The words serve then as a help to mind reading. The faun wakens and tries to recall his delightful experience of the previous afternoon. Did — gracious nymphs visit him? The experience is now unsubstantial, vague. Perhaps he dreamed it all. Then in a dream he can again know joy. A didactic poet of a former century would have entitled these verses "Pleasures of Memory," or "Pleasures of Hope," or "Pleasures of Anticipation."

Debussy has been finely characterized by his colleague, Bruneau, as the "very exceptional, very singular, very solitary Claude Debussy." He is attracted by that which is extraordinary, out of the way, and his hatred of the commonplace is malignant. He is by no means a poseur, by no means a precieux. He is as sincere in his use of peculiar scales, harmonies, progressions, as was Mendelssohn in his genteel formulas of the highest orthodoxy. He hears and feels and expresses music in his own way. He shuns the harmonically agreeing crowd as he does the mob of loungers on the boulevard. Never did a composer shut himself up more resolutely in his ivory tower than Debussy dreaming musical dreams of Baudelaire, Verlaine, Maeterlinck, or Dante Gabriel Rossetti.

This prelude was composed in 1892, and it was his first purely orchestral work. The opening and unaccompanied flute melody, the chief theme of the prelude, reminds one a little of the chant of the priestess in "Aida." Perhaps one of the nymphs, having heard it in Egypt, but not wholly sure of the intervals, sang it to the faun, who tried in turn to pipe it. There is a middle section of the work that has a passing flavor of Massenet, but as a whole the music is of singular originality, both in thought and in expression. The very fact that Debussy entitled the composition a prelude shows that he did not attempt the vain task of supplying an interlinear musical translation of the poem. The music is frankly a prelude in a dream-pastoral manner to create a mood in sympathy with that of the poet. The success of such impressionistic music depends largely on the poetical or generally imaginative sensitiveness of the hearer. The hearer must meet the composer half way, and he must also be in sympathy with that which inspired the musical impression, whether it be a landscape, a dream, a drama or a lyric. To him that sees in music only a rigidly formulated science this prelude must be a stumbling block, as the operas of Monteverde, the music of Bach, many of the works of Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin, Wagner were to their respective and respectable and scholarly contemporaries.

This prelude is delicious music, not merely because it is out of the common in vein of thought and in the technic of expression, but because it is highly imaginative and ineffably beautiful. Mr. Gericke is to be thanked for bringing the prelude before such a large audience. There was much that was exquisite in the performance, but the ending was marred by the poor playing of the antique cymbals. In this instance the smaller the cymbals the harder the task, apparently, to the timid and unrhythmical players.

Mr. Joseffy's performance of Brahms' concerto was generally colorless, weak and ineffective. Only in the finale was the accomplished pianist heard to his advantage. When he played the same concerto here early in 1896 he gave a memorable performance. Last night the first movement, so far as the piano was concerned, was monotonous and spineless, the second movement, the allegro appassionato, was passionless. In these movements there was neither fire nor nobility, and there was little of the distinguishing Joseffy qualities that have formerly enabled the pianist to work his spell at once when the concerto was of a more than a purely lyric character. Nor was there in the andante any suggestion of reserve force that might add sentiment and delicacy. The pianist was more like a singer of old. It may be said that the concerto of Brahms is practically unplayable for orchestra and piano as a virtuoso concerto. This

The overture to "Genoveva" was played with both finesse and spirit. It brings to the mind the thought of how many operas now live only by their overtures. Schumann's opera was practically stillborn, and the heroine of Brabant is known on the lyric stage only as burlesqued by Offenbach and his librettist. But Offenbach had keen stage instincts, and Schumann was purely lyrical when in a trying dramatic situation.

It was, perhaps, time for a performance of Beethoven's symphony. Such great works should be performed only at stated intervals. As Hauptmann said in substance, dwellers near mountain peaks become too familiar with them. If "The Messiah" were not to be performed again for, say, six years, the work might seem a masterpiece to even those who find little in oratorio as a form of musical art.

SOME were surprised that Mr. Gericke should have chosen Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony for the joyous week before Christmas. This week is not of unalloyed joy to all men and women. There are those to whom the Christmas season brings sober thought, as it did to Alexander Smith, one of the most delightful of essayists, from whom Stevenson borrowed on more than one occasion both style and matter without even careless acknowledgment. Smith, sitting on Christmas night in his humble home in Dreamthorp, saw the apparitions of departed Christmas nights coming silently and without special invitation into his study of imagination. "Their numbers I do not care to count, for I know they are the numbers of my years. * * * The nostrils of my memory are assailed by a faint odor of plum pudding and burnt brandy. I hear a sound as of light music, a whisk of women's dresses whirled round in dance, a click as of glasses pledged by friends. Before one of these apparitions is a mound, as of a new-made grave, on which snow is lying. I know, I know! Drape thyself not in white like the others, but mourning stole of crape; and, instead of dance music, let there haunt around thee the service for the dead! * * * In this Christmas night all the other Christmas nights of my life live. How warm, breathing, full of myself is the year 1862, now almost gone! How bare, cheerless, unknown, the year 1863, about to come in! It stretches before me in imagination like some great, gaunt, untenanted ruin of a colosseum, in which no footstep falls, no voice is heard. * * * Looking forward into an empty year strikes one with a certain awe, because one finds therein no recognition. The years behind have a friendly aspect, and they are warmed by the fires we have kindled, and all the echoes are the echoes of our own voices."

There are few to whom Christmas is not closely associated with thoughts of the dying year and of the Christmases, perhaps only the Christmas that is in store for them. We doubt whether Mr. Gericke chose Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" as a memento mori; but its profound melancholy was by no means incongruous or impertinent. On such a holiday as Christmas the dead are most keenly missed. However gay the feasters, however pompous the feast, there is deep in the heart the remembrance of former feasts, of voices that have long been stilled. Every anniversary of life includes anniversaries of death. There are some who would cry out, with Haji Abdu, the poet imagined by Sir Richard Burton:

Cease, Man, to mourn, to weep, to wail; enjoy the shining hour of sun:
We dance along Death's icy brink, but is the dance less full of fun?

For such there is the defiant dance in Tschaikowsky's symphony, and they are fortunate if they do not hear in this same dance intruding Death, pounding his drum, gently, but what irony is in this gentleness!

Either Beethoven's "Eroica" or his Fifth Symphony is good music just before the entrance into the New Year, and either one would have been appropriate last night. Dead March or Mighty Song of Triumph, either may serve the hearer before the concert of the year from Saturday.

Sunday Globe, Jan. 1

MUSICAL MATTERS

Joseffy Soloist With Symphony Orchestra.

First Tucker Chamber Concert in Chickering Hall Today.

Other Recitals of the Week —Personal Gossip.

The program for the 10th symphony rehearsal and concert had for an orchestral novelty Debussy's prelude, "The Afternoon of a Faun," played for the first time at these concerts. The celebrated pianist, Rafael Joseffy, was the soloist in the Brahms B-flat major concerto. Schumann's overture to "Genoveva" and Beethoven's C minor symphony filled out the program. Brahms' concerto may not give unalloyed pleasure to all concert patrons, and much of the first and second parts may be rather precise in form and monotonous, but the third and fourth movements are so full of brilliant moments for the solo instrument, and are so light and cheery in character, that the earlier impressions are almost obliterated by the musical distinction of the last two divisions. Mr Joseffy's art is so sincere and scholarly, and his sympathy with the sentiment and spirit of Brahms is so manifest, that the compelling charm of his interpretation was warmly recognized and met with enthusiastic approval.

The simplicity of the first movement and the more fiery phrases of the second were each skilfully set forth by this master of the keyboard. The elaborate figurations and passages associated with the cello were given with beautiful effect and without any attempt at a display of technique to bring the piano into undue prominence. The brilliant and graceful finale was performed in a manner which brought out all the varied beauties of the work by his masterful mingling of tonal coloring, clearness of phrasing and delicacy of the cantabile measures. He was recalled many times at the close of his performance.

Schumann's "Genoveva" overture calls for no special notice, its interpretation being up to the usual standard of playing by the orchestra. The Debussy prelude, based upon the "supposed soliloquy of a faun resting from the sultry midday heat in the shade of a thick wood," is a peculiar musical inspiration, comprising four themes of a languorous nature, the principal one being five notes of the chromatic scale. It is clearly a fantastic bit of writing and not very interesting, except as an oddity. The somewhat disjointed work gave excellent opportunities to show the melodious tonality of the woodwinds in the orchestra, but aside from that invites no particular comment. The performance of the Beethoven symphony was superb, especially in the andante movement, and proves the most satisfactory number on the program.

Miss Muriel Foster, the soloist this week, will be heard in Schubert's "Die Allonacht" and other vocal selections. The orchestra will play Vincent d'Indy's second symphony for the first time at these concerts, waltzes by Brahms orchestrated by Mr Gericke, and the "Carneval" overture by Dvorak.

TRANSCRIPT MONDAY

MUSIC AND DRAMA

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

At the tenth symphony concert, given last Saturday evening, Mr. Rafael Joseffy was the soloist, and this was the programme:

Schumann: Overture to "Genoveva," Op. 81.
Brahms: Concerto for Pianoforte, in B-flat major, No. 2, Op. 3.
Debussy: Prelude to Stephanie Mallarmé's Ellogue, "The Afternoon of a Faun."
(First time at these concerts.)
Beethoven: Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67.

The concert gained distinction chiefly from the production of Debussy's prelude "The Afternoon of a Faun," which composition, incidentally, had been played twice before in Boston, once by the Orchestral Club, under Mr. Longy, and once by Mr. Lang, at a Chickering Production Concert. As everyone knows by this time, the piece undertakes to reproduce musically the impressions aroused by Mallarmé's extraordinary poem of the same name, a strange work in which probably few persons can discover so much as did Mr. Edmund Gosse. Since the meaning, if there be a meaning, of this singular poem is obscure, it will be quite as well, in listening to the Debussy prelude, to forget the poem and listen solely to the music as music. With each hearing it sounds more beautiful, with a queer, shimmering, glittering beauty all its own. It makes one dream—of what, it would be hard to tell. But a listener does dream, filled with a sense of being in the presence of something beautiful, where analysis of harmonic structure and of instrumentation would be out of place. One can merely listen and enjoy. It is only to be hoped that the experience may soon be offered concertgoers again, for it is not every day that one can hear music of such strange fascination so exquisitely played.

After the prelude, a composition that no musician would at present be likely to call "great," it was interesting to listen to a work that for nearly a century has held its own for grandeur unsurpassed, the C-minor symphony of Beethoven. At the risk of being rudely pounced upon for an impudent upstart, one listener is inclined to venture the opinion that this symphony, long held as lofty, is growing old much faster than the less pretentious symphonies of Beethoven, such as the seventh and the eighth. In all times, it would seem, the reputation of the fifth symphony has rested more on its deep emotional content than on its musical beauties, remarkable as these may be. But it is emotionalism in music that ages, while musical beauty never grows old. Be this as it may, in any case the superb performance of the first two movements of the symphony in C minor aroused on Saturday but perfunctory applause, whereas the first movement of the eighth symphony, at its last production, was greeted with enthusiasm. It is all very curious; what is to become of one's standards if Beethoven's fifth symphony will not stand the test of all time? Possibly Debussy's "Faun" prelude, which concerns itself chiefly with beauty and sonority, may live the longer.

A second feature of Saturday's concert was Mr. Joseffy's playing of the Brahms B-flat concerto, disappointing as it was to one who for years has been told of his glorious performance of the piece in 1896. Truth to tell, it is difficult to conceive of any pianist making an overwhelming effect with the Brahms concerto, a work that combines all the bad qualities his enemies attribute to Brahms. And yet Mr. Joseffy played very beautifully indeed, with wonderfully sweet tone, and with exquisite phrasing. The last two movements were far superior to the first two, and at the end Mr. Joseffy received much applause. The entire concert was one of splendid playing from the orchestra.

There will be a concert this coming Saturday evening, at which Miss Muriel Foster will sing. The progremme is to be as follows: Vincent d'Indy, Symphony No. 2, in B-flat major (first time); Schubert, Song, "Die Allmacht;" Brahms, Waltzes (orchestrated by W. Gericke); Songs with Orchestra; Dvorak, Overture, "Carneval."

R. R. G.

[4/8]

American, Friday, Dec. 23

...HONY OF ...CHAIKOWSKY FINELY GIVEN

...Symphony Orchestra Plays the ...at "Pathetic" Composi... In Masterly Style.

...ARLES GILIBERT SINGS

By Kent Perkins.

...ninth Symphony concert of this sea... ...evening last night in Symphony Hall, ... one that will remain long in the mem... ...of all who heard it. The programme, ... was one of unusually consistent and ... merit, was dominated and char... ...ized by the orchestra's magnificent ... ...ing of Tschaikowsky's Sixth Symphony, ...pathetic." ...

...This heroic work infused a tone of emo... ...and solemnity to the impres... ...but not by the evening as a whole, which ... disturbed by the other numbers, ...ewhat accentuated by two of them, the in... ...touching "Morte," by de Er... ...anger, and the highly emotional song of ... ...subade," from the opera, ...le," called "Aubade," from the opera, ...Le Roi d'Ys," by Lalo, both sung with ... ...remarkable feeling and beauty by Charles ... ...Gilibert.

...The concert began with the brightness ... ...and joyousness of Mendelssohn's overture ... ...to "Camacho's Wedding." The slight in... ...of lightness and gayety in this ... ...way to the chastened, classic and ... ...elevated joyousness of the aria, "With ... ...verdure clad the husbandman," from Haydn's ... ...'Seasons," was most artistically ... ...sung by Mr. Gilibert.

...When the audience was launched on the ... ...Tschaikowsky symphony's bottomless and ... ...limitless ocean of swelling, sweeping, un... ...settling emotions, now calm and ... ...solemn, now cyclonic and terrible, some... ...times quiet, but never completely at rest, ...and the sea of music submerged and overwhelmed with its billows ... ...of tone all other effects of the programme.

...numberless explanations and ... ...remarkable symphony have ... ...and doubtless each individ... ...it with intelligent attention ... ...will always give it his own ... ...This is one of the marks ... ...greatness. The composer himself ... ...what name to give it. He re... ..., and accepted "pathetic." ... ...of "personal sorrow," others ... ...despair," and still others of its ... ...Tschaikowsky himself spoke of it ... ...as a programme-symphony with a pro... ...gramme that should be a riddle to every... ...one," and added: "Let them break their ... ...heads over it."

Personally, I can hear no petty "despair" in it and can detect no unmanly "wailing." The composer said: "The programme is wholly subjective, and often during my wanderings, composing it in my mind, I have wept bitterly." Does not this give a key to the work? Tears, indeed, there are, in it, and many times copious ones, but bitter tears are not of necessity the product of despair. There are triumph and immense courage in it, as well as tears and a funeral march. When one contemplates life, with its struggles, its triumphs, its sorrows, its joys; when one looks upon his soul experiences in their relation to ambition, responsibility, time, death, eternity and infinity, there is abundant cause for deep, stirring, solemn, pathetic, majestic emotion, and, when a great and sensitive soul expresses such feelings through melody and harmony, a "pathetic" symphony is a most natural result. To label such emotions and name their origins as one puts specimens of rock in a museum case is a profitless and impossible task. Listen to Tschaikowsky as played practically with perfection by the Symphony Orchestra, and you will hear expressed the feelings of a great soul as it reviews its life on this earth and you ought to be lifted up and borne far beyond the frivolities, the littlenesses or the despair that tempt you downward. Any incidental tears will do you good.

A beautiful woman in the audience, whose whole appearance indicated that society made heavy demands upon her, was moved to tears last night by the finale to the symphony. Two well-known Jesuit priests of Boston College, a few seats back of her, took up their breviaries when the last sigh of the music ceased and read their prayers with quiet smiles. It would be interesting to know just why the same music impressed the beautiful society woman and the experienced priests so differently. If you can tell you can solve the riddle of the "Pathetic" symphony.

The concert closed with a fine performance by the orchestra of Van der Stucken's "Pax Triumphans," a broadly popular festival production, which had its first Boston production.

The next concert will take place on Saturday evening, Dec. 31, with Raphael Joseffy as the soloist.

Herald, Dec. 23

WAS SYMPHONY FOR DYING YEAR

At Ninth Concert of Symphony Orchestra Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" Was Played with a Grace Seldom Realized.

The ninth concert of the Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Gericke conductor, was given in Symphony Hall last evening. The programme was as follows:

Overture to "Camacho's Wedding." ..... Mendelssohn
Aria from "The Seasons" ..... Haydn
Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic" ..... Tschaikowsky
Songs with piano—
a. Aubade from "Le Roi d'Ys" ..... Lalo
b. "Morte" ..... d'Erlanger
Symphonic festival prologue, "Pax Triumphans" ..... Van der Stucken
(First time.)

Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony is music for a dying year. As a work of purely musical art some may, with good reason, prefer the fifth of the same composer, but the emotional contents of the fifth are not so poignant, so tear-compelling. Indeed, the modernity of emotion is so striking in the "Pathetic" that many prophesied the speedy disappearance of the symphony from the repertory, and some intimated knowingly that the composer would soon share the fate of Raff.

But the "Pathetic" symphony is full of the thought of death and the grave, and men and women in all ages have been curious about death. They have said with Branchiano in Webster's tragedy of Italian horror: "On pain of death let no man name death to me; it is a word infinitely terrible;" they have mourned with Moschus the fate of those "unheard of in hollow earth," who sleep "a right long and boundless slumber from which none are aroused;" they may ask with Job: "Man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" or they may speak bravely after the manner of Henley and Walt Whitman—it matters not; there are few who are not curious about the secret of secrets.

And it may be said that supreme funeral music, or music that is shot through and through with the thought of the tomb, does not easily disappear or in the passing of the centuries seem commonplace or out of fashion. The "Dead March" in "Saul" preserves the name of Handel's oratorio, although he used this march in other ways. The horn call of Charon still chills the blood of the hearer of "Alceste"; Mozart's "Don Giovanni" is a "gay opera," according to the title page of the autograph score, but the music of the Statue is tragic today and it will be tragic as long as there is death.

The basic emotion of the "Pathetic" is, then, universal and lasting.

Last night the performance of this familiar work, which is now if years old, deepened the impression made at previous hearings, although the performance was not always sustained at a highly emotional pitch. We should have liked, for instance, a less formal reading of the third movement, more animation and greater force—a force akin to frenzy—in the march. So, too, there might have been wildness in the lamentation, shuddering despair, agony unrelieved by glimmer of hope. On the other hand, there was much that was beautiful and impressive in the first movement, and the second movement was performed with a grace indicated by the composer but seldom realized in the concert hall.

Mr. Van der Stucken's "Pax Triumphans" was played here for the first time. It was composed for a special occasion, for a meeting of a Saengerbund in Brooklyn, and it was composed with a view to broad and popular effects. The scheme of its construction, its fresco character, reminds one of a Flemish out-of-door work, and the composition would undoubtedly be more effective in a great hall crowded with enthusiasts eager to join in the final choral than it was last night in Symphony Hall with the statues of ancient gods, goddesses and bards looking down in wonder. There are broad and stirring passages side by side with those that are trivial or commonplace; there are pages where episodes are too loosely connected; there is one passage that last night brought to mind the tales told of Jullien's "Fireman's Quadrille."

Mendelssohn's overture has been little played here. Although it now seems little more than a curtain-raiser, it is eminently Mendelssohnian with all the earmarks and mannerisms.

Mr. Gilibert made much of Haydn's air of the husbandman, but he was heard to still greater advantage in the song by the Baron d'Erlanger and in the charming aubade from Lalo's opera. His exquisite singing of the latter song will long be remembered. It was a triumph of vocal artistry.

Post, Dec. 23

NINTH SYMPHONY CONCERT

Owing to tomorrow being Christmas eve the symphony concert scheduled for that date was given last evening, and this was the programme:

Overture, "Camacho's Wedding," Op. 10... Mendelssohn
Aria from "The Seasons" ..... Haydn
Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic" ..... Tschaikowsky
Songs with pianoforte—
(a) D'Erlanger ..... "Morte"
(b) E. Lalo ..... Aubade from "Le Roi d'Ys"
Symphonic prologue, "Peace Triumphant" ... Vander Stucken
Charles Gilibert was the soloist.

Naturally the chief number of interest was the immortal symphony of Tschaikowsky, the "Pathetic." The programme book gives much information that is new concerning this work that will bear careful perusal.

Of the symphony itself one can never tire of hearing. In melodic interest there is no work of its class since Schubert that will compare with it, and in every other respect it is as modern as one could wish. The symphony is an undoubted masterpiece, an inspired work of genius, yet is so clear and unmistakable in its construction and general meaning that it interests and holds the mind of even the merest novice in music. What is there in modern music like this "swan song" of the greatest among Russian composers?

The performance was especially fine and was enthusiastically applauded. Mr. Gericke was several times recalled, and he deserved it.

The rest of the programme does not require extended comment. Mendelssohn's youthful overture has only a historical interest, and why it was substituted for Rubin Goldmark's effective overture, "Hiawatha," originally announced, is difficult to determine.

Mr. Vander Stucken's "Peace Triumphant" is a work chiefly distinguished by the large number of instruments employed, about all known to the modern orchestra. Here and there one notices a melodic phrase or two that is of interest, but the first impressions of the work as a whole are that it is weak musically, noisy and inartistic as a piece of orchestration. It might with truth be described as a boisterous yet trivial exponent of the "strenuous life" rather than as a portrayal of peace. The performance was most effective.

Mr. Gilbert was not effective in his first number from Hadyn's "Seasons," but in the two little songs with piano accompaniment he was inimitable. The singer was much applauded and recalled.

Rafael Joseffy, a welcome favorite, will be the soloist at the rehearsal and concert of next week, playing the second Brahm's piano concerto in B flat.

PUBLIC LEDGER

Philadelphia, Tuesday, January 10, 1905.

Music and Musicians

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, gave the third of this season's Monday evening concerts in the Academy of Music. Only three numbers, the "Genoveva" overture (a lovely romantic example of Schumann), the second symphony, in B flat, by Vincent d'Indy, and the second piano concerto of Brahms, the one in B flat major, were included in the programme.

Rafael Joseffy was the soloist. A very broad player would have made Brahms's B major piano concerto stand out, but as Joseffy played it last evening it took on more of the character of an obligato to the orchestra. His playing is too fine for a work of this kind.

* * *

The Press

THURSDAY, JANUARY 12, 1905.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Mr. Gericke Gives a Noble Reading of the Symphony Pathetique.

Program.

Tschaikowsky—Symphony Pathetique, No. 6 in B Minor, Opus 74
Bruch—Penelope's Recitative and Prayer, from "Odysseus"
Brahms—Waltzes, Orchestrated by W. Gericke
Elgar—"Sea Pictures." Three Songs from a Cycle of Five for Orchestra and Contralto, Opus 37
Dvorak—Overture, "Carneval."

The Boston Orchestra, under Mr. Gericke, again put one in its debt last evening by the exceeding tonal beauty and marvelous clarity of its interpretation of the famous "Pathetic Symphony." It was natural after the swing and swagger of the third movement that the audience should applaud delightedly and it was quite the courteous thing for Mr. Gericke to ask his men to stand up, but as finely as he and they read this movement it is just in this movement that one feels more disposed to quarrel with the conductor, since he is incorrigible.

Dash and vehemence he expresses, but he will not let the barbaric forces so potent in this movement loose. He, as was said of Henry James the other evening, deals restrainedly with great crises. Surely if our forefathers thought a small cannon might have been fired to effect in the first chordal crash of Haydn's surprise symphony, a cannon is easily in place in the climaxes of the third movement of the Pathetic. Lacking a cannon by the composer's direction, by all means let us have the clash of cymbals, but with a mailed hand, fiercely and abandoned.

Well, if the third movement was read in Mr. Gericke's well known way it can be said that his way in the other three seemed perfection. Rarely has the luxury of grief in melodic phrase and harmonic color as Tschaikowsky depicted it been so nobly expressed, and particularly in the last movement, the adagio lamentoso, the orchestra reached a height of virtuosity in expression as well as in tone that was the poetry of interpretation.

The orchestra was in splendid form also in the Brahms waltzes and the Dvorak number and in the accompaniments to the songs of the soloist, Miss Muriel Foster, who proved to be a young woman of pleasing presence, with a large voice and a broad dramatic style.

The Boston Symphony

The third of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's second series of concerts at the Academy of Music last evening was listened to by an audience considerably smaller than usual, but the lack in numbers did not affect the appreciation and applause, unless it was to make it more than ordinarily cordial. Mr. Gericke and his band have seldom played better here or been more enthusiastically received. This is particularly true of the Tschaikowsky symphony, "Pathetic," No. 6. In the first movement especially the musicians played as if inspired, and the third part, the beautiful march scherzo, was so well done hat Mr. Gericke was induced by the continued applause to have all his men rise and bow for themselves. A set of rhythmic waltzes by Brahms, delightfully played, and Dvorak's picturesque and somewhat barbaric "Carneval" overture, with its rich splashes of color, completed the orchestral part of a program which altogether proved rarely delightful. The soloist was Miss Muriel Foster, the English contralto, who made an excellent impression. Miss Foster, who is a woman of almost imposing presence, tall and finely proportioned, has a voice of great volume, of steady, full tone, and clear, though not particularly sympathetic, quality. She sang "Penelope's Recitative and Prayer," from Bruch's "Odysseus," with much dramatic effect, and "Sea Pictures," a group of three interesting songs by Edward Elgar.

THE PHILADELPHIA [illegible]

PHILADELPHIA, JANUARY 12, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Muriel Foster's Local Concert Debut.

Barring the presence of Muriel Foster, an English contralto new to this city, it cannot be said that novelty was the keynote of last evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music. On the other hand, the program consisted largely of music so well known and so justly admired as to make it quite the most delightful that Mr. Gericke's players have given us during the current season. It is further worthy of note that repellant atmosphere of "rigidity, rigidity, rigidity," as Kipling has it, seemed at no time in evidence. With the conductor in what may be termed a "pliable" mood and with orchestra voicing its testimony of this welcome temperamental change by playing with marked spontaneity and enthusiasm, it is scarcely to be wondered at that the entertainment was one of rare artistic worth. Could Mr. Gericke be persuaded to have done forever with that unfortunate air of didacticism that has so long been his severest handicap, the Boston Symphony Orchestra need fear few rivals in the entire world of music. The real potentiality of the organization is something fairly phenomenal.

Tschaikowsky's "Symphony Pathetique" began the evening. At the present date this composition may be said to eclipse in popularity the entire range of symphonic works old and new. Very seldom has a season passed by in this city without its production. The Boston players gave it in 1902, our own orchestra offered it three times last year and last evening's performance marks the third time for the winter of 1904-05. Naturally, comparisions as to the manner of its presentation are inevitable. Mr. Scheel's men interpret the work in fine style as a tone poem—a musical picture of life. In the hands of Mr. Gericke it is more of a symphony, and, notably in the secondary theme of the second movement, there is less insistence upon the poignancy of the tragedy that Tschaikowsky had in mind. With respect to the brilliant allegro, however, first honors must be accorded the New England orchestra. At the conclusion of this movement all the players at Mr. Gericke's command stood to acknowledge the applause of the audience. The demonstration was richly justified. The resplendent march, with its ever present background of tragedy, has never been more worthily rendered. The other purely instrumental numbers were Brahms' waltzes, orchestrated by Mr. Gericke, and Dvorak's splendid Carnival overture—both admirably given.

Miss Foster, the soloist, disclosed a personality of much vigor, and a kind of "grand" manner that accorded very well with Penelope's Recitative and Prayer from Bruch's "Odysseus," which was her opening number. Her voice is a fine, powerful organ, rich, deep and evidently one of wide range. On her second appearance she sang three of Elgar's "Sea Pictures," "In Haven," "Where Corals Lie," and "The Swimmer."

ESTABLISHED 1836

PUBLIC LEDGER

Philadelphia, Thursday, January 12, 1905.

Music and Musicians

The third Wednesday evening concert of the Boston Orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, took place last night in the Academy of Music. The symphony was Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique." The reading of it was in a slightly lower key than customary, so that the great composition lacked a little in sweetness, abandon and throbbing hopelessness in its final impression, but, with the exception of the third movement, it was finely played. At the close of the rhythmic second movement the audience was roused to a high pitch of enthusiasm.

Some characteristic Brahms waltzes, orchestrated by Mr. Gericke, and Dvorak's sprightly "Carneval" overture were the other instrumental numbers on the programme.

Muriel Foster, an English contralto, with a big though not very rich voice, sang "Penelope's Prayer," from Bruch's "Odysseus," and three of Elgar's five "Sea Pictures," Nos. 2, 4 and 5, with much intelligence and authority. Her diction is very indistinct, but her singing is fervid and effective. The beauty of the orchestra of the first song, "In Haven," is particularly to be noted.

Phila "Ledger" Jany 12-05

BOSTON ORCHESTRA IN BRAHM CONCERTO

Rafael Joseffy, first among American pianists, played Brahm's second concerto last evening at the Boston Orchestra concert—a masterly exhibition of skillful technique and artistic expression. There is perhaps no other living pianist who can vie with Joseffy in the performance of this splendid composition; certainly the passionate second movement and the rippling grace of the final allegretto have never been given here with such infinite spirit and artistic fervor. The lovely andante, too, was played as only Joseffy can play it.

The symphony was D'Indy's second, in B flat major—a supreme test of orchestral virtuosity, which Mr. Gericke's musicians amply met and answered. The reading of the work did not differ materially from that of Conductor Scheel, recently heard here; and numerous hearings will be required to unfold D'Indy's musical message to symphony audiences. Schumann's brilliant "Genoveva" overture was played in dashing style and with fine musical effect.

To-morrow evening's concert by the Boston band will introduce as soloist Muriel Foster, an English contralto in high favor with British concertgoers.

Phila "Press" Jany 10-05

D'INDY ONCE MORE

Mr. Gericke Gives the Famous Second Symphony—Joseffy as Soloist.

The program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert last evening at the Academy of Music, under the baton of Mr. Gericke, was a rather curious one. Schumann, the romanticist, was represented by his "Genoveva" overture; Brahms, the modern classicist, was heard through the medium of Rafael Joseffy's not particularly inspiring interpretation of the piano concerto in B flat Major, while Mr. Gericke took a deep plunge into the muddy depths of Vincent D'Indy's second symphony in B flat Major, in the interest of modern ideas. This is the same symphony whose reading at the hands of Mr. Scheel recently brought up a heated discussion as to what it all means anyhow.

It might as well be said at the outset that both Mr. Scheel and Mr. Gericke gave you all the meaning there is in this extraordinary symphonic work. One writes "extraordinary not from any sense of admiration, but simply as a tribute to audacity; for D'Indy's work, with the possible exception of Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius," is by all odds the ugliest bit of music that has been heard recently in a modern program.

It is possible that some can get enjoyment out of it, perhaps there is even entertainment of an amusing character for the musically learned, and it is also possible that some may find it beautiful in spots; but there should be no real difficulty in seeing that D'Indy has really very little to say, and says what he does have to say tiresomely. This work is not "music of the future," beyond present comprehension, as no doubt his admirers will assert. On the contrary it is very easy to understand it. Its treatment of the instruments, its use of the orchestral forces, its scrappy method with musical themes, and its curious chords and false relations of notes that make for discords are all far from novel or new. Hence it is not because we can't understand D'Indy that he seems ugly, but because we do understand him.

The Frenchman is no innovator, no originator, no founder of a new school trying unheard of things who will be understood and appreciated later on. He is simply a very daring and clever composer, who has carried to the pitch of absurdity certain modern tendencies, and one should not be at all surprised if he were really laughing in his sleeve at those who find the unutterable in his jerky and disconnected composition.

The chief impression which the second hearing of the symphony makes on one is that it is not lasting nor of high art value. If D'Indy had been set the task of writing a composition to exploit in all the instruments of the orchestra, helter-skelter, go-as-you-please, showing off their eccentricities rather than their normal qualities, he couldn't have succeeded better. It is a good thing, however, to hear a work of this kind, as it brings one to a realizing sense of what we really owe to a genius like Beethoven for his "Leonore" No. 3 Overture, which is worth a thousand D'Indy symphonies.

The "Genoveva" overture was read well and in the concerto Joseffy was in his best form in the andante and the final allegretto grazioso. Here his old self seemed uppermost and he was effective and made a good impression. On the whole, however, the program was not one of Mr. Gericke's best.

At to-morrow evening's concert the following attractive program will be rendered: Overture to "Camacho's Wedding, Op. 10, Mendelssohn; Penelope's Lament and Prayer from "Odysseus," Bruch; Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic," in B minor, Tschaikowsky; three songs from a cycle of five for contralto and orchestra, Op. 37, "Sea Pictures," Edward Elgar; overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; soloist, Miss Muriel Foster, the contralto.

Phila "Record" Jany 10-05

Music and Musicians

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, gave the third of this season's Monday evening concerts in the Academy of Music. Only three numbers, the "Genoveva" overture (a lovely romantic example of Schumann), the second symphony, in B flat, by Vincent d'Indy, and the second piano concerto of Brahms, the one in B flat major, were included in the programme.

Rafael Joseffy was the soloist. A very broad player would have made Brahms's B major piano concerto stand out, but as Joseffy played it last evening it took on more of the character of an obligato to the orchestra. His playing is too fine for a work of this kind.

* * *

Phila Ev. Telegraph Jay. 12-05

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Miss Muriel Foster, Contralto, as Soloist.

At the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in the Academy of Music the programme was a very interesting one, and yet finding fault may be excused in this case. The symphony was Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique." On Monday night the symphony was D'Indy's second. Now, the Philadelphia Orchestra has already given both these works here this season, and it seems a pity that, in the comparatively few orchestral concerts which we get in a winter, we should have repetitions where there is such an immense amount of other valuable work that we should have an opportunity to hear. In the case of the D'Indy symphony, the repetition was not only excusable but gratifying. It is a new work, and an important one, and it was well to hear it again before our first rather unfavorable impressions had sunk too deep for eradication. But with the Tschaikowsky work the case is entirely different. We are thoroughly familiar with this symphony. We have already heard it twice this year, and that is enough. Mr. Gericke would do far better to give us something which, if not absolutely new, is at least unfamiliar and seldom heard.

As for the orchestra's playing of the work, it was practically perfect with the exception of the third movement. Here the band was very ragged. Especially were the brasses out of order and seemed totally unable to keep smoothly in the spirit of the interpretation. The finale, however, atoned to a great extent for this shortcoming, and left one with the impression of a great work well performed. The Brahms waltzes, orchestrated by Mr. Gericke, would have been most interesting and acceptable had there been fewer of them. As it was, the number became rather tiresome before it was finished. The Dvorak "Carneval" overture was excellently read and ended the programme refreshingly.

The soloist was Miss Muriel Foster, the English contralto. Miss Foster is the possessor of a pleasing personality and a big voice. In fact, her voice is altogether too big as she uses it, or, rather, as it uses her. She has not sufficient control of it. Her efforts at repression result in faults of production that spoil the effects and mar what she evidently conceives intelligently and artistically. There is, at times, too, a sudden blare that amounts almost to a whoop and is very far from pleasant. These things, which are of themselves faults, served rather as a help to her in the intensely dramatic "Swimmer" of Elgar, but in the other songs they interfered decidedly with the artistic effect. Besides the "Penelope's Recitative and Prayer" from Bruch's "Odysseus," she sang three songs from Elgar's "Sea Pictures." They are exceedingly beautiful things, the first one especially showing the new prophet of English music in one of his most characteristic moods. It was, unfortunately, in this very work that Miss Foster's defects were most in evidence, and she failed to do it the justice that it deserved.

Phila "Record" Jany 10-05

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Rafael Joseffy Pays a Welcome New Visit as Soloist.

A well-balanced program was presented at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last evening. Schumann's "Genoveva," the overture to which opened the concert, is a work that ought to be better known to the present generation of music lovers; it is one of the finest flowers of the Romantic revolt, and, though the dullness of the libretto and its non-dramatic quality account for its failure on the stage, its noble numbers deserve to be more frequently heard. The overture with its passionate introductory theme, its lively hunting motive, alternating with a beautiful andante, composes a free fantasia of great charm and was admirably rendered. Of Brahms' Concerto in B-flat, for pianoforte, it has been said that one part might better have been omitted. Usually it is the second movement, the allegro appassionato, which critics wish might have been excided, but one should be loth to miss this fiery, cynically gay dance of passion. This, and the andante and allegretto grazioso following, combine to make a composition of poetic beauty, to which the mere music of the introductory andante stands in no necessary relation. Rafael Joseffy, who bore off the honors at the piano, was at his best in the last two movements. His velvet touch was a continuous delight, and he can score a triumph as often as he will consent to let the public hear him. It is our loss that he appears at such increasingly long intervals. The wood winds of the orchestra were occasionally too unrestrained, and a few of the delicate shadings of the master pianist were lost. D'Indy's Symphony in B-flat major has been heard in this city before, having been a part of the program of the Philadelphia Orchestra on New Year's eve, and nothing need be added in praise of this original and intensely modern tour de force. The concert from first to last was interesting and the visiting orchestra carried it off in its usual good style.

At to-morrow evening's concert Muriel Foster, the fine English contralto, will be the soloist. The program will comprise: Mendelssohn's Overture to "Camacho's Wedding," Bruch's "Odysseus;" "Penelope's Lament and Prayer," from "Odysseus;" Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic;" Edward Elgar's "Sea Pictures," three songs from a cycle of five, for contralto and orchestra; Wagner's overture to "The Flying Dutchman."

Phila "North American" Jany. 10-05

Music and Musicians

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, gave the third of this season's Monday evening concerts in the Academy of Music. Only three numbers, the "Genoveva" overture (a lovely romantic example of Schumann), the second symphony, in B flat, by Vincent d'Indy, and the second piano concerto of Brahms, the one in B flat major, were included in the programme.

Rafael Joseffy was the soloist. A very broad player would have made Brahms's B major piano concerto stand out, but as Joseffy played it last evening it took on more of the character of an obligato to the orchestra. His playing is too fine for a work of this kind.

[50]

ESTABLISHED 1836
PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Tuesday, January 10, 1905.

Music and Musicians

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, gave the third of this season's Monday evening concerts in the Academy of Music. Only three numbers, the "Genoveva" overture (a lovely romantic example of Schumann), the second symphony, in B flat, by Vincent d'Indy, and the second piano concerto of Brahms, the one in B flat major, were included in the programme.

Rafael Joseffy was the soloist. A very broad player would have made Brahms's B major piano concerto stand out, but as Joseffy played it last evening it took on more of the character of an obligato to the orchestra. His playing is too fine for a work of this kind.

* * *

The Press
THURSDAY, JANUARY 12, 1905.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Mr. Gericke Gives a Noble Reading of the Symphony Pathetique.

Program.

Tschaikowsky—Symphony Pathetique, No. 6 in B Minor, Opus 74
Bruch—Penelope's Recitative and Prayer, from "Odysseus"
Brahms—Waltzes, orchestrated by W. Gericke
Elgar—"Sea Pictures." Three Songs from a cycle of Five for Orchestra and Contralto, Opus 37
Dvorak—Overture, "Carneval."

The Boston Orchestra, under Mr. Gericke, again put one in its debt last evening by the exceeding tonal beauty and marvelous clarity of its interpretation of the famous "Pathetic Symphony." It was natural after the swing and swagger of the third movement that the audience should applaud delightedly and it was quite the courteous thing for Mr. Gericke to ask his men to stand up, but as finely as he and they read this movement it is just in this movement that one feels more disposed to quarrel with the conductor, since he is incorrigible.

Dash and vehemence he expresses, but he will not let the barbaric forces so potent in this movement loose. He, as was said of Henry James the other evening, deals restrainedly with great crises. Surely if our forefathers thought a small cannon might have been fired to effect in the first chordal crash of Haydn's surprise symphony, a cannon is easily in place in the climaxes of the third movement of the Pathetic. Lacking a cannon by the composer's direction, by all means let us have the clash of cymbals, but with a mailed hand, fiercely and abandoned.

Well, if the third movement was read in Mr. Gericke's well known way it can be said that his way in the other three seemed perfection. Rarely has the luxury of grief in melodic phrase and harmonic color as Tschaikowsky depicted it been so nobly expressed, and particularly in the last movement, the adagio lamentoso, the orchestra reached a height of virtuosity in expression, as well as in tone that was the poetry of interpretation.

The orchestra was in splendid form also in the Brahms waltzes and the Dvorak number and in the accompaniments to the songs of the soloist, Miss Muriel Foster, who proved to be a young woman of pleasing presence, with a large voice and a broad dramatic style.

The Boston Symphony

The third of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's second series of concerts at the Academy of Music last evening was listened to by an audience considerably smaller than usual; but the lack in numbers did not affect the appreciation and applause, unless it was to make it more than ordinarily cordial. Mr. Gericke and his band have seldom played better here or been more enthusiastically received. This is particularly true of the Tschaikowsky symphony "Pathetic," No. 6. In the first movement especially the musicians played as if inspired, and the third part, the beautiful march scherzo, was so well done that Mr. Gericke was induced by the continued applause to have all his men rise and bow for themselves. A set of rhythmic waltzes by Brahms, delightfully played, and Dvorak's picturesque and somewhat barbaric "Carneval" overture, with its rich splashes of color, completed the orchestral part of a program which altogether proved rarely delightful. The soloist was Miss Muriel Foster, the English contralto, who made an excellent impression. Miss Foster, who is a woman of almost imposing presence, tall and finely proportioned, has a voice of great volume, of steady, full tone, and clear, though not particularly sympathetic quality. She sang "Penelope's Recitative and Prayer," from Bruch's "Odysseus," with much dramatic effect, and "Sea Pictures," a group of three interesting songs by Edward Elgar.

THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD
PHILADELPHIA, JANUARY 12, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Muriel Foster's Local Concert Debut.

Barring the presence of Muriel Foster, an English contralto new to this city, it cannot be said that novelty was the keynote of last evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music. On the other hand, the program consisted largely of music so well known and so justly admired as to make it quite the most delightful that Mr. Gericke's players have given us during the current season. It is further worthy of note that repellant atmosphere of "rigidity, rigidity, rigidity," as Kipling has it, seemed at no time in evidence. With the conductor in what may be termed a "pliable" mood and with orchestra voicing its testimony of this welcome temperamental change by playing with marked spontaneity and enthusiasm, it is scarcely to be wondered at that the entertainment was one of rare artistic worth. Could Mr. Gericke be persuaded to have done forever with that unfortunate air of didacticism that has so long been his severest handicap, the Boston Symphony Orchestra need fear few rivals in the entire world of music. The real potentiality of the organization is something fairly phenomenal.

Tschaikowsky's "Symphony Pathetique" began the evening. At the present date this composition may be said to eclipse in popularity the entire range of symphonic works old and new. Very seldom has a season passed by in this city without its production. The Boston players gave it in 1902, our own orchestra offered it three times last year and last evening's performance marks the third time for the winter of 1904-05. Naturally, comparisions as to the manner of its presentation are inevitable. Mr. Scheel's men interpret the work in fine style as a tone poem—a musical picture of life. In the hands of Mr. Gericke it is more of a symphony, and, notably in the secondary theme of the second movement, there is less insistence upon the poignancy of the tragedy that Tschaikowsky had in mind. With respect to the brilliant allegro, however, first honors must be accorded the New England orchestra. At the conclusion of this movement all the players at Mr. Gericke's command stood to acknowledge the applause of the audience. The demonstration was richly justified. The resplendent march, with its ever present background of tragedy, has never been more worthily rendered. The other purely instrumental numbers were Brahms' waltzes, orchestrated by Mr. Gericke, and Dvorak's splendid Carnival overture—both admirably given.

Miss Foster, the soloist, disclosed a personality of much vigor, and a kind of "grand" manner that accorded very well with Penelope's Recitative and Prayer from Bruch's "Odysseus," which was her opening number. Her voice is a fine, powerful organ, rich, deep and evidently one of wide range. On her second appearance she sang three of Elgar's "Sea Pictures," "In Haven," "Where Corals Lie," and "The Swimmer."

ESTABLISHED 1836
PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Thursday, January 12, 1905.

Music and Musicians

The third Wednesday evening concert of the Boston Orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, took place last night in the Academy of Music. The symphony was Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique." The reading of it was in a slightly lower key than customary, so that the great composition lacked a little in sweetness, abandon and throbbing hopelessness in its final impression, but, with the exception of the third movement, it was finely played. At the close of the rhythmic second movement the audience was roused to a high pitch of enthusiasm.

Some characteristic Brahms waltzes, orchestrated by Mr. Gericke, and Dvorak's sprightly "Carneval" overture were the other instrumental numbers on the programme.

Muriel Foster, an English contralto, with a big though not very rich voice, sang "Penelope's Prayer," from Bruch's "Odysseus," and three of Elgar's five "Sea Pictures," Nos. 2, 4 and 5, with much intelligence and authority. Her diction is very indistinct, but her singing is fervid and effective. The beauty of the orchestra of the first song, "In Haven," is particularly to be noted.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA IN BRAHM CONCERTO

Rafael Joseffy, first among American pianists, played Brahm's second concerto last evening at the Boston Orchestra concert—a masterly exhibition of skillful technique and artistic expression. There is perhaps no other living pianist who can vie with Joseffy in the performance of this splendid composition; certainly the passionate second movement and the rippling grace of the final allegretto have never been given here with such infinite spirit and artistic fervor. The lovely andante, too, was played as only Joseffy can play it.

The symphony was D'Indy's second, in B flat major—a supreme test of orchestral virtuosity, which Mr. Gericke's musicians amply met and answered. The reading of the work did not differ materially from that of Conductor Scheel, recently heard here; and numerous hearings will be required to unfold D'Indy's musical message to symphony audiences. Schumann's brilliant "Genoveva" overture was played in dashing style and with fine musical effect.

To-morrow evening's concert by the Boston band will introduce as soloist Muriel Foster, an English contralto in high favor with British concertgoers.

Phila Press Jany 10-'05 — Phila Ev'g Telegraph Jany 12-05

D'INDY ONCE MORE

Mr. Gericke Gives the Famous Second Symphony—Joseffy as Soloist.

The program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert last evening at the Academy of Music, under the baton of Mr. Gericke, was a rather curious one. Schumann, the romanticist, was represented by his "Genoveva" overture; Brahms, the modern classicist, was heard through the medium of Rafael Joseffy's not particularly inspiring interpretation of the piano concerto in B flat Major, while Mr. Gericke took a deep plunge into the muddy depths of Vincent D'Indy's second symphony in B flat Major, in the interest of modern ideas. This is the same symphony whose reading at the hands of Mr. Scheel recently brought up a heated discussion as to what it all means anyhow.

It might as well be said at the outset that both Mr. Scheel and Mr. Gericke gave you all the meaning there is in this extraordinary symphonic work. One writes "extraordinary not from any sense of admiration, but simply as a tribute to audacity; for D'Indy's work, with the possible exception of Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius," is by all odds the ugliest bit of music that has been heard recently in a modern program.

It is possible that some can get enjoyment out of it, perhaps there is even entertainment of an amusing character for the musically learned, and it is also possible that some may find it beautiful in spots; but there should be no real difficulty in seeing that D'Indy has really very little to say, and says what he does have to say tiresomely. This work is not "music of the future," beyond present comprehension, as no doubt his admirers will assert. On the contrary it is very easy to understand it. Its treatment of the instruments, its use of the orchestral forces, its scrappy method with musical themes, and its curious chords and false relations of notes that make for discords are all far from novel or new. Hence it is not because we can't understand D'Indy that he seems ugly, but because we do understand him.

The Frenchman is no innovator, no originator, no founder of a new school trying unheard of things who will be understood and appreciated later on. He is simply a very daring and clever composer, who has carried to the pitch of absurdity certain modern tendencies, and one should not be at all surprised if he were really laughing in his sleeve at those who find the unutterable in his jerky and disconnected composition.

The chief impression which the second hearing of the symphony makes on one is that it is not lasting nor of high art value. If D'Indy had been set the task of writing a composition to exploit in all the instruments of the orchestra, helter-skelter, go-as-you-please, showing off their eccentricities rather than their normal qualities, he couldn't have succeeded better. It is a good thing, however, to hear a work of this kind, as it brings one to a realizing sense of what we really owe to a genius like Beethoven for his "Leonore" No. 3 Overture, which is worth a thousand D'Indy symphonies.

The "Genoveva" overture was read well and in the concerto Joseffy was in his best form in the andante and the final allegretto grazioso. Here his old self seemed uppermost and he was effective and made a good impression. On the whole, however, the program was not one of Mr. Gericke's best.

At to-morrow evening's concert the following attractive program will be rendered: Overture to "Camacho's Wedding, Op. 10, Mendelssohn; Penelope's Lament and Prayer from "Odysseus," Bruch; Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic," in B minor, Tschaikowsky; three songs from a cycle of five for contralto and orchestra, Op. 37, "Sea Pictures," Edward Elgar; overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; soloist. Miss Muriel Foster, the contralto.

Music and Musicians

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, gave the third of this season's Monday evening concerts in the Academy of Music. Only three numbers, the "Genoveva" overture (a lovely romantic example of Schumann), the second symphony, in B flat, by Vincent d'Indy, and the second piano concerto of Brahms, the one in B flat major, were included in the programme.

Rafael Joseffy was the soloist. A very broad player would have made Brahms's B major piano concerto stand out, but as Joseffy played it last evening it took on more of the character of an obligato to the orchestra. His playing is too fine for a work of this kind.

* * *

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Miss Muriel Foster, Contralto, as Soloist.

At the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in the Academy of Music the programme was a very interesting one, and yet finding fault may be excused in this case. The symphony was Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique." On Monday night the symphony was D'Indy's second. Now, the Philadelphia Orchestra has already given both these works here this season, and it seems a pity that, in the comparatively few orchestral concerts which we get in a winter, we should have repetitions where there is such an immense amount of other valuable work that we should have an opportunity to hear. In the case of the D'Indy symphony, the repetition was not only excusable but gratifying. It is a new work, and an important one, and it was well to hear it again before our first rather unfavorable impressions had sunk too deep for eradication. But with the Tschaikowsky work the case is entirely different. We are thoroughly familiar with this symphony. We have already heard it twice this year, and that is enough. Mr. Gericke would do far better to give us something which, if not absolutely new, is at least unfamiliar and seldom heard.

As for the orchestra's playing of the work, it was practically perfect with the exception of the third movement. Here the band was very ragged. Especially were the brasses out of order and seemed totally unable to keep smoothly in the spirit of the interpretation. The finale, however, atoned to a great extent for this shortcoming, and left one with the impression of a great work well performed. The Brahms waltzes, orchestrated by Mr. Gericke, would have been most interesting and acceptable had there been fewer of them. As it was, the number became rather tiresome before it was finished. The Dvorak "Carneval" overture was excellently read and ended the programme refreshingly.

The soloist was Miss Muriel Foster, the English contralto. Miss Foster is the possessor of a pleasing personality and a big voice. In fact, her voice is altogether too big as she uses it, or, rather, as it uses her. She has not sufficient control of it. Her efforts at repression result in faults of production that spoil the effects and mar what she evidently conceives intelligently and artistically. There is, at times, too, a sudden blare that amounts almost to a whoop and is very far from pleasant. These things, which are of themselves faults, served rather as a help to her in the intensely dramatic "Swimmer" of Elgar, but in the other songs they interfered decidedly with the artistic effect. Besides the "Penelope's Recitative and Prayer" from Bruch's "Odysseus," she sang three songs from Elgar's "Sea Pictures." They are exceedingly beautiful things, the first one especially showing the new prophet of English music in one of his most characteristic moods. It was, unfortunately, in this very work that Miss Foster's defects were most in evidence, and she failed to do it the justice that it deserved.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Rafael Joseffy Pays a Welcome New Visit as Soloist.

A well-balanced program was presented at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last evening. Schumann's "Genoveva," the overture to which opened the concert, is a work that ought to be better known to the present generation of music lovers; it is one of the finest flowers of the Romantic revolt, and, though the dullness of the libretto and its non-dramatic quality accounts for its failure on the stage, its noble numbers deserve to be more frequently heard. The overture with its passionate introductory theme, its lively hunting motive, alternating with a beautiful andante, composes a free fantasia of great charm and was admirably rendered. Of Brahms' Concerto in B-flat, for pianoforte, it has been said that one part might better have been omitted. Usually it is the second movement, the allegro appassionato, which critics wish might have been excided, but one should be loth to miss this fiery, cynically gay dance of passion. This, and the andante and allegretto gracioso following, combine to make a composition of poetic beauty, to which the mere music of the introductory andante stands in no necessary relation. Rafael Joseffy, who bore off the honors at the piano, was at his best in the last two movements. His velvet touch was a continuous delight, and he can score a triumph as often as he will consent to let the public hear him. It is our loss that he appears at such increasingly long intervals. The wood winds of the orchestra were occasionally too unrestrained, and a few of the delicate shadings of the master pianist were lost. D'Indy's Symphony in B-flat major has been heard in this city before, having been a part of the program of the Philadelphia Orchestra on New Year's eve, and nothing need be added in praise of this original and intensely modern tour de force. The concert from first to last was interesting and the visiting orchestra carried it off in its usual good style.

At to-morrow evening's concert Muriel Foster, the fine English contralto, will be the soloist. The program will comprise: Mendelssohn's Overture to "Camacho's Wedding," Bruch's "Penelope's Lament and Prayer," from "Odysseus;" Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic;" Edward Elgar's "Sea Pictures," three songs from a cycle of five, for contralto and orchestra; Wagner's overture to "The Flying Dutchman."

[50]

Sunn 8 New York Papers for January 1915 Post 13

Mail 7 Sun 13

The Boston Symphony Orchestra comes again next week, giving the usual two concerts at Carnegie Hall, on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, Jan. 12 and 14, with Mr. Rafael Joseffy and Miss Muriel Foster as the soloists. The programme for the first performance will include Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," op. 31, the Brahms Concerto in B flat major No. 2, for pianoforte and orchestra; and Vincent d'Indy's Symphony in B flat major No. 2, which will be given on this occasion for the first time at these concerts. Miss Foster, soloist of the Saturday concert, is the young and charming English contralto whose American appearances last season, with the Boston Orchestra and in a concert tour of various cities, won the favor of the public by the purity and richness of her voice and her altogether charming personality. The programme for this concert is as follows: Dvorak's "Carneval" overture; Song, "Penelope's Lament and Prayer," from Bruch's "Odysseus;" waltzes by Brahms, orchestrated by W. Gericke; "Sea Pictures," three songs from a cycle of five, for contralto and orchestra, by Edward Elgar, and Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, No. 5, op. 67.

Eve sun 7

The Boston Symphony Orchestra on Thursday evening, at Carnegie Hall, will play Schumann's overture to "Genoveva," op. 81, and Vincent d'Indy's symphony No. 2, in B flat major, this for the first time. The solo number is Brahms's piano concerto No. 2, in B flat, and the soloist is Rafael Joseffy.

Muriel Foster, the English contralto, is the soloist in Mr. Gericke's Saturday afternoon programme, which includes Dvorák, overture "Carneval"; Bruch, Penelope's recitative and prayer from "Odysseus"; Brahms waltzes orchestrated by Gericke; Edward Elgar, "Sea Pictures," three songs of the five for contralto and orchestra, op. 37; Beethoven, fifth symphony, in C minor, op. 67.

World 8

The Boston Symphony matinee at Carnegie Hall on Saturday will be an interesting event. Muriel Foster, the English contralto, will sing three of Elgar's "Sea Pictures" and an excerpt from Bruch's "Penelope." The orchestra under Gericke will perform Dvorak's "Carneval" overture, Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and some Brahms waltzes, orchestrated by Wilhelm Gericke.

For the Boston Symphony Concert of Thursday night, Rafael Joseffy has been announced as the soloist. This admirable pianist will play Brahms's Second Concerto. The orchestra, under Gericke, will be heard in Schumann's "Genoveva" overture and in D'Indy's Second Symphony, which is a novelty here.

Staats 8

Das nächste Konzert des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters am Donnerstag Abend in Carnegie Hall wird eine willkommene Ueberraschung bringen, nämlich das Auftreten von Rafael Joseffy. Er wird das zweite Brahms'sche Konzert vortragen. Es scheint, als wenn sich Herr Joseffy trotz aller Vorstellungen seiner Freunde und Verehrer nicht erweichen lassen will, mehr als einmal im Jahre an die New Yorker Oeffentlichkeit zu treten. Nun, da muß man dann eben diese eine Gelegenheit ordentlich ausnutzen. Das Orchesterprogramm des Konzerts enthält übrigens auch eine Novität, nämlich die zweite Symphonie von Vincent d'Indy, und außerdem noch die Schumann'sche „Genoveva"-Ouverture. Im Samstag-Nachmittag-Konzert des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters wird als Solistin die treffliche Londoner Altistin Muriel Foster mitwirken. Das Programm dieses Konzertes besteht aus der „Carnaval"-Ouverture von Dvorak, den Brahms'schen Liebeswalzern in der Instrumentation von Gericke, der Beethoven'schen C-moll Symphonie und Gesangsnummern von Bruch und Elgar. —

Post 7

Brahms and Beethoven will, as usual, be prominent in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's programmes at Carnegie Hall next week. On Thursday evening Mr. Joseffy will play the second Brahms concerto, and the orchestra will add the Schumann "Genoveva" overture, and Vincent d'Indy's second symphony (first time). On Saturday afternoon Miss Muriel Foster will sing three of Elgar's "Sea Pictures" and a Bruch aria, while the orchestra will give Dvorák's "Carneval" overture, some Brahms waltzes (orchestrated by Mr. Gericke), and Beethoven's fifth symphony.

amer 8

The Boston Symphony Orchestra comes again this week, giving the usual two concerts at Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, January 12 and 14, with Rafael Joseffy and Miss Muriel Foster as the respective soloists. The programme for the first performance will include Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," Op. 31, the Brahms Concerts in B-flat major, No. 2, for pianoforte and orchestra; and Vincent d'Indy's Symphony in B-flat major No. 2, which will be given on this occasion for the first time at these concerts.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will have no less a soloist Thursday night than Rafael Joseffy, and he will be heard in the second concerto of Brahms. Miss Muriel Foster, the young English contralto who won praise here last year, will be the Saturday soloist. Here are the Boston programmes; perhaps Mr. Gericke will for once let them be followed without alteration.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Overture to the opera "Genoveva," op. 81..... Schumann
Concerto for piano in B-flat major, No. 2, op. 83.....Brahms
Rafael Joseffy.
Symphony No. 2, in B flat major, Vincent d'Indy
(First time here).

SATURDAY MATINEE.

Overture—"Carneval" ..... Dvorak
Penelope's recitative and prayer from "Odysseus" ..... Bruch
Miss Muriel Foster.
Waltzes, orchestrated by W. Gericke, Brahms
"Sea Pictures," three songs from a cycle of five for contralto and orchestra, op. 37.....Edward Elgar Miss Foster.
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, op. 67, Beethoven

times 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra comes again this week, giving the usual two concerts at Carnegie Hall, on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, with Mr. Rafael Joseffy and Miss Muriel Foster as the respective soloists. The programme for the first performance will include Schumann's overture to "Geneveva," Op. 31, the Brahms Concerto in B flat major, No. 2, for pianoforte and orchestra, and Vincent d'Indy's Symphony in B flat major No. 2, which will be given on this occasion for the first time at these concerts.

Miss Foster, soloist of the Saturday concert, is the young English contralto whose American appearance last season, with the Boston Orchestra and in a concert tour of various cities, won the favor of the public by the purity and richness of her voice, and her altogether charming personality. The programme for this concert is as follows: Dvorak's "Carneval" overture; Song, "Penelope's Lament and Prayer" from Bruch's "Odysseus"; Waltzes by Brahms, orchestrated by W. Gericke; "Sea Pictures," three songs from a cycle of five for contralto and orchestra, by Edward Elgar, and Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67.

Herald 8

MUSIC NOTES.

TWO remarkably fine programmes will mark the Boston Orchestra's concerts on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. For the first affair Mr. Gericke announces Schumann's overture to Genoveva, opus 81; Vincent d'Indy's Second Symphony, in B flat major, a complete novelty, and the Brahms pianoforte concerto in the same key, opus 83, in which Rafael Joseffy will make one of his rare appearances as the soloist. On Saturday afternoon the list is a diverse one. The soloist, Miss Muriel Foster, will sing an air from Bruch's "Odysseus" and Edward Elgar's "Sea Pictures," the orchestral features being Dvorak's "Carneval" overture, some waltzes of Brahms', orchestrated by Mr. Gericke, and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven.

Mr. Rafael Joseffy will be the soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert on Thursday evening next, at Carnegie Hall. Mr. Joseffy will play the Brahms No. 2 concerto, which, notwithstanding its brilliancy and difficulties for the pianist, has been designated as a symphony with a piano part. The programme is as follows:

Overture to the opera "Genoveva," Op. 81.....Schumann
Concerto in B flat major, No. 2, Op. 83.....Brahms
Symphony No. 2, in B flat major (first time), Vincent d'Indy

At the concert on Saturday afternoon, January 14, Miss Muriel Foster, the brilliant young English contralto, whose American appearances are among the pleasant memories of last season, will be the soloist of the occasion. For this performance Mr. Gericke has arranged the following programme:

Overture, "Carneval".....Dvorak
Penelope's Recitative and Prayer from "Odysseus"..Bruch
Waltzes, orchestrated by W. Gericke.....Brahms
"Sea Pictures," Op. 37.....Elgar
Three songs from a cycle of five for contralto and orchestra.
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67.....Beethoven

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

A NEW SYMPHONY BY VINCENT D'INDY PLAYED.

A Work Full of Diseased Harmonies and Most Ingenious Workmanship—Its Instrumentation Highly Colored—Joseffy Gives a Poetic Concerto.

The third evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Ha ll last evening, began in melancholy and ended in rejoicing. The first number on the programme was Schumann's "Genoveva" overture, but this was removed to make way for a memorial to the late Theodore Thomas. Schubert's funeral march in E flat minor, orchestrated by Liszt from a composition for piano, four hands, was played. After this solemn function the real business of the evening began with Vincent d'Indy's second symphony, B flat major, opus 57.

This work was heard for the first time in this city. It was previously discovered by the Philadelphia Orchestra. Just how it came to make its impress on the mind of the suave and gentle Mr. Gericke would be hard to imagine, for it is neither suave nor gentle itself. It is one of the works of the altogether utter modern school which hates all harmonies not afflicted with strabismus. It revels in fractured sevenths, dislocated ninths and unlucky thirteenths.

When it cannot think of anything else to do to make the blood curdle and the spine waggle it snatches two minor seconds in different keys and incites them to murderous combat with one another. Proceedings of this sort administer galvanic shocks to the nerves and make people squirm in their seats so that at least they cannot go to sleep.

With these promises laid down it must be recorded that Mr. d'Indy, who is a personage of importance in France, has written an interesting work. People who do not like harmonies suggestive of rampant lemons and inebriated pesimmons will not enjoy this symphony. Maybe no one really gets joy out of it, but many will find it like ginger, "hot i' the mouth."

The slow introduction to the first movement biteth like an adder, but it challenges attention and makes the vigorous and brilliant first theme of the allegro, sung first by the horns and afterward by the strings, sound fluent and melodious. The second theme, introduced in similar instrumental language, is equally good. The working out is excellent in design but lacks a climax. The whole movement is luscious in instrumentation and shows fine musicianship.

In the other movements of the work the composer utilizes parts of the themes heard in the first, adding new matter to give diversity and introducing a great variety of treatment in his developments. The second movement, "modérément lent," is elegiac in character in the beginning and end, and in the middle has a piquant theme which is sung first by the harp. This instrument is rarely used indeed to proclaim symphonic subjects, but in this case its use is effective.

The third movement is a sort of intermezzo, and though the symphony has no programme this part of it suggests very strongly a country festival in the open air with a cheerful organ grinder handing out jig music to the peasants. It is an archaic tune, "after the manner of a pantourimic dance," according to the programme notes. This is an admirably built movement.

The last movement begins with an introduction and fugue and ends with a rondo. The introduction recapitulates all the themes previously heard, and the fugue is built of the cantabile motive of the first movement. New thematic matter is introduced and worked up with old ideas to bring the work to a close. The symphony seems to demand all this because of its splendid workmanship. Its acrid style militates against its chances of popularity.

After the symphony, Rafael Joseffy played the B flat piano concerto of Brahms with the orchestra in a most beautiful and poetic style. A little more tone would have bettered the performance, but it was a lovely interpretation of a lovely work. Dvorak's "Carnival" overture brought the concert to an end.

World 13

JOSEFFY THE SOLOIST.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Plays Varied Programe Well.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its concert at Carnegie Hall last evening with the Funeral March of Schubert. This number was performed as a tribute to the meory of Theodore Thomas, and at the back of the platform there was suspended a huge wreath tied with broad deep purple ribbons. The Funeral March was substituted in place of Schumann's "Genoveva" Overture.

Then came the evening's novelty, the Second Symphony by Vincent d'Indy. It was the first time that this work has had performance in this city, and a single hearing suggested the strong possibility that this symphony will enjoy exceptionally few performances here. It is unquestionably an uninteresting work, full of short phrases and unsatisfying treatment.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played it with fine articulation, the beautiful tonal delicacy of its woodwind lending a charm to the work that certainly will be entirely dissipated by cruder treatment. The final orchestral number was Dvorak's 'Carnival" overture.

The soloist of the evening was Rafael Joseffy, the celebrated pianist, who all too seldom comes out of his seclusion to play. Last night he played Brahms's Second Concerto with a sense of remarkable refinement that again impressed the listeners with the exquisite charm of this pianist's work.

The audience was very large and enthusiastic.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

Boston Symphony Orhcestra.

There is little of interest to say about last night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the simple reason that it was a most uninteresting "entertainment." Before the concert, one felt like commending Mr. Gericke for giving New Yorkers an opportunity to hear a novelty by a prominent member of the modern French school, but after hearing this work—the second symphony of Vincent d'Indy—one wondered why the conductor had deemed it worth while to try it on more than one audience. The symphony lacks what alone can give life to a work of art—a fount of original melody. Without such melody the utmost ingenuity of orchestration and the most bizarre harmonic effects go for naught, especially if there is no descriptive "programme," such as a piece like this demands. In a scene like that between the infuriated Alberich and Mime in "Siegfried" there is a reason for page after page of unmitigated dissonances: but in a work of absolute music, such discords are out of place. It is the old, old story. "First catch your hare" is the advice given in an ancient cook book. "First catch a melody" is the advice needed by nineteen out of every twenty contemporary composers; but hares are coy and elusive animals.

Johannes Brahms, too, was not an expert hunter in the realm of melody. It was, therefore, depressing to have his second concerto follow the French novelty. There are fragments of melody in this work—especially in the orchestral part of the andante—but far from enough to furnish forth an interminable work in four relentless movements. The piano part is neither brilliant, nor does it give the player any opportunity for emotional expression. It is deficient in dynamic contrasts, too, and Mr. Joseffy emphasized this deficiency, so that some one remarked that the work he played should really be called a "pianissimo concerto." All the more remarkable was the personal triumph of Mr. Joseffy, who was cordially recalled at the end, half a dozen times. It was a delight to hear so consummate an artist, even in so dry a work, for there is a delicacy, a refinement, in his playing that makes it a welcome contrast to the Amazonian thunderings of some other pianists, both of the strong sex and the fair, especially the latter. That Mr. Joseffy may give a recital (with not too much hermit music of the Brahms type) is beyond doubt the ardent wish of all who heard him last night.

Instead of the "Genoveva" overture, which was to have opened the concert, Mr. Gericke played the deep-felt Schubert funeral march, as a tribute to the late Theodore Thomas, whom Mr. Gericke, in a recent interview, declared to have been "the greatest orchestral conductor in the world." At the other end was the brilliant and stirring "Carneval" overture of Dvorák. These two short pieces furnished the real musical pabulum of this "symphony concert."

One of the features of Saturday afternoon's concert in Carnegie Hall will be a set of Brahms waltzes orchestrated by Mr. Gericke. An excellent thing! Maybe the time is coming, after all, when the Strauss waltzes will no longer be tabooed at symphony concerts. Why they should be tabooed is a mystery, for surely Strauss was a better waltz writer than Brahms, as the latter would have been the first to concede. It was he who, at the jubilee of the Waltz King, sent him the opening bars of the "Blue Danube" waltz with the words: "Leider nicht von Brahms"—"Not, alas! by Brahms." And the "Blue Danube" is one of the poorest of the Strauss waltzes.

JOSEFFY PLAYS AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Joseffy played at Carnegie Hall last evening, and Vincent d'Indy's Symphony in B flat Major was given here for the first time. The Boston Symphony Orchestra achieved these two triumphs with great art.

Joseffy played the piano in the B-flat major concerto of Brahms. He was dexterously intelligent, brilliant as ever. The symphony of Vincent d'Indy is a learned work of art.

Instead of the "Genoveva" overture that was in the programme the orchestra played, in deference to Theodore Thomas, the funeral march of Schubert. Mr. Gericke conducted excellently.

January 1905

A SILVER JUBILEE FOR RAFAEL JOSEFFY

Boston Orchestra Honors Two American Careers—A French Symphony That Was Not Pink but Purple.

As if to show the gods the gods have bestowed on America these many years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra hung one more green laurel, a beautiful closed crescent, high on the Carnegie Hall stage last night while they played a Schubert funeral march in memory of Theodore Thomas. There was applause, as at the other memorial concerts here. Then Mr. Gericke gave the place of honor in his programme to our most distinguished resident pianist, Rafael Joseffy. It might well have been called the silver jubilee of a man whose first appearance in this country was at old Chickering Hall on Oct. 13, 1879. Joseffy, too, might well have been scared at his own reception. For not Ysaye himself has had a more stunning popular ovation. And this was only to start with.

After the Brahms concerto No. 2, played as it was with musicianly restraint, both the audience and the orchestra broke loose and applauded for eight recalls, until Joseffy, whose legs are not the longest, trotted away looking most heartily and happily tired of it all. He looks like a polite and prosperous little New York business man. Were he the young Hungarian of six-and-twenty, from Vienna, Leipsic and Berlin, who came here so long ago, we know of a dozen managers who would make the nights hideous in Sleepy Hollow at old Tarrytown until they got him "signed" for that form of penal servitude known as a "tour." Joseffy has earned his independence. Yet we may beg him to read a little sermon in that storm of applause, a warning to an artist whose wish not to make himself common has withdrawn him from a not ungrateful public long before his time.

A concerto for any instrument is the most overrated musical form, the vanity of virtuosos, the mere millinery of art. But if there is an exception, let us agree with Gericke that it is one of Brahms—or of a Liszt—done by a ripe interpreter like our classic Rafael. Mr. Joseffy was unselfish to a fault, refusing permissible moments of display. Somewhat nervously he even followed on the keyboard the noisy interludes given to orchestra alone. After his appearance, the "Carneval" overture of Dvorak was played, while before the concerto, that programme book to the contrary notwithstanding, Mr. Gericke introduced rather tentatively a new symphony of the modern French school. Up aloft in a box, the Russian visitor Safonoff, was intent upon a copy of the score, while his neighbors madly devoured their programme notes, as usual.

Vincent d'Indy's symphony No. 2, in B flat major, from its opening mood of raising the discords in sevenths generally to its final tragedy of aspiring thirds, the major theme, downtrodden into so much pedal bass for the victorious minor theme, of diminished fourths in serenely cheerful cadence—this symphony, we say, deserved to be heard. So much the more pity that a bored audience read about it instead of listening. They woke up now and then to hear the gentle flute solos in Part II. or the cornet in Part III., "très animé." But a pale purple fugue at last that ran away into delicious 5-4 time was too much for the Philistines.

D'Indy may be a Samson, we hope he is. He is at any rate a mighty lion hunter, for in addition to being one of the few Frenchmen who heard Wagner's production of the Bayreuth "Ring" in '76, he actually rehearsed the chorus for the first Paris "Lohengrin" and he raced around Europe after Liszt and Brahms. It is Charpentier who is called le grand Bohème. D'Indy is rather the favored son of luxury and leisure, who loves nature in the Cevennes, the Tyrol, the Black Forest, the Engadine. In Paris he is a man of affairs, after Saint Saëns and the late Cesar Franck, the most considerable musician in a list of symphonists which includes Chausson, Lalo, Dukas and a half-dozen more.

Make no mistake, the younger Frenchmen are going to be heard here, though they are growing prematurely gray with waiting. That gray mystic, Maeterlinck, is spokesman for them all. Or are they, in moments like D'Indy's quaint solo viola, chanting his musical prose and painting his tapestried shadows? Only a Yankee Doodle Dandy would stick a feather in his own cap after last night's cold reception. But as some one besides Solomon or Ben Franklin has said, "Absinthe makes the heart grow fonder." A new flavor in music, even a plain lemon sour, will be relished in time.

When Mr. Gericke, a conservative of the conservatives, plays a novelty in Boston, his friends cry for Haydn. Last night's house only cried for the Beethoven of tomorrow's matinée.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY PLAYS; D'INDY SYMPHONY HEARD

Widely Contrasting Music at the Boston Orchestra's Concert.

BRAHMS CONCERTO ON PIANO

Frenchman's Composition Shows Wonderful Harmonic Jugglery, but It Bears No Particular Message.

Wilhelm Gericke and his always precise and punctual Boston Symphony Orchestra came to town last night with two interesting things on their programme. Rafael Joseffy, one of the world's great pianists, was down for Brahms's concerto in B flat major, No. 2, opus 83, and Vincent d'Indy's symphony of similar number and tonality had a first hearing in this city. As might have been expected, the audience in Carnegie Hall was large and many a Joseffy enthusiast was on the spot. But whether the D'Indy number, one of the most extravagant pieces of tone-painting heard in this city, had exerted any special attraction may be doubted.

D'Indy is not unknown in New York. His "Foret Enchantée," an earlier work, is fresh in the memory. This Frenchman, who does not hesitate at the most ear-puzzling dissonances, has, like all modern composers, an astonishing command of orchestral technics and is not only an expert contrapuntisto, but also extremely proficient in devising strange and haunting harmonies. Could they be considered separately from the musical matter they are supposed to clothe, they would inspire much admiration. Unfortunately, however, the musical ideas within the scintillating masses of effects are almost nil, and where they amount to something are borrowed from other composers—Wagner and Liszt in particular.

REMARKABLE TONAL FABRIC.

The symphony in B flat major, the author says, is not "programme music." But does the mere absence of a title make a tone-poem a symphony in the conventional sense? If D'Indy's second "symphony" is not "programme music," neither is Strauss's "Domestica." There is not the slightest doubt this score is a remarkable tonal fabric, containing much beautiful and effective writing, hard as it is to penetrate its mazes on a first hearing. Yet it cannot be considered an important addition to musical literature. What lasting art work can mere cerebral energy and cleverness produce when there is no true message to convey to the world? D'Indy is a technical wizard and can juggle with harmonic colors with the utmost ease and often with superficially impressive results, but if there is originality of treatment and workmanship in his latest symphonic effort it is without melodic inspiration.

At the hands of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this extraordinary composition received wholly admirable treatment. Mr. Gericke not only exposed its puzzling intricacies with astonishing clearness, but worked up dramatic climaxes with far more vigor and enthusiasm than is generally his wont.

Brahms's second concerto is not one of the master's most inspired works; but certainly it could have had a more enlivening interpretation than Joseffy gave it. The pianist never rose above a mezza-forte. He actually whispered the music—this champion featherweight technician. As for heart impulse, some persons say they have discovered it in Joseffy's playing recently, but his performance last night was cold and colorless.

Instead of Schumann's "Genoveva" overture Schubert's Funeral March, orchestrated by Liszt, was offered in memory of Theodore Thomas. Perhaps some in the audience had failed to notice the slip of paper inserted in the programmes which advertised the change. At any rate the applause was not checked. Dvorak's "Carneval" overture ended the concert.

times 13

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AGAIN

A New Symphony by Vincent D'Indy Given.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY SOLOIST

He Plays Brahms's Second Concerto—A Tribute to Thomas at the Beginning.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, at its third evening concert, which it gave last evening in Carnegie Hall, paid its tribute to the memory of Theodore Thomas by changing its programme and playing, instead of Schumann's overture to "Genovava," a funeral march by Schubert. A printed slip in the programme book—how many of such slips have been found necessary of late!—announced the change, but did not identify the composition, which was, in fact, one of a set written for four hands upon the piano in E flat minor, orchestrated by Liszt. The march is not particularly interesting, but the orchestration is exceedingly effective, and the purpose in view in performing it was fulfilled in a dignified manner. That purpose was emphasized by a large purple-bound wreath that hung upon the rear wall of the stage. Strange, however, that a Boston Symphony audience should consider even a ripple of applause in place after such a ceremonial.

The symphony was the second of Vincent d'Indry's, one of the most recent works of the leader of that young school of French composers who are traveling a path they are breaking out for themselves, in which the rest of the world finds considerable difficulty in following them. The difficulty last evening was unmistakable. In this symphony d'Indry speaks a new and strange language, through which as yet only gleams of a lucid and intelligible thought appears. It would be easy to condemn the work as an unmeaning cacophony, a hopeless striving after something not realied or not realizable, a vague groping through obscurity after ideas that constantly elude the grasp.

Yet there is too much in it to be dismissed thus after a single hearing, and what is not comprehended to-day may gain clearness and significance when the idiom and the intention of the composer are more fully grasped.. D'Indy's symphony is surely a dark saying to-day. He has built it up on an elaborate community and development of a few themes, some of which reappear, combined and transformed, in all the four movements; but these themes are of such an impalpable vagueness and indefiniteness of outline that the hearer is constantly baffled in his pursuit of them. D'Indy, like others of his school, greatly affects the harshness of augmented intervals, both in his harmonies and in the melodic line, giving thus the effect of some strange and unknown tonality; and some of the harmonic effects are as a veritable grating upon the ear. The movements all seem incoherent in form. The instrumentation is refined and subtle to the last degree, with delicate and fastidious contrasts of timbres and many strands of gleaming colors. There are unquestionably certain passages of strange and striking beauty that emerge through the general obscurity, and the composer has succeeded in some effects of atmosphere and of mood, however, evanescent these may be at a single hearing. Presented as "absolute" music, however, without a hint or suggestion to guide the fancy of the listener through its complexities, the work is one that baffles. It is surely one that will raise many questions as to the outcome of the tendencies it represents. It was played with the utmost finish; but was received with every evidence of suspicion by the audience.

Mr. Rafael Joseffy emerged from his retirement to play Brahms's second piano concerto, a piece of very noble and beautiful music that has made little appeal to other pianists because it gives so little opportunity for the display traditionally supposed to be the object of such pieces. His fine and unselfish musicianship has for many years delighted in it, however, and set it forth in a most poetic light last evening. Mr. Joseffy's art is peculiarly his own, and his treatment of the piano is not that of other pianists. He calls forth a still, small voice from the instrument, crystal clear, and of exquisite delicacy and refinement; he seeks for no brilliancy and little warmth of color; his playing is wrought with a cameo-like perfection of detail and with a consummate sense of proportion. His reading of the concerto was deliciously pure in style, cool in sentiment, and full of iridescent tints and halflights. Is is as though it were under starlight rather than the glow of a Summer sunset. Beautiful in its way, it may not be the spirit in which Brahms conceived it, or would have played it; but it was characteristic of a truly great and individual artist. Mr. Joseffy was welcomed in a way that spoke unmistakably of esteem and admiration. The concert closed with Dvorak's brilliant carnival overture.

tribune 13

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Gericke adventured a rather bewildering distance into the French neo-romantic school of music at the third evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when he brought forward a symphony by Vincent d'Indy. It was the second work of that composer, and in the key of B flat major; but the key does not signify to the public, since it occupied the attention of the composer so little. It is cited only to assist the coming musical generation in the work of identification when antiquarian labors begin on the musical monuments of the beginning of the twentieth century. The new French romanticists must not be confounded with the disciples of Schumann, nor eke with those of Wagner, though M. d'Indy betrayed a marvellous capacity for conveying fragments of Wagnerian thought when he wrote the singular work which New-York listened to for the first time last night. It was indubitably a misfortune for the hearers that he did not borrow more extensively from Wagner's harmonic scheme, which the younger Frenchmen of to-day seem determined to relegate to the limbo of infantile and elementary things. The symphony quite confounds a cursory reviewer's power of analysis and description. That the official annotator of the Boston programmes, Mr. Philip Hale, who is seldom at a loss for suggestive phrases, should have fallen back in this case on the analysis of a fantastic Frenchman was not at all surprising to those who lent a discriminating ear to the music. That it irritated interest was undeniable; that, with all its incomprehensible singularities, it published sincerity on the part of the composer was equally unquestionable; but what it all meant, either as absolute or illustrative music, we shall not attempt to fathom until it is performed again with its essential accessories, which might be a preliminary debauch, with hasheesh, moving pictures by the impressionists who paint red houses with blue pigments and odor disseminating machines such as Apuleius describes in his "Golden Ass" and which have already made their appearance in the latter day theatre. The audience felt in duty bound to enjoy it last night, but the patter of applause which followed each movement indicated that New-York's musical mind was sadly perplexed.

After the symphony Mr. Joseffy brought forward Brahms's pianoforte concerto in the same key. M. d'Indy, it is said, is an admirer of the German classic-romanticist, and once visited him. Pity that he was not inoculated with the Brahmsian manner of composing. The great concerto received a different reading from that to which we are accustomed, although Mr. Joseffy has played it for us before. Last night he carried his notion of tonal continence to an extreme. Of the fine virility which marks the first movement little was to be heard, and the surpassingly beautiful and brilliant finale was given out with airy grace and a studied elegance which made us wonder what had dissipated all the Magyar spirit in the performer and the always dominant Teutonism of the composer. Accepting Mr. Joseffy's conception of the concerto, however, it was lovely pianoforte playing, and sent thrills of delight through the hearers. As a tribute to the memory of Theodore Thomas, Mr. Gericke sacrificed the overture to "Genoveva," which was to have opened the concert, and substituted for it a funeral march by Schubert. The music proved to be Liszt's transcription for orchestra of a march in E flat minor—the fifth of a set of six for pianoforte, four hands, which Schubert published as op. 40. It was impressively and beautifully played, like the symphony, the accompaniment to the concerto and Dvorak's "Carneval" overture, which brought the concert to a close.

Herald 5

Boston Symphony Concert.

Two things monopolized interest at last night's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall—the reappearance of Rafael Joseffy as the soloist of the occasion, and the local première of a new symphony in B flat major by Vincent d'Indy, one of the foremost radicals of the modern French school.

For the first of these happenings Mr. Gericke should be heartily thanked, since Mr. Joseffy's rare appearances at the piano are invariably treats. Last night's audience greeted the pianist with an immense round of applause and almost rose at him after his artistic playing of the Brahms B flat concerto. As to the symphony, Mr. Gericke can only be thanked on the ground that he exploited, as a warning for young composers, about the queerest orchestral work New York has heard.

[52]

New York. Papers. January 1905.

Mail 15

NEW SYMPHONY BY BOSTON MEN

Gericke and His Orchestra Plays Vincent d'Dindy's Latest Work—Joseffy Reappears—"Die Walkure."

It was characteristic of Mr. Gericke to choose the Schubert Funeral March for last night's tribute to the late Theodore Thomas by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It added to the musical memorial for the dead leader a note quite as distinctive as the Philharmonic Society's playing of the funeral march from Beethoven's "Eroica" or the "Gotterdammerung" death march at the Metropolitan Opera House. A wreath, hung at the back of the Carnegie Hall stage, testified further to the Boston men's respect for Thomas and his work.

Vincent d'Indy's second symphony, in B flat major, was a novelty last night, and Rafael Joseffy, playing the second pianoforte concerto of Brahms, may at least be called a revival—so long is it since this gifted musician has taken his rightful share of duties and rewards in New York's art world. The programme also contained Dvorak's "Carneval" overture; the Schumann "Genoveva" overture gave place to the Schubert Funeral March. A very large audience was present.

Vincent d'Indy's style is very modern, very French—so much was well known to New York audiences. This new symphony marks the utmost limit to which latter day experiment, with what used to be called dissonance, and what has long passed for non-significant intervals and progressions, has gone. Richard Strauss, when he says such things, enshrouds them in a veil of orchestral wrappings, but d'Indy speaks them out with Gallic distinctness—you simply cannot escape the impact of such inexplicable passages as the slow introduction to this symphony provides.

Will this music and its like be a commonplace to hearers of twenty years hence? Stranger things have happened, but to many sympathetic listeners last night a good deal of the d'Indy score must have been puzzling.

Yet there were many passages of rare beauty and expressiveness. The very themes first stated in this introduction, in what may be termed protoplasmic form, become strangely eloquent and persuasive in the first and later movements. A so-called archaic theme, first sung by solo viola at the opening of the third movement, offered an idea immediately grateful to present-day concertgoers, and there were several more which spoke the language of now and testified to veritable inspiration in the composer. But most of the new symphony (which has no story or programme, but claims judgment as absolute music) seemed strained and unilluminating. It would be interesting, however, to hear d'Indy's work again before reaching a too definite conclusion about it.

The Brahms concerto and Mr. Joseffy were at a disadvantage in following so closely the incisive score of d'Indy, for this concerto is in Brahms's thickest, most massive manner, and it sounded at first dull and opaque after the symphony's javelin thrusts of tone. Even after its own mood was established, Mr. Joseffy's performance did not quite "strike bottom," so to say. Delicate, opalescent and exactly proportioned his playing assuredly was, but it seemed unduly subordinated to the orchestra.

Brahms gave much of the musical weight of this work to the orchestra, of course, but the piano part has its own claims, and Mr. Joseffy, except in a few places, such as the exquisite passage near the close of the slow movement, underrated them. One longed for a good masculine tonal outburst. Enthusiasm for Joseffy was unbounded.

Beethoven's fifth symphony kept Mr. Gericke, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and a large audience busy and enthusiastic at Carnegie Hall Saturday afternoon. Such a broad yet nobly balanced performance is not to be come upon every day or every season, in American concert rooms. Mr. Gericke's distinguished and charming orchestral arrangement of the Brahms "Liebesleider" waltzes was also heard with pleasure—though its necessary rhythmic monotony suggests a curtailment of the series for public occasions.

Miss Muriel Foster, the young English contralto, disclosed again her rich voice and large style in "Penelope's Lament," from Bruch's "Odysseus," and in three of Elgar's "Sea Pieces." But for an occasional forcing of her tones, especially in the climax of "The Swimmer," Miss Foster's work was intelligent and well worth while.

Krug Dec 1 16

Wilhelm Gericke's Brahms waltzes might have been played twice over at the Boston Symphony Saturday matinée without anybody feeling that the no-encore rule was violated. They were not long enough. Miss Muriel Foster was—divinely tall, in other words. The "Sea Pictures" were not as clear as her famous marine monologue as the Magdalen in Elgar's "Apostles" last year. To Beethoven's fifth symphony the matinée subscribers listened with confidence and closed eyes.

Staats 15

Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester.

Auch das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester gab gestern Abend bei seinem fünften dieswinterlichen Konzert in Carnegie Hall den Namen Theodor Thomas' eine Ehrung, indem es statt der angekündigten Programmnummer, der „Genovefa"-Ouvertüre von Schumann das Orchesterarrangement des Es-moll-Marsches von Franz Schubert spielte.

Im Uebrigen blieb das Programm unverändert. Es brachte in der zweiten Symphonie von Vincent d'Indy eine Novität, die aller Wahrscheinlichkeit nach hier keine Wiederholungen erleben wird. Was haben denn nur diese modernen Franzosen im Sinn, wenn sie „absolute Musik" schreiben. Wenn man mit der Musik malen und beschreiben will, soll man dem Zuhörer die Erklärung, das Programm nicht vorenthalten. d'Indy giebt nicht einmal eine Andeutung, was er zu schildern beabsichtigt, er läßt uns schadenfroh im Dunkeln tappen, und dafür muß er es nun höchst wahrscheinlich erleben, daß die Leute dieser Symphonie gegenüber kühl bis an's Herz hinan bleiben werden. Daß er sich lose an die Symphonieform hält macht die Komposition nicht zu „absoluter" Musik. Da ist ein fortwährendes Bemühen, gewisse Tonfarben-Stimmungen zu malen, aber der Zweck leuchtet niemandem ein, es sei denn, daß der Komponist dem Wohlklang so weit wie möglich aus dem Wege zu gehen bestrebt ist. Die Ohren des modernen Konzertpublikums sind fürwahr an Dissonanzen genügend gewöhnt, um nicht bange davor zu sein, aber zwecklose Anhäufung von Dissonanzen ermüdet genau so sehr wie gedankenloses Verharren in Konsonanzen. Der erste Satz der Symphonie, mit dem der Komponist vermuthlich das Meiste und Größte ausdrücken wollte, erzählt dem Hörer garnichts. Wohl werden kontrastirende Motive, oder — wegen ihrer Unfruchtbarkeit — Phrasen in Konflikt mit einander gebracht, oder immer nur stoßweise, für Momente. Nichts scheint sich folgerichtig aus dem Vorangegangenen zu entwickeln. Man kann sagen, daß eine Einfallosigkeit immer die andere ablöst. Im zweiten Satz bekommt man neben vielen Bizarrerien doch etwas wie Stimmung zu schmecken. Der dritte Satz ist wieder sehr viel mehr absonderlich als interessant. Im vierten endlich errichtet d'Indy höchst achtungswerthe kontrapunktische Arbeit, und wenn er schließlich zu einem hymnenartigen kurzen Schlußsatz kommt, drängt sich Einem die Idee auf, er wolle damit andeuten, daß es nun nach alle der musikalischen Dunkelheit endlich Tag werde. Und dann ist's mit der Symphonie vorbei. Sie ist dabei noch nicht einmal dankbar zu spielen, trotz aller Instrumentations-Tüftelei. Und trotzdem sie Herrn Gericke gewiß nicht sympathisch sein kann, hatte er sie mit großer Sorgfalt einstudiert.

Um so willkommener mußte nach drei solch' öden Viertelstunden dann das noble Brahms'sche Klavierkonzert (das zweite, in B-dur) sein, zumal Rafael Joseffy es spielte. Ueber das Werk wie über den Spieler brauchte in der That nichts weiter berichtet zu werden, als daß sie genossen wurden. Joseffy entschließt sich so selten zu öffentlichem Auftreten in New York, daß alle Freunde des Klavierspiels das als ein Fest betrachten, einerlei, was er spielt. Am liebsten freilich würden sie ihn in einem langen Recital-Programm hören. Aber es scheint, als wolle er sich nicht erweichen lassen. Wer es noch nicht wußte, konnte es gestern erfahren, daß Joseffy's Technik jenen Grad der Vergeistigung erreicht hat, wo an Arbeit und Schweiß auch nicht im Entferntesten mehr erinnert wird, wo eine Art Unkörperlichkeit eintritt. Gewiß kann das Brahms'sche Konzert, besonders im ersten Satz, mehr Faust vertragen, aber dafür gab Joseffy andrerseits solch illustre Zartheit der Farben, wie sie kein anderer Pianist auf der Palette zu haben scheint. Das Publikum spendete ihm dröhnenden Beifall.

Tribune 15.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA CONCERT

Matinee Programme of Familiar Music —Miss Foster, Soloist.

No such brain racking as Mr. Gericke's programme required of his audience at the Boston Orchestra's first concert of its present trip to New York was called for at the second, which was given yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. The orchestral music was all familiar and all well beloved by concertgoers; it consisted of Beethoven's fifth symphony, Mr. Gericke's own arrangement of waltzes by Brahms, and Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" overture. The orchestral setting of Brahms's waltzes had not been heard here, but many amateurs have delighted in these graceful and amiable pieces in their original form and found increased enjoyment of them in Mr. Gericke's skillful employment of varied and contrasted color to heighten their effect. They are not, on the whole, such supremely happy inspirations as Brahms's waltzes for vocal quartet with accompaniment for four hands upon the piano; but they are very charming and show the same Viennese spirit and suggest the influence that Schubert and Strauss had upon the master from the north, when he had become a citizen of the Austrian capital. There are piquant rhythm and fascinating melodies expressing changing moods of gayety and soberness, and there is a suggestion of the Hungarian character to which Brahms in his more important works recurred again and again. They were a delightful addition to the programme, and Mr. Gericke was compelled to acknowledge expressions of pleasure not only at the subtle grace of the performance of them, but also at his own share in putting them into their newer shape.

The symphony was played with warmth and with a broad and dignified utterance, in which every shade of Beethoven's thoughts, every detail of his instrumentation was lovingly and sympathetically brought to the listener's apprehension. It was in no way sensational; it gave no new significance to any of the familiar themes, dragged out no hitherto unconsidered inner voices to unmerited prominence, introduced no new conceptions of tempo. It was Beethoven's music played with the thought only of Beethoven's intentions and without distortion for the sake of effect. Hence it was impressive, large in style, poetical and beautiful, and it moved with unceasing life. Mr. Gericke secured admirable balance and blending of the orchestral timbres; the ensemble was perhaps not quite so near perfection as it has been on other occasions, and there were a few little slips among some of the wind players that were noticeable chiefly because they happened at unfortunate moments.

Miss Muriel Foster was the soloist, a singer of remarkable gifts of voice—to say nothing of her delight to the eye as she stands upon the stage—who made a highly favorable impression when she first appeared in New York last year. She is one of the characteristic English contraltos who seem to bloom and blossom in a garden by themselves; for no other nation, apparently, produces them in the same kind. Miss Foster has still something to learn about the management of her beautiful voice, and it is to be hoped she will learn it, for her present methods of singing do not tend to its preservation. She must also learn the better enunciation of the texts of her music, for in the three "Sea Songs," by Elgar, that she gave, very little was intelligible. Her intelligence, taste, and musical feeling, however, are unmistakable. She delivered the broadly planned but musically not very inspired recitative and air from Max Bruch's "Odysseus" with splendid dignity and nobility of style, and in the songs by Elgar she sought to give characteristic expression to their sentiment. They, too, are of no very high musical value, but are presented in an attractive light through the skillful orchestration of the accompaniments.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Mr. Gericke's Players and Miss Muriel Foster Give a Delightful Matinee.

Wilhelm Gericke's faculty of making good programmes out of apparently ill assorted material was again in evidence at yesterday's matinee concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Carnegie Hall. Beethoven's Fifth Symphony headed the list—perhaps as a sort of orthodox confession of faith to offset the radicalism of the new D'Indy symphony given on Thursday evening.

Following this was Penelope's Lament, from Max Bruch's "Odysseus," opus 41; a set of waltzes by Brahms, orchestrated by Mr. Gericke; three numbers from Edward Elgar's "Sea Pictures," for contralto and orchestra, and finally the overture to Wagner's "Flying Dutchman." The soloist was Miss Muriel Foster, contralto.

It was an anaemic sort of interpretation which was given to the symphony—exact and highly polished for the most part, of course, but in nowise stirring. Moreover there was one or two instrumental accidents, as when a horn player lost his "pucker" in the first movement and a bassoon spilled some "sour notes" later on. The Brahms waltzes, too, might well have had a stronger dash of the real Vienna "ginger," though their delightfully devised orchestration charmed the audience and won the biggest applause of the afternoon.

Miss Foster has been gifted with so fine a voice that she should be warned against forcing it, especially in its lower part, as she frequently did yesterday. Her singing of the Max Bruch Recitative and Prayer, from "Odysseus," was a big dramatic achievement, but it would have been just as telling and more pleasing with the expenditure of half the vocal force she put into it.

The same thing was suggested, though not so frequently, in the Elgar songs.

The concert closed with a luminous, though scarcely exciting, performance of the "Flying Dutchman" overture.

[53]

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Had it not been for the C minor symphony of Beethoven, which opened the concert at Carnegie Hall, yesterday afternoon, Mr. Gericke would have been fairly chargeable with having delivered a rather light cargo on his third visit to the metropolis this season. There was avoirdupois, it is true, in Miss Muriel Foster's contralto voice, but not in her offerings, and as for the manner in which she presented them, there was nothing to promote either the serious pleasure which the symphony gave or the light heartedness inspired by Mr. Gericke's orchestral transcription of a set of pianoforte waltzes for four hands by Brahms, which formed the middle number of his scheme. That Miss Foster has a voice equally magnificent in quantity and quality all our music lovers know; they never knew, till yesterday, however, what inroads a vicious manner of singing is making upon her performances. Appeal to the annotated programme indicated that she sang a scena from Bruch's "Odysseus" in German, and three of Elgar's songs, called "Sea Pictures," in English. She might as well have sung them in Choctaw and Hindoostanee, so far as their intelligibility was concerned; and the value of such music depends upon an understanding of the words that are uttered. When those words are in the vernacular it is not fair to compel the listener to fix his attention incessantly upon the printed book in order to understand the purposes of the composer. Yet without the book yesterday's audience would have been hopelessly at sea no less in the English songs than in the German scena. The traditional oratorio style of England ought to save us from such infliction by English singers, but it does not. The French and German schools of singing have not failed of condemnation; is it not time that their virtues, so far as the treatment of the text is concerned, be recognized and emulated by the English school? Why not have purity of manner in vocalization (which Miss Foster seems also to have forgotten) paired with proper recognition of the genius of the language?

Mr. Gericke's transcription of the Brahms waltzes was a pretty echo of the Vienna of old, when Schubertian melody was in the air. Afterward came Lanner and the Strausses, but then some of the old, ingenuous feeling had already departed, and in its place came the spirit which Byron castigated in his poem. No waltz by the greatest Strauss was ever orchestrated so charmingly as these dances which Mr. Gericke passed through the refining fires of his fancy, but he could not infuse them with the sensual swing of the modern dance. Schumann said of one of Chopin's idealized waltzes that he could only imagine it danced by a party of whom half, at least, were countesses; Brahms's waltzes ought to be danced by poets—if poets are to be accepted as types of intellectually and morally refined men and women. The overture to Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" brought the concert to a close.

BOSTON BAND PLAYS AGAIN.

Beethoven's Fifth Symphony Given Well and Miss Foster Sings.

"Monotonous" would not be a proper term for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's second concert of the week in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. Yet, save for Beethoven's ever-inspiring Fifth Symphony, nothing of big significance and absorbing interest was offered. Brahms's four-hand waltzes, effectively arranged for orchestra by Mr. Gericke, came to a good hearing, but through the rigidity of the conductor's interpretation they lost much of their natural lightness and charm. Wagner's overture to "The Flying Dutchman," although given with the clearness of outline and beauty of tone in which the Boston orchestra excels, also was lacking in dramatic power.

Even Miss Muriel Foster, English contralto, who was heard to advantage in Penelope's Recitative and Prayer from Bruch's "Odysseus" and in three of Edward Elgar's "Sea Pictures," left the audience cold. Miss Foster has dramatic feeling and intelligence and her voice has not succumbed entirely to what popular taste in England seems to demand from singers of her ilk. Yet she puts too heavy a strain on her vocal organ. A throaty tendency is not always successfully hidden and a fondness to accentuate the contralto timbre by driving tones into the chin, as it were, is often disagreeably apparent. She sang the Bruch number with fine breadth of expression, if somewhat heavily, and the three Elgar selections she interpreted effectively.

In his arrangement of the sixteen waltzes of Brahms Wilhelm Gericke has omitted Nos. 7 and 16 and has repeated No. 2 as a coda. His orchestration is appropriate and effective, but his manner of conducting the work is not calculated to alter the opinion of those who see nothing but an austere pedagogue in the composer. Beethoven's Symphony received an impressive performance.

SYMPHONY CHARMS AGAIN.

Boston Orchestra in Good Fettle and Programme Interesting.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra drew an enormous audience to Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. It was, to say the least, an infinitely more interesting programme than the concert of Thursday evening. The orchestra was in magnificent playing fettle and once more displayed its marvellous individual and ensemble beauty of tone.

Especially was this true of the Beethoven Fifth Symphony, which was played with almost flawless accuracy.

Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" overture was also played beautifully enough, but there was in Mr. Gericke's reading not the smallest trace of temperamental storm.

Miss Muriel Foster, the English singer, sang Bruch's Penelope's Lament from "Odysseus" and three "Sea Pictures" by Edward Elgar. The singer's voice seemed mostly noted for its volume.

January 1903

Globe 16

Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester.

Das sechste Konzert des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters fand gestern Nachmittag in Carnegie Hall vor einem zahlreichen Publikum statt. Das Programm war kurz, und außerdem stellte es an den Zuhörer keine erschwerenden Zumuthungen. Herr Gericke pflegt ja die Samstagnachmittagsprogramme überhaupt dem populären Geschmack anzupassen, und das scheint grade dem Publikum dieser Konzerte zu behagen. Gestern fing das Programm mit Beethoven's C-moll Symphonie an, Wagner's Ouvertüre zum „Fliegenden Holländer" machte den Beschluß, und als Zwischennummer wurde Gericke's Orchesterarrangement der vierhändigen Clavier-Walzer von Brahms gespielt. Die Solonummern aber bestanden in einer Alt-Arie aus Max Bruch's „Odysseus" und drei Elgar'schen Liedern.

An dem Vortrage der Symphonie konnte man ganz besonders seine Freude haben, denn sie wurde nicht nur sehr klar und mit der großen Klangschönheit, die dem ausgezeichneten Orchester zu Gebote steht, sondern auch mit erfreulicher Wärme des Ausdrucks gespielt. Sicherlich bildete dieser Symphonie-Vortrag für die meisten Zuhörer den Hauptgenuß. Die „Holländer"-Ouvertüre dagegen faßte der Dirigent wieder gar zu zart, wie mit Glacé-Handschuhen an. Dieses prachtvolle Tongemälde verlangt denn doch energischere Pinselstriche bei der Reproduktion. Der Wind war nicht viel mehr als ein Säuseln und die Matrosen hatten statt schwerer Thranstiefeln zierliche Lackschuhe an. Den Brahms'schen Walzern, denen Herr Gericke keineswegs ein orchestrales Prunkkleid angezogen hat, wurde derselbe bescheidene Erfolg zu theil wie im vorigen Jahre, wo sie ebenfalls in einem Nachmittagsprogramm erschienen.

Fräulein Muriel Foster, die Solistin, erwarb sich mit ihrer außerordentlichen Altstimme und mit ihrem dramatisch belebten, ordentlich un-englischen Vortrag wieder vielen Beifall. Von den Altistinnen, die London uns gesandt, ist sie doch wohl die interessanteste. Uebrigens sind die drei Lieder aus dem Cyklus „Seebilder" nicht zu Elgar's besten Arbeiten zu rechnen, indessen machten sie mit dem Vortrag des Fräulein Foster doch einen besseren Eindruck, als bei Gelegenheit ihrer ersten Vorführung durch Clara Butt, der sie gewidmet sind. Fräulein Muriel Foster hat gewisse Eigenthümlichkeiten der Tonbildung, die gelegentlich stören, aber im Ganzen genommen, ist Stimme und Vortrag höchst sympathisch. Die Dame hatte wohlverdienten großen Erfolg beim Publikum.

TO the memory of Theodore Thomas Schubert's Funeral March began the concert of the Boston Orchestra last night, instead of Schumann's overture, as first announced, to "Genoveva." The "noble monotony" of the familiar music threw into strong relief the violence, the abruptness, the blind battle for effect of D'Indy's second symphony that followed it. In one important respect, D'Indy differs from Richard Strauss and his imitators. At least, he insists on the paramount rights of absolute music, even on the necessity that music shall play its own drama of themes and development without reference to printed programme or outside hint. But beyond this confession of faith it is hard to see where D'Indy differs musically from the rest.

He presents, to be sure, certain themes, such as they are, which are elaborately combined and carried over from movement to movement to be subjected at last to the most intricate torments of polyphonic writing. Yet, despite this specious pretense of unity, there is no final effect of purely musical form and proportion that the older symphonic composers sought. The listener feels continual need of some verbal clue to the ingenious fragments set before him, and there are few moments of purely musical beauty or significance to lighten his judgment. Some believe in the value of Richard Strauss's thematic material, and some do not, but in regard to D'Indy's tunes, progressing as they do by fifths and sevenths, there can be but one opinion. Not since the notorious prelude to the second act of Strauss's "Guntram" has New York heard such cacophony as the introduction to this symphony.

In its instrumental dress, too, this symphony of D'Indy's is as ultra-modern, though far from the elaborate prettiness of most French composers. Contrast is the dominant characteristic. Some huge orchestral crisis gives way to the solo voice of flute or English horn. Groans from the abysses of the bass are answered by the shrillest pipings of the piccolo. Perhaps all this sound and fury does mean something, perhaps it means the persistent strife of two of the principal themes, or, to adapt Mrs. Apthorp's bon mot, the life and adventures of a melodic couple. If so, one should have a hint from outside the music itself. Otherwise its reason for existence is not apparent. There is much reason to fear that D'Indy's symphony is nothing in the world but programme music without a programme.

Globe 16

The Boston Orchestra.

IF IT were not for Gericke and the Boston band, we might similarly be taking for granted the masterpieces of absolute music. When the Philharmonic plays them, in these days, most of us are thinking how the "star" conductor of the evening is "interpreting" the particular one that he has chosen. Damrosch and his men sometimes do them in the dutiful fashion that is the unkind fate that befalls the classics in many arts. But when the Boston Orchestra plays them, as it played Beethoven's fifth symphony on Saturday afternoon, they live again. You almost rediscover them, and you thrill under the joy of the rediscovery. You are not thinking of Gericke as you listen. It is only afterward that you recall that he has seemingly read the full mind of Beethoven in the symphony, and yet has been content to let Beethoven speak through him and his men. You think no more of the virtuosity of those men.

The perfection of the results that they attain hides the means of expression as only art at something near its highest can do. Next morning you may tick off in cold blood these orchestral excellences—exquisite clarity and suppleness of tone, perfect euphony in the several groups of instruments, the finest feeling for degrees in the weight and the quality of tone, the symmetry of the whole, and all the rest. But as you listen you feel only the beauty and the power of the music itself. Here a mind declares itself in music, and yet speaks with the peculiar beauty of formal sound and makes that beauty the expression of the deepest feeling. It is one of the largest and finest of all artistic achievements so to make a classic renew all its first potency. Gericke and his men did it with the fifth symphony.

MURIEL FOSTER IS STAR OF SYMPHONY

Her Rich Contralto Notes Heard to Advantage with Boston Orchestra.

Muriel Foster sang at the Boston Symphony concert yesterday. She is tall, dark-haired, English, admirable. If she had just stepped out of a Rossetti canvas she could not have been more poetic.

2She sang Penelope's recitative and prayer from "Odysseus," by Bruch, and three songs, "Sea Pictures," by Elgar. She was applauded because her contralto notes are beautiful, but she was adversely criticised because she forces them and she enunciates badly.

The orchestra played gravely Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, C minor; exquisitely, Brahms's waltzes orchestrated by Mr. Gericke; fascinately, the overture to the "Flying Dutchman."

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

It Gives a Splendid Performance of Tschaikowsky's Symphonic Masterpiece

The feature of the very excellent and enjoyable concert which was given at the Academy of Music last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was a performance of the "Pathetique" Symphony of Tschaikowsky, which, in the dignity of its sentiment, the beauty of its tone, the eloquence of its expression and the lucidity of its analysis, was the most luminous, the most impressive and the most satisfying interpretation of this justly admired composition that has ever been given in Philadelphia.

It was altogether splendid, and it communicated a new sense of the majesty and pathos and meaning of the work. In only one particular did it leave anything to desire, and this was in the rendering of the barbaric march, which in its various presentations forms so large part of the third movement, and to which upon its repetition by the whole orchestra, with the clash of the cymbal to accentuate the fortissimo climax, a wilder abandon might advantageously have been imparted. Mr. Gericke, who so dearly loves refinement, could not bring himself at this critical juncture to allow the cymbal player an untramelled liberty, and the consequence was that the appreciative listened missed his expected thrill. But in the respects that have been noted the reading of the passionate allegro of the melancholy waltz, with its ominously suggestive trio, and of the last despairing adagio, was wonderfully fine, and the persistent applause which compelled Mr. Gericke to signal the players to rise and bow their acknowledgements to the audience—the first time he ever did such a thing in this city—was thoroughly well deserved.

After all, there is only one Boston Symphony Orchestra, and when it lets itself out as it did last night there is no rivalling the effect which it produces. The other orchestral numbers were a setting by Mr. Gericke of some waltzes by Brahms and the sumptuous "Carneval" Overture of Dvorak. Miss Muriel Foster, an English contralto, was the soloist. She has a big voice with plenty of range and volume, but not much charm, and she sang "Penelope's Recitative" and "Prayer" from Bruch's "Odysseus" and three songs by Elgar in a manner which showed experience, education and authority.

Globe Jan. 11—

VINCENT D'INDY'S symphony, that the Boston Orchestra is to play here for the first time to-morrow evening, is not a year old. It is his custom to alternate the composition of an opera with the writing of absolute music in the larger forms, and this second symphony followed his most recent opera, "The Stranger." The symphony is without a programme of any sort. D'Indy wrote not long ago: "Symphonic music, unlike dramatic music, is developing toward complexity: the dramatic element is more and more introduced into absolute music, in such a way that form is here, as a rule, absolutely submissive to the incidents of a veritable action." His friend, Calvocoressi, who has analyzed this second symphony at length, supplies a note to this remark: "To search for an action that is not purely musical in absolute music would be madness. There is, indeed, an action in this symphony, but it is wholly in the music: the putting into play of two principal themes, which present themselves at the beginning side by side, follow each other, war against each other, or, on the contrary, are each developed separately, associate with themselves new ideas which complete or serve as commentary, and at the end are blended in an immense triumphal chant." It would be idle, then, to attempt to characterize these themes as though they were dramatic motives, but two decided elements of musical expression are strongly opposed to each other.

D'INDY'S habits of life and musical point of view are not those that we usually associate with French composers. He is not fond of Paris, and he is a little disdainful of the smooth elegance of much French music. In the programme book of the Boston Orchestra Philip Hale gives some interesting particulars:

D'Indy, he says, was always a lover of nature His family came originally from the mountains of the Cévennes. They are naked, barren, forbidding, and D'Indy has long been in the habit of spending his vacations among them. He has also delighted in the Tyrol, the Engadine, the Black Forest. He has listened intently to what Millet called "the cry of the earth." In a letter written in 1887 he said: "At this moment I see the snowy summits of the Alps, the nearer mountains, the plain of the Rhone, the pine woods that I know so well, and the green, rich harvest which has not yet been gathered. It is a true pleasure to be here after the labors and the vexations of the winter. What they call at Paris 'the artistic world' seems afar off and a trifling thing. Here is true repose, here one feels at the true source of all art." His love of nature is seen in his music, and some of his chamber music in particular suggests the austerity of mountain scenery.

In his childhood, Mr. Hale continues, d'Indy loved folk-tales and fantastic stories. Then he read eagerly the works of Uhland, Hoffman, Poe. Then came the worship of Dante, and then he came under the influence of Shakespeare, Molière, Schiller, Goethe. Flaubert, especially by his "Temptation of Saint Anthony," made a profound impression on him. In painting he prefers the masters of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, and he confesses frankly that he experiences a greater and more artistic stimulus in the presence of the Assyrian art long before Christ than in the presence of the art known to Pericles. Imbert says that d'Indy will remain for hours in contemplation before the pictures of certain primitive German or Flemish painters, while the marvellous compositions of the Italian painters of the Renaissance leave him cold. "So that one may well trace in his preference for the colossal and rude works of earlier times, and in his disdain for the charming creations of the Renaissance, the determination to keep from his music all that seems to him to have the least affectation, or that which is merely graceful or tender."

For Future Engagements of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Encouraged by the sale of practically the entire house for the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Court Square Theater in January, and also by the hearty approval and suggestions made at the time the management has decided to give a second concert in the same place, on Monday evening, March 27. It is the further intention to give two concerts in Springfield each season, on the assumption that the musical community demand, are entitled to and will support more than one concert, especially at the popular prices which prevailed for the January concert, which places these superb performances easily within the reach of all.

This second concert will be utilized as the opportunity to inaugurate in Springfield a plan which has proved most successful in other cities. The sale of tickets will be conducted in the usual way, but purchasers of tickets, by simply registering their names, addresses and the numbers of their seats, can renew the same seats for both concerts next season, by filling out and mailing with check or money order blanks, which will be sent them with a stamped envelope at a proper interval before the first concert. This registration does not oblige one to take the tickets, but simply affords them the opportunity to secure the same seats for another season without attending a ticket sale, standing in line or other inconvenience. In New York, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Baltimore, Hartford, Providence and other cities visited by the orchestra, patrons have occupied the same seats for many years by availing themselves of this plan. The privilege of renewal in this way will obtain until a few days before the first concert, when the unclaimed seats will be offered to the general public in an open sale. Further details as to program, soloist, and

---

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

A Splendid Concert Last Evening in Hartford, With Miss Aus der Ohe as Soloist.

A pleasant foretaste of the treat in store for the audience at the concert to be given this evening in Court Square theater was enjoyed last evening by a number of people from this city who went down to Hartford to hear the concert in Footguard hall. The soloist was Miss Aus der Ohe, who will play to-night, but the program was different except for the very poetic and interesting work by Debussy, "The Afternoon of a Faun," which is the novelty of the program this evening. The Hartford program was more modern; the concert to-night offers as fine as possible a blending of the old and the new. For an opening number there is Mendelssohn's charming and little heard overture, "Camacho's Wedding," after which Miss Aus der Ohe plays the colossal Tschaikowsky concerto in B flat minor. This is followed by the Debussy prelude, and the program closes with Beethoven's C minor symphony, one of the very greatest works ever written for orchestra, and as fresh and full of life now as when it was penned. The sale of tickets has been encouraging, and the outlook is for an even larger audience than last year. This is quite the finest musical attraction of the season, and the program is one to interest the general public as well as the musical.

At the concert last evening in Hartford the chief features were the Tschaikowsky Pathetic symphony, superbly played under Mr Gericke's direction, the brilliant concerto in E flat in which Miss Aus der Ohe won a distinct personal triumph, and the Debussy prelude. Miss Aus der Ohe seems to be playing better this year than ever before, with increased brilliance and breadth, and her performance of the concerto was in every way notable. She will make a no less profound impression this evening in the Tschaikowsy concerto, a work of greater emotional power than the ever-popular Liszt composition, and no less brilliant and effective. The orchestral accompaniment was beautifully finished, and the solo instrument was not obscured at any point. It was a violent change from the morbid melancholy of the finale of the Pathetic symphony to the clear-cut, sonorous opening theme of the "Triangle" concerto, but the very force of the contrast saved it, and the colors of the Liszt composition are sufficiently bold and dominating to endure a juxtaposition from which most works suffer. Yet to put the Pathetic symphony last, as is sometimes done to avoid this difficulty, is to send an audience home in too doleful a frame of mind. On the whole the program was very effectively arranged, and the vigorous, brazen "Flying Dutchman" overture, by Wagner, brought the concert to a brilliant close.

There was much interest in the first production in Hartford of "The Afternoon of a Faun," by Claude Debussy. This not very long work has been written about a great deal, but all that has been said of it can be reduced to its title, which is sufficiently suggestive. The music is simply an impressionistic sketch, suggested by Mallarme's Eclogne. It sounds as unreal as the scene which suggests it, and as poetic as a painting by Corot. The effect of the whole is curiously vague, and yet the little thread of chromatic melody with its individual rhythm is easily distinguished. Debussy's harmonic scheme is strange, both in the separate chords used and in their professions. He is one of the advance guard of new French harmonists.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Another Concert to Be Given in Court Square Theater in March.

The Boston Symphony orchestra has been engaged for another concert, to be given in Court Square theater Monday evening, March 27. This is news which will delight all music-lovers, and the public at large as well. There is but one Boston symphony orchestra, and it is generally appreciated that such an event is so far out of the ordinary that no one can afford to miss it. For the concert in January the theater was packed with an audience made up both of the habitual concert-goers, and of those who seldom take an interest in music. Hundreds of people came from out of town. The program was of an ideal sort, and a more enthusiastic audience has seldom been seen. So encouraging was the reception of the orchestra that it has been decided as an experiment to see if the city cannot support two concerts a season. Hartford has three, and provides large audiences; surely Springfield should have two. The success of the other concert was due in great measure to the efforts of musical people, who realized that to sustain these annual concerts here the public as a whole must be interested, and did their best for weeks before the event to stir up enthusiasm in the matter. The number of concerts which the orchestra can give is limited, but it has been promised that this city may have regularly two a year if the patronage meets the cost. It is worth a vigorous effort. It is desired that these concerts may become thoroughly popular, enlisting the interest of all classes, and to that end the same very low scale of prices will be kept that prevailed at the last concert, a considerable number of seats being offered at 50 cents.

At this second concert opportunity will be taken to inaugurate a plan which has proved successful in other cities. The sale of tickets will be conducted in the usual way, but purchasers of tickets, by simply registering their names, addresses and the number of their seats, can renew the same seats for both concerts next season by filling out and mailing with check or money order blanks which will be sent them with a stamped envelope at a proper interval before the first concert next fall. This registration does not oblige one to take the tickets, but simply affords them the opportunity to secure the same seats for another season without attending a ticket sale, standing in line or other inconvenience. In New York, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Baltimore, Hartford, Providence and other cities visited by the orchestra, patrons have occupied the same seats for many years by availing themselves of this plan. The privilege of renewal in this way will obtain until a few days before the first concert, when the unclaimed seats will be offered to the general public in an open sale. Further details as to program, soloist and date of ticket sale will be announced later.

REDUCTION

RATIO

17x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

THE SUN

BALTIMORE, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1905

GIVES BRILLIANT CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Excellent Program.

The program that was given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was such an improvement on the recent arrangements of Mr. Gericke as to be noteworthy. In the first place the symphony was at the beginning of the concert. This was an inestimable boon. Furthermore there was a nice adjustment of the other concert pieces, which gave a considerable degree of variety and of real musical interest.

In hearing the Beethoven Fifth Symphony it was impossible not to recall the last appearance of Theodore Thomas in Baltimore. It was at the Lyric (then Music Hall) four or five years ago. The symphony was the one that was played last night.

The influences of an interpretative musical artist must necessarily be ephemeral. He leaves behind him nothing tangible by which future generations can value him. His name may last through one lifetime after his death, but very rarely longer. If, however, Theodore Thomas accomplished in many of his concerts what he did on this occasion in Baltimore—if the impressions that he made were as deep—he performed a work which in spite of the absence of actual monuments is as valuable and as honorable as can be done in any other department of art or human activity.

It would be useless to make any comparison of Mr. Gericke's and Mr. Thomas' reading of this symphony. Each has the stamp of the individuality of the conductor. Mr. Gericke's excessive preciseness seems almost out of place in such a monumental work, and it was in those portions of the work where exquisite finish was appropriate that the conductor was most successful last night.

The first two movements left little to be desired. In the last two one might have wished for greater independence and greater vigor of conception. Still it is very hard to overestimate the luxury of hearing the Fifth Symphony played by such a perfectly drilled orchestra and with such a thoughtful, if not impassioned, leader.

Possibly because it is the most familiar of symphonies—most likely because it is the most inspired—no orchestral work is able to produce the impression that Beethoven's Fifth Symphony does. The Choral Symphony is rarely satisfactory because of its immense difficulties. The Eroica and the Pastoral Symphonies do not possess the deeply human quality that is peculiar to the work given last night.

The other orchestral selections were the Brahms Waltzes, orchestrated by Mr. Gericke, and the overture to "The Flying Dutchman."

Many persons have the feeling that an overture should be placed first on the program, but there was no inappropriateness last night in having the overture preludize at the end of the concert. On the contrary there was a distinct gain in permitting the symphony to have the commanding position. The overture made an effective and interesting conclusion to the concert.

It is an overture in the un-Wagnerian sense of the word. While stamped with many of Wagner's peculiarities—his turns of expression, his wonderful power of describing things seen and heard in terms of music—it is full of allusion to themes used later in the opera. The opera itself was the last in which he made considerable concessions to the Italian operatic style.

The Brahms waltzes were too Brahms-like to be good waltzes and too waltz like to be like Brahms. But they were effective in the position they occupied on the program and furnished an agreeable leaven to the evening's music.

The soloist was the English contralto, Miss Muriel Foster. It would be a most agreeable task to attribute to this singer all the qualities of a great artist. Hers is a personality of very great charm. She is endowed with extraordinary beauty, with unmistakable charm of manner and bearing, with an excellent voice and with the best intentions, but she is far from being an accomplished prima donna. Her selections were not well made and her singing of them was somewhat amateurish.

Miss Foster sang first Penelope's recitation and prayer from Bruch's "Odysseus." It was certainly a very monotonous prayer, neither eloquent nor touching.

Then followed those songs from a cycle of five for contralto and orchestra by Edward Elgar. These were much more interesting, especially the first two. The last one was too pretentious.

Elgar is the English musical lion of today. He is attracting attention on all sides and is unquestionably a man of unusual gifts. His songs have some admirable qualities, but they are generally overwrought—too much workmanship and not enough ideas.

His "Sea Pictures" were sung by Mme. Kirkby-Lunn at one of the Boston Symphony concerts, but with them she was unable to show the great abilities she has since revealed as Kundry in "Parsifal."

Miss Foster was warmly applauded, especially after the Elgar songs. She unquestionably gave a good deal of pleasure and there is no reason to believe that she will not develop into an admirable singer.

The program was so excellent that the concert could not fail to be a brilliant success. It was as follows:

Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67..... Beethoven
I. Allegro con brio.
II. Andante con moto.
III. Allegro: Trio.
IV. Allegro.

Penelope's Recitative and Prayer, from "Odysseus"..... Bruch

Waltzes..... Brahms
Orchestrated by W. Gericke.

"Sea Pictures"..... Edward Elgar
(Three songs from a cycle of five, for contralto and orchestra, Op. 37.)

Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"..... Wagner

T. S. B.

Baltimore American
AND COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1905.

Boston Symphony Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its third concert for this season at the Lyric last evening, under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, presenting the following program:

Beethoven—
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67.
1. Allegro con brio.
2. Andante con moto.
3. Allegro: Trio.
4. Allegro.

Bruch—
Penelope's Recitative and Prayer from "Odysseus."

Brahms—
Waltzes.
Orchestrated by W. Gericke.

Edward Elgar—
"Sea Pictures." Three Songs from a Cycle of Five for Contralto and Orchestra, Op. 37.

Wagner—
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman."

Soloist—Miss Muriel Foster.

Two great numbers made it a fine concert, the Beethoven Symphony and the Wagner Overture. The other numbers were not up to a high standard.

[5]

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

A Beethoven Symphony and Miss Aus der Ohe's Playing the Features of a Superb Concert.

There cannot have been many concerts in the history of Springfield equal to the performance in Court Square theater last evening by the Boston symphony orchestra. Certainly this magnificent organization has never appeared to better advantage. The concert last year was good, but there was far more vital interest last evening, chiefly, no doubt, from the superiority of the program. The best is none too good for an audience that has to make one concert last so long, and last evening's program was of a substantial and inspiring sort, suited to people who hear a first-rate orchestra only once a year. Is it not time, by the way, for a more ambitious enterprise? Hartford sustains three concerts by this orchestra every season. Cannot this city manage two? If one came in the early fall and one in the late winter neither ought to hurt the attendance of the other, and the increase of opportunities would tend to spread and keep alive interest in music of this sort. The limits of a single concert have nearly been reached, for Court Square theater was crowded last evening, and there would not have been room for many more. It is certainly to be hoped that some one will be courageous enough next season to arrange for a second concert. The performance last evening was the 11th in this city, and makes something over 2000 for the Boston symphony orchestra, which has a record unapproached by any other organization in the world. This is its 24th season, but the New York Philharmonic society, which has been in existence for over 60 years, has not given half so many concerts. More than 1000 of these have been conducted by Mr. Gericke, who probably holds the record in this respect, now that Theodore Thomas is gone.

Miss Adele Aus der Ohe, who was the soloist last evening, has probably been heard in Springfield as often as any other pianist of note, and has never failed to distinguish herself and to stir her audience to enthusiasm. Many recall her first appearance here with Theodore Thomas and his orchestra at a concert given in City hall in 1888, under C. N. Stimpson & Co and B. F. Saville. That was a gala year in Springfield. The concert was so successful that it was followed by another, and then by the Boston symphony orchestra. There had been several dull seasons before, and these concerts marked the musical renascence which culminated in the foundation of the Hampden county festival association. Miss Aus der Ohe, then a young girl with her hair down in a braid, had not been so very long in the country, but had already made a reputation as a very talented and accomplished player. She played a concerto which made a deep impression on the audience, and ever since then she has held a rather special place in the favor of the public. Since then she has appeared frequently, both in recitals and with the orchestra at music festivals, but she has never appeared to better advantage than last evening in the passionate and tremendous Tschaikowsky concerto in B flat minor. The emotional power of this work has been revealed to us by the ardent and gifted Teresa Carreno. Miss Aus der Ohe's interpretation was not the same, but it was also powerful, inspiring and artistic. That it was authentic may be taken for granted, if only because she enjoyed the distinction of playing the work under the composer's direction in St Petersburg while it was still new.

The B flat minor by common consent holds a place among the very greatest of concertos for piano and orchestra, and in intensity of mood there is perhaps no other equal to it. That miraculous outburst at the very opening, with the gripping melody in the orchestra running athwart the powerful ascending chord masses in the piano never fails to stir the listener deeply, and strikes the keynote of the work. It sometimes verges on the bizarre, there are melodies that run perilously near to the border line of triviality—one of them was stolen for Anna Held's "Won't you come out," etc.—but this is part of the very genius of the great Russian composer, whose place in history cannot yet be estimated, but whose command of emotional stress has never been equaled. There are few women who have either the power or the temperament to cope satisfactorily with this strenuous work. Miss Aus der Ohe is one of the few. At all times a bold, positive, sincere pianist, throwing herself soul and body into her playing, she never appears to better advantage than when stirred to competition with an orchestra in the interpretation of a great work. Last night she rose superbly to the great climaxes, and there was no lack of sensuous beauty in the exquisite bits of melody with which the work is filled. The extremely difficult orchestral part which the pianist Buelow had such trouble with when he played the concerto a quarter of a century ago, was wonderfully done last night under Mr Gericke, exquisitely finished, perfectly adjusted to the solo, and with no lack of emotional expression. Miss Aus der Ohe's services have never been in greater demand than now, and she is having a busy week. Monday evening she played in Hartford, last evening here, this afternoon she appears in New York and this evening she plays in Philadelphia. This is an exacting routine, but she manages to keep all the delightful freshness and vigor of her playing.

The program last evening contained but four numbers which were interesting and instructive by their immense contrast in mood and in color. First came Mendelssohn's overture to "Camacho's Wedding," gay, light, brilliant, charming. As different as possible was the dramatic, high-colored, overpowering Tschaikowsky concerto. Then after a brief pause the transition was equally sudden to the cool, thin, aerial tints of Debussy's "Tse Afternoon of a Faun." And from this extreme example of the new French harmonie school it was good to get back to the plain solid colors of the classical German school as represented in the Beethoven C minor symphony. What an astonishing development in special effects there has been since Beethoven's time, with no progress at all in the essential thing—greatness of fundamental ideas. Will Tschaikowsky swear so well? It is much to be doubted. The very intensity of his moods makes it the more probable that exhaustion and reaction will come. That classical art outwearies other kinds is due in great part to the very self-restraint which is the essence of the classics. Beethoven screams, but he never screams, and the new Russian music, like the new Russian literature, sometimes verges on the hysterical.

This B flat minor concerto, for example, with its alternations from the Volga to the beautiful blue Danube, is like a composite of the late Vasili Verestchagin's pictures of the carnage of war and his Ottoman seraglios—the two halves of Russian art. One gets everything except rest. Lasting art needs a firmer foundation. In the Debussy interpretation of a Mellarme poem, on the other hand, we see the specialty of France, a cult of art for art's sake. The orchestral palette studied as a French landscape painter studies his pigments; a dextrous, successful attempt by a firm and sensitive intelligence to capture a mood, to convey a delicate, lovely impression. Corot and Rousseau have hardly succeeded better in catching the elusive poetry of a sylvan vista. Vague, swift, charming, exquisite and novel in its tints, "The Afternoon of a Faun" stands very well for the art which has been specialized, perfected and refined at the expense of vitality.

And then to close we come back to Beethoven the leonine, the man in whom temperament and intellect balance more perfectly than in any other composer, passionate but not neurotic; simple-minded, sincere and great. The further he recedes into the background the more he towers up as the dominating figure of the 19th century. Even though his symphonies seem colorless when placed beside some modern work in which the pessimism and unrest of the later years of the century are set forth with all the appealing many-voiced eloquence of the modern orchestra, they speedily assert their true grandeur, win back wavering allegiance by the strong faith and nobility of their utterance. In none of his symphonies do these qualities find more gracious and genial expression than in the C minor. The "Eroica" has perhaps greater power, the seventh has an unmatched poignancy of feeling, the adagio of the choral symphony lifts us into the very highest places of all. But by its symmetry and completeness, its perfect union of rugged power with melting tenderness and grace, and by the sturdy optimism of a work which challenges destiny with haughty courage, the fifth of Beethoven's symphonies well deserves its place as the favorite of the nine. It was played superbly, the lovely andante best of all. It is hard to see how the graceful and charming variations could be played with more smoothness and beauty of tone. In the opening allegro one might wish for a bit more of energy in the hammer strokes of the powerful first theme, even at the expense of roughness, and in the scherzo there were places where a trifle more of accent on one note or another would have made the rhythm more telling. The essential note was sometimes barely audible. But all in all it was the best performance of the symphony that has ever been given here. Prof Willy Hess, the new concert master of the orchestra, appeared for the first time in Springfield—at Springfield, the program book is ungracious enough to call it—and gave much pleasure by his beautiful playing of a brief obligato in the

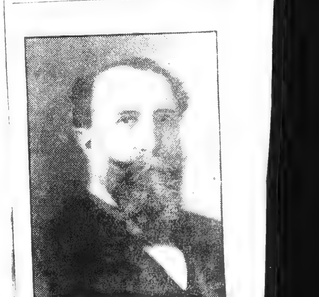
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Concert to be Given This Week at Court Square Theater.

The most notable musical event of the season comes this week—the annual concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra to be given Tuesday evening at Court Square theater. This more than makes up for the lack of other concerts. Those who can will also do well to hear Mme Lillian Blauvelt, the favorite American soprano, who sings at Smith college in Northampton Wednesday evening and at Mount Holyoke college in South Hadley Friday evening. Her singing is well worth a journey, and conversely music lovers in neighboring towns will be richly repaid for coming to the splendid symphony concert which has been advertised for Tuesday evening. The first thing the musician asks about such a concert is "What is the program?" The first query of the ordinary concert goer is "Who is the soloist?" Both questions in the present case admit of a most satisfactory answer. The soloist is Miss Adele Aus der Ohe, one of the best and most popular pianists in the country. She has played repeatedly in this city since her appearance at the first music festival, and she has always been a warm favorite, receiving such applause as few visiting artists have won. That she is steadily growing in her art appears in the Musical Courier's enthusiastic notice of her recent recital in New York: "All the old charm of delivery is still there—the bold attack, the cleanest technic, and the almost masculine power—but the mellowed musical poise that has now crept in constitutes the one quality that seemed lacking to complete an almost perfect ensemble. At present Adele Aus der Ohe is in her prime, and from all appearances will long remain so."

Miss Aus der Ohe could hardly have chosen a work more certain to stir the audience to enthusiasm than the B flat minor concerto by Tchaikowsky, one of those powerfully emotional, rhythmically alluring, consciously melodious works which are characteristic of this great Russian genius. She has the power and the temperament to make it immensely effective, and she never appears to better advantage than in a great concerto with orchestra. The rest of the program is to less satisfactory, and is a happy mingling of novelties with old favorites. The Mendelssohn overture with which the concert opens, "Camacho's Wedding," is perhaps to be put into both classes, for it has been heard so seldom in recent years that it will probably be new to most of the audience. It is not one of the most important of Mendelssohn's works, but it has all the sparkle which characterizes his early style and it makes a gay and pleasing prelude to the musical feast. For a musical novelty there is a very striking and poetic work by one of the most interesting of the newer French composers, Claude Debussy, entitled "The Afternoon of a Faun," which critics have been praising in the warmest terms. And of all the standard symphonies there is none welcome than Beethoven's C minor, which among the great symphonies is rivaled in popularity only by Schubert's "Unfinished." The lovely variations are perhaps the chief favorite, but from the first energetic hammer strokes of the opening theme to the triumphant outburst of the finale there is no point at which it fails to inspire even the coldest audience.

Wilhelm Gericke, who will conduct the concert, is probably now that Theodore Thomas has gone, the most notable conductor in the country. That the Boston symphony orchestra is what it is today is due to him more than to any other one man except Col Higginson. He is a native of Graz, in Styria, where he was born April 18, 1845. He received his musical education at the Vienna conservatory, and was a conductor of opera and orchestral concerts in Vienna when in 1884, when in the age of 39, he was called to Boston. The orchestra then needed weeding out, new talent, and above all, de-spine Gericke set himself with eminent success to supply all these things. It was hard on the veterans who had—some years—been members, but they had to get to the new order. From Vienna he brought a number of unknown young men, who—some—as Franz Kneisel, to lead the first violins,



WILHELM GERICKE.

That he was a good judge of men is shown by the large proportion of these players who have remained with the orchestra for nearly 20 years. From the beginning he introduced a standard of discipline which was quite new, which some of the older men resented, but having a permanent orchestra Thomas, not having a permanent orchestra under his thumb, had not been able to enforce. With the best talent that could be found, and plenty of time for rehearsing, he patiently strove to realize the standard of perfection which he had formed as an ideal. In his passion for homogeneity of tone he even had a supply of violins by a reputable Vienna maker brought over so that they might all sound alike. But as might be expected, the experiment failed. Even violins from the same shop, the instruments varied. Two or three of them were good, and are possibly still in use in the orchestra; the rest proved inferior, and since then the individual members have got the best violins they could find, the majority being old Italian instruments of value. From the outset Mr Gericke proved himself an exacting drill master, and it is an instance of his exigent spirit that after the orchestra had won the praise of Boston he cancelled the dates for the proposed New York season because he thought he was not quite ready. When he was ready New York was surprised by a technical perfection which had not been approximated in this country. Mr Gericke has his critics. They say that he is too austere, too cold, too classical: that he holds down his men, never lets the brass blare out a genuine fortissimo. Certainly the emotional is not his specialty, but there is plenty of vigor in his conducting for all that, and listeners need not be deceived by the quietness of his manner before an audience. A strong man can get his effects without giving a pantomime imitation of Irving in "The Bells," and there can be no doubt that Mr Gericke is a strong man.

THE SUN

BALTIMORE, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1905

GIVES BRILLIANT CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Excellent Program.

The program that was given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was such an improvement on the recent arrangements of Mr. Gericke as to be noteworthy. In the first place the symphony was at the beginning of the concert. It was an inestimable boon. Further, there was a nice adjustment of the other concert pieces, which gave a confidence in degree of variety and of real musical interest.

In hearing the Beethoven Fifth Symphony it was impossible not to recall the last appearance of Theodore Thomas in Baltimore. It was at the Lyric also. More than five or five years ago. The symphony was the same that was played last night.

The influences of an interpretative second artist must necessarily be embarrassing. It leaves behind him nothing tangible which future generations can value. His name may last through the ages, but after his death not very much. There is, however, Theodore Thomas memories in many of his concerts what he did on occasion in Baltimore—if the impression that he made were as deep he performed a work which in spite of the actual monuments is as valuable and as honorable as can be done by any department of art or human activity.

It would be useless to make [illegible] sion of Mr. Gericke's [illegible] reading of this symphony. It has the stamp of the individuality [illegible] doctor. Mr. Gericke's [illegible] ness seems almost out of [illegible] monumental work, and it was in those qualities of the evening when [illegible] was appropriate that the [illegible] most successful last night.

The first two movements [illegible] desired. In the last two [illegible] wished for greater [illegible] ex[illegible] ex[illegible] to overestimate [illegible] Fifth Symphony [illegible] drilled orchestra [illegible] full of [illegible]

Possibly some [illegible] of symphonies [illegible] the most inspiring [illegible] able to produce [illegible] thoven's Fifth [illegible] Symphony is rare [illegible] its immense difficulties [illegible] the Pastoral Symphonies [illegible] the deeply loving appreciation [illegible] to the work given last night.

The other orchestral selections [illegible] Brahms Waltzes [illegible] Gericke, and the [illegible] Dutchman.

Many persons [illegible] overture should [illegible] gram but there [illegible] last night in [illegible] at the end of [illegible] erans there [illegible] thing the synod [illegible] his position [illegible] Jealous and Intolerant [illegible] cogent.

It is an [illegible] sense of the [illegible] many of Wagner [illegible] of expression [illegible] soothing things [illegible] music. It is [illegible] later in the [illegible] the last [illegible] cessions to the [illegible]

The Baltimore [illegible] like to be [illegible] to be like Brahms [illegible] in the best sense [illegible] gram and [illegible] the evening.

The soloist [illegible] Miss Marcella [illegible] agreeable [illegible] the singer [illegible] personality [illegible] dowed with [illegible] temperament [illegible] with an [illegible] intelligence [illegible] composition [illegible] voice was [illegible] was [illegible]

Miss Lucy [illegible] that was [illegible] It was [illegible] is better [illegible]

Then [illegible] or two [illegible] ward Elgar [illegible] notice [illegible] one was [illegible]

Edgar [illegible] day. He has [illegible] and is the [illegible] guts. His [illegible] ties, but I [illegible] too much [illegible] ideas.

His "Sea [illegible] Kirkby Lunn [illegible] phony concert [illegible] able to show [illegible] shore-resigned.

Miss Lucy [illegible] pecially in [illegible] questionably [illegible] and there is [illegible] will but develop [illegible]

The program [illegible] concert called [illegible] cess. It was [illegible]

Sonata [illegible]
II. Andante [illegible]
III. Vivace [illegible]
IV. Allegro [illegible]
Debussy's Ballet [illegible]
Waltzes [illegible]
[illegible]
"Sea Pictures" [illegible]
(Three songs [illegible] and orchestra)
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" [illegible]

S. S.

Baltimore American AND COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1905.

Boston Symphony Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a third concert for this season at the Lyric last evening, under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, presenting the following program:

[illegible]
Symphony No. [illegible] in C minor, op. [illegible]
1. Allegro con brio.
2. Andante con moto.
3. Allegro. Trio.
4. Allegro.

[illegible]
Prelude to "Lohengrin" and Prayer from "Rienzi."
Brahms' Waltz.
Waltz.
Overture [illegible] to W. Gericke.
Edward Elgar.
Sea Pictures. Three Songs from a Cycle of Five for Contralto and Orchestra, Op. [illegible]
Wagner.
Overture to the Flying Dutchman.
Soloist Mrs. Marcella Sembrich.

The Lyric [illegible] house at the recent Beethoven symphony concert. Wagner overture. The other numbers [illegible]

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

A Beethoven Symphony and Miss Aus der Ohe's Playing the Features of a Superb Concert.

There cannot have been many concerts in the history of Springfield equal to the performance in Court Square theater last evening by the Boston symphony orchestra. Certainly this magnificent organization has never appeared to better advantage. The concert last year was good, but there was far more vital interest last evening, chiefly, no doubt, from the superiority of the program. The best is none too good for an audience that has to make one concert last so long, and last evening's program was of a substantial and inspiring sort, suited to people who hear a first-rate orchestra only once a year. If not once, by the way, for a more ambitious enterprise? Hartford sustains three concerts by this orchestra every season. Cannot this city manage two? If one came in the early fall and one in the late winter neither ought to hurt the attendance of the other, and the increase of opportunities would tend to spread and keep alive interest in music of this sort. The merits of a single concert have nearly been reached, for Court Square theater was crowded last evening, and there would not have been room for many more. It is certainly to be hoped that some one will be courageous enough next season to arrange for a second concert. The performance last evening was the 11th in this city, and makes something over 2000 for the Boston symphony orchestra, which has a record unapproached by any other organization in the world. This is its 24th season, but the New York Philharmonic society, which has been in existence 40 years, has not given half so many concerts. More than 1000 of these have been conducted by Mr. Gericke, who probably holds the record in this respect, now that Theodore Thomas is gone.

Miss Adele Aus der Ohe, who was the soloist last evening, has probably been heard in Springfield as often as any other pianist of note, and has never failed to delight and astonish her auditors to the close to enthusiasm. Many recall her first appearance here with Theodore Thomas and his orchestra at a concert given in City hall in 1888, managed by C. N. Stimpson & Co. and H. E. Saville. That was the 24th year in Springfield. The concert was so successful that it was followed by another, also given by the Boston symphony orchestra. There had been several full seasons before, and these concerts ought to be noted because of their culminating in the foundation of the Hampden county festival association. Miss Aus der Ohe was a young girl with her hair down in a braid, had not been so very long in the country, but had already made a reputation as a very gifted and accomplished player. She played a concert which made a deep impression on the auditors, and ever since she has held a rather special place in the favor of the public. Since then she has appeared frequently, both in recitals and with the orchestra at music festivals, but she has never played better, educative than on this occasion. Her numbers, a Bach concerto, Mendelssohn's "Rondo Capriccioso" and Liszt's "Hungarian Fantasie," were all of a character to display the artist's powers to the best advantage, and she was recalled after each number. Miss Aus der Ohe's success was so great that she will be heard in Springfield again in a recital in the near future.

The B flat minor concerto, for which Miss Aus der Ohe played the accompaniment on a second piano, is a work of great power and originality, and is one of the most interesting of the modern concertos. It is not often heard in Springfield, and it was a treat to hear it last evening. The first movement, with its Volga boat song, is especially original and striking, and the whole work is full of color and vitality. The Mendelssohn number was well suited to the concert room, and was a very striking and poetic work. Among the most interesting of the newer French songs is Claude Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," which originally was written for a ballet, and was given with the accompaniment of the orchestra. It is a work of great beauty, and the audience was delighted with it. Grace Hoen Pruning's "Sea Pictures" is also a work of the modern impressionist school, and among the great symphonies is ranked in popularity next to Schubert's "Unfinished." The first movement, that especially, is a work of great power, but in the first one gets a hammering at the opening chords. The Beethoven symphony, of course, was the masterpiece of the evening, and it is hard to imagine even a better rendition.

Mr. Gericke, who will conduct the concert in Pittsfield, and then Theodore Thomas, is one, the most notable composer in the country. For the Boston symphony concerts he is today in the same position that Theodore Thomas held for so many years in New York, and in the Vienna orchestra when, in 1884, he succeeded Hans Richter. He was born in Austria, and received his musical education in the Vienna conservatory, and was for a time a member of the Vienna court orchestra. He came to America in 1878, when at the age of 28 he was called to Boston. He remained there for 14 years, and then went to Pittsburg, where he remained for two years. He then went to New York, where he remained for two years, when he was called to Boston, where he has been for 12 years. He has made his home in Boston, and has become a citizen of that city. He is a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and has been for 12 years. He is a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and has been for 12 years. He is a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and has been for 12 years

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

2.5 mm
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

THE SUN

BALTIMORE, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1905

GIVES BRILLIANT CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Excellent Program.

The program that was given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was such an improvement on the recent arrangements of Mr. Gericke as to be noteworthy. In the first place the symphony was at the beginning of the concert. This was an inestimable boon. Furthermore there was a nice adjustment of the other concert pieces, which gave a considerable degree of variety and of real musical interest.

In hearing the Beethoven Fifth Symphony it was impossible not to recall the last appearance of Theodore Thomas in Baltimore. It was at the Lyric (then Music Hall) four or five years ago. The symphony was the same that was played last night.

The influences of an interpretative musical artist must necessarily be ephemeral. He leaves behind him nothing tangible by which future generations can value him. His name may last through one lifetime after his death, but very rarely longer. If, however, Thodeore Thomas accomplished in many of his concerts what he did on this occasion in Baltimore—if the impressions that he made were as deep—he performed a work which in spite of the absence of actual monuments is as valuable and as honorable as can be done in any other department of art or human activity.

It would be useless to make any comparison of Mr. Gericke's and Mr. Thomas' reading of this symphony. Each has the stamp of the individuality of the conductor. Mr. Gericke's excessive preciseness seems almost out of place in such a monumental work, and it was in those portions of the work where exquisite finish was appropriate that the conductor was most successful last night.

The first two movements left little to be desired. In the last two one might have wished for greater independence and greater vigor of conception. Still it is very hard to overestimate the luxury of hearing the Fifth Symphony played by such a perfectly drilled orchestra and with such a thoughtful, if not impassioned, leader.

Possibly because it is the most familiar of symphonies—most likely because it is the most inspired—no orchestral work is able to produce the impression that Beethoven's Fifth Symphony does. The Choral Symphony is rarely satisfactory because of its immense difficulties. The Eroica and the Pastoral Symphonies do not possess the deeply human quality that is peculiar to the work given last night.

The other orchestral selections were the Brahms Waltzes, orchestrated by Mr. Gericke, and the overture to "The Flying Dutchman."

Many persons have the feeling that an overture should be placed first on the program, but there was no inappropriateness last night in having the operatic prelude at the end of the concert. On the contrary there was a distinct gain in permitting the symphony to have the commanding position. The overture made an effective and interesting conclusion to the concert.

It is an overture in the un-Wagnerian sense of the word. While stamped with many of Wagner's peculiarities—his turns of expression, his wonderful power of describing things seen and heard in terms of music—it is full of allusion to what comes later in the opera. The opera itself was the last in which he made considerable concessions to the Italian operatic style.

The Brahms waltzes were too Brahms-like to be good waltzes and too waltz-like to be like Brahms. But they were effective in the position they occupied on the program and furnished an agreeable leaven to the evening's music.

The soloist was the English contralto, Miss Muriel Foster. It would be a most agreeable task to attribute to this singer all the qualities of a great artist. Hers is a personality of very great charm. She is endowed with extraordinary beauty, with unmistakable charm of manner and bearing, with an excellent voice and with the best intentions, but she is far from being an accomplished prima donna. Her selections were not well made and her singing of them was somewhat amateurish.

Miss Foster sang first Penelope's recitation and prayer from Bruch's "Odysseus." It was certainly a very monotorious prayer, neither eloquent nor touching.

Then followed those songs from a cycle of five for contralto and orchestra by Edward Elgar. These were much more interesting, especially the first two. The last one was too pretentious.

Elgar is the English musical lion of today. He is attracting attention on all sides and is unquestionably a man of unusual gifts. His songs have some admirable qualities, but they are generally overwrought—too much workmanship and not enough ideas.

His "Sea Pictures" were sung by Mme. Kirkby-Lunn at one of the Boston Symphony concerts, but with them she was unable to show the great abilities she has since revealed as Kundry in "Parsifal."

Miss Foster was warmly applauded, especially after the Elgar songs. She unquestionably gave a good deal of pleasure and there is no reason to believe that she will not develop into an admirable singer.

The program was so excellent that the concert could not fail to be a brilliant success. It was as follows:

Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67.....Beethoven
- I. Allegro con brio.
- II. Andante con moto.
- III. Allegro: Trio.
- IV. Allegro.

Penelope's Recitative and Prayer, from "Odysseus".....Bruch

Waltzes.....Brahms
Orchestrated by W. Gericke.

"Sea Pictures".....Edward Elga
(Three songs from a cycle of five, for contralto and orchestra, Op. 37.)

Overture to "The Flying Dutchman".....Wagne

T. S. B.

Baltimore American
AND COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1905.

Boston Symphony Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its third concert for this season at the Lyric last evening, under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, presenting the following program:

Beethoven—
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67.
1. Allegro con brio.
2. Andante con moto.
3. Allegro: Trio.
4. Allegro.

Bruch—
Penelope's Recitative and Prayer from "Odysseus."

Brahms—
Waltzes.
Orchestrated by W. Gericke.

Edward Elgar—
"Sea Pictures," Three Songs from a Cycle of Five for Contralto and Orchestra, Op. 37.

Wagner—
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman."

Soloist—Miss Muriel Foster.

Two great numbers made it a fine concert, the Beethoven Symphony and the Wagner Overture. The other numbers were not up to a high standard.

SPRINGFIELD DAILY REPUBLICAN

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

A Beethoven Symphony and Miss Aus der Ohe's Playing the Features of a Superb Concert.

There cannot have been many concerts in the history of Springfield equal to the performance in Court Square theater last evening by the Boston symphony orchestra. Certainly this magnificent organization has never appeared to better advantage. The concert last year was good, but there was far more vital interest last evening, chiefly, no doubt, from the superiority of the program. The best is none too good for an audience that has to make one concert last so long, and last evening's program was of a substantial and inspiring sort, suited to people who hear a first-rate orchestra only once a year. Is it not time, by the way, for a more ambitious enterprise? Hartford sustains three concerts by this orchestra every season. Cannot this city manage two? If one came in the early fall and one in the late winter neither ought to hurt the attendance of the other, and the increase of opportunities would tend to spread and keep alive interest in music of this sort. The limits of a single concert have nearly been reached, for Court Square theater was crowded last evening, and there would not have been room for many more. It is certainly to be hoped that some one will be courageous enough next season to arrange for a second concert. The performance last evening was the 11th in this city, and makes something over 2000 for the Boston symphony orchestra, which has a record unapproached by any other organization in the world. This is its 24th season, but the New York Philharmonic society, which has been in existence for over 60 years, has not given half so many concerts. More than 1000 of these have been conducted by Mr Gericke, who probably holds the record in this respect, now that Theodore Thomas is gone.

Miss Adele Aus der Ohe, who was the soloist last evening, has probably been heard in Springfield as often as any other pianist of note, and has never failed to distinguish herself and to stir her audience to enthusiasm. Many recall her first appearance here with Theodore Thomas and his orchestra at a concert given in City hall in 1888, managed by C. N. Stimpson & Co and B. F. Saville. That was a gala year in Springfield. The concert was so successful that it was followed by another, and then by the Boston symphony orchestra. There had been several dull seasons before, and these concerts marked the musical renascence which culminated in the foundation of the Hampden county festival association. Miss Aus der Ohe, then a young girl with her hair down in a braid, had not been so very long in the country, but had already made a reputation as a very talented and accomplished player. She played a concerto which made a deep impression on the audience, and ever since then she has held a rather special place in the favor of the public. Since then she has appeared frequently, both in recitals and with the orchestra at music festivals, but she has never appeared to better advantage than last evening in the passionate and tremendous Tschaikowsky concerto in B flat minor. The emotional power of this work has been revealed to us by the ardent and gifted Teresa Carreno. Miss Aus der Ohe's interpretation was not the same, but it was also powerful, inspiring, and artistic. That it was authentic may be taken for granted, if only because she enjoyed the distinction of playing the work under the composer's direction in St Petersburg while it was still new.

The B flat minor by common consent holds a place among the very greatest of concertos for piano and orchestra, and in intensity of mood there is perhaps no other equal to it. That miraculous outburst at the very opening, with the gripping melody in the orchestra running athwart the powerful ascending chord masses in the piano never fails to stir the listener deeply, and strikes the keynote of the work. It sometimes verges on the bizarre, there are melodies that run perilously near to the border line of triviality—one of them was stolen for Anna Held's "Won't you come out," etc.—but this is part of the very genius of the great Russian composer, whose place in history cannot yet be estimated, but whose command of emotional stress has never been equaled. There are few women who have either the power or the temperament to cope satisfactorily with this strenuous work. Miss Aus der Ohe is one of the few. At all times a bold, positive, sincere pianist, throwing herself soul and body into her playing, she never appears to better advantage than when stirred to competition with an orchestra in the interpretation of a great work. Last night she rose superbly to the great climaxes, and there was no lack of sensuous beauty in the exquisite bits of melody with which the work is filled. The extremely difficult orchestral part which the pianist Buelow had such trouble with when he played the concerto a quarter of a century ago, was wonderfully done last night under Mr Gericke, exquisitely finished, perfectly adjusted to the solo, and with no lack of emotional expression. Miss Aus der Ohe's services have never been in greater demand than now, and she is having a busy week. Monday evening she played in Hartford, last evening here, this afternoon she appears in New York and this evening she plays in Philadelphia. This is an exacting routine, but she manages to keep all the delightful freshness and vigor of her playing.

The program last evening contained but four numbers which were interesting and instructive by their immense contrast in mood and in color. First came Mendelssohn's overture to "Camacho's Wedding," gay, light, brilliant, charming. As different as possible was the dramatic, high-colored, overpowering Tschaikowsky concerto. Then after a brief pause the transition was equally sudden to the cool, thin, aerial tints of Debussy's "The Afternoon of a Faun." And from this extreme example of the new French harmonic school it was good to get back to the plain solid colors of the classical German school as represented in the Beethoven C minor symphony. What an astonishing development in special effects there has been since Beethoven's time, with no progress at all in the essential thing—greatness of fundamental ideas. Will Tschaikowsky wear so well? It is much to be doubted. The very intensity of his moods makes it the more probable that exhaustion and reaction will come. That classical art outwears other kinds is due in great part to the very self-restraint which is the essence of the classics. Beethoven storms, but he never screams, and the new Russian music, like the new Russian literature, sometimes verges on the hysterical.

This B flat minor concerto, for example, with its alternations from the Volga to the beautiful blue Danube, is like a composite of the late Vasili Verestchagin's pictures of the carnage of war and his Ottoman seraglios—the two halves of Russian art. One gets everything except rest. Lasting art needs a firmer foundation. In the Debussy interpretation of a Mellarme poem, on the other hand, we see the specialty of France, a cult of art for art's sake. The orchestral palette studied as a French landscape painter studies his pigments; a dextrous, successful attempt by a firm and sensitive intelligence to capture a mood, to convey a delicate, lovely impression. Corot and Rousseau have hardly succeeded better in catching the elusive poetry of a sylvan vista. Vague soft [illegible]

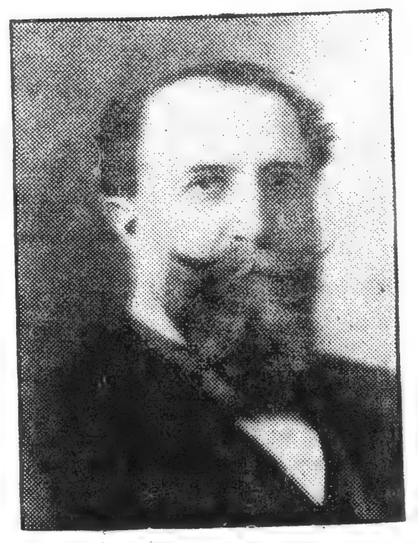
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Concert to be Given This Week at Court Square Theater.

The most notable musical event of the season comes this week—the annual concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra to be given Tuesday evening at Court Square theater. This more than makes up for the lack of other concerts. Those who can will also do well to hear Mme Lillian Blauvelt, the favorite American soprano, who sings at Smith college in Northampton Wednesday evening and at Mount Holyoke college in South Hadley Friday evening. Her singing is well worth a journey, and conversely music lovers in neighboring towns will be richly repaid for coming to the splendid symphony concert which has been advertised for Tuesday evening. The first thing the musician asks about such a concert is "What is the program?" The first query of the ordinary concert goer is "Who is the soloist?" Both questions in the present case admit of a most satisfactory answer. The soloist is Miss Adele Aus der Ohe, one of the best and most popular pianists in the country. She has played repeatedly in this city since her appearance at the first music festival, and she has always been a warm favorite, receiving such applause as few visiting artists have won. That she is steadily growing in her art appears in the Musical Courier's enthusiastic notice of her recent recital in New York: "All the old charm of delivery is still there—the bold attack, the cleancut technic, and the almost masculine power—but the mellowed musical poise that has now crept in constitutes the one quality that seemed lacking to complete an almost perfect ensemble. At present Adele Aus der Ohe is in her prime, and from all appearances will long remain so."

Miss Aus der Ohe could hardly have chosen a work more certain to stir the audience to enthusiasm than the B flat minor concerto by Tchaikowsky, one of those powerfully emotional, rhythmically alluring, sensuously melodious works which are characteristic of this great Russian genius. She has the power and the temperament to make it immensely effective, and she never appears to better advantage than in a great concerto with orchestra. The rest of the program is no less satisfactory, and is a happy mingling of novelties with old favorites. The Mendelssohn overture with which the concert opens, "Camacho's Wedding," is perhaps to be put into both classes, for it has been heard so seldom in recent years that it will probably be new to most of the audience. It is not one of the most important of Mendelssohn's works, but it has all the sparkle which characterizes his early style, and it makes a gay and pleasing prelude to the musical feast. For a musical novelty there is a very striking and poetic work by one of the most interesting of the newer French composers, Claude Debussy, entitled "The Afternoon of a Faun," which critics have been praising in the warmest terms. And of all the standard symphonies none is more welcome than Beethoven's C minor, which among the great symphonies is rivaled in popularity only by Schubert's "Unfinished." The lovely variations are perhaps the chief favorite, but from the first energetic hammer strokes of the opening theme to the triumphant outburst of the finale there is no point at which it fails to inspire even the coldest audience.

Wilhelm Gericke, who will conduct the concert, is probably, now that Theodore Thomas has gone, the most notable conductor in the country. That the Boston symphony orchestra is what it is to-day is due to him more than to any other one man except Col Higginson. He is a native of Graz, in Styria, where he was born April 18, 1845. He received his musical education at the Vienna conservatory, and was a conductor of opera and orchestral concerts in Vienna when in 1884, when at the age of 39, he was called to Boston. The orchestra then needed weeding out, new talent, and, above all, discipline. Mr Gericke set himself with eminent success to supply all these things. It was hard on the veterans who had come in as charter members, but they had to yield to the new order. From Vienna he brought a quite unknown young man, whose name was Franz Kneisel, to lead the first violins.



WILHELM GERICKE.

That he was a good judge of men is shown by the large proportion of those young players who have remained with the orchestra for nearly 20 years. From the beginning he introduced a standard of discipline which was quite new, which even Theodore Thomas, not having a permanent orchestra under his thumb, had not been able to enforce. With the best talent that could be found, and plenty of time for rehearsing, he patiently strove to realize the standard of perfection which he had formed as an ideal. In his passion for homogeneity of tone he even had a supply of violins by a reputable Vienna maker brought over so that they might all sound alike. But as might be expected, the experiment failed. Even though from the same shop, the instruments varied. Two or three of them were good, and are possibly still in use in the orchestra; the rest proved inferior, and since then the individual members have got the best violins they could find, the majority being old Italian instruments of value. From the outset Mr Gericke proved himself an exacting drill master, and it is an instance of his exigent spirit that after the orchestra had won the praise of Boston he cancelled the dates for the proposed New York season because he thought he was not quite ready. When he was ready New York was surprised by a technical perfection which had not been approximated in this country. Mr Gericke has his critics. They say that he is too austere, too cold, too classical; that he holds down his men, never lets the brass blare out a genuine fortissimo. Certainly the emotional is not his specialty, but there is plenty of vigor in his conducting for all that, and listeners need not be deceived by the quietness of his manner before an audience. A strong man can get his effects without giving a pantomime imitation of Irving in "The Bells," and there can be no doubt that Mr Gericke is a strong man.

[55]

THE SUN

BALTIMORE, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1905

GIVES BRILLIANT CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Excellent Program.

The program that was given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was such an improvement on the recent arrangements of Mr. Gericke as to be noteworthy. In the first place the symphony was at the beginning of the concert. This was an inestimable boon. Furthermore there was a nice adjustment of the other concert pieces, which gave a considerable degree of variety and of real musical interest.

In hearing the Beethoven Fifth Symphony it was impossible not to recall the last appearance of Theodore Thomas in Baltimore. It was at the Lyric (then Music Hall) four or five years ago. The symphony was the same that was played last night.

The influences of an interpretative musical artist must necessarily be ephemeral. He leaves behind him nothing tangible by which future generations can value him. His name may last through one lifetime after his death, but very rarely longer. If, however, Thodeore Thomas accomplished in many of his concerts what he did on this occasion in Baltimore—if the impressions that he made were as deep—he performed a work which in spite of the absence of actual monuments is as valuable and as honorable as can be done in any other department of art or human activity.

It would be useless to make any comparison of Mr. Gericke's and Mr. Thomas' reading of this symphony. Each has the stamp of the individuality of the conductor. Mr. Gericke's excessive preciseness seems almost out of place in such a monumental work, and it was in those portions of the work where exquisite finish was appropriate that the conductor was most successful last night.

The first two movements left little to be desired. In the last two one might have wished for greater independence and greater vigor of conception. Still it is very hard to overestimate the luxury of hearing the Fifth Symphony played by such a perfectly drilled orchestra and with such a thoughtful, if not impassioned, leader.

Possibly because it is the most familiar of symphonies—most likely because it is the most inspired—no orchestral work is able to produce the impression that Beethoven's Fifth Symphony does. The Choral Symphony is rarely satisfactory because of its immense difficulties. The Eroica and the Pastoral Symphonies do not possess the deeply human quality that is peculiar to the work given last night.

The other orchestral selections were the Brahms Waltzes, orchestrated by Mr. Gericke, and the overture to "The Flying Dutchman."

Many persons have the feeling that an overture should be placed first on the program, but there was no inappropriateness last night in having the operatic prelude at the end of the concert. On the contrary there was a distinct gain in permitting the symphony to have the commanding position. The overture made an effective and interesting conclusion to the concert.

It is an overture in the un-Wagnerian sense of the word. While stamped with many of Wagner's peculiarities—his turns of expression, his wonderful power of describing things seen and heard in terms of music—it is full of allusion to what comes later in the opera. The opera itself was the last in which he made considerable concessions to the Italian operatic style.

The Brahms waltzes were too Brahms-like to be good waltzes and too waltz-like to be like Brahms. But they were effective in the position they occupied on the program and furnished an agreeable leaven to the evening's music.

The soloist was the English contralto, Miss Muriel Foster. It would be a most agreeable task to attribute to this singer all the qualities of a great artist. Hers is a personality of very great charm. She is endowed with extraordinary beauty, with unmistakable charm of manner and bearing, with an excellent voice and with the best intentions, but she is far from being an accomplished prima donna. Her selections were not well made and her singing of them was somewhat amateurish.

Miss Foster sang first Penelope's recitation and prayer from Bruch's "Odysseus." It was certainly a very monotorious prayer, neither eloquent nor touching.

Then followed those songs from a cycle of five for contralto and orchestra by Edward Elgar. These were much more interesting, especially the first two. The last one was too pretentious.

Elgar is the English musical lion of today. He is attracting attention on all sides and is unquestionably a man of unusual gifts. His songs have some admirable qualities, but they are generally overwrought—too much workmanship and not enough ideas.

His "Sea Pictures" were sung by Mme. Kirkby-Lunn at one of the Boston Symphony concerts, but with them she was unable to show the great abilities she has since revealed as Kundry in "Parsifal."

Miss Foster was warmly applauded, especially after the Elgar songs. She unquestionably gave a good deal of pleasure and there is no reason to believe that she will not develop into an admirable singer.

The program was so excellent that the concert could not fail to be a brilliant success. It was as follows:

Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67.....Beethoven
- I. Allegro con brio.
- II. Andante con moto.
- III. Allegro: Trio.
- IV. Allegro.

Penelope's Recitative and Prayer, from "Odysseus".....Bruch

Waltzes.....Brahms
Orchestrated by W. Gericke.

"Sea Pictures".....Edward Elga
(Three songs from a cycle of five, for contralto and orchestra, Op. 37.)

Overture to "The Flying Dutchman".....Wagner

T. S. B.

Baltimore American AND COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1905.

Boston Symphony Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its third concert for this season at the Lyric last evening, under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, presenting the following program:

Beethoven—
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67.
1. Allegro con brio.
2. Andante con moto.
3. Allegro: Trio.
4. Allegro.

Bruch—
Penelope's Recitative and Prayer from "Odysseus."

Brahms—
Waltzes.
Orchestrated by W. Gericke.

Edward Elgar—
"Sea Pictures," Three Songs from a Cycle of Five for Contralto and Orchestra, Op. 37.

Wagner—
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman."
Soloist—Miss Muriel Foster.

Two great numbers made it a fine concert, the Beethoven Symphony and the Wagner Overture. The other numbers were not up to a high standard.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

A Beethoven Symphony and Miss Aus der Ohe's Playing the Features of a Superb Concert.

There cannot have been many concerts in the history of Springfield equal to the performance in Court Square theater last evening by the Boston symphony orchestra. Certainly this magnificent organization has never appeared to better advantage. The concert last year was good, but there was far more vital interest last evening, chiefly, no doubt, from the superiority of the program. The best is none too good for an audience that has to make one concert last so long, and last evening's program was of a substantial and inspiring sort, suited to people who hear a first-rate orchestra only once a year. Is it not time, by the way, for a more ambitious enterprise? Hartford sustains three concerts by this orchestra every season. Cannot this city manage two? If one came in the early fall and one in the late winter neither ought to hurt the attendance of the other, and the increase of opportunities would tend to spread and keep alive interest in music of this sort. The limits of a single concert have nearly been reached, for Court Square theater was crowded last evening, and there would not have been room for many more. It is certainly to be hoped that some one will be courageous enough next season to arrange for a second concert. The performance last evening was the 11th in this city, and makes something over 2000 for the Boston symphony orchestra, which has a record unapproached by any other organization in the world. This is its 24th season, but the New York Philharmonic society, which has been in existence for over 60 years, has not given half so many concerts. More than 1000 of these have been conducted by Mr Gericke, who probably holds the record in this respect, now that Theodore Thomas is gone.

Miss Adele Aus der Ohe, who was the soloist last evening, has probably been heard in Springfield as often as any other pianist of note, and has never failed to distinguish herself and to stir her audience to enthusiasm. Many recall her first appearance here with Theodore Thomas and his orchestra at a concert given in City hall in 1888, managed by C. N. Stimpson & Co and B. F. Saville. That was a gala year in Springfield. The concert was so successful that it was followed by another, and then by the Boston symphony orchestra. There had been several dull seasons before, and these concerts marked the musical renascence which culminated in the foundation of the Hampden county festival association. Miss Aus der Ohe, then a young girl with her hair down in a braid, had not been so very long in the country, but had already made a reputation as a very talented and accomplished player. She played a concerto which made a deep impression on the audience, and ever since then she has held a rather special place in the favor of the public. Since then she has appeared frequently, both in recitals and with the orchestra at music festivals, but she has never appeared to better advantage than last evening in the passionate and tremendous Tschaikowsky concerto in B flat minor. The emotional power of this work has been revealed to us by the ardent and gifted Teresa Carreno. Miss Aus der Ohe's interpretation was not the same, but it was also powerful, inspiring, and artistic. That it was authentic may be taken for granted, if only because she enjoyed the distinction of playing the work under the composer's direction in St Petersburg while it was still new.

The B flat minor by common consent holds a place among the very greatest of concertos for piano and orchestra, and in intensity of mood there is perhaps no other equal to it. That miraculous outburst at the very opening, with the gripping melody in the orchestra running athwart the powerful ascending chord masses in the piano never fails to stir the listener deeply, and strikes the keynote of the work. It sometimes verges on the bizarre, there are melodies that run perilously near to the border line of triviality—one of them was stolen for Anna Held's "Won't you come out," etc.—but this is part of the very genius of the great Russian composer, whose place in history [illegible] school it was good to get back to the plain solid colors of the classical German school as represented in the Beethoven C minor symphony. What an astonishing development in special effects there has been since Beethoven's time, with no progress at all in the essential thing—greatness of fundamental ideas. Will Tschaikowsky wear so well? It is much to be doubted. The very intensity of his moods makes it the more probable that exhaustion and reaction will come. That classical art outwears other kinds is due in great part to the very self-restraint which is the essence of the classics. Beethoven storms, but he never screams, and the new Russian music, like the new Russian literature, sometimes verges on the hysterical.

This B flat minor concerto, for example, with its alternations from the Volga to the beautiful blue Danube, is like a composite of the late Vasili Verestchagin's pictures of the carnage of war and his Ottoman seraglios—the two halves of Russian art. One gets everything except rest. Lasting art needs a firmer foundation. In the Debussy interpretation of a Mellarme poem, on the other hand, we see the specialty of France, a cult of art for art's sake. The orchestral palette studied as a French landscape painter studies his pigments; a dextrous, successful attempt by a firm and sensitive intelligence to capture a mood, to convey a delicate, lovely impression. Corot and Rousseau have hardly succeeded better in catching the elusive poetry of a sylvan vista. Vague, soft, charming, exquisite and novel in its tints, "The Afternoon of a Faun" stands very well for the art which has been specialized, perfected and refined at the expense of vitality.

And then to close we come back to Beethoven the leonine, the man in whom temperament and intellect balance more perfectly than in any other composer, passionate but not neurotic; simple-minded, sincere and great. The further he recedes into the background the more he towers up as the dominating figure of the 19th century. Even though his symphonies seem colorless when placed beside some modern work in which the pessimism and unrest of the later years of the century are set forth with all the appealing many-voiced eloquence of the modern orchestra, they speedily assert their true grandeur, win back wavering allegiance by the strong faith and nobility of their utterance. In none of his symphonies do these qualities find more gracious and genial expression than in the C minor. The "Eroica" has perhaps greater power, the seventh has an unmatched poignancy of feeling, the adagio of the choral symphony lifts us into the very highest places of all. But by its symmetry and completeness, its perfect union of rugged power with melting tenderness and grace, and by the sturdy optimism of a work which challenges destiny with haughty courage, the fifth of Beethoven's symphonies well deserves its place as the favorite of the nine. It was played superbly, the lovely andante best of all. It is hard to see how the graceful and charming variations could be played with more smoothness and beauty of tone. In the opening allegro one might wish for a bit more of energy in the hammer strokes of the powerful first theme, even at the expense of roughness, and in the scherzo there were places where a trifle more of accent on one note or another would have made the rhythm more telling. The essential note was sometimes barely audible. But all in all it was the best performance of the symphony that has ever been given here. Prof Willy Hess, the new concert master of the orchestra, appeared for the first time in Springfield—"at" Springfield, the program book is ungracious enough to put it—and gave much pleasure by his beautiful playing of a brief obligato in the Debussy eclogue. He has a large and telling tone, and it is easy to see that he is an admirable leader of the violins.

The Concert to be Given This Week at Court Square Theater.

The most notable musical event of the season comes this week—the annual concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra to be given Tuesday evening at Court Square theater. This more than makes up for the lack of other concerts. Those who can will also do well to hear Mme Lillian Blauvelt, the favorite American soprano, who sings at Smith college in Northampton Wednesday evening and at Mount Holyoke college in South Hadley Friday evening. Her singing is well worth a journey, and conversely music lovers in neighboring towns will be richly repaid for coming to the splendid symphony concert which has been advertised for Tuesday evening. The first thing the musician asks about such a concert is "What is the program?" The first query of the ordinary concert goer is "Who is the soloist?" Both questions in the present case admit of a most satisfactory answer. The soloist is Miss Adele Aus der Ohe, one of the best and most popular pianists in the country. She has played repeatedly in this city since her appearance at the first music festival, and she has always been a warm favorite, receiving such applause as few visiting artists have won. That she is steadily growing in her art appears in the Musical Courier's enthusiastic notice of her recent recital in New York: "All the old charm of delivery is still there—the bold attack, the cleancut technic, and the almost masculine power—but the mellowed musical poise that has now crept in constitutes the one quality that seemed lacking to complete an almost perfect ensemble. At present Adele Aus der Ohe is in her prime, and from all appearances will long remain so."

Miss Aus der Ohe could hardly have chosen a work more certain to stir the audience to enthusiasm than the B flat minor concerto by Tchaikowsky, one of those powerfully emotional, rhythmically alluring, sensuously melodious works which are characteristic of this great Russian genius. She has the power and the temperament to make it immensely effective, and she never appears to better advantage than in a great concerto with orchestra. The rest of the program is no less satisfactory, and is a happy mingling of novelties with old favorites. The Mendelssohn overture with which the concert opens, "Camacho's Wedding," is perhaps to be put into both classes, for it has been heard so seldom in recent years that it will probably be new to most of the audience. It is not one of the most important of Mendelssohn's works, but it has all the sparkle which characterizes his early style, and it makes a gay and pleasing prelude to the musical feast. For a musical novelty there is a very striking and poetic work by one of the most interesting of the newer French composers, Claude Debussy, entitled "The Afternoon of a Faun," which critics have been praising in the warmest terms. And of all the standard symphonies none is more welcome than Beethoven's C minor, which among the great symphonies is rivaled in popularity only by Schubert's "Unfinished." The lovely variations are perhaps the chief favorite, but from the first energetic hammer strokes of the opening theme to the triumphant outburst of the finale there is no point at which it fails to inspire even the coldest audience.

Wilhelm Gericke, who will conduct the concert, is probably, now that Theodore Thomas has gone, the most notable conductor in the country. That the Boston symphony orchestra is what it is to-day is due to him more than to any other one man except Col Higginson. He is a native of Graz, in Styria, where he was born April 18, 1845. He received his musical education at the Vienna conservatory, and was a conductor of opera and orchestral concerts in Vienna when in 1884, when at the age of 39, he was called to Boston. The orchestra then needed weeding out, new talent, and, above all, discipline. Mr Gericke set himself with eminent success to supply all these things. It was hard on the veterans who had come in as charter members, but they had to yield to the new order. From Vienna he brought a quite unknown young man, whose name was Franz Kneisel, to lead the first violins.

Even though from the same shop, the instruments varied. Two or three of them were good, and are possibly still in use in the orchestra; the rest proved inferior, and since then the individual members have got the best violins they could find, the majority being old Italian instruments of value. From the outset Mr Gericke proved himself an exacting drill master, and it is an instance of his exigent spirit that after the orchestra had won the praise of Boston he cancelled the dates for the proposed New York season because he thought he was not quite ready. When he was ready New York was surprised by a technical perfection which had not been approximated in this country. Mr Gericke has his critics. They say that he is too austere, too cold, too classical; that he holds down his men, never lets the brass blare out a genuine fortissimo. Certainly the emotional is not his specialty, but there is plenty of vigor in his conducting for all that, and listeners need not be deceived by the quietness of his manner before an audience. A strong man can get his effects without giving a pantomime imitation of Irving in "The Bells," and there can be po doubt that Mr Gericke is a strong man.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Fine Program for Orchestra and Pianist.

The sale of seats for the concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Wilhelm Geriene, conductor, with Adele Aus der Ohe, in Court Square Theater, the 17th, will begin next Tuesday at 9 a. m., in the theater box office. Mail orders addressed to W. F. A. Engel, local manager, will be promptly attended to.

To hear Miss Aus der Ohe is always a rare enjoyment, for not only is she a pianist of brilliant technique, musical understanding and a refined taste, but she has an individuality all her own which has long been recognized and admired in American and European cities. Of the famous orchestra itself, the peer of any musical organization in the world, there is little that can be said which is not already known to the music lovers of Springfield, where its appearances in past years have been accorded a generous support. The superb band of Boston musicians has a new and brilliant acquisition this year in the person of Professor Willy Hess, first violin and concertmeister, but in other respects it is practically unchanged in personnel from former years. The coming concert will be the orchestra's 11th in Springfield, and its 2238th public performance.

The program:—

Mendelssohn—Overture to "Camacho's Wedding," Op. 10.

Tschaikowsky—Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 1, in B flat minor, Op. 23.

I. Andante non troppo e molto maestoso.
Allegro con spirito.
II. Andantina semplice.
Allegro vivace assai.
III. Allegro con fucco.

Debussy—Prelude to Stephane Mallarme's Eclogue, "The Afternoon of a Faun."
(First time in Springfield).

Beethoven—Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67.

I. Allegro con brio.
II. Andante con moto.
III. Allegro: Trio.
IV. Allegro.

Miss Adele Aus der Ohe, soloist.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM.

Adele Aus der Ohe Will Assist in Concert Jan. 17.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, assisted by Miss Adele Aus der Ohe as piano soloist, will give a grand concert in this city on the evening of Tuesday, Jan. 17 at the Court Square theater, which promises to be considered as the musical event of the season. The generous support given the concerts of this great organization of instrumentalists last season, and the year before, are evidence that Springfield people appreciative lovers of the very best in highest there is in music for there is nothing better nor higher to be heard anywhere in the musical world than the performances of Conductor Wilhelm Gericke's superb orchestra.

The concert announced will be the 11th which the orchestra has given in this city, and the 2238th public performance of the organization. Miss Aus der Ohe will lend added distinction to the coming entertainment, as she is recognized in America and Europe as one of the most finished, authoritative and intellectual of the international pianists of the present day. The program is as follows:

Mendelssohn—Overture to "Camacho's Wedding," Op. 10.

Tschaikowsky—Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 1, in B flat minor, Op. 23.

I. Andante non troppo e molto maestoso.
Allegro con spirito.
II. Andantina semplice.
Allegro vivace assai.
III. Allegro con fucco.

Debussy—Prelude to Stephane Mallarme's Eclogue, "The Afternoon of a Faun."
(First time in Springfield.)

Beethoven—Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67.

I. Allegro con brio.
II. Andante con moto.
III. Allegro: Trio.
IV. Allegro.

Miss Adele Aus der Ohe, Soloist.

The sale of seats opens Tuesday, Jan. 10, at 9 a. m., in the theater box office. Mail orders addressed to W. F. A. Engel, local manager, will have careful and prompt attention.

COURT SQUARE THEATER.
TUESDAY EVE., JAN. 17, 8:15 o'clock.
ONE CONCERT ONLY

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.
Soloist. MISS ADELE AUS der OHE, Pianist.

Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75c, 50c. On sale at Theater Box Office on and after 9 a. m. Tuesday, Jan. 10.
Mail orders addressed to W. F. A. Engel, Local Manager, will receive prompt and careful attention.

NORTHAMPTON.
GAZETT.
J-

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the distinguished pianist, Miss Adele Aus der Ohe as soloist, will appear at the Court Square theatre, in Springfield, on the evening of Tuesday, Jan. 17. Miss Aus der Ohe is well known as one of the most eminent of female pianists, as well as an artist of the highest rank, and to hear her with the superb orchestra in the great Tschaikowsky concerto will be a great musical treat. The concert program is as follows:—

Overture to "Camacho's Wedding," Op. 10. Mendelssohn
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1, in B flat minor, Op. 23. Tschaikowsky
Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun." Debussy
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67. Beethoven

Tickets are on sale at Bridgman's book store or may be obtained of Christopher Clarke.

Court Square Theatre,
SPRINGFIELD.
Tuesday Evening, Jan 17, 8 o'clock
ONE CONCERT ONLY.
Boston Symphony Orchestra.
Mr. Wilhelm Gericke,
CONDUCTOR.
SOLOIST
Miss Adele Aus Der Ohe
PIANIST.
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75c, 50c.
Now on sale at Theater Box Office,
Mail orders addressed to W. F. A. Engel Local Manager, Springfield, will receive prompt and careful attention.
Northampton tickets also on sale at Bridgman's Book Store or Christopher Clarke. 1t

Court Square
Theater
Tuesday Eve, January 17,
8.15 o'clock.
One Concert Only
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MR. WILHELM GERICKE
Conductor
Soloist
MISS ADELE AUS DER OHE
Pianist
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75c, 50c.
On sale at theater box office on and after 9 a. m. Tuesday, Jan. 10. Mail orders addressed to W. F. A. Engel, Local Manager, will receive prompt and careful attention.

Next Tuesday Evening, Jan. 17, at 8.15.
COURT SQUARE THEATER
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
—AND—
Miss ADELE AUS der OHE
The Eminent Pianist,
Conductor
Mr WILHELM GERICKE,
Will play the great
TSCHAIKOWSKY CONCERTO, No 1,
B Flat Minor, Op. 23.
As one number of their superb program.
Tickets, $1.50, $1.00, 75c, 50c, now on sale at theater box office.
Mail orders addressed to W. F. A. ENGEL, Local Manager, will receive prompt and careful attention.

Court Square Theater, Jan. 17.
Tuesday Evening, 8.15 o'clock,
ONE CONCERT ONLY.
BOSTON
Symphony Orchestra,
Mr WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.
Soloist, Miss ADELE AUS der OHE, Pianist,
Tickets, $1.50, $1.00 75c, 50c. Now on sale at Theater Box Office.
Mail orders addressed to W. F. A. Engel, Local Manager, will receive prompt and careful attention.

COURT SQUARE THEATER,
Tuesday Evening, January 17,
8.15 o'clock, One Concert Only.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Mr WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.
Soloist, Miss ADELE AUS der OHE, Pianist.
Tickets, $1.50, $1.00, 75 cents, 50 cents. On sale at Theater Box Office on and after 9 a. m. Tuesday, January 10.
Mail orders addressed to W. F. A. Engel, Local Manager, will receive prompt and careful attention.

...ical at the ...another man in his place without effort on her part.

Miss Aus der Ohe, the Pianist.

Miss Adele Aus der Ohe, who is to be the soloist at the Boston symphony orchestra concert at Court Square theater Tuesday evening, the 17th, is one of the best-known and most successful concert pianists of the present day, and holds her own against every new musician of pianistic talent. Week before last she, Pachmann, and Josef Hofmann all gave recitals in New York, and it was noted that hers was the most brilliant of the three, and quite as successful as either of the others. Miss Aus der Ohe has been a rather special favorite in this city ever since she played at the first of the May festivals given in the recently destroyed City hall by the Hampden county musical association. Since then she has repeatedly appeared, both at festivals and in recitals, and has never failed of a warm welcome. She was a pupil of Liszt's, contemporary with Arthur Friedheim, and has all the dash and verve of the Liszt school, together with a refinement of style and purity of tone which some of the most brilliant of Liszt's pupils have lacked. There is a whole-souled sincerity in her playing that is most grateful, and the bigger the work the more completely she rises to it. She is one of the few women pianists who can do justice to the sonorous and emotional Tschaikowsky B flat minor concerto. Mme Carreno played it so wonderfully here at one of the music festivals that it will be interesting to compare this and Miss Aus der Ohe's interpretation.

ADELE AUS DER OHE.

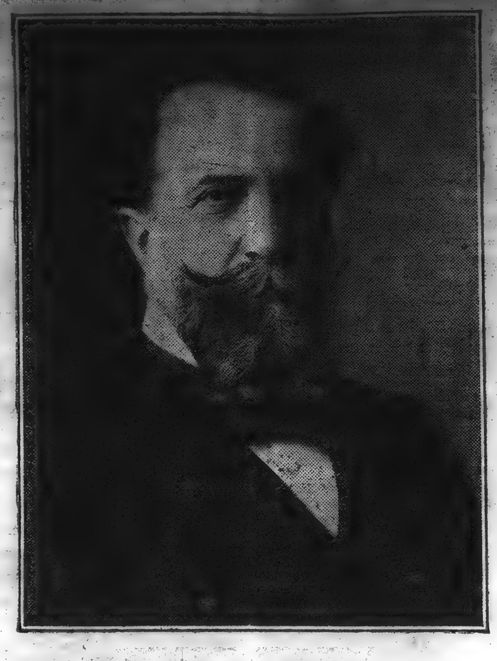
[56]

MISS ADELE AUS DER OHE.

Eminent Female Pianist to Appear Here.

The coming concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, with the distinguished pianist, Miss Adele Aus der Ohe as soloist, at the Court Square theater on Tuesday evening is an event which members of the musical community are looking forward to with keen and pleasurable interest. Miss Aus der Ohe is well known as one of the most eminent of female pianists, as well as an artist of the highest rank, and to hear her with the superb orchestra in the great Tschaikowsky concerto will be a musical treat to be long remembered. The concert program is as follows:

Mendelssohn—Overture to "Camacho's Wedding, Op. 10.
Tschaikowsky—Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1, in B-flat, minor Op. 23.
Debussy—Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun."
Beethoven—Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67.



WILHELM GERICKE,

Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Once again Springfield is to hear a grand Beethoven symphony performed by the greatest body of musicians in America—the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Wilhelm Gericke. This famous organization, with Miss Adele Aus der Ohe as soloist, will give one of its unrivalled concert performances at the Court Square theater, Tuesday evening, Jan. 17, at 8 o'clock. Miss Aus der Ohe, the young German artist, is one of the most brilliant and finished pianists now before the public, and of scarcely less interest than the Beethoven symphony will be her appearance in Tschaikowsky's great concerto for piano and orchestra. Following is the full program:

Overture to "Comacho's Wedding," Op. 10, Mendelssohn
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1, in B-flat minor, Op. 23, Tschaikowsky
Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun," Debussy
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67, Beethoven

THE SPRINGFIELD HOMESTEAD

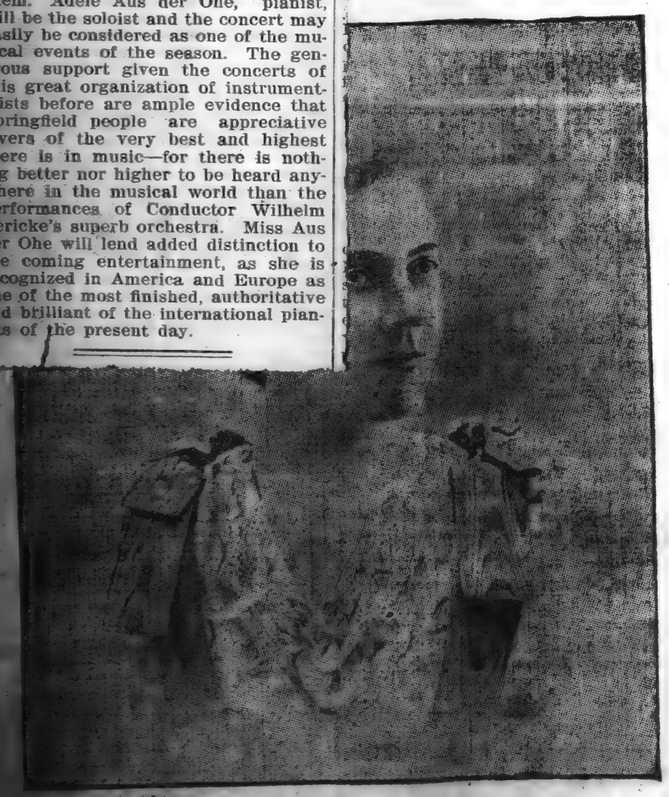
DAILY NEWS.

GOOD DEMAND FOR SEATS.

Ticket Sale Opens for the Symphony Concert.

Sale of seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in Court Square Theater next Tuesday evening opened this morning at the box office, there being an excellent demand for them. Adele Aus der Ohe, pianist, will be the soloist and the concert may easily be considered as one of the musical events of the season. The generous support given the concerts of this great organization of instrumentalists before are ample evidence that Springfield people are appreciative lovers of the very best and highest there is in music—for there is nothing better nor higher to be heard anywhere in the musical world than the performances of Conductor Wilhelm Gericke's superb orchestra. Miss Aus der Ohe will lend added distinction to the coming entertainment, as she is recognized in America and Europe as one of the most finished, authoritative and brilliant of the international pianists of the present day.

THE SPRI



ADELE AUS DER OHE.

MLLE ADELE AUS DER OHE, PIANIST
Soloist With Boston Symphony Orchestra at Court Square Theater Next Tuesday Night

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERT

A grand concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Wilhelm Gericke conductor, is announced to be given next Tuesday evening at the Court Square theater, with Adele Aus der Ohe as soloist. To hear Miss Aus der Ohe is always a rare enjoyment, for not only is she a pianist of brilliant technique, musical understanding and a refined taste, but she has an individuality all her own which has long been recognized and admired in American and European cities. Of the famous orchestra itself, the peer of any musical organization in the world, there is little that can be said which is not already known to the music lovers of Springfield, where its appearances in past years and particularly its concerts of last season and the year before have been accorded a generous support. The superb band of Boston musicians has a new and brilliant acquisition this year in the person of Prof Willy Hess, first violin and concert master, but in other respects is practically unchanged in personnel from former years. The coming concert will be the orchestra's 11th given in Springfield, and its 2238th public performance. The managers hope that Springfield people will patronize the concert so generously as to warrant two visits of the orchestra during the season. The program will be as follows:

Overture to Camacho's Wedding, Op 10 Mendelssohn
Concerto for pianoforte, No 1, in B-flat minor, Op 23 Tschaikowsky
I Andante non troppo e molto maestoso
Allegro con spirito
II Andantino semplice
Allegro vivace assai
III Allegro con fucco
Prelude to Stephane Mallarme's Eclogue, The Afternoon of a Faun, Debussy
(First time at Springfield)
Symphony in C minor, No 5, Op 67 Beethoven
I Allegro con brio
II Andante con moto
III Allegro: Trio
IV Allegro

Soloist
Adele Aus der Ohe

RE THEATER
17 8.15 o'clock
ert Only SYMPHONY
ESTRA
M GERICKE ıctor ıist
US DER OHE ist
, 75 cents, 50 cents
ıeater Box Office
l, Local Manager, will receive prompt attention

MISS ADELE AUS DER OHE.

Eminent Female Pianist to Appear Here.

The coming concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, with the distinguished pianist, Miss Adele Aus der Ohe as soloist, at the Court Square theater on Tuesday evening is an event which members of the musical community are looking forward to with keen and pleasurable interest. Miss Aus der Ohe is well known as one of the most eminent of female pianists, as well as an artist of the highest rank, and to hear her with the superb orchestra in the great Tschaikowsky concerto will be a musical treat to be long remembered. The concert program is as follows:

Mendelssohn—Overture to "Camacho's Wedding, Op. 10.
Tschaikowsky—Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1, in B-flat, minor Op. 23.
Debussy—Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun."
Beethoven—Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67.

WILHELM GERICKE,

Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Once again Springfield is to hear a grand Beethoven symphony performed by the greatest body of musicians in America—the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Wilhelm Gericke. This famous organization, with Miss Adele Aus der Ohe as soloist, will give one of its unrivalled concert performances at the Court Square theater, Tuesday evening, Jan. 17, at 8 o'clock. Miss Aus der Ohe, the young German artist, is one of the most brilliant and finished pianists now before the public, and of scarcely less interest than the Beethoven symphony will be her appearance in Tschaikowsky's great concerto for piano and orchestra. Following is the full program:

Overture to "Comacho's Wedding," Op. 10. Mendelssohn
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1, in B-flat minor, Op. 23. Tschaikowsky
Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun." Debussy
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67. Beethoven

THE SPRINGFIELD HOMESTEAD

GOOD DEMAND FOR SEATS.

Ticket Sale Opens for the Symphony Concert.

Sale of seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in Court Square Theater next Tuesday evening opened this morning at the box office, there being an excellent demand for them. Adele Aus der Ohe, pianist, will be the soloist and the concert may easily be considered as one of the musical events of the season. The generous support given the concerts of this great organization of instrumentalists before are ample evidence that Springfield people are appreciative lovers of the very best and highest there is in music—for there is nothing better nor higher to be heard anywhere in the musical world than the performances of Conductor Wilhelm Gericke's superb orchestra. Miss Aus der Ohe will lend added distinction to the coming entertainment, as she is recognized in America and Europe as one of the most finished, authoritative and brilliant of the international pianists of the present day.

DAILY NEWS.

THE SPRI

ADELE AUS DER OHE.

MLLE ADELE AUS DER OHE, PIANIST
Soloist With Boston Symphony Orchestra at Court Square Theater Next Tuesday Night

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERT

A grand concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Wilhelm Gericke conductor, is announced to be given next Tuesday evening at the Court Square theater, with Adele Aus der Ohe as soloist. To hear Miss Aus der Ohe is always a rare enjoyment, for not only is she a pianist of brilliant technique, musical understanding and a refined taste, but she has an individuality all her own which has long been recognized and admired in American and European cities. Of the famous orchestra itself, the peer of any musical organization in the world, there is little that can be said which is not already known to the music lovers of Springfield, where its appearances in past years and particularly its concerts of last season and the year before have been accorded a generous support. The superb band of Boston musicians has a new and brilliant acquisition this year in the person of Prof Willy Hess, first violin and concert master, but in other respects is practically unchanged in personnel from former years. The coming concert will be the orchestra's 11th given in Springfield, and its 2238th public performance. The managers hope that Springfield people will patronize the concert so generously as to warrant two visits of the orchestra during the season. The program will be as follows:

Overture to Camacho's Wedding, Op 10 Mendelssohn
Concerto for pianoforte, No 1, in B-flat minor, Op 23 Tschaikowsky
I Andante non troppo e molto maestoso
Allegro con spirito
II Andantino semplice
Allegro vivace assai
III Allegro con fucco
Prelude to Stephane Mallarme's Eclogue, The Afternoon of a Faun, Debussy
(First time at Springfield)
Symphony in C minor, No 5, Op 67 Beethoven
I Allegro con brio
II Andante con moto
III Allegro: Trio
IV Allegro

Soloist
Adele Aus der Ohe

RE THEATER
17 8.15 o'clock
ert Only
SYMPHONY
ESTRA
M GERICKE
ıctor ıist
US DER OHE ist
, 75 cents, 50 cents
ıeater Box Office
l, Local Manager, will receive prompt attention

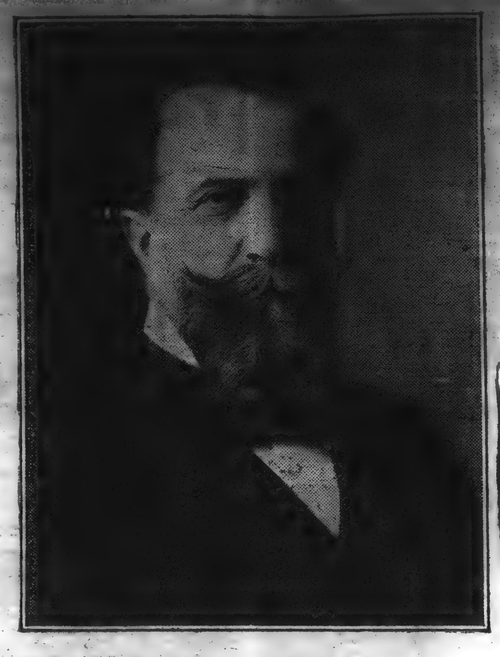
MISS ADELE AUS DER OHE.
Eminent Female Pianist to Appear Here.

The coming concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, with the distinguished pianist, Miss Adele Aus der Ohe as soloist, at the Court Square theater on Tuesday evening is an event which members of the musical community are looking forward to with keen and pleasurable interest. Miss Aus der Ohe is well known as one of the most eminent of female pianists, as well as an artist of the highest rank, and to hear her with the superb orchestra in the great Tschaikowsky concerto will be a musical treat to be long remembered. The concert program is as follows:

Mendelssohn—Overture to "Camacho's Wedding, Op. 10.
Tschaikowsky—Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1, in B-flat, minor Op. 23.
Debussy—Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun."
Beethoven—Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67.



WILHELM GERICKE,
Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Once again Springfield is to hear a grand Beethoven symp performed by the greatest body of musicians in America—the ton Symphony orchestra, conducted by Wilhelm Gericke. Thi mous organization, with Miss Adele Aus der Ohe as soloist, give one of its unrivalled concert performances at the Court S theater, Tuesday evening, Jan. 17, at 8 o'clock. Miss Aus der the young German artist, is one of the most brilliant and fi pianists now before the public, and of scarcely less interest the Beethoven symphony will be her appearance in Tschaiko great concerto for piano and orchestra. Following is the full pro

Overture to "Comacho's Wedding," Op. 10, Mend
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1, in B-flat minor, Op. 23, Tschail
Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun," D
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67, Bea

Smoke I
YOU WILL NOT MAINT
The J. H. ROGERS
SANFOR
We are showing a s
very latest and best desig
Put Up Your Car
And Have Them
Springs.
DEPOT AND WI
317 Main Street
Merchan
AUGUST discount unu

YOUR Fair
UNITED ELECTRIC LIGHT CO
138 STATE STREET
POWER
Rates Reasonable
Perfect Service
ELEC

DAILY NEWS.

THE SPRI

ADELE AUS DER OHE.

THE SPRINGFIELD HOMESTEAD

MLLE ADELE AUS DER OHE, PIANIST
Soloist With Boston Symphony Orchestra at Court Square Theater Next Tuesday Night

COURT SQUARE THEATER
Tuesday Eve Jan 17 8.15 o'clock
One Concert Only

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MR WILHELM GERICKE
Conductor
Soloist
Miss ADELE AUS DER OHE
Pianist
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75 cents, 50 cents
Now on Sale at Theater Box Office
Mail orders addressed to W F A Engel, Local Manager, will receive prompt and careful attention

MISS ADELE AUS DER OHE.

Eminent Female Pianist to Appear Here.

The coming concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, with the distinguished pianist, Miss Adele Aus der Ohe as soloist, at the Court Square theater on Tuesday evening is an event which members of the musical community are looking forward to with keen and pleasurable interest. Miss Aus der Ohe is well known as one of the most eminent of female pianists, as well as an artist of the highest rank, and to hear her with the superb orchestra in the great Tschaikowsky concerto will be a musical treat to be long remembered. The concert program is as follows:

Mendelssohn—Overture to "Camacho's Wedding, Op. 10.

Tschaikowsky—Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1, in B-flat, minor Op. 23.

Debussy—Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun."

Beethoven—Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67.

WILHELM GERICKE,

Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Once again Springfield is to hear a grand Beethoven symphon performed by the greatest body of musicians in America—the Bo ton Symphony orchestra, conducted by Wilhelm Gericke. This fa mous organization, with Miss Adele Aus der Ohe as soloist, w give one of its unrivalled concert performances at the Court Squ theater, Tuesday evening, Jan. 17, at 8 o'clock. Miss Aus der Oh the young German artist, is one of the most brilliant and finish pianists now before the public, and of scarcely less interest than the Beethoven symphony will be her appearance in Tschaikowsky great concerto for piano and orchestra. Following is the full program

Overture to "Comacho's Wedding," Op. 10. Mendelssohn
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1, in B-flat minor, Op. 23. Tschaikowsky
Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun." Debussy
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67. Beethoven

Smoke I

YOU WILL NOT

MAINTA

The J. H. ROGERS

SANFOR

Put Up Your Car
And Have Them
Spring.

We are showing a s
very latest and best desig

DEPOT AND WI

317 Main Street -

Merchan

AUGUST

discount unu

Your Fair P

UNITED ELECTRIC LIGHT CO.
133 STATE STREET

Rates Reasonable
Perfect Service

POWER

ELEC

DAILY NEWS.

THE SPRINGFIELD HOMESTEAD

THE SPRI

ADELE AUS DER OHE.

MLLE ADELE AUS DER OHE, PIANIST
Soloist With Boston Symphony Orchestra at Court Square Theater Next Tuesday Night

COURT SQUARE THEATER
Tuesday Eve Jan 17 8.15 o'clock
One Concert Only

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MR WILHELM GERICKE
Conductor

Soloist
Miss ADELE AUS DER OHE
Pianist

Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75 cents, 50 cents
Now on Sale at Theater Box Office
Mail orders addressed to W F A Engel, Local Manager, will receive prompt and careful attention

SUNDAY HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVII., NO. 22.
SUNDAY, JAN. 22, 1905.

SYMPHONY PLAYS TWO NEW 'POEMS'

Works of Converse, with Mottoes from Walt Whitman's "Leaves of Grass" on "Night" and "Day" Performed for First Time.

MOTTO STANDS IN WAY, ONE EXPECTS TOO MUCH

Music Does Not Rivet Attention—Thought of Hearer Is on How Pianist Is Playing—Haydn Symphony Is Well Played.

[illegible] Hall, Mr. [illegible] followed [illegible]

The [illegible] performed [illegible] from Walt Whitman's [illegible] entitled [illegible] Reflects. They are all [illegible] sensible.

And it seems to us that Mr. Converse himself is responsible in a large measure for this undue interest in the piano part. When Mr. Bauer played the piano part in d'Indy's "Symphony on a Mountain Folk Song," there was little or no thought of Mr. Bauer, for the piano part, while it was important, was so constructed that even the most careless listener was aware that the instrument was for the time being only orchestral.

Put together the explanation given by the mottoes concerning the aesthetic contents of the music and the dominating thought of the pianist, and the result is this, the pieces seem as though they were any prelude and allegro, or nocturne and allegro designed as a concert piece for piano and orchestra, and what should have been the controlling thought, the transliteration into tones of characterization of night and its symbolical reminders, was in the background. Perhaps it would have been better, then, if the mottoes that served as arguments had been omitted. "Night" and "Day" would have been enough, for after all, to go back to Walt Whitman, music is what awakes from you when you are reminded by the instruments.

You cannot find in music anything definite that is not already in your mind. That which is inarticulate may be suggested by the music, provided you yourself have imagination equal or superior to that of the composer. Mr. Converse probably realized this when he chose the motto "thy free flight into the wordless." And so a seesaw is easily established between the expediency or the inexpediency of any sort of a programme.

The first of the poems is musically poetic. There is the nocturne character, and there is the suggestion of the night that leads to contemplation. As a musical illustration of a phase of night it is successful; but this night of Mr. Converse is not so huge as it is thoughtful. There is no suggestion of the elemental shudder that oppresses when the winds are still and the stars are nearest; the shudder recalling the saying of the old philosopher that the earth itself is an animal; the stillness that hints at mysterious voices threatening to speak; nor is there the suggestion in this music of the infinite space peopled as in Mr. Wells' fantastical tale of the stolen body; nor is there soaring flight, though the flight be "free." But to express, or rather to suggest, "the psychological meaning" of night in music would require a composer of Whitman's sweep and thought.

As an Allegro, the second poem is often interesting; but again the motto stands in the way and invites one to expect too much. The opening measures are particularly effective. The world is awakening to activity, but after these measures the programme fades away, and there is the thought of a concert piece for piano and orchestra, a piece very episodic, without any central and controlling idea, such as dominates an entitled symphonic poem. There are pleasant pages; there are pages that are more than pleasant, but the music does not rivet the attention of the hearer. This is not the allegro of the world, the terrible allegro of daily life, with its ambitions, failures, successes, laughter that is too often ironical or maniacal. As an allegro for piano and orchestra it is episodically effective.

The Haydn symphony was played in admirable fashion, and the reappearance of the Centennial march reminded some of the year when many Americans—and all American composers—groaned at the thought of Wagner receiving $5000 for such trash.

Mr. Adamowski was most successful in the Romance of the concerto, for his song was often appealing. His performance as a whole was not one that added to his reputation, for it lacked distinction and it was at times technically faulty. Mr Adamowski has true virtuoso blood, he has many natural gifts. He at times plays with inspiration. His performance is often engrossing. It is a pity that a violinist of such natural parts does not devote himself wholly and rigidly to self-improvement.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, JAN 22, 1905.

Adamowski With Symphony Orchestra.

Boston Soon to be Visited by a Group of Famous Violinists.

Other Interesting Recitals —Personal Gossip.

Last week's Symphony program had for a novelty two "poems" by F. S. Converse, entitled "Night and Day," written for piano and orchestra. Mr Heinrich Gebhard played the piano part. The D minor violin concerto by Wieniawski was given with Mr Timothee Adamowski as soloist, and Haydn's "Oxford" symphony and Wagner's "Centennial March" completed the list. Mr Converse has taken lines of Walt Whitman which suggested moods the composer wished to express by the titles "Night" and "Day"; poetical fancies, purely symbolical and not illustrating any physical characteristics of the time. They are musical creations which express the writer's ideas in a pleasing and intangible form to an imaginative auditor; tone pictures which are cleverly handled in orchestration and are admirable examples of this style of poetic composition. The form is so free and unconventional that it is difficult to describe. The general effect is what might be called soothing to one's nerves, for Mr Converse has not attempted reproductions of "sounds from nature," but has merely let his musical genius wander at will in depicting moods and not characteristics. Mr Gebhard played the piano part in a thoroughly sympathetic manner, and the orchestra performed its share of the work in a way to make the whole interpretation, taking the two poems as one number, one of interest and enjoyment. Mr Converse has scored the "poems" with his usual well-known skill and the young American composer is to be congratulated upon the musicianly quality of the somewhat fantastical work.

In the Wieniawski violin concerto Mr Adamowski again made evident his splendid qualifications as an artist, and with the exception of a little uncertainty in execution in parts of the first movement his interpretation was admirable. The beautiful melody in the second part was played with exquisite phrasing and tonal expression and the gypsy theme in the finale was given with a brilliancy and dash that deserves favorable comment. He was very cordially applauded at the close of his performance.

Haydn's "Oxford" symphony may be old-fashioned in spots, but the second and closing movements show few marks of age, and as played by the orchestra give plenty of enjoyment to even the average musical ear. Wagner's "Centennial March" was given with the required pomposity and resonance.

This week's program will have Rudolf Krasselt as solcist in Volkmann's A minor cello concerto. The orchestral pieces will be the overture. "Barber of Bagdad," Peter Cornelius; a symphony prelude by R. Caetani, and the "Symphony Fantastique" by Berlioz.

The Boston Journal
JANUARY 23, 1905.

OXFORD SYMPHONY OF HAPPY MEMORY

At Symphony Orchestra's 12th Concert Mr. Gericke Read Haydn Number Most Artistically.

For the twelfth concert of the Symphony Orchestra the program was:

Symphony in G major, "Oxford".....Haydn
Violin concerto in D minor, No. 2..Wieniawski
Two poems, "Night" and "Day," for piano and orchestra, op. 11.....F. S. Converse (First time.)
Centennial March.....Wagner

The happy old "Oxford" symphony went in the best possible style. Nothing, save its last movement, is of any especial value or great charm, but that is marvelously piquant, fresh and brilliant even today. Mr. Gericke read the whole work with sympathy, and when he does that he is a most artistic interpreter.

The Converse Poems.

The "pieces de resistance" were Mr. Converse's two poems for orchestra and pianoforte. With their lines of Whitman's describing "Day" and "Night," they are not altogether in consonance. Mere difference in mood, in tempo, in rhythm, in musical thought does not depict the enormous imagination of the "good gray poet."

In fact, the two pieces are, to all practical purposes, movements of a pianoforte concerto. Mr. Converse disclaims this, but the musical result is the strongest test. He would have the pianoforte part seem to be merely one of many instruments of the orchestra, but as he has written it and as circumstances surround it, that is not possible.

Pianist to the Rear.

The pianist comes on and bows to the applause. He sits at the very front of the platform, and his playing invites attention. Would not the purpose have been better served had he been in the rear, screened by the others? The two movements are musicianly, cleverly orchestrated and generally interesting, the first being the better. Heinrich Gebhard played the pianoforte part with large artistry in expression and fluency in technique.

Adamowski's Elegance.

Mr. Adamowski gave the beautiful Wieniawski violin concerto with his usual suave elegance, slightly marred now and then by little, but suggestive imperfections in technical art. Are these rifts growing in his lute? It is to be hoped not.

The famous—and by some considered infamous—march, which Wagner wrote for the Philadelphia Centennial (for $5000) changes no impression of it.

It is much beneath Wagner's ordinary genius and is often pompously empty. But it is to be doubted if any American composer could have written a better for the purpose in 1876.

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England
SUNDAY MORNING, JANUARY 22, 1905
(Copyright 1905, Post Publishing Co.)

12TH SYMPHONY CONCERT

The programme of the 12th Symphony concert last evening was as follows:

Symphony, G major, "Oxford".....Haydn
Concerto for violin, No. 2.....Wieniawski
Poems, "Night and Day," for piano and orchestra .....Converse
Centennial March .....Wagner

T. Adamowski was the solo violinist, and the piano part of the Converse number was played by Heinrich Gebhard.

The two orchestral poems, by F. S. Converse, suggested by verses of Walt Whitman, were played at this concert for the first time. The poem "Night" is a sort of free prelude, the piano being employed as an orchestral instrument. The second suggests an abbreviated concerto, with the piano more of a solo instrument. The first appears the most interesting of the two, but both are well written and show much talent on the part of the composer. Mr. Gebhard was fully adequate in the piano part, and both pianist and composer were recalled at the close of the performance.

Mr. Adamowski played the familiar concerto of Wieniawski in admirable manner, and this popular artist received a well-merited ovation and several recalls.

The orchestra gave a good performance of the Haydn symphony, and Wagner's Centennial March, written for the Philadelphia exposition of 1876, recalled to many the days of long ago, when the composer was less appreciated here than at the present time.

Rudolf Krasselt, 'cellist, will be the soloist at the rehearsal and concert this coming week.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD,
JANUARY 23, 1905

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

(From Mr. Elson's criticism)

PROGRAMME.

Haydn..Symphony No. 2, in G major, "Oxford."
Wieniawski.....Concerto for violin, No. 2.
Violin, Mr. T. Adamowski.
Converse.....Two poems for orchestra and pianoforte.
Pianoforte, Mr. Gebhard.
Wagner.....Centennial March.

"Oxford, No. 2" sounds like a telephone call, but it is a symphony, and one that has not faded out yet, although it was written over a century ago. It was played exquisitely, the work of the wood-wind, (especially the oboe and flute) in the Adagio, being remarkably excellent. The Minuets of these old symphonies, however, become somewhat tiresome, with their many repeats and unchanging 3-4 rhythm. Even Mr. Gericke's spirited interpretation could not galvanize this movement into life.

The Wieniawski concerto for violin is a grateful work, since it displays the solo instrument technically and emotionally. The long "tutti" for orchestra, before the violin enters, is rather a blemish, however, for it gives the soloist an excellent chance to get nervous while waiting for his "cue." Mr. Adamowski played the first movement very finely. He gave pure intonation, broad bowing, and even in the furiously difficult passages of double-stopping, he was perfectly true and quite clear. His sympathetic tone in the Romance was also effective.

[58]

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1904-1905.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

2192d to 2197th CONCERT.

NOVEMBER ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, October 30, 8 P.M. South Terminal Station, Track 15. Back Bay Station, 8.04 P.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, October 31, at 7, A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, November 1, Baltimore and Ohio R.R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.32, A.M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 12.49, P.M.
Concert at The Lyric, (formerly Music Hall,) Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, November 2, at 11.50, A.M., Mt. Royal Station, 11.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 2.07, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, November 3, at 10.00 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12, noon.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, November, 3 at 8.15, P.M.
Concert at Baptist Temple, Third Avenue and Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, Friday, November 4, at 8.15 P.M.
Third Avenue surface cars pass the door. Flatbush Avenue surface cars within short block.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, November 5, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, 5, P.M.
Arrive Boston, South Station, at 11, P.M.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, October 29, 1904. [OVER.]

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1904-1905.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

2213th to 2218th CONCERT.

DECEMBER ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, December 4, 7.45 P.M. South Terminal Station, Track 15. Back Bay Station, 7.49 P.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, December 5, at 7, A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, December 6, Baltimore and Ohio R.R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.32, A.M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 12.49, P.M.
Concert at The Lyric, (formerly Music Hall,) Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, December 7, at 11.50, A.M., Mt. Royal Station, 11.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 2.07, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, December 8, at 10.00 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12, noon.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, December, 8, at 8.15, P.M.
Concert at Baptist Temple, Third Avenue and Schermerhorn Street Brooklyn, Friday, December 9, at 8.25 P.M.
Third Avenue surface cars pass the door. Flatbush Avenue surface cars within short block.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, December 10, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, 5, P.M.
Arrive Boston, South Station, at 11, P.M.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, December 3, 1904. [OVER.]

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1904-1905.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

2231st to 2238th CONCERT.

JANUARY ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, January 8, 7.45 P.M. South Terminal Station, Track 15. Back Bay Station, 7.49 P.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, January 9, at 7, A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, January 10, Baltimore and Ohio R.R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.32, A.M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 12.49, P.M.
Concert at The Lyric, (formerly Music Hall,) Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, January 11, at 11.50, A.M., Mt. Royal Station, 11.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 2.07, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, January 12, at 10.00 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12, noon.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, January 12, at 8.15, P.M.
Concert at Baptist Temple, Third Avenue and Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, Friday, January 13, at 8.25 P.M.
Third Avenue surface cars pass the door. Flatbush Avenue surface cars within short block.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, January 14, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, Monday, January 16, 2, P.M.
Arrive Hartford at 4.55 P.M.
ALLYN HOUSE.
Concert at Foot Guard Hall at 8.15.
Leave Hartford Tuesday, January 17, at 11.12 A.M.
Arrive Springfield, at 12.04 noon.
WORTHEY HOTEL.
Concert at Court Square Theatre at 8.15.
Leave Springfield after the concert. Sleeping-cars ready at 10 P.M.
Arrive Boston, South Station, Wednesday, January 18, at 7, A.M.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, January 7, 1905. [OVER.]

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1904-1905.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

2249th to 2254th CONCERT.

FEBRUARY ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, February 12, 7.45 P.M. South Terminal Station, Track 15. Back Bay Station, 7.49 P.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, February 13, at 7, A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, February 14, Baltimore and Ohio R.R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.32, A.M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 12.49, P.M.
Concert at The Lyric, (formerly Music Hall,) Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, February 15, at 9.50, A.M., Mt. Royal Station, 9.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 11.52, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, February 16, at 10.00 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12, noon.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, February 16, at 8.15, P.M.
Concert at Baptist Temple, Third Avenue and Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, Friday, February 17, at 8.25 P.M.
Third Avenue surface cars pass the door. Flatbush Avenue surface cars within short block.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, February 18, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, 5, P.M.
Arrive Boston, South Station, 11 P.M.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, February 11, 1905. [OVER.]

SPECIAL ATTENTION IS CALLED TO CHANGE OF TIME FOR LEAVING BALTIMORE.

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1904-1905.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

2192d to 2197th CONCERT.

NOVEMBER ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, October 30, 8 P.M. South Terminal Station, Track 15. Back Bay Station, 8.04 P.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, October 31, at 7, A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15 P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, November 1, Baltimore and Ohio R.R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.32, A.M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 12.49, P.M.
Concert at The Lyric, (formerly Music Hall,) Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.

Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, November 2, at 11.50, A.M., Mt. Royal Station, 11.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 2.07, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, November 3, at 10.00 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12, noon.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, November, 3 at 8.15, P.M.
Concert at Baptist Temple, Third Avenue and Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, Friday, November 4, at 8.15 P.M.

Third Avenue surface cars pass the door. Flatbush Avenue surface cars within short block.

Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, November 5, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, 5, P.M.
Arrive Boston, South Station, at 11, P.M.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, October 29, 1904. [OVER.]

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1904-1905.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

2213th to 2218th CONCERT.

DECEMBER ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, December 4, 7.45 P.M. South Terminal Station, Track 15. Back Bay Station, 7.49 P.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, December 5, at 7, A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15 P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, December 6, Baltimore and Ohio R.R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.32, A.M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 12.49, P.M.
Concert at The Lyric, (formerly Music Hall,) Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.

Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, December 7, at 11.50, A.M., Mt. Royal Station, 11.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 2.07, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, December 8, at 10.00 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12, noon.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, December, 8, at 8.15, P.M.
Concert at Baptist Temple, Third Avenue and Schermerhorn Street Brooklyn, Friday, December 9, at 8.25 P.M.

Third Avenue surface cars pass the door. Flatbush Avenue surface cars within short block.

Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, December 10, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, 5, P.M.
Arrive Boston, South Station, at 11, P.M.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, December 3, 1904. [OVER.]

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1904-1905.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

2231st to 2238th CONCERT.

JANUARY ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, January 8, 7.45 P.M. South Terminal Station, Track 15. Back Bay Station, 7.49 P.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, January 9, at 7, A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15 P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, January 10, Baltimore and Ohio R.R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.32, A.M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 12.49, P.M.
Concert at The Lyric, (formerly Music Hall,) Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.

Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, January 11, at 11.50, A.M., Mt. Royal Station, 11.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 2.07, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, January 12, at 10.00 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12, noon.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, January 12, at 8.15, P.M.
Concert at Baptist Temple, Third Avenue and Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, Friday, January 13, at 8.25 P.M.

Third Avenue surface cars pass the door. Flatbush Avenue surface cars within short block.

Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, January 14, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, Monday, January 16, 2, P.M.
Arrive Hartford at 4.55 P.M.
ALLYN HOUSE.
Concert at Foot Guard Hall at 8.15.
Leave Hartford Tuesday, January 17, at 11.12 A.M.
Arrive Springfield, at 12.04 noon.
WORTHEY HOTEL.
Concert at Court Square Theatre at 8.15.
Leave Springfield after the concert. Sleeping-cars ready at 10 P.M.
Arrive Boston, South Station, Wednesday, January 18, at 7, A.M.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, January 7, 1905. [OVER.]

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1904-1905.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

2249th to 2254th CONCERT.

FEBRUARY ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, February 12, 7.45 P.M. South Terminal Station, Track 15. Back Bay Station, 7.49 P.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, February 13, at 7, A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15 P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, February 14, Baltimore and Ohio R.R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.32, A.M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 12.49, P.M.
Concert at The Lyric, (formerly Music Hall,) Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.

Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, February 15, at 9.50, A.M., Mt. Royal Station, 9.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 11.52, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, February 16, at 10.00 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12, noon.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, February 16, at 8.15, P.M.
Concert at Baptist Temple, Third Avenue and Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, Friday, February 17, at 8.25 P.M.

Third Avenue surface cars pass the door. Flatbush Avenue surface cars within short block.

Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, February 18, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, 5, P.M.
Arrive Boston, South Station, 11 P.M.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, February 11, 1905. [OVER.]

SPECIAL ATTENTION IS CALLED TO CHANGE OF TIME FOR LEAVING BALTIMORE.

PROGRAMMES.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, . . . PHILADELPHIA
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 13, AT 8.15.

SINDING, SUITE in F major, "Episodes Chevaleresques."
LISZT, CONCERTO for Pianoforte and Orchestra in E flat.
BRAHMS, SYMPHONY No. 1.
Soloist: Mr. ERNEST SCHELLING.

THE LYRIC, ... BALTIMORE
TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 14, AT 8.15.

TSCHAIKOWSKY, "MANFRED" SYMPHONY.
VOLKMANN, CONCERTO for Violoncello and Orchestra.
BEETHOVEN, OVERTURE, "Leonore" No. 3.
Soloist: Mr. RUDOLF KRASSELT.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, . . . PHILADELPHIA
WEDNESDAY EVENING, MARCH 15, AT 8.15.

TSCHAIKOWSKY, "MANFRED" SYMPHONY.
BRAHMS, CONCERTO for Violin.
BEETHOVEN, OVERTURE, "Leonore" No. 3.
Soloist: Mr. FRITZ KREISLER.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK
THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 16, AT 8.15.

TSCHAIKOWSKY, "MANFRED" SYMPHONY.
BRAHMS, CONCERTO for Violin.
BEETHOVEN, OVERTURE, "Leonore," No. 3.
Soloist: MR. FRITZ KREISLER.

BAPTIST TEMPLE, ... BROOKLYN
FRIDAY EVENING, MARCH 17, AT 8.15.

SCHUBERT, SYMPHONY in C major, No. 7.
MOZART, ARIA. "Flown forever," from "Marriage of Figaro."
BEETHOVEN, OVERTURE, "Leonore." No. 3.
WAGNER, "Tristan and Isolde," Introduction and Love-Death.
Soloist: Mme. GADSKI.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK
SATURDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 18, AT 2.30.

WAGNER, A "FAUST" OVERTURE.
BACH, PRELUDE, ADAGIO, and GAVOTTE in Rondo form.
(Arranged for Strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
LISZT, CONCERTO No. 1, in E flat major.
BRAHMS, SYMPHONY No. 1, in C minor.
Soloist: Mr. ERNEST SCHELLING.

WOOLSEY HALL. . . . . NEW HAVEN
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 20, AT 8.15

GOLDMARK, "In Italy."
BEETHOVEN, CONCERTO for Pianoforte.
BRUCH, CONCERTO for Violin,
SCHUBERT, SYMPHONY in C major, No. 7.
Mr. PADEREWSKI.] Soloists: [Professor WILLY HESS.

FOOT GUARD HALL, ... HARTFORD
TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 21, AT 8.15.

CESAR FRANCK, SYMPHONY in D minor.
VOLKMANN, CONCERTO for Violoncello, in A minor.
RIMSKY-KORSAKOFF, SYMPHONIC SUITE, "Scheherazade."
Soloist: Mr. RUDOLF KRASSELT.

Boston Tr...

MONDAY, JANUARY 23, 1905

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra.

The Symphony Concerts are now half over for this season, the twelfth concert having been given on Saturday evening. Mr. Timothée Adamowski was the soloist, and this was the programme:

Haydn: Symphony in G major, "Oxford."
Wieniawski: Concerto in D minor, No. 2, for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 22.
Converse: Two Poems, "Night" and "Day," for Orchestra and Pianoforte, Op. 11. (First time.) Pianoforte, Mr. Heinrich Gebhard.
Wagner: Centennial March.

In regard to Mr. Converse's poems for pianoforte and orchestra, it will be well to let the composer speak for himself. "'This is thy hour, O Soul, thy free flight into the wordless.' This expresses quite completely the mood which I have tried to create in my music. Of day Whitman says, 'Day of full bloom and splendid—day of the immense sun, action, ambition, laughter.' As far as it goes, this describes my poem very well, but the real essence is lacking, although it was the best and most fitting quotation I could find for a motto. The moods of action, ambition, laughter, and of love, too (for the erotic mood is suggested in the music), are all there, but strung upon and incident to the one predominant and insistent theme of the struggle of life. This restless, striving, eternal energy, this struggling conscience, is the main stream of the poem and the other emotional phases are eddies momentarily emerging from it, but always being absorbed again in it, until at the end the tragedy of it becomes apparent and dominant. This is what I have tried to express.

"As to the technical side of the poems: they are free in form and might be described in a broad way as prelude and allegro, if one desires to fall back upon the conventional expression of such things. The piano is treated as an integral although very important part of the orchestral scheme, and whatever technically important moments it may have grow naturally out of the emotional contents, and not from the desire for a display of virtuosity. The piano part must appeal to the pianist's power of intelligent, poetic interpretation, in which virtuosity is the servant, not the master, rather than to anything else. This I believe to be the future field for the piano in combination with the orchestra, and I believe it to be in sympathy with modern feeling in musical expression."

It has been wise to quote Mr. Converse at some length, for, after all, the artist himself knows best the nature of the message he has wished to convey. After reading his words, however, a listener must feel that the composer has made rather more of the pianoforte part in his poems than, from the reading, one would have been led to expect. In short, after hearing the pieces Saturday night, it may be questioned if the first topic of conversation among neighbors were not the merits of Mr. Gebhard's performance, which, incidentally, was a very beautiful performance, indeed, showing the willingness of the genuine artist to keep his place in the instrumental scheme, ability highly to color pianoforte tones, and real poetic feeling. But Mr. Gebhard, despite his honorable intentions and artistic effacement of self, from the nature of things, was bound to attract attention. If Mr. Converse desired to suggest Whitman through orchestral music he would have been wiser had he dispensed with so much service from the pianoforte; something less of the instrument—far less—might possibly have proved effective.

The Whitman mottoes, also, were less a help than a hindrance. Why have mottoes at all, especially when, as Mr. Converse says, they do not precisely express the essence of his music? And Whitman, in particular, must always be a stumbling-block till there comes a musician of his own breadth and grandeur. There is Mr. Converse's first poem, for instance, a short few pages of music charmingly melodious, exquisitely scored, poetically imaginative, a delicately, tenderly felt impression of the gentler aspects of night, or, more seemingly, of twilight. More genuine, spontaneous, poetic music we seldom find written today. But does it in any way suggest Whitman's bald, forceful, elemental pictures of night? Mr. Converse's music suffers only when one recalls his motto.

The poem of "Day" seems less happy than that of "Night." It notably lacks the fresh sweep, the virile strength of Whitman, being episodic, involved, complex. And as music pure and simple it is not, at first hearing at least, so beautiful as the impression of "Night." Beautiful pages there are, undeniably, and many delightful episodes, but throughout it all a listener has difficulty in following the composer's meaning. Why, for instance, should there be three distinct and well-reached climaxes? At a second performance, perhaps, they will seem more reasonable than they did Saturday. It will be to the regret of everybody if these poems are not repeated, for they are not of the order of music to be dismissed after a single hearing. The first poem it would be a pleasure to listen to once more, and the second we would gladly become further acquainted with. The works were very cordially applauded.

About the other numbers of the concert one could write with pleasure. Mr. Adamowski, in fine fettle, displayed to advantage the temperament that makes listening to him a different matter from listening to violinists who, perhaps, play better. His tone on Saturday was unusually sweet and pure, the cantilenas of the concerto were exquisitely sung, and about it all were a warmth, a sentiment, and a brilliancy that made his performance notable. The execution of technical passages, while much better than that of last year, was still unequal to the best Mr. Adamowski is capable of. The artist was applauded heartily, being recalled four times.

Even the Haydn symphony was a pleasure, to such people as came sufficiently early to hear it. The best symphonies of Haydn are a constant surprise, one is always finding in them such unexpectedly beautiful arrangements of orchestral color. The symphony on Saturday was so carefully played that these color combinations showed forth in all their charm, and only when the strings played their loudest did the tone sound harsh. It is manifest, therefore, that even a Haydn symphony in a large hall can be made agreeable if only adequate pains be taken. The orchestra played admirably throughout the evening.

Mr. Krasselt is to play next time. This will be the programme: Overture to "Barber of Bagdad," Peter Cornelius; concerto for violoncello, in A minor, Volkmann; Prelude Symphonique, No. 5, op. 11 (first time), R. Caetani; Fantastic Symphony, Berlioz.

R. R. G.

---

[60]

PROGRAMMES.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC. . . . PHILADELPHIA
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 13, AT 8.15.

SINDING. SUITE in F major, "Episodes Chevaleresques."
LISZT. CONCERTO for Pianoforte and Orchestra in E flat.
BRAHMS. SYMPHONY No. 1.

Soloist: Mr. ERNEST SCHELLING.

THE LYRIC. . . . . BALTIMORE
TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 14, AT 8.15.

TSCHAIKOWSKY. "MANFRED" SYMPHONY.
VOLKMANN. CONCERTO for Violoncello and Orchestra.
BEETHOVEN. OVERTURE, "Leonore" No. 3.

Soloist: Mr. RUDOLF KRASSELT.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC. . . . PHILADELPHIA
WEDNESDAY EVENING, MARCH 15, AT 8.15.

TSCHAIKOWSKY. "MANFRED" SYMPHONY.
BRAHMS. CONCERTO for Violin.
BEETHOVEN. OVERTURE, "Leonore" No. 3.

Soloist: Mr. FRITZ KREISLER.

CARNEGIE HALL. . . . . NEW YORK
THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 16, AT 8.15.

TSCHAIKOWSKY. "MANFRED" SYMPHONY.
BRAHMS, CONCERTO for Violin.
BEETHOVEN. OVERTURE, "Leonore," No. 3.

Soloist: Mr. FRITZ KREISLER.

BAPTIST TEMPLE. . . . . BROOKLYN
FRIDAY EVENING, MARCH 17, AT 8.15.

SCHUBERT. SYMPHONY in C major, No. 7.
MOZART. ARIA, "Ich [illegible]," from "Marriage of Figaro."
BEETHOVEN. OVERTURE, "Leonore," No. 3.
WAGNER. "[illegible] Isolde," Introduction and Love-Death.

Soloist: Mme. GADSKI.

CARNEGIE HALL. . . . . NEW YORK
SATURDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 18, AT 2.30.

WAGNER. A "Faust" OVERTURE.
BACH. PRELUDE, ADAGIO and GAVOTTE in Rondo form.
(Arranged for Strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
LISZT. CONCERTO No. 1, in E flat major.
BRAHMS. SYMPHONY No. 4, in C minor.

Soloist: Mr. ERNEST SCHELLING.

WOOLSEY HALL. . . . . NEW HAVEN
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 20, AT 8.15.

GOLDMARK. "[illegible]."
BEETHOVEN. CONCERTO [illegible].
BRUCH. CONCERTO [illegible].
SCHUBERT. SYMPHONY [illegible] major, No. 7.
Mr. PADEREWSKI. Soloist: Professor WILLY HESS.

FOOT GUARD HALL. . . . . HARTFORD
TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 21, AT 8.15.

CESAR FRANCK. SYMPHONY in D minor.
VOLKMANN. CONCERTO for Violoncello, in A minor.
RIMSKY-KORSAKOFF. SYMPHONIC SUITE, "Scheherazade."

Soloist: Mr. RUDOLF KRASSELT.

Boston Transcript
MONDAY, JANUARY 23, 1905

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra.

The Symphony Concerts are now half over for this season, the twelfth concert having been given on Saturday evening. Mr. Timothée Adamowski was the soloist, and this was the programme:

Haydn: Symphony in G major, "Oxford."
Wieniawski: Concerto in D minor, No. 2, for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 22.
Converse: Two Poems, "Night" and "Day," for Orchestra and Pianoforte, Op. 11. (First time.) Pianoforte, Mr. Heinrich Gebhard.
Wagner: Centennial March.

In regard to Mr. Converse's poems for pianoforte and orchestra, it will be well to let the composer speak for himself. "'This is thy hour, O Soul, thy free flight into the wordless.' This expresses quite completely the mood which I have tried to create in my music. Of day Whitman says, 'Day of full bloom and splendid—day of the immense sun, action, ambition, laughter.' As far as it goes, this describes my poem very well, but the real essence is lacking, although it was the best and most fitting quotation I could find for a motto. The moods of action, ambition, laughter, and of love, too (for the erotic mood is suggested in the music), are all there, but strung upon and incident to the one predominant and insistent theme of the struggle of life. This restless, striving, eternal energy, this struggling conscience, is the main stream of the poem and the other emotional phases are eddies momentarily emerging from it, but always being absorbed again in it, until at the end the tragedy of it becomes apparent and dominant. This is what I have tried to express.

"As to the technical side of the poems: they are free in form and might be described in a broad way as prelude and allegro, if one desires to fall back upon the conventional expression of such things. The piano is treated as an integral although very important part of the orchestral scheme, and whatever technically important moments it may have grow naturally out of the emotional contents, and not from the desire for a display of virtuosity. The piano part must appeal to the pianist's power of intelligent, poetic interpretation, in which virtuosity is the servant, not the master, rather than to anything else. This I believe to be the future field for the piano in combination with the orchestra, and I believe it to be in sympathy with modern feeling in musical expression."

It has been wise to quote Mr. Converse at some length, for, after all, the artist himself knows best the nature of the message he has wished to convey. After reading his words, however, a listener must feel that the composer has made rather more of the pianoforte part in his poems than, from the reading, one would have been led to expect. In short, after hearing the pieces Saturday night, it may be questioned if the first topic of conversation among neighbors were not the merits of Mr. Gebhard's performance, which, incidentally, was a very beautiful performance, indeed, showing the willingness of the genuine artist to keep his place in the instrumental scheme, ability highly to color pianoforte tones, and real poetic feeling. But Mr. Gebhard, despite his honorable intentions and artistic effacement of self, from the nature of things, was bound to attract attention. If Mr. Converse desired to suggest Whitman through orchestral music he would have been wiser had he dispensed with so much service from the pianoforte; something less, of the instrument—far less—might possibly have proved effective.

The Whitman mottoes, also, were less a help than a hindrance. Why have mottoes at all, especially when, as Mr. Converse says, they do not precisely express the essence of his music? And Whitman, in particular, must always be a stumbling-block till there comes a musician of his own breadth and grandeur. There is Mr. Converse's first poem, for instance, a short few pages of music charmingly melodious, exquisitely scored, poetically imaginative, a delicately, tenderly felt impression of the gentler aspects of night, or, more seemingly, of twilight. More genuine, spontaneous, poetic music we seldom find written today. But does it in any way suggest Whitman's bald, forceful, elemental pictures of night? Mr. Converse's music suffers only when one recalls his motto.

The poem of "Day" seems less happy than that of "Night." It notably lacks the fresh sweep, the virile strength of Whitman, being episodic, involved, complex. And as music pure and simple it is not, at first hearing at least, so beautiful as the impression of "Night." Beautiful pages there are, undeniably, and many delightful episodes, but throughout it all a listener has difficulty in following the composer's meaning. Why, for instance, should there be three distinct and well-reached climaxes? At a second performance, perhaps, they will seem more reasonable than they did Saturday. It will be to the regret of everybody if these poems are not repeated, for they are not of the order of music to be dismissed after a single hearing. The first poem it would be a pleasure to listen to once more, and the second we would gladly become further acquainted with. The works were very cordially applauded.

About the other numbers of the concert one could write with pleasure. Mr. Adamowski, in fine fettle, displayed to advantage the temperament that makes listening to him a different matter from listening to violinists who, perhaps, play better. His tone on Saturday was unusually sweet and pure, the cantilenas of the concerto were exquisitely sung, and about it all were a warmth, a sentiment, and a brilliancy that made his performance notable. The execution of technical passages, while much better than that of last year, was still unequal to the best Mr. Adamowski is capable of. The artist was applauded heartily, being recalled four times.

Even the Haydn symphony gave much pleasure, to such people as came sufficiently early to hear it. The best symphonies of Haydn are a constant surprise, one is always finding in them such unexpectedly beautiful arrangements of orchestral color. The symphony on Saturday was so carefully played that these color combinations showed forth in all their charm, and only when the strings played their loudest did the tone sound harsh. It is manifest, therefore, that even a Haydn symphony in a large hall can be made agreeable if only adequate pains be taken. The orchestra played admirably throughout the evening.

Mr. Krasselt is to play next time. This will be the programme: Overture to "Barber of Bagdad," Peter Cornelius; concerto for violoncello, in A minor, Volkmann; Prelude Symphonique, No. 5, op. 11 (first time), R. Caetani; Fantastic Symphony, Berlioz.

R. R. G.

---

[60]

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

AND ITS FOUNDER, HENRY LEE HIGGINSON

BY RICHARD ALDRICH

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra is Mr. Henry L. Higginson's yacht, his racing-stable, his library, and his art gallery, or it takes the place of what these things are to other men of wealth with other tastes. It is a remark that he himself once made in disavowing any philanthropic ends when he set up in the city of Boston a musical organization that has few peers in the world of music anywhere. And though few will be persuaded to accept his disavowal as a complete expression of the case, it is true that Mr. Higginson has found in the establishment, the upbuilding, and the maintenance of a consummate artistic institution the keen personal delight that other men take in perfecting a collection or pursuing supremacy in a sport. If horse-racing is the sport of kings, there is also something regal, even imperial, in the possession of an orchestra. Kings had their court bands for their courtly pleasure a century and two centuries ago—bands which, in continental Europe, have evolved into royally endowed artistic establishments for the benefit of the people; and even into the nineteenth century the splendid Austrian princes, upon whom a fine old crust of feudalism lingered later than upon any others of the anointed, maintained for their own delectation, in their own palaces, great orchestras and great composers, whereof Joseph Haydn, serving the house of Esterházy as a liveried menial, is the classical exemplar. Mr. Higginson's orchestra, whatever he may declare as to his own motives, has been for twenty-three years as much for the benefit of his townsmen as for himself; and, in a way by no means indirect, for the benefit of his countrymen.

Henry L. Higginson, born in New York, but brought up in Boston as a scion of a Boston family socially and intellectually most distinguished, passed in his youth through the days of the Germania Orchestra and the Harvard Musical Association and the other local institutions that decorated the town with the epithet of "musical," and that contributed in large measure to that connotation of "culture" still inseparable from its name. The young Higginson, no doubt, like the good Bostonian he has always been, thought these things were all they should be or could be, till he was sent to Vienna to complete his education.

There he saw a great light. He associated much with musicians and musical amateurs, and heard what orchestral playing might be at the hands of accomplished musicians constantly in training under great conductors. Then and there he formed the resolution that when his time came he would give to Boston an orchestra on a higher plane than all its culture had ever known; an orchestra the members of which should not be summoned to its service upon occasion from other pursuits, but whose business should be its business; an orchestra that should not be dependent upon the caprice of the public, or limited in its scope by the conservatism of a clique.

His time came in the midst of a successful business career, when, moreover, Boston was ripe for the experiment he intended to try. The old Harvard Musical Association had shriveled up to nothing. To take its place, there was a newly formed Philharmonic Society supporting an orchestra upon the casual basis that was the only possible one under existing conditions. Its purposes were sincere, but it was glad to retire from the field when, in February, 1881, Mr. Higginson made public his intention of establishing a new orchestra in a new way. There was in Boston at the time a clever young baritone singer, musical through and through, a man of uncommon intelligence and force, and in certain ways of rare accomplishment. To Georg Henschel, though he was without experience as an orchestral conductor, was intrusted the organization of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He proved, not unnaturally, to be far from an ideal conductor, since the art of conducting is not inborn, but is acquired by great toil and long experience; but he did well the pioneering work for the new orchestra.

As he organized it, it numbered seventy performers. There were twelve first and eleven second violins, eight violas, nine cellos, nine double-basses, and the number of wood- and brass-wind players usual in a small orchestra.

The growth of the orchestra is shown by a comparison of these figures with those of its present constitution. There are now, when all the players are in requisition,—which, of course, they are only in the most modern compositions,—about ninety men; namely, sixteen first and fourteen second violins, ten violas, ten cellos, eight double-basses, four flutes, three oboes, one English horn, three clarinets, one bass clarinet, three bassoons, one contra-bassoon, four horns, four trumpets, three trombones, and one player each of the harp, tuba, timpani, bass drum, cymbals, triangle, and tambour. It gave its first concert on October 22, 1881. The purpose was at first to make it minister specially to listeners of limited purse. The best places cost fifty cents; at the so-called public rehearsals, on the afternoons of the day preceding the concerts,—really exact duplicates of the concerts themselves,—there were seats for twenty-five cents. But the concerts speedily became not only popular but fashionable. There was great competition for tickets among those of unlimited as well as of limited purse, and advantage was soon taken of this eagerness by the institution of an auction sale at the beginning of each season for the choice of places. Some have said that this has tended to restrict the popular privileges upon which emphasis was laid at first, and to increase the reliance put upon the support of wealth and fashion. Some have affirmed, too, that attendance upon these concerts is for many in Boston only a compliance with fashionable necessity. Yet for twenty-three years, week after week, the hall has been filled, often to the very limit of its capacity. Now, Boston is doubtless not to be judged as other towns; but it is hard to believe that, even in Boston, the necessity of being fashionable after the Boston manner can continue to constrain hundreds to weekly boredom unremittingly for twenty-three years, with few signs of relief yet in sight. It is almost easier to believe that love of music has really permeated the several strata of Boston society, and that the audience goes to the concerts because it wishes to hear them.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was not founded to provide an instrument for any particular conductor, but its conductors have been summoned to fill the need it created—a fact that should be taken into consideration by zealous but not always wisely prompted orchestral founders elsewhere. It has had four different men at its head in the course of its existence, each a man of special qualification in certain directions, who has not escaped fiery ordeals of criticism for one reason or another, especially at home. It has been observed that the angel Gabriel would be disparaged by the American public if he came in contact with it long enough; and in Boston the critical faculty has always been highly developed.

At least Mr. Henschel's standard of taste was high and his temperament stood him often in good stead where skill and routine failed him. What he accomplished was worth the doing. He returned to Europe in 1884, to be succeeded by a man as different in type, in ideals, and in method as could well be imagined.

Mr. Higginson had seen and heard Wilhelm Gericke in Vienna as Hans Richter's colleague at the Imperial Opera, and as conductor, also, of the Society of Friends of Music. Keen, alert, of imperious and overmastering will, with all the technic and routine of the difficult art of conducting

From the painting by John S. Sargent, owned by the Harvard Union. Half-tone plate engraved by H. Davidson at his fingers' ends, not without a certain pedantic quality to restrain the musician's temperament, which increasing years have rather mellowed and softened than intensified, he found his orchestra a body of men loosely knit together and sorely in need of the rigorous discipline that makes for perfect mobility and adaptability in orchestras as well as in armies. There is something of the martinet in Mr. Gericke's nature, and he needed all he had in those first years of the formative period. The greatest distinctions of the Boston orchestra, its perfection of ensemble, its brilliancy, its plasticity, its beauty of tone, are his work. He achieved them not only through drill and the instillation of an ardent feeling of esprit de corps, but also, and in large measure, through the improvement of the personnel.

HENRY LEE HIGGINSON

There were many veterans and some incompetents of the earlier dispensation in the orchestra when he came to it, who had found in it a "pleasant refuge" for declining years. Many new men came from Europe at his summons,—young men of eager blood, like the "young lions" of the Conservatory orchestra that were the delight of Berlioz in Paris,—for whom the orchestra was not a refuge, but a field for ambitious and energetic labor.

Drawn by S. Ivanowski

THE KETTLEDRUMS

It was a fortunate chance that brought Mr. Kneisel, Mr. Loeffler, Mr. Svecenski, Mr. Roth, Mr. Giese, the Adamowski brothers, Mr. Schuecker, and still others in the earlier years, and that has since

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

AND ITS FOUNDER, HENRY LEE HIGGINSON

BY RICHARD ALDRICH

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra is Mr. Henry L. Higginson's yacht, his racing stable, his library, or his picture gallery, or it takes the place of what these things are to other men of wealth with other tastes. It is a creation that he himself once made in disregard of any philanthropic ends when he set out to give the city of Boston a musical organization that has few peers in the world and no superiors anywhere. And though few will be persuaded to accept his disavowal as a complete expression of the case, it is true that Mr. Higginson has found in the establishment, the upbuilding, and the maintenance of a consummate artistic instrument keen personal delight that culminates in perfecting a collection and in supremacy in a sport. It has been the sport of kings, the most splendid and regal, even imperial, of the pursuits of an orchestra. Kings and princes have for their courtly pleasures two centuries ago [illegible] tinental Europe, [illegible] endowed [illegible] benefit of the people [illegible] nineteenth century [illegible] princes, [illegible] feudalism [illegible] others of the [illegible] own delectation, [illegible] orchestras and great [illegible] Joseph Haydn, serving [illegible] házy as a favored [illegible] exemplar. Mr. Higginson [illegible] ever he may decline [illegible] has been for twenty-three [illegible]

Association had shrunk [illegible] To take its place [illegible] Philharmonic Society [illegible] chestra upon the [illegible] only possible [illegible] tions. Its purposes were [illegible] glad to retire from the [illegible] ary, 1881, Mr. Higginson [illegible] fatigation of establishing [illegible] in a new way. [illegible] time a factor among [illegible] of the engineering [illegible] common intelligence [illegible] certain ways of [illegible] Georg Henschel, [illegible] experience as [illegible] intrusted the organization [illegible] Symphony Orchestra. He [illegible] naturally, to better [illegible] since the art of conducting [illegible] but is acquired by great [illegible] perience; but he did well [illegible] work for the new orchestra.

As he organized it, it numbered [illegible] performers. There were twelve [illegible] eleven second violins, eight [illegible] cellos, nine double basses [illegible] of wood- and brass-wind players [illegible] a small orchestra.

The growth of the orchestra is [illegible] by a comparison of these figures with those of its present constitution. There are now, when all the players are [illegible] which, of course, they are only in [illegible] modern compositions, [illegible] namely, sixteen first and fourteen second violins, ten violas, ten cellos, eight double basses, four flutes, three oboes, one English horn, three clarinets, one bass clarinet, three bassoons, one contra-bassoon, four horns, four trumpets, three trombones, and one player each of the harp, tuba, timpani, bass drum, cymbals, triangle, and tambourine. It gave its first concert on October 22, 1881. The purpose was at first to make it minister specially to listeners of limited purse. The best places cost fifty cents; at the so-called public rehearsals, on the afternoons of the day preceding the concerts, —really exact duplicates of the concerts themselves,—there were seats for twenty-five cents. But the concerts speedily became not only popular but fashionable. There was great competition for tickets among those of unlimited as well as of limited purse, and advantage was soon taken of this eagerness by the institution [illegible] Mr. Higginson [illegible] was [illegible] office [illegible] ticket plan. What he accomplished [illegible] worth the doing. He [illegible] in 1881, to be succeeded by [illegible] ferent in type, in ideas, and in [illegible] could well be imagined.

Mr. Higginson had seen and heard Wilhelm Gericke in Vienna as Hans Richter's colleague at the Imperial Opera, and as conductor, also, of the Society of Friends of Music. Keen, alert, of imperious and overmastering will, with all the technic and routine of the difficult art of conducting [illegible] Mr. Gericke's [illegible] the Boston Orchestra's position [illegible] its beauty, its brilliancy, its plasticity, its quality of tone, are his work. He achieved them not only through drill and the instillation of an ardent feeling of esprit de corps, but also, and [illegible] Mr. Kneisel [illegible] Lootfiler, Mr. [illegible] Mr. Roth, Mr. Giese, the [illegible] brothers, Mr. Schuecker, and [illegible] in the earlier years, and that added such men as the ill-fated Pourtau, and Mr. Longy, to name only a few of many accomplished players who have helped make the Boston Symphony Orchestra admired as "a band of virtuosi." Their coming caused wailing and gnashing of teeth in certain quarters. It is not a pleasant task to dismiss veterans who have deserved well; but it sometimes must be done, and the need for it arises, as New York has found to its cost. The [illegible] arm gets unsteady, [illegible] fingers unc[illegible], the [illegible] tongue mus[illegible] ning the [illegible] lt instru[illegible] ient; the [illegible] and is as[illegible] eter's and[illegible] cunning, and[illegible] ive way long [illegible] men they are [illegible] ge through [illegible] dertaki[illegible] broad as [illegible]

Drawn by S. Ivanowski

A BASSOON

[illegible]
THE LEADER

American Promised Land. There is a stronger force than the Musical Union to keep them out. Seasons are short, engagements are limited, opportunities for players of other than the stringed instruments, in case they should lose their positions, are few. Nor is it possible to pick out good men abroad with certainty. Not all the undertakings of the Boston Symphony conductors in this direction have been fortunate. It stands upon the records that, having heard many aspirants during a certain summer in Europe, one of Mr. Higginson's conductors personally chose and brought over sixteen new men. Every one of them proved quite incompetent and had speedily to be sent back. On another occasion it was desired to obtain a new clarinetist to take the place of one of the veterans just mentioned. The old one was dismissed with an indemnity for the breaking of his contract. The new one was sent, at the conductor's request, from Vienna by a celebrated conductor, who certified to his competency, truly believing him, no doubt, to be "good enough for America." Before he had gotten half through his first rehearsal with the orchestra it was clear that the new man would not do at all. He was [illegible]ot even allowed to play at the ensuing [illegible]oncert, but was sent away with a blessing [illegible]nd the year's salary he had contracted for [illegible]-shipped to a distant city where he could [illegible]lay in a theater and be as little as possible [illegible] thorn in the flesh of Boston. The veteran [illegible]as hastily recalled and reëngaged, naturally at an [illegible] salary sufficient to [illegible]ssuage [illegible] [illegible]. The [illegible] strenuous [illegible]rt in it caused Mr. [illegible] after the [illegible]as[illegible] [illegible]. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Mr. Gericke who, in 1885, succeeded Mr. Paur, who [illegible] position at the [illegible] it again in Boston as one who came to tide over an emergency. For after Mr. N[illegible]

[illegible] neglected this part [illegible] of the symphony Orchestre by Franz [illegible] whom Mr. Gericke took as a lad [illegible] From the post of concert master [illegible]'s orchestra in Berlin, and put in [illegible] corresponding post in Boston in the [illegible] of 1885. "To the eye of the audi[illegible] the concert-master — so we somewhat unintelligibly translate the German word Konzertmeister, ignoring the more descriptive French name of chef d'attaque—is the man who plays at the [illegible] of the first violins at the left of the conductor. But he is much more important than [illegible] Nowadays the [illegible] and leads of the conductor, and the personal force of the concert-master [illegible] Just why the fashion nowadays tends to belittle the importance of the concert-master, as a result of the growth in the artistic position of the conductor. But where the best relations exist, the concert-master is given a responsible burden in the carrying out of the orchestra. He is, in a way, the autocrat conductor's grand vizir, his executive officer, one of his chief means of making effective his wishes; and, where the right relation exists, his best friend and right-hand man. His functions resemble those of a constitutional monarch's prime minister. The king can do no wrong. If all goes well in the orchestra, it is the conductor's achievement; if anything goes amiss, it is very likely to practicable, or if he demands something that cannot be done, the concert-master must be ready, after the rehearsal, to explain to the bewildered or derisive player that he is not to understand thus and so exactly as he thought, but rather this and that, which was what the conductor really meant; and likewise adroitly to intimate to the mistaken autocrat that some slight modification of his desires would be advisable. In case of direst need, should conductor and orchestra lose touch with each other in a public performance, the concert-master must divine the cause of the trouble, and, through his intimacy with the men and his knowledge of the conductor's wishes as well as of the score, bring them together again with the sound of his instrument, at a critical moment more potent than the conductor's stick. Or, should a soloist miss a cue or make a false entrance, he must, if possible, give such a hint or catch up such a missing strand as shall set the unlucky one right. In short, his office is of an importance to the prosperity of the orchestra only less than that of the conductor himself. It may easily be seen how valuable a man of force and tact, of accomplished musicianship and fertile resource, may be in such a place, or how futile one must be who has not these qualities. It is only needful to say that Mr. Kneisel, during the eighteen years he was concert-master, was the very ideal of what a concert-master should be; and that, without services such as his, the Boston Symphony Orchestra could scarcely have attained the perfection it has. The orchestra has at present, in Professor Willy Hess, a player of style, authority, and technical accomplishment, and a man of the vigorous and commanding personality needed for its concert-master—one who is carrying on the best traditions of his office in the economy of the orchestra.

He must [illegible] [illegible] results [illegible] secs [illegible] leader [illegible] play [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Drawn by S. Ivanowski

THE BOX-CIRCLE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is the creature of Mr. Higginson's will, and never has been anything else; and if he should choose to-morrow to disband it, it would cease to exist. He has made it what he desired; but he has never interfered with the absolute authority of his conductors, and he has always upheld their hands and met their wishes in a way that has often entailed great and sometimes extravagant expense. Indeed, the price of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has never been measured by the guarantee of salaries and rentals. There was once one of Mr. Higginson's conductors who thought that the tone of the violins—the greatest glory and strength of the organization—would be improved if all the players had instruments of the same make and quality, instead of such as each individual had chosen or been able to possess himself of. Nothing would do, therefore, but that he should send to Germany and import for the score or more of his violinists a set of violins by one maker. The experiment was tried for a time, but the results were not what were expected, and most of the instruments are now packed away in the store-room, gathering dust. Again, that the orchestra should have the assurance of a home from season to season and from week to week, it was necessary to secure control of the old Music Hall, and Mr. Higginson found himself a real-estate owner by virtue of possessing an orchestra. But even ownership did not bring peace and quiet. The Boston elevated railroad was projected, and one of its surveys took its line directly through the sacred statue of Beethoven, threatening the demolition of the ancient, barn-like, and drafty, but acoustically excellent, auditorium. An immediate movement toward the erection of a new hall was necessary; and though the proposed line was changed and the hall was left untouched, the movement, after some years, resulted in the erection of the new hall in another quarter of the city—a hall erected, to be sure, by a company, but one whose financing approached in one way or another close to Mr. Higginson's pocket.

An orchestra is a kind of microcosm, a miniature of the outside world, in which there are the leaders, the aristocrats, and the followers, the hewers of wood and the drawers of water, though a spirit of civic unity must inform them all. And, as in the outside world, the material rewards vary with the powers and the position of the individuals. The terms under which the Boston Symphony players are engaged are very various. The rank and file are for the most part under annual contracts for a season of twenty-nine weeks (of which twenty-four are devoted to the Boston concerts, and five to traveling), at a salary of from thirty or thirty-five dollars a week upward. The chief players—the first violin, or concert-master, and some of the other best violinists, the first cellist, the first performers on the other instruments—receive more, up to an annual salary of five thousand dollars, with engagements of several years. Some receive weekly salaries of various amounts guaranteed for various periods of time beyond the regular season, sometimes as long as forty-five weeks in the year. The conductors have received salaries of about eight or ten thousand dollars.

The contract that each member has to sign requires that he shall have "a good and suitable instrument and keep it, at his own expense, constantly in the best condition"; that he shall "support to the best of his ability all rehearsals and performances," and "play to the best of his ability as a musician." He shall comply with the instructions of the conductor as to music, deportment, and order; shall play at no balls and at no other orchestral concerts or rehearsals in Boston or elsewhere without permission. One proviso that seems a little curious at first is that "the conductor shall have full power to regulate the pitch of the orchestra," until it is remembered that in case of some of the wood and brass instruments a change of the standard of pitch would mean the procurement of new instruments. There are fines imposed for lateness at rehearsals: five dollars for a period not exceeding fifteen minutes, ten dollars for a longer one, and ten dollars for absence, unless there is sufficient excuse. There are certain penalties and indemnities which Mr. Higginson is entitled to claim on the non-fulfilment of contract stipulations. It may be remarked, however, that the contract is much more severe than Mr. Higginson is; and the pound of flesh is rarely exacted, and then only for the sake of discipline.

Such a thing could never happen, for instance, as happened to Dr. Richard Strauss in New York last spring, when he was rehearsing his enormously difficult "Symphonia Domestica" for the eighth or ninth time with an orchestra supposed to have some claims to at least a season's permanency. An unlucky horn-player made a mistake that the composer had repeatedly corrected at previous meetings, and when Dr. Strauss angrily threw down his baton and reproached the musician for inattention and neglect of his directions, the culprit replied: "But, Herr Doctor, I have n't been here before—I 'm a substitute!" Playing in the theater orchestras is forbidden; but if, in a few occasional instances, it is tolerated, it is because a special necessity is recognized. Many of the players teach; but few beyond the violinists and cellists have that resource open to them. The purpose is—and it is effectively realized—to make the orchestra, during the season, a united body of men with but one main object in view and free to devote themselves to it—following a single director's counsels of perfection, with as little as possible to weary them or to distract them from it. How high an ideal that is, and how few of the great orchestras of the world make any pretense of reaching it, is perhaps not often realized. Mr. Thomas's Chicago orchestra is one of them. The orchestra of the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam is one. Are there many others? The Gewandhaus players in Leipsic, those of the Vienna Philharmonic, and those of the great Paris orchestras have their operatic and other duties; the members of the Berlin Philharmonic are subject to the wear and tear of almost daily popular concerts. Mr. Henry J. Wood has just fought his way through almost bloody strife to the point of forbidding the men of his Queen's Hall orchestra in London to rehearse through substitutes. The orchestras that are so entirely devoted to the sole object of their orchestral concerts are indeed rare.

But twenty-nine weeks' salary is not enough to support the rank and file of Mr. Higginson's men throughout the year. Hence arose the "Pops" of the early Boston summer-time. Not chiefly to supply his fellow-citizens with fantasies on "Carmen," Strauss waltzes, and sarsaparilla, but to lengthen the period of his men's earnings, Mr. Higginson, twenty years ago, began to give a series of concerts of light music in the Music Hall, lasting for eight weeks after the close of the regular season. The leading players take no part in these, except that upon one of them is annually bestowed the brief glory of conducting. But even when these eight weeks are ended, the lesser players of the orchestra find that they still have a famine period to reckon with before the rehearsals are taken up again in the autumn. There remains for them the "summer snap," the orchestra of the summer hotel, in which four or five players whom the proprietor proudly advertises as "from the Boston Symphony Orchestra" provide agreeable diversion for the guests. The matter is harmless and unimportant, except for the specter of the Musical Union that it has evoked, and that has in recent years increasingly troubled the serenity of the orchestral brotherhood, touching chiefly the interests of the lesser men. Mr. Higginson's position as to the union is very positive. He thinks that unions are an excellent thing; he believes in them—but not in the "closed shop." He is willing that his men should belong to the union, but not that they should compel the unwilling to do so. He has told the players frankly—and they all know that he means it—that if the union undertakes to dictate in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, or to interfere in any way with its management or the freedom of its members, he will pay off all hands and disband the organization on the spot. Recent events, resulting in the resignation from the Union of all of the Symphony men who belonged to it, seem to have relieved this situation.

Within a couple of years the members of the orchestra have had still another resource to look forward to in time of need, in the shape of a pension fund established in imitation of the general practice in Germany. Such a fund in such an organization has certain features of doubtful expediency, into which it is not necessary here to inquire too closely; but it has also its obviously advantageous ones. And as it has also the sanction and support of the founder, there is good reason to hope for its increase in usefulness.

It might be supposed that, after twenty-three years, everybody who knows the orchestra knows that back of it stands Henry L. Higginson. Yet it was only a few months ago that its manager, Mr. Charles A. Ellis, who with his assistant, Mr. F. R. Comee, has guided its fortunes skilfully and in the spirit of Mr. Higginson's purpose from the very beginning, received a note from an unknown but ardent admirer of the orchestra, who thought that it was such a very good thing, such a great public benefit, that some rich man like Mr. Carnegie ought to back it up and support it.

Mr. Higginson knew, when he embarked upon the scheme of his orchestra, that it would cost him heavily; and it has. He recalls with a certain grim amusement a conversation with a local musical impresario who anxiously tried to dissuade him from it as from a mad folly. "Why, Mr. Higginson, you will never be able to make it pay," was the final argument. And it never has "paid." He estimated that it would burden him, on the average, $25,000 a year, which it has—and more. Mr. Higginson has never taken the public into his confidence as to the orchestra's figures, but it may be said on the highest authority that it has cost him as much as $52,000 in a year; that in one season it paid its expenses, and only one, though in another it lacked only $2000 of doing so; and that last season, after several more prosperous ones, the deficit mounted up again to $40,000. It may also be said, on the highest authority, that Mr. Higginson has made provision for the continuation of the orchestra on the same lines after his death. Mr. Higginson is not a wealthy man in the modern acceptation of that term, and what the orchestra costs him in money comes out of his annual earnings. What it has cost him in time and trouble, in annoyances great and small, in perplexities, in demands upon his patience, wisdom, and sense of justice, no man may know. He is always accessible to his players, in his busy hours and out of them, and they seldom have shown any hesitation in coming to him as to an unfailing friend, counselor, and guide, or as to a tribune of last resort.

According to the founder, however, the establishment of a Boston Symphony Orchestra is a perfectly simple thing. "All you have to do is to set the game going and back it up. It does n't require anything more than that." It is not necessary to talk about it; and as for New York's annual chatter about a "permanent orchestra," so long destitute of results, he says there are plenty of men in New York who could start and maintain such an orchestra as his as well as he could, if they wanted to. The essential, besides wisdom, practicable, or if he demands something that cannot be done, the concert-master must be ready, after the rehearsal, to explain to the bewildered or derisive player that he is not to understand thus and so exactly as he thought, but rather this and that, which was what the conductor really meant; and likewise adroitly to intimate to the mistaken autocrat that some slight modification of his desires would be advisable. In case of direst need, should conductor and orchestra lose touch with each other in a public performance, the concert-master must divine the cause of the trouble, and, through his intimacy with the men and his knowledge of the conductor's wishes as well as of the score, bring them together again with the sound of his instrument, at a critical moment more potent than the conductor's stick. Or, should a soloist miss a cue or make a false entrance, he must, if possible, give such a hint or catch up such a missing strand as shall set the unlucky one right. In short, his office is of an importance to the prosperity of the orchestra only less than that of the conductor himself. It may easily be seen how valuable a man of force and tact, of accomplished musicianship and fertile resource, may be in such a place, or how futile one must be who has not these qualities. It is only needful to say that Mr. Kneisel, during the eighteen years he was concert-master, was the very ideal of what a concert-master should be; and that, without services such as his, the Boston Symphony Orchestra could scarcely have attained the perfection it has. The orchestra has at present, in Professor Willy Hess, a player of style, authority, and technical accomplishment, and a man of the vigorous and commanding personality needed for its concert-master—one who is carrying on the best traditions of his office in the economy of the orchestra.

Drawn by S. Ivanowski

THE ORCHESTRA, MR. GERICKE LEADING

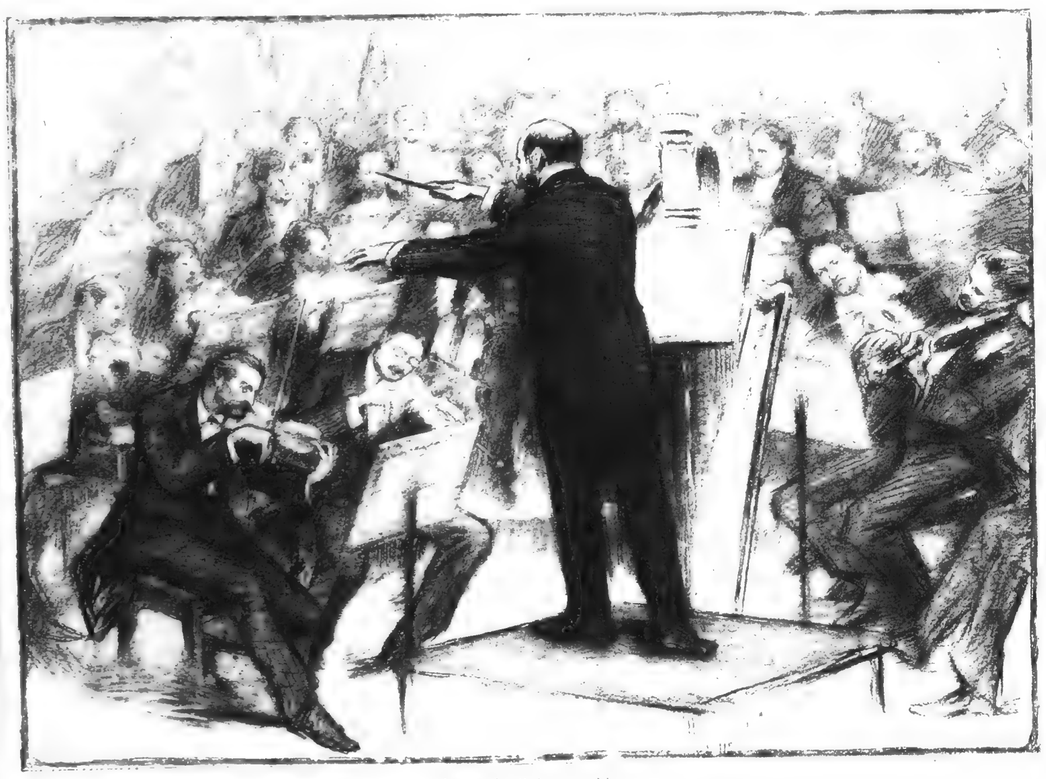
Drawn by S. Ivanowski

THE BOX-CIRCLE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is the creature of Mr. Higginson's will, and never has been anything else; and if he should choose to-morrow to disband it, it would cease to exist. He has made it what he desired; but he has never interfered with the absolute authority of his conductors, and he has always upheld their hands and met their wishes in a way that has often entailed great and sometimes extravagant expense. Indeed, the price of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has never been measured by the guarantee of salaries and rentals. There was once one of Mr. Higginson's conductors who thought that the tone of the violins—the greatest glory and strength of the organization—would be improved if all the players had instruments of the same make and quality, instead of such as each individual had chosen or been able to possess himself of. Nothing would do, therefore, but that he should send to Germany and import for the score or more of his violinists a set of violins by one maker. The experiment was tried for a time, but the results were not what were expected, and most of the instruments are now packed away in the store-room, gathering dust. Again, that the orchestra should have the assurance of a home from season to season and from week to week, it was necessary to secure control of the old Music Hall, and Mr. Higginson found himself a real-estate owner by virtue of possessing an orchestra. But even ownership did not bring peace and quiet. The Boston elevated railroad was projected, and one of its surveys took its line directly through the sacred statue of Beethoven, threatening the demolition of the ancient, barn-like, and drafty, but acoustically excellent, auditorium. An immediate movement toward the erection of a new hall was necessary; and though the proposed line was changed and the hall was left untouched, the movement, after some years, resulted in the erection of the new hall in another quarter of the city—a hall erected, to be sure, by a company, but one whose financing approached in one way or another close to Mr. Higginson's pocket.



Drawn by S. Ivanowski

THE ORCHESTRA, MR. GERICKE LEADING

An orchestra is a kind of microcosm, a miniature of the outside world, in which there are the leaders, the aristocrats, and the followers, the hewers of wood and the drawers of water, though a spirit of civic unity must inform them all. And, as in the outside world, the material rewards vary with the powers and the position of the individuals. The terms under which the Boston Symphony players are engaged are very various. The rank and file are for the most part under annual contracts for a season of twenty-nine weeks (of which twenty-four are devoted to the Boston concerts, and five to traveling), at a salary of from thirty or thirty-five dollars a week upward. The chief players—the first violin, or concert-master, and some of the other best violinists, the first cellist, the first performers on the other instruments—receive more, up to an annual salary of five thousand dollars, with engagements of several years. Some receive weekly salaries of various amounts guaranteed for various periods of time beyond the regular season, sometimes as long as forty-five weeks in the year. The conductors have received salaries of about eight or ten thousand dollars.

The contract that each member has to sign requires that he shall have "a good and suitable instrument and keep it, at his own expense, constantly in the best condition"; that he shall "support to the best of his ability all rehearsals and performances," and "play to the best of his ability as a musician." He shall comply with the instructions of the conductor as to music, deportment, and order; shall play at no balls and at no other orchestral concerts or rehearsals in Boston or elsewhere without permission. One proviso that seems a little curious at first is that "the conductor shall have full power to regulate the pitch of the orchestra," until it is remembered that in case of some of the wood and brass instruments a change of the standard of pitch would mean the procurement of new instruments. There are fines imposed for lateness at rehearsals: five dollars for a period not exceeding fifteen minutes, ten dollars for a longer one, and ten dollars for absence, unless there is sufficient excuse. There are certain penalties and indemnities which Mr. Higginson is entitled to claim on the non-fulfilment of contract stipulations. It may be remarked, however, that the contract is much more severe than Mr. Higginson is; and the pound of flesh is rarely exacted, and then only for the sake of discipline.

Such a thing could never happen, for instance, as happened to Dr. Richard Strauss in New York last spring, when he was rehearsing his enormously difficult

"Symphonia Domestica" for the eighth or ninth time with an orchestra supposed to have some claims to at least a seas[on]'s permanency. An unlucky horn-player made a mistake that the composer had repeatedly corrected at previous meetings, and when Dr. Strauss angrily threw down his baton and reproached the musician [for] inattention and neglect of his directi[ons] the culprit replied: "But, Herr Doctor, I have n't been here before—I 'm a substitute!" Playing in the theater orchestras [is] forbidden; but if, in a few occasional instances, it is tolerated, it is because a special necessity is recognized. Many of [the] players teach; but few beyond the violinists and cellists have that resource open to them. The purpose is—and it is effectively realized—to make the orchestra, during season, a united body of men with [one] main object in view and free to [devote] themselves to it—following a single [direc]tor's counsels of perfection, with as little as possible to weary them or to distract them from it. How high an ideal this is, and how few of the great orchestras of the world make any pretense of reaching it, perhaps not often realized. Mr. Thomas's Chicago orchestra is one of them. The orchestra of the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam is one. Are there many others? The Gewandhaus players in Leipsic, those of the Vienna Philharmonic, and those of the great Paris orchestras have their operatic and other duties; the members of the Berlin Philharmonic are subject to the wear and tear of almost daily popular concerts. Mr. Henry J. Wood has just fought his way through almost bloody strife to the point of forbidding the men of his Queen's Hall orchestra in London to rehearse through substitutes. The orchestras that are so entirely devoted to the sole object of the orchestral concerts are indeed rare.

But twenty-nine weeks' salary is not enough to support the rank and file of Mr. Higginson's men throughout the year. Hence arose the "Pops" of the early Boston summer-time. Not chiefly to supply his fellow-citizens with fantasies on "Carmen," Strauss waltzes, and sarsaparilla, but to lengthen the period of his men's earnings, Mr. Higginson, twenty years ago, began to give a series of concerts of [light] music in the Music Hall, lasting four weeks after the close of the regular season. The leading players take no part in [these] except that upon one of them is annually bestowed the brief glory of conducting. But even when these eight weeks are ended, the lesser players of the orchestra find that they still have a famine period to reckon with before the rehearsals are taken up again in the autumn. There remains for them the "summer snap," the orchestra of the summer hotel, in which four or five players whom the proprietor proudly advertises as "from the Boston Symphony Orchestra" provide agreeable diversion for the guests. The matter is harmless and unimportant, except for the specter of the Musical Union that it has evoked, and that has in recent years increasingly troubled the serenity of the orchestral brotherhood, touching chiefly the interests of the lesser men. Mr. Higginson's position as to the union is very positive. He thinks that unions are an excellent thing; he believes in them—but not in the "closed shop." He is willing that his men should belong to the union, but not that they should compel the unwilling to do so. He has told the players frankly—and they all know that he means it—that if the union undertakes to dictate in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, or to interfere in any way with its management or the freedom of its members, he will pay off all hands and disband the organization on the spot. Recent events, resulting in the resignation from the Union of all of the Symphony men who belonged to it, seem to have relieved this situation.

Within a couple of years the members of the orchestra have had still another resource to look forward to in time of need, in the shape of a pension fund established in imitation of the general practice in Germany. Such a fund in such an organization has certain features of doubtful expediency, into which it is not necessary here to inquire too closely; but it has also its obviously advantageous ones. And as it has also the sanction and support of the founder, there is good reason to hope for its increase in usefulness.

It might be supposed that, after twenty-three years, everybody who knows the orchestra knows that back of it stands Henry L. Higginson. Yet it was only a few months ago that its manager, Mr. Charles A. Ellis, who with his assistant, Mr. F. R. Comee, has guided its fortunes skilfully and in the spirit of Mr. Higginson's purpose from the very beginning, received a note from [an] unknown but ardent admirer of the orchestra, who thought that it was such a good thing, such a great public [benefit] that some rich man like Mr. Higginson ought to back it up and support it.

Mr. Higginson knew, when he entered upon the scheme of his orchestra, that it would cost him heavily; and it has been recalls with a certain grim amusement a conversation with a local musical promoteur who anxiously tried to dissuade him from it as from a mad folly. "Mr. Higginson, you will never be able to make it pay," was the final argument. "Why, it never has 'paid.' He estimated that it would burden him, on the average, with a year, which it has—and more. Mr. Higginson has never taken the public into confidence as to the orchestra's finances, but it may be said on the highest authority that it has cost him as much as $50,000 a year; that in one season it showed a profit of expenses, and only one, though it lacked only $2000 of doing so; that last season, after several more successful ones, the deficit mounted up to $40,000. It may also be said on the highest authority, that Mr. Higginson has made provision for the continuation of the orchestra on the same lines after his death. Mr. Higginson is not a wealthy man in the modern acceptation of that term, and the orchestra costs him its money out of his annual earnings. What it has cost him in time and trouble, in worry and annoyances great and small, in personal demands upon his patience and his sense of justice, no man may know. He is always accessible to his players, in business hours and out of them, and he has never have shown any hesitation in appealing to him as to an unfailing friend, counsellor, guide, or as to a tribune of last resort.

According to the founder, however, the establishment of a Boston Symphony Orchestra is a perfectly simple thing. All you have to do is to set the ball rolling and back it up. It does n't require anything more than that." It is not necessary to talk about it; and as for New York's annual chatter about a "permanent orchestra," so long destitute of results, he says there are plenty of men in New York who could start and maintain such an orchestra as his as well as he could, if they wanted to. The essential, besides wisdom,

REDUCTION RATIO 13x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

is liberality. When a well-known wealthy amateur of London, desirous of carrying out a similar plan, consulted Mr. Higginson about some of the details of his expenses, he was told not to worry too much about the bills. "You don't worry about your wine bills nor about your cigar bills, nor about your wife's dressmaking bills," —Mr. Higginson was addressing a millionaire,—"and you must treat your orchestra's bills in the same way."

What a permanent orchestra may involve in expenditure above what its public pays to hear it may be judged from the reports of similar organizations that do reveal the facts. In one recent year the Philadelphia Orchestra acknowledged a deficit of nearly $80,000. The comparatively modest Pittsburg Orchestra, a year ago, called upon its guarantors to make up a loss of about $40,000. In the first ten years of its existence the Chicago Orchestra sank about $300,000. In the beginning Mr. Higginson was heavily burdened; and especially a source of great expense was the visits to distant cities which the orchestra began to make in 1887. But since it first presented itself in New York in that year it has built up a very large and substantial body of admirers here—as large as the hall can accommodate; and in the other cities included in its five monthly pilgrimages—Brooklyn, Philadelphia, and Baltimore—it has met with similar success. It gives many concerts in all the large cities of New England [illegible] from Boston overnight, and it could play still more frequently to the advantage of its treasury if [illegible] equal to standing the strain of more traveling.

It is in a way such as this that Mr. Higginson's [illegible] with the Boston Symphony Orchestra have spread their beneficent influence outside of Boston. He has raised the standard of orchestral playing immeasurably, and has created a taste and a demand for what was [illegible] before he began his work. He has set Chicago, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, and Cincinnati to an emulation of Boston; and has made many good people in New York very uneasy in their desire to do so. He has caused American music to be spoken of with respect and admiration by every European musician. And all the lovers of music in his own country ought to rise up and call him blessed.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

AND HENRY LEE HIGGINSON, ITS FOUNDER

An Appreciation of What Mr. Higginson Has Done for Boston, for America and for Music in the Establishment and Maintenance of His Orchestra—How It Was Organized and How It Is Run—Its Difficulties, Its Achievements and Its Future

[Richard Aldrich, in the Century Magazine]

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is Mr. Henry L. Higginson's yacht, his racing stable, his library, and his art gallery, or it takes the place of what these things are to other men of wealth with other tastes. It is a remark that he himself once made in disavowing any philanthropic ends when he set up in the city of Boston a musical organization that has few peers in the world of music anywhere. And though few will be persuaded to accept his disavowal as a complete expression of the case, it is true that Mr. Higginson has found in the establishment, the upbuilding, and the maintenance of a consummate artistic institution the keen personal delight that other men take in perfecting a collection or pursuing supremacy in a sport. If horse racing is the sport of kings, there is also something regal, even imperial, in the possession of an orchestra. Mr. Higginson's orchestra, whatever he may declare as to his own motives, has been for twenty-three years as much for the benefit of his townsmen as for himself; and, in a way by no means indirect, for the benefit of his countrymen.

Henry L. Higginson, born in New York, but brought up in Boston as a scion of a Boston family socially and intellectually most distinguished, passed in his youth through the days of the Germania Orchestra and the Harvard Musical Association and the other local institutions that decorated the town with the epithet of "musical," and that contributed in large measure to that connotation of "culture" still inseparable from its name. The young Higginson, no doubt, like the good Bostonian he has always been, thought these things were all they should be or could be, till he was sent to Vienna to complete his education.

There he saw a great light. He associated much with musicians and musical amateurs, and heard what orchestral playing might be at the hands of accomplished musicians constantly in training under great conductors. Then and there he formed the resolution that when his time came he would give to Boston an orchestra on a higher plane than all its culture had ever known; an orchestra the members of which should not be summoned to its service upon occasion from other persuits, but whose business should be its business; an orchestra that should not be dependent upon the caprice of the public, or limited in its scope by the conservatism of a clique.

His time came in the midst of a successful business career, when, moreover, Boston was ripe for the experiment he intended to try. The old Harvard Musical Association had shrivelled up to nothing. To take its place, there was a newly formed Philharmonic Society supporting an orchestra upon the basis that was the only possible one under existing conditions. Its purposes were sincere, but it was glad to retire from the field when, in February, 1881, Mr. Higginson made public his intention of establishing a new orchestra in a new way. There was in Boston at the time a clever young baritone singer, musical through and through, a man of uncommon intelligence and force, and in certain ways of rare accomplishment. To Georg Henschel, though he was without experience as an orchestral conductor, was intrusted the organization of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He proved, not unnaturally, to be far from an ideal conductor, since the art of conducting is not inborn, but is acquired by great toil and long experience; but he did well the pioneering work for the new orchestra.

As he organized it, it numbered seventy performers. There were twelve first and eleven second violins, eight violas, nine 'cellos, nine double-basses, and the number of wood and brass-wind players usual in a small orchestra.

The growth of the orchestra is shown by a comparison of these figures with those of its present constitution. There are now, when all the players are in requisition,—which, of course, they are only in the most modern compositions,—about ninety men; namely, sixteen first and fourteen second violins, ten violas, ten 'cellos, eight double-basses, four flutes, three oboes, one English horn, three clarinets, one bass clarinet, three bassoons, one contra-bassoon, four horns, four trumpets, three trombones, and one player each of the harp, tuba, timpani, bass drum, cymbals, triangle and tambour. It gave its first concert on Oct. 22, 1881.

The purpose was at first to make it minister specially to listeners of limited purse. The best places cost fifty cents; at the so-called public rehearsals, on the afternoons of the day preceding the concerts—really exact duplicates of the concerts themselves, —there were seats for twenty-five cents. But the concerts speedily became not only popular but fashionable. There was a great competition for tickets among those of unlimited as well as of limited purse, and advantage was soon taken of this eagerness by the institution of an auction sale at the beginning of each season for the choice of places. Some have said that this has tended to restrict the popular privileges upon which emphasis was laid at first, and to increase the reliance put upon the support of wealth and fashion. some have affirmed, too, that attendance upon these concerts is for many in Boston only a compliance with fashionable necessity. Yet for twenty-three years, week after week, the hall has been filled, often to the very limit of its capacity. Now, Boston is doubtless not to be judged as other towns; but it is hard to believe that, even in Boston, the necessity of being fashionable after the Boston manner can continue to constrain hundreds to weekly boredom unremittingly for twenty-three years, with few signs of relief yet in sight. It is almost easier to believe that love of music has really permeated the several strata of Boston society, and that the audience goes to the concerts because it wishes to hear them.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was not founded to provide an instrument for any particular conductor, but its conductors have been summoned to fill the need it created—a fact that should be taken into consideration by zealous but not always wisely prompted orchestral founders elsewhere. It has had four different men at its head in the course of its existence, each a man of special qualification in certain directions, who has not escaped fiery ordeals of criticism for one reason or another, especially at home. It has been observed that the angel Gabriel would be disparaged by the American public if he came in contact with it long enough; and in Boston the critical faculty has always been highly developed.

Mr. Higginson had seen and heard Wilhelm Gericke in Vienna as Han Richter's colleague at the Imperial Opera, and as conductor, also, of the Society of Friends of Music. Keen, alert, of imperious and overmastering will, with all the technic and routine of the difficult art of conducting at his fingers' ends, not without a certain pedantic quality to restrain the musician's temperament, which increasing years have rathered mellowed and softened than intensified, he found his orchestra a body of men loosely knit together and sorely in need of the rigorous discipline that makes for perfect mobility and adaptability in orchestras as well as in armies. There is something of the martinet in Mr. Gericke's nature, and he needed all he had in those first years of the formative period. The greatest distinctions of the Boston orches-

Laxative Bromo Quinine
Always remember the full name. 25 cents.

[illegible] through drill and the institution of a strident feeling of esprit de corps, but also and in large measure, through the improvement of the personnel.

There were many veterans and some incompetents of the earlier dispensation in the orchestra when he came to it, who had found in it a "pleasant refuge" for declining years. Many new men came from Europe at his summons,—young men of eager blood, like the "young lions" of the Conservatory orchestra that were the delight of Berlioz in Paris,—for whom the orchestra was not a refuge, but a field for ambitious and energetic labor.

It was a fortunate chance that brought Mr. Kneisel, Mr. Loeffler, Mr. Svecenski, Mr. Roth, Mr. Giese, the Adamowski brothers, Mr. Schuecker, and still others in the earlier years, and that has since added such men as the ill-fated Pourtau, and Mr. Longy, to name only a few of many accomplished players who have helped make the Boston Symphony Orchestra admired as "a band of virtuosi." Their coming caused wailing and gnashing of teeth in certain quarters. It is not a pleasant task to dismiss veterans who have deserved well; but it sometimes must be done. Strange though it may seem, it is a difficult undertaking to secure the best men from abroad as orchestral players in the American Promised Land. It stands upon the records that, having heard many aspirants during a certain summer in Europe, one of Mr. Higginson's conductors personally chose and brought over sixteen new men. Every one of them proved quite incompetent and had speedily to be sent back.

The American life, and his strenuous part in it, caused Mr. Gericke, after the season of 1888-89, to return to the quieter atmosphere of Vienna; and to succeed him Arthur Nikisch was summoned from his post of conductor at the Neues Theatre—the municipal opero-house—of Leipsic. He was just then emerging into that fame that has since made him one of the most distinguished, and, it may also be added, one of the most highly paid conductors in the world; but he had not quite arrived at it then, and the series of concerts that he had conducted the previous winter in Berlin had been a disastrous financial failure.

In Boston he did much in the next three years to bring himself into prominence as one of the most original, daring, and intensely subjective of the modern school of conductors—a man who, with certain exaggerations and affectations is illuminated by the living flame of genius. As about his predecessor, so even more about him, was Boston rent into contending factions. So it was also about his successor, Emil Paur, who, having stepped into Nikisch's position at the Leipsic opera, stepped into it again in Boston as one who came to tide over an emergency. For after Mr. Nikisch's contract had been canceled in 1893, under circumstances of some stress and strain, Mr. Higginson fully expected to secure for his orchestra, Dr. Hans Richter. It is not perhaps generally known by how narrow a margin the great Viennese conductor, then as now recognized as one of the most gifted and authoritative in the world, failed to come to this country. He had just had trouble in the intriguing court circles of the Austrian capital, where the strings that direct the management of the Imperial Opera are pulled. He was disgusted and ready to leave Vienna. He had actually signed a contract with Mr. Higginson and was expected in Boston. Then came salve to his wounded feelings, auf hohen Befehl, in the shape of a decoration and an appointment to the post of Hofkapellmeister at the opera on the death of Hellmesberger. So he calmly ignored his American contract and stayed. Mr. Paur exercised a rude, but vigorous sway for five years, when he was succeeded, in 1898, by Mr. Gericke, who returned to a place that had been kept warm in the hearts of his admirers during the nine years of his absence.

It would be wrong to neglect the part that was played in the upbuilding of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Franz Kneisel, whom Mr. Gericke took as a lad of twenty from the post of concert-master of Bilse's orchestra in Berlin, and put in the corresponding post in Boston in the autumn of 1885. To the eye of the audience the concert-master—so we somewhat unintelligibly translate the German word Konzertmeister, ignoring the more descriptive French nome of chef d'attaque—is the man who plays at the forefront of the first violins at the left of the conductor. He is, in a way, the autocratic conductor's grand vizir, his executive officer, one of his chief means of making effective his wishes; and, where the right relation exists, his best friend and right-hand man. His functions resemble those of a constitutional monarch's prime minister. The king can do no wrong. If all goes well in the orchestra, it is the conductor's achievement; if anything goes amiss, it is very likely to be the concert-master's fault. He must always see that all the instruments are in tune with one another before rehearsals and concerts begin. If there is a misunderstanding between the conductor and a player, the concert-master's good offices are invaluable in setting it right. Few conductors are thoroughly familiar with the details of the technic and the limitations of all the orchestral instruments, their possibilities in the way of phrasing and the production of special effects; for, though most conductors have begun their careers as performers upon some instrument, their playing days are past and they have other things to think of. So, if the conductor gives a direction as to phrasing or accentuation that is impracticable, or if he demands something that cannot be done, the concert-master must be ready, after the rehearsal, to explain to the bewildered or derisive player that he is not to understand thus and so exactly as he thought, but rather this and that, which was what the conductor really meant; and likewise adroitly to intimate to the mistaken autocrat that some slight modification of his desires would be advisable. In case of direst need, should conductor and orchestra lose touch with each other in a public performance, the concert-master must divine the cause of the trouble, and, through his intimacy with the men and his knowledge of the conductor's wishes as well as of the score, bring them together [illegible] with the sound of his instrument, at a critical moment more potent than the conductor's stick. Or, should a soloist miss a cue or make a false entrance, he must, if possible, give such a hint or catch up such a missing strand as shall set the unlucky one right. In short, his office is of an importance to the prosperity of the orchestra only less than that of the conductor himself. It may easily be seen how valuable a man of force and tact, of accomplished musicianship and fertile resource, may be in such a place, or how futile one must be who has not these qualities. It is only needful to say that Mr. Kneisel, during the eighteen years he was concert-master, was the very ideal of what a concert-master should be; and that, without services such as his, the Boston Symphony Orchestra could scarcely have attained the perfection it has. The orchestra has at present, in Professor Willy Hess, a player of style, authority, and technical accomplishment, and a man of the vigorous and commanding personality needed for its concert-master—one who is carrying on the best traditions of his office in the economy of the orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is the creature of Mr. Higginson's will, and never has been anything else; and if he should choose tomorrow to disband it, it would cease to exist. He has made it what he desired; but he has never interfered with the absolute authority of his conductors, and he has always upheld their hands and

U. HOLZER
25 Bromfield St.
BINDS AND REPAIRS ALL KINDS OF BOOKS

[illegible] read by the [illegible] of salaries [illegible] rentals. There was [illegible] Higginson's conductors who thought that the tone of the violins—the greatest glory and strength of the organization—would be improved if all the players had instruments of the same make and quality, instead of such as each individual had chosen or been able to possess himself of. Nothing would do, therefore, but that he should send to Germany and import for the score or more of his violinists a set of violins by one maker. The experiment was tried for a time, but the results were not what were expected, and most of the instruments are now packed away in the storeroom, gathering dust.

The terms under which the Boston Symphony players are engaged are very various. The rank and file are for the most part under annual contracts for a season of twenty-nine weeks (of which twenty-four are devoted to the Boston concerts, and five to travelling), at a salary of from thirty or thirty-five dollars a week upward. The chief players—the first violin, or concert-master, and some of the other best violinists, the first cellist, the first performers on the other instruments—receive more, up to an annual salary of five thousand dollars, with engagements of several years. Some receive weekly salaries of various amounts guaranteed for various periods of time beyond the regular season, sometimes as long as forty-five weeks in the year. The conductors have received salaries of about eight or ten thousand dollars.

The contract that each member has to sign requires that he shall have "a good and suitable instrument and keep it, at his own expense, constantly in the best condition"; that he shall "support to the best of his ability all rehearsals and performances," and "play to the best of his ability as a musician." He shall comply with the instructions of the conductor as to music, deportment and order; shall play at no balls and at no other orchestral concerts or rehearsals in Boston or elsewhere without permission. There are fines imposed for lateness at rehearsals; five dollars for a period not exceeding fifteen minutes, ten dollars for a longer one, and ten dollars for absence, unless there is sufficient excuse. There are certain penalties and indemnities which Mr. Higginson is entitled to claim on the non-fulfilment of contract stipulations. It may be remarked, however, that the contract is much more severe than Mr. Higginson is; and the pound of flesh is rarely exacted, and then only for the sake of discipline.

Such a thing could never happen, for instance, as happened to Dr. Richard Strauss in New York last spring, when he was rehearsing his enormously difficult "Symphonia Domestica," for the eighth or ninth time with an orchestra supposed to have some claims to at least a season's permanency. An unlucky horn-player made a mistake that the composer had repeatedly corrected at previous meetings, and when Dr. Strauss angrily threw down his baton and reproached the musician for inattention and neglect of his directions, the culprit replied: "But, Herr Doctor, I have n't been here before—I 'm a substitute!" Playing in the theatre orchestras is forbidden; but if, in a few occasional instances, it is tolerated, it is because a special necessity is recognized. Many of the players teach; but few beyond the violinists and cellists have that resource open to them. The purpose is—and it is effectively realized—to make the orchestra, during the season, a united body of men with but one main object in view and free to devote themselves to it—following a single director's counsels of perfection, with as little as possible to weary them or to distract them from it. How high an ideal that is, and how few of the great orchestras of the world make any pretence of reaching it, is perhaps not often realized. Mr. Thomas's Chicago orchestra is one of them. The orchestra of the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam is one. Are there many others? The Gewandhaus players in Leipsic, those of the Vienna Philharmonic, and those of the great Paris orchestras have their operatic and other duties; the members of the Berlin Philharmonic are subject to the wear and tear of almost daily popular concerts.

But twenty-nine weeks' salary is not enough to support the rank and file of Mr. Higginson's men throughout the year. Hence arose the "Pops" of the early Boston summer time. Not chiefly to supply his fellow-citizens with fantasies on "Carmen," Strauss waltzes, and sarsaparilla, but to lengthen the period of his men's earnings, Mr. Higginson, twenty years ago, began to give a series of concerts of light music in the Music Hall, lasting for eight weeks after the close of the regular season. The leading players take no part in these, except that upon one of them is annually bestowed the brief glory of conducting. But even when these eight weeks are ended, the lesser players of the orchestra find that they still have a famine period to reckon with before the rehearsals are taken up again in the autumn. There remains for them the "summer snap," the orchestra of the summer hotel, in which four or five players whom the proprietor proudly advertises as "from the Boston Symphony Orchestra" provide agreeable diversion for the guests. The matter is harmless and unimportant, except for the spectre of the Musical Union that it has evoked, and that has in recent years increasingly troubled the serenity of the orchestral brotherhood, touching chiefly the interests of the lesser men. Mr. Higginson's position as to the union is very positive. He thinks that unions are an excellent thing; he believes in them—but not in the "closed shop." He is willing that his men should belong to the union, but not that they should compel the unwilling to do so. He has told the players frankly —and they all know that he means it—that if the union undertakes to dictate in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, or to interfere in any way with its management or the freedom of its members, he will pay off all hands and disband the organization on the spot. Recent events resulting in the resignation from union of all of the Symphony [illegible] belonged to it, seem to have [illegible] situation.

It might be supposed that, after twenty-three years, everybody who knows the orchestra knows that back of it stands Henry L. Higginson. Yet it was only a few months ago that its manager, Mr. Charles A. Ellis, who with his assistant, Mr. F. R. Comee, has guided its fortunes skilfully and in the spirit of Mr. Higginson's purpose from the very beginning, received a note from an unknown but ardent admirer of the orchestra, who thought that it was such a very good thing, such a great public benefit, that some rich man like Mr. Carnegie ought to back it up and support it.

Mr. Higginson knew, when he embarked upon the scheme of his orchestra, that it would cost him heavily; and it has. Mr. Higginson has never taken the public into his confidence as to the orchestra's finances, but it may be said on the highest authority that it has cost him as much as $52,000 in a year; that in one season it paid its expenses, and only one, though in another it lacked only $2000 of doing so; and that last season, after several more prosperous ones, the deficit mounted up again to $40,000. It may also be said, on the highest authority, that Mr. Higginson has made provision for the continuation of the orchestra on the same lines after his death. Mr. Higginson is not a wealthy man in the modern acceptation of that term, and what the orchestra costs him in money comes out of his annual earnings. What it has cost him in time and trouble, in annoyances great and small, in perplexities, in demands upon his patience, wisdom, and sense of justice, no man may know. He is always accessible to his players. In his busy hours and out of them, and they seldom have shown any hesitation in coming to him as to an unfailing [illegible] is liberality. When a well-known wealthy amateur of London, desirous of carrying out a similar plan, consulted Mr. Higginson about some of the details of his expenses, he was told not to worry too much about the bills. "You don't worry about your wine bills [illegible] about your cigar bills, nor about your wife's dressmaking bills," —Mr. Higginson was addressing a millionaire,—"and you must treat your orchestra's bills in the same way."

[64]

What a permanent [illegible]stra may involve in exp[illegible] what its public pays to h[illegible] to the reports of s[illegible] "cent-ye[illegible]" the reveal the fa[illegible] knowledged a Philadelphi[illegible] ra- deficit of n[illegible] year tively modest [illegible] up ago, called [illegible] ten a loss of [illegible] the Chicago or- years of its [illegible] he chestra sank [illegible] a bur- [illegible] Mr. [illegible] a great [illegible] cities ex[illegible] 887. w[illegible] New B[illegible] very Yor[illegible]

[illegible] ampers large [illegible] ammo- nere- as [illegible] led in date[illegible] ooklyn. its [illegible] ot pu[illegible]

[illegible] its [illegible] sary [illegible] ling

[illegible] Hig- [illegible] Boston [illegible] their [illegible] He has [illegible] playing [illegible] has [illegible] what [illegible] s work. [illegible] Pitts- [illegible] nation of [illegible] good people [illegible] desire [illegible] ream music [illegible] d admira- [illegible] an. And [illegible] wn country [illegible] lessed.

[6 4]

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

AND HENRY LEE HIGGINSON, ITS FOUNDER

An Appreciation of What Mr. Higginson Has Done for Boston, for America and for Music in the Establishment and Maintenance of His Orchestra—How It Was Organized and How It Is Run—Its Difficulties, Its Achievements and Its Future

[Richard Aldrich, in the Century Magazine]

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is Mr. Henry L. Higginson's yacht, his racing stable, his library, and his art gallery, or it takes the place of what these things are to other men of wealth with other tastes. It is a remark that he himself once made in disavowing any philanthropic ends when he set up in the city of Boston a musical organization that has few peers in the world of music anywhere. And though few will be persuaded to accept his disavowal as a complete expression of the case, it is true that Mr. Higginson has found in the establishment, the upbuilding, and the maintenance of a consummate artistic institution the keen personal delight that other men take in perfecting a collection or pursuing supremacy in a sport. If horse racing is the sport of kings, there is also something regal, even imperial, in the possession of an orchestra. Mr. Higginson's orchestra, whatever he may declare as to his own motives, has been for twenty-three years as much for the benefit of his townsmen as for himself; and, in a way by no means indirect, for the benefit of his countrymen.

Henry L. Higginson, born in New York, but brought up in Boston as a scion of a Boston family socially and intellectually most distinguished, passed in his youth through the days of the Germania Orchestra and the Harvard Musical Association and the other local institutions that decorated the town with the epithet of "musical," and that contributed in large measure to that connotation of "culture" still inseparable from its name. The young Higginson, no doubt, like the good Bostonian he has always been, thought these things were all they should be or could be, till he was sent to Vienna to complete his education.

There he saw a great light. He associated much with musicians and musical amateurs, and heard what orchestral playing might be at the hands of accomplished musicians constantly in training under great conductors. Then and there he formed the resolution that when his time came he would give to Boston an orchestra on a higher plane than all its culture had ever known; an orchestra the members of which should not be summoned to its service upon occasion from other persuits, but whose business should be its business; an orchestra that should not be dependent upon the caprice of the public, or limited in its scope by the conservatism of a clique.

His time came in the midst of a successful business career, when, moreover, Boston was ripe for the experiment he intended to try. The old Harvard Musical Association had shrivelled up to nothing. To take its place, there was a newly formed Philharmonic Society supporting an orchestra upon the basis that was the only possible one under existing conditions. Its purposes were sincere, but it was glad to retire from the field when, in February, 1881, Mr. Higginson made public his intention of establishing a new orchestra in a new way. There was in Boston at the time a clever young baritone singer, musical through and through, a man of uncommon intelligence and force, and in certain ways of rare accomplishment. To Georg Henschel, though he was without experience as an orchestral conductor, was intrusted the organization of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He proved, not unnaturally, to be far from an ideal conductor, since the art of conducting is not inborn, but is acquired by great toil and long experience; but he did well the pioneering work for the new orchestra.

As he organized it, it numbered seventy performers. There were twelve first and eleven second violins, eight violas, nine 'cellos, nine double-basses, and the number of wood and brass-wind players usual in a small orchestra.

The growth of the orchestra is shown by a comparison of these figures with those of its present constitution. There are now, when all the players are in requisition,—which, of course, they are only in the most modern compositions,—about ninety men; namely, sixteen first and fourteen second violins, ten violas, ten 'cellos, eight double-basses, four flutes, three oboes, one English horn, three clarinets, one bass clarinet, three bassoons, one contra-bassoon, four horns, four trumpets, three trombones, and one player each of the harp, tuba, timpani, bass drum, cymbals, triangle and tambour. It gave its first concert on Oct. 22, 1881.

The purpose was at first to make it minister specially to listeners of limited purse. The best places cost fifty cents; at the so-called public rehearsals, on the afternoons of the day preceding the concerts—really exact duplicates of the concerts themselves, —there were seats for twenty-five cents. But the concerts speedily became not only popular but fashionable. There was a great competition for tickets among those of unlimited as well as of limited purse, and advantage was soon taken of this eagerness by the institution of an auction sale at the beginning of each season for the choice of places. Some have said that this has tended to restrict the popular privileges upon which emphasis was laid at first, and to increase the reliance put upon the support of wealth and fashion. some have affirmed, too, that attendance upon these concerts is for many in Boston only a compliance with fashionable necessity. Yet for twenty-three years, week after week, the hall has been filled, often to the very limit of its capacity. Now, Boston is doubtless not to be judged as other towns; but it is hard to believe that, even in Boston, the necessity of being fashionable after the Boston manner can continue to constrain hundreds to weekly boredom unremittingly for twenty-three years, with few signs of relief yet in sight. It is almost easier to believe that love of music has really permeated the several strata of Boston society, and that the audience goes to the concerts because it wishes to hear them.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was not founded to provide an instrument for any particular conductor, but its conductors have been summoned to fill the need it created—a fact that should be taken into consideration by zealous but not always wisely prompted orchestral founders elsewhere. It has had four different men at its head in the course of its existence, each a man of special qualification in certain directions, who has not escaped fiery ordeals of criticism for one reason or another, especially at home. It has been observed that the angel Gabriel would be disparaged by the American public if he came in contact with it long enough; and in Boston the critical faculty has always been highly developed.

Mr. Higginson had seen and heard Wilhelm Gericke in Vienna as Han Richter's colleague at the Imperial Opera, and as conductor, also, of the Society of Friends of Music. Keen, alert, of imperious and overmastering will, with all the technic and routine of the difficult art of conducting at his fingers' ends, not without a certain pedantic quality to restrain the musician's temperament, which increasing years have rathered mellowed and softened than intensified, he found his orchestra a body of men loosely knit together and sorely in need of the rigorous discipline that makes for perfect mobility and adaptability in orchestras as well as in armies. There is something of the martinet in Mr. Gericke's nature, and he needed all he had in those first years of the formative period. The greatest distinctions of the Boston orchestra, its perfection of ensemble, its brilliancy, its plasticity, its beauty of tone, are his work. He achieved them not only through drill and the instillation of an ardent feeling of esprit de corps, but also, and in large measure, through the improvement of the personnel.

There were many veterans and some incompetents of the earlier dispensation in the orchestra when he came to it, who had found in it a "pleasant refuge" for declining years. Many new men came from Europe at his summons,—young men of eager blood, like the "young lions" of the Conservatory orchestra that were the delight of Berlioz in Paris,—for whom the orchestra was not a refuge, but a field for ambitious and energetic labor.

It was a fortunate chance that brought Mr. Kneisel, Mr. Loeffler, Mr. Svecenski, Mr. Roth, Mr. Giese, the Adamowski brothers, Mr. Schuecker, and still others in the earlier years, and that has since added such men as the ill-fated Pourtau, and Mr. Longy, to name only a few of many accomplished players who have helped make the Boston Symphony Orchestra admired as "a band of virtuosi." Their coming caused wailing and gnashing of teeth in certain quarters. It is not a pleasant task to dismiss veterans who have deserved well; but it sometimes must be done. Strange though it may seem, it is a difficult undertaking to secure the best men from abroad as orchestral players in the American Promised Land. It stands upon the records that, having heard many aspirants during a certain summer in Europe, one of Mr. Higginson's conductors personally chose and brought over sixteen new men. Every one of them proved quite incompetent and had speedily to be sent back.

The American life, and his strenuous part in it, caused Mr. Gericke, after the season of 1888-89, to return to the quieter atmosphere of Vienna; and to succeed him Arthur Nikisch was summoned from his post of conductor at the Neues Theatre—the municipal opero-house of Leipsic. He was just then emerging into that fame that has since made him one of the most distinguished, and, it may also be added, one of the most highly paid conductors in the world; but he had not quite arrived at it then, and the series of concerts that he had conducted the previous winter in Berlin had been a disastrous financial failure.

In Boston he did much in the next three years to bring himself into prominence as one of the most original, daring, and intensely subjective of the modern school of conductors- a man who, with certain exaggerations and affectations is illuminated by the living flame of genius. As about his predecessor, so even more about him, was Boston rent into contending factions. So it was also about his successor, Emil Paur, who, having stepped into Nikisch's position at the Leipsic opera, stepped into it again in Boston as one who came to tide over an emergency. For after Mr. Nikisch's contract had been canceled in 1893, under circumstances of some stress and strain, Mr. Higginson fully expected to secure for his orchestra, Dr. Hans Richter. It is not perhaps generally known by how narrow a margin the great Viennese conductor, then as now recognized as one of the most gifted and authoritative in the world, failed to come to this country. He had just had trouble in the intriguing court circles of the Austrian capital, where the strings that direct the management of the Imperial Opera are pulled. He was disgusted and ready to leave Vienna. He had actually signed a contract with Mr. Higginson and was expected in Boston. Then came salve to his wounded feelings, auf hohen Befehl, in the shape of a decoration and an appointment to the post of Hofkapellmeister at the opera on the death of Hellmesberger. So he calmly ignored his American contract and stayed. Mr. Paur exercised a rude, but vigorous sway for five years, when he was succeeded, in 1898, by Mr. Gericke, who returned to a place that had been kept warm in the hearts of his admirers during the nine years of his absence.

It would be wrong to neglect the part that was played in the upbuilding of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Franz Kneisel, whom Mr. Gericke took as a lad of twenty from the post of concert-master of Bilse's orchestra in Berlin, and put in the corresponding post in Boston in the autumn of 1885. To the eye of the audience the concert-master- so we somewhat unintelligibly translate the German word Konzertmeister, ignoring the more descriptive French nome of chef d'attaque -is the man who plays at the forefront of the first violins at the left of the conductor. He is, in a way, the autocratic conductor's grand vizir, his executive officer, one of his chief means of making effective his wishes; and, where the right relation exists, his best friend and right-hand man. His functions resemble those of a constitutional monarch's prime minister. The king can do no wrong. If all goes well in the orchestra, it is the conductor's achievement; if anything goes amiss, it is very likely to be the concert-master's fault. He must always see that all the instruments are in tune with one another before rehearsals and concerts begin. If there is a misunderstanding between the conductor and a player, the concert-master's good offices are invaluable in setting it right. Few conductors are thoroughly familiar with the details of the technic and the limitations of all the orchestral instruments, their possibilities in the way of phrasing and the production of special effects; for, though most conductors have begun their careers as performers upon some instrument, their playing days are past and they have other things to think of. So, if the conductor gives a direction as to phrasing or accentuation that is impracticable, or if he demands something that cannot be done, the concert-master must be ready, after the rehearsal, to explain to the bewildered or derisive player that he is not to understand thus and so exactly as he thought, but rather this and that, which was what the conductor really meant; and likewise adroitly to intimate to the mistaken autocrat that some slight modification of his desires would be advisable. In case of direst need, should conductor and orchestra lose touch with each other in a public performance, the concert-master must divine the cause of the trouble, and, through his intimacy with the men and his knowledge of the conductor's wishes as well as of the score, bring them together again with the sound of his instrument, at a critical moment more potent than the conductor's stick. Or, should a soloist miss a cue or make a false entrance, he must, if possible, give such a hint or catch up such a missing strand as shall set the unlucky one right. In short, his office is of an importance to the prosperity of the orchestra only less than that of the conductor himself. It may easily be seen how valuable a man of force and tact, of accomplished musicianship and fertile resource, may be in such a place, or how futile one must be who has not these qualities. It is only needful to say that Mr. Kneisel, during the eighteen years he was concert-master, was the very ideal of what a concert-master should be; and that, without services such as his, the Boston Symphony Orchestra could scarcely have attained the perfection it has. The orchestra has at present, in Professor Willy Hess, a player of style, authority, and technical accomplishment, and a man of the vigorous and commanding personality needed for its concert-master—one who is carrying on the best traditions of his office in the economy of the orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is the creature of Mr. Higginson's will, and never has been anything else; and if he should choose tomorrow to disband it, it would cease to exist. He has made it what he desired; but he has never interfered with the absolute authority of his conductors, and he has always upheld their hands and [illegible] wishes in a way that has often entailed great and sometimes extravagant expense. Indeed, the price of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has never been measured by the guarantee of salaries and rentals. There was once one of Mr. Higginson's conductors who thought that the tone of the violins—the greatest glory and strength of the organization—would be improved if all the players had instruments of the same make and quality, instead of such as each individual had chosen or been able to possess himself of. Nothing would do, therefore, but that he should send to Germany and import for the score or more of his violinists a set of violins by one maker. The experiment was tried for a time, but the results were not what were expected, and most of the instruments are now packed away in the storeroom, gathering dust.

The terms under which the Boston Symphony players are engaged are very various. The rank and file are for the most part under annual contracts for a season of twenty-nine weeks (of which twenty-four are devoted to the Boston concerts, and five to travelling), at a salary of from thirty or thirty-five dollars a week upward. The chief players—the first violin, or concert-master, and some of the other best violinists, the first cellist, the first performers on the other instruments—receive more, up to an annual salary of five thousand dollars, with engagements of several years. Some receive weekly salaries of various amounts guaranteed for various periods of time beyond the regular season, sometimes as long as forty-five weeks in the year. The conductors have received salaries of about eight or ten thousand dollars.

The contract that each member has to sign requires that he shall have "a good and suitable instrument and keep it, at his own expense, constantly in the best condition"; that he shall "support to the best of his ability all rehearsals and performances," and "play to the best of his ability as a musician." He shall comply with the instructions of the conductor as to music, deportment and order; shall play at no balls and at no other orchestral concerts or rehearsals in Boston or elsewhere without permission. There are fines imposed for lateness at rehearsals; five dollars for a period not exceeding fifteen minutes, ten dollars for a longer one, and ten dollars for absence, unless there is sufficient excuse. There are certain penalties and indemnities which Mr. Higginson is entitled to claim on the nonfulfilment of contract stipulations. It may be remarked, however, that the contract is much more severe than Mr. Higginson is; and the pound of flesh is rarely exacted, and then only for the sake of discipline.

Such a thing could never happen, for instance, as happened to Dr. Richard Strauss in New York last spring, when he was rehearsing his enormously difficult "Symphonia Domestica," for the eighth or ninth time with an orchestra supposed to have some claims to at least a season's permanency. An unlucky horn-player made a mistake that the composer had repeatedly corrected at previous meetings, and when Dr. Strauss angrily threw down his baton and reproached the musician for inattention and neglect of his directions, the culprit replied: "But, Herr Doctor, I have n't been here before—I 'm a substitute!" Playing in the theatre orchestras is forbidden; but if, in a few occasional instances, it is tolerated, it is because a special necessity is recognized. Many of the players teach; but few beyond the violinists and cellists have that resource open to them. The purpose is—and it is effectively realized—to make the orchestra, during the season, a united body of men with but one main object in view and free to devote themselves to it—following a single director's counsels of perfection, with as little as possible to weary them or to distract them from it. How high an ideal that is, and how few of the great orchestras of the world make any pretence of reaching it, is perhaps not often realized. Mr. Thomas's Chicago orchestra is one of them. The orchestra of the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam is one. Are there many others? The Gewandhaus players in Leipsic, those of the Vienna Philharmonic, and those of the great Paris orchestras have their operatic and other duties; the members of the Berlin Philharmonic are subject to the wear and tear of almost daily popular concerts.

But twenty-nine weeks' salary is not enough to support the rank and file of Mr. Higginson's men throughout the year. Hence arose the "Pops" of the early Boston summer time. Not chiefly to supply his fellow-citizens with fantasies on "Carmen," Strauss waltzes, and sarsaparilla, but to lengthen the period of his men's earnings. Mr. Higginson, twenty years ago, began to give a series of concerts of light music in the Music Hall, lasting for eight weeks after the close of the regular season. The leading players take no part in these, except that upon one of them is annually bestowed the brief glory of conducting. But even when these eight weeks are ended, the lesser players of the orchestra find that they still have a famine period to reckon with before the rehearsals are taken up again in the autumn. There remains for them the "summer snap," the orchestra of the summer hotel, in which four or five players whom the proprietor proudly advertises as "from the Boston Symphony Orchestra" provide agreeable diversion for the guests. The matter is harmless and unimportant, except for the spectre of the Musical Union that it has evoked, and that has in recent years increasingly troubled the serenity of the orchestral brotherhood, touching chiefly the interests of the lesser men. Mr. Higginson's position as to the union is very positive. He thinks that unions are an excellent thing; he believes in them—but not in the "closed shop." He is willing that his men should belong to the union, but not that they should compel the unwilling to do so. He has told the players frankly —and they all know that he means it— that if the union undertakes to dictate in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, or to interfere in any way with its management or the freedom of its members, he will pay off all hands and disband the organization on the spot. Recent events, resulting in the resignation from union of all of the Symphony [illegible] belonged to it, seem to hav[illegible] situation.

It might be supposed that, after twenty-three years, everybody who knows the orchestra knows that back of it stands Henry L. Higginson. Yet it was only a few months ago that its manager, Mr. Charles A. Ellis, who with his assistant, Mr. F. R. Comee, has guided its fortunes skilfully and in the spirit of Mr. Higginson's purpose from the very beginning, received a note from an unknown but ardent admirer of the orchestra, who thought that it was such a very good thing, such a great public benefit, that some rich man like Mr. Carnegie ought to back it up and support it.

Mr. Higginson knew, when he embarked upon the scheme of his orchestra, that it would cost him heavily; and it has. Mr. Higginson has never taken the public into his confidence as to the orchestra's finances, but it may be said on the highest authority that it has cost him as much as $52,000 in a year; that in one season it paid its expenses, and only one, though in another it lacked only $2000 of doing so; and that last season, after several more prosperous ones, the deficit mounted up again to $40,000. It may also be said, on the highest authority, that Mr. Higginson has made provision for the continuation of the orchestra on the same lines after his death. Mr. Higginson is not a wealthy man in the modern acceptation of that term, and what the orchestra costs him in money comes out of his annual earnings. What it has cost him in time and trouble, in annoyances great and small, in perplexities, in demands upon his patience, wisdom, and sense of justice, no man may know. He is always accessible to his players, in his busy hours and out of them, and they seldom have shown any hesitation in coming to him as to an unfailing friend,

Laxative Bromo Quinine
Always remember the full name. 25 cents.

U. HOLZER
25 Bromfield St.
BINDS AND REPAIRS ALL KINDS OF BOOKS

REDUCTION

RATIO

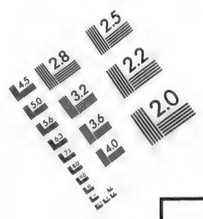
12x

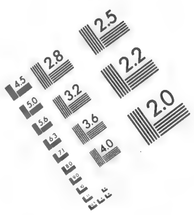
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
2.5 mm 1234567890

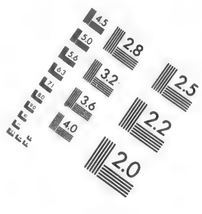
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
2.0 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
1.5 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

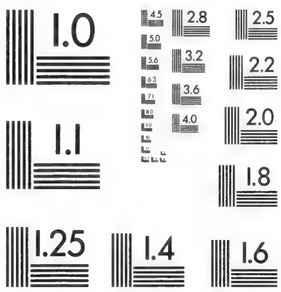






150 mm

100 mm



ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

1.0 mm

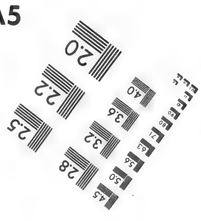
1.5 mm

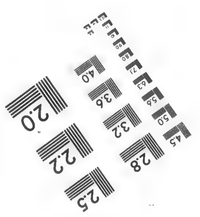
2.0 mm

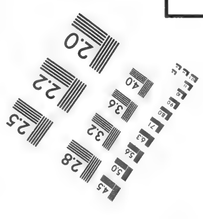
2.5 mm

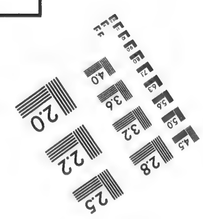
A5

A4









PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
4.5 mm 1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
3.5 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

...AY HERALD
...ned Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVII., NO. 29.
SUNDAY, JAN. 29, 1905.

...mphony Orchestra, for Its 13th Concert, Gives First Performance of the Young Italian's Delightful Prelude.

MR. KRASSELT PLAYS THE CELLO ADMIRABLY

Great Fantastic Symphony of Berlioz, His Own Love Tragedy Put Into a Poem, Charms Hearers—Orchestra Wins Favor.

The programme of the 13th concert of the Symphony orchestra, given in Symphony Hall last night, Mr. Gericke conductor, was as follows:

Overture to "The Barber of Bagdad".... Cornelius
Concerto for violoncello.....Volkmann
Symphonic Prelude op. 11, No 1.....Caetani (First time.)
Fantastic Symphony..... Berlioz

It would be interesting to know how much Liszt had to do with this overture, which was composed long after the production of the opera; for the original overture was a very different affair in structure, spirit and tonality, and Liszt frankly told his friends that it was not in keeping with the opera itself. Cornelius died before he had scored this second overture, and the task was performed lovingly by Liszt, who said in a letter to his Princess Carolyn that he had also made alterations.

The overture as it stands is delightful music, melodious, piquant, now animated and now sensuous, full of life and, at times sparkling and brilliant. When the opera was performed last July at Weimar at the Cornelius festival, not only was the score presented in its original form and without Felix Mottl's changes and additions, but the original overture was played. It might be worth while to perform it here.

Don Roffredo Caetani is a composer little known, even by name, in this country. It is said that he is the second son of the Duke of Sermoneta, a noble Roman, head of the family of Caetani; that he studied with Sgambati at Rome, and afterward in Germany and at Paris. He is evidently a seriously-minded young man, for his first published work was a string quartet, and he has composed a set of symphonic preludes, the first of which was played in New York at a Philharmonic concert in 1902; an orchestral suite and some chamber music. This prelude in A minor was performed here for the first time. Brahms once said that one should speak well of music by a prince, for one could not tell who might have written it, but Caetani is no doubt, his own composer. As a pupil of Sgambati, he was taught to look beyond the Alps, to study the methods and the spirit of Liszt and Wagner. Did Caetani in crossing the Alps give up his inestimable birthright of free and sensuous melody? It is a pleasure to say that this prelude shows that a young Italian can be earnest and at the same time melodious; that he can use the modern romantic dress of Germany to clothe effectively his own Italian thoughts.

Had Caetani a programme in his mind? Is the work a prelude to some play, as Pierre de Breville's "Overture to a Drama" was composed as a prelude to one of Maeterlinck's dramas, but without thought of necessary connection with an actual performance of the play? Surely the ending of Caetani's prelude hints at tragic emotions and the fall of the black curtain. The work is not of constantly sustained merit; there are moments when there is too apparent labor, when there is the thought of one experimenting; but as a whole the music shows true invention, no little command of orchestral expression, and more than once an individual and poignant stroke of imagination.

The "Fantastic Symphony" of Berlioz is now nearly 75 years old. It is both historically and inherently a marvellous work. To think that when it was produced Beethoven had not been dead four years, and that Wagner was still a student at Leipsic! On the other hand, how boldly imaginative the music seems today! The year 1830 that gave it birth has been called the '93 of the arts. It was a strange period of wild romanticism, the years immediately before and after, and Berlioz was not only a man of the future, he was a revolutionary of revolutionaries. His "antediluvian hair" that rose from his forehead was as much of a symbol as was the flaming waistcoat worn by Theophile on the memorable first night of "Hernani." We smile now at the eccentricities and the extravagancies of the period, but we owe the perpetrators a heavy debt of gratitude. They made the art of today possible.

It is easy to call Berlioz a poseur, but the young man was terribly in earnest. He put his own love tragedy into this symphony; he was the man; he suffered; he was there; and so the music did not pass away with the outward badges of romanticism, with much of Byron's poetry, with plays and novels of the time. The emotions he expressed are still universal and elemental. There is always a Henrietta Smithson, and there is from time to time a Berlioz, who in amorous frenzy dreams his ghastly dream march to the scaffold and would fain see the once beloved unclean at the blasphemous revel. Then he marries her and is profoundly unhappy.

Mr. Krasselt gave an admirable display of pure art by his performance of the concerto. He did not attempt to enlarge, to modernize, the music; he accepted it at its face value, and then by full and rounded and unaffected artistry he made it beautiful. And for once there was no thought of a player seesawing between sentimental and cloying melody and unmeaning and buzzing bravura.

The orchestral performance for euphony and brilliance was of the highest order. The first three movements of the symphony were the most effective; the march might well have been played in a more nightmare spirit, and the [illegible] that have been likened to [illegible] whispers muttering dismal [illegible]ers of the victim as he [illegible]d were too far away [illegible] their whispers were al-

---

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, JAN 29, 1905.

Mr Rudolph Krasselt, the young cellist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was the soloist at last week's rehearsal and concert, playing Volkmann's A minor concerto, op 33. The other numbers on the program were the Cornelius overture to "The Barber of Bagdad," a symphonic prelude by Caetani and the "Fantastic Symphony" by Berlioz. Mr Krasselt's performance of the concerto was masterly and again gave evidence of the good judgment shown by Mr Gericke in securing this young artist as a successor to the position so long and creditably filled by Mr Schroeder. The immense difficulties of the Volkmann work seemed to offer but few obstacles to the performer, the runs, double stoppings and four-finger chords were made as perfectly as if upon a keyed instrument and the beautiful tone production was not varied throughout the piece, whether in harmonics or in the sweeping fortissimo passages, where one frequently hears a rasping sound.

The first theme was exploited in the upper register with the effect of a violin and the subsequent development and elaborations, sometimes passionate, sometimes of a sweeter nature, were each played with a clarity of tone and breadth of execution which deserve the highest praise. The cadenza, which was a somewhat remarkable exhibition of finger work, was the one written by Klengel, with whom Mr Krasselt studied. The interpretation was most heartily enjoyed and the young artist received evidences of appreciation from the audience and his associate players which must have been most gratifying, for he was recalled to the stage at least a half dozen times by tumultuous applause.

The Cornelius overture to "The Barber," a merry, whimsical composition, with a succession of varying themes and rhythms, was delightfully played. The trumpet, clarinet and oboe sang the "Rose" melody in splendid unison, vying with the work of the strings in the same theme, and the repeated phrases of the same air in sustained chords by the brasses, backed by tremulous accompaniments in the heavier strings, in harmony with another motif by the woodwinds, were admirable examples of the perfect ensemble work of the orchestra. The Caetani prelude made a pleasing impression. The lighter portions of the piece contained some excellent melodic material, skilfully orchestrated, and although many of the heavier passages displayed the influence of Wagner's methods, they were not reproductions but more like reflections of the great master. The orchestra in the Volkmann concerto gave Mr Krasselt splendid support.

The five divisions of the Berlioz symphony were given with a thoroughly sympathetic understanding of the various scenes. The "Ball Scene" was notably suggestive in its delicacy of treatment in the dance themes; the plaintive nature of the third movement was admirably intoned by the woodwinds, and the wild, fantastic characteristics of the fourth and fifth parts were given with thrilling effect.

Mr Eugen d'Albert will be the soloist at this week's concerts, playing his second piano concerto. The other numbers will be Goldmark's overture, "In Italy"; Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" and the symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," by Rimsky-Korsakoff.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD
309-311 Washington St.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

(From Mr. Elson's Criticism.)

PROGRAMME.

Peter Cornelius—Overture to the Opera "The Barber of Bagdad."
Volkmann—Concerto in A minor for Violoncello and Orchestra, op. 33.
Soloist, Mr. Rudolf Krasselt.
R. Caetani—Symphonic Prelude in A minor, No. 5, op. 11. (First time.)
Berlioz—Fantastic Symphony, No. 1, in C major.

Almost every part of this programme called for a large modern orchestra. Cornelius' overture had, we believe, Liszt's orchestration, which was brilliant and attractive throughout. The themes themselves were bright and well-contrasted, while they were developed with clearness and logic. It is astonishing how melodious those old radicals, who were deemed utterly abstruse and involved 50 years ago, seem to us today. This ought to teach a lesson to the cock-sure reviewers of the present; music has no fixed laws whatever; it may be that our children will find D'Indy's second symphony too simple and melodic!

When Mr. Krasselt came forward to play the violoncello part of the Volkmann concerto, he was greeted with such continued applause that it was quite evident that the audience were awake to the fact that he is one of the great artists of our orchestra. He played with a beautiful tone, broad and powerful in the prominent C-string passages, sweet and sympathetic in A-string work; always sure in intonation, and brilliant enough in the cadenza.

This cadenza had some very fine double-stopping, many skips and arpeggios, chromatic runs galore, and some catchy harmonics, which are always more difficult upon the violoncello than upon the violin, because of the thicker strings. The only fault to be found with the young artist was in the recitative passages, where he exaggerated somewhat and became too sentimental. But this sentimentality was as much a fault of the composer as of the performer, for the concerto was frequently caught whispering sweet nothings to the auditor.

It is not as lofty a work as either of the 2 symphonies, or the "Richard III." overture. Mr. Krasselt certainly made all that was possible out of it and was recalled several times after the conclusion of his task, receiving also a very large laurel wreath.

The Boston Journal

SYMPHONY'S WORK ESPECIALLY FINE

Rudolph Krasselt the Soloist at the 13th Concert—His Genius as a 'Cello Player.

At the thirteenth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Rudolf Krasselt was the soloist, and the program was:

Overture to the opera, "The Barber of Bagdad".....Cornelius
Concerto in A minor, for violoncello and orchestra.....Volkmann
Symphonic prelude in A minor, No. 5.Caetani (First time.)
Fantastic symphony No. 1, in C major.Berlioz

The brilliant and effervescing "Barber of Bagdad" overture, undoubtedly given much of its color and beauty by the helping inspiration and workmanship of Liszt, was played in most fascinating style. There is no orchestra in this country, perhaps none in the world, that can better interpret such works as this.

Mr. Gericke's Skill.

Delicate loveliness, sparkling refinement, exquisite shading—all these things Mr. Gericke knows how to evoke, and his men know how to produce.

Mr. Krasselt's genius as a 'cello player found worthy material in the Volkmann concerto. The work is poetic, insinuating, full of quiet charm, and in those qualities seems to lie the young artist's best achievement.

He is not a bravura performer, not a prodigy of dazzling technical fireworks. But he does understand the beauty that lies in his instrument, and he makes its instinct with human appeal. In these days of superabundant virtuosity, he chooses the better part. Mr. Krasselt was rapturously applauded and presented with a gigantic wreath of bay.

The novelty was Caetani's symphonic prelude, and it was thrice welcome. Here is music from a new man in a new, though by no means revolutionary mode. This young scion of Italian nobility has musical ideas, has a keen sense of tone values, knows how to paint his picture in attractive style. And he has, too a higher education, a nobler form of expression than the majority of his countrymen.

He seems to have employed true Italian inspiration as the servant of the better musicianship of the more northern composers. The result is indubitably fine. The prelude is full of melody, yet even dignified and refined, and if it lacks something of being really great, it has all of the attributes to make it powerfully interesting. The playing of it was another triumph for the orchestra.

Fresh and Virile.

And what of Berlioz's titanic "Fantastic" symphony at this late day? As fresh and virile and thrilling as always, though less beautiful than it was once considered. This grim dream set to music, this pulsating of a man's own heart, now makes its great effects in its bizarre and fantastic scoring; the love theme, the dance, the pastoral writing no longer appeal to us with that sensuous charm they once were said to possess.

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England
SUNDAY MORNING, JANUARY 29, 1905

13TH SYMPHONY CONCERT

The programme of the 13th Symphony concert last evening was as follows:

Overture, "Barber of Bagdad".....Cornelius
Concerto for 'cello in A minor.....Volkmann
Symphonic prelude, Op. 11.....Caetani
Symphony, "Fantastic".....Berlioz

Rudolf Krasselt was the soloist.

The symphonic prelude by Caetani was the novelty presented, being for the first time in this country. The composer is the second son of the Duke of Sermoneta, well known at Rome. He has written pieces for orchestra, besides chamber music and smaller works. The prelude heard last evening is written in a conservative manner, effectively scored, and proved to be a pleasing work, if not one of much distinction. The performance was admirable and the work was well received.

Cornelius' effective overture has seldom been heard at these concerts, and to many it was a decided novelty. It wears well and continues to be an overture of interest that should be heard more frequently.

Berlioz's great symphony received a masterly interpretation. It still remains as modern as anything of the present day, although more than 70 years old. It holds its own as one of the finest examples of programme music existing in the orchestral repertory.

Mr. Krasselt played Volkmann's concerto with superb technic, beautiful tonal quality and with an authoritative interpretation that left nothing to be desired. The artist was several times recalled and presented with a wreath.

The soloist for the 14th rehearsal and concert this week will be Eugen D'Albert, the distinguished piano virtuoso, who has not been heard here for 12 years. He will play a concerto of his own composition.

Boston Transcript
MONDAY, JANUARY 30, 1905

Symphony Hall. Symphony Orchestra

Mr. Rudolf Krasselt was the soloist for the thirteenth symphony concert, of which this was the programme:

Peter Cornelius: Overture to the opera "The Barber of Bagdad."
Volkmann: Concerto in A minor for Violoncello and Orchestra, Op. 33.
R. Caetani: Symphonic Prelude in A minor, No. 5, Op. 11. (First time.)
Berlioz: Fantastic Symphony, No. 1, in C major, Op. 16A.

This season there have been few if any symphony concerts without one work ticketed "first time," a state of things for which the public should be duly grateful to Mr. Gericke. On Saturday last the new composition was a symphonic prelude by one Roffredo Caetani, who, it seems, is a Roman of noble birth, no less a personage, in short, than the second son of the Duke of Sermoneta. Little is known here of this aristocratic musician beyond the facts that he has studied with Sgambati, in Germany, and in Paris, and that he has already written several pieces for orchestra and the small concert hall. The conditions under which he has learned his art would, on the face of it, give one pause, for Sgambati, the Italian musician of parts who sold his birthright for a mess of German and Lisztian ideas, cannot be regarded as the happiest choice of a master for a youthful Italian. But Caetani, despite his training, remains Italian. Although he has learned to use the full modern orchestra skilfully, contriving a constant succession of very beautiful sounds, he has not turned his back on melody, that great gift of the Italian musical nature. His prelude, while dignified, and as well made as though it were the work of a most respectable German, is based on genuine themes; it has melodies that possess a long curve and sweep, even if they are not of the most distinguished order. The composition has its dull moments, when the composer seems not to know just what he would do, but it is far from being one of those awful works where themes are avoided as vulgar, where detached motives of no significance whatever are bandied about and twisted and turned till all the audience is bewildered. For the most part the prelude is admirably fresh, direct, and vigorously conceived, with a dramatic force and a warmth of passion all Italian. It would be worth our while to hear more works by this young writer who has had a sufficiently level head to learn much in Germany without becoming ambitious to pass, musically, for a German. The prelude was splendidly played.

The remarkable symphony by Berlioz one would gladly have heard earlier in the evening, for it is rather discouraging when an hour-long work begins its performance at nine o'clock. In connection with this symphony it is interesting to read these words of Berlioz: "If the symphony is played separately at a concert—the programme does not absolutely need to be distributed among the audience, and only the titles of the five movements need be printed, as the symphony can offer by itself (the composer hopes) a musical interest independent of all dramatic intention." Exactly so. To this day the musically intelligent are like to admire the musical content of this work, in which Berlioz, as a discoverer of interesting themes, rose above his own level, the exquisite poetical quality of its orchestral dress, the genuine poetry of the pastoral picture, the distinguished grace of the ball scene, the devilish cunning with which the effects of the march to the scaffold and the pandemonium of the witches' sabbath are contrived. It is all wonderful, music to be listened to with sincere respect and hearty admiration. But is it possible to take the symphony seriously as the expression of a soul's experience, a musical impression of an "episode in the life of an artist?" It seems not so. Berlioz was a rabid romanticist; and romanticism, like Pan, is dead. Such efforts of Byron, Victor Hugo, Dumas, and the others of that remarkable time, as now live, live despite their romanticism, not on account of it. So it is with Berlioz. His fantastic symphony, as he himself trusted, "can offer by itself a musical interest independent of all dramatic intention." One may prophesy that for years to come concertgoers will listen to periodical productions of this symphony, from which they will derive both pleasure and profit, but it is much to be doubted if the symphony will ever again stir an American audience to the depths of the soul. How, after a few years, will it be with Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic" symphony?

A delightful feature of Saturday's concert was the charming playing of Mr. Krasselt, playing tuneful, elegant, and of fine sentiment. Although there was no immod. est display of virtuosity, Mr. Krasselt's performance was technically brilliant. The artist was recalled many tmes. All the evening the orchestra played admirably.

Mr. Eugen d'Albert will play with the orchestra this week. The programme has been arranged thus: Goldmark, Overture, "In Italy," op. 49 (first time); d'Albert, Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 2; Weber, "Invitation to the Dance"; Rimsky-Korsakoff, Symphonic Suite, "Scherazade," op. 35.

[65]

DAY' HERALD
...blished Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVII., NO. 29.
SUNDAY, JAN. 29, 1905.

Symphony Orchestra, for Its 13th Concert, Gives First Performance of the Young Italian's Delightful Prelude.

MR. KRASSELT PLAYS THE CELLO ADMIRABLY

Great Fantastic Symphony of Berlioz, His Own Love Tragedy Put Into a Poem, Charms Hearers—Orchestra Wins Favor.

The programme of the 13th concert of the Symphony orchestra, given in Symphony Hall last night, Mr. Gericke conductor, was as follows:

Overture to "The Barber of Bagdad".... Cornelius
Concerto for violoncello.....Volkmann
Symphonic Prelude op. 11, No 1.....Caetani (First time.)
Fantastic Symphony..... Berlioz

It would be interesting to know how much Liszt had to do with this overture, which was composed long after the production of the opera; for the original overture was a very different affair in structure, spirit and tonality, and Liszt frankly told his friends that it was not in keeping with the opera itself. Cornelius died before he had scored this second overture, and the task was performed lovingly by Liszt, who said in a letter to his Princess Carolyn that he had also made alterations.

The overture as it stands is delightful music, melodious, piquant, now animated and now sensuous, full of life and at times sparkling and brilliant. When the opera was performed last July at Weimar at the Cornelius festival, not only was the score presented in its original form and without Felix Mottl's changes and additions, but the original overture was played. It might be worth while to perform it here.

Don Roffredo Caetani is a composer little known, even by name, in this country. It is said that he is the second son of the Duke of Sermoneta, a noble Roman, head of the family of Caetani; that he studied with Sgambati at Rome, and afterward in Germany and at Paris. He is evidently a seriously-minded young man, for his first published work was a string quartet, and he has composed a set of symphonic preludes, the first of which was played in New York at a Philharmonic concert in 1902; an orchestral suite and some chamber music. This prelude in A minor was performed here for the first time. Brahms once said that one should speak well of music by a prince, for one could not tell who might have written it, but Caetani is, no doubt, his own composer. As a pupil of Sgambati, he was taught to look beyond the Alps, to study the methods and the spirit of Liszt and Wagner. Did Caetani in crossing the Alps give up his inestimable birthright of free and sensuous melody? It is a pleasure to say that this prelude shows that a young Italian can be earnest and at the same time melodious; that he can use the modern romantic dress of Germany to clothe effectively his own Italian thoughts.

Had Caetani a programme in his mind? Is the work a prelude to some play, as Pierre de Breville's "Overture to a Drama" was composed as a prelude to one of Maeterlinck's dramas, but without thought of necessary connection with an actual performance of the play? Surely the ending of Caetani's prelude hints at tragic emotions and the fall of the black curtain. The work is not of constantly sustained merit; there are moments when there is too apparent labor, when there is the thought of one experimenting; but as a whole the music shows true invention, no little command of orchestral expression, and more than once an individual and poignant stroke of imagination.

The "Fantastic Symphony" of Berlioz is now nearly 75 years old. It is both historically and inherently a marvellous work. To think that when it was produced Beethoven had not been dead four years, and that Wagner was still a student at Leipsic! On the other hand, how boldly imaginative the music seems today! The year 1830 that gave it birth has been called the '93 of the arts. It was a strange period of wild romanticism, the years immediately before and after, and Berlioz was not only a man of the future, he was a revolutionary of revolutionaries. His "antediluvian hair", that rose from his forehead was as much of a symbol as was the flaming waistcoat worn by Theophile on the memorable first night of "Hernani." We smile now at the eccentricities and the extravagancies of the period, but we owe the perpetrators a heavy debt of gratitude. They made the art of today possible.

It is easy to call Berlioz a poseur, but the young man was terribly in earnest. He put his own love tragedy into this symphony; he was the man; he suffered; he was there; and so the music did not pass away with the outward badges of romanticism, with much of Byron's poetry, with plays and novels of the time. The emotions he expressed are still universal and elemental. There is always a Henrietta Smithson, and there is from time to time a Berlioz, who in amorous frenzy dreams his ghastly dream, march to the scaffold and would fain see the once beloved unclean at the blasphemous revel. Then he marries her and is profoundly unhappy.

Mr. Krasselt gave an admirable display of pure art by his performance of the concerto. He did not attempt to enlarge, to modernize, the music; he accepted it at its face value, and then by full and rounded and unaffected artistry he made it beautiful. And for once there was no thought of a player seesawing between sentimental and cloying melody and unmeaning and buzzing bravura.

The orchestral performance for euphony and brilliance was of the highest order. The first three movements of the symphony were the most effective; the march might well have been played in still more nightmare spirit, and the bassoons that have been likened to ghostly advisers muttering dismal things in the ears of the victim as he ... the scaffold were too far away ... and their whispers were al-

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JAN 29, 1905.

Mr Rudolph Krasselt, the young cellist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was the soloist at last week's rehearsal and concert, playing Volkmann's A minor concerto, op 33. The other numbers on the program were the Cornelius overture to "The Barber of Bagdad," a symphonic prelude by Caetani and the "Fantastic Symphony" by Berlioz. Mr Krasselt's performance of the concerto was masterly and again gave evidence of the good judgment shown by Mr Gericke in securing this young artist as a successor to the position so long and creditably filled by Mr Schroeder. The immense difficulties of the Volkmann work seemed to offer but few obstacles to the performer, the runs, double stoppings and four-finger chords were made as perfectly as if upon a keyed instrument and the beautiful tone production was not varied throughout the piece, whether in harmonics or in the sweeping fortissimo passages, where one frequently hears a rasping sound.

The first theme was exploited in the upper register with the effect of a violin and the subsequent development and elaborations, sometimes passionate, sometimes of a sweeter nature, were each played with a clarity of tone and breadth of execution which deserve the highest praise. The cadenza, which was a somewhat remarkable exhibition of finger work, was the one written by Klengel, with whom Mr Krasselt studied. The interpretation was most heartily enjoyed and the young artist received evidences of appreciation from the audience and his associate players which must have been most gratifying, for he was recalled to the stage at least a half dozen times by tumultuous applause.

The Cornelius overture to "The Barber," a merry, whimsical composition, with a succession of varying themes and rhythms, was delightfully played. The trumpet, clarinet and oboe sang the "Rose" melody in splendid unison, vying with the work of the strings in the same theme, and the repeated phrases of the same air in sustained chords by the brasses, backed by tremulous accompaniments in the heavier strings, in harmony with another motif by the woodwinds, were admirable examples of the perfect ensemble work of the orchestra. The Caetani prelude made a pleasing impression. The lighter portions of the piece contained some excellent melodic material, skilfully orchestrated, and although many of the heavier passages displayed the influence of Wagner's methods, they were not reproductions but more like reflections of the great master. The orchestra in the Volkmann concerto gave Mr Krasselt splendid support.

The five divisions of the Berlioz symphony were given with a thoroughly sympathetic understanding of the various scenes. The "Ball Scene" was notably suggestive in its delicacy of treatment in the dance themes; the plaintive nature of the third movement was admirably intoned by the woodwinds, and the wild, fantastic characteristics of the fourth and fifth parts were given with thrilling effect.

Mr Eugen d'Albert will be the soloist at this week's concerts, playing his second piano concerto. The other numbers will be Goldmark's overture, "In Italy"; Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" and the symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," by Rimsky-Korsakoff.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD

309-311 Washington St.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

(From Mr. Elson's Criticism.)

PROGRAMME.

Peter Cornelius—Overture to the Opera "The Barber of Bagdad."
Volkmann—Concerto in A minor for Violoncello and Orchestra, op. 33.
Soloist, Mr. Rudolf Krasselt.
R. Caetani—Symphonic Prelude in A minor, No. 5, op. 11. (First time.)
Berlioz—Fantastic Symphony, No. 1, in C major.

Almost every part of this programme called for a large modern orchestra. Cornelius' overture had, we believe, Liszt's orchestration which was brilliant and attractive throughout. The themes themselves were bright and well-contrasted, while they were developed with clearness and logic. It is astonishing how melodious those old radicals, who were deemed utterly abstruse and involved 50 years ago, seem to us today. This ought to teach a lesson to the cock-sure reviewers of the present; music has no fixed laws whatever; it may be that our children will find D'Indy's second symphony too simple and melodic!

When Mr. Krasselt came forward to play the violoncello part of the Volkmann concerto, he was greeted with such continued applause that it was quite evident that the audience were awake to the fact that he is one of the great artists of our orchestra. He played with a beautiful tone, broad and powerful in the prominent C-string passages, sweet and sympathetic in A-string work; always sure in intonation, and brilliant enough in the cadenza.

This cadenza had some very fine double-stopping, many skips and arpeggios, chromatic runs galore, and some catchy harmonics, which are always more difficult upon the violoncello than upon the violin, because of the thicker strings. The only fault to be found with the young artist was in the recitative passages, where he exaggerated somewhat and became too sentimental. But this sentimentality was as much a fault of the composer as of the performer, for the concerto was frequently caught whispering sweet nothings to the auditor.

It is not as lofty a work as either of the 2 symphonies, or the "Richard III." overture. Mr. Krasselt certainly made all that was possible out of it and was recalled several times after the conclusion of his task, receiving also a very large laurel wreath.

The Boston Journal

SYMPHONY'S WORK ESPECIALLY FINE

Rudolph Krasselt the Soloist at the 13th Concert—His Genius as a 'Cello Player.

At the thirteenth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Rudolf Krasselt was the soloist, and the program was:

Overture to the opera, "The Barber of Bagdad".....Cornelius
Concerto in A minor, for violoncello and orchestra.....Volkmann
Symphonic prelude in A minor, No. 5.Caetani (First time.)
Fantastic symphony No. 1, in C major.Berlioz

The brilliant and effervescing "Barber of Bagdad" overture, undoubtedly given much of its color and beauty by the helping inspiration and workmanship of Liszt, was played in most fascinating style. There is no orchestra in this country, perhaps none in the world, that can better interpret such works as this.

Mr. Gericke's Skill.

Delicate loveliness, sparkling refinement, exquisite shading—all these things Mr. Gericke knows how to evoke, and his men know how to produce.

Mr. Krasselt's genius as a 'cello player found worthy material in the Volkmann concerto. The work is poetic, insinuating, full of quiet charm, and in those qualities seems to lie the young artist's best achievement.

He is not a bravura performer, not a prodigy of dazzling technical fireworks. But he does understand the beauty that lies in his instrument, and he makes its instinct with human appeal. In these days of superabundant virtuosity, he chooses the better part. Mr. Krasselt was rapturously applauded and presented with a gigantic wreath of bay.

The novelty was Caetani's symphonic prelude, and it was thrice welcome. Here is music from a new man in a new, though by no means revolutionary mode. This young scion of Italian nobility has musical ideas, has a keen sense of tone values, knows how to paint his picture in attractive style. And he has, too a higher education, a nobler form of expression than the majority of his countrymen.

He seems to have employed true Italian inspiration as the servant of the better musicianship of the more northern composers. The result is indubitably fine. The prelude is full of melody, yet even dignified and refined, and if it lacks something of being really great, it has all of the attributes to make it powerfully interesting. The playing of it was another triumph for the orchestra.

Fresh and Virile.

And what of Berlioz's titanic "Fantastic" symphony at this late day? As fresh and virile and thrilling as always, though less beautiful than it was once considered. This grim dream set to music, this pulsating of a man's own heart, now makes its great effects in its bizarre and fantastic scoring; the love theme, the dance, the pastoral writing no longer appeal to us with that sensuous charm they once were said to possess.

The Boston Post

The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

SUNDAY MORNING, JANUARY 29, 1905

13TH SYMPHONY CONCERT

The programme of the 13th Symphony concert last evening was as follows:

Overture, "Barber of Bagdad".....Cornelius
Concerto for 'cello in A minor.....Volkmann
Symphonic prelude, Op. 11.....Caetani
Symphony, "Fantastic".....Berlioz

Rudolf Krasselt was the soloist.

The symphonic prelude by Caetani was the novelty presented, being for the first time in this country. The composer is the second son of the Duke of Sermoneta, well known at Rome. He has written pieces for orchestra, besides chamber music and smaller works. The prelude heard last evening is written in a conservative manner, effectively scored, and proved to be a pleasing work, if not one of much distinction. The performance was admirable and the work was well received.

Cornelius' effective overture has seldom been heard at these concerts, and to many it was a decided novelty. It wears well and continues to be an overture of interest that should be heard more frequently.

Berlioz's great symphony received a masterly interpretation. It still remains as modern as anything of the present day, although more than 70 years old. It holds its own as one of the finest examples of programme music existing in the orchestral repertory.

Mr. Krasselt played Volkmann's concerto with superb technic, beautiful tonal quality and with an authoritative interpretation that left nothing to be desired. The artist was several times recalled and presented with a wreath.

The soloist for the 14th rehearsal and concert this week will be Eugen D'Albert, the distinguished piano virtuoso, who has not been heard here for 12 years. He will play a concerto of his own composition.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, JANUARY 30, 1905

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

Mr. Rudolf Krasselt was the soloist for the thirteenth symphony concert, of which this was the programme:

Peter Cornelius: Overture to the opera "The Barber of Bagdad."
Volkmann: Concerto in A minor for Violoncello and Orchestra, Op. 33.
R. Caetani: Symphonic Prelude in A minor, No. 5, Op. 11. (First time.)
Berlioz: Fantastic Symphony, No. 1, in C major, Op. 16A.

This season there have been few if any symphony concerts without one work ticketed "first time," a state of things for which the public should be duly grateful to Mr. Gericke. On Saturday last the new composition was a symphonic prelude by one Roffredo Caetani, who, it seems, is a Roman of noble birth, no less a personage, in short, than the second son of the Duke of Sermoneta. Little is known here of this aristocratic musician beyond the facts that he has studied with Sgambati, in Germany, and in Paris, and that he has already written several pieces for orchestra and the small concert hall. The conditions under which he has learned his art would, on the face of it, give one pause, for Sgambati, the Italian musician of parts who sold his birthright for a mess of German and Lisztian ideas, cannot be regarded as the happiest choice of a master for a youthful Italian. But Caetani, despite his training, remains Italian. Although he has learned to use the full modern orchestra skilfully, contriving a constant succession of very beautiful sounds, he has not turned his back on melody, that great gift of the Italian musical nature. His prelude, while dignified, and as well made as though it were the work of a most respectable German, is based on genuine themes; it has melodies that possess a long curve and sweep, even if they are not of the most distinguished order. The composition has its dull moments, when the composer seems not to know just what he would do, but it is far from being one of those awful works where themes are avoided as vulgar, where detached motives of no significance whatever are bandied about and twisted and turned till all the audience is bewildered. For the most part the prelude is admirably fresh, direct, and vigorously conceived, with a dramatic force and a warmth of passion all Italian. It would be worth our while to hear more works by this young writer who has had a sufficiently level head to learn much in Germany without becoming ambitious to pass, musically, for a German. The prelude was splendidly played.

The remarkable symphony by Berlioz one would gladly have heard earlier in the evening, for it is rather discouraging when an hour-long work begins its performance at nine o'clock. In connection with this symphony it is interesting to read these words of Berlioz: "If the symphony is played separately at a concert—the programme does not absolutely need to be distributed among the audience, and only the titles of the five movements need be printed, as the symphony can offer by itself (the composer hopes) a musical interest independent of all dramatic intention." Exactly so. To this day the musically intelligent are like to admire the musical content of this work, in which Berlioz, as a discoverer of interesting themes, rose above his own level, the exquisite poetical quality of its orchestral dress, the genuine poetry of the pastoral picture, the distinguished grace of the ball scene, the devilish cunning with which the effects of the march to the scaffold and the pandemonium of the witches' sabbath are contrived. It is all wonderful, music to be listened to with sincere respect and hearty admiration. But is it possible to take the symphony seriously as the expression of a soul's experience, a musical impression of an "episode in the life of an artist?" It seems not so. Berlioz was a rabid romanticist; and romanticism, like Pan, is dead. Such efforts of Byron, Victor Hugo, Dumas, and the others of that remarkable time, as now live, live despite their romanticism, not on account of it. So it is with Berlioz. His fantastic symphony, as he himself trusted, "can offer by itself a musical interest independent of all dramatic intention." One may prophesy that for years to come concertgoers will listen to periodical productions of this symphony, from which they will derive both pleasure and profit, but it is much to be doubted if the symphony will ever again stir an American audience to the depths of the soul. How, after a few years, will it be with Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic" symphony?

A delightful feature of Saturday's concert was the charming playing of Mr. Krasselt, playing tuneful, elegant, and of fine sentiment. Although there was no immodest display of virtuosity, Mr. Krasselt's performance was technically brilliant. The artist was recalled many tmes. All the evening the orchestra played admirably.

Mr. Eugen d'Albert will play with the orchestra this week. The programme has been arranged thus: Goldmark, Overture, "In Italy," op. 49 (first time); d'Albert, Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 2; Weber, "Invitation to the Dance"; Rimsky-Korsakoff, Symphonic Suite, "Scherazade," op. 35.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Peter Cornelius—Overture to the Opera "The Barber of Bagdad."
Volkmann—Concerto in A minor for Violoncello and Orchestra, op. 33.
Soloist, Mr. Rudolf Krasselt.
R. Caetani—Symphonic Prelude in A minor, No. 5, op. 11. (First time.)
Berlioz—Fantastic Symphony, No. 1, in C major.

Almost every part of this programme called for a large modern orchestra. Cornelius' overture had, we believe, Liszt's orchestration, which was brilliant and attractive throughout. The themes themselves were bright and well-contrasted, while they were developed with clearness and logic. It is astonishing how melodious those old radicals, who were deemed utterly abstruse and involved 50 years ago, seem to us today. This ought to teach a lesson to the cock-sure reviewers of the present; music has no fixed laws whatever; it may be that our children will find D'Indy's second symphony too simple and melodic! In this overture there was some excellent woodwind playing, and the sly humor of the bombast of the beginning and end (which Hanslick thought quite out of place) was charming.

When Mr. Krasselt came forward to play the violoncello part of the Volkmann concerto, he was greeted with such continued applause that it was quite evident that the audience were awake to the fact that he is one of the great artists of our orchestra. He played with a beautiful tone, broad and powerful in the prominent C-string passages, sweet and sympathetic in A-string work; always sure in intonation, and brilliant enough in the cadenza.

This cadenza had some very fine double-stopping, many skips and arpeggios, chromatic runs galore, and some catchy harmonies which are always more difficult upon the violoncello than upon the violin, because of the thicker strings. The only fault to be found with the young artist was in the recitative passages, where he exaggerated somewhat and became too sentimental. But this sentimentality was as much a fault of the composer as of the performer, for the concerto was frequently tragic whispering sweet nothings to the audience.

It is not as lofty a work as either of the 2 symphonies, or the "Richard III." overture. Mr. Krasselt certainly made all that was possible out of it and was recalled several times after the conclusion of his task, receiving also a very large laurel wreath.

A white blackbird! One ought to welcome an Italian symphonic composer with especial warmth, for Italy has as yet not enough of them to crowd a telephone book. Pietro Scamoni Martucci, Bossi and one or two more, few of these with the instrument has achieved a standard orchestral work; one single symphony from the country which has been justly called "the mother of music"!

We started therefore, with something akin to anxiety, to the new Symphonic Poem by Caetani. He was an Italian, and that much was doubtful, he was of noble family which made one more doubtful still, and the work began quietly and conventionally as if it had nothing much to say. But it was melodic, for which we are always grateful since we are of that contrary mind with Hanslick too to be glad to hear a symphonic poem by Wagner as much as his overture.

Very soon, too, it was evident that the composer knew what he was about and knew it well. The work became more and more interesting. The work is full of beauties which were sometimes unique in design, and had perhaps a right to the footlights attached to them, and nevertheless everything was straightforward and intelligible. Caetani is not the great master orchestrator without mistakes. The work received some applause and deserved more. This part of Scamoni, for one, need his master.

The use by Berlioz of his double-bearded love-child to Harriet Smithson and Camille Moke, one of the most important pieces of program-music in existence, for all that Strauss has gone in this field in recent times. It is a fine study of the matic development for the laity, since every intelligent child can identify its love-theme and much of its treatment. It is also a most popular lesson in orchestration, all of the instruments being passed in review in an identifiable manner.

In the last movement Berlioz is no more in the domain of programme music (instrumental picture-painting) than was Beethoven in the first movement of his "programme symphony," the "Pastoral." The young lover sighs and rages, but the movement is a portrayal of emotions, not a picture of objects or events. But in the second movement, "The Ball," the young man returns to the World, the Flesh, and the Devil—some of the "love-theme" only Tschaikowsky and Berlioz have succeeded in making the waltz a good movement in the symphony. The harp, played by Mr. Seinecke, was a charming element of this graceful picture. Mr. Gericke made a success of the swing of the waltz, as a true "Wienerkind" ought to do.

Paris itself will never hear the dialogue between English horn and oboe better given than it was at this concert. Messieurs Longy and Lenom covered themselves with glory, and especially those final phrases, where the shepherd calls in vain for his lost love, were memorable. But there was too much of conservatism in the thunder-storm. Where was the thunderbolt that killed the shepherdess? It was too mild a storm to suggest even an umbrella, far less a tragedy.

The "March to the Guillotine" is really great music! Here the musical Edgar Allen Poe was on his native heath. Herodotus somewhere tells us of a march which the Spartans played when they took culprits to execution,—the Nome of Kradias, —which inspired terror in every auditor. Such a march has Berlioz achieved. The powerful pizzicato effects of the contrabasses, the strange muttering duet of the bassoons, (picturing the footsteps of the crowd, just as Dickens pictured them in "The Tale of Two Cities") were strokes of genius.

Although there was loudness enough in the march, we could not find in the interpretation the full intention of the composer. It was conservatism at just the wrong place. The culprit was very timidly beheaded with a dull axe. The orchestra seemed almost apologetic when it interrupted the solo of the clarinette!

The same conservatism was noticeable in the finale, which was loud without being at all furious. The parody of the love-theme might have been screamed out far more wildly. When Berlioz found the shrill imp of the orchestra, the piccolo, insufficient for his purpose, and added that squealer from the military band, the E-flat clarinette, to the orchestral forces, it meant something. But the technical points of the work were finely brought out,—and how many there are! They extend even to rapping the violin strings with the back of the bow ("coll ' legno") and to a final stroke of cymbal with a drumstick! Praising all the technical perfection which was there, we must yet deplore the lack of the morbid power which is the soul of the last 2 movements.

Louis C. Elson.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, FEB 5, 1905.

The famous pianist and composer, Eugen d'Albert, who has been a stranger to this country for a dozen years, made his reappearance here at last week's Symphony concerts, playing his own E major piano concerto. Goldmark's overture, "In Italy," given here for the first time, opened the program, which also contained Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" and "Scheherazade," Rimsky-Korsakoff's symphonic suite. The piano concerto is practically in one movement, the divisions are so slight, and is evidently written to display the more vigorous features of his artistic powers, for nearly all the sections are thickly strewn with forte and fortissimo passages in four-finger chords. The great fervor shown by the artist plainly indicated the general tone of the big composition and his performance, although a little uneven in spots, gave the impression of a vitality which expressed perfectly the ideas of the writer by the art of the performer. He indulged in strong tonal contrasts, the piano part in some of the lighter passages being hardly audible above the orchestra; but in the many exceedingly brilliant portions of the work the splendid qualities of the artist were shown in glowing colors. Mr d'Albert was received with great enthusiasm and was recalled to the stage many times. At his recital in a few weeks it is to be hoped that he will include some of Beethoven's works, in which the pianist is said to excel as an interpreter.

The Goldmark overture, "In Italy," heard for the first time, is a charmingly brilliant piece and characteristic of the composer's fondness for novel effects in which the instruments of percussion are liberally used. It is one of those light, joyous, rollicking works which please the ear and keeps one in good humor, and it was played with great spirit and dash by the orchestra. The odd crescendos were exquisite bits of tonal quaintness and deserve special mention.

The orchestra gave d'Albert perfect support in the piano concerto and Weber's rondo, "Invitation to the Dance," also went with a swing that was almost irresistible to those who indulge in the mazy. Sinbad's journey and other stories, according to the musical ideas of the Russian composer, Rimsky-Korsakoff, were illustrated in the usual skilful manner and being familiar, call for no detailed comment.

This week's program will have for soloist the young violinist, Miss Marie Nichols, who will be heard in Bruch's serenade for violin and orchestra. The remaining selections will be Mozart's overture, "Marriage of Figaro"; "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," Richard Strauss and Cesar Franck's D-minor symphony.

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England
SUNDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 5, 1905
(Copyright 1905, Post Publishing Co.)

14TH SYMPHONY CONCERT

Mr. Eugen D'Albert, pianist, was the soloist at the Symphony concert last evening, and the following programme was presented:

Overture, "In Italy," Op. 49.....Goldmark
Concerto for pianoforte, No. 2.....D'Albert
"Invitation to the Dance".....Weber-Berlioz
Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade".....Rimsky-Korsakoff

Goldmark's overture, "In Italy," given for the first time here, is among the composer's latest works. But it is much inferior to either the "Sakuntala" or "Sappho" overtures in interest, and except for possessing much of Goldmark's brilliant orchestral coloring, it is without much distinction. The performance was excellent in every way.

The D'Albert piano concerto came next on the programme, with the composer as the soloist. This distinguished virtuoso has not visited Boston for 13 years. Since then he has composed extensively and given many concerts. D'Albert looks but little older since he was here last, and he plays with much the same technical brilliancy and tremendous power as in former days. His concerto, given for the first time, was written in his earlier manner. It is in one movement of several sections, in which the solo instrument is well written for display purposes. One finds in the concerto little in the way of poetic atmosphere or sensuous tone coloring, but a work that is massively constructed, and one that suggests the intellectual musician.

Mr. D'Albert received a great ovation, many recalls and an elaborate wreath as a reward for an admirable performance. But one can judge his present artistic status better in recital, and such an opportunity will probably present itself in the near future.

Published Every ... the Year.
VOL. CXVII., NO. 35.
SUNDAY, FEB. 5, 1905.

THE SYMPHONY'S 14TH CONCERT

Eugen d'Albert Makes His Reappearance with His Own Concert No. 2, a Concerto Made Expressly to Suit the Pianist.

GOLDMARK'S NEW OVERTURE AGREEABLE

Rimsky-Korsakoff's Version of "The Arabian Nights" Constantly Picturesque, Highly Imaginative and Glowing.

The programme of the 14th Symphony concert given last night in Symphony Hall, Mr. Gericke conductor, was as follows:

Overture, "In Italy".....Goldmark
(First time.)
Piano concerto in E major, No. 2.....d'Albert
(First time.)
"Invitation to the Dance".....Weber-Berlioz
Symphonic suite, "Scheherazade".....
Rimsky-Korsakoff

Goldmark's new overture, which was produced at Vienna a year ago last month, is an excellent work for a popular concert. It will not enlarge his fame, for it is far below the overtures to "Sakuntala," "Prometheus," "Sappho," in imagination and in workmanship. Italy is something more than a matter of tambourine, 12-8 tempo and duets in thirds. There is a suggestion of the old Goldmark in the second section of the slow episode, but the suggestion is in the expression of the thought than in the thought itself, which is feeble, as though coming from a tired or empty brain. There are pretty effects here and there, and they are chiefly effects of color or of rhythm, but there is little or no spontaneity in the gayety, and the nobler sensuousness of Italian life is not even hinted at. The overture might be compared to a second-rate stage curtain, with peasants dancing in the foreground, a cavalier and his love conversing sentimentally on a fallen marble column, and Vesuvius in the distance. Let us forget this overture and remember the composer of "Sakuntala," and the prelude, the ballet music and the temple scene from "The Queen of Sheba," in which there is true imagination as well as impressive or gorgeous orchestration.

Mr. d'Albert has not visited Boston since 1892. He first came here with Sarasaste, and he was in his storm and stress period. His admirers then spoke of his right hand as the paw of a lion, but to calmer souls it resembled more closely the blow of a pile driver. He was as a young giant rejoicing in his strength. Force and fire and speed were his distinguishing characteristics, and in the fury of his performance the composer too often suffered with the audience. Even then there was the flame of genius burning brightly amid the smoke and devastation.

This was in 1899. When he came the second time he had more repose and his playing was the more authoritative. He gave a memorable performance with the Symphony orchestra of Beethoven's concerto in E flat, a performance distinguished by nobility and grandeur as well as by brilliance.

Some regret that he did not play such a work last night. Mr. d'Albert, perhaps wearied with the laurels of the virtuoso, became demented with the mania of composing things. Since the production of "The Ruby" in 1893 he has written six operas that have been performed, one that is soon to be performed, and much music of a less ambitious nature. The concerto he played last night was composed in the summer of 1892. It is interesting while it is being played by such a pianist. The hearer is pleased with the themes, he is stirred by the the rhythmic swing, the sonorous orchestral waves, the demoniacal intensity of the pianist. When it is all over, and the pianist has made his bow and the final wreath has been handed up, there is chiefly the remembrance of a task performed with a dashing display of indisputable musicularity. There is also a grateful remembrance of the opening measures for the piano in the slow section of the work, which were played with such quiet and dignified breadth that they impressed at the time and thereafter.

As Mr. d'Albert will play in a chamber concert tomorrow night, and as he will give recitals here, a more detailed examination of his art may be deferred. It is enough to say that in spite of his devotion to composition he may still be ranked among the leading pianists.

It was a pleasure to hear Rimsky-Korsakoff's suite again. The music is constantly picturesque, it is at times highly imaginative. There are some, we are told, who think the wondrous "Thousand Nights and a Night" only foolish tales, even with the improving and educational notes of Sir Richard F. Burton. It is not likely that such persons will find enjoyment in this Russian music. What to them is Scheherazade or Sindbad, or the three shaven and one-eyed Kalandars, or the loadstone mountain crowned with the warrior on his steed of yellow copper?

Others perhaps are disconcerted because the composer, an accomplished contrapuntist, here prefers to make his effects solely by melodic, harmonic, and rhythmic transformations. These movements of the suite are glowing pictures. Each tale vaguely suggested by the programme which serves as preface is bathed and steeped in oriental atmosphere, whether it be that of cradling or angry sea, blazing sun, the voluptuous perfumes of the harem, or the bazaar with the crowd listening to the wild stranger. And Scheherazade with her haunting theme evokes and dismisses the scenes with their actors. Could not Mr. Gericke be persuaded to let us hear the same composer's "Spanish Caprice" which led Tschaikowsky to write to Rimsky-Korsakoff: "You can consider yourself the greatest contemporary master"; or the "Fairy Tale," which lately delighted Paris?

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Goldmark, Overture, "In Italy," op. 49. (First time.)
D'Albert, Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 2. Soloist, Eugen D'Albert.
Weber, "Invitation to the Dance".
Rimsky-Korsakoff, Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade," op. 35.

Goldmark may soon earn the title of The Last of the Melodists, for he is almost the only one among the great composers of the present who writes very tunefully. Yet he contrives to express sufficient passion and emotion in spite of his melodies. There were sharp contrasts in his overture, the slow episode making an excellent foil against the hurly-burly which preceded and followed it. The confusion of festivity was in the work also; not in the graphic style of Wagner's "Meistersinger" prelude, but rather in the frenzied manner of Berlioz's "Carnaval Romaine." This was especially noticeable in the furious ending.

The form of the work was quite clear —also an unusual thing in modern composition. The overture was finely performed, Mr. Gericke's reading being brilliant and effective and the orchestra seconding his intentions perfectly.

Mr. D'Albert, or Mr. MacAlbert, as a British reviewer (determined that he should not renounce his Scottish origin), recently called him, has gained in breadth and nobility of performance since his previous appearances in Boston. As he is a Beethoven specialist, we would have preferred to have heard him in the fourth or fifth concerto, but his own concerto was an interesting work nevertheless. Its 4 movements are continuous, but are sufficiently well-marked to be easily followed. At the beginning the composition has some of the brusquerie of the "Flying Dutchman" overture, against which its slow movement becomes doubly attractive.

This latter was the most poetic and best part of the whole work. The Scherzo (or what corresponded to it) had not very much to say for itself, but the finale roared forth its power in "King Cambyses vein," making a strong climax in which the pianist was able to display his mastery of chord work, double octaves, and all kinds of wrist and fore-arm bravura in most effective fashion.

Without descending to any meretricious effects the climax was worked up in a manner that would appeal to musical and non-musical auditors alike, and the artist-composer reaped his reward in many recalls and a laurel wreath as large as himself. The tribute was deserved by the playing and by the composition, for there was much good development in the work even if it may not take rank with the masterpieces. We shall await Mr. D'Albert's appearance tonight, in chamber music, with much interest.

That delightful dialogue in music, the "Invitation to the Dance," charmed everybody. Berlioz has scored it most daintily and effectively. "Can you honor me with the next waltz, Mademoiselle?" asks the violoncello. "Oh, Monsieur, I am charmed to give it to you," responds the woodwind. Then they glide through the measures of what has been denounced as "hugging set to music." Sorrowfully the violoncello takes leave of his partner when the dance is done.

He has bidden her "Good Bye" and gone to the door, when he comes back for just one more final word. And that absolutely extraneous coda tripped up a number of auditors, as usual, who began to applaud before the young man made his "positively last appearance." We found the waltz a trifle rigid. It would gain by giving it more of a 6-4 effect.

The Russians have captured—a Boston audience, reviewers and all! The engagement began with a bombardment of full orchestra, under cover of which the woodwind advanced on the right. The violins, led by Gen. Hess, now made a brilliant sortie on the left flank of the main body. It was a magnificent charge; at one time Gen. Hess was quite alone, but his cavalry soon rallied around him. A furious volley of kettle-drums followed, while Gen. Gericke brought up the trombone reserves and the remaining brasses. At this the entire audience—including some very big guns—surrendered.

In all seriousness we believe that, in music, the Russians are upon the right path, while France and Germany are struggling in the brambles. Here is a work that presents all the modern development of orchestral tone-coloring, yet is quite intelligible; that gives rich harmonization, yet presents recognizable melodies, even folk-music. In short, a composition that unites the best of the old and the new. We need a modern Bach today, who shall reconcile 2 schools that at present are turning their backs on each other. Russia is the country where the composers are attempting to do this.

The suite had many obligato passages, some of which amounted to good-sized and important solos. Mr. Hess played the violin obligati very finely, and we must also record the charm of the oboe work by M. Longy. The Oriental flavor was splendidly attained, especially in the Scheherazade passages. Every point of modern orchestration was represented, even to muted trumpets. The Oriental festival of the finale was of exceptional brilliancy.

The telling of these stories in musical form has an advantage over the literary original; it is not necessary to expurgate it in its cis-Atlantic presentation. Yet we would not have objected to an occasional "cetera desunt" in the 2d movement. The story of the Kalander Prince was rather long. We fancy that if it were made thus prolix to the Sultan Schahriah, that potentate would have shortened the tale by a few sentences, and the narrator by a few inches.

Louis C. Elson.

[66]

The Boston Journal

FOUNDED 1833

D'ALBERT PLAYS AT THE SYMPHONY

Little Giant of the Keys Interprets His Works With Massive Brilliancy and Effect.

Two novelties were offered at the fourteenth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, each fine and highly interesting in its especial way. The new Goldmark overture, "In Italy," first on the program, was charming for its frank simplicity of melody and treatment. But two main themes are there, one bustling, sunny, suggestive of the free, out-of-door life of the Italian populace; the other gravely sweet and spiced with the romance of warm-breathed night.

Little Bits of Color.

Each is treated with delightfully clear and unhackneyed orchestration, with an occasional bit of the color that made the composer of the "Sakuntala" and "The Queen f Sheba" a man of greatness. If this overture is neither profound nor highly poetic, it is at least gaily beautiful and satisfying. It was played with sparkling virtuosity.

The other work new to Boston was D'Albert's pianoforte concerto in E major, played by the composer himself. Thirteen years have elapsed since this little giant of the keys has been heard here. Time has played tricks with his hair, which has receded from his forehead and vanished from another point, but otherwise he seems no older. And he plays with all the massive brilliancy of old, with even more astonishing shading and with the same swing that carries the sympathetic listener off his feet.

What he now does in the more delicate phases of virtuosity must be found out later, for the concerto of Saturday night gave no test of that sort of thing. It is big with sound, almost pompous in character, yet never blatant, never merely empty phrasing. D'Albert had something to say, and he said it as a giant might exult in his strength.

Audience Deceived.

Of the Berlioz transcription of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" it is only necessary to observe that it is not so interesting nor so beautifully colored as that of Weingartner. It is amusing to find that even a Symphony audience is deceived by the well-known pause just before the final slow measures and that the usual applause broke in at the wrong time.

A highly effective performance of Rimsky-Korsakoff's wonderful tonal story, "Sheherazade," based upon portions of the "Arabian Nights," made a noble conclusion to a very interesting concert.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

(From Mr. Elson's Criticism.)

PROGRAMME.

Goldmark, Overture, "In Italy," op. 49. (First time.)
D'Albert, Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 2. Soloist, Eugen D'Albert.
Weber, "Invitation to the Dance".
Rimsky-Korsakoff, Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade," op. 35.

Goldmark may soon earn the title of The Last of the Melodists, for he is almost the only one among the great composers of the present who writes very tunefully. Yet he contrives to express sufficient passion and emotion in spite of his melodies. There were sharp contrasts in his overture, the slow episode making an excellent foil against the hurly-burly which preceded and followed it. The confusion of festivity was in the work also; not in the graphic style of Wagner's "Meistersinger" prelude, but rather in the frenzied manner of Berlioz's "Carnaval Romaine." This was especially noticeable in the furious ending.

The form of the work was quite clear—also an unusual thing in modern composition. The overture was finely performed, Mr. Gericke's reading being brilliant and effective and the orchestra seconding his intentions perfectly.

Mr. D'Albert, or Mr. MacAlbert, as a British reviewer (determined that he should not renounce his Scottish origin), recently called him, has gained in breadth and nobility of performance since his previous appearances in Boston. As he is a Beethoven specialist we would have preferred to have heard him in the fourth or fifth concerto, but his own concerto was an interesting work nevertheless. Its 4 movements are continuous, but are sufficiently well-marked to be easily followed. At the beginning the composition has some of the brusquerie of the "Flying Dutchman" overture, against which its slow movement becomes doubly attractive.

This latter was the most poetic and best part of the whole work. The Scherzo (or what corresponded to it) had not very much to say for itself, but the finale roared forth its power in "King Cambyses vein," making a strong climax in which the pianist was able to display his mastery of chord work, double octaves, and all kinds of wrist and fore-arm bravura in most effective fashion.

Without descending to any meretricious effects the climax was worked up in a manner that would appeal to musical and non-musical auditors alike, and the artist-composer reaped his reward in many recalls and a laurel wreath as large as himself. The tribute was deserved by the playing and by the composition, for there was much good development in the work even if it may not take rank with the masterpieces. We shall await Mr. D'Albert's appearance tonight, in chamber music, with much interest.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1905

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

At the fourteenth Symphony concert Mr. Eugen d'Albert made his reappearance in Boston after an absence of many years. This was the programme:

Goldmark: Overture, "In Italy," Op. 49. (First time.)
D'Albert: Concerto for Pianoforte, in E major (in one movement), No. 2, Op. 12. (First time.)
Weber: Rondo Brillant, "Invitation to the Dance." (Orchestrated by Hector Berlioz.)
Rimsky-Korsakoff: Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade," Op. 35. (After "The Thousand Nights and a Night.")

Although it looked amazingly promising on paper, the programme of the last Symphony concert proved somewhat dull. There was the new overture by Goldmark, of course, which was bound to stir the interest of all music lovers, for who can forget the splendors of "Sakuntala" and of the "Queen of Sheba"? But now Goldmark is already an old man, and there are few musicians like Verdi who write better at eighty years than at forty. In his last work, furthermore, Goldmark deserted the gorgeous East, which his genius once held in fee, to dally with Italy. Like most Northerners, when he came to be Italian he became merely trivial. In his overture there is much rich coloring, a wealth of beautiful sounds, but the florid imagination that made remarkable the earlier works of Goldmark is distressingly lacking. Perhaps it would be the kindlier part to refrain from producing the compositions of musicians past their prime.

As for the second novelty of the concert, Mr. d'Albert's concerto, it caused bitter regrets that its composer preferred playing it to a Beethoven concerto, which he can present in greater manner than any other living pianist. The piece by Mr. d'Albert is of inexplicable meaning, speaking both musically and dramatically. There are no themes to be discovered in a single hearing, the various episodes bear no apparent relation to one another, there is no striking beauty of orchestration. In the place of these requisites of a musical composition there is but a succession of surges of sound, frantic climaxes not worked up to nor descended from, mere furious outbursts. Had any other pianist than the composer played the solo part, the effect of the work is not to be imagined. With Mr. d'Albert at the pianoforte, however, there was a massiveness about the concerto, a brutal exhibition of passion, that worked impressively upon the audience. Mr. d'Albert displayed great brilliancy. Beyond this statement it is impossible to go in considering his playing until he has come before an audience with something really to play. He was much applauded.

And then there was the "Invitation to the Dance," which was listened to with somewhat more of amusement than of delight. Since dance music, fortunately, is regarded as permissible at a symphony concert, why not play from Delibes' ballets, or even a Strauss waltz? If the Weber piece was chosen for old sake's sake, perhaps the "Battle of Prague," orchestrated by a modern, would give as much pleasure.

By far the best of the concert came at the last, when Mr. Gericke gave a very brilliant and sympathetic performance of Rimsky-Korsakoff's charming suite "Scheherazade." This work wears well. With its brilliancy of orchestration in nowise dimmed its rare imaginative qualities seem more remarkable than ever before. This surely is the best type of programme music, for, although there is no very close following of the titles of the various movements, the work as a whole, beside charming by its spontaneously attractive melodies and by its sparkling scoring, has the power to set one at once a-thinking of the "Arabian Nights," that book which, in one's youth, enchanted by its very mysteriousness, with its dervishes, calendars, veiled ladies, magnificent underground abodes and mendicants, which last it proved disappointing to learn were plain beggars. But beggars in Bagdad must have been different! All the charm of that queer world is contained in the Russian's suite. Unlike Berlioz, in his "Fantastic Symphony," Rimsky-Kosakoff has found, for his Scheherazade theme, which appears in all four movements and, at the close, in most poetic wise, a motive that lingers in the memory. It will be a disappointment if we do not soon hear this delightful composition again.

Miss Marie Nichols will be the soloist this week. The programme is as follows: Mozart, Overture, to "Marriage of Figaro;" Bruch, Serenade for violin and orchestra (first time); Richard Strauss, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks"; César Franck, Symphony in D minor.

R. R. G.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Symphony Concert

February 21st.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has offered to play any one of the following symphonies at its third and last concert in Infantry Hall, on February 21:

Dvorak, Symphony in E-minor, "From the New World."
Beethoven, Fifth Symphony, in C-minor.
Tschaikowsky, "Pathetique" symphony.
Mozart, Symphony in C-major, No. 34.
Haydn, Symphony No. 1.
Volkmann, Symphony in D-minor, No. 1.

The management desires to learn which of the above-named Symphonies is the choice of the public, and for that purpose every person interested is requested to communicate his preference on or before Wednesday, Feb. 8, to the Chairman of the Symphony Committee.

The Symphony receiving the largest vote will be played at the concert.

Address CHAIRMAN SYMPHONY COMMITTEE, P. O. Box 235, Providence.

Prov. Journal
Sunday, Feby 5/05

THE PROVI

sicians

A SKETCH OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

A Great Orchestra Which Providence Ought to Appreciate. Grand Opera in English.

AN article in the February number of the Century magazine gives some interesting information in regard to the Boston Sympony Orchestra, its conductors and its founder. The author is Mr. Richard Aldrich, musical editor of the New York Times, a former resident of this city, and at one time a member of the Journal's staff. While a good deal of the information contained in Mr. Aldrich's essay is not exactly new, his article is a pleasant tribute to the value of the work accomplished by the orchestra. Nor does he forget to point out the prime factor in its growth as well as its establishment—the public spirit and unstinted liberality of Mr. Henry L. Higginson. The relation of the Boston banker to the orchestra is generally understood, at least here in New England. What is not so well known, however, is the extent of his investment, the amount it has cost him in cold cash. An idea has obtained currency that the orchestra is self-supporting nowadays.

While this is perhaps a natural inference from the artistic growth of the organization and the large audiences that attend the concerts in almost every city where it appears, it is yet an erroneous one. It is said "on the highest authority"—which can only mean that the statement is Mr. Higginson's own—that in but one season of its existence has the orchestra ever paid expenses, though in another it lacked only $2000 of doing so; that the deficit in a single year has run as high as $52,600; and that only last season, after several more prosperous ones, the deficit mounted up again to $40,000. Another piece of information, also given "on the highest authority," is that Mr. Higginson has made provision for the continuation of the orchestra on the same lines after his death. It is a heavy debt the community owes to this one man, not only for the prodigal expenditure of money, but for the vast amount of pleasure afforded, the establishment of high ideals and the uplift of musical culture.

The orchestra, as at first organized, numbered 70 performers. There were 12 first and 11 second violins, eight violas, nine 'cellos, nine double basses and the usual proportion of players upon wood-wind and brass instruments. This personnel has been considerably increased in order to deal adequately with the compositions of modern writers. The full orchestra now includes 90 players, divided into 16 first and 14 second violins, 10 violas, 10 'cellos, eight double basses, four flutes, three obces, one English horn, three clarinets, one bass clarinet, three bassoons, one contra-bassoon, four horns, four trumpets, three trombones and one player each of the harp, tuba, tympani, bass drum, cymbals, triangle and tambour.

It was in February, 1881, that Mr. Higginson made public his intention of establishing a new orchestra in a new way. After several months of organizing and rehearsing the first concert was given on Oct. 22, 1881. The purpose was at first to minister specially to listeners with limited means; the best tickets were only 50 cents and those for the public rehearsals just half that figure. But the concerts in Boston speedily became not only popular, but fashionable, until at the present time large premiums are paid for the choice of concert seats, which are sold by auction. After the first season concerts were given outside of Boston in near-by cities like Cambridge and Providence, and in 1887 tours to more distant points were undertaken. These have added materially, of course, to the expense of running the orchestra, but have widened and increased its reputation until it is now regarded as without a peer in this country and fully the equal of any foreign organization.

The first conducter was Georg Henschel, a versatile and accomplished musician, but without any previous experience in leading an orchestra. For that matter, Mr. Higginson was equally without experience in selecting conductors. Henschel was a well-known singer, something of a composer in the lighter forms, a man of unquestionable talent and intelligence. He had married an American wife and was at that time residing temporarily in Boston. While his temperament and high standard of taste enabled him to carry on the pioneering work of the orchestra with some degree of success, he was far from being an ideal conductor, and after three years of service was succeeded by Wilhelm Gericke, Richter's colleague at the Imperial Opera in Vienna.

Mr. Gericke proved to be just the right man for the place. He had experience, authority and capacity for organization. To quote Mr. Aldrich: "The greatest distinctions of the Boston orchestra, its perfection of ensemble, its brilliancy, its plasticity, its beauty of tone, are his work." He achieved them not only through drill and the instillation of an ardent feeling of esprit de corps, but also, and in large measure, through the improvement of the personnel. He weeded out the incompetents and the time-worn veterans, filling their places with such men as Kneisel, Loefflur, Svecenski, the Adamowski brothers, Giese, Rotto, Schnecker, Pourtan, Longy and a score of others who have helped make the Boston Symphony Orchestra admired as "a band of virtuosi."

Mr. Gericke's successor was Arthur Nikisch, whom Mr. Aldrich characterizes justly as "one of the most original, daring and intensely subjective of the modern school of conductors—a man who, with certain exaggerations and affectations, is illuminated by the living flame of genius." He stayed but three years and was followed by Emil Paur, whose labors are summed up in the Century article in the one curt sentence that he "exercised a rude but vigorous sway for five years." This is scant praise and leaves room for an inference that is unjust.

Paur's conducting was well worthy of praise. It was "vigorous" because he aimed at broad effects rather than the subtleties of shading dear to Nikisch or the technical precision that forms Gericke's ideal. But rude? Who that ever heard him direct the accompaniment for a solo performer will agree with this view? At the close of Mr. Paur's term of service in 1898 the post of conductor was again offered to Mr. Gericke, who has retained it up to the present time.

Mr. Aldrich pays a deserved compliment to Franz Kneisel, whose 18 years of service as concert-master was an important factor in the upbuilding of the orchestra. The present occupant of that responsible post, Mr. Willy-Hess, seems to be a worthy successor, a player of style, authority and technical accomplishment. The Century article gives many interesting details of the orchestra's history, contracts with and salaries paid the players, relations of the organization to the Musical Union, etc., which we cannot find room to quote.

Everyone will be disposed to agree with the estimate placed on Mr. Higginson's achievement, in which it is said that: "He has raised the standard of orchestral playing in this country immeasurably, and has created a taste and a demand for what was unknown before he began his work. He has caused American music to be spoken of with respect and admiration by every European musician. And all the lovers of music in his own country ought to rise up and call him blessed."

Since the organization of the orchestra it has played in nearly 2300 concerts, of which 97 have been given in this city. The 98th, and the last for the present season, takes place on Tuesday evening, Feb. 21. The history of our symphony seasons is not an agreeable one to contemplate. For many years the orchestra came here and played to small audiences. Finally, two years ago, the decision was made to drop Providence in favor of places where the appreciation was more marked. As the orchestra is not run as a money-making affair, the obvious thing to do was to play in places where the demand for its services was greatest. People are turned away from the concerts in many cities because the halls will not hold all who wish to hear this superb organization.

Some civic pride was awakened by this blotting of Providence from the musical map, and a strenuous effort was put forth. Last year the orchestra returned here, giving two concerts under a guarantee. These were attended by full houses. This year we have fallen back into the old rut; the attendance is again small, and it looks as if the guarantors would have to go into their pockets. Now, do we want orchestral concerts here, or do we not? That question is likely to be answered by the result of this season's concerts. The management of the orchestra will not consent to play to empty benches for any guarantee, nor will public-spirited citizens care to continue the vain effort to force good music upon an unwilling and unmusical community. Let us find our proper place and take it, and let the attendance at the next symphony concert settle what it is to be.

* * *

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, FEB 12, 1905.

FIFTEENTH SYMPHONY PROGRAM.

Miss Marie Nichols, a young woman who has achieved an enviable reputation as a violinist, was the soloist at last week's Symphony concerts, playing the Bruch A minor serenade, for violin and orchestra, the first performance here. The complicated work is in four movements, the third and fourth parts being the more pleasing half of the group, the former because of the skill with which the solo score is written and the latter for the piquant character of the dance themes. Some portions of the orchestration in the first two movements appear thin and disjointed, as if the composer had merely sketched and not finished his work and although the solo instrument is admirably treated there is lacking the homogeneity displayed in the last two movements. Miss Nichols played with a skill and confidence which was very pleasing, and her interpretation as a whole merits warm praise.

She is very graceful in bowing, her fingering, single and in chords, is true and as deft as the phrases require, all her legato is smooth and flowing, and save the absence of masculine vigor in fortissimo work she was highly satisfactory and richly deserved the applause which greeted her efforts. The florid passages in the second movement were very skilfully executed. The almost continuous legato of the third part was notably sweet and appealing and the strongly accented dance themes of the finale, if they had been given with a trifle more abandon, would have been equal in merit with the two before mentioned. Following so quickly those giants of the violin, Kreisler and Ysaye, Miss Nichols' success was the more marked and vastly to her credit.

Concert Master Hess, who was familiar with the serenade, having played it at a concert in Cologne three years ago conducted in place of Mr Gericke. The orchestra acquitted itself well, providing efficient support for the soloist. Mr Gericke led the other numbers, which were the overture to Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," Richard Strauss' tone-poem, "Don Juan," and Cesar Franck's D minor symphony.

The Strauss selection was given with the requisite effects, the contrasts of the elaborate orchestration being observed with due care, but the Franck symphony is worthy of the greater commendation, this, to many minds, masterwork showing the orchestra at its best. The familiar Mozart overture calls for no special comment.

The orchestra will be away this week. Next week's program will have for soloist Mr Ernest Schelling, who will play the Liszt-Busoni "Spanish Rhapsody." The other numbers will be Sinding's suite in F major, first time here, and Brahms' C minor symphony.

---

[67]

BOSTON EVENING RECORD

309-311 Washington St.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

(From Mr. Elson's Criticism.)

PROGRAMME.

Mozart—Overture to "Marriage of Figaro."
Bruch—Serenade for Violin and Orchestra. (First time.)—Miss Marie Nichols.
Richard Strauss—"Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks."
Caesar Franck—Symphony in D minor.

There was a great deal of novelty in the concert of Saturday, and it was in some respects the most interesting concert of the season. It began, however, in the conservative, classical vein, with Mozart's concise little sonata-allegro, the "Marriage of Figaro" overture, which was given with m[illegible]

The g[illegible] the triumph of Mr. Ger[illegible] of the orchestra, was in the perform[illegible] the best number. Never have we heard a work by Cesar Franck so successfully given as the symphony was at this concert.

Cesar Franck is sometimes called "the French S[illegible]" and so he is, in the sense that he [illegible] to the ideals of the young Gallic composers and opened up greater freedom of expression for them. But in such a work as this symphony we recognize [illegible] Brahms, a man who combined [illegible] with motion, with a polished [illegible] form, just as the German master did.

The work is [illegible] volume. At the [illegible] comes a figure [illegible], which is nothing more nor less [illegible] motif of Wagner's trilogy [illegible] expanded into a [illegible] achieve this remarkable [illegible] harmonization of the theme, [illegible] develops it in a manner that is masterly [illegible] nobleness. Its constant [illegible] by contrapuntal [illegible] by extraordinary [illegible] rhythmic variation, [illegible] known to the composer himself [illegible] not only [illegible] movement but into the [illegible] there is developed, with [illegible] a longer figure of 12 notes, [illegible] with bold skips of [illegible]

The [illegible] is perhaps less [illegible] Beethoven. In his [illegible] the plan of [illegible] becoming more [illegible] perhaps carrying this [illegible] the brain of his C[illegible] was well to have in the [illegible] a grand epitome of the [illegible] does Franck make [illegible] elimination and [illegible] of all the important [illegible] the symphony.

[illegible] is indeed a big [illegible] studied at [illegible] before the giants [illegible] be compared; but once [illegible] well appreciated and loved [illegible] Brahms or Bach who have penetrated [illegible] This is the language [illegible] the young French are striving for [illegible] They give ugliness [illegible] where their master achieves [illegible]

The Boston Journal

MARIE NICHOLS AND WILLY HESS

Violinist and Conductor Please the Audience at the Fifteenth Symphony Concert.

[illegible] Concert was [illegible] presence of [illegible] violinist who has [illegible] here. She is a young woman of ability as well as a player of [illegible] technique, and she [illegible] a far greater effort [illegible] some better work [illegible] in A minor, [illegible] for the first time. Mr. W[illegible] conducted for Miss [illegible] did it with [illegible] This innovation is said to be [illegible] of a plan, outlined some time ago, to relieve Mr. Gericke from a few of the less important works.

The purely orchestral part of the concert was of more than ordinary variety and beauty. Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" overture, that remarkable exposition of pure musical gaiety, was played with consummate finish. Symphony Hall is still supreme in this sort of thing, no matter what may be said of the quality of our storm and stress.

Did anyone ever think Richard Strauss' "Don Juan" tone poem abtruse, revolutionary and hard to comprehend? History says so, and memory indorses it. But now how clear, how fascinating, how thoroughly melodious the work appears. One more D'Indy symphony, and Strauss will seem to be a Mendelssohn. The vibrant, splendid work had a worthy performance, full of unwonted fire and emotion.

Another massive and extraordinary composition, but in totally different fashion, is the D minor symphony of Cesar Franck. Lofty in thought, artistic in expression, full to overflowing with the spontaneity of a rich musical nature, it holds spellbound all those who find in music something deeper than more pleasant sound. And yet how lovely, how free from austerity it all is. If that last eloquent movement is to be taken as praise to man's maker it is worthy the subject, for no purer paen of exultation has ever been told in music. The playing matched the work, for it was superb.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1905

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

At the fifteenth Symphony concert Miss Marie Nichols made her first appearance as soloist, the programme being as follows:

Mozart: Overture to the opera "The Marriage of Figaro."
Bruch: Serenade in A minor for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 75. (First time.)
Richard Strauss: Tone Poem, "Don Juan," Op. 20 (after N. Lenau).
César Franck: Symphony in D minor.

This concert, the fifteenth, was remarkable for a wealth of beautiful music offered, the pity of it being that there was somewhat too much of it. A work of the calibre of César Franck's symphony can be properly listened to and appreciated only when the musical mind is fresh. On Saturday the symphony came so late in the evening that many persons withdrew before the last moment, which surely would not have happened had the great work been presented earlier in the evening. When this composition is to be played all else must give way before it, that it may be afforded the worthiest conditions of performance possible to be attained. For its like has not been written in many years. With each hearing the symphony sounds more beautiful than before, a mighty product of a great genius. Its performance on Saturday was one of wonderful sympathy and appreciation. Dwelling lovingly on each indvidual phrase, that the audience might enjoy its exquisite beauty of form and color, Mr. Gericke at the some time gave vent to the deep human emotion of the music, never allowing the minuteness of detail to smother the broad, fresh sweep of the work as a whole. The symphony, indeed, can only be compared to a play of Shakspeare, in its combination of mighty strength of human feeling and in its amazing fancy of imagery. In thus appreciating so keenly the beauty of the parts and the grandeur of the whole, Mr. Gericke gave the composition a reading such as it has never before enjoyed in Boston. To listen to such music so played is an experience that fully repays one for many vain visits to concert halls.

But, incidentally, why should a music-lover expect to hear a masterpiece grandly performed every time he runs to a concert? In the countless picture exhibitions that are held in Boston every season, how many really remarkable paintings are there brought to view in the course of a year? There is much admirable and interesting work, of course, but how many pictures are there that will be talked about and highly regarded in ten years' time? Of the grist of new novels that reach a reviewer's desk during the year, how many of them can be considered seriously as a genuinely artistic work of fiction? Read the reviews by competent literary critics and discover. And now, to turn to music, why should the public expect the conditions to be more favorable than in the other arts? Is it a simpler affair to dash off a masterly symphonic poem than to write a novel or paint a landscape? Or is it easier to play Beethoven's E-flat concerto as Mr. d'Albert has proved it can be played, if proof were necessary, than to portray the character of Juliet on the stage? Precisely at this moment there are few novelists turning out works that make one forget "Diana of the Crossways." Painters are not common who are likely to make Dégas uneasy as to his laurels. As to the stage, there is not much offered today that causes thrills of delight in the hearts of experienced playgoers. But in music there would seem to be a different standard. Let the music managers set before the public the poorer works of Beethoven, sonatas, quartets, symphonies alike, let them be well or ill performed, the public and the press must display frantic enthusiasm, or the cry of pessimism is raised. Young composers present their works of indifferent value, and if they are not extolled the question is at once raised, "Why? You can't expect Beethoven!" A young singer with a pleasant voice twitters through an aria that Mme. Sembrich would devote two years to learning. But the singer must not be condemned, for she is young.

It is, in very truth, hard to be enthusiastic over the average programme and performance that is offered to concert-goers. But let one hear a production of César Franck's D-minor symphony such as that of last Saturday, and enthusiasm will run riot.

The playing of Strauss's "Don Juan" was no less beautiful, in its more robust way. The tone poem wears well, perhaps better than will some of the later creations, when Strauss had become more "individual." Be this as it may, in "Don Juan" we have pages of passionate music glowing at a white heat, succeeded by measures that painfully express the end of everything, the taste of ashes in the mouth. Although the character of Lenau's Don Juan is portrayed as plastically as it is possible for music to portray character, this poem would work a potent spell were it without a name. It is possible that here and in "Tod und Verklärung" Richard Strauss is at his best and greatest. The performance was invigoratingly dramatic and intense.

In contrast with this magnificent poem the memory of Bruch's new serenade is but shadowy. While Miss Nichols is to be commended for trying to bring forward something new, she cannot be felicitated on the success of her attempt. The serenade is very dull music, ill-sounding in the two quick movements, sentimental and tiresome in the introduction and the nocturne. The greater Miss Nichols's ability, therefore, since, with such poor material, she could make her way with the audience. Miss Nichols is indeed a violinist of much charm. She plays with a pure and sweet, if rather small tone, with delightful phrasing, with a very sweet sentiment, and, in technical passages, with considerable brilliancy. In listening to Miss Nichols one has constantly the feeling that she could play more emotionally if she chose. Evidently of a nature not cold, Miss Nichols has only to overcome a slight degree of self-consciousness to become an artist of high rank. Already, in both technique and musicianliness, she stands well above the other young violinists we have heard here in recent years.

This week there will be no concert. On Saturday, the 25th, this will be the programme, Mr. Ernest Schelling, soloist: Sinding, Suite in F major (first time; Liszt-Busoni, Spanish Rhapsody; Brahms, Symphony No. 1, in C minor.

SUNDAY HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVII., NO. 43.

SUNDAY, FEB. 12, 1905.

SUPERB PLAYING OF SYMPHONY

For Its 15th Concert Famous Orchestra Performs Cesar Franck's Work in D Minor Impressively, with Exquisite Detail.

FRANCK CONTRASTED WITH HIS DISCIPLES

Miss Marie Nichols Plays the Violin Well in Bruch's Dull Serenade on Her First Appearance with the Orchestra.

The programme of the 15th Symphony concert given in Symphony Hall last night, Mr. Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro"..Mozart
Serenade in A minor, for violin and orchestra
Bruch
(First time.)
"Don Juan," tone poem (after Lenau)....
R.Strauss
Symphony in D minor.....C. Franck

They that believe in a symphony concert without the intrusion of a solo singer, violinist, pianist, 'cellist, might argue from the programme of last night. The symphony by Cesar Franck, or any symphony of like nobility and grandeur, should logically have come first, when the attention of the audience was unjaded, before the distraction of an individual performance and the gossip of the intermission. But the performance of this symphony would have killed the effect of any soloist coming after. Given a solo performer, and the programme maker's task is doubly difficult; he is often obliged to arrange the programme with reference to the calibre of the soloist and the character of his selection. Yet the programme might thus have been arranged: Franck's symphony, intermission, Bruch's serenade, Strauss' "Don Juan," and this programme would have been long enough.

The feature of the concert was the eminently satisfactory and impressive performance of the symphony. Mr Gericke's reading was sympathetic and masterful. The long lines of Franck's musical thought were not lost sight of in the care for the exquisite details; the polyphonic structure was clearly indicated, but not in the mere spirit of the professional analyist; the tonal gradations were observed with seeming spontaneity; the instrumental song was flowing and appealing; the orchestral forces were prepared and massed skillfully for irresistible effect. Never before has this symphony of Cesar Franck seemed so supremely beautiful in its tenderness, its pathetic entreaty, its glorious triumphant chant.

Listening to the performance one could not help reflecting on the inferiority of Franck's disciples, ingenious as some of them are. Compare this symphony, for instance, with that of d'Indy, played not long ago. The latter is a composition not to be mentioned without a tribute of respect to the workmanship displayed in it, but how labored are the effects, and what distressing anxiety there is in the continual attempt to avoid that which might be considered simple or conventional! These disciples speak, in a way, the language of Franck, but in a small, dry way. Their music lacks the intense humanity, the sweeping vision, the elemental force, the serene nobility of their master's. They are not to be blamed because they do not have his genius. They may justly incur the reproach, however, of an affected musical speech based on his natural and manly form of expression. The ineffable and sweet simplicity, the unpretentious, quiet courage, the sublime devoutness of Franck the man found expression in his music, and without his own consciousness. Much as we admire the earlier works of his disciple, d'Indy, heartily as we are in accord with his pure devotion to art and to artistic ideals, we find in his latest works a peculiar self-consciousness that may be fatal to their long life.

Mr. Gericke and the orchestra are also to be congratulated on the spirited and dramatic performance of "Don Juan," a work which, pleasing and thrilling on first hearing, has not lost in sensual pomp and pride through repetition. If there be such a thing as character portrayal in music without the aid of dramatic action or minute explanatory programme, Strauss has succeeded admirably in painting the hero of Lenau's poem.

Bruch's "Serenade" was composed in 1899, and it was first performed in public by Joseph Debroux at Berlin Nov. 30, 1901, when the composer conducted. Mr. Willy Hess played it at Cologne the next year. The performance last night was the first in Boston, and Miss Nichols made her first appearance with the Symphony orchestra. There was a rumor that this work was composed originally with the thought of Sarasate; that the "Serenade" was to have been dedicated to him; that he was not much pleased with the music and therefore was not the violinist who produced it; but Bruch in a letter which we have seen denies the truth of this report and states that he had already paid his tribute to the great Spanish violinist by his dedication to him of the second concerto and the "Scottish Fantasia."

The "Serenade" is in four movements. The first, an andante con moto, is sauvely and mildly interesting in spots. The second movement, an allegro moderato alla marcia, is dry and dull. The following nocturne is pretty for a time, but its prettiness is without distinction, and the end is welcome. The finale, based on themes of Spanish character, is inconspicuous. The pleasantest feature is the manner in which the chief theme and mood of the first movement are introduced near the close.

It is much to be regretted that Miss Nichols chose such a drab and jejune composition for her first appearance with the orchestra. She is a young violinist of much more than ordinary talent and taste. Interesting in music that is uninteresting to the verge of discouragement, she succeeded in holding the attention of the audience and in winning its hearty applause by the modest display of her technical and musical accomplishments. With more [illegible]

CONCERT PIECES BY BALLOT.

Music Lovers of Providence Sent in Votes as to What Symphony Orchestra Should Play.

[Special Dispatch to the Sunday Herald.]

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Feb. 11, 1905. The last of the series of Boston Symphony orchestra concerts, which is to be given here on Feb. 21, has aroused much enthusiasm among the music lovers and patrons. The 45 business and professional gentlemen who are guarantors of the series solicited ballots from the public for any one of a half-dozen compositions, for this concert.

Three-fifths of all the ballots sent in were in favor of Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique" symphony, and it will be given, with Bruch's first concerto in G minor, largo by Handel and the "Tannhaeuser" overture.

The Boston Post

The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

SUNDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 12, 1905

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Miss Marie Nichols, the Violinist, Makes First Appearance

Miss Marie Nichols, violinist, was the soloist at the Symphony concert last evening, and the programme was as follows:

Overture, "Marriage of Figaro".....Mozart
Serenade, for violin and orchestra.....Bruch
Tone poem, "Don Juan".....Strauss
Symphony in D minor.....Franck

The overture to Mozart's familiar opera, "The Marriage of Figaro," made an enjoyable first number, being finely played.

Richard Strauss' "Don Juan," the earliest of his series of orchestral tone poems that made him famous, becomes more intelligible with further acquaintance, and one enjoys the work now, when formerly much in it appeared vague and abnormal. Perhaps his later works will also become interesting as time goes on.

The "Don Juan" was given a highly finished interpretation, and was well received.

Cesar Franck's symphony, heard a few years ago for the first time, is another work that grows upon the listener as the many pages of surpassing strength become more familiar.

Miss Nichols appeared at these concerts for the first time and made an exceptionally good impression. She played the Bruch Serenade for the first time in the United States, a work that is not particularly striking, judged by a first hearing. The solo part is subjective, and there are but few chances for brilliant displays of virtuosity, although it demands artistic qualities of a high order from the performer which the average audience would not fully appreciate.

Miss Nichols interpreted the work with much intelligence and refinement, with superb technic and beautiful tone, that made her performance one of great pleasure. She was much applauded and recalled.

Mr. Hess conducted the performance of the concerto admirably, and his first appearance at these concerts in this capacity was a decided success in every way.

There will be no rehearsal or concert this coming week.

MISS NICHOLS WILL PLAY

Boston Violinist Will Be Heard To-night with Symphony Orchestra.

The fourth concert in the Monday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music, the 128th in Philadelphia and the 2249th in the history of the organization, is given to-night. This concert will introduce to Philadelphia as the soloist, Miss Marie Nichols, a Boston violinist, who will play for the first time in Philadelphia a Serenade for Violin and Orchestra, by Max Bruch.

MISS MARIE NICHOLS

This serenade had its first performance in this country on Saturday evening in Boston, and the performance in this city will be its second in America. It may be of interest to note that the first performance in the history of this concerto was by Joseph Debroux in Berlin in 1901; its second performance in the same city by Joachim the same year; by Mr. Willy Hess in Cologne a year later; by Miss Nichols herself in Berlin in 1903 with the Philharmonic Orchestra, and in London with the Queens Hall Orchestra, under Conductor Wood, the same year.

Miss Nichols is a pupil of Mr. Emil Mollenhauer, for six years the conductor of the Handel and Haydn Society, of Boston, and a violinist of marked ability. She is an extremely attractive young lady, whose pleasing personality, combined with her rare talent, makes her one of the most interesting soloists who have yet appeared with the orchestra.

The program follows: Mozart, Overture, "Marriage of Figaro;" Bruch, Serenade for Violin and Orchestra; Richard Strauss, Thirteenth Tone Poem, "Don Juan;" Cesar Franck, Symphony in D Minor.

[68]

Philadelphia Inquirer
FEBRUARY 14, 1905

MUSIC AT THE ACADEMY

An Enjoyable Concert Given Last Evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fourth concert in its first series for the coming season at the Academy of Music last evening when the program comprised the overture to Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," Richard Strauss' symphonic poem of "Don Juan," and the D-minor symphony of Caesar Franck. It is not a great while since the latter composition was given here before, as Mr. Scheel included it in one of his recent programs, but it is a work of sufficient interest and value to bear a second hearing, and, indeed, owing to the complexity of its structure and the elusive character of its sentiment, it cannot be properly appreciated at a first performance, and it gains distinctly by repetition. It is very skillfully scored, and it contains much that is beautiful and impressive. The allegretto is lovely in its delicacy and grace, and in the poetic feeling by which it is inspired, while the closing allegro is extremely vigorous and effective.

For some unimaginable reason the composer has chosen to depart from the prevailing practice and to place his slow movement first, and it cannot be said of this experiment that it is justified by its success. There are some fine things in the Lento, but it lacks proportion, and there is no climax to vindicate the extent of its development. The same idea is repeated again and again without any striking variation in its exhibition until the listener is made to feel that the movement is altogether too long. It does last fifteen minutes, which is about one-third too much. The symphony is full of syncopations, and is exceptionally difficult, but the impression conveyed by its lucid, eloquent, brilliant and sympathetic performance was one of simplicity and ease. In the sparkling measures of the "Figaro" overtime and the grandiose sonorities of the "Don Juan" tone poem Mr. Gericke's interpretations were alike illuminative and convincing, and the enjoyment which the concert afforded was very keen.

Miss Marie Nicholls was the assisting artist. Miss Nicholls played a serenade by Bruch, with an accurate and facile execution and a sympathetic intelligence. Her tone is rather small, but it is sweet and true, and her stopping is always in tune. The number in which she was heard is not a composition of any great value or importance, but it is pleasingly melodious, and it seemed to make a good impression. The orchestra will return to the Academy to-morrow evening, and play Goldmark's "In Italy" overture, the Berlioz-Weber "Invitation to the Dance" and Rimsky-Korsakoff's suite "Scheherazade." Eugene d'Albert, the pianist, will be the soloist.

The Press
FEBRUARY 14, 1905

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Cesar Franck's Symphony Read. Miss Nichols, the Soloist.

Mozart.....“Marriage of Figaro”
Bruch...Serenade for Violin and Orchestra. First time.
Richard Strauss..“Don Juan,” a tone poem (After Nicholaus Lenau), Op. 20.
Cesar Franck.....Symphony in D minor
Soloist, Miss Marie Nichols.

At least one can say for Cesar Franck that he does not require any program and leaves you to work out your own salvation in his symphony in D minor. Heard for the second time within a fortnight at the Academy of Music last evening, this time through the intermediary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Mr. Gericke, the symphony presents itself as a very poetic production of the modern French school, a little overdrawn and thin at times and very badly proportioned in that the first movement is nearly as long as the other two, and is entirely too diffuse, too prolix.

However, in these days of novelties one has to be thankful for a few crumbs of comfort and it is gratifying to note that Franck in this symphony was reasonable in his use of the orchestra, and has his lucid movements. There is no seeming effort to fool and fiddle-paddle with the various choirs, and while tedious in the working out of the first movement the second and last present rich musicianly matter not perhaps the full blood of the Strauss Don Juan tone poem, but a Gallic suggestion of it which is creditable in its restraint. The Don Juan, by the way, the first performed, yet actually the second work of Strauss in this style, was written when the precocious Munich composer was but 25, in the first flush of ability. How easily the descent to Hades is is shown in the work of his maturity the Domestic Symphony, rendered last Saturday evening. The "Don Juan" is legitimate program music, the Domestic Symphony is a wilful perversion of art.

Bruch's serenade for orchestra, a very conventional and routine sort of work, was the medium chosen for the debut of Miss Marie Nichols, a violinist who has won her spurs here and abroad, and gave evidence last night of decided artistic endowments. We are, however, getting very near the surfeited point in the matter of soloists, and Miss Nichols' art was hardly calculated to stir jaded ears, however charming a message she may have for those in the spirit. The Mozart overture completed a program in nowise remarkable, but interpreted in a thoroughly virtuoso manner. On Wednesday evening the orchestra will be heard in the following program: Goldmark, Overture, "In Italy," Op. 49 (first time); d'Albert, Pianoforte Concerto in E major (in one movement), No. 2, Op. 12 (first time); Weber, "Invitation to the Dance," Rondo Brillant (orchestrated by Hector Berlioz); Rimsky-Korsakoff, Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade" (after "The Thousand Nights and a Night"), Op. 35; soloist, Mr. Eugen d'Albert.

THE EVENING TELEGRAPH
FEBRUARY 14, 1905.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Franck's Symphony Finely Played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy.

The important feature of the concert given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the repetition of the Caesar Franck D minor symphony, played not long ago by the Philadelphia Orchestra. It was decidedly worth while to hear this work again and with a different conception and Mr. Gericke's spirited and altogether adequate rendition simply served to confirm the first impression, that this is a masterpiece of music, approached by none of the modern composers and surpassed by few, if any, of the classics. Mr. Gericke, in leading the work, seemed to pay more attention to the details than Mr. Scheel did. This gave a beter opportunity to study the themese and their development, and to see with what consummate musicianship Franck conceived and worked out the symphony as a whole, evidently having a view to the final complete effect rather than to any of the separate parts.

The first movement has been criticized as being too long to warrant the attention given it by the composer. It is difficult to agree with this objection when one considers how vitally important to the complete symphony are the themes and their working-out as presented in this movement. Without the elaborate development of this part, the succeeding movements would lose half their value, for the same themes and the same ideas are constantly recurring with all of the modifications at the command of the master musician.

The effect of the whole symphony is one of most unusually definite intentions, proceeding consistently through its various parts and displaying at all times a supreme genius that is equal to all of the severe tasks it sets itself. Thematically the work is wonderfully rich. From beginning to end it abounds in haunting and compelling phrases that, not only in themselves, but in their combination and development remain clearly in the memory to recall the delights of hearing the work. A word should be said for the playing of the first violin choir. It was a final proof of what a really great concermeister can accomplish, and Mr. Willy Hess must be placed in this class. His first season of work with the Boston Orchestra has accomplished wonders and shows conclusively the importance of the position of leader of the first violins.

Miss Nichols, the violiniste, the soloist, did not prove a success. She has talent enough, in a way, and plays with a certain understanding, but, coming between Fritz Kreisler and Ysaye, she was most unfortunately dwarfed and appeared to anything but advantage.

The Evening Bulletin
FEBRUARY 14, 1905.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

An Interesting Program, With Marie Nichols as Soloist.

Three essentially modern composers, each of whom in his particular way has done much to advance music in the last score of years, practically monopolized the attention of the Boston Orchestra last night in the Academy of Music. The one classical morsel of the evening was the "Figaro" overture, which was played as an opening number. The symphony was the late Caesar Franck's beautiful D minor; the concerto was by Bruch and Strauss's tone poem, "Don Juan," served to round out a program rich in imposing orchestral effects.

The novelty of the evening was Bruch's concerto—or, "Serenade," as he has chosen to label it. Mr. Gericke used this interesting work as a medium for introducing Miss Marie Nichols, who played admirably. The young artiste, though necessarily suffering from comparison with Ysaye and Kreisler, who have recently been heard here, proved herself possessed of real powers of interpretation and facile talent. Her tone is velvety and alluring, and in the romantic passages which are scattered with prodigal hand through the composition, she showed deep poetic insight. It was in the second movement—a march with rapid tempo and heavy rhythms—where gymnastic fingering is required, that her talent showed to least advantage.

The symphony and Strauss poem were splendidly played. The orchestra has seldom been heard to better advantage than in the "Don Juan," where the tremendous climaxes were made overpowering and the gentler passages were given seductive grace. Mr. Gericke's reading of the work made all obscurities disappear.

The Evening Bulletin
FEBRUARY 16, 1905.

The Boston Symphony

The fourth concert of the Wednesday series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Academy of Music last evening, had Eugen d'Albert, the pianist, as soloist, and the symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," by Rimsky-Korsakov, as the orchestral feature. D'Albert gave a concerto of his own composition, his No. 2, which, aside from affording the pianist an opportunity to display his power and command of the instrument, did not prove of much interest. It is singularly devoid of romance or poetic beauty, being nearly all fortissimo and crescendo, and gave d'Albert no chance to show the rare qualities which have distinguished him as a pianist. As a mere exhibition of technique and dynamic power it was all very well, but more than that was expected of a pianist who has given so much real delight in the past. The symphonic suite is a sort of a musical "Arabian Nights" entertainment. It supposedly suggests several tales from the marvels told by the Sultana Ssheherezade to Schahriar to divert his mind from his determinatfon to kill her, as he had his other wives. As descriptive music, full of suggestive power, it is rather effective, though it must be classed as "program music," in the listener is to have any distinct idea as to what it is about. It has a warm, Oriental coloring, of much melodic beauty, and was so admirably played last night that it was listened to with marked appreciation. Goldmark's alluring, if somewhat fanciful, overture, "In Italy," and the Berlioz arrangement of Weber's charming "Invitation to the Dance," completed the program.

THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD
FEBRUARY 14, 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Marie Nichols Proves a Fine Violinist.

It is not unlikely that the "Marriage of Figaro" overture was incorporated in yesterday evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the Academy of Music, to absolve the classical and Bach-loving Mr. Gericke from the charge of presenting a program wholly monopolized by modern composers. Three of the numbers are representative compositions of a trio of musicians each of whom, in his own individual way, has within the past quarter century appreciably advanced the development of music. The symphony was the beautiful D minor of the late Cesar Franck; the concerto was by Max Bruch; while the "Don Juan" tone poem of Richard Strauss added radicalism and instrumental spice to the evening.

The Bruch concerto, or "serenade," to be more specific, was the only absolute novelty, and served to introduce a new violin virtuoso in the person of Miss Marie Nichols, of Boston. This young artist shows very material signs of becoming one of the leading masters of her instrument. Coming so soon after the local musical atmosphere has been irradiated by the splendor of Ysaye and the poetry of Fritz Kreisler, the position of Miss Nichols was not enviable. It is fairest and best, therefore, to avoid all comparison and merely to declare that, however Miss Nichols may be excelled by a few superlative virtuosi, she is none the less a notably fine artist. Indeed, among the women violinists her position is very high. Her tone is warm, rich and sympathetic, and wherever the serenade called for poetic expression she was fully equal to all its demands. The composition on the whole is one of much beauty. There are four movements, all decidedly romantic in character and rich in thematic invention. The second division seems less inspired than the rest of the work, and here also, where a brief of display of bowing pyrotechnics was demanded, did Miss Nichols' talents appear to least advantage.

In the "Don Juan" tone poem and the Franck symphony the orchestra distinguished itself with perhaps greater emphasis than at any time this season. Both numbers, though ultra-modern in many respects, have been heard here before. Mr. Scheel's men gave the French symphony a few weeks ago, and last evening's performance served to demonstrate anew the compelling beauties of its score. Few, if any, recent symphonies are comparable with it. The Strauss work after the "Domestica" appeared almost conservative. It hardly deserves that epithet, however, for its opulent orchestration, strange tonal waves and eccentric changes of key make it very characteristic of its composer. As program music, however, it is—at least to all except the elect—decidedly vague. The "Marriage of Figaro" overture opened the concert.

The Philadelphia Inquirer
THURSDAY - FEBRUARY 16, 1905

THE MUSICAL SEASON

Last Night's Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy

One of the most brilliant and enjoyable concerts of the season was that given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, at the Academy of Music, last evening, when the program comprised Goldmark's glowing and sparkling and burning overture "In Italy," Berlioz's splendid arrangement of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" and the symphonic suite in which Rimsky-Korsakoff has illustrated some of the adventures from the "Thousand and One Nights."

This was an unusually interesting and attractive scheme and it was most admirably and effectively exhibited. Seldom has the orchestra developed such a glorious opulence of tone or displayed such an astonishing capacity of technical execution. Its interpretation of the "Scheherzade" suite was in particular an amazing illustration of the possibilities of virtuosity. This is a work in which all the devices of the modern school of orchestration are freely employed, and which consequently bristles with every kind of difficulty, but it was played with a fluency and vigor, with a nicety of dynamic variation and with a sense of facility which made the intricate score seem easy and the power and passion and eloquence and communicative fervor of the whole thing were in a high degree impressive and inspiring.

The assisting artist was Eugene D'Albert, who was heard in his own E-majir concerto for the pianoforte, a composition which had not previously been performed in this city, and which produced a very agreeable impression. It is well constructed to exploit the obligato instrument. Its themes are spontaneous and pleasing, and their development effective. Its rendering by Mr. D'Albert was masterly in every kind of way, and well deserved the very hearty applause which it elicited.

8 Feby 16-05

THE EVENING TELEGRAPH

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Eugen d'Albert at the Academy.

Eugen d'Albert appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last night as both composer and soloist. He played his piano concerto in E major. The orchestra's numbers were the familiar "In Italy" overture of Goldmark and the Berlioz arrangement of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" and Rimsky-Korsakoff's remarkable symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," which the Bostonians introduced here in January, 1900. The work of the orchestra was singularly disappointing in comparison with their very fine playing of Monday night, but this may have been due to the scarcely half-filled house, which always puts a damper upon musicians. It seems a pity that Philadelphia cannot support these visiting artists, for their influence here is not only an aid to the city's musical advancement, but a stimulus to our own orchestra.

The Rimsky-Korsakoff suite was the notable number on last night's programme. It was a welcome addition to the remarkable feast of ultra-modern works of which the present season has brought forth so rich a harvest. Not at all the kind of thing that is likely to become popular, it is yet an exceedingly interesting and masterful piece of writing, bringing out effects of orchestral coloring that are most striking. There are times when it impresses one as being not altogether worthy, yet, as a whole, it is a distinctive and original composition, maintaining a high level of musicianship and constantly proceeding from start to finish with definite ideas definitely worked out. Strangely enough, there were many places in which the effect reminded one strongly of the Caesar Franck D minor symphony played on Monday night. The resemblance was illusive, and more in the spirit than in the matter, but it was there nevertheless.

D'Albert did not appear to so great advantage as when he played with the local orchestra. Firstly, his concerto is not a great work, and, secondly, the Boston orchestra was not quite happy in its accompaniment. It lacked cohesiveness and sympathy. The composition shows much cleverness, but little spontaneity or originality. Thematically it only now and then rises to distinction; the piano part is none too interesting, and the use of the orchestral instruments is not altogether successful. The soloist again displayed his wonderful touch and technic, and showed, as only he can, the vast difference between noise and a great volume of musical sound. He seemed, unfortunately, to be out of humor with the orchestra; this may have been imagination, but he often turned his head toward the various choirs and seemed to be trying to keep them better up to their work.

Gericke gave, on the whole, a fine reading of the Goldmark overture, but the same cannot be said for the "Invitation to the Dance." It was played without any appreciation of its swinging rhythm, in almost every part being hurried, as though the conductor wanted to get away from the vacant house back of him and catch the next train for Boston.

PRESS, FEBRUARY 16, 1905

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

D'Albert, the Soloist—Interesting Program Arranged.

PROGRAM.

Goldmark, Overture, "In Italy," Op. 49. First time.
d'Albert, Pianoforte Concerto in E major (in one movement), No. 2, Op. 12. First time.
Weber, "Invitation to the Dance," Rondo Brilliant (Orchestrated by Hector Berlioz).
Rimsky-Korsakoff, Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade" (after "The Thousand Nights and a Night"), Op. 35.
Soloist:
Mr. Eugen d'Albert.

The orchestra was the feature at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last evening Neither the soloist, nor the compositions were especially significant though the program was a very well balanced one and the soloist, d'Albert, one of the masters of the piano of today as well as a talented composer. And the reason of this is that when one is confronted by the special perfection of tone and the absolute smoothness of rendering that characterize the work of the Bostonians, it sometimes seems as if no matter what was interpreted it would possess beauty.

The general scheme was, however, very interesting. Goldmark's "In Italy," though his latest is far from his best overture and yet it has its lovely movements, while the Berlioz-Weber ballet version of the "Invitation to the Dance" is sparkling in the extreme and the "Scheherazade" suite truly Oriental and bizarre. These compositions all glow with color while as a contrast the d'Albert concerto was rather in the conventional style of proper orchestration and proper solo work. As composer d'Albert stirred one hardly more deeply than as the interpreter, though his pianistic climaxes were something tremendous. However, it was the orchestra that made the impression and it is superb.

[69]

Philadelphia Inquirer
DAY. - - FEBRUARY 14, 1905

MUSIC AT THE ACADEMY

An Enjoyable Concert Given Last Evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fourth concert in its first series for the coming season at the Academy of Music last evening when the program comprised the overture to Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," Richard Strauss' symphonic poem of "Don Juan," and the D-minor symphony of Caesar Franck. It is not a great while since the latter composition was given here before, as Mr. Scheel included it in one of his recent programs, but it is a work of sufficient interest and value to bear a second hearing, and, indeed, owing to the complexity of its structure and the elusive character of its sentiment, it cannot be properly appreciated at a first performance, and it gains distinctly by repetition. It is very skillfully scored, and it contains much that is beautiful and impressive. The allegretto is lovely in its delicacy and grace, and in the poetic feeling by which it is inspired, while the closing allegro is extremely vigorous and effective.

For some unimaginable reason the composer has chosen to depart from the prevailing practice and to place his slow movement first, and it cannot be said of this experiment that it is justified by its success. There are some fine things in the Lento, but it lacks proportion, and there is no climax to vindicate the extent of its development. The same idea is repeated again and again without any striking variation in its exhibition until the listener is made to feel that the movement is altogether too long. It does last fifteen minutes, which is about one-third too much. The symphony is full of syncopations, and is exceptionally difficult, but the impression conveyed by its lucid, eloquent, brilliant and sympathetic performance was one of simplicity and ease. In the sparkling measures of the "Figaro" overtime and the grandiose sonorities of the "Don Juan" tone poem Mr. Gericke's interpretations were alike illuminative and convincing, and the enjoyment which the concert afforded was very keen.

Miss Marie Nicholls was the assisting artist. Miss Nicholls played a serenade by Bruch, with an accurate and facile execution and a sympathetic intelligence. Her tone is rather small, but it is sweet and true, and her stopping is always in tune. The number in which she was heard is not a composition of any great value or importance, but it is pleasingly melodious, and it seemed to make a good impression. The orchestra will return to the Academy to-morrow evening, and play Goldmark's "In Italy" overture, the Berlioz-Weber "Invitation to the Dance" and Rimsky-Korsakoff's suite "Scheherazade." Eugene d'Albert, the pianist, will be the soloist.

The Press
FEBRUARY 14, 1905.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Cesar Franck's Symphony Read. Miss Nichols, the Soloist.

Mozart.....“Marriage of Figaro”
Bruch...Serenade for Violin and Orchestra. First time.
Richard Strauss..“Don Juan,” a tone poem (After Nicholaus Lenau), Op. 20.
Cesar Franck.....Symphony in D minor
Soloist, Miss Marie Nichols.

At least one can say for Cesar Franck that he does not require any program and leaves you to work out your own salvation in his symphony in D minor. Heard for the second time within a fortnight at the Academy of Music last evening, this time through the intermediary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Mr. Gericke, the symphony presents itself as a very poetic production of the modern French school, a little overdrawn and thin at times and very badly proportioned in that the first movement is nearly as long as the other two, and is entirely too diffuse, too prolix.

However, in these days of novelties one has to be thankful for a few crumbs of comfort and it is gratifying to note that Franck in this symphony was reasonable in his use of the orchestra, and has his lucid movements. There is no seeming effort to fool and fiddle-paddle with the various choirs, and while tedious in the working out of the first movement the second and last present rich musicianly matter not perhaps the full blood of the Strauss Don Juan tone poem, but a Gallic suggestion of it which is creditable in its restraint. The Don Juan, by the way, the first performed, yet actually the second work of Strauss in this style, was written when the precocious Munich composer was but 25, in the first flush of ability. How easily the descent to Hades is is shown in the work of his maturity the Domestic Symphony, rendered last Saturday evening. The "Don Juan" is legitimate program music, the Domestic Symphony is a wilful perversion of art.

Bruch's serenade for orchestra, a very conventional and routine sort of work, was the medium chosen for the debut of Miss Marie Nichols, a violinist who has won her spurs here and abroad, and gave evidence last night of decided artistic endowments. We are, however, getting very near the surfeited point in the matter of soloists, and Miss Nichols' art was hardly calculated to stir jaded ears, however charming a message she may have for those in the spirit. The Mozart overture completed a program in nowise remarkable, but interpreted in a thoroughly virtuoso manner. On Wednesday evening the orchestra will be heard in the following program: Goldmark, Overture, "In Italy," Op. 49 (first time); d'Albert, Pianoforte Concerto in E major (in one movement), No. 2, Op. 12 (first time); Weber, "Invitation to the Dance," Rondo Brillant (orchestrated by Hector Berlioz); Rimsky-Korsakoff, Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade" (after "The Thousand Nights and a Night"), Op. 35; soloist, Mr. Eugen d'Albert.

THE EVENING TELEGRAPH
FEBRUARY 14, 1905.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Franck's Symphony Finely Played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy.

The important feature of the concert given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the repetition of the Caesar Franck D minor symphony, played not long ago by the Philadelphia Orchestra. It was decidedly worth while to hear this work again and with a different conception and Mr. Gericke's spirited and altogether adequate rendition simply served to confirm the first impression, that this is a masterpiece of music, approached by none of the modern composers and surpassed by few, if any, of the classics. Mr. Gericke, in leading the work, seemed to pay more attention to the details than Mr. Scheel did. This gave a beter opportunity to study the themese and their development, and to see with what consummate musicianship Franck conceived and worked out the symphony as a whole, evidently having a view to the final complete effect rather than to any of the separate parts.

The first movement has been criticized as being too long to warrant the attention given it by the composer. It is difficult to agree with this objection when one considers how vitally important to the complete symphony are the themes and their working-out as presented in this movement. Without the elaborate development of this part, the succeeding movements would lose half their value, for the same themes and the same ideas are constantly recurring with all of the modifications at the command of the master musician.

The effect of the whole symphony is one of most unusually definite intentions, proceeding consistently through its various parts and displaying at all times a supreme genius that is equal to all of the severe tasks it sets itself. Thematically the work is wonderfully rich. From beginning to end it abounds in haunting and compelling phrases that, not only in themselves, but in their combination and development remain clearly in the memory to recall the delights of hearing the work. A word should be said for the playing of the first violin choir. It was a final proof of what a really great concermeister can accomplish, and Mr. Willy Hess must be placed in this class. His first season of work with the Boston Orchestra has accomplished wonders and shows conclusively the importance of the position of leader of the first violins.

Miss Nichols, the violiniste, the soloist, did not prove a success. She has talent enough, in a way, and plays with a certain understanding, but, coming between Fritz Kreisler and Ysaye, she was most unfortunately dwarfed and appeared to anything but advantage.

The Evening Bulletin
FEBRUARY 14, 1905.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

An Interesting Program, With Marie Nichols as Soloist.

Three essentially modern composers, each of whom in his particular way has done much to advance music in the last score of years, practically monopolized the attention of the Boston Orchestra last night in the Academy of Music. The one classical morsel of the evening was the "Figaro" overture, which was played as an opening number. The symphony was the late Caesar Franck's beautiful D minor; the concerto was by Bruch and Strauss's tone poem, "Don Juan," served to round out a program rich in imposing orchestral effects.

The novelty of the evening was Bruch's concerto—or, "Serenade," as he has chosen to label it. Mr. Gericke used this interesting work as a medium for introducing Miss Marie Nichols, who played admirably. The young artiste, though necessarily suffering from comparison with Ysaye and Kreisler, who have recently been heard here, proved herself possessed of real powers of interpretation and facile talent. Her tone is velvety and alluring, and in the romantic passages which are scattered with prodigal hand through the composition, she showed deep poetic insight. It was in the second movement—a march with rapid tempo and heavy rhythms—where gymnastic fingering is required, that her talent showed to least advantage.

The symphony and Strauss poem were splendidly played. The orchestra has seldom been heard to better advantage than in the "Don Juan," where the tremendous climaxes were made overpowering and the gentler passages were given seductive grace. Mr. Gericke's reading of the work made all obscurities disappear.

The Evening Bulletin
FEBRUARY 16, 1905.

The Boston Symphony

The fourth concert of the Wednesday series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Academy of Music last evening, had Eugen d'Albert, the pianist, as soloist, and the symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," by Rimsky-Korsakov, as the orchestral feature. D'Albert gave a concerto of his own composition, his No. 2, which, aside from affording the pianist an opportunity to display his power and command of the instrument, did not prove of much interest. It is singularly devoid of romance or poetic beauty, being nearly all fortissimo and crescendo, and gave d'Albert no chance to show the rare qualities which have distinguished him as a pianist. As a mere exhibition of technique and dynamic power it was all very well, but more than that was expected of a pianist who has given so much real delight in the past. The symphonic suite is a sort of a musical "Arabian Nights" entertainment. It supposedly suggests several tales from the marvels told by the Sultana Sscheherezade to Schahriar to divert his mind from his determination to kill her, as he had his other wives. As descriptive music, full of suggestive power, it is rather effective, though it must be classed as "program music," if the listener is to have any distinct idea as to what it is about. It has a warm, Oriental coloring, of much melodic beauty, and was so admirably played last night that it was listened to with marked appreciation. Goldmark's alluring, if somewhat fanciful, overture, "In Italy," and the Berlioz arrangement of Weber's charming "Invitation to the Dance," completed the program.

THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD
FEBRUARY 14, 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Marie Nichols Proves a Fine Violinist.

It is not unlikely that the "Marriage of Figaro" overture was incorporated in yesterday evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the Academy of Music, to absolve the classical and Bach-loving Mr. Gericke from the charge of presenting a program wholly monopolized by modern composers. Three of the numbers are representative compositions of a trio of musicians each of whom, in his own individual way, has within the past quarter century appreciably advanced the development of music. The symphony was the beautiful D minor of the late Cesar Franck; the concerto was by Max Bruch; while the "Don Juan" tone poem of Richard Strauss added radicalism and instrumental spice to the evening.

The Bruch concerto, or "serenade," to be more specific, was the only absolute novelty, and served to introduce a new violin virtuoso in the person of Miss Marie Nichols, of Boston. This young artist shows very material signs of becoming one of the leading masters of her instrument. Coming so soon after the local musical atmosphere has been irradiated by the splendor of Ysaye and the poetry of Fritz Kreisler, the position of Miss Nichols was not enviable. It is fairest and best, therefore, to avoid all comparison and merely to declare that, however Miss Nichols may be excelled by a few superlative virtuosi, she is none the less a notably fine artist. Indeed, among the women violinists her position is very high. Her tone is warm, rich and sympathetic, and wherever the serenade called for poetic expression she was fully equal to all its demands. The composition on the whole is one of much beauty. There are four movements, all decidedly romantic in character and rich in thematic invention. The second division seems less inspired than the rest of the work, and here also, where a brief of display of bowing pyrotechnics was demanded, did Miss Nichols' talents appear to least advantage.

In the "Don Juan" tone poem and the Franck symphony the orchestra distinguished itself with perhaps greater emphasis than at any time this season. Both numbers, though ultra-modern in many respects, have been heard here before. Mr. Scheel's men gave the French symphony a few weeks ago, and last evening's performance served to demonstrate anew the compelling beauties of its score. Few, if any, recent symphonies are comparable with it. The Strauss work after the "Domestica" appeared almost conservative. It hardly deserves that epithet, however, for its opulent orchestration, strange tonal waves and eccentric changes of key make it very characteristic of its composer. As program music, however, it is—at least to all except the elect—decidedly vague. The "Marriage of Figaro" overture opened the concert.

The Philadelphia Inquirer
THURSDAY - FEBRUARY 16, 1905

THE MUSICAL SEASON

Last Night's Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy

One of the most brilliant and enjoyable concerts of the season was that given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, at the Academy of Music, last evening, when the program comprised Goldmark's glowing and sparkling and burning overture, "In Italy," Berlioz's splendid arrangement of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" and the symphonic suite in which Rimsky-Korsakoff has illustrated some of the adventures from the "Thousand and One Nights."

This was an unusually interesting and attractive scheme and it was most admirably and effectively exhibited. Seldom has the orchestra developed such a glorious opulence of tone or displayed such an astonishing capacity of technical execution. Its interpretation of the "Scheherzade" suite was in particular an amazing illustration of the possibilities of virtuosity. This is a work in which all the devices of the modern school of orchestration are freely employed, and which consequently bristles with every kind of difficulty, but it was played with a fluency and vigor, with a nicety of dynamic variation and with a sense of facility which made the intricate score seem easy and the power and passion and eloquence and communicative fervor of the whole thing were in a high degree impressive and inspiring.

The assisting artist was Eugene D'Albert, who was heard in his own E-majir concerto for the pianoforte, a composition which had not previously been performed in this city, and which produced a very agreeable impression. It is well constructed to exploit the obligato instrument. Its themes are spontaneous and pleasing, and their development effective. Its rendering by Mr. D'Albert was masterly in every kind of way, and well deserved the very hearty applause which it elicited.

8 Aug 16-05

THE EVENING TELEGRAPH

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Eugen d'Albert at the Academy.

Eugen d'Albert appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last night as both composer and soloist. He played his piano concerto in E major. The orchestra's numbers were the familiar "In Italy" overture of Goldmark and the Berlioz arrangement of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" and Rimsky-Korsakoff's remarkable symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," which the Bostonians introduced here in January, 1900. The work of the orchestra was singularly disappointing in comparison with their very fine playing of Monday night, but this may have been due to the scarcely half-filled house, which always puts a damper upon musicians. It seems a pity that Philadelphia cannot support these visiting artists, for their influence here is not only an aid to the city's musical advancement, but a stimulus to our own orchestra.

The Rimsky-Korsakoff suite was the notable number on last night's programme. It was a welcome addition to the remarkable feast of ultra-modern works of which the present season has brought forth so rich a harvest. Not at all the kind of thing that is likely to become popular, it is yet an exceedingly interesting and masterful piece of writing, bringing out effects of orchestral coloring that are most striking. There are times when it impresses one as being not altogether worthy, yet, as a whole, it is a distinctive and original composition, maintaining a high level of musicianship and constantly proceeding from start to finish with definite ideas definitely worked out. Strangely enough, there were many places in which the effect reminded one strongly of the Caesar Franck D minor symphony played on Monday night. The resemblance was illusive, and more in the spirit than in the matter, but it was there nevertheless.

D'Albert did not appear to so great advantage as when he played with the local orchestra. Firstly, his concerto is not a great work, and, secondly, the Boston orchestra was not quite happy in its accompaniment. It lacked cohesiveness and sympathy. The composition shows much cleverness, but little spontaneity or originality. Thematically it only now and then rises to distinction; the piano part is none too interesting, and the use of the orchestral instruments is not altogether successful. The soloist again displayed his wonderful touch and technic, and showed, as only he can, the vast difference between noise and a great volume of musical sound. He seemed, unfortunately, to be out of humor with the orchestra; this may have been imagination, but he often turned his head toward the various choirs and seemed to be trying to keep them better up to their work.

Gericke gave, on the whole, a fine reading of the Goldmark overture, but the same cannot be said for the "Invitation to the Dance." It was played without any appreciation of its swinging rhythm, in almost every part being hurried, as though the conductor wanted to get away from the vacant house back of him and catch the next train for Boston.

PRESS, FEBRUARY 16, 1905

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

D'Albert, the Soloist—Interesting Program Arranged.

PROGRAM.
Goldmark, Overture, "In Italy," Op. 49. First time.
d'Albert, Pianoforte Concerto in E major (in one movement), No. 2, Op. 12. First time.
Weber, "Invitation to the Dance," Rondo Brilliant (Orchestrated by Hector Berlioz).
Rimsky-Korsakoff, Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade" (after "The Thousand Nights and a Night"), Op. 35.
Soloist:
Mr. Eugen d'Albert.

The orchestra was the feature at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last evening Neither the soloist, nor the compositions were especially significant though the program was a very well balanced one and the soloist, d'Albert, one of the masters of the piano of today as well as a talented composer. And the reason of this is that when one is confronted by the special perfection of tone and the absolute smoothness of rendering that characterize the work of the Bostonians, it sometimes seems as if no matter what was interpreted it would possess beauty.

The general scheme was, however, very interesting. Goldmark's "In Italy," though his latest is far from his best overture and yet it has its lovely movements, while the Berlioz-Weber ballet version of the "Invitation to the Dance" is sparkling in the extreme and the "Scheherazade" suite truly Oriental and bizarre. These compositions all glow with color while as a contrast the d'Albert concerto was rather in the conventional style of proper orchestration and proper solo work. As composer d'Albert stirred one hardly more deeply than as the interpreter, though his pianistic climaxes were something tremendous. However, it was the orchestra that made the impression and it is superb.

[69]

Tribune Feb 13

The fourth concert in the Thursday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall, the 122d in New-York and the 2,232d in the history of the organization, is announced for next Thursday evening. This concert will introduce to New-York as the soloist Miss Marie Nichols, a Boston violinist, who will play for the first time in New-York a serenade for violin and orchestra by Max Bruch. This serenade had its first performance in this country last evening in Boston, and the performance in this city on Thursday evening will be its third in America. It may be of interest to note that the first performance in the history of this concerto was by Joseph Debroux in Berlin in 1901; its second performance in the same city by Joachim the same year; by Willy Hess in Cologne a year later; by Miss Nichols herself in Berlin in 1903, with the Philharmonic Orchestra, and in London, with the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Conductor Wood the same year. Miss Nichols is a pupil of Emil Mollenhauer, for six years the conductor of the Handel and Haydn Society, of Boston, and a violinist of marked ability. Miss Nichols is an attractive young lady, whose pleasing personality, combined with her talent, makes her an interesting soloist.

The Thursday evening programme:

Symphony in D minor.....César Franck
Serenade for violin and orchestra.....Bruch
(First time.)
Tone poem, "Don Juan".....Strauss
Overture, "In Italy," Op. 49.....Goldmark
(First time.)
Soloist, Miss Marie Nichols.

The Saturday matinee programme:

Overture, "Barber of Bagdad".....Peter Cornelius
Pianoforte Concerto in E major (in one movement, No. 2, op. 12).....D'Albert
(First time.)
"Invitation to the Dance" (Orchestrated by Hector Berlioz).....Weber Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade," (after "The Thousand Nights and a Night"), op. 35.....Rimsky-Korsakoff Soloist, Eugen d'Albert.

D'Albert is the Boston Symphony Orchestra's soloist in Brooklyn on Friday and at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. He plays his own piano concerto in E major No. 2, op. 12, for the first time. The Manhattan programme includes also Peter Cornelius' overture "Barber of Bagdad," the Weber-Berlioz "Invitation to the Dance" and the Rimsky-Korsakoff "Scheherazade." Brooklyn has Haydn's "Oxford" symphony in G and Volkmann's 'cello concerto in A minor, op. 33, played by Kraseltz, in addition to the D'Albert and Cornelius numbers.

Through circumstances beyond control Mr. Gericke's Thursday night programme at Carnegie Hall will present Richard Strauss's "Don Juan" instead of the intended "Till Eulenspiegel." There are two "firsts times," a Bruch "Serenade" for violin, played by Miss Nichols, and Goldmark's overture, "In Italy." César Franck's symphony in D minor ends the bill.

The first French performance on the same night with Gounod's comic opera is a sorry clash for all persons who attempt to follow novel and rare occasions of music in town.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The other two concerts are those of the Boston Orchestra on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Gericke conducts. At the first concert Marie Nichols is the violinist; at the second d'Albert is the pianist. Miss Nichols plays a new serenade for violin and orchestra by Bruch, written as late as 1901. D'Albert plays his own concerto in E major. The symphony on Thursday is César Franck's in D minor, and the other orchestral numbers are Strauss's "Don Juan" and a new and warmly praised overture of Goldmark's, "In Italy." On Saturday the orchestra plays Rimsky-Gorsakoff's symphonic suite from "The Arabian Nights," the gorgeously colored "Scheherazade," Berlioz's setting of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," and the overture to Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad." Miss Nichols is a promising young violinist.

Mail Feb 11

The two Boston Symphony Orchestra programmes prepared by Mr. Gericke for Thursday and Saturday promise especially well for those interested in modern music. The repetition of Cesar Franck's only symphony will be particularly welcomed; it was the Boston band, under Mr. Gericke, that brought it out here six years ago.

The soloists will be Miss Marie Nichols, a young Boston violinist who has played with the Berlin Philharmonic and the London Queen's Hall orchestras, and Eugen d'Albert, the pianist-composer.

The programmes follow:

THURSDAY EVENING.

Cesar Franck.....Symphony in D minor
Bruch.....Serenade for violin and orchestra (first time)
Miss Marie Nichols.
Strauss.....“Don Juan,” tone poem
Goldmark.....Overture, “In Italy,” opus 49 (first time)

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Peter Cornelius, Overture, “Barber of Bagdad” d'Albert.....Pianoforte concerto in E major (in one movement), No. 2, op. 12 (first time)
Eugen d'Albert.
Weber.....“Invitation to the Dance” (Orchestrated by Hector Berlioz.)
Rimsky-Korsakoff.....Symphonic suite, “Scheherezade” (after “The Thousand Nights and a Night”), op. 35

The Peoples' Symphony concert at Carnegie Hall next Friday night, under direction of Franz X. Arens, will have as principal orchestral numbers the "Leonore" Symphony by Raff, the symphonic poem, "Omphale's Spinning Wheel," by Saint-Saens, and the introduction to the third act of Wagner's "Lohengrin." The soloists, Hjalmer von Dameck, will play a new violin concerto by E. Herrmann, a local composer.

vorbereitet hat. — In dieser Woche wird uns auch das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester seinen vierten Besuch in dieser Saison abstatten und am Donnerstag Abend und Samstag Nachmittag in Carnegie Hall sein siebentes und achtes Konzert geben. Im ersten Konzert wird Fräulein Marie Nichols, eine junge Bostoner Violinistin, und am Samstag Nachmittag Eugen d'Albert solistisch mitwirken. Erstere wird eine hier noch nicht gehörte Serenade für Violine und Orchester vortragen, letzterer sein eigenes, ebenfalls hier neues, zweites Klavier-Konzert in E-dur. Die Orchesternummern bestehen im ersten Konzert aus Cesar Frank's D-moll-Symphonie, Richard Strauß' „Don Juan" und Goldmark's Ouverture „In Italien"; im zweiten Konzert aus Peter Cornelius' Ouverture zum „Barbier von Bagdad", Weber's „Aufforderung zum Tanz" in der Berlioz'schen Orchestration und Rimsky-Korsakoff's symphonischer Suite „Scheherasade". — Am

This is indeed an enormous musical programme for two days—or, as a long haired critic once put it, "a Gargantuan banquet, calculated to make even a musical hypodidoscal lapse from sheer exhaustion into a kyphoscolitic condition." Nevertheless, the Boston Orchestra's fourth evening concert, on Thursday in Carnegie Hall, is sure to be as crowded as usual. This occasion will mark the 122d appearance of the Boston men in New York, and is the 2,232d concert in the history of the organization.

Mr. Gericke will present Cesar Franck's symphony in D minor, Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Don Juan," and Goldmark's overture, "In Italy," opus 49. The last number will be played here for the first time, as also will be Max Bruch's serenade, for violin and orchestra, with which Miss Marie Nichols, the soloist of the occasion, will make her local reappearance.

The programme at the matinee concert on Saturday will consist of Peter Cornelius' overture to the "Barber of Bagdad," Rinisky-Korzakoff's symphonie suite "Scherazade," opus 35; Berlioz's arrangement of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," and d'Albert's second pianoforte concerto. Mr. d'Albert himself will be the soloist.

Programmes for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall: Thursday evening, Feb. 16, César Franck's symphony in D minor, Bruch's serenade for violin and orchestra, Strauss's "Don Juan," and Goldmark's overture "In Italy." Saturday afternoon, Feb. 18, Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad" overture, D'Albert's concerto in E major for piano, Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," Berlioz version, and Rimsky-Korsakow's "Scheherazade" suite. The soloist on Thursday evening will be Marie Nichols, violinist, and on Saturday afternoon Eugen D'Albert.

Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester.

In Carnegie Hall gab gestern das Bostoner Symphonieorchester sein 7. Konzert der New Yorker Saison. Eine fein ausgeführte Wiedergabe von Cäsar Franck's D-moll Symphonie war die Hauptnummer. Fräulein Marie Nichols, eine junge, hier nicht unbekannte Violinistin aus Boston, spielte mit ziemlich gutem Erfolge eine Serenade von Max Bruch.

Globe Feb 14

ONE of the new compositions that the Boston Orchestra is to play to-night for the first time in New York is rather a surprise. Bruch is an old man of sixty-six, who for years has lived in retirement in a suburb of Berlin, writing little. We in the outer world have come gradually to take it for granted that he would attempt nothing more of large dimensions, even for the violin and the virtuoso with it, Sarasate, for whom he liked to write. Yet five years ago he wrote the serenade, in four rather elaborate movements, for violin and orchestra that Miss Nichols and the band are to play to-night. A few violinists have tried it in Germany, but it has not found much favor. To read, the music seems dry in substance and dull in coloring.

Goldmark's new overture, "In Italy," which is also to be played for the first time to-night, has been praised often, since it first appeared at Vienna last year, for the warmth and richness of its coloring and for the charm of the moods that it imparts. The form is the old one—an opening allegro, a slow movement, and a repetition allegro con fuoco. But the slow movement is full of the deep, glowing coloring that Goldmark loves, and throughout he needs a full modern orchestra for his purposes. A few months ago we had Elgar's orchestral impressions of Italy in an overture. It will be interesting to compare them with Goldmark's.

BY a seeming inconsistency, the real novelties in Gericke's programme of modern music at the fourth concert of the Boston Orchestra at Carnegie Hall last night were not the pieces played for the first time, but César Franck's symphony in D minor and Richard Strauss's "Don Juan," both some fifteen years old and no strangers to New York. Yet both are of to-day in a sense that Bruch's new Serenade and Goldmark's new overture are not.

Franck's symphony is a work of recognized beauty, though the composer's effort so to contrive every phrase that it could not be mistaken for the work of any other composer somehow prevents you from quite taking it as of real greatness. It is, in short, a trifle labored. Franck's genius found deeper expression in his singularly poignant and intimate chamber music. Yet at moments in the symphony, as in the characteristic conclusion theme of the first movement, Franck is almost irresistible. As for Strauss's early tone poem, it, at least, is a work to be enjoyed without fasting and a programme.

The two brand new pieces, on the contrary, seem to belong to an earlier age. How many in the audience last night, for instance, could have told you beforehand whether Bruch were dead or alive? And his serenade for violin would hardly give an answer. At his best, even, Bruch demands from the performer the touch of inspiration he himself lacks, and Miss Marie Nichols, who played the solo yesterday, did not add anything to the composer's efforts. She has an adequate technique; indeed, her bowing is uncommonly free. But in the first two movements her tone was singularly hard, and she strayed at moments from the pitch. In the last two she played with greater security and a much warmer, mellower tone. In familiar music of intrinsic worth she might have given pleasure that she could not in Bruch's unprofitable serenade, even with the accompaniment of the Boston Orchestra.

The other new piece, Goldmark's richly scored overture "In Italy," is new only in date and in orchestration. Goldmark is hardly a post-Wagnerian composer, and his recent attempts to keep up the dissonances and "swear themes through a stone wall," as some one remarked of his "Sappho," have not met with favor. The present overture is a return to his earlier and better manner. It is traditional in form, though set forth in the rich instrumental coloring that characterized his treatment of the oriental subjects so congenial to his talent. Indeed, in his present vision of Italy he reminds you often that Saracens once settled in Sicily.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA IN BRILLIANT FORM

Big Audience in Carnegie Hall Gives a Warm Greeting to Symphony Players.

It was a programme of unusual interest, brilliantly performed, that marked last night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was given in Carnegie Hall before a large and enthusiastic audience.

César Franck's D minor symphony headed Mr. Gericke's list. This was followed by Strauss' tone poem, "Don Juan," and Goldmark's overture, "In Italy," opus 49. This latter number was a novelty locally, as was also Max Bruch's serenade for violin and orchestra, in which Miss Marie Nicholls, violinist, made her reappearance as the soloist of the occasion.

Both Mr. Gericke and his men were in fine feather, and roused the house to enthusiasm with their interpretation of the programme. Miss Nicholls met a warm welcome, well deserved by her finished and effective playing.

Mr. Hess, the concertmaster, conducted her number and supplied an admirable accompaniment for it.

[70]

Tribune

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall last night served to reintroduce here Miss Marie Nichols, a young violinist from New-England, whose first New-York appearance occurred a year ago, under less favorable circumstances. Miss Nichols was heard in a serenade for violin and orchestra, by Bruch, new to this city, and Mr. Gericke also brought forward a novelty in the Goldmark "In Italy" overture. The programme contained, besides César Franck's symphony in D minor and Strauss's "Don Juan" tone poem. Miss Nichols is a young woman with personal grace and charm, but she has no need to depend on these qualities for a kindly audience. She has technical skill in no mean degree, and neither a faltering nor a timid tone. The Bruch serenade, which is in four movements, gave her more opportunity for technical than emotional display, perhaps, so that a complete judgment seemed withheld by the audience, but there was no doubt of their pleasure in her playing.

The Goldmark overture, which was produced in Vienna on January 24, 1904, is in the form of the old Italian overture, beginning with an allegro section, followed by a slow movement, and concluded with a repetition of the first movement—in this case somewhat modified by the motives of the second section. The brisk movements of the new overture are buoyantly melodic and very rapid, and the slow movement full of characteristic color, and not unlikely to suggest in mood the "Sankuntala" overture of the same composer. It was played with much spirit by the band. A beautiful performance of the Franck symphony was also given, the third movement especially being marked by a superb sonority.

At the concert to-morrow afternoon d'Albert will be the solo performer.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Cesar Franck's Symphony Played at Its Carnegie Hall Concert.

At the fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, given last evening in Carnegie Hall, Mr. Gericke brought forward as the chief work of the evening César Franck's symphony, which had not been heard here for several years. It is a most characteristic production of the French master—and how much clearer, more certain in its touch it seems now than the productions of his pupils and followers! A striking comparison might be made between this and the symphony by Vincent F. Judy, that seemed so uncomfortable, so forbidding, and so difficult of access, played at the orchestra's last visit here. Franck's composition shows his predilection for themes of short breath and apparent insignificance, and his great skill in making much of them through ingenious development and rich harmonic treatment.

His writing for orchestra is masterly in its clearness and vividness of instrumental color; and the first movement is wrought into a substantial piece of grave and sonorous beauty consistently and lucidly expressing a mood. There is haunting charm, too, in the slow movement interpreted by a graceful scherzo. In the last we are called upon to admire his reassembling of the themes previously employed; but, with all the skill and finesse with which this is done, there remains a certain feeling of monotony. The symphony was played with a fine sense of its characteristic beauties and with much warmth of tone and expression. Miss Marie Nichols, a young violinist of Boston origin and German training, appeared as the soloist, playing for the first time a serenade by Max Bruch.

The piece has almost the dimensions of a concert in its four movements, and shows the serious and substantial qualities of its composer. But it is scarcely inspired music; and it would take a performance of greater authority and more temperamental power than Miss Nichols gave it to make it appeal strongly. If this was not her first New York appearance, she came practically unknown to most of her hearers. She is a player of excellent instincts and training, but her style is not yet that of a mature and finished artist. She made a favorable impression by her sincerity.

The programme included also Richard Strauss's fiery piece of orchestral character drawing, "Don Juan," and a new overture by Carl Goldmark, "In Italy," Op. 49, which was played for the first time.

'DON JUAN' AT THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

Bruch's Serenade for Violin and Cesar Franck's Symphony Also on Programme.

Cesar Franck's Symphony in D Minor, Bruch's Serenade for violin and orchestra, Richard Strauss's tone poem of "Don Juan" and Goldmark's "In Italy" were played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening at Carnegie Hall.

William Gericke conducted with his irreproachable art.

It was an admirable concert. All the fineness of Cesar Franck's work; all the sumptuous color of Strauss's were expressed. Miss Nichols was the soloist. She was heartily applauded. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is to play again at Carnegie Hall on Saturday evening.

Mail Feb 17 Times Feb 19 Herald 19 Sun 19

While the Metropolitan Opera House was jammed with a "Fledermaus" audience, Carnegie Hall was also filled with auditors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's fourth evening concert.

Mr. Gericke offered a high strung modern programme, the César Franck symphony, a new Serenade for violin and orchestra, in four movements, by Max Bruch; Richard Strauss's "Don Juan" and Goldmark's new overture, "In Italy," opus 49. Miss Marie Nichols, of Boston, a young violinist said to have won success abroad, was the soloist. She played with large, but not especially beautiful, tone, and in the first movement of the Bruch Serenade, which seemed rather commonplace in theme and treatment, Miss Nichols failed to show a broad and accomplished style. However, she will doubtless be heard again, at some better opportunity to test her powers.

Mr. Gericke was the conductor that introduced the Franck D minor symphony to this city five years ago, and he must be thanked for that and for repeating it last night. Familiarity with this work leads to still greater admiration of its expressive and beautiful qualities. It speaks the idiom that, in various forms, has been taken up by the newer Frenchmen and those in sympathy with them. Debussy, d'Indy, Loeffler, Chausson and the rest have helped to accustom the ear to such vague and elusive melodies, such remote yet allowable progressions, such intangible changes of mood and vision.

The high purpose in this Franck music was again in evidence last night—not that the themes are all of them shapely or particularly plastic (though that of the second movement, given out at first pizzicato by the strings, is eminently so), but that throughout the composer strives to convey genuinely personal thoughts and elevated moods. The Boston men played with admirable clarity and the refined vigor that is theirs alone.

Eng Fr 4-17

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The fourth of the Boston Orchestra's concerts brought orth in Carnegie Hall last night Miss Marie Nichols, who gave a fairly smooth, but somewhat monotonous performance of a violin concerto or serenade by the veteran Max Bruch, composed eight years ago, but new here. Of its four movements, no one of which rises to dizzy heights, the third, in which the violin is given a chance to sing a rather taking theme, is the only one where the composer seems to have something original to say and says it in clever fashion. The rest of the work—and it is dolefully long—is merely pleasant, commonplace music, not comparable in interest to much that Bruch had written previously.

The real interest in the concert came from the richly scored and spirited D minor symphony by César Franck, and the "Don Juan" fantasia of Richard Strauss, in both of which works the orchestra played con amore, the strings, as usual, showing a beauty of tone and a delicate precision worthy of high praise. An orchestral novelty, an overture entitled "In Italy," by Goldmark, proved to be highly interesting, thanks chiefly to the series of little episodes for two or three instruments at a time—strings and oboe, clarinet, flute, and harp, solo violin, and horns, etc—treated with delightful fancy and harmonic skill, rather than to any melodic ideas of value. Mr. Gericke can boast of a group of solo players of which any orchestra may be proud, and, of course, the overture was admirably played. But between this "In Italy" and the "Sakuntala" overture, of which the writer of the programme notes professes to find reminiscences, there is more than many years. The early work is a masterpiece of ideas and orchestral color; this is but the routine expression of a fine musician. Nevertheless, it is good music, and novelties are far too rare in our concert-rooms for us to be otherwise than grateful for its presentation.

Sun 17

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first of its two February concerts at Carnegie Hall last night. The programme consisted of Cesar Francis's symphony in D minor, Bruch's serenade for violin and orchestra, Strauss's tone poem "Don Juan" and Goldmark's overture "In Italy." The solo performer was Marie Nichols, violinist. The compositions of Bruch and Goldmark were heard for the first time here. Miss Nichols is a young player whose style may in time acquire larger qualities than it displayed last night.

KORSAKOFF'S SUITE AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Boston Musicians Play "Scheherazade" in Carnegie Hall.

MR. D'ALBERT THE SOLOIST

Plays His Second Piano Concerto—Heard for the First Time in This City.

In place of a symphony the matinée concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, given yesterday in Carnegie Hall, brought forward Rimsky Korsakoff's symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," which has quite the dimensions of a symphony, however different its purpose. It is not unknown to New York, but it has not been played here as often as its uncommonly fine qualities might warrant. Its composer is unquestionably the head of the contemporary Russian composers, and most signally represents their ideals and artistic style. There have been plenty of recent opportunities to make certain the fact that he has not a bit of the salon musicianship about him that so many of the younger Russians show on close examination.

It is programme music, but of the more imaginative kind, not seeking to make each measure represent a definite link in a chain of definite events, but rather to suggest the mood, the atmosphere, of some of the marvelous tales of the Sultana Scheherazade. The stories are mentioned upon the score, but, as the annotator observes, with deliberate vagueness. The music is full of exuberant Oriental imagination, of exotic color, strange Eastern patterns and turns of melody; now vivid and fresh, as in the suggestion of the sweep and broad horizon of the sea in the first movement, and again with the pungent flavors of poppy and mandragora as in the monotonous chanting of the Story of the Kalandar Prince; now brilliant and glittering as in the queerly combined suggestions of the Bagdad festival and the shipwreck upon the magnetic rock. The skill and fertility of invention with which the Russian composer has found thematic expression for all these things, his graphic treatment, and especially his originality and ingenuity of orchestration, have made a most engaging composition. It was beautifully played, it is conceivable that a more vivid and sharply contrasted reading would have heightened the value of the music, but there could scarcely have been a more charming reproduction of the fascinating orchestral effects in which the work abounds.

Most familiar was of course Berlioz's instrumentation of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" that appeared upon the programme. But will it ever become so familiar that it will be listened to till the end without the premature applause at its deceptive conclusion?

The overture to Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad" is another piece known, but little heard, here, and also possessed of its individual charm. As an overture it is full of suggestions of the comedy that follows; but as a piece of music by itself, its vivacity and melodiousness and its transparent and brilliant instrumentation make it tell.

Mr. Eugen d'Albert was the solo performer, and appeared in his own second piano concerto—a work which is a dozen years old, but had apparently never been heard in New York before. It is scarcely to be expected that concert pianists will try experiments with their colleagues' compositions when the old line of six or eight concertos seems to be all that is required. Nor could many of them hope to make Mr. d'Albert's concerto sound so effective as he himself did. It is calculated for his own extremely robust style, and he played it yesterday with an aggressiveness and determination that let nothing escape. It is, indeed, a brilliant work, for both the solo instrument and the orchestra. Skillfully written for the piano, it naturally is. Yet it does not leave an impression of strong originality. Traces of Tschaikowsky, of Liszt, and even of Brahms are from time to time to be detected in it, however skillfully they are made to contribute to the composer's purpose. Mr. d'Albert's performance pleased the audience greatly, and he was several times recalled after it.

Sun 17

Marie Nichols, who, as soloist for the Boston Symphony, made her second New York appearance last week, is a young violinist of much more than ordinary talent and taste. Philip Hale made this amusing prediction on her in Boston a few days before: "Interesting in music that is uninteresting to the verge of discouragement, she succeeded in holding the attention of the audience and in winning its hearty applause by the modest display of her technical and musical accomplishments. With more experience she will undoubtedly develop a freer and broader style; she will get further and further away from New England and rejoice musically in frank expression of art and womanhood."

Eugen d'Albert in his own new piano concerto was the lion of the second concert, on Saturday, which with its Russian "Scheherazade" may fairly be called the best concert Mr. Gericke has given in Carnegie Hall this season. A fifth pair of concerts will end these visits.

MR. D'ALBERT AND BOSTON ORCHESTRA

It was a programme of peculiarly enjoyable contents which marked the Boston Orchestra's fourth matinee in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. Opening the list with the overture to Cornelius' opera, "The Barber of Bagdad," and closing it with Rimsky-Korzakoff's symphonic suite "Schederazade" (after "The Thousand and One Nights"), Mr. Gericke contrived an atmosphere of Oriental romance, which was enhanced rather than disturbed by the two intermediate numbers, Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" (as orchestrated by Berlioz), and a pianoforte concerto in E major by Eugen d'Albert, the composer of this last work being the soloist.

The men from Boston have seldom put on their local record playing of more remarkable technical brilliance, nor has Mr. Gericke ever better displayed his talent for obtaining highly finished and nicely balanced tone from the orchestra. It is to his unflagging pains, after all, that this organization's distinguished ensemble is due.

The biggest enjoyment of the afternoon centred naturally in the Rimsky-Korzakoff suite, which, as played yesterday, is the most fascinating sort of programme music. Descriptive of one of Sinbad's voyages and suggestive of a whole train of the marvellous tales in the Arabian Nights, its four movements were a series of weirdly delightful instrumental pictures, all treated with admirable art.

Mr. d'Albert's concerto, which was heard for the first time, proved to be ingeniously made of slight, though attractive, material. The composer-pianist played it with a fire and finish which aroused the enthusiasm of the house and brought him forward a dozen times to bow to its plaudits.

Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester.

Gestern Nachmittag gab das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester sein achtes Konzert der Saison in Carnegie Hall. Nur noch zwei weitere Konzerte werden stattfinden, am 16. und 18. März.

Das gestrige Programm fing mit der delikaten Ouverture zum „Barbier von Bagdad" von Cornelius an, eine um so willkommenere Nummer, weil man sie so selten zu hören bekommt. Die nächste Orchesternummer war Weber's „Aufforderung zum Tanz" in der Berlioz'schen Instrumentation, die doch nach derjenigen von Weingartner ihre Existenzberechtigung eigentlich verloren hat. Und als Hauptnummer kam dann zum Schluß die sogenannte symphonische Suite „Scheherazade" von Rimsky-Korsakoff an die Reihe, ein beliebtes Virtuosenstück des virtuosen Bostoner Orchesters. Häufige Wiederholungen würde diese Suite zwar nicht vertragen, aber wenn man sie nur alle paar Jahre einmal zu hören bekommt, macht sie doch immer wieder einen äußerlich-interessanten Eindruck. Sie ist ein meisterliches Colorit-Stück, enthält aber ebenso viel mehr Colorit als Substanz. Es wird Niemandem schwer fallen, sich bei diesen Tonbildern in die orientalische Märchenwelt hinein zu träumen, so charakteristisch sind sie, aber wenn das Ohr nach einer Weile von den seltsamen Klangreizen gesättigt ist, wird man den festen Umriß vergeblich suchen, den die Phantasie umranken könnte. Es steckt eben in den meisten Kompositionen der jungen russischen Schule so viel mehr Mache, als Erfindung. Aber für das Bostoner Orchester war diese „Scheherazade" eine sehr dankbare Aufgabe, und unter Gericke's Leitung geschah Alles, um die Orchesterfarben so sprechend wie möglich zu machen.

Der Solist der Veranstaltung war Eugen d'Albert, der sein eigenes zweites Klavierkonzert spielte. Es ist das eine bedeutend weniger hoffnungsvolle Komposition, als sein erstes Klavierkonzert, das trotz seiner Tristan-Stimmung eine gewisse Selbständigkeit der Erfindung und einen großen Zug verräth. In diesem zweiten Konzert schimmern die Vorbilder oft gar zu deutlich durch. Der erste Satz zeigt Spuren Brahms'schen Einflusses, das Scherzo folgt ziemlich genau jener rhythmischen Idee, die man im Scherzo des Saint Saëns'schen H-Moll Konzertes findet, und im Passagenwerk sind gar manche Figuren Nachbildungen Liszt'scher und Tschaikowsky'scher Originale. Ein Vorzug des Konzertes ist dagegen die Knappheit seiner Form und die Brillanz des Klaviersatzes. Das Konzert ist zwar viersätzig, erscheint aber in einem Stück. Der letzte Satz begnügt sich überhaupt mit wenig neuen Wendungen, sondern rekapitulirt vor Allem die Themen des ersten Allegros und des Scherzos. Daß d'Albert seine Komposition höchst effektvoll vortrug, verstand sich eigentlich von selbst, aber es verdient noch hervorgehoben zu werden, daß er gestern den Ton des Klaviers nicht forzirte, wie er das neulich beim Beethovenschen Es-Dur Konzert gethan hatte. Das Publikum kargte nicht mit seinem Beifall und rief den Komponisten und Pianisten eine Reihe von Malen heraus.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEARD.

EUGEN D'ALBERT PRODUCES HIS SECOND PIANO CONCERTO.

Proves a Masterpiece of the Commonplace—Orchestral Numbers From the "Barber of Bagdad"—The Rimski-Korsakow Suite—Gericke Conducts.

The fourth afternoon concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall in the presence of a considerable audience. The sole performer of the occasion was Eugen d'Albert, who appeared in the dual capacity of pianist and composer. The work which he offered was his own second piano concerto, opus 12, E major.

Like his first piano concerto, this is in one movement and discloses a laborious design with community of theme, harmonic sphinxes, rhythmic developments and all the other paraphernalia of the organic unity system. The work begins with an allegro, and the orchestra proclaims the first principal theme, leaving to the piano the announcement of the second. Both are vigorous and declamatory.

There is a cantabile theme, given out by both orchestra and piano, but the other two are the chief materials of the composition. The programme book contained a condensation of the composer's own analysis of the concerto. Twenty years ago this would all have been reprinted in to-day's papers; but criticism is not so ingenuous as it was. The town does not need a primer every day now.

It is enough to say that Mr. d'Albert employs his themes to manufacture a slow movement, a scherzo and a finale, and the greatest of these is scherzo. Of the other three movements it is imperative to say that they are ejaculatory in material, spasmodic in workmanship and in the solo part often foreign to the idiom of the piano. The scherzo, however, is thoroughly "clavier-mässig." It sounds and it plays. It lies under the fingers and does not seem to be borrowed from the orchestra.

The concerto as a whole is a masterpiece of the commonplace. It is packed with shopworn ideas from the old curiosity shops of Brahams and Liszt. Mr. d'Albert has furbished up those old thoughts with a little of his own varnish, and set them up in his show window, where they look much like some of the antiques in the Fourth avenue shops. The composer played the piano part with great gusto, and in the scherzo with splendid virtuosity. His tone was generally dry and pedagogic and his style scholastic. In the scherzo, however, he took a recess and sported joyously.

The orchestral numbers were the overtures to Peter Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad"—an opera of blessed memory—the Berlioz orchestration of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," and Rimsky-Korsakow's delightful "Scheherazade" suite. The Cornelius overture is seldom played and was welcome. It is a charming little work, and Mr. Gericke conducted it with appreciation.

The Rimsky-Korsakow suite gave the orchestra an opportunity to disclose the fullest beauty of its tone and phrasing. The performance was the acme of mellowness, golden quality, smoothness and symmetry. Mr. Gericke is a master in works of this kind and he has the right men to execute his designs.

Sun 19

GERICKE'S MEN PLAY FINELY

Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad" Overture Is Given with Charm.

Mr. Gericke and his men from Boston offered in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon much that was enjoyable not only by reason of the programme—an unusually interesting and fascinating one for a Saturday matinee—but also on account of the particularly fine way in which they brought it to a hearing. The leader, often so calm and reserved, this time showed feeling and enthusiasm, and his orchestra responded nobly, yet giving an exhibition of exquisite refinement and finish.

Cornelius's D major overture to "The Barber of Bagdad" opened the concert, which ended with another composition inspired by "The Thousand Nights and a Night"—Rimsky-Korsakoff's symphonic suite, "Scheherazade." Between these works were heard D'Albert's second piano concerto in E major, opus 12, played by the composer, and Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," orchestrated by Berlioz.

Cornelius's work reveals a melodic originality and charm, a purity and simplicity of expression which raise it high above the general level of creative excellence. Cornelius is still a neglected genius. Mr. Gericke is to be thanked for giving him a place on a programme. How different the "Scheherazade" suite, a piece that bristles with high-wrought orchestral effects, strange harmonies and haunting themes. Yet how beautiful in its own way! This tone painting in four parts, depicting episodes of the "Arabian Nights," is as vivid, characteristic and delightful an orchestral narrative as we know. The devices of melody, recurring themes, harmony, rhythm and instrumental coloring carry a message that requires no explanation.

D'Albert, who is heard to far better advantage with orchestra than in recital, played his concerto with great temperamental exuberance and power. The work itself, however, has absolutely no trace of originality. Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" was given with perfection.

Mail Feb 17

Symphony Concert.

While the Metropolitan Opera House was jammed with a "Fledermaus" audience, Carnegie Hall was also filled with auditors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's fourth evening concert.

Mr. Gericke offered a high strung modern programme, the Cesar Franck symphony, a new Serenade for violin and orchestra, in four movements, by Max Bruch; Richard Strauss's "Don Juan" and Goldmark's new overture, "In Italy," opus 49. Miss Marie Nichols, of Boston, a young violinist said to have won success abroad, was the soloist. She played with large, but not especially beautiful, tone, and in the first movement of the Bruch Serenade, which seemed rather commonplace in theme and treatment, Miss Nichols failed to show a broad and accomplished style. However, she will doubtless be heard again, at some better opportunity to test her powers.

Mr. Gericke was the conductor that introduced the Franck D minor symphony to this city five years ago, and he must be thanked for that and for repeating it last night. Familiarity with this work leads to still greater admiration of its expressive and beautiful qualities. It speaks the idiom that, in various forms, has been taken up by the newer Frenchmen and those in sympathy with them. Debussy, d'Indy. Loeffler, Chausson and the rest have helped to accustom the ear to such vague and elusive melodies, such remote yet allowable progressions, such intangible changes of mood and vision.

The high purpose in this Franck music was again in evidence last night—not that the themes are all of them shapely or particularly plastic (though that of the second movement, given out at first pizzicato by the strings, is eminently so), but that throughout the composer strives to convey genuinely personal thoughts and elevated moods. The Boston men played with admirable clarity and the refined vigor that is theirs alone.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The fourth of the Boston Orchestra's concerts brought orth in Carnegie Hall last night Miss Marie Nichols, who gave a fairly smooth, but somewhat monotonous performance of a violin concerto or serenade by the veteran Max Bruch, composed eight years ago, but new here. Of its four movements, no one of which rises to dizzy heights, the third, in which the violin is given a chance to sing a rather taking theme, is the only one where the composer seems to have something original to say and says it in clever fashion. The rest of the work—and it is dolefully long—is merely pleasant, commonplace music, not comparable in interest to much that Bruch had written previously.

The real interest in the concert came from the richly scored and spirited D minor symphony by César Franck, and the "Don Juan" fantasia of Richard Strauss, in both of which works the orchestra played con amore, the strings, as usual, showing a beauty of tone and a delicate precision worthy of high praise. An orchestral novelty, an overture entitled "In Italy," by Goldmark, proved to be highly interesting, thanks chiefly to the series of little episodes for two or three instruments at a time—strings and oboe, clarinet, flute, and harp, solo violin, and horns, etc—treated with delightful fancy and harmonic skill, rather than to any melodic ideas of value. Mr. Gericke can boast of a group of solo players of which any orchestra may be proud, and, of course, the overture was admirably played. But between this "In Italy" and the "Sakuntala" overture, of which the writer of the programme notes professes to find reminiscences, there is more than many years. The early work is a masterpiece of ideas and orchestral color; this is but the routine expression of a fine musician. Nevertheless, it is good music, and novelties are far too rare in our concert-rooms for us to be otherwise than grateful for its presentation.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first of its two February concerts at Carnegie Hall last night. The programme consisted of Cesar Francis's symphony in D minor, Bruch's serenade for violin and orchestra, Strauss's tone poem "Don Juan" and Goldmark's overture "In Italy." The solo performer was Marie Nichols, violinist. The compositions of Bruch and Goldmark were heard for the first time here. Miss Nichols is a young player whose style may in time acquire larger qualities than it displayed last night.

Times Feb 19

KORSAKOFF'S SUITE AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Boston Musicians Play "Scheherazade" in Carnegie Hall.

MR. D'ALBERT THE SOLOIST

Plays His Second Piano Concerto—Heard for the First Time in This City.

In place of a symphony the matinée concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, given yesterday in Carnegie Hall, brought forward Rimsky Korsakoff's symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," which has quite the dimensions of a symphony, however different its purpose. It is not unknown to New York, but it has not been played here as often as its uncommonly fine qualities might warrant. Its composer is unquestionably the head of the contemporary Russian composers, and most signally represents their ideals and artistic style. There have been plenty of recent opportunities to make certain the fact that he has not a bit of the salon musicianship about him that so many of the younger Russians show on close examination.

It is programme music, but of the more imaginative kind, not seeking to make each measure represent a definite link in a chain of definite events, but rather to suggest the mood, the atmosphere, of some of the marvelous tales of the Sultana Scheherazade. The stories are mentioned upon the score, but, as the annotator observes, with deliberate vagueness. The music is full of exuberant Oriental imagination, of exotic color, strange Eastern patterns and turns of melody; now vivid and fresh, as in the suggestion of the sweep and broad horizon of the sea in the first movement, and again with the pungent flavors of poppy and mandragora as in the monotonous chanting of the Story of the Kalandar Prince; now brilliant and glittering as in the queerly combined suggestions of the Bagdad festival and the shipwreck upon the magnetic rock. The skill and fertility of invention with which the Russian composer has found thematic expression for all these things, his graphic treatment, and especially his originality and ingenuity of orchestration, have made a most engaging composition. It was beautifully played, it is conceivable that a more vivid and sharply contrasted reading would have heightened the value of the music, but there could scarcely have been a more charming reproduction of the fascinating orchestral effects in which the work abounds.

Most familiar was of course Berlioz's instrumentation of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" that appeared upon the programme. But will it ever become so familiar that it will be listened to till the end without the premature applause at its deceptive conclusion?

The overture to Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad" is another piece known, but little heard, here, and also possessed of its individual charm. As an overture it is full of suggestions of the comedy that follows; but as a piece of music by itself, its vivacity and melodiousness and its transparent and brilliant instrumentation make it tell.

Mr. Eugen d'Albert was the solo performer, and appeared in his own second piano concerto—a work which is a dozen years old, but had apparently never been heard in New York before. It is scarcely to be expected that concert pianists will try experiments with their colleagues' compositions when the old line of six or eight concertos seems to be all that is required. Nor could many of them hope to make Mr. d'Albert's concerto sound so effective as he himself did. It is calculated for his own extremely robust style, and he played it yesterday with an aggressiveness and determination that let nothing escape. It is, indeed, a brilliant work, for both the solo instrument and the orchestra. Skillfully written for the piano, it naturally is. Yet it does not leave an impression of strong originality. Traces of Tschaikowsky, of Liszt, and even of Brahms are from time to time to be detected in it, however skillfully they are made to contribute to the composer's purpose. Mr. d'Albert's performance pleased the audience greatly, and he was several times recalled after it.

Marie Nichols, who, as soloist for the Boston [Symphony, made her [second New York appearance last week, is a young violinist of much more than ordinary talent and taste. Philip Hale made this amusing prediction on her in Boston a few days before: "Interesting in music that is uninteresting to the verge of discouragement, she succeeded in holding the attention of the audience and in winning its hearty applause by the modest display of her technical and musical accomplishments. With more experience she will undoubtedly develop a freer and broader style; she will get further and further away from New England and rejoice musically in frank expression of art and womanhood."

Eugen d'Albert in his own new piano concerto was the lion of the second concert, on Saturday, which with its Russian "Scheherazade" may fairly be called the best concert Mr. Gericke has given in Carnegie Hall this season. A fifth pair of concerts will end these visits.

Herald 19

MR. D'ALBERT AND BOSTON ORCHESTRA

It was a programme of peculiarly enjoyable contents which marked the Boston Orchestra's fourth matinee in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. Opening the list with the overture to Cornelius' opera, "The Barber of Bagdad," and closing it with Rimsky-Korzakoff's symphonic suite "Schederazade" (after "The Thousand and One Nights"), Mr. Gericke contrived an atmosphere of Oriental romance, which was enhanced rather than disturbed by the two intermediate numbers, Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" (as orchestrated by Berlioz), and a pianoforte concerto in E major by Eugen d'Albert, the composer of this last work being the soloist.

The men from Boston have seldom put on their local record playing of more remarkable technical brilliance, nor has Mr. Gericke ever better displayed his talent for obtaining highly finished and nicely balanced tone from the orchestra. It is to his unflagging pains, after all, that this organization's distinguished ensemble is due.

The biggest enjoyment of the afternoon centred naturally in the Rimsky-Korzakoff suite, which, as played yesterday, is the most fascinating sort of programme music. Descriptive of one of Sinbad's voyages and suggestive of a whole train of the marvellous tales in the Arabian Nights, its four movements were a series of weirdly delightful instrumental pictures, all treated with admirable art.

Mr. d'Albert's concerto, which was heard for the first time, proved to be ingeniously made of slight, though attractive, material. The composer-pianist played it with a fire and finish which aroused the enthusiasm of the house and brought him forward a dozen times to bow to its plaudits.

Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester.

Gestern Nachmittag gab das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester sein achtes Konzert der Saison in Carnegie Hall. Nur noch zwei weitere Konzerte werden stattfinden, am 16. und 18. März.

Das gestrige Programm fing mit der delikaten Ouverture zum „Barbier von Bagdad" von Cornelius an, eine um so willkommenere Nummer, weil man sie so selten zu hören bekommt. Die nächste Orchesternummer war Weber's „Aufforderung zum Tanz" in der Berlioz'schen Instrumentation, die doch nach derjenigen von Weingartner ihre Existenzberechtigung eigentlich verloren hat. Und als Hauptnummer kam dann zum Schluß die sogenannte symphonische Suite „Scheherazade" von Rimsky-Korsakoff an die Reihe, ein beliebtes Virtuosenstück des virtuosen Bostoner Orchesters. Häufige Wiederholungen würde diese Suite zwar nicht vertragen, aber wenn man sie nur alle paar Jahre einmal zu hören bekommt, macht sie doch immer wieder einen äußerlich-interessanten Eindruck. Sie ist ein meisterliches Colorit-Stück, enthält aber ebenso viel mehr Colorit als Substanz. Es wird Niemandem schwer fallen, sich bei diesen Tonbildern in die orientalische Märchenwelt hinein zu träumen, so charakteristisch sind sie, aber wenn das Ohr nach einer Weile von den seltsamen Klangreizen gesättigt ist, wird man den festen Umriß vergeblich suchen, den die Phantasie umranken könnte. Es steckt eben in den meisten Kompositionen der jungen russischen Schule so viel mehr Mache, als Erfindung. Aber für das Bostoner Orchester war diese „Scheherazade" eine sehr dankbare Aufgabe, und unter Gericke's Leitung geschah Alles, um die Orchesterfarben so sprechend wie möglich zu machen.

Der Solist der Veranstaltung war Eugen d'Albert, der sein eigenes zweites Klavierkonzert spielte. Es ist das eine bedeutend weniger hoffnungsvolle Komposition, als sein erstes Klavierkonzert, das trotz seiner Tristan-Stimmung eine gewisse Selbständigkeit der Erfindung und einen großen Zug verräth. In diesem zweiten Konzert schimmern die Vorbilder oft gar zu deutlich durch. Der erste Satz zeigt Spuren Brahms'schen Einflusses, das Scherzo folgt ziemlich genau jener rhythmischen Idee, die man im Scherzo des Saint Saëns'schen H-Moll Konzertes findet, und im Passagenwerk sind gar manche Figuren Nachbildungen Liszt'scher und Tschaikowsky'scher Originale. Ein Vorzug des Konzertes ist dagegen die Knappheit seiner Form und die Brillanz des Klaviersatzes. Das Konzert ist zwar vierfätzig, erscheint aber in einem Stück. Der letzte Satz begnügt sich überhaupt mit wenig neuen Wendungen, sondern rekapitulirt vor Allem die Themen des ersten Allegros und des Scherzos. Daß d'Albert seine Komposition höchst effektvoll vortrug, verstand sich eigentlich von selbst, aber es verdient noch hervorgehoben zu werden, daß er gestern den Ton des Klaviers nicht forzirte, wie er das neulich beim Beethovenschen Es-Dur Konzert gethan hatte. Das Publikum kargte nicht mit seinem Beifall und rief den Komponisten und Pianisten eine Reihe von Malen heraus.

Sun 19

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEARD.

EUGEN D'ALBERT PRODUCES HIS SECOND PIANO CONCERTO.

Proves a Masterpiece of the Commonplace—Orchestral Numbers From the "Barber of Bagdad"—The Rimski-Korsakow Suite—Gericke Conducts.

The fourth afternoon concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall in the presence of a considerable audience. The sole performer of the occasion was Eugen d'Albert, who appeared in the dual capacity of pianist and composer. The work which he offered was his own second piano concerto, opus 12, E major.

Like his first piano concerto, this is in one movement and discloses a laborious design with community of theme, harmonic sphinxes, rhythmic developments and all the other paraphernalia of the organic unity system. The work begins with an allegro, and the orchestra proclaims the first principal theme, leaving to the piano the announcement of the second. Both are vigorous and declamatory.

There is a cantabile theme, given out by both orchestra and piano, but the other two are the chief materials of the composition. The programme book contained a condensation of the composer's own analysis of the concerto. Twenty years ago this would all have been reprinted in to-day's papers; but criticism is not so ingenuous as it was. The town does not need a primer every day now.

It is enough to say that Mr. d'Albert employs his themes to manufacture a slow movement, a scherzo and a finale, and the greatest of these is scherzo. Of the other three movements it is imperative to say that they are ejaculatory in material, spasmodic in workmanship and in the solo part often foreign to the idiom of the piano. The scherzo, however, is thoroughly "clavier-mässig." It sounds and it plays. It lies under the fingers and does not seem to be borrowed from the orchestra.

The concerto as a whole is a masterpiece of the commonplace. It is packed with shopworn ideas from the old curiosity shops of Brahams and Liszt. Mr. d'Albert has furbished up those old thoughts with a little of his own varnish, and set them up in his show window, where they look much like some of the antiques in the Fourth avenue shops. The composer played the piano part with great gusto, and in the scherzo with splendid virtuosity. His tone was generally dry and pedagogic and his style scholastic. In the scherzo, however, he took a recess and sported joyously.

The orchestral numbers were the overtures to Peter Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad"—an opera of blessed memory—the Berlioz orchestration of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," and Rimsky-Korsakow's delightful "Scheherazade" suite. The Cornelius overture is seldom played and was welcome It is a charming little work, and Mr. Gericke conducted it with appreciation.

The Rimsky-Korsakow suite gave the orchestra an opportunity to disclose the fullest beauty of its tone and phrasing. The performance was the acme of mellowness, golden quality, smoothness and symmetry. Mr. Gericke is a master in works of this kind and he has the right men to execute his designs.

GERICKE'S MEN PLAY FINELY

Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad" Overture Is Given with Charm.

Mr. Gericke and his men from Boston offered in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon much that was enjoyable not only by reason of the programme—an unusually interesting and fascinating one for a Saturday matinee—but also on account of the particularly fine way in which they brought it to a hearing. The leader, often so calm and reserved, this time showed feeling and enthusiasm, and his orchestra responded nobly, yet giving an exhibition of exquisite refinement and finish.

Cornelius's D major overture to "The Barber of Bagdad" opened the concert, which ended with another composition inspired by "The Thousand Nights and a Night"—Rimsky-Korsakoff's symphonic suite, "Scheherazade." Between these works were heard D'Albert's second piano concerto in E major, opus 12, played by the composer, and Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," orchestrated by Berlioz.

Cornelius's work reveals a melodic originality and charm, a purity and simplicity of expression which raise it high above the general level of creative excellence. Cornelius is still a neglected genius. Mr. Gericke is to be thanked for giving him a place on a programme. How different the "Scheherazade" suite, a piece that bristles with high-wrought orchestral effects, strange harmonies and haunting themes. Yet how beautiful in its own way! This tone painting in four parts, depicting episodes of the "Arabian Nights," is as vivid, characteristic and delightful an orchestral narrative as we know. The devices of melody, recurring themes, harmony, rhythm and instrumental coloring carry a message that requires no explanation.

D'Albert, who is heard to far better advantage with orchestra than in recital, played his concerto with great temperamental exuberance and power. The work itself, however, has absolutely no trace of originality. Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" was given with perfection.

Post Feb 20

MUSIC AND DRAMA

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Notwithstanding the excitement over the extra Philharmonic concerts last week, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was by no means ignored. A large audience attended the Saturday afternoon concert, when Mr. Eugen d'Albert was the soloist. He played his second concerto for the first time, and won much applause and several recalls therewith. To one hearing it the first time, it seems deficient in melodic interest, but it has all the other qualities that go toward making an effective concerto—interesting harmonies, brilliant arpeggios and passage work, and a beautifully colored orchestral part. While it consists of four parts, there is no break between them, and a further merit is brevity—a merit so great, so unusual, yet so extremely desirable, that its importance can hardly be exaggerated; for it is undeniable that the main reason why most compositions fail is that the authors persist in talking an hour, when all they have to say could be said better in ten minutes. It is needless to add that Mr. D'Albert, in the playing of this work, proved himself once more an artist of the highest rank.

The overture to Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad," a rather weak composition, was the opening number. It was followed by Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," in Berlioz's orchestration, which we, for our part, prefer to Weingartner's, particularly because of the exquisite use of the horns in the accompaniment. Philip Hale says in the programme book that "both Ambros and Riehl have written glowingly about this dance, 'which symbolizes the dance as a poetic idea.' Ambros finds in it all that is poetic, chivalric, tender, and agreeably spirited. The 'Invitation' changed the whole character of German dance music, they say, and raised it to a higher level." This is all true, and good and beautiful, but Wagner and Brahms and other men who were greater than Ambros and Riehl have spoken in equally glowing terms of the Strauss waltzes, yet the Boston band never plays them. Is it because they are called "waltzes," while Weber's waltz parades as a "Rondo Brilliant"? Is there so much in a name?

The concert closed with a most admirable performance of Rimsky-Korsakoff's delightfully Oriental "Scherezade" suite, to listen to which, as played on this occasion, was like having a mild opium dream. It is in such richly colored music that Mr. Gericke and his players are heard at their best.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHARMS.

Again Proves Itself Wonderful at Matinee Performance.

A more brilliant concert than that of yesterday the Boston Symphony Orchestra never gave. The tone of the band was simply exquisite in its purity and quality, and the technical performance absolutely flawless. The programme seemed to have been selected with a view to ravishing the senses of the listeners, rather than to appeal to high imagination or deep emotion. First there came the overture to "The Barber of Bagdad," by Cornelius, a composition that had been absent from local lists for much too long a period; then Mr. d'Albert played his pianoforte concerto in E major, and with it won a decided popular triumph without deeply stirring the admiration of the critical. The work is modern in form, inasmuch as it employs the device of community of themes and there is no pause between the movements—a familiar device since the fashion was set by Liszt. The music seemed most effective or most idiomatic in the Scherzo section. Berlioz's transcription of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" and Rimsky-Korsakow's symphonic suite "Scheherazade" brought the concert to a close, and in the last piece Mr. Hess, the leader of the violins, with his brief solos made a fine impression, as deep a one, indeed, as he did when he presented himself as a virtuoso at the first concert in Joachim's Hungarian concerto.

Boston Herald Feb 17

THE SYMPHONY IN NEW YORK

Boston Players Enthuse Big Audience with Programme Brilliantly Performed.

[Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald.]

NEW YORK, Feb. 16, 1905. It was a programme of unusual interest, brilliantly performed, that marked tonight's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall, before a large and enthusiastic audience. Cesar Franck's D minor symphony headed Mr. Gericke's list. This was followed by Strauss' tone poem, "Don Juan," and Goldmark's overture, "In Italy," opus 49. This latter number was a novelty locally; as was also Max Bruch's serenade for violin and orchestra, in which Marie Nichols, violinist, made her reappearance as the soloist of the occasion.

Both Mr. Gericke and his men were in fine feather and roused the house to enthusiasm with their interpretations. Miss Nichols met a warm welcome, well deserved by her finished and effective playing. Mr. Hess, the concert master, conducted her number and supplied an admirable accompaniment for it.

Baltimore American

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1905.

D'ALBERT AND BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Program Was Exceptionally Fine. Great Playing of the Soloist.

The program given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening at the Lyric, under the direction of Mr. Gericke, was exceptionally fine and entirely worthy as a fifth part of the season's educational music in Baltimore by the Boston organization. It consisted of the following numbers:

Goldmark—
Overture, "In Italy," op. 49. First time.
D'Albert—
Pianoforte Concerto in E major (in one movement), No. 2, op 12. First time.
Weber—
"Invitation to the Dance," Rondo Brillant. (Orchestrated by Hector Berlioz.)
Rimsky-Korsakoff—
Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade" (after "The Thousand Nights and a Night") Op. 35.
1. The Sea and Sinbad's Ship.
2. The Story of the Kalandar Prince.
3. The Young Prince and the Young Princess.
4. Festival at Bagdad. The Sea. The Ship Goes to Pieces Against a Rock Surmounted by a Bronze Warrior. Conclusion.

Soloist, Mr. Eugen d'Albert.

It will be observed that the music is all modern, requiring a full orchestra, and such as cannot be heard here at present except from these musicians.

The opening overture by Goldmark was first heard in America at Chicago last year, and thus was its first performance in this city. Although something of a symphonic poem, it is written in the old, open overture form, starting with an allegro, then going to its slow movement, and ending with a vigorous allegro. Its instrumentation calls for all the brass, including four horns, three trumpets, three trombones, one tuba, and these call for many strings, full woodwind and all the "furniture."

Goldmark has the good taste to choose worthy themes for his musical works, as he did in the Sakuntala overture, when he made his subject the "Sacred Ring," one of the oldest Hindoo dramas in existence. He has realized the fact that, in order to be impressive at this age, music must have something to express which is in itself worthy of expression, in this case a musical picture of Italian skies and life.

Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" was the senior number of the program, but beautiful and fresh as it always is, it was made still more attractive by orchestral instrumentation by Berlioz.

Eugen d'Albert, who was recently heard in the Beethoven concerto, last evening presented his own, thus appearing both as composer and performer. Naturally his interpretation of his own work cannot be questioned, but there was some uncertainty in the rendition owing, no doubt, to the fact that he could not appear at once as composer, performer and director. Generally, however, the work was given smoothly and with precision, but being new to those who listened, it failed to give the pleasure that was felt in his playing of Beethoven.

Familiarity with a good work helps very largely toward its enjoyment. When people listen to the Schumann concerto or a Beethoven or the Grieg or any other familiar work they know just what to expect, and are pleased if they get it. But the same pleasure cannot be had from any new work. It must be heard more than once to be understood and enjoyed. The composer was recalled several times, but mainly on account of his magnificent performance, which is as effective and strong as ever.

Altogether, the concert was the most educational which the orchestra has given this season, and as such was very highly enjoyed.

THE SUN

BALTIMORE, WEDNESDAY, FEB 15, 1905.

D'ALBERT THE SOLOIST

French Pianist Appears With Boston Symphony Orchestra.

With D'Albert as the soloist and with the Rimsky-Korsakoff symphonic suite "Scheherazade" in lieu of the usual symphony, last night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Lyric was one of the notable musical events of the winter. The program offered by Director Gericke was ultra-modern—as "modern as tomorrow," with the exception of a single number, the Weber "Invitation to the Dance."

The overture with which it opened was Goldmark's "In Italy," which was heard here for the first time, and which was first played in Vienna a little over a year ago. The fact that its first performance in this country was by the Chicago Orchestra, under the leadership of Theodore Thomas, last December, only a few weeks before his death, added a pathetic interest to its initial performance here. The composition is cast in the form of the old Italian overture and is marked by beauty of theme, fluent transitions and mellow coloring.

D'Albert appeared both as a composer and as the piano soloist, and in both displayed his brilliant musicianship. He played his brilliant musicianship. He for piano and orchestra, which, like the overture, had not been heard before, arousing tremendous enthusiasm by his Titanic mastery of the technical resources of his instrument. His arpeggios were marvels of clarity, his double notes and chord passages crashed out with the relentlessness of boundless power.

Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" symphonic suite brought the program to an end, the Weber "Invitation to the Dance" serving as the lighter trifle by which the appetite for the more piquant Russian offering was whetted.

As the title indicates, the inspiration for the musical ideas of the composition was drawn from the "Arabian Nights," and the whole is an impressionistic portrayal, in vivid and exotic coloring, with an Oriental exuberance of musical imagery of some of the most fascinating of the Sultana's tales. "The Sea and Sinbad's Ship" forms the subject of the first movement; the "Story of the Kalandar Prince" that of the second; "The Young Prince and the Young Princess" the third, and in the closing movement a fete at Bagdad, which passes with dreamlike inconsequence into a revel at sea and ends with shipwreck near the Mountain of Enchantment. Like other things impressionistic, there are points of view, or, rather, of hearing, at which the heavy splashes of orchestral coloring and the emphasis given to the unusual make the musical picture grotesque and fantastic. There are other phases, though, in which richness and beauty dominate the picture. As a whole, the composition—as it was superbly played by the orchestra—not only challenged attention, but held it enthralled.

The Providence Journal.

Published by the Providence Journal Co. Nos. 209 and 213 Westminster St. PROVIDENCE, R. I.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1905.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Last of the Series Attended by Large and Enthusiastic Audience.

The third and last concert for the present season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given in Infantry Hall last night. There was an unusually large audience, practically every seat in the hall being taken, and the superb playing of the orchestra was greeted with a marked display of enthusiasm. The programme was as follows:

Overture to "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G-minor, op. 26.....Max Bruch
Mr. Willy Hess.
Largo .....Handel
Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic," in B-minor, op. 74.....Tschaikowsky

Fine as the performances of the Boston Orchestra usually are, that of last night was exceptional in its character. Seldom have we heard such volume and purity of tone, such delicately balanced ensemble, such vigor and spirit sustained from beginning to end of a long and difficult programme. Something of this was due perhaps to the presence of so large and sympathetic an audience. But, whatever the reason, it is certain that the players fairly outdid themselves and the result was one of the most enjoyable concerts that has ever been heard in this city.

The opening number on the programme, Wagner's familiar "Tannhauser" overture, gave evidence that the air was charged with electricity, if it be that subtle fluid that makes fiddlers' arms move in unison and "back row" artists draw tones unusually mellow and sonorous from their tubes of wood and brass. It was not the academic and conventional rendering to which we have so often listened. The passionate, whirling, voluptuous music of the Venusberg pulsated with life; the solemn hymn of the pilgrims marched on to its excellent climax with thrilling dignity and power. And the mark of artistic achievement thus set was never lowered during the evening.

The equally familiar "Largo" of Handel was given with fine effect by the strings. A novel arrangement was used, the air being given out first as a solo with harp accompaniment, then repeated by all the violins with support of the full orchestra. Mr. Willy Hess, the new concert master of the orchestra, gave the solo with great delicacy and taste, and a fine contrast was afforded when the full body of strings took up the repetition. The number was much applauded

It is safe to say that those who voted for Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony were more than pleased with its presentation. Mr. Gericke's reading was both broad and subtle and his interpretation was splendidly set forth by the players. Every shade of nuance and expression was brought out with the utmost care and supreme technical finish. It was a worthy ending to a grand concert.

Mr. Willy Hess, who appeared in the role of solist, chose for his selection one of the most brilliant of violin concertos. His playing was masterly in the best sense of the word. He has an admirable equipment; a tone beautifully clear and at the same time incisive, a free and graceful bow arm, any amount of digital dexterity and, above all, the nervous force and musical feeling that marks the true artistic temperament. We do not often hear so good a player. The audience was quick to respond. There was tumultuous applause, which could hardly wait for the close, and he was recalled a number of times.

It is a pleasure to know that, as a result of the interest manifested in this concert and the very large attendance, a series of symphony concerts for next season is assured. Had the result been different, it would have been a deep disappointment to all true lovers of music and a reflection upon the status of musical taste in this community hard to be borne.

SUNDAY HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year. VOL. CXVII., NO. 57.

SUNDAY, FEB. 26, 1905.

SYMPHONY PLAYS SINDING'S SUITE

New and Disappointing Music Is Sombre, Austere and in Certain Ways Forbidding—Not Much That Is Strong in It.

SCHELLING APPEARS FOR THE FIRST TIME

Plays in Frank, Straightforward Manner Rather Than with Finesse—Von Vecsey Gives Third and Last Recital Here.

The programme of the 16th Symphony concert, given last night in Symphony Hall, Mr. Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

"Episodes Chevaleresques," suite, op. 35, Sinding
Concerto in A minor for piano.....Schumann
Symphony No. 1 in C minor.....Brahms

The suite by Christian Sinding, the Norwegian, was played here for the first time, and the third of the four movements was omitted. The composer is known here chiefly by his symphony in D minor, played here six years ago, a piano quartet, a piano trio and a few piano pieces. The symphony, as we remember it, is an austere, granitic work, in certain ways forbidding, and much of the music, to those who would fain be lulled by mellifluous strains, is as downright ugliness. The sombreness is that which we have learned to associate, perhaps without good cause, with Norwegian scenery and music.

The scherzo is grim, and grimness is the pervading characteristic, for Sinding in this symphony is not a man of contrasts. He is an earnest Norwegian, well versed in the traditions and formulas, a man who speaks with his own voice; he is not content with his little parish; he screams his thoughts so that the world may hear,—while Grieg, however charming his expression may be, is essentially a man satisfied with a narrow horizon and a quiet life, unlike Sinding, who is a radical by nature, with decided views on art, politics, economic questions, and a leaning toward Socialism. Such a one is the Sinding of the symphony.

The suite appeared first, we believe, as a piano composition for four hands, in 1898. Whether it was composed originally for piano or orchestra we do not know. There is no programme, there are no mottoes. The title, "Knightly Episodes," or "Knightly Adventures," is enough. The first movement, which is in the nature of a march, is striking at the opening, both in thematic structure and in orchestral dress, but there is little said after this opening. The trumpet solo is melodically conventional, and the invention throughout the movement, and in fact throughout the work, is not conspicuous. The funeral march of the second movement is a lamentation of the type that is immediately popular and soon forgotten. The old device of thematic repetition with strongly marked rhythm and a constant crescendo to a crashing climax works its customary effect. But neither here nor in the finale is there much that is truly strong or individual. The suite is far inferior to the symphony, though it will at one hearing win the applause which would be denied the more powerful and characteristic work.

Mr. Ernest Schelling played for the first time in Boston. He was born near Philadelphia—some say in Pennsylvania, others in New Jersey, and Mr. Schelling, we hear, is inclined in his belief toward the latter state. As a child he played in public, and then he studied in European cities and has for some years appeared with success as a virtuoso in Europe and in South America. He chose Busoni's arrangement of Liszt's "Spanish Rhapsody," and the composition was announced for performance, but Mr. Schelling changed his mind and played Schumann's concerto. This latter work is music of an intimately romantic nature and is more effective in a small hall. There are some who go so far as to say that the concerto is for ladies only, a sneer to which we cannot say Amen; but it is not a concerto that favors a virtuoso in a great hall. Like Chopin's concerto in E minor, it should be brought close to the audience.

Mr. Schelling played in a frank, straightforward manner, rather than with finesse, and his performance was in black and white, not in colors. His interpretation was not to us romantic, nor was it any way engrossing. His technique was adequate; it was, indeed, fluent, and it was displayed with modesty and ease. He will give a recital this week, and there will then be a better opportunity to examine the precise nature of his artistry. Last evening he was apparently at his best in the first movement. He was heartily applauded by the audience.

The first symphony of Brahms, a work which has been both over-praised and unduly disparaged, with its tragically intense first movement and its triumphant close, was welcome to many. The orchestral performance throughout the evening was of a high order of excellence.

The programme of the 17th concert will be different from that announced on the music page of today's Herald. As changed, it will be as follows: A Faust overture, Wagner; Bachrich's transcription of a prelude, adagio and gavotte by Bach; Schubert's symphony in C major. Mr. Campanari, baritone, will sing an aria from Mozart's "Cosi fan tutti" and an air by Gluck.

[72]

Post Feb 26

Boston Herald Feb 17

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Notwithstanding the excitement over the extra Philharmonic concerts last week, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was by no means ignored. A large audience attended the Saturday afternoon concert, when Mr. Eugen d'Albert was the soloist. He played his second concerto for the first time, and won much applause and several recalls therewith. To [illegible] it the first time, it seemed [illegible] in melodic interest, but it has [illegible] other qualities that go toward making [illegible] concerto—interesting [illegible] brilliant arpeggios and passage work, [illegible] orchestral colored orchestral [illegible] musicists of our [illegible] break between them. [illegible] variety—a merit so [illegible] desirable that is hardly to be expected. [illegible] compositions fail is [illegible] in talking in hour, [illegible] said [illegible] of this [illegible] of the [illegible] part, [illegible] particularly be- [illegible] use of the horns in [illegible] Hall says in [illegible] both Ambros [illegible] ghostly about [illegible] dance as [illegible] all that [illegible] and agreeably [illegible] changed the [illegible] music, [illegible] to a higher level" [illegible] good and beautiful, [illegible] realms and other men [illegible] that Vallas and Richter [illegible] the glowing terms of [illegible] the Boston band [illegible] because they are [illegible] which Weber's waltz pe- [illegible] Brilliant"? Is there so [illegible] such a most admirable [illegible] to Korsakoff's defiant- [illegible] Scheherazade" suite, to dis- [illegible] on this occasion, [illegible] spell upon dream. It [illegible] should never that Mr. [illegible] was heard at their [illegible]

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHARMS.

Again Proves Itself Wonderful at Matinee Performance.

A more brilliant concert than that of yesterday the Boston Symphony Orchestra never gave. The tone of the band was simply exquisite in its purity and quality, and the technical performance absolutely flawless. The programme seemed to have been selected with a view to ravishing the senses of the listeners, rather than to appeal to high imagination or deep emotion. First there came the overture to "The Barber of Bagdad," by Cornelius, a composition that had been absent from local lists for much too long a period; then Mr. d'Albert played his pianoforte concerto in E major, and with it won a decided popular triumph without deeply stirring the admiration of the critical. The work is modern in form, inasmuch as it employs the device of community of themes and there is no pause between the movements—a familiar device since the fashion was set by Liszt. The music seemed most effective or most idiomatic in the Scherzo section. Berlioz's transcription of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" and Rimsky-Korsakow's symphonic suite "Scheherazade" brought the concert to a close, and in the last piece Mr. Hess, the leader of the violins, with his brief solos made a fine impression, as deep a one, indeed, as he did when he presented himself as a virtuoso at the first concert in Joachim's Hungarian concerto.

THE SYMPHONY IN NEW YORK

Boston Players Enthuse Big Audience with Programme Brilliantly Performed.

[Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald.]

NEW YORK, Feb. 16, 1905. It was a programme of unusual interest, brilliantly performed, that marked tonight's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall, before a large and enthusiastic audience. Cesar Franck's D minor symphony headed Mr. Gericke's list. This was followed by Strauss' tone poem, "Don Juan," and Goldmark's overture, "In Italy," opus 49. This latter number was a novelty locally, as was also Max Bruch's serenade for violin and orchestra, in which Marie Nichols, violinist, made her reappearance as the soloist of the occasion.

Both Mr. Gericke and his men were in fine feather and roused the house to enthusiasm with their interpretations. Miss Nichols met a warm welcome, well deserved by her finished and effective playing. Mr. Hess, the concert master, conducted her number and supplied an admirable accompaniment for it.

Baltimore American

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1905.

D'ALBERT AND BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Program Was Exceptionally Fine. Great Playing of the Soloist.

The program given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening at the Lyric, under the direction of Mr. Gericke, was exceptionally fine and entirely worthy as a fifth part of the season's educational music in Baltimore by the Boston organization. It consisted of the following numbers:

Goldmark—
Overture, "In Italy," op. 49. First time.
D'Albert—
Pianoforte Concerto in E major (in one movement), No. 2, op. 12. First time.
Weber—
"Invitation to the Dance," Rondo Brillant. Orchestrated by Hector Berlioz.)
Rimsky-Korsakoff—
Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade" (after "The Thousand Nights and a Night") Op. 35.
1. The Sea and Sinbad's Ship.
2. The Story of the Kalandar Prince.
3. The Young Prince and the Young Princess.
4. Festival at Bagdad. The Sea. The Ship Goes to Pieces Against a Rock Surmounted by a Bronze Warrior. Conclusion.
Soloist, Mr. Eugen d'Albert.

It will be observed that the music is all modern, requiring a full orchestra, and such as cannot be heard here at present except from these musicians.

The opening overture by Goldmark was first heard in America at Chicago last year, and thus was its first performance in this city. Although something of a symphonic poem, it is written in the old, open overture form, starting with an allegro, then going to its slow movement, and ending with a vigorous allegro. Its instrumentation calls for all the brass, including four horns, three trumpets, three trombones, one tuba, and these call for many strings, full woodwind and all the "furniture."

Goldmark has the good taste to choose worthy themes for his musical works, as he did in the Sakuntala overture, when he made his subject the "Sacred Ring," one of the oldest Hindoo dramas in existence. He has realized the fact that, in order to be impressive at this age, music must have something to express which is in itself worthy of expression, in this case a musical picture of Italian skies and life.

Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" was the senior number of the program, but beautiful and fresh as it always is, it was made still more attractive by orchestral instrumentation by Berlioz.

Eugen d'Albert, who was recently heard in the Beethoven concerto, last evening presented his own, thus appearing both as composer and performer. Naturally his interpretation of his own work cannot be questioned, but there was some uncertainty in the rendition owing, no doubt, to the fact that he could not appear at once as composer, performer and director. Generally, however, the work was given smoothly and with precision, but being new to those who listened, it failed to give the pleasure that was felt in his playing of Beethoven.

Familiarity with a good work helps very largely toward its enjoyment. When people listen to the Schumann concerto or a Beethoven or the Grieg or any other familiar work they know just what to expect, and are pleased if they get it. But the same pleasure cannot be had from any new work. It must be heard more than once to be understood and enjoyed. The composer was recalled several times, but mainly on account of his magnificent performance, which is as effective and strong as ever.

Altogether, the concert was the most educational which the orchestra has given this season, and as such was very highly enjoyed.

THE SUN

BALTIMORE, WEDNESDAY, FEB 15, 1905.

D'ALBERT THE SOLOIST

French Pianist Appears With Boston Symphony Orchestra.

With D'Albert as the soloist and with the Rimsky-Korsakoff symphonic suite "Scheherazade" in lieu of the usual symphony, last night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Lyric was one of the notable musical events of the winter. The program offered by Director Gericke was ultra-modern—as "modern as tomorrow," with the exception of a single number, the Weber "Invitation to the Dance."

The overture with which it opened was Goldmark's "In Italy," which was heard here for the first time, and which was first played in Vienna a little over a year ago. The fact that its first performance in this country was by the Chicago Orchestra, under the leadership of Theodore Thomas, last December, only a few weeks before his death, added a pathetic interest to its initial performance here. The composition is cast in the form of the old Italian overture and is marked by beauty of theme, fluent transitions and mellow coloring.

D'Albert appeared both as a composer and as the piano soloist, and in both displayed his brilliant musicianship. He played his brilliant musicianship. He for piano and orchestra, which, like the overture, had not been heard before, arousing tremendous enthusiasm by his Titanic mastery of the technical resources of his instrument. His arpeggios were marvels of clarity, his double notes and chord passages crashed out with the relentlessness of boundless power.

Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" symphonic suite brought the program to an end, the Weber "Invitation to the Dance" serving as the lighter trifle by which the appetite for the more piquant Russian offering was whetted.

As the title indicates, the inspiration for the musical ideas of the composition was drawn from the "Arabian Nights," and the whole is an impressionistic portrayal, in vivid and exotic coloring, with an Oriental exuberance of musical imagery of some of the most fascinating of the Sultana's tales. "The Sea and Sinbad's Ship" forms the subject of the first movement; the "Story of the Kalandar Prince" that of the second; "The Young Prince and the Young Princess" the third, and in the closing movement a fete at Bagdad, which passes with dreamlike inconsequence into a revel at sea and ends with shipwreck near the Mountain of Enchantment. Like other things impressionistic, there are points of view, or, rather, of hearing, at which the heavy splashes of orchestral coloring and the emphasis given to the unusual make the musical picture grotesque and fantastic. There are other phases, though, in which richness and beauty dominate the picture. As a whole, the composition—as it was superbly played by the orchestra—not only challenged attention, but held it enthralled.

The Providence Journal.

Published by the Providence Journal Co.
Nos. 209 and 213 Westminster St.
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1905.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Last of the Series Attended by Large and Enthusiastic Audience.

The third and last concert for the present season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given in Infantry Hall last night. There was an unusually large audience, practically every seat in the hall being taken, and the superb playing of the orchestra was greeted with a marked display of enthusiasm. The programme was as follows:

Overture to "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G-minor, op. 26.....Max Bruch
Mr. Willy Hess.
Largo.....Handel
Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic," in B-minor, op. 74.....Tschaikowsky

Fine as the performances of the Boston Orchestra usually are, that of last night was exceptional in its character. Seldom have we heard such volume and purity of tone, such delicately balanced ensemble, such vigor and spirit sustained from beginning to end of a long and difficult programme. Something of this was due perhaps to the presence of so large and sympathetic an audience. But, whatever the reason, it is certain that the players fairly outdid themselves and the result was one of the most enjoyable concerts that has ever been heard in this city.

The opening number on the programme, Wagner's familiar "Tannhauser" overture, gave evidence that the air was charged with electricity, if it be that subtle fluid that makes fiddlers' arms move in unison and "back row" artists draw tones unusually mellow and sonorous from their tubes of wood and brass. It was not the academic and conventional rendering to which we have so often listened. The passionate, whirling, voluptuous music of the Venusberg pulsated with life; the solemn hymn of the pilgrims marched on to its excellent climax with thrilling dignity and power. And the mark of artistic achievement thus set was never lowered during the evening.

The equally familiar "Largo" of Handel was given with fine effect by the strings. A novel arrangement was used, the air being given out first as a solo with harp accompaniment, then repeated by all the violins with support of the full orchestra. Mr. Willy Hess, the new concert master of the orchestra, gave the solo with great delicacy and taste, and a fine contrast was afforded when the full body of strings took up the repetition. The number was much applauded

It is safe to say that those who voted for Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony were more than pleased with its presentation. Mr. Gericke's reading was both broad and subtle and his interpretation was splendidly set forth by the players. Every shade of nuance and expression was brought out with the utmost care and supreme technical finish. It was a worthy ending to a grand concert.

Mr. Willy Hess, who appeared in the role of solist, chose for his selection one of the most brilliant of violin concertos. His playing was masterly in the best sense of the word. He has an admirable equipment; a tone beautifully clear and at the same time incisive, a free and graceful bow arm, any amount of digital dexterity and, above all, the nervous force and musical feeling that marks the true artistic temperament. We do not often hear so good a player. The audience was quick to respond. There was tumultuous applause, which could hardly wait for the close, and he was recalled a number of times.

It is a pleasure to know that, as a result of the interest manifested in this concert and the very large attendance, a series of symphony concerts for next season is assured. Had the result been different, it would have been a deep disappointment to all true lovers of music and a reflection upon the status of musical taste in this community hard to be borne.

SUNDAY HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVII., NO. 57.

SUNDAY, FEB. 26, 1905.

SYMPHONY PLAYS SINDING'S SUITE

New and Disappointing Music Is Sombre, Austere and in Certain Ways Forbidding—Not Much That Is Strong in It.

SCHELLING APPEARS FOR THE FIRST TIME

Plays in Frank, Straightforward Manner Rather Than with Finesse—Von Vecsey Gives Third and Last Recital Here.

The programme of the 16th Symphony concert, given last night in Symphony Hall, Mr. Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

"Episodes Chevaleresques," suite, op. 55, Sinding
Concerto in A minor for piano.....Schumann
Symphony No. 1 in C minor.....Brahms

The suite by Christian Sinding, the Norwegian, was played here for the first time, and the third of the four movements was omitted. The composer is known here chiefly by his symphony in D minor, played here six years ago, a piano quartet, a piano trio and a few piano pieces. The symphony, as we remember it, is an austere, granitic work, in certain ways forbidding, and much of the music, to those who would fain be lulled by mellifluous strains, is as downright ugliness. The sombreness is that which we have learned to associate, perhaps without good cause, with Norwegian scenery and music.

The scherzo is grim, and grimness is the pervading characteristic, for Sinding in this symphony is not a man of contrasts. He is an earnest Norwegian, well versed in the traditions and formulas, a man who speaks with his own voice; he is not content with his little parish; he screams his thoughts so that the world may hear, while Grieg, however charming his expression may be, is essentially a man satisfied with a narrow horizon and a quiet life, unlike Sinding, who is a radical by nature, with decided views on art, politics, economic questions, and a leaning toward Socialism. Such a one is the Sinding of the symphony.

The suite appeared first, we believe, as a piano composition for four hands, in 1898. Whether it was composed originally for piano or orchestra we do not know. There is no programme, there are no mottoes. The title, "Knightly Episodes," or "Knightly Adventures," is enough. The first movement, which is in the nature of a march, is striking at the opening, both in thematic structure and in orchestral dress, but there is little said after this opening. The trumpet solo is melodically conventional, and the invention throughout the movement, and in fact throughout the work, is not conspicuous. The funeral march of the second movement is a lamentation of the type that is immediately popular and soon forgotten. The old device of thematic repetition with strongly marked rhythm and a constant crescendo to a crashing climax works its customary effect. But neither here nor in the finale is there much that is truly strong or individual. The suite is far inferior to the symphony, though it will at one hearing win the applause which would be denied the more powerful and characteristic work.

Mr. Ernest Schelling played for the first time in Boston. He was born near Philadelphia—some say in Pennsylvania, others in New Jersey, and Mr. Schelling, we hear, is inclined in his belief toward the latter state. As a child he played in public, and then he studied in European cities and has for some years appeared with success as a virtuoso in Europe and in South America. He chose Busoni's arrangement of Liszt's "Spanish Rhapsody," and the composition was announced for performance, but Mr. Schelling changed his mind and played Schumann's concerto. This latter work is music of an intimately romantic nature and is more effective in a small hall. There are some who go so far as to say that the concerto is for ladies only, a sneer to which we cannot say Amen; but it is not a concerto that favors a virtuoso in a great hall. Like Chopin's concerto in E minor, it should be brought close to the audience.

Mr. Schelling played in a frank, straightforward manner, rather than with finesse, and his performance was in black and white, not in colors. His interpretation was not to us romantic, nor was it any way engrossing. His technique was adequate; it was, indeed, fluent, and it was displayed with modesty and ease. He will give a recital this week, and there will then be a better opportunity to examine the precise nature of his artistry. Last evening he was apparently at his best in the first movement. He was heartily applauded by the audience.

The first symphony of Brahms, a work which has been both over-praised and unduly disparaged, with its tragically intense first movement and its triumphant close, was welcome to many. The orchestral performance throughout the evening was of a high order of excellence.

The programme of the 17th concert will be different from that announced on the music page of today's Herald. As changed, it will be as follows: A Faust overture, Wagner; Bachrich's transcription of a prelude, adagio and gavotte by Bach; Schubert's symphony in C major. Mr. Campanari, baritone, will sing an aria from Mozart's "Cosi fan tutti" and an air by Gluck.

[72]

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Sinding—Episodes Chevaleresques. Suite for Orchestra. Op. 25. (3 movements.)
Schumann—Concerto for Piano. A minor, Op. 54. Soloist, Mr. Ernest Schelling.
Brahms—Symphony No. 1. C minor. Op. 68.

This was a fine programme, a presentation of some of the best phases of modern composition, without any puzzle-music of any kind. Sinding's Suite, given for the first time, was lofty and earnest, and presented many modern orchestral effects without attempting either the wild metaphysics or the ascetic ugliness of some of the 20th century music. It was not "programme-music," for it did not tell a definite tale, but it was a divine stimulant to the poetry and imagination lying dormant in each auditor; and this is one of the highest functions of instrumental music.

Although the orchestration of the work was very advanced, its form was clear, and there was beautiful melody in the Suite as well.

Some of the modern composers imagine that tune must be a weakening of musical composition, since in its primary elements a melody is usually merely a presentation of tonic, dominant and subdominant harmony. But these radicals forget that there are many other scale-forms besides our own major and minor, and that these are almost virgin soil to the latter-day composer.

Instead of telling a definite story Sinding presents 3 contrasted emotions around which each auditor is at liberty to wreathe his own narrative. The first movement is a lofty march, suggesting the pomp and military splendor of knighthood; the second a funeral march and a lament; the last a dashing and courageous sort of finale.

There is enough of counterpoint in the work to make it interesting to the musician, but it is also comprehensible to the laity. The finale shows a falling-off from the power of the first 2 movements. The work was greatly applauded and is evidently popular music in its best sense.

Schumann's orchestration, and that of Brahms as well, suffered a little by comparison with that of the modern Norwegian. The thoughts of the 2 German composers are imperishable, and, in their field, unrivalled, but Schumann could not, and Brahms would not, use the modern orchestra in its full kaleidoscopic power.

The pianist of the concerto was warmly welcomed and much applauded. Mr. Schelling is an American, and we have not many natives who hold their own as composers and performers in Europe. It was a delight to bathe in the melodies of this romantic concerto. But we found far more of Florestan than of Eusebius in the interpretation of Mr. Schelling. Everything was performed with clearness and surety, the ensemble was always correct, but we missed the ineffable tenderness of Schumann,—his dreaminess and subtlety.

Nevertheless there was much to praise in the performance and we must hear the young artist in other schools before summing up his abilities. That these are worthy, however, is beyond any question. He was twice recalled at the conclusion of the concerto.

Then came a Brahms feast! The C minor symphony is a severe test for any but the initiated Brahmsites. Its first movement is a veritable jungle of development of themes. The man who says that he loves this movement on a first, or second, or third hearing, is deceiving himself or others. Its depth is not to be lightly fathomed. But, once understood it wears forever, like Bach's fugues.

The work grows easier of comprehension as it advances. The second and third movements are almost popular.

But the crowning glory is in the finale; here we have a more modern Beethoven. It is built upon the lines of the finale of the ninth symphony, but without the screaming vocal effects. It is an epitome of the entire symphony, reproducing material from the 3 first movements, as the ninth symphony does. It has a popular melody as its core, as the Beethoven work has. But it achieves more than the older classic. Instead of a Dionysiac frenzy of joy its measures give the utmost loftiness. Its climax is as great as any in the entire symphonic repertoire.

Mr. Gericke achieved an absolute triumph in this movement. His reading was something to grow ecstatic over. The orchestra was at its best; all played commendably, although horns, flute and pizzicato strings call for a word of especial praise. We doubt if this finale could have been better played by any orchestra existing.

We wish that the D'Indy symphony could have been heard with this, as an object lesson, an awful example, an "abschreckendes Beispiel"! It was a delight to see that the audience appreciated the height attained, for the public, instead of rushing for coats, wraps and trolley cars, remained to give most hearty applause.

Louis C. Elson.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1905
Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

At the sixteenth symphony concert the soloist was Mr. Ernest Schelling, a young American pianist who made his first appearance in Boston. This was the programme:

Sinding: Episodes Chevaleresques, Suite in F major for Orchestra, Op. 35. (First time.)
Schumann: Concerto for Pianoforte in A minor, Op. 54.
Brahms: Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68.

The production of a novelty, in this case Sinding's suite called "Episodes Chevaleresques," was once more attended by illluck. No one seemed to care for the composition at all. From Sinding one expects a work of interest. The man has already proved himself a musician of a certain consequence, with a gift of melody, a grotesque sort of grim humor, fine skill in orchestration, and a distinct originality. Perhaps these "episodes" produced Saturday evening would prove more interesting than they did if they were furnished with a programme. As it was, they left the impression of three rather irrelevant movements in a not strikingly knightly vein. The first, a march, sets out stirringly with a theme that at once seizes the attention. But the interest does not hold. Pleasant music follows, there being an abundance of melody, all dressed out in charming orchestral array, only no bit of melody bears any very apparent relation to the next bit. Some of it, furthermore, in particular the solo for trumpet, is more commonplace than could be looked for from Sinding. The second movement of the suite is funeral music, agreeable to hear, but in no way noteworthy, and the third, a brilliant piece, again causes wonder as to the reason of the title "knightly." The composer, in short, would have done better to call his work simply a suite, or else to have written out a few words of guiding programme. As the composition now stands, it keeps one wondering just wherein its somewhat vague measures deserve their title. Except for the last movement, the episodes apparently gave little pleasure.

It cannot be regarded as a wise policy for a pianist to come before a strange public with the Schumann concerto. Schumann, although he made use of the old term concerto, was far from disposed to write a piece through which a pianist might dash for the glorification of his prodigious technique, accompanied the while by full orchestra. On the contrary, Schumann antedated Mr. Converse by some sixty years in writing a poem for orchestra and pianoforte, or Vincent d'Indy in his symphony for pianoforte and orchestra. Brilliant piano players, of course, misunderstanding Schumann, have performed the concerto as distinctly in the solo vein, as though it were the Liszt E flat, but they have thereby ruined the effect of the work. And some artists have fittingly effaced themselves, notably Miss aus der Ohe—with a dishearteningly dull result. At this last performance of the concerto, Mr. Schelling had better luck than Miss aus der Ohe. Artist enough to recognize the pianist's place in Schumann's scheme, Mr. Schelling made no effort to put himself forward, nor was he yet so unduly modest as to make the pianoforte part seem insignificant. In fact, he made manifest a sense of proportion that showed a true artist. For the rest, it will be wiser to postpone comments on Mr. Schelling's pianoforte playing till he has appeared in recital. That he has an excellent technique and that he is thoroughly musical is clear. Qualities of romance and imagination he showed less distinctly. The orchestral accompanying of the concerto was exquisitely beautiful.

All the evening, indeed, the orchestra played superbly. One could have wished, however, to hear the great Brahms symphony earlier in the evening. There are people who do not admire Brahms. To bring home to them their strange lack of appreciation, they should be given opportunities to hear the great master's works under the most favorable conditions. Now even the most devoted worshippers of Brahms will admit that the first symphony is of heavier calibre than a Moszkowski suite—they would probably have expressed it as "profounder," but it comes to much the same thing. For the benefit, then, of those who love Brahms, and for the education of such persons as love him not, let a Brahms symphony, in especial the first, be presented early in the evening, before the ears and mind are exhausted with music.

At this week's concert Mr. Campanari is expected to sing. The programme of orchestral works will be as follows: Wagner, A Faust overture; Bach-Bachrich, prelude, adagio and gavotte; Schubert, symphony in C major.

R. R. G.

Boston Sunday Globe.

BOSTON, FEB 26, 1905.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The American pianist, Ernest Schelling, appeared as soloist at last week's Symphony concerts, playing Schumann's A-minor concerto. Sinding's suite, "Knightly Adventures," and Brahms' C-minor symphony were the other numbers. The Sinding suite was played for the first time at these concerts, and but three of the four movements were given. Throughout the work there is a peculiar blending of precise rythms with a sort of scampering accompaniment which gives a pleasingly unique touch to the composition suggeting the movement of mounted warriors and fitting the title of "Knightly Adventurers." The idea of marching is carried through each movement, and very skilfully, too, for the melodic combinations are very charming, love motives are mingled with chivalric episodes in the closing part, and the whole work seems to illustrate vividly the traditional accomplishments of the armored knights of old. The peculiar tross arpeggios of the opening movement immediately arrests attention, the various developments are full of odd twists in Sinding's orchestration, there is a wealth of beautiful harmonies for all the lighter instruments, and to the heavier ones the composer has given many undulating measures rich in melodic material. It is a work of grand proportions and specially interesting by reason of its marked originality in treatment.

The orchestra performed the suite in splendid style, the immense amount of staccato playing being perfect in time and crispness of execution. The brasses had plenty of work, and they did it with the usual harmony of phrasing and tonality, their parts in the second movement being specially good. The woodwinds deserve mention, too, for they work in the finale. The ensemble playing by all the string contingents revealed anew a unanimity and precision that seems to be about faultless.

Mr Schelling's interpretation of the Schumann concerto was masterly. His finger dexterity is of the highest order, he plays with an air of authority that is very convincing, he does not make any fuss about his work either in fortissimo of the more delicate passages, and he evidently has all the difficulties of the keyboard under excellent control. The cadenza in the first movement was played with a deftness and clavity which was repeated in the closing movement, showing that Mr Schelling was physically able to cope successfully with Brahms' lighter moods, even after the strenuous demands of the intervening intermezzo. In the second part the romantic style was carefully observed, the "dialogues" between the orchestra and piano were very charming in presentation and in the third movement the chord passages in fortissimo were executed with a technical ability of the highest order. The whole interpretation was a fine example of pianistic skill and the performer's reception was of the most demonstrative nature. The accompaniment by the orchestra left nothing to be desired and Mr Gericke's men closed the program with a magnificent performance of Brahm's great C minor symphony.

This week's program will comprise Wagner's "Faust" overture, prelude, adagio and gavotte, Bach-Bachrich and Schubert's C major symphony. The soloist will be announced later.

The Boston Post

The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

SUNDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 26, 1905

NEW ORCHESTRAL WORK

Sixteenth Symphony Concert Featured by Sinding's "Episodes"

The 16th Symphony concert was given last evening, with Ernest Schelling, pianist, as the soloist. This was the programme:

"Episodes Chevaleresques," Op. 35.....Sinding
Concerto for pianoforte.....Schumann
Symphony No. 1.....Brahms

Sinding's "Episodes Chevaleresques" was heard in this city for the first time. It has been given at Philadelphia and Chicago, however, also at London and other places.

Ernest Schelling, pianist, was heard for the first time here, in Schumann's A minor concerto. Mr. Schelling was born in this country, but has lived in Europe for some years, where he has become favorably known, both as pianist and composer. He is still under 30, is unusually tall and slim, which gives him a striking appearance on the stage. His technic is highly developed, yet by no means infallible; his tone is delightfully pleasing and sympathetic, he never pounds the instrument, and his manner is quiet and unaffected.

His interpretation of the concerto was honest, intelligent and enjoyable, although he appeared to hold himself in too much reserve, and there was often a lack of the poetic sentiment necessary for an ideal performance of the concerto. However, it is evident that Mr. Schelling is a pianist that will rank among the best of them, with added years, and his reception last evening was most flattering, there being many recalls. The concert ended with a performance of Brahms' symphony No. 1.

SUNDAY HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVII., NO. 64.

SUNDAY, MARCH 5, 1905.

The programme of the 17th Symphony concert given last evening in Symphony Hall, Mr. Gericke conductor, was as follows:

A "Faust" overture.....Wagner
Recitative and Air of Thoas from "Iphigenia in Aulis".....Gluck
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte....Bach-Bachrich
Aria from "Cosi fan tutte".....Mozart
Symphony in C major.....Schubert

The orchestral numbers were finely played. The overture by Wagner was interpreted with impressive dramatic force, with true intensity. How the original score, composed in 1839-40, compares with the present version (1854-55) we have at present no means of knowing. Wagner himself said that he had rewritten the instrumentation throughout, made many changes, given more importance to the middle section. It is the one purely orchestral work by him that leads the hearer to think that Wagner might have been a great composer without any reference to the opera house, a great composer in symphonic form.

As remodelled, there are suggestions of the influence of Liszt, and, strange to say, there are passages that might have been written, as far as the mood is concerned, by Schumann, who, however, could not have woven the orchestral dress. It would be interesting to hear the two versions in the same concert, just as it would be interesting to hear the "Polonia," "Columbus" and "Rule Britannia" overtures of Wagner, dated respectively 1835, 1836 and 1836-37, which preceded immediately the "Faust."

The Herald spoke a month or so ago of a performance of the three in a concert at London early in the year. It is a singular fact that whereas Wagner in his younger days was a good deal of a sensualist—he played the part with indisputable success for many years thereafter—and was deliberately and aggressively sensual in his opera founded on "Measure for Measure," there is in the "Faust" overture hardly a trace of the peculiar and glowing sensuousness that plays a dominating part in his important stage works. Whatever passion there is in the passing musical thought of womanhood, as typified by Gretchen, is cerebral. The struggles here depicted are mental, and the hero is the baffled and despairing philosopher.

The transcription of Bach's violin music was performed with such verve that the applause was unusually hearty and long continued. It was the applause that rewards a favorite virtuoso, and, as The Herald has often hinted, this orchestra is always the true virtuoso assisted now and then by some singer, pianist, violinist. Mr. Gericke called upon the players to acknowledge the applause and twice were they compelled to rise and bow. The same tribute might justly have been paid the wind players after the second movement of the symphony. Such beauty of tone, such phrasing and such accuracy of ensemble are seldom heard in any European orchestra. Perhaps we are all too much accustomed to the uncommon skill and musicianship of the various choirs in this band of players.

The symphony was read and played with marked taste and gusto, and the music, as always when heard under such conditions, made its way straight to the heart of the hearer. When this work, with its sustained gush of melody, its infinite wealth of beauty, seems too long, then it is the fault of the conductor or of the players. As it was performed last evening, no one would have had the symphony shorter. The audience in such a performance shares the intoxication of the composer, the divine drunkenness that comes from drinking deep of beauty, the drunkenness of Nature rejoicing in a perfect day.

Mr. Campanari sang two arias of widely contrasted character which depend, however, for effect on the dramatic situation, on what has preceded and on what is anticipated. In the theatre the noble strains of Gluck, strains charged with bodement, follow immediately the lament of Iphigenia, the priestess, and of the attendants exiled with her. The goddess saved her, yet the fates are not yet satisfied. The strangers will arrive, and Thoas the king will fall a victim to one of them. The solemn stage scene and the awful atmosphere prepare the hearer for Thoas' confession of dread.

But put the King of Taurica in concert dress and let him suddenly begin his recitative, and what is Thoas to the audience, or it to Thoas? So, too, the unfamiliar aria of Mozart demands imperatively the comic situation, the sight of the lovers now disguised tempting the fidelity of their sweethearts. The aria needs not only the scene, the presence of the women, but the action of the comedian, the gestures, the pose, the dramatic exaggeration. Put Leporello with his famous song on the concert stage without the mocked Donna Elvira and the long roll that contains the names of Don Juan's abandoned loves and the effect is gone. So with this aria. When sung in concert it is merely a song, a song cast in the Mozartian mould; the music is no longer hypocritically sentimental, ironically descriptive, malicious in spirit.

This is too often the fate of the operatic artist when he appears in concert. It is a pleasure to hear Mr. Campanari's voice, to note his free delivery, his vocal animation. We remembered the dramatic force and finesse of his Ford in "Falstaff," the part in which he attained a truly dramatic height, and while he sang this air from "Cosi fan tutte" we could not help thinking how admirably he might say the words and interpret the spirit of this fine instance of Mozart's dramatic power in a stage representation of a delightful work.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Wagner—A Faust Overture.
Gluck—Recitative, "The Gods have foreshown me the future," and Aria, "Foreboding Fear of Ill," from Iphigenia in Tauris."—(First time at these concerts.)
Mr. G. Campanari.
Bach—Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, in Rondo form.—(Arranged for Strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Mozart—Aria, "Turn your glances on him," from "Cosi fan tutte."—(First time at these concerts.)
Mr. G. Campanari.
Schubert—Symphony in C major, No. 9.

The "Faust" overture by Wagner wears well. It grows better with repeated hearings, and many that was unclear becomes beautiful or dramatic with familiarity. The Faust that is [illegible] is a profoundly dissatisfied gentleman, somewhat like the pessimistic Don Juan that Richard Strauss has introduced to the concert-room. The overture was finely interpreted.

"Coming events cast their shadows before." The concerts given by the symphony orchestra last Friday and Saturday plainly indicated that the [illegible] was coming, or at least was [illegible]. At the [illegible] the artistic [illegible] school which has [illegible] concerts for [illegible]

[illegible] Mr. Hess, who [illegible] with excellent [illegible] Mozart and Gluck selections.

[illegible] people are [illegible] examining [illegible] first prelude, [illegible] were buried in [illegible] the "Well-tempered [illegible] must be sorely [illegible] Liszt has discovered [illegible] displays of double octaves [illegible] chords, in some of the [illegible] and preludes, the famous [illegible] served with various [illegible] and at this concert [illegible] of the violin solos made [illegible] piece for the string [illegible]

"The discoverers are quite right! There are more things in Bach's music than are dreamt of in our philosophy. It would be easy to make an Irish folk-song out of the Fugue in F major ("Well-tempered Clavichord," Book 2, No. 11,) and Jensen's romantic "Murmuring Breeze" is but a rhythmic change from Bach's "My heart ever faithful." The 3 numbers of the little Suite were splendidly played, the first violins doing what was practically solo work.

In the finale Bach discarded the Musette (bagpipe) Trio which he often employed in Gavottes and used, instead, the old Rondo form, in which one chief theme is served over and over again, with layers of counter themes between. Padre Martini's famous Gavotte (originally called "Les Moutons") has this antiquated form. It requires an especially attractive chief theme to make it bearable, and this it possessed in the Gavotte.

It may seem incredible, but Bach in this arrangement made the hit of the concert and aroused such a furore that Mr. Gericke, after bowing and bowing again, caused his orchestra to rise and bow, which they were forced to do twice, and even after this it seemed as if the public had determined to force an encore.

Another [illegible] work was [illegible] the [illegible] as the [illegible] Poor [illegible] tried to do this [illegible] in his Sonata Pathetique and Sonata Appassionata, but very many [illegible] how much richer emotional power is expressed by D'Indy or Loeffler [illegible] some of our resident symphonists.

The chief defect of the work was that it did not present any puzzles for the auditor to riddle out. When every one had braced himself for a severe task, for a strenuous mental labor, this puerile work caused the brows to unbend, the scowls to disappear, and it actually rested and refreshed the public! We need not repeat, we trust, that this is not the purpose of music; the highest function of the modern art is to perplex, to puzzle, to make the auditor work, and, if possible, to make him miserable. This symphony does none of these things, therefore one may hope that it will be laid upon the shelf from which Schumann and Mendelssohn never should have rescued it.

Dvorak once wrote that he considered Schubert's genius to be best displayed in his orchestral and instrumental works. One almost agreed with this radical statement after hearing the excellence of the interpretation of this symphony. The horn played nobly in the opening introduction, and the trombones made much of their phrases in the coda—the first really characteristic trombone passage that was ever written in a symphony. The wood-wind were exquisite in the second movement and in the subordinate theme of the first. The orchestra gave those mighty figures of 4 strokes each (perhaps Schubert borrowed this idea from Beethoven's violin concerto) with magnificent power. The concert therefore came to an end in a blaze of glory.

Louis C. Elson.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, MARCH 6, 1905

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

This was the programme of the seventeenth symphony concert, at which Mr. Giuseppe Campanari was the soloist:

Wagner: A Faust Overture.
Glück: Recitative, "The gods have foreshown me the future," and Aria, "Foreboding Fear of Ill," from "Iphigenia in Tauris." (First time at these concerts.)
Bach: Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, in Rondo form. (Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Mozart: Aria, "Turn your glances on him," from "Cosi fan tutte." (First time at these concerts.)
Schubert: Symphony in C major, No. 9.

The feature of this admirable concert was the absolutely perfect performance of the great Schubert symphony, that work which, often times, seems great chiefly on account of its proportions; although Schumann spoke fervently of its "heavenly length," it is not always easy to accept his opinion as final. After last Saturday's performance, however, the beauty of which cannot be forgotten, one can only believe that if the work prove tiresome it is because it is not well read and executed, or because it is not properly placed on a programme. Even at this last concert one might have wished the symphony to come first, but, at all events, it had not been preceded by a long programme of heavy character.

The ever-recurring delight aroused by sympathetic performances of Schubert's most notable works would seem to prove once and for all that melody is the chief stay of music. A musical composition may be dramatic to the core, in its very essence quivering with emotion, as witness the most characteristic works of Tchaikovsky. Their very qualities of emotionalism make them grow old. And so with harmony. Many is the piece now written that enchants the connoisseur by the piquancy and originality of its harmonic progressions, without much else in its favor. Since harmony constantly changes its fashions, the unusual of today becoming the usual of tomorrow, what is to be the fate of a composition, that depends for its worth on original harmony alone? Brilliant orchestral color, too, will soon cease to be of avail, unless it be supported by other qualities, for nowadays every music student, apparently, can produce a score that glows with color, just as every conservatory pupil, at present, can develop a pianoforte technique that would have made Mozart stare.

And Schubert, who is not known to have had novel views on the subject of harmony and who was reproached with ignorance of counterpoint, was able to set music on paper that today delights the world. The man possessed the gift of melody to a degree almost unequalled before or since his time, and he likewise was blessed with a feeling for form second only to that of Mozart. A subtle sense of rhythm, too, was one of his most valuable assets. With such an equipment, why should he not write music to live, as indeed he has?

But music like Schubert's needs a perfect production, if it is to convey its entire message. In the C major symphony, on Saturday, Mr. Gericke did a piece of conducting of which he must surely feel proud, and by which Boston must feel itself honored. With such perfection of detail that each little solo or duet was an exquisite delight, with a fineness of rhythm no less than entrancing, and with an understanding of the color scheme of the score that made Schubert seem as much a master of color effects as Debussy of the twentieth century, Mr. Gericke at the same time read the work with a breadth that possessed infinite grandeur. It was a wonderfully poetic, noble interpretation of a noble poem, and as such it will be long remembered.

The remainder of the concert demands few words. The familiar pieces by Bach, in their orchestral garb, gave much pleasure, especially the gavotte, which so tickled the audience that they were quite determined to have it over again. Mr. Gericke, on the other hand, equally determined not to break the admirable rule of Symphony concerts in regard to encores, motioned to the orchestra to rise in acknowledgement, a proceeding which had to be repeated. In these days of lukewarm enthusiasm such applause at a pianoforte recital would have meant at least three encores. The excitement was easy to understand, however, for the Bach pieces were indeed brilliantly played.

Mr. Campanari, to turn to the soloist, was not happy in his selections. The noble measures from Glück's "Iphigenia" mean little when wrested from their surroundings, and, furthermore, Mr. Campanari sang them as though he had learnt them especially for the concert. The gay comedy of Mozart, too, away from the stage, made comparatively little effect, although much applause was given Mr. Campanari's musicianly, artistic singing. As an interpreter of Mozart Mr. Campanari has few superiors.

The soloist at the coming concert will be Mr. Kreisler. The programme is as follows: "Manfred" Symphony, after Byron's poem, Op. 58, Tchaikovsky; concerto for violin, Brahms; overture, "Leonore," No. 3, Beethoven.

R. R. G.

The Boston Journal

FOUNDED 1833

WELL BALANCED SYMPHONY CONCERT

Although Minus Novelty, It Charmed Heart as Well as Ear.

The seventeenth concert of the Symphony Orchestra was a fine example of a well-balanced, interesting musical recital. Though without novelties and lacking any highly-colored or dissonant "tour de force" of the ultra-moderns, it said its message with beautiful clarity, and charmed the heart as well as the ear.

[illegible] was there, yet not the Wagner of the intense and tremendous music-dramas. His early "Faust" overture is almost classic in form as compared with his later expression, and it shows the genius of the man in purely orchestral writing.

The Bach transcriptions aroused the audience to a very unusual and probably quite unexpected pitch of enthusiasm. At the end of the familiar gavotte in E major a tremendous salvo of applause burst forth, so long and hearty that the players twice rose in a body to acknowledge it.

Mr. Campanari is always a welcome figure on our platforms, and it is pleasant to find that his noble voice is yet as fresh and melodious as ever.

The ever-lovely Schubert symphony in C major was the benediction, and a very impressive one it was. Rarely has it been played, even by our own orchestra, with such superb poetry and absolute clearness. Truly, the shelf is not for Franz Schubert as yet. Many a later master will proceed into the fog of oblivion before this matchless maker of melodies.

The Boston Post

The Representative Democratic Paper

CAMPANARI THE SOLOIST

Orchestra Concert Includes Two Symphony Numbers by the Celebrated Baritone

The 17th concert of the season was given by the Symphony Orchestra last evening, with Mr. Giuseppe Campanari as the soloist. The programme was as follows:

A "Faust" overture.....Wagner
Recitative and Aria.....Gluck
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte.....Bach
Symphony No. 7.....Schubert

The overture, so different from Wagner's usual style, so lacking in something usually associated with the works of Wagner, was very well given, but not received with much enthusiasm.

As the soloist, Mr. Campanari was accorded the hearty reception to which he has been accustomed in Boston since the days when he first left the ranks of the Symphony players to sing in opera. He was in excellent voice last evening—his round, full, melodious tones filling the hall apparently without the slightest effort on his part. He gave two numbers, the first a recitative, "The Gods Have Foreshewn Me the Future," and aria, "Foreboding Fears of Ill," from "Iphigenia in Tauris," both by Gluck, and the second Mozart's "Turn Your Glance on Him," from "Cosi fan Tutte." Mr. Campanari was forced after the second number to bow his acknowledgments several times to long continued applause.

The symphony, by Schubert, in C major, is very fine, especially the first movement, but, as a whole, it seems just a little long drawn out and a bit monotonous as well. There was nothing in the programme, however, that showed so well Gericke's marvellously perfect control over the body of splendid musicians under his direction.

Mr. Fritz Kreisler will be the soloist at the next rehearsal and concert.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD

[illegible]

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

(From Mr. Elson's Criticism.)

PROGRAMME.

Wagner: A Faust Overture.
Gluck: Recitative, "The Gods have foreshown me the future," and Aria, "Foreboding Fear of Ill," from Iphigenia in Tauris."—(First time at these concerts.)
Mr. G. Campanari.
Bach—Prelude, Adagio and Gavottte, in Rondo form.—(Arranged for Strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Mozart—Aria, "Turn your glances on him," from "Cosi fan tutte."—(First time at these concerts.)
Mr. G. Campanari.
Schubert—Symphony in C major, No. 9.

It is astonishing how much people are digging out of Bach in these latter-days! Gounod set the fashion by exhuming an "Ave Maria" out of the first prelude; lesser composers have brought to light romances and reveries that were buried in the other preludes of the "Well-tempered Clavichord" (whose temper must be sorely tried by some of them); Liszt has discovered great fortissimo displays of double octaves and heavy chords, in some of the other fugues and preludes; the famous Chaconne has been served with various kinds of sauce piquante; and at this concert we had some of the violin solos made into a fine display piece for the string orchestra.

The discoverers are quite right! There are more things in Bach's music than are dreamt of in our philosophy. It would be easy to make an Irish folk-song out of the Fugue in F major ("Well-tempered Clavichord," Book 2, No. 11,) and Jensen's romantic "Murmuring Breeze" is but a rhythmic change from Bach's "My heart ever faithful."

The 3 numbers of the little Suite were splendidly played, the first violins doing what was practically solo work.

In the finale Bach discarded the Musette (bagpipe) Trio which he often employed in Gavottes and used, instead, the old Rondo form, in which one chief theme is served over and over again, with layers of counter themes between. Padre Martini's famous Gavotte (originally called "Les Moutons") has this antiquated form. It requires an especially attractive chief theme to make it bearable, and this it possessed in the Gavotte.

It may seem incredible, but Bach in this arrangement made the hit of the concert and aroused such a furore that Mr. Gericke, after bowing and bowing again, caused his orchestra to rise and bow, which they were forced to do twice, and even after this it seemed as if the public had determined to force an encore.

Boston Sunday Globe.

BOSTON, MARCH 5, 1905.

AT THE SYMPHONY.

Giuseppe Campanari, the popular baritone, appeared as soloist at yesterday's Symphony concert, singing a recitative and aria from Gluck's opera, "Iphigenia in Tauris," and an aria from Mozart's unfamiliar opera, "Cosi fan Tutte." Wagner's "Faust" overture, Bachrich's arrangement of three movements from the E major and A minor violin concertos by Bach and Schubert's C major symphony completed the program. The Bachrich arrangement for string orchestra was a novelty which proved to be the feature of the concert and its performance doubtless would have pleased Kreisler greatly, for he played the E major violin concerto at a concert here recently and the work of the orchestra was an example of ensemble playing such as is not often heard except in organizations of this standard. The three parts, prelude, adagio and gavotte, are in rondo form, and to have each contingent perform its part with a unanimity of tone production seemingly like one instrument was a notable achievement, even for Mr Gericke's men. The precision of execution, the attack and delicate shadings throughout the suite were all very skilfully managed and the spontaneous enthusiasm of the audience which each movement evoked was indisputable evidence of deep appreciation of an exceptionally artistic performance.

Our tried and true Campanari was in his usual excellent form, and the favorite baritone sang with his accustomed success. The Gluck excerpt calls for no special comment. The Mozart aria was delivered in the delicious buffo style of his Figaro, and it is almost needless to say that his second contribution found much greater favor with his auditors than did the more somber air by Gluck.

Wagner's "Faust" overture received a masterly interpretation, the tragic import of the story so vividly transcribed in musical form being given due effectiveness by the orchestra. The heavier contingents were admirably proportioned in their relative ensemble work, the basses not being too loud or harsh for the strings in fortissimo passages. The whole performance was in the proper spirit, dignified and impressive.

The four movements of Schubert's noble symphony were played in the usual style—a grand and sympathetic exposition of one of the greatest works of a musical genius.

Fritz Kreisler will be this week's soloist, playing Brahm's violin concerto, Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony and Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, No. 3, will complete the program.

[74]

ADVERTISER

MARCH 6, 1905

THE PENSION FUND CONCERT.

Our symphony orchestra gives to Boston better orchestral music than can be heard in any other city of the United States. Its members are cut off from such benefits as accrue to those who are members of the Musicians' Union. It is therefore the duty of every musical Bostonian to see to it that the pension fund, the chief guarantee of the permanency of the organization, does not languish. The large audience present yesterday proved that our public are not insensible to the charms of such a beneficence when combined with a fine concert.

The concert was a "Wagner programme," and gave some interpretations of the master's works that the opera company will have hard work to equal during the coming week. Madame Gadski and Mr. Theo. Van Yorx were the soloists, and the programme culminated with the "Love-death" from "Tristan and Isolde," in which Mme. Gadski sang the part of Isolde with that nobility and power which she always manages to impart to such passionate scenes.

One may alter the old Latin proverb into "De beneficentia nil nisi bonum," for we may speak nothing but good of a beneficent concert such as this. But were the strictest judgment applied the concert would still merit only laudation. It was a most enjoyable occasion with the added zest of helping a worthy cause.

The orchestra has never given a more interesting, a more brilliantly performed Wagner concert.

The 3d act of "Lohengrin" was given with a small chorus to sing the "Bridal Chorus," and the 1st act of "Die Walkuere" from the monologue of Siegmund (before the hearth) to the end.

Mme. Gadski was in her best voice, and Mr. van Yorx again surprised us by his surety in the most trying numbers. It is seldom that one hears the tenor part of a Wagnerian opera sung with such musical security and perfect intonation.

The audience was very enthusiastic, especially after the Sieglinde music and the Isolde number, and the enthusiasm was deserved; it was a triumph for solo artists, for Mr. Gericke and for our orchestra.

Louis C. Elson.

BOSTON JOURNAL.

MARCH 6, 1905.

WAGNER'S POWER TO CHARM ALL POTENT

Splendid Audience, Both in Size and Quality, Hears Symphony's Pension Fund Concert.

The power of Richard Wagner, first to draw people together, and then to charm and excite and satisfy them by his music, was well exemplified at Symphony Hall last night, when a splendid audience, both in size and quality, listened to the concert in aid of the pension fund of the Symphony Orchestra.

The program was Wagnerian throughout, including selections from "Lohengrin," "Die Meistersinger," "Die Walkure" and "Tristan und Isolde." Mr. Gericke conducted, and the soloists were Johanna Gadski and Theodore Van Yorx.

Gericke's Fine Surprises.

Rarely has better purely orchestral interpretation of Wagner's music been heard in this city. Mr. Gericke himself, as if shaking off his regular Symphony conservatism, displayed more fire, more genuine emotionalism than he has yet vouchsafed to Boston.

To say nothing of the exquisite beauty of the "Lohengrin" prelude—for that was to be expected—he gave such a reading and the orchestra gave such a performance of the "Meistersinger" dance, procession and homage to Sachs as one might travel this or any other country and not match.

No Rivals to Be Feared.

And the orchestral background of the "Walkure" excerpt was extraordinary for its clearness of tints and sonorous beauty of tone. When it plays as it did last night, this orchestra of ours needs fear no rival whatever.

The "Lohengrin" dialogue of the third act between Elsa and the knight of the swan, sung by Mme. Gadski and Mr. Van Yorx, does not lend itself well to concert. It is very long, it loses from absence of stage effects and the music is not of sufficient variety to hold the attention.

Nor were either of the singers at their best in it. Gadski's voice showed occasional worn spots, while Van Yorx seemed ill at ease and was not always true to pitch.

They Appear to Advantage.

The magnificent scene in the first act of "Die Walkure," where Siegmund and Sieglunde plan the escape from Hunding, was on a far nobler plane, and both artists appeared to better advantage. Gadski's thorough knowledge of the role was evident, and she was vocally fine and inspiring. Mr. Van Yorx regained confidence and sang with ease, purity and dramatic strength. He made the "spring song" both manly and musical, and in other ways acquitted himself like an artist. Gadski's singing of the "Tristan" love-death was full of emotion and was musically noble as well.

Boston Daily Globe.

MONDAY, MAR 6, 1905.

GADSKI AND VAN YORX.

They Were the Soloists of the Wagnerian Program at the Symphony Pension Fund Concert.

The announcement of a "pension fund concert" by the Boston symphony orchestra, with such soloists as Mme Johanna Gadski and Theodore Van Yorx, sufficed to send a large audience into Symphony hall last night, which approved with decided and repeated emphasis every feature of the splendid Wagnerian program.

To be sure, the orchestral part of the program was the quintessence of idealism, so far as swing, rhythmical power and emotional effectiveness was concerned. The baton of the conductor, when one stopped to consider it, was, of course there in evidence in Mr Gericke's masterful hand; but the golden floods of melody introducing the first and the third acts of "Lohengrin" seemed fairly to play themselves, through some hidden forces of their own; and it was proved anew what a truly superb organization this is which reflects honor on Boston by bearing its name.

It was a field-night for the Wagnerites, and not a single subtlety of the elaborate scoring was lost to the eagerly responsive audience. Mr Van Yorx is sure of friendliness with a Boston gathering of music lovers, for they cannot soon forget his work at the last Easter symphony fund concert, and on other occasions. Last night his voice was in excellent trim. The tones were not forced; inflection and intonation were true, and the really phenomenal ability to cope with a florid score opposite to such a tremendous voice as Mme Gadski's was achieved with apparent ease. In the second part of act one of "Die Walkure" came a tenor climax rarely accorded in a concert; and he made use of it with modesty and artistic taste—without either yelling or an apparent strain as certain grand opera tenors have been heard to do in time past in this same score.

Mme Gadski, singing entirely from memory save in the finale "Isolde" number, was most adequate in the parts where strident declamation is called for in the Wagnerian tone-poems. In the wonderfully dramatic duo as Brunnhilde her voice rang delightfully true throughout the intricate and highly imaginative score, and whenever it chanced that a double fortissimo climax came, the uttermost portions of Huntington av could have heard the gloriously-maintained "grandioso."

In the shorter sentences, interrupted by the tenor conversational parts, Mme Gadski's method (at least at close range) is not quite so pleasing, conveying more of the impression of respiration and suggestive, a trifle of the tricks the best of vocalists use to hide that necessary function.

But it was none the less Wagner sung by a consummate Wagnerian artist, born to the parts, so to speak, and singing them as in the veritable atmosphere of the legends themselves.

The diva received many recalls and a great wreath of ribboned laurel from her Boston admirers, who were evidently out in force.

Mme Gadski's "love-death" solo from "Tristan," with the harp-strains predominant in the almost overpoweringly brilliant accompaniment, was a memorable soprano triumph, vividly portraying the tragic ending of Isolde.

The program said "a small chorus" would assist. It would be more close to the truth to say that a very excellent and exceedingly modest group of Boston vocalists, possibly 10 in number, would sing a portion of the "Lohengrin" score "behind the scenes." Through the half-opened doors in the rear of the stage came floating the lovely choral parts of the opera, sung as it is seldom heard here, and adding greatly to the variety, beauty and symmetry of the excerpt. The leading choral soprano voice, whoever it belonged to, deserved a special mention for extraordinary resonance and carrying power.

The only fact (why must there always be at least one?) in keeping this red-letter concert from perfection was that no provision was made for the "small chorus" to stand forth and let the audience throw its figurative bouquets in the usual way.

since the visit of Mr. Motti was all too short. We are not likely to be fortunate enough to hear Mr. Gericke conduct an opera: it would be the more agreeable, therefore, if, once in a way, he would include Wagner excerpts in symphony concert programmes. The prospect of hearing the third act of "Siegfried" well sung at a symphony concert would pack Symphony Hall to the very doors.

In addition to the animated and brilliant playing by the orchestra, there was beautiful singing from Mme. Gadski. In her best voice, she sang the dramatic measures of Sieglinde quite as carefully and nicely as she did the music of Mozart's Countess one year ago, and with superb effect. Her rehearsal of the story of the sword was thrilling. Mr. van Yorx, while not an opera singer, did well with his task, in Siegmund's Love Song, presenting a beautiful example of lyrical singing that again might serve as an object lesson to most heroic tenors. The whole concert, in fact, was so enjoyable that one can only wish it may be an earnest of other concerts to come.

R. R. G.

The Boston Post

The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

Symphony Orchestra Gives Wagner Programme

At Symphony Hall last evening, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, M. Gericke, conductor, and Mme. Gadski, soprano, and Mr. Theodore Van Yorx, tenor, assisting, gave a concert in aid of its pension fund.

It was an all-Wagner programme, but went outside of the stock Wagner concert numbers, and gave long excerpts from two of the music dramas. The Lohengrin prelude was followed by the entire first scene of the last act, with Mme. Gadski as Elsa and Mr. Van Yorx as Lohengrin, the bridal chorus being sung by a small chorus off the stage.

Four excerpts from "Die Meistersinger," the entr'acte, dance of apprentices, the procession of the mastersingers and the homage to Hans Sachs, were played by the orchestra alone.

With Mme. Gadski as Sieglinde and Mr. Van Yorx as Siegmund, the last part of the first act of "Die Walkure" was given, and the programme was completed by the orchestral prelude and Isolde's love death from "Tristan und Isolde," Mme. Gadski singing Isolde.

Mr. Gericke is not a fervid interpreter of the Wagner scores, but his wonderful command over his players, the splendid instrumental work of the band, and the perfect technic of the performance make up for any lack of temperament.

Mme. Gadski's greatness in the Wagner roles is everywhere conceded, and even in concert, her Elsa, Sieglinde and Isolde were dramatic to a degree. In the Lohengrin and Walkure numbers she sang without a score, and was able to interpret the music with all attention to dramatic effect. She was in splendid voice, and her work was enthusiastically applauded.

Mr. Van Yorx is a lyric tenor, with a voice of splendid quality, good range and considerable power. But he is not a Wagner tenor, and with the additional handicap of being obliged to sing from the score, fell short of a really forceful reading.

Yet, strangely enough, his Siegmund was far better than his Lohengrin. He gave the Spring Song with splendid intelligence, and even the difficult sword music was not without dramatic power.

There was a large and appreciative audience and the pension fund must have realized a good, round sum.

Mr Kreisler played the first movement with the delicacy of sentiment that he has led his hearers to expect, but in the coda he rose to the extreme virility demanded of the soloist. As he played the unaccompanied cadenza the accuracy and brilliancy of fingering and the marvelous bowing effects brought both audience and members of the orchestra forward in their chairs in rapt attention. As he paused at the close none was more demonstrative in applause than Willy Hess, who conducted, and the men of the orchestra.

The second movement, the adagio, showed Mr Kreisler once more to be a finished artist in phrasing and exquisite tone shading, and the emotional passages were played with dignity and charm. But, of course, the opportunity for the virtuoso is the finale. With bars of double-stopping, demanding accuracy of fingering, brilliant runs and florid arpeggios, the closing movement is the test of the technical skill of the artist. In this movement every exaction of the composer was fulfilled with consummate art.

Mr Kreisler's dexterity, the precision of his fingering and the breadth and vigor of his bowing were shown in his playing of the vivid passages of the finale of the concerto.

With fine self-control, yet the violinist is not lacking in enthusiasm, and even in these days of acquaintance with many masters of the violin there is that element in Mr Kreisler's playing of the difficult Brahms concerto that has made him distinctive among his fellow artists. His performance merited the pronounced approval which insisted upon his reappearance three times after he retired at the end of his solo. Commendation is due Mr Hess for his direction of the orchestral parts of the concerto.

The orchestra, under the direction of Mr Gericke, played the Tschaikowsky symphony "Manfred," which was given once during last season. Mr Gericke's reading of this work of the Russian composer is with a palpably high and sympathetic purpose.

There is little to be added to the praise of the presentation of this composition which previous performances have merited. The tone coloring of the last part of the first movement, depicting Manfred's wanderings and despair, was especially inspiring, and the orchestra, notably the strings, was extremely impressive in the largo, the finale of the symphony.

As the concluding number the orchestra played Beethoven's overture to "Leonore" No. 3. The overture was in distinct contrast to the symphony and the Brahms concerto, and the buoyant as well as the pathetic emotions were represented with the usual versatility. In the impetuous passages the work of the strings was especially brilliant.

There will be no concert this week as the orchestra will be absent on tour.

SUNDAY HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVII., NO. 71.

SUNDAY, MARCH 12, 1905.

"MANFRED" BY SYMPHONY.

Concert Was One of Most Interesting and Impressive of the Season—Kreisler Praised.

The programme of the 18th Symphony concert, given last night in Symphony Hall, Mr. Gericke conductor, was as follows:

"Manfred" symphony.....Tschaikowsky
Concerto in D major for violin.....Brahms
Overture to "Leonore," No. 3.....Beethoven

It is not too much to say that this concert was not only one of the most interesting and impressive of the season, it was one of the noblest exhibitions of orchestral and virtuoso skill that have been given in the series for so many years. The programme was well arranged, the performance was continuously engrossing.

Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" is now familiar to the Symphony audiences. We learn from the composer's correspondence how hard he found the task imposed on him by his friend Balakireff, how often he was tempted to put it aside. He wrote to Mrs. von Meck: "The work is so difficult and complicated that I myself am for the time being a Manfred." The hearer is often tempted to find Tschaikowsky of the tortured soul in this dramatic symphony, Tschaikowsky in Manfred's garb. He himself was doubtful about the future of the composition: "My 'Manfred' will be played once or twice, and then it will disappear; outside of a handful who go to the symphony concerts, no one will happen to hear it. It is only the opera that brings us nearer to the people." There was opera in Boston last week; but how often were dramatic operatic effects as striking as those worked by certain pages of this symphony, effects the more poignant because they were without the addition and also the distraction of scene and situation and human beings playing to the eye?

The symphony has its weak spots, no doubt, and it would be easy to say this or that about them; but when all has been said, it is the work of a great man. It is not the equal of Tschaikowsky's fifth symphony, which is to us his masterpiece, a work of anchor and more sustained imaginative flight than the now more popular "Pathetic," nor is it to be classed with the "Romeo and Juliet" fantasia. But the best portions of it are very human and of tragic intensity. Mr. Gericke's reading was unusually dramatic and stirring, and the orchestral performance was one to be remembered. This may also be said of the performance of Beethoven's overture.

Mr. Kreisler's playing of Brahms' concerto is to be placed by the side of his performance of Beethoven's concerto four years ago, and there is no higher praise. Whoever wished before this concert that Mr. Kreisler had chosen another work forgot immediately his disappointment or his prejudice. The violinist's artistic individuality and his rare gifts and attainments vitalized and glorified the music that to some is for the most part dull and inert.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT, MARCH 6, 1905

Symphony Hall: Pension Fund Concert

The second concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in aid of its pension fund was given in Symphony Hall yesterday evening, before an audience moderately large in size, very brilliant in appearance, and demonstratively enthusiastic. With the assistance of Mme. Gadski, Mr. Theodore van Yorx and a small chorus, the following programme of Wagner excerpts was presented:

Introduction, Act. I., "Lohengrin."
First Part of Act III., "Lohengrin."
Entr'acte, Dance of Apprentices, Procession of the Mastersingers, and Homage to Hans Sachs, from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," Act. III.
Second Part of Act I., "Die Walküre."
"Tristan and Isolde," Introduction and Love-Death.

Mme. Gadski.

Although it is a constant irritation to Bostonians that, despite their musical culture, they are forced to hear their Wagner in concert hall, or, if they have good luck, massed in one week at the opera, they may thank their stars that they are given the opportunity of listening to Wagner readings such as those offered last night at Symphony Hall. The high repute of Mr. Gericke in Vienna as an operatic conductor is well known here, and so often as Mr. Gericke places on his programme an excerpt from an opera, Wagner in particular, one longs to hear him conduct the entire work in the theatre. To comment on yesterday's programme in detail would take an undue amount of time, but, none the less, one cannot pass the occasion by without remarking on the poetical, finely felt reading of the "Lohengrin" prelude, and on the majesty and strength of the Homage to Hans Sachs, not to mention the humorous fun of the Apprentices' Dance. Mr. Gericke is manifestly a Wagnerian conductor of poetry, dramatic warmth and authority such as we are not accustomed to in America,

Boston Sunday Globe.

BOSTON, MARCH 12, 1905.

Kreisler the Symphony Concert Soloist.

Mr Tucker's Concert Today—Kneisel Quartet.

Recitals and Minor Events of Interest.

Mr Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, was the soloist at the Symphony concert last evening. Mr Kreisler has made himself very favorably known in Boston since he first appeared here in December, 1900, yet his performance last evening added materially to the respect and esteem in which he is held by local musicians and Symphony audiences. For the violinist showed more force, vigor and breadth than even his admirers have heretofore credited him with, and he also demonstrated an even greater facility of execution.

His solo was that composition which presents such variety of opportunity for pure violin virtuosity — Brahms' concerto in D major. To those who have heard Mr Kreisler play before, his interpretation of this master work for the solo violin carried the conviction that never had they shown just appreciation of the marvelous capabilities of this young artist. To those who had never heard the modest, unassuming musician before, his work was amazing. None could gainsay him worthy to interpret this masterpiece of technical exaction dedicated to and first performed by the great Joachim.

[75]

CONCERT OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Albany Argus
Feby 28-1905

Albany Provided Enthusiastic Welcome and Big Audience for Mr. Gericke and His Men.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at Harmanus Bleecker Hall for the second successive year made good its tentative claim to place a sa regular institution of the Albany music season with an audience that in size and appreciation was a credit to the city's musical spirit. Mr. Ben Franklin has been the good genius of the concert world for both Albany and Troy for some years, and with his faculty for wresting financial success from the most daring musical projects has assured to Albany for these two seasons the great privilege of welcoming the Symphony Orchestra under the auspices of the two local organizations, the Diatonic and Amateur Musical clubs.

The music news of last night was the appearance of Ernest Schelling, the pianist, who made his Boston debut with the orchestra as newly as Saturday night, and who shared the solo honors of the Albany concert with the famous Symphony Orchestra violinist, Timothee Adamowski. Mr. Schelling covered himself with credit in the Schumann A Minor Concerto which he had substituted, both in Boston and here, for the Busoni-Liszt "Spanish Rhapsody" announced with much scholarly annotation by Philip Hale in tho analytical program. Mr. Schelling, who by all accounts failed to stir Boston deeply, received from Albany an enthusiastic ovation, in which the most generous share of applause came from the critical musical element, and was only incidentally to be attributed to Albany's encore habit. The pianist was recalled half a dozen times to receive the cordial assurance that Albany considered his work worth while. His sympathetic playing and his liquid and fluent tone were the two characteristics of his art displayed in the quiet-colored felicity of the Schumann concerto that seemed to have touched the poet's lines:

"Where the quiet-colored end of evening smiles Miles on miles."

There was in this less opportunity for brilliant virtuoso display such as the Liszt-Busoni number would have vouchsafed him, and therefore the Schumann concerto was probably the better test of the musician. Mr. Schelling is a young American pianist, born in Philadelphia and educated abroad, who has won his triumphs in Europe and South America for the past four years, and figures, according to Mr. Hale's program, as court pianist to the Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. Soloist to the Boston Symphony Orchestra is, however, an even more distinguished title in this land, and last night Mr. Schelling justified the prestige of the connection. Personally, Mr. Schelling is to be noted as the most elongated piano player before the American public—he is probably over six feet in height and slender.

Timothee Adamowski, the violinist, is essentially a Boston Symphony belonging, though the Adamowski Trio has gained fame of its own and was heard here several seasons ago under the same clubs' auspices, Mr. Adamowski then reestablishing bonds of friendship with the Albany public which was most spontaneous in its welcome to him last night and called him forth again and again at the close of the D minor Concerto by Wieniawski, for violin and orchestra, which he played with all romantic beauty and the true Zingara dash for the final movement.

But the event of the evening, provided by Mr. William Gericke and his seventy men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the Symohony No. 6, in B minor, "Pathetic," op. 74, by Tschaikowsky, which was heard by some part of the public a week ago on the great organ of All Saints Cathedral by Dr. Starnes, and the Goldmark overture, "In Italy," opus 49, for the first time in Albany. The Goldmark overture is all tunefulness and gay beauty, of balmy blue skies, wandering minstrels and but one volcanic eruption "con fuoco." It was played with exquisite coloring and brightness, flutes, oboes, horns and clarinets busy with the high, free notes of the out-door world. The Tschaikowsky "Symphony Pathetic" in somewise parallels the Dvorak "From the New World" symphony, when it is considered that, like Dvorak's musical impression of America, Tschaikowsky's symphony was conceived fresh from the American tour—on the Furst Bismarck bound from New York to Hamburg, again according to Mr. Hale's program, through the original themes found outlet in several compositions for the pianoforte. The Symphony Pathetic is in four movements, a Thanatopsis of music written in the maturity of the composer's powers, with the vision of death faced sombrely but calmly. The adagio leads to the three memories of youth, of romance, of triumphant labor and hurrying life, and in the finale, the adagio lamentoso, is introduced funeral music, the symphony ending abruptly and with tremendous effect, in a deatn knell of suddenly muted sound. This was the noble effort of the evening to which the orchestra brought its superb equipment of technique and its interpretive power, and Mr. Gericke and his men most thoroughly deserved the triumph of effect upon the audience achieved by this compelling masterpiece of musical interpretation.

Press and Knickerbocker
Feby 28-05

Classical Music.

A crowded house, consisting of the cultured music lovers of Albany, Troy and nearby cities, greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Harmanus Bleecker Hall last evening on its third appearance in Albany in concert tour, under the management of Ben Franklin, the noted tenor. The program commenced precisely at 8:15, the overture being Goldmark's "In Italy," op. 49. This is the first time this magnificent musical gem has been played in Albany and it was greeted with a storm of applause. The second number, which was to have been a Liszt's Rhapsody, was substituted by a Schumann concerto in A minor. This was for the pianoforte with orchestral accompanist. Mr. Ernest Schelling, without the peculiar mannerisms which seem so essential to all celebrated pianists, simply charmed the audience with his wonderful technique and his marvelous command of the keyboard. Two parts of the concerto were played, and indeed they were all too short for the enthusiastic listeners.

Mr. Timothee Adamowski, the violin soloist, was heard here last winter with the Adamowski Trio, so Albanians were somewhat familiar with his wonderful playing. Wienawski's concerto in D minor was Mr. Adamowski's solo selection, which was in three movements superbly rendered, particularly the Romance Andante non troppo.

The gem of the program was Tcharkowsky's Symphony No. 6 Pathetic in B minor, op. 74. There were four movements. It is scored for many instruments, particularly oboes, flutes and horns. The funeral strain, though not heavy, is heard throughout, but with such sweet tenderness and musical pathos, that it quite captivated the ear and reached the heart, notwithstanding it is the work of a mighty musical genius. Under the able baton of Wilhelm Geriske, conductor, the orchestra fully kept up to the high standard which has made the Boston Symphony famous, and the program was one so choice that Albanians will long remember its masterly charms.

Times-Union
Feby 28-05

Symphony Orchestra Concert.

One of the largest audiences that has ever filled Harmanus Bleecker hall greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening and from boxes, orchestra, balcony and gallery enthusiastic welcome was given one of the finest musical organizations in the world. Mr. Ben Franklin, who was sponsor for this great musical treat given under the auspices of the Diatonic and Musical club has given musical Albany a cause for pride. Mr. Ernest Schelling, the pinaist, and Mr. Timothee Adamoskie were given a most cordial greeting, being recalled several times. The musical gem of orchestral music was the Symphony Pathetique of Tschaikowsky magnificiently rendered by the seventy men of the orchestra, Mr. William Gericke, conductor.

In the boxes were Mrs. Higgins, Mrs. Selden E. Marvin, Miss Higgins, Col. Selden E. Marvin, Dr. Frederick J. Cox, Mr. Higgins. Another box party included Mr. Frank Sill Rogers, Dr. W. W. Battershall, Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher W. Battershall.

Dr. and Mrs. James P. Boyd, Mrs. Marion Randolph and a party of friends occupied another box. In the audience were Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Cushman, Miss Laura Townsend, Mrs. Howard Rogers, Dr. and Mrs. A. H. Richmond, Mrs. A. N. Brady, Mrs. E. Palmer Gavit, Miss Brady, Miss Jessie Hamilton, Mrs. Harry H. Bender.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Tschaikowsky—"Manfred" symphony.
Brahms—Concerto for violin. Mr. Fritz Kreisler, soloist.
Beethoven—Leonore overture, No. 3.

The reviewer tried the experiment of ubiquity on Saturday and found that the art of being in two places at the same time is remarkably convenient during the opera season. It was a pleasant contrast to hear Mr. Gericke's conservative orchestral balance after Mr. Fiertz's instrumental fury of the past week, and the poetic fervor of Tschaikowsk[illegible] and the classical purity of Brahms had re[illegible] after the blatant "Hage[illegible] mentally unbalanced "[illegible]

The "Manf[illegible] symphony is one of Tschaikowsk[illegible] strong works. It could not be otherwise when the composer himself was a s[illegible] George Manfred[illegible] through without [illegible] Astorre in this symphony Tschaikowsky [illegible] as many as Richard Strauss [illegible] his most [illegible] in orchestral [illegible] Byronic than can be imported [illegible] Manfred that [illegible] good pessimist in the [illegible] Musical overtures [illegible] which [illegible] Tschaikowsky [illegible] man who [illegible] of the [illegible] Russian [illegible] Schumann [illegible] Manfred [illegible] religion, and [illegible] contrast between [illegible] dying [illegible] digged [illegible] Manfred [illegible] the [illegible] Byron's [illegible] Tschaikowsky [illegible] the [illegible] Mario [illegible] such good [illegible] is the fugal work [illegible] a point that we [illegible]

[illegible] less than a [illegible] of that [illegible] much detail [illegible] allowed to grow [illegible] formance. Famil[illegible] such greatness [illegible] Pierne [illegible] by the [illegible] ing to [illegible] orchestra [illegible] Schelling [illegible] Manfred [illegible] Musical [illegible] Schelling [illegible] Russian [illegible] Schumann [illegible] Manfred [illegible] Schelling [illegible] Schumann [illegible] Manfred [illegible] Schelling [illegible] Schumann [illegible] Manfred [illegible] Schelling

The Philadelphia Inquirer
TUESDAY - - MARCH 14, 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Its 130th Performance at the Academy of Music Last Evening

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, gave its 130th performance in this city at the Academy of Music last evening, when the program, as changed from what had been originally announced, comprised Wagner's "Faust" overture, Brahms' symphony in C-minor No. 1, Op. 35; the E-flat major pianoforte concerto of Liszt, and an arrangement for strings by Sigismund Bachrich, of the prelude, adagio and gavotte from Bach's sixth violin sonata in four sharps. The third of these numbers has been made familiar by a pianoforte arrangement, and as the whole was beautifully played, with the utmost brilliancy, mobility and sparkle, it was very keenly relished and the audience would not cease applauding until Mr. Gericke had the musicians rise and bow their acknowledgments. It was a wonderfully crisp and finished and masterly performance, and it illustrated the incomparable splendor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's strings in a most striking and convincing manner.

Equally excellent and enjoyable in a widely different way was Mr. Gericke's interpretation of the Brahms symphony. This is music whose adequate and satisfying delivery demands just those qualities which Mr. Gericke and the Boston Symphony Orchestra possess in such abundant measure. It is full of intricacies which need to be made clear, and of subtleties which demand to be appreciatively and sympathetically expressed, and while its beauties are great they are of a sort which must be carefully and intelligently exhibited. Mr. Gericke misses none of them. He exposes the structure of the score with a sustained lucidity in which each detail receives its proper prominence, and he communicates its sentiment with an emphasis which is always convincing without ever being exaggerated. It seems strange that this music should ever have been accounted obscure and dry and dull. Played as it was last night it is replete with life and light and beauty.

The assisting artist was Mr. Ernest Schelling, who displayed in his rendering of the familiar Liszt concerto the same qualities and the same limitations which have previously been noted. He is a masterly pianist, who has overcome all the technical difficulties of the instrument, but his tone is hard and cold and his playing is deficient in poetry and feeling. The orchestra will give another concert, the last for the season, to-morrow evening, when the program will include Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony and Beethoven's "Leonora" overture No. 3, and when Mr. Fritz Kreisler will play Brahms' violin concerto in D major, Op. 77.

ESTABLISHED 1836
PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Tuesday, March 14, 1905.

MUSIC and MUSICIANS

The last of the winter's Monday concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, took place last evening in the Academy of Music. The "Episodes Chevaleresque," by Sinding, with which the performance was to have opened, was omitted, and in its place the Wagner "Faust" overture and three familiar movements by Bach were presented. These, a prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form, were arranged for the strings by Sigismund Bachrich. In considering the work of the Boston Orchestra it is always necessary to recur to the splendid body of strings, so wonderfully rich and brilliant in tone, and always such a very noticeable feature at these entertainments. Last evening the nature of the programme was such that these several choirs of the band were heard to the greatest advantage. Unquestionably, the concert was the most delightful that Mr. Gericke has given us this winter, and it is doubtful if the orchestra ever played with greater buoyancy or more verve and spirit.

The "Faust" overture, of which we heard so splendid and stirring a reading last Saturday, was played yesterday in a little lower key, so that the music seemed more like a reminiscence of the episodes in Faust's career than an actual presentation of his emotional experiences, but the performance was a very beautiful one and confirmed the impression of importance made by the first hearing of the work this season. The three Bach numbers which followed were a perfect delight. They were presented with a fire and vigor, a fulness of tone and a warmth that roused the audience to great enthusiasm, and so insistent was the applause that Mr. Gericke made his men stand up twice in acknowledgment. The concert closed with a fine performance of the beautiful Brahms first symphony, which is so splendid in coloring and orchestration, a vivid, melodic composition, entirely characteristic of its composer and filled with the most exquisite suggestions of lieder, folk-melodies and the like. As a piece of purely romantic composition the poetic second movement is, perhaps, unequaled by anything written in recent years, and the symphony throughout was played with a fine appreciation and sentiment.

The E flat Liszt concerto, in which Ernest Schelling, the soloist of the evening, was heard, had already been given here this winter. It is a composition of no little beauty and one affording the pianist many opportunities for the display of his ability. In it Mr. Schelling made in many ways a much more pleasing impression than he did by his performance of Schumann's work or so ago. It is a concerto requiring brilliance rather than sentiment, and in this particular phase of artistic expression the young player proved most satisfactory. In the cantabile of the second movement his tone rang out pure and bell-like, and he played the characteristic figure passages with a clean-cut incisiveness that was very telling.

THE EVENING TELEGRAPH
THURSDAY, MARCH 16, 1905.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Closes Its Season—Fritz Kreisler the Soloist.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra last night closed its twentieth season of concerts in Philadelphia. It was an occasion that furnished much food for thought as to the present condition of the city's musical taste, and, coupled with the indefinite rumors that have recently been current, that the Boston band may not visit us next season, the evening was, to lovers of the best in music, tinged with some discouragement. There was the memory of what this visiting orchestra has achieved in making our local organization possible; there was the gratitude for the immense educational work that it has done; there was the regret that its great services are now not more widely appreciated. Taking last night's concert in its more immediate aspects, there were presented other features for serious consideration. Here was a concert by an organization that, in technical facility, is practically perfect; the programme was one that should have made the very widest appeal; the soloist was a man who stands in the very forefront of the "wizards" of the violin. Yet the house was scarcely half filled. The combination forced forward one question—"Is Philadelphia so provincial and narrow-minded that it can support only one orchestra?" Time was when this city was the pioneer in musical America; time was when to speak of practical support of art was to say "Philadelphia." That was, unfortunately, so long ago that it is recorded only in history and not in memory, but it seems a pity that the glory should have passed away from us.

When we say that Philadelphia makes a great mistake in neglecting the Boston Orchestra, we do not make a statement that is open to controversy. To confine ourselves entirely to the support of the local orchestra would be to shut out all the broadening influences of competition and make ourselves insular in the extreme. The very best service that we can do to the Philadelphia band is to bring rivals here in order that, by intelligent comparison, we may arrive at some definite and soundly grounded estimate of the worth of what Mr. Scheel and his musicians are doing for us. The Boston Orchestra gives us a view of one side of music; Scheel and our local players give us the other. To exclude either one is to exhibit that we are not willing to consider arguments, even when the arguments are so strong as to compel conviction. That would be narrow-mindedness and provincialism. A city like ours should not lay itself open to such a charge.

All this, of course, is not a conventional criticism of last night's concert. It is not intended to be. But, as a mere record of musical events, it may be as well to say that the orchestra played the Tschaikowsky "Manfred" symphony and Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, No. 3, in a way that proved conclusively the value of long association and recognized traditions. As to Fritz Kreisler, the soloist, who played the Brahms concerto, it only remains to repeat the verdict that has been pronounced upon him on previous appearances. Those who would compare him to Ysaye are entirely beside the mark. The two men are as different as day is to night. They have nothing in common except that both play the violin. Kreisler will have admirers who will say that he has the most wonderful left hand in the world; Ysaye will have those who will say that he, in spite of technical imperfections, is the supreme master whose verdict in interpretation is not open to question. The season has proved that both are right and both are wrong. It all depends on the personal point of view. The one conclusion that can fairly be drawn is that Kreisler and Ysaye represent two entirely different schools and that each, in his own school, is a master.

Friday Evening Recital

THE EVENING TELEGRAPH

TUESDAY, MARCH 14, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Last Night's Concert Its 130th Performance at Academy of Music.

For the 130th time the Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared at the Academy of Music last evening. The programme was somewhat changed from the one that had been announced, and consisted of Wagner's "Faust" overture, Brahms' Symphony in C minor, No. 1; Liszt's concerto in E flat major for piano and orchestra, and an arrangement by Sigismund Bachrich of three movements from Bach's violin sonata No. 6. The Wagner overture was the opening number of the programme given by the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra last week, and, coming so soon again, made possible an interesting comparison of the methods of the two bodies and their differences in expression.

The interpretation of the Brahms symphony last night was an admirable exposition of the perfection of the Boston musicians, under Mr. Gericke's direction. This orchestra is certainly a marvellous instrument, responding as one man to the touch of the leader. Such perfect unity is essential for the proper rendering of a composition like the Brahms symphony, and as presented last night it reveals new beauties of meaning and construction at every turn. It was a masterly representation of a masterly work.

An even more striking popular success was achieved by the arrangement for strings of the Bach sonata. This includes the prelude, adagio and gavotte, and as played last night, with a finish and spirit impossible to excel, aroused the audience to such enthusiasm that Mr. Gericke and his men were obliged to rise en masse to acknowledge the repeated bursts of applause. The Liszt concerto was given by Mr. Ernest Schelling, who recently appeared in a recital here. As a technician he is a master, but his playing is cold and unfeeling. He displays great skill but little sentiment, and does not rouse any particular emotion save interest in his mechanical ability.

THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD
Record Building, 917 Chestnut Street
PHILADELPHIA, MARCH 14, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

A Delightful Concert With Ernest Schelling as Soloist.

Yellow slips handed to every member of the audience at last evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music told of a radically different program from the one originally outlined. They did not tell, however, of a change even more surprising in the spirit of the orchestra. A delightful buoyancy—whether induced by the advent of spring or a human desire to show off is immaterial—seemed to have taken possession of Mr. Gericke's band. To be colloquial, they "loosened up" in the most surprising manner. Following suit, the audience rewarded them with more enthusiasm than has been evidenced at a Boston Symphony concert for many a day. Altogether it was a most astonishing evening. Nothing came off as anticipated.

The changes in the program comprised the substitution of Wagner's "A Faust Overture" for Sinding's "Episodes Chavaleresques" and the addition of Bach's "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich. Although the former work was given with intelligence and splendid finish, it was the latter which revealed one of the most potent elements of strength in the Boston players. Mr. Gericke's body of strings has few rivals anywhere. Both for precision of attack and for quality of tone it is entitled to the highest praise. This was evidently the opinion of last evening's audience, for at the conclusion of the gavotte the applause was quite out of the ordinary. The players acknowledged the honor by rising twice at Mr. Gericke's behest.

Ernest Schelling was the soloist. He gave a brilliant interpretation of Liszt's beautiful concerto in E flat, excelling, as usual, in passages calling for delicacy of treatment, but evincing on the whole rather more virility and essential vigor than was disclosed on his appearance here ten days ago. It will be interesting to hear Mr. Schelling play Chopin. He gives the impression of being able to shine in this highly-prized line of artistic endeavor. Brahms' Symphony No. 1, enthusiastically, and with a large degree of truth, sometimes referred to as the tenth symphony, closed the concert. No beauties were left undisclosed in interpretation. There was glowing brilliancy and verve in the joyous finale, while the highly spiritual second movement was rendered flawlessly.

The Press
Published Every Morning, Daily and Sunday, by
TUESDAY, MARCH 14, 1905.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Bach Played in Superb Style—Schelling the Soloist.

Enjoyable to an unusual degree was the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last evening. The program included Wagner's "Faust" overture, part of a Bach suite for strings, prelude, adagio and gavotte; Liszt's concerto in E-flat and Brahms Symphony No. 1. Schelling was the soloist and exhibited a technique of steely wrist and flexible fingers and pleased his audience along familiar lines.

But the feature of the evening was the superb rendering of the Bach suite. Here, indeed, was perfection of tone, here a perfect rhythmic balance, with gradations and shadings that had the airiest graces as well as an elephantine thump when emphasis was needed. It is not to be wondered at that the resulting enthusiasm forced Mr. Gericke and his men to rise again and again to acknowledge the deserved applause.

The whole concert, moreover, partook of this same virtuoso spirit. It was sounded in the "Faust" overture and echoed in the symphony and made the appearance of the orchestra a refreshment indeed. To-morrow evening is the last concert of the season and includes in its program the "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" Symphony and the Brahms concerto for the violin, with Fritz Kreisler as soloist.

The Evening Bulletin
Thursday, March 16, 1905.

The Boston Symphony

The last of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts for this season was given in the Academy of Music last evening, Fritz Kreisler, the violinist, being the solo performer, and Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony the principal orchestral offering. The symphony comes under the head of "descriptive music," being based on Byron's poem of the same title. It is in four movements—"Manfred's Wanderings and Despair," "The Fairy of the Alps," "Pastorale," and "The Palace of Arimanes: Invocation to Astarte: Manfred's Death." The composition is one of wonderful dramatic power, rich in its tonal effects and as descriptive of the theme, perhaps, as possible. Yet, it cannot be said to equal Tschaikowsky's great "Pathetique" symphony or some of his other works. It has much solemnity, the fairy music is dainty and sprightly to a degree, and the pastorale is distinctly poetic and beautiful, but as a whole the work leaves the impression of being fanciful and spectacular rather than of great symphonic worth. It was splendidly played last night, the fairy strains and the pastorale being especially praiseworthy. Mr. Kreisler, who made his third appearance here this season, repeated his former triumphs, playing the difficult Brahms concerto with the loveliest of tones and masterful technique. The only other number was the No. 3 "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, which the orchestra played magnificently.

8
The Philadelphia Inquirer
THURSDAY - MARCH 16, 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Its Last Concert for the Season at the Academy of Music Last Evening

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its last concert for the season at the Academy of Music last evening, when the program comprised the "Manfred" symphony of Tschaikowsky, Brahms' concerto for the violin in D major, Op. 77, and the great "Leonora" overture of Beethoven. The music in which the lamented Russian composer has sought to depict the scenery and express the sentiment of Byron's somewhat meretricious poem is not to be counted among the best of his achievements. With all its beauties it lacks spontaneity and inspiration and communicates the suggestion of an effort which has fallen short of its aim. Yet it contains much that is admirable and a great deal that is impressive, and it certainly does convey an idea of the scenes which it assumes to depict and of the emotion to which it is intended to give utterance. It was splendidly performed with eloquence and delicacy and appreciative insight, and the very earnest and sincere applause which the performance elicited was thoroughly well deserved.

The Brahms concerto was played by Mr. Fritz Kreisler, whose interpretation of it was a wonderful exhibition of technical accomplishment and artistic intelligence. Brahms' score is immensely difficult and not particularly grateful. Its structure is less clear, compact and coherent than is usual with this composer's symphonic writing, and the melodic material in which it is rich is so overlaid with complicated developments that its significance is easily missed. Thus it makes considerable demands upon the attention, and unless it is superlatively well done it is neither especially interesting nor readily intelligible. As Mr. Kreisler played it, however, with masterly authority, a lovely quality of tone, a facile brilliancy of execution, an absolute accuracy of intonation and a fine dignity of sentiment, its beauty was made manifest and its purport plain, and the high esteem in which it has always been held was convincingly justified. At its performance Mr. Gericke resigned the conductor's baton to Mr. Willy Hess, who directed the orchestra through its complexities with a competent knowledge and a clearly apparent relish.

The concert closed with a splendidly sonorous and sympathetic rendering of that greatest of overtures, the "Leonora," No. 3, of Beethoven, in which the incomparable quality of Mr. Gericke's strings was again most impressively displayed. The famous prestissimo finale was given with an electrically thrilling impetuosity.

The Evening Bulletin
Tuesday, March 14, 1905.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

An Excellent Concert Concludes the Monday Night Series.

The fifth and final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first series, at the Academy of Music last evening, had Ernest Schelling, the pianist, as soloist on a program that was decidedly one of the best Mr. Gericke has presented here this winter. Mr. Schelling was heard to better advantage, even, than on his first appearance recently. The Liszt E flat concerto, which was his number last night, is well suited to his temperament, and he is quite equal to it in technique, style and finish. Mr. Schelling's playing is distinguished by enthusiasm which he seems readily to impart to his audience, and he has a crisp, pure, firm touch that fairly sparkles under his fingers. Though sentiment and the poetic mood do not appear to be his to a noticeable degree, he has remarkable verve and spirit and as these qualities are required to the full in the Liszt concerto, his interpretation last night was thoroughly pleasing and successful.

The orchestra made its strongest appeal, somewhat unexpectedly, perhaps, in a composition by Bach—Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, in rondo form, arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich. This is distinctly Bach music, but it is Bach in an airy mood—if such a thing may be considered possible—and so delightfully was the number played that, when the last strains of the captivating gavotte were reached, the audience gave forth the evidence of its approval so enthusiastically that Mr. Gericke twice allowed all his men to rise and bow with him in acknowledgment. The other numbers were "A Faust Overture," by Wagner, played in a rather subdued but altogether beautiful style, and the splendid No. 1 Symphony of Brahms. The orchestra will give its final concert of the season to-morrow evening, with Fritz Kreisler as the soloist. He will play Brahms's concerto in D major, and the orchestra is to give the "Manfred" Symphony of Tschaikowsky and Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, No. 3.

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Thursday, March 16, 1905.

Boston Orchestra's Last Concert

The tenth and last of this season's Boston Orchestra concerts was given last night in the Academy of Music, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke. The rarely heard "Manfred" symphony, by Tschaikowsky, was the feature of the programme, and Kreisler made his fourth appearance here this season. He played the romantic Brahms violin concerto. The concert closed with the "Leonore" overture, No. 3, by Beethoven.

The Philadelphia Inquirer
TUESDAY - - MARCH 14, 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Its 130th Performance at the Academy of Music Last Evening

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, gave its 130th performance in this city at the Academy of Music last evening, when the program, as changed from what had been originally announced, comprised Wagner's "Faust" overture, Brahms' symphony in C minor No. 1, Op. 35; the E-flat major pianoforte concerto of Liszt, and an arrangement for strings by Sigismund Bachrich, of the prelude, adagio and gavotte from Bach's sixth violin sonata in four sharps. The third of these numbers has been made familiar by a pianoforte arrangement, and as the whole was beautifully played, with the utmost brilliancy, mobility and sparkle, it was very keenly relished and the audience would not cease applauding until Mr. Gericke had the musicians rise and bow their acknowledgments. It was a wonderfully crisp and finished and masterly performance, and it illustrated the incomparable splendor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's strings in a most striking and convincing manner.

Equally excellent and enjoyable in a widely different way was Mr. Gericke's interpretation of the Brahms symphony. This is music whose adequate and satisfying delivery demands just those qualities which Mr. Gericke and the Boston Symphony Orchestra possess in such abundant measure. It is full of intricacies which need to be made clear, and of subtleties which demand to be appreciatively and sympathetically expressed, and while its beauties are great they are of a sort which must be carefully and intelligently exhibited. Mr. Gericke misses none of them. He exposes the structure of the score with a sustained lucidity in which each detail receives its proper prominence, and he communicates its sentiment with an empnasis which is always convincing without ever being exaggerated. It seems strange that this music should ever have been accounted obscure and dry and dull. Played as it was last night it is replete with life and light and beauty.

The assisting artist was Mr. Ernest Schelling, who displayed in his rendering of the familiar Liszt concerto the same qualities and the same limitations which have previously been noted. He is a masterly pianist, who has overcome all the technical difficulties of the instrument, but his tone is hard and cold and his playing is deficient in poetry and feeling. The orchestra will give another concert, the last for the season, to-morrow evening, when the program will include Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony and Beethoven's "Leonora" overture No. 3, and when Mr. Fritz Kreisler will play Brahms' violin concerto in D major, Op. 77.

ESTABLISHED 1836
PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Tuesday, March 14, 1905.

MUSIC and MUSICIANS

The last of the winter's Monday concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, took place last evening in the Academy of Music. The "Episodes Chevaleresque," by Sinding, with which the performance was to have opened, was omitted, and in its place the Wagner "Faust" overture and three familiar movements by Bach were presented. These, a prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form, were arranged for the strings by Sigismund Bachrich. In considering the work of the Boston Orchestra it is always necessary to recur to the splendid body of strings, so wonderfully rich and brilliant in tone, and always such a very noticeable feature at these entertainments. Last evening the nature of the programme was such that these several choirs of the band were heard to the greatest advantage. Unquestionably, the concert was the most delightful that Mr. Gericke has given us this winter, and it is doubtful if the orchestra ever played with greater buoyancy or more verve and spirit.

The "Faust" overture, of which we heard so splendid and stirring a reading last Saturday, was played yesterday in a little lower key, so that the music seemed more like a reminiscence of the episodes in Faust's career than an actual presentation of his emotional experiences, but the performance was a very beautiful one and confirmed the impression of importance made by the first hearing of the work this season. The three Bach numbers which followed were a perfect delight. They were presented with a fire and vigor, a fulness of tone and a warmth that roused the audience to great enthusiasm, and so insistent was the applause that Mr. Gericke made his men stand up twice in acknowledgment. The concert closed with a fine performance of the beautiful Brahms first symphony, which is so splendid in coloring and orchestration, a vivid, melodic composition, entirely characteristic of its composer and filled with the most exquisite suggestions of lieder, folk-melodies and the like. As a piece of purely romantic composition the poetic second movement is, perhaps, unequaled by anything written in recent years, and the symphony throughout was played with a fine appreciation and sentiment.

The E flat Liszt concerto, in which Ernest Schelling, the soloist of the evening, was heard, had already been given here this winter. It is a composition of no little beauty and one affording the pianist many opportunities for the display of his ability. In it Mr. Schelling made in many ways a much more pleasing impression than he did by his performance of Schumann a week or so ago. It is a concerto requiring brilliance rather than sentiment, and in this particular phase of artistic expression the young player proved most satisfactory. In the cantabile of the second movement his tone rang out pure and bell-like, and he played the characteristic couture passages with a clean-cut incisiveness that was very telling.

THE EVENING TELEGRAPH
THURSDAY, MARCH 16, 1905.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Closes Its Season—Fritz Kreisler the Soloist.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra last night closed its twentieth season of concerts in Philadelphia. It was an occasion that furnished much food for thought as to the present condition of the city's musical taste, and, coupled with the indefinite rumors that have recently been current, that the Boston band may not visit us next season, the evening was, to lovers of the best in music, tinged with some discouragement. There was the memory of what this visiting orchestra has achieved in making our local organization possible; there was the gratitude for the immense educational work that it has done; there was the regret that its great services are now not more widely appreciated. Taking last night's concert in its more immediate aspects, there were presented other features for serious consideration. Here was a concert by an organization that, in technical facility, is practically perfect; the programme was one that should have made the very widest appeal; the soloist was a man who stands in the very forefront of the "wizards" of the violin. Yet the house was scarcely half filled. The combination forced forward one question—"Is Philadelphia so provincial and narrow-minded that it can support only one orchestra?" Time was when this city was the pioneer in musical America; time was when to speak of practical support of art was to say "Philadelphia." That was, unfortunately, so long ago that it is recorded only in history and not in memory, but it seems a pity that the glory should have passed away from us.

When we say that Philadelphia makes a great mistake in neglecting the Boston Orchestra, we do not make a statement that is open to controversy. To confine ourselves entirely to the support of the local orchestra would be to shut out all the broadening influences of competition and make ourselves insular in the extreme. The very best service that we can do to the Philadelphia band is to bring rivals here in order that, by intelligent comparison, we may arrive at some definite and soundly grounded estimate of the worth of what Mr. Scheel and his musicians are doing for us. The Boston Orchestra gives us a view of one side of music; Scheel and our local players give us the other. To exclude either one is to assert that we are not willing to consider arguments, even when the arguments are so strong as to compel conviction. That would be narrow-mindedness and provincialism. A city like ours should not lay itself open to such a charge.

All this, of course, is not a conventional criticism of last night's concert. It is not intended to be. But, as a mere record of musical events, it may be as well to say that the orchestra played the Tschaikowsky "Manfred" symphony and Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, No. 3, in a way that proved conclusively the value of long association and recognized traditions. As to Fritz Kreisler, the soloist, who played the Brahms concerto, it only remains to repeat the verdict that has been pronounced upon him on previous appearances. Those who would compare him to Ysaye are entirely beside the mark. The two men are as different as day is to night. They have nothing in common except that both play the violin. Kreisler will have admirers who will say that he has the most wonderful left hand in the world; Ysaye will have those who will say that he, in spite of technical imperfections, is the supreme master whose verdict in interpretation is not open to question. The season has proved that both are right and both are wrong. It all depends on the personal point of view. The one conclusion that can fairly be drawn is that Kreisler and Ysaye represent two entirely different schools and that each, in his own school, is a master.

Friday Evening Recital

THE EVENING TELEGRAPH

TUESDAY, MARCH 14, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Last Night's Concert Its 130th Performance at Academy of Music.

For the 130th time the Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared at the Academy of Music last evening. The programme was somewhat changed from the one that had been announced, and consisted of Wagner's "Faust" overture, Brahms' Symphony in C minor, No. 1; Liszt's concerto in E flat major for piano and orchestra, and an arrangement by Sigismund Bachrich of three movements from Bach's violin sonata No. 6. The Wagner overture was the opening number of the programme given by the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra last week, and, coming so soon again, made possible an interesting comparison of the methods of the two bodies and their differences in expression.

The interpretation of the Brahms symphony last night was an admirable exposition of the perfection of the Boston musicians, under Mr. Gericke's direction. This orchestra is certainly a marvellous instrument, responding as one man to the touch of the leader. Such perfect unity is essential for the proper rendering of a composition like the Brahms symphony, and as presented last night it reveals new beauties of meaning and construction at every turn. It was a masterly representation of a masterly work.

An even more striking popular success was achieved by the arrangement for strings of the Bach sonata. This includes the prelude, adagio and gavotte, and as played last night, with a finish and spirit impossible to excel, aroused the audience to such enthusiasm that Mr. Gericke and his men were obliged to rise en masse to acknowledge the repeated bursts of applause. The Liszt concerto was given by Mr. Ernest Schelling, who recently appeared in a recital here. As a technician he is a master, but his playing is cold and unfeeling. He displays great skill but little sentiment, and does not rouse any particular emotion save interest in his mechanical ability.

THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD
Record Building, 917 Chestnut Street
PHILADELPHIA, MARCH 14, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

A Delightful Concert With Ernest Schelling as Soloist.

Yellow slips handed to every member of the audience at last evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music told of a radically different program from the one originally outlined. They did not tell, however, of a change even more surprising in the spirit of the orchestra. A delightful buoyancy—whether induced by the advent of spring or a human desire to show off is immaterial—seemed to have taken possession of Mr. Gericke's band. To be colloquial, they "loosened up" in the most surprising manner. Following suit, the audience rewarded them with more enthusiasm than has been evidenced at a Boston Symphony concert for many a day. Altogether it was a most astonishing evening. Nothing came off as anticipated.

The changes in the program comprised the substitution of Wagner's "A Faust Overture" for Sinding's "Episodes Chavaleresques" and the addition of Bach's "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich. Although the former work was given with intelligence and splendid finish, it was the latter which revealed one of the most potent elements of strength in the Boston players. Mr. Gericke's body of strings has few rivals anywhere. Both for precision of attack and for quality of tone it is entitled to the highest praise. This was evidently the opinion of last evening's audience, for at the conclusion of the gavotte the applause was quite out of the ordinary. The players acknowledged the honor by rising twice at Mr. Gericke's behest.

Ernest Schelling was the soloist. He gave a brilliant interpretation of Liszt's beautiful concerto in E flat, excelling, as usual, in passages calling for delicacy of treatment, but evincing on the whole rather more virility and essential vigor than was disclosed on his appearance here ten days ago. It will be interesting to hear Mr. Schelling play Chopin. He gives the impression of being able to shine in this highly-prized line of artistic endeavor. Brahms' Symphony No. 1, enthusiastically, and with a large degree of truth, sometimes referred to as the tenth symphony, closed the concert. No beauties were left undisclosed in interpretation. There was glowing brilliancy and verve in the joyous finale, while the highly spiritual second movement was rendered flawlessly.

The Press
Published Every Morning, Daily and Sunday, by
TUESDAY, MARCH 14, 1905.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Bach Played in Superb Style—Schelling the Soloist.

Enjoyable to an unusual degree was the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last evening. The program included Wagner's "Faust" overture, part of a Bach suite for strings, prelude, adagio and gavotte; Liszt's concerto in E-flat and Brahms Symphony No. 1. Schelling was the soloist and exhibited a technique of steely wrist and flexible fingers and pleased his audience along familiar lines.

But the feature of the evening was the superb rendering of the Bach suite. Here, indeed, was perfection of tone, here a perfect rhythmic balance, with gradations and shadings that had the airiest graces as well as an elephantine thump when emphasis was needed. It is not to be wondered at that the resulting enthusiasm forced Mr. Gericke and his men to rise again and again to acknowledge the deserved applause.

The whole concert, moreover, partook of this same virtuoso spirit. It was sounded in the "Faust" overture and echoed in the symphony and made the appearance of the orchestra a refreshment indeed. To-morrow evening is the last concert of the season and includes in its program the "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" Symphony and the Brahms concerto for the violin, with Fritz Kreisler as soloist.

The Evening Bulletin
Thursday, March 16, 1905.

The Boston Symphony

The last of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts for this season was given in the Academy of Music last evening. Fritz Kreisler, the violinist, being the solo performer, and Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony the principal orchestral offering. The symphony comes under the head of "descriptive music," being based on Byron's poem of the same title. It is in four movements—"Manfred's Wanderings and Despair," "The Fairy of the Alps," "Pastorale," and "The Palace of Arimanes: Invocation to Astarte: Manfred's Death." The composition is one of wonderful dramatic power, rich in its tonal effects and as descriptive of the theme, perhaps, as possible. Yet, it cannot be said to equal Tschaikowsky's great "Pathetique" symphony or some of his other works. It has much solemnity, the fairy music is dainty and sprightly to a degree, and the pastorale is distinctly poetic and beautiful, but as a whole the work leaves the impression of being fanciful and spectacular rather than of great symphonic worth. It was splendidly played last night, the fairy strains and the pastorale being especially praiseworthy. Mr. Kreisler, who made his third appearance here this season, repeated his former triumphs, playing the difficult Brahms concerto with the loveliest of tones and masterful technique. The only other number was the No. 3, "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, which the orchestra played magnificently.

8
The Philadelphia Inquirer
THURSDAY - MARCH 16, 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Its Last Concert for the Season at the Academy of Music Last Evening

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its last concert for the season at the Academy of Music last evening, when the program comprised the "Manfred" symphony of Tschaikowsky, Brahms' concerto for the violin in D major, Op. 77, and the great "Leonora" overture of Beethoven. The music in which the lamented Russian composer has sought to depict the scenery and express the sentiment of Byron's somewhat meretricious poem is not to be counted among the best of his achievements. With all its beauties it lacks spontaneity and inspiration and communicates the suggestion of an effort which has fallen short of its aim. Yet it contains much that is admirable and a great deal that is impressive, and it certainly does convey an idea of the scenes which it assumes to depict and of the emotion to which it is intended to give utterance. It was splendidly performed with eloquence and delicacy and appreciative insight, and the very earnest and sincere applause which the performance elicited was thoroughly well deserved.

The Brahms concerto was played by Mr. Fritz Kreisler, whose interpretation of it was a wonderful exhibition of technical accomplishment and artistic intelligence. Brahms' score is immensely difficult and not particularly grateful. Its structure is less clear, compact and coherent than is usual with this composer's symphonic writing, and the melodic material in which it is rich is so overlaid with complicated developments that its significance is easily missed. Thus it makes considerable demands upon the attention, and unless it is superlatively well done it is neither especially interesting nor readily intelligible. As Mr. Kreisler played it, however, with masterly authority, a lovely quality of tone, a facile brilliancy of execution, an absolute accuracy of intonation and a fine dignity of sentiment, its beauty was made manifest and its purport plain, and the high esteem in which it has always been held was convincingly justified. At its performance Mr. Gericke resigned the conductor's baton to Mr. Willy Hess, who directed the orchestra through its complexities with a competent knowledge and a clearly apparent relish.

The concert closed with a splendidly sonorous and sympathetic rendering of that greatest of overtures, the "Leonora," No. 3, of Beethoven, in which the incomparable quality of Mr. Gericke's strings was again most impressively displayed. The famous prestissimo finale was given with an electrically thrilling impetuosity.

The Evening Bulletin
Tuesday, March 14, 1905.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

An Excellent Concert Concludes the Monday Night Series.

The fifth and final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first series, at the Academy of Music last evening, had Ernest Schelling, the pianist, as soloist on a program that was decidedly one of the best Mr. Gericke has presented here this winter. Mr. Schelling was heard to better advantage, even, than on his first appearance recently. The Liszt E flat concerto, which was his number last night, is well suited to his temperament, and he is quite equal to it in technique, style and finish. Mr. Schelling's playing is distinguished by enthusiasm which he seems readily to impart to his audience, and he has a crisp, pure, firm touch that fairly sparkles under his fingers. Though sentiment and the poetic mood do not appear to be his to a noticeable degree, he has remarkable verve and spirit and as these qualities are required to the full in the Liszt concerto, his interpretation last night was thoroughly pleasing and successful.

The orchestra made its strongest appeal, somewhat unexpectedly, perhaps, in a composition by Bach—Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, in rondo form, arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich. This is distinctly Bach music, but it is Bach in a airy mood—if such a thing may be considered possible—and so delightfully was the number played that, when the last strains of the captivating gavotte were reached, the audience gave forth the evidence of its approval so enthusiastically that Mr. Gericke twice allowed his men to rise and bow with him in acknowledgment. The other numbers were "A Faust Overture," by Wagner, played in a rather subdued but altogether beautiful style, and the splendid No. 1 Symphony of Brahms. The orchestra will give its final concert of the season to-morrow evening with Fritz Kreisler as the soloist. He will play Brahms's concerto in D major, and the orchestra is to give the "Manfred" symphony of Tschaikowsky and Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, No. 3.

ESTABLISHED 1836
PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Thursday, March 16, 1905.

Boston Orchestra's Last Concert

The tenth and last of this season's Boston Orchestra concerts was given last night in the Academy of Music, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke. The rarely heard "Manfred" symphony, by Tschaikowsky, was the feature of the programme, and Kreisler made his fourth appearance here this season. He played the romantic Brahms violin concerto. The concert closed with the "Leonore" overture, No. 3, by Beethoven.

[77]

THE NORTH AMERICAN

TUESDAY, MARCH 14.

PROGRAMME CHANGE BY BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Wagner Overture and Bach Prelude Substituted for Sinding Suite.

SCHELLING THE SOLOIST

The "Knightly Adventures" suite by Christian Sinding was stricken from the Boston Orchestra's programme at the Academy of Music last evening.

Instead of this novelty, Conductor Gericke gave the "Faust" overture by Wagner, and an arrangement for string orchestra of a Bach prelude.

The symphony was Brahms' No. 1 in C minor—a noble composition, in which the admirable quality of Herr Gericke's band was impressively illustrated.

Pianist Schelling, who last week appeared with the Philadelphia Orchestra, was the soloist, playing Liszt's bravura E flat concerto with great power and almost careless variety of expression.

Of the subtle, elusive charm of the music there was scarcely a suggestion, but the performance was academically correct, none the less, and vigorous enough to elicit prolonged applause.

The Press

Published Every Morning, Daily and Sunday, by

THURSDAY, MARCH 16, 1905.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Tschaikowsky, Brahms and Beethoven Beautifully Interpreted.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra closed its season in Philadelphia last evening at the Academy of Music in a blaze of glory by reason of its beautiful interpretation of Tschaikowsky's great "Manfred" symphony, the Brahms concerto for the violin, with Kreisler as the soloist, and Beethoven's immortal "Leonore No. 3" overture.

Since the "Pathetique" is the most amazing of Beethoven's works in that it fairly seethes with romanticism and anticipates so much that we call modern, it and the "Manfred" music fit in a way almost classic together, leaving Brahms to represent classicism in so far as his concerto, and its very robust and wonderful interpreter Kreisler, allowed. But even Brahms is quite modern in this concerto and no one questions that Kreisler is very up to date and artistic in his reading of any score, so that the whole effect of the concert was most brilliant and overwhelming with a goodly share of the well-merited musical credit on Mr. Gericke and Mr. Hess, both of whom directed as conductors.

As for the soloist, Kreisler, it is safe to say that the limits of violin playing were practically accomplished in his wonderful interpretation of the concerto. While the several movements were alike interesting in thought and loudly expressed, for the great moment of the performance was in the electrifying rendering of the long cadenza that follows the first movement. In this Kreisler surpassed all of his former efforts. Though the difficulties of elaborate passage are simply appalling, his rendering was the essence of spontaneity and ease. His technique, tone and musical understanding made the entire concerto a thing of true beauty, and Kreisler's interpretation will not soon be forgotten by the delighted audience at last night's concert.

Mr. Gericke, it should be noted, directed the orchestra in the Tschaikowsky and Beethoven numbers and directed his band to superb results. In the concerto, however, Mr. Gericke resigned the baton to his concertmeister, Willy Hess, who came to the stand peculiarly well equipped to lead such a work with such a soloist and made the evening a notable one indeed.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, MARCH 26, 1905.

Cornelius Ruebner, the piano soloist at yesterday's Symphony concert, is at the head of the department of music at Columbia college, New York, and is the successor of Edward A. MacDowell to that position. Mr Ruebner played the solo part of Grieg's A minor piano concerto, the other numbers on the program being Mozart's D major symphony, "Sadko," a musical picture by Rimsky-Korsakoff, given for the first time here, and the introduction to the opera "Guntram," by R. Strauss. The Grieg concerto is not very familiar to concert patrons, for it does not offer the pianist many opportunities to shine in solo work, the orchestration being so abundant in passages for the heavier instruments and so vigorous in tone in two or the movements that the piano part has but little prominence, except in the adagio, where there are many brilliant bits of melody.

A peculiar phase of the work are the repetitions of phrases given to the orchestra and piano, or vice versa, which doubtless is the reason why the concerto has been termed by some musicians and critics as "patchwork." It does not show Grieg at his best, although there is a mass of splendid material skilfully handled by the composer. Mr Ruebner played his part admirably, like a sincere and earnest artist, but there was little chance to judge of his full equipment of ability through his chosen medium. His style of work is very pleasing, he is unaffected in manner and certainly he played the fortissimo passages with [illegible] and celerity. All the florid [illegible] of the second movement and the finale, when it could be heard above the orchestra, was distinct, smooth and of beautiful quality. The tremendous climax to the closing movement prevented any appreciation of his skill in arpeggios and chord passages, for the piano was almost inaudible. Mr Ruebner was received with great favor.

The Rimsky-Korsakoff picture, "Sadko," which was played for the first time here, is a hurly-burly of tonal effects, weird, fantastic and vigorous as a rule, with a charming Slav dance theme running through the movement up to the climax, which is a mournful and delicate melody fading away into pianissimo. The orchestra gave the Grieg accompaniment in excellent style and in the "Sadko" the barbaric melody and dance were played with the necessary dash and abandon, the strings deserving special praise for their ensemble work.

Mozart's symphony, aside from the somewhat antiquated form of the opening movement, proved thoroughly enjoyable. Very daintily was the second part in exploitation and the rondo of the closing movement was executed with exquisite grace of expression. The Strauss number was given with good effect.

This week's program will be as follows: "Tragic" overture, Brahms; concerto for violin, Tschaikowsky; "Italian Serenade," first time here, Hugo Wolf and Hans Huber's E minor symphony. Karl Barleben will be the soloist.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, MARCH 27, 1905

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

The nineteenth symphony concert took plaec last Saturday evening, the soloist being Mr. Cornelius Rübner, and this the programme:

Mozart: Symphony in D major, "without minuet" (K. 504).
Grieg: Concerto for Pianoforte, in A minor, Op. 16.
Rimsky-Korsakoff: "Sadko," a Musical Picture, Op. 5. (First time.)
Richard Strauss: Introduction to Act ii. of the opera "Guntram."

The leading feature of the concert was the exquisite and brilliant performance of the Mozart symphony, a work which, in the hearing, proves none the less delightful because it lacks a minuet; three movements of Mozart or Haydn at a sitting are quite enough. Although every lover of Mozart must wish that his orchestral works might be heard in Jordan Hall played by a small, well-balanced orchestra, the last few performances of Mozart symphonies from Mr. Gericke has conclusively proved that these works, if treated with sufficient care, can sound exceedingly well even in Symphony Hall. On Saturday evening there were few harsh noises in the course of the D major symphony, but, on the contrary, a lively play of charming tone color, a wealth of most delicate phrasing, and also inspiring animation. The hearty applause that greeted the finale of the symphony showed that people are not tired of Mozart when they hear his music played as well as is possible even under not the most favorable circumstances. To hear this same symphony from Mr. Gericke and a chosen band in Jordan Hall or Chickering Hall would be an event of consequence. By the way, are there not musical people in plenty who would buy tickets to hear a concert of Mozart music in Jordan Hall, or Chickering Hall, the programme to include the never-performed finale to "Don Giovanni"?

The second feature of Saturday's concert was the first performance in Boston, and probably in America, of Rimsky-Korsakoff's musical picture "Sadko." This composition, it appears, was written as early as in 1867, although it was revised by the composer in 1891. It is a musical illustration of the old Russian tale of Sadko, a noted player on the gusli, a musical instrument once popular in Russia. This musician, while on a voyage, is becalmed on the high seas; to propitiate the Sea King, he is thrown overboard by his fellow-passengers. Sinking into the depths of the sea, he comes upon a merry revel, for the Sea King is marrying his daughter to the Ocean. To make the guests more contented, Sadko plays upon his gusli, to the sounds of which all the Sea-world dance, more and more wildly, the waves becoming ever stormier and stormier. Sadko breaks the strings of his instrument; the dancing comes to an end, and the sea grows still and dark.

One reading this legend with the memory of "The Thousand and One Nights" suite ringing in his ears, expects more from the musical picture "Sadko" than he finds in it. Despite its comparatively recent revision, "Sadko" remains the work of an untried hand, infinitely less skilful than that which wrought the brilliant "Scheherezade." Taking it for what it is, however, the piece played the other night is attractive music, an example of rather more naive programme music than we often hear—the composer, apparently, having attempted actually to suggest material conditions and happenings, instead of the thoughts and feelings inspired by them. In the main, he surely met with success, for in his music one can follow closely the course of the story of Sadko. Although Rimsky-Korsakoff's picture of a becalmed sea is neither so strongly felt nor so cleverly expressed as Mendelssohn's in the overture "Meerstille und glückliche Fahrt," on the whole his setting of the story is both imaginative and picturesque, the orgy of the dancing guests being especially well done. If far from great, the work is so agreeable that one must wonder at its not having been produced in America before now, since agreeable music is not too plenty. The performance was admirable.

Mr. Rübner, the head of the music department at Columbia University, did wrong to attempt to play the Grieg concerto, a work of singular charm, beauty and romance, which, while not of extraordinary technical difficulty, yet demands an interpreter of fine feeling for color, of poetry and of romantic disposition. In his place Mr. Rübner is probably very well, but his place is distinctly not that of soloist at a symphony concert.

The programme for Saturday's concert will be as follows, the soloist being Mr. Karl Barleben; Tragic Overture, Brahms; Concerto for violin, Tchaikovsky; Italian Serenade (first time), Hugo Wolf; Symphony in E minor, Hans Huber.

R. R. G.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Mozart—Symphony in D major, No. 38 (K. 505.)
Grieg—Concerto for Pianoforte.
Soloist: Mr. Cornelius Ruebner.
Rimsky-Korsakoff—Tableau Musical, "Sadko." (First time.)
Richard Strauss—Introduction to Act 11., "Guntram."

We were glad to see the Mozart symphony receive enthusiastic and long-continued applause. The public seem to mark, in a very significant manner, their appreciation of the clear-cut, intelligible, classical music, which some reviewer would persuade us should be laid altogether upon the shelf. Yet it must be confessed that some parts of Mozart's symphonies have faded greatly. Haydn's works in this form (if we except Mozart's G minor and "Jupiter" symphonies) wear better, probably because he does not attempt to become heroic or heavily dramatic.

It is in the attempts at dramatic power that Mozart's symphonies become tame to modern ears, firstly because we are accustomed to cyclones and cataclysms in this direction at present, and secondly because Mozart's effects were never intended for a Symphony Hall. If the orchestra were heard in Jordan Hall the effect of the finale of the symphony of this concert might become impressive.

Once upon a time the sforzando effects, the bursts of kettledrums and trumpets, and the secondary seventh chords, which appear in this symphony, must have been regarded as excessively powerful, but we use as ponderous effects as these in modern lullabies and slumber songs!

There was some good flute work in the finale, which is rather astonishing, for Mozart did not like the flute—in spite of his having written a concerto for harp and flute. Even in the "Magic Flute" there is but little flute-playing.

Columbia College runs to pianists. After having had a solo pianist, Mr. MacDowell, as head of its musical department for some years, it now has another in Mr. Cornelius Ruebner. This latter gentleman played steadily and sturdily through the Grieg concerto, succeeding in the heroic touches and failing in the subtler and more tender ones. He made no errors except that of appearing in this subtle and romantic concerto. In the finale his power and earnestness won the audience, and he was called 3 times.

The concerto is a work that wears well. If only Strauss and especially D'Indy had the thematic wealth of Grieg they would be the recognized masters of the present. The concerto, for all its touches of Norwegian melancholy, is a bold and masculine work and might well be called "the Heroic concerto."

"Sadko" is a kind of Russian Jonah, who was thrown overboard by his shipmates and, instead of wasting his time in the solitude of a whale's stomach, became the chief guest at a submarine "Soiree Musicale" given by the Muscovite Neptune. His playing upon his lyre (and Russian lyres are well known in diplomatic circles) caused the sea to become tempestuous and sank many ships.

"Il brisa et engloutit les vaisseaux," says the score, and Sadko does as much damage to the Russian fleet as Togo himself. Then he breaks the strings of his instrument and the sea becomes calm again. But what eventually becomes of Sadho we do not know, although he returns home safely in the composer's opera of the same name.

It is a fairly large score, of about the orchestral force of the finale of Beethoven's 9th symphony, minus voices and contrabassoon, and plus a harp. The picture of a flat sea is not as dramatic as that given by the despised Mendelssohn, with a smaller orchestra. Matters become more interesting when the companions of Sadko throw him overboard into the middle of the "Tannhauser" overture! He sinks at once in Wagner's sea of tone and begins his lute-playing quite a la Beckmesser, developing, however, into a Peer Gyntian vein.

There is some interesting figure development in the work, and in the midst of all the exciting picture the composer is intelligible and often melodic.

Strauss' "Guntram" prelude was a good dessert to the musical meal. It is a graphic picture of a festival, without in any degree suggesting the various festivities which Wagner has created. It begins with a very striking bit of melody which has something of mediaeval character in its measures. In his prelude to the first act of "Guntram" Strauss was not so fortunate in escaping the spell of Wagner, for there are some clear reminiscences of "Lohengrin" to be found in that number; but in this second prelude he manages to steer clear of anything like imitation and the portrayal of triumph and of pompous merry-making was both striking and original. The work, which is intensely modern, was dedicated to his parents, by the composer. We wonder what his father, who was one of the most conservative of German musicians, thought of it!

Louis C. Elson.

SU[illegible]

Published Ev[illegible] Year.

VOL. CXVII., NO. 85.

SUNDAY, MARCH 26, 1905.

Rimsky-Koraykoff's Musical Picture, a Pretty Fancy, Highly Colored, Is Given for the First Time in Boston.

ORCHESTRA TOO LARGE TO PLAY IT PROPERLY

Cornelius Ruebner, Pianist of the Occasion, Plays Grieg's Romantic Concerto Unromantically and Uninterestingly.

The programme of the 19th Symphony concert given last evening in Symphony Hall, Mr. Gericke conductor, was as follows:

Symphony in D major (K. 504).....Mozart
Piano concerto in A minor.....Grieg
"Sadko," a musical picture..Rimsky-Korsakoff
Prelude to Act II of "Guntrum"....R. Strauss

However well this little symphony of Mozart may be played as regards euphony, proportion, general finesse—and it was played exceedingly well last night—the work is nevertheless ineffective in Symphony Hall. It would undoubtedly be a pleasure to hear it, and works of a like nature, performed by a small but carefully chosen band of players in a hall no larger than, say, Chickering. Then the old music would have more than a historical interest. It is true that large orchestras were assembled occasionally in Mozart's period for special occasions—orchestras of 200, and even of 400, were not wholly unknown in Vienna—but these conditions were rare, chiefly in aid of a pension fund for musicians. The orchestra of the opera house in Prague, where this symphony was probably first performed, included only six violins, two violas and two basses. No doubt other strings were added for concert purposes, but the symphony was designed for a small orchestra in a comparatively small room.

Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Sadko" was played here for the first time, and we have been unable to find any record of a previous performance in this country. It is one of the composer's earliest works. Written about 1867, it was played in Germany as early as 1876. The composer revised it in 1891. When it was performed in Vienna, at a time when Rubinstein was held to be the great Russian composer, the only one worthy of consideration, good Dr. Hanslick wrote a violent article against it. He found bombs and nihilism and the general upheaval of society, law and order in this little piece, which now seems to us all fanciful and pretty.

A composer of rare gifts once said to us that he was born hating Weber; Hanslick was born for the purpose of hating programme music in general and Russian programme music in particular. "Sadko" is by no means a great or imposing work. Rimsky-Korsakoff himself does not probably take it so seriously; but the music is fanciful, highly colored, characteristic, a picturesque illustration of an old legend of Novgorod.

The work is simply a picture; the thematic contents are in themselves of slight value, there is little or no attempt at any development; the picture is impressionistic. The piece was played in the appropriately fanciful spirit and Sadko thrown overboard, and Sadko playing on his gusli, that the Sea King and his guests bidden to the wedding might dance, and the roar of the thereby excited Ocean, the bridegroom of the Sea King's daughter, were all brought vividly before the sympathetic hearer. It is not unlikely that any one who finds "The Thousand Nights and a Night" a bore, and legends of any country foolishness will wonder why this musical picture "Sadko" was produced here at all after so many years. The music last night gave pleasure to many and Mr. Gericke was obliged to bow his acknowledgments.

The piano concerto by Grieg is still one of the concertos worth playing and hearing, for, unlike some of Grieg's music, it has more than a parochial interest and it has breadth and haunting sensuousness. It should be played in a most romantic spirit, often as though it were an improvisation. Mr. Cornelius Ruebner, who made his first appearance in Boston, is now at the head of the music department of Columbia University. Is it possible that he was chosen as the pianist of last night's concert ex-officio? Mr. Ruebner was at the head of a music school in Carlsruhe before he was called to Columbia; he taught the piano and he composed music. He may be a prudent pedagogue; his music is no doubt written in approved orthodox fashion, but he is not the man to play Grieg's concerto. His technic was evidently acquired in the black walnut period of the art, and it is now warped and cracked.

A technic that is not always fully adequate may be sometimes forgiven when there is a fine exhibition of aesthetic feeling or of a prevailing poetic spirit. Mr. Ruebner's interpretation was inherently unromantic, matter of fact, prosaically uninteresting. Seldom have we heard such an uninspired and jejune performance of a beautiful and imaginative work. Mr. Ruebner was courteously welcomed and applauded.

[78]

Mail 11

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Wilhelm Gericke, will play next week twice at Carnegie Hall. The soloist Thursday will be Fritz Kreisler, violin, and on Saturday, Ernest Schelling, a young American pianist, greatly gifted, who has studied and played abroad for a number of years, will make his New York debut. Mr. Schelling is a brother of Felix Schelling, professor of English literature at the University of Pennsylvania.

The two programmes follow:

THURSDAY EVENING.

"Manfred," symphony after Byron's poem, op. 58 ..... Tschaikowsky
Concerto for violin, in D major, op. 77, Brahms
Fritz Kreisler.
Overture, "Leonore," No. 3.... Beethoven

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

A "Faust" overture..... Wagner
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo form ..... Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Concerto No. 1, in E flat major, for pianoforte and orchestra..... Liszt
Ernest Schelling.
Symphony No. 1, in C minor, op. 68, Brahms

G.

Announcements.

THE last of the Boston Orchestra's concerts here for the current season take place in Carnegie Hall next Thursday evening and next Saturday afternoon. On Thursday Tschaikowsky's long symphony after Byron's "Manfred" is the chief number of the programme. It is less familiar than most of the Russian's music, and by a coincidence we shall have heard both the musical versions of "Manfred" in a single winter—Schumann's a few months ago at a Damrosch concert, and Tschaikowsky's next Thursday. The same evening Kreisler, the violinist, plays Brahms's concerto for his last appearance here with an orchestra, and Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture ends the programme.

At the concert on Saturday afternoon Ernest Schelling, a young pianist, a pupil of Paderewski's of good repute in Europe and of recent success in Boston, makes his first appearance here. He plays Liszt's E flat concerto. The symphony is Brahm's first, one of Mr. Gericke's best achievements. Wagner's "Faust" overture begins the programme, and the strings of the orchestra will show their mettle in a fragment of Bach's.

The fifth of the People's Symphony concerts falls on Friday evening in Carnegie Hall, with Olive Mead, one of the best of our violinists, to play the first movement of Beethoven's concerto. Mr. Arens conducts, and the orchestral numbers he has chosen are Mendelssohn's music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Wagner's overture to "The Flying Dutchman," and Liszt's tone poem, "Les Préludes." With these concerts there is no need to bespeak a full audience. It has even to be seated on the stage, and it is an audience that otherwise would hear little orchestral music.

Lovers of popular music will be glad to hear that Mr. Victor Herbert will resume his Sunday concerts at the Majestic Theatre to-morrow night. The programme follows: Overture, "Le Roi d'Ys," Lalo; Rigaudon de Dardanus, Rameau; "Under the Linden Trees," Massenet; Farandole from "L'Arlesienne," Bizet; aria (Mrs. Shotwell-Piper); Hungarian rhapsody in F, Liszt; "Bandana Land," "Matinée Maids," entr'acte "Nordland," Herbert; songs: "A Knot of Blue," Herbert; "At Parting," Rogers; "Spring Song," Weil; Malaguena from "Boabdil," Moszkowski.

At next Thursday evening's Carnegie Hall concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Fritz Kreisler will play the Brahms concerto for violin, while the orchestral numbers are to be Tchaikovsky's "Manfred" symphony, and Beethoven's "Lenore" overture No. 3. On Saturday afternoon, Mr. Ernest Schelling will play the first Liszt piano concerto, while the orchestral numbers will be Wagner's "Faust" overture, a Bach suite, and Brahms's first symphony.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its last visit to New York this week and give two concerts at Carnegie Hall, on Thursday evening and on Saturday afternoon. At the first Fritz Kreisler will be the soloist; at the second, Ernest Schelling, pianist. The programmes will be as follows:

THURSDAY EVENING.

"Manfred," Symphony after Byron's Poem, Op. 58 ..... Tschaikowsky
(1) Manfred's Wanderings and Despair.
(2) The Fairy of the Alps.
(3) Pastorale.
(4) The Palace of Arimanes; Invocation to Astarte; Manfred's Death.
Concerto for Violin, in D major, Op. 77. Brahms
Overture, "Leonore," No. 3..... Beethoven
Soloist, Mr. Fritz Kreisler.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

A "Faust" Overture..... Wagner
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavott in Rondo Form ..... Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Concerto No. 1, in E flat major, for piano- ..... Liszt
Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68. Brahms

March 15th.
Tribune 12

On Thursday evening, at Carnegie Hall, the Boston Orchestra will give this programme:

"Manfred," symphony after Byron's Poem, op. 58... Tschaikowsky
Concerto for violin, in D major, op. 77..... Brahms
Overture, "Leonore," No. 3..... Beethoven
Soloist, Fritz Kreisler.

On Saturday afternoon their programme will be:

"A Faust Overture"..... Wagner
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotto in Rondo form..... Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Concerto No. 1, in E flat major, for pianoforte and orchestra..... Liszt
Symphony No. 1, in C minor, op. 68..... Brahms
Soloist, Ernest Schelling.

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester wird am Donnerstag und Samstag New York zum letzten Male in dieser Saison besuchen. Am Donnerstag Abend wird man vom Orchester Tschaikowsky's „Manfred"-Symphonie und Beethoven's dritte Leonoren-Ouvertüre, ferner, von Fritz Kreisler gespielt, das Brahms'sche Violin-Konzert zu hören bekommen. Am Samstag Nachmittag bilden Wagner's „Faust"-Ouvertüre, Brahms' erste Symphonie, einige Bach'sche Arrangements und Liszt's Es-dur-Konzert, letzteres von Ernst Schelling gespielt, das Programm. — Ysaye giebt

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's programme on Thursday night in Carnegie Hall will comprise Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony, opus 58; Brahms's violin concerto in D major, opus 77, and Beethoven's "Leonore" overture No. 3. Fritz Kreisler will be the assisting artist. At Saturday afternoon's concert the programme will offer: "A 'Faust' Overture," Wagner; Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in rondo form, Bach (arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich); Concerto No. 1, in E flat major, for piano and orchestra, Liszt; Symphony No. 1, in C minor, opus 68, Brahms. The assisting artist will be Ernest Schelling.

Closing its current New York season the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the usual two concerts this week on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall.

That local concertgoers should have flocked to these entertainments this winter in larger numbers than ever before is simply the logical consequence of their superior excellence.

On Thursday Mr. Gericke will offer Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony, Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, No. 3, and the Brahms violin concerto, in which Fritz Kreisler will be the soloist. On Saturday afternoon the features are Wagner's "Faust" overture, a Bach suite for strings, Liszt's first concerto for piano and Brahms' first symphony, with Ernest Schelling as the soloist.

Programmes of the next concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Thursday evening, March 16, Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony, Brahms's violin concerto and Beethoven's overture, "Leonore No. 3;" soloist, Fritz Kreisler. Saturday afternoon, March 18, Wagner's "A Faust Overture," prelude adagio and gavotte for strings, by Bach, Liszt's E-flat piano concerto and Brahms's first symphony; soloist, Ernest Schelling.

The Boston Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra ends this week, with to-morrow's matinee, its nineteenth annual series of concerts in New-York, with a numerical record of some forty compositions performed, and a sum of inspiring achievement not so easily computed, but none the less tangible. Last night there was expression of the appreciation felt by the organization's splendid clientele when, after the Tschaikowsky "Manfred" symphony had come to its solemn finish, the audience that filled Carnegie Hall showered applause so persistently that Mr. Gericke bade the musicians of the orchestra stand and share it. There could have been no mistaking the meaning of this gracious demonstration, and it would be difficult indeed to understand the attitude of a public not alive to the extraordinary qualities of this Boston band of players.

It was a trio of three master works that Mr. Gericke had assembled for the final evening concert last night—for surely the Tschaikowsky music incited by Byron's "Manfred" is to be admitted to this category, even when its companions are the Brahms violin concerto and Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, No. 3. The Russian composer has shown more intense and more sustained creative stamina when he laid down no set programme for himself, as in the fifth and the sixth symphonies, but this "Manfred" music is yet of memorable imaginative power and breadth, not so universal as the great outpouring of genius that is called the "Symphonie Pathétique," but still a vital and enthralling utterance. It was a master, not less, that voiced the final proclamation marking Manfred's death with the sunset.

In the Brahms concerto, Mr. Kreisler was soloist, and Mr. Gericke gave way to Mr. Willy Hess, who has several times, in Boston and on the orchestra's tours, exercised the function of assistant to the conductor. The experiment (if such it need be called) was wholly successful, for the orchestra played its part with balance precision, while Mr. Kreisler has done nothing better this winter than the superb first movement. He was recalled several times for his fine accomplishment of a noble task. The Beethoven "Leonore" overture brought the evening to an exalted close.

Le Be 17.

NEVER, perhaps, has Gericke shown surer tact in arranging a programme than at the final evening concert of the Boston Orchestra last night. First there was Tschaikowsky's extended "Manfred" symphony. Its great elaboration, its intricate orchestral splendors, its uncompromising expression of Manfred's despair all came while the listener was fresh and could take his Tschaikowsky on Byron with entire seriousness. Then after the intermission he was quite ready for the more solid beauties of the great Brahms concerto for violin as played by Kreisler. Finally came Beethoven's overture, "Leonore" No. 3, music so great as to make the concert a real climax, concise besides, and, so to say, exciting enough to command anew a slightly fagged attention. A programme, in a word, with no surplusage, a concert to be enjoyed at the top of one's bent.

The "Manfred" symphony is the sort of thing that shows the virtuoso qualities of the Boston band in their fullest brilliancy. Yet their playing did not lack its measure of Neo-Russian intensity. The final movement in particular went with irresistible spirit. After prolonged applause, at a sign from Gericke, the orchestra to a man stood up and took personally the recognition their playing so richly deserved. The Brahms concerto Kreisler played even better than at his first concert here this year. Well as he did it then, there was a suspicion of the nervousness of a reappearance. Last night the splendid vitality was there, the hint of restlessness absent. Some may prefer a more sedate Brahms; they may resent a little the pulsing energy of Kreisler's reading; but with all his vibrant force there was ever in his performance nobility and restraint. And some of us have no prejudice against a temperamental Brahms. Kreisler's tone yesterday was not always of the largest, but it was steadily of penetrating sweetness.

It steeped the adagio in beauty. It glowed and sparkled through the idealized rondo. This rondo finale, too, shows Kreisler's command of clean and brilliant technique at its best, and above all his ability to get the utmost expression out of a given phrase without stealing the composer's time to do it.

Even after Brahms and Kreisler the third "Leonore" overture capped the climax. It was played with all the tonal beauty of this particular orchestra. Perhaps certain passages have been made more impressive on other occasions—there may, for instance, have been more frenetic outbursts of that delirious flute—but the end was jubilant and left the listener without surfeit, but singularly satisfied.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Quandoque bonus dormitat Homerus." Even Tchaikovski is not always great. His "Manfred," with which the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its concert at Carnegie Hall last night, is a work so utterly uninspired and dull that one wonders it can have flown from the same pen that wrote the immortal Fifth and Sixth symphonies. Of the original melody which is so abundant in those symphonies there is scarcely a trace in "Manfred," the result being that all the strenuous efforts at pathos and "Weltschmerz" become mere empty sound and bombast. You cannot bake bread without dough. Usually, when a man has nothing to say, he takes a long time to say it. It is so with "Manfred," which lasts within a few minutes of an hour. A more passionate conductor than Mr. Gericke, and an orchestra more accustomed to playing emotionally, might have made the "Manfred" music more entertaining; as it was, it was almost a torture to listen to it, notwithstanding the brilliant, precise, and highly polished playing of the orchestra. It seemed as if it would never end.

The soloist of the evening was Mr. Fritz Kreisler, who unfortunately chose once more to perform Brahms's dreary violin concerto. It is well-known how superbly he plays this difficult music; his first bars indicated that he was in fine form, and before the work had been finished he had made many new converts to the belief that he is indeed the king of violinists, superior to all others in lusciousness of tone, and endowed with a musical temperament which even Brahms cannot extinguish. The concert closed with Beethoven's third "Leonora" overture.

There is much eagerness to hear the new pianist, Mr. Ernest Schelling, who is to play the first Liszt concerto with the Boston Orchestra at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. He has been for six years an intimate friend of Paderewski, who has guided his studies. The following sketch of his life appears in the programme book":

Mr. Ernest Schelling was born near Philadelphia about thirty years ago. His first teacher was his father, Dr. Felix Schelling. The boy at the age of five appeared in public to show his technical proficiency and his unusual sense of pitch. He entered the Paris Conservatory when he was nine years old, and continued his studies at Basle with Hans Huber. As a lad he played in London, Paris, and in cities in Germany, Switzerland, Sweden, and Denmark. Paderewski became interested in him, and taught him for some time. During the last four years Mr. Schelling has appeared as a virtuoso in cities of Europe and South America. He is court pianist to the Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. The list of his compositions includes a symphony, "Symphonic Legends" for orchestra, a fantasia for piano and orchestra, chamber music, and piano pieces.

June 17.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA'S LAST VISIT TO NEW YORK

Tschaikowsky's Manfred Symphony and Beethoven's Leonore Overture Given.

MR. KREISLER THE SOLOIST

The Orchestra Bows in a Body in Recognition of the Applause Received for Symphony.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is on its last visit to New York this season, and last evening gave its evening concert which, it may truly be said, marked the highest point it has reached here in a long time, in respect of beauty of tone, brilliancy, and security of execution and the perfection of balance and finish that are its uncontested pre-eminence. Its playing also was fired by Mr. Gericke's enthusiasm, and in both of the orchestral pieces there was an unaccustomed eloquence.

The two orchestral pieces were Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony and Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture. The symphony had not been heard here lately. It is scarcely equal to any one of the later "absolute" symphonies of the master in richness and spontaneity of invention and purely musical development. In its depiction of the passions and despairs and soul-shattering experiences of Byron's hero it calls for poignant, lugubrious, intense expression; the first movement is lugubrious, but it lacks concentration and intensity.

It lacks, too, coherency and a logical development and with many fine details and many fine passages of instrumentation, it scarcely shows the pregnant invention or strong symphonic treatment of the later symphonies or the best of the programmatic overtures. There is much charm in the depiction of the Fairy of the Alps, and of her apparition under the rainbow, and the delicate instrumental effects the members of the orchestra set forth with ravishing beauty.

The pastoral movement that follows is deliciously colored, and the wood-wind players made beautiful sounds and perfect phrasings in it. Strongest musically, however, is the last movement, with its solemn proclamations from the brasses and its fiery fugato, its ingenious treatment of themes from the first movement.

This score was read with splendid eloquence, with broad sweep, and the accent of a noble despair. It was not strange that the performance should make a deep impression, or that it should be insistently applauded; nor was it that Mr. Gericke should cause his men to rise in a body and bow to the applause that was the recognition of their superb playing.

Similar were their results in Beethoven's overture. It was played with a sense of its dramatic values, yet with a controlling feeling for its formal outline and symmetry, and in all details with the finest and most sensitive adjustment of tone, color, and phrase. It was to be noted that Mr. Gericke had the trumpet fanfares played with an equal degree of power, and not first soft, then louder, as by an approaching cavalcade.

Mr. Kreisler was the soloist and played Brahms's violin concerto, one of the pieces in which he made his first appearance this season on his return to New York. He has not played more magnificently nor given a more convincing proof of the ripeness, depth, and splendor of his conception or his consummate mastery and control of the largest technical powers.

It was a noble and beautiful performance, reposeful, yet instinct with life, lofty in spirit, yet full of passion, expressed in tones of full richness and color. The true value of this playing was recognized, and Mr. Kreisler was several times most enthusiastically recalled. Prof. Hess, the concert master, conducted the accompaniment, which was plastic and carefully molded upon the soloist's performer's lines.

Boston Symphony Concert.

In its nineteen years of concert giving in New York the Boston Symphony Orchestra has probably never achieved more brilliant results than those which marked its final evening concert of the season at Carnegie Hall last night. Recognition of the fact was given by the big audience when, with thunderous applause at one point in the programme, it brought the whole organization to its feet to bow its acknowledgments.

There were but three numbers on the programme. These were Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony—which Theodore Thomas with the Philharmonic made known here in 1886—the Brahms violin concerto and Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, No. 3. Fritz Kreisler was the soloist.

Ample reason for the "Manfred" symphony's infrequent appearance on ordinary orchestral programmes may be found in its difficulty and delicacy—if not in its rather lugubrious character. Indifferently played it would be an intolerable and seem an interminable concert number.

Played as it was last night, it succeeded in deeply impressing and ultimately thrilling a somewhat cold and very critical audience. The second movement was really a marvellous piece of ensemble playing.

One might have supposed that Mr. Kreisler had by this time said all he had to say in the Brahms concerto. Not so. He disclosed in it last night a wealth of new beauties and in himself bigger powers of insight and interpretation.

KREISLER GREAT IN BRAHMS,

AND GERICKE FOR ONCE READS TSCHAIKOWSKY BOLDLY.

The Last Evening Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra a Notable Entertainment—Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" Symphony Was Magnificently Played.

The last evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place last night at Carnegie Hall. The programme was concise, consisting, as it did, of Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony, the Brahms violin concerto and Beethoven's overture "Leonore" No. 3. The solo violinist was Fritz Kreisler. The audience was of a size and character now familiar at these admirable concerts. The entertainment was worthy of its predecessors and brought a notable season to a brilliant and satisfying close.

The "Manfred" symphony is not played [illegible] often and more easily [illegible] of Tschaikowsky, yet it came to America speedily enough after its production in Europe. It was brought [illegible], 1886, and the following [illegible] Thomas made it known to New York.

[illegible] Mr. Thomas was very active [illegible] of the great Russian [illegible] years, however, the [illegible] symphonies have [illegible] most intimate and [illegible] of Byronic ideals and [illegible] relegated to the background. [illegible] who suggested the subject to [illegible] and even drafted a scheme [illegible] first proposed it to [illegible] the task on account [illegible] was so wise. His [illegible] involving the thoughts [illegible] and the "Harold [illegible] a heroic travesty on [illegible] spendid flights of [illegible] English literature. [illegible] shrank from the setting [illegible] it was not sympa- [illegible] he was right in his opinion [illegible] Tschaikowsky.

[illegible] melancholy moods of [illegible] and Byron's introspective [illegible] and despondent philosophy [illegible] to influential utterance. [illegible] symphony, a work of unequal power indeed, has in its most potent passages [illegible] of crushing sorrow and tragical despair attained, if not quite, equaling the "Pathétique."

The scherzo, delineating the interview of Manfred with the witch of the Alps is one of Tschaikowsky's most airy and picturesque compositions in lighter tone painting. The slow movement is a beautiful [illegible] of the hero of the mountains among which Manfred vainly sought rest for his perturbed spirit, while the finale rises to impressive heights of tragic expressiveness.

Mr. Gericke, as a rule, does not vibrate sympathy with music of this kind, but last night he surpassed himself. His reading was engaging and adequate. Preserving the perfect balance of his orchestra and its wealth of tonal beauty, he nevertheless gave abundant power to the forte passages and swept through a dynamic scale of satisfying range. He used his [illegible] to achieve a splendid end, and his [illegible] will long dwell in the memories of music lovers. The orchestra responded to his wishes with a superb performance.

[illegible] unto day uttereth speech as to the [illegible] fidelity of the ancient description of the Brahms work as a concerto against the violin. This composition, which was sometime accepted with doubts, is now [illegible] with admiration. It is a beloved number in the repertory of great violinists, who alone may hope to set forth its content to the appreciation of the populace. Fritz Kreisler played it last night like a master.

This artist is making giant strides. He has grown even within the limits of the present season. He is a bigger man today than he was when he landed here in the autumn. His performance of the first movement of the concerto last night was simply tremendous. Not only did he give the music an uplifting interpretation, but poured into it such a flood of temperament that he made it glow with the fire of genius. His playing of the cadenza was a burst of the very highest virtuosity, that virtuosity which unites the holiest and most dazzling technic with the finest musical qualities.

He played the slow movement with ravishing tone and exquisite poetry, and the final one with brilliancy and insight. On the whole, it was one of the big violin performances of the season and raised Kreisler in the esteem of connoisseurs. Mr. Hess, concert meister of the orchestra, conducted the accompaniment sympathetically.

This "Manfred" music was inspired by Byron's poem, but the composer exercised great freedom in his emotional scheme, interpolating moods not found in the text, and omitting all but a few striking episodes. It was the more interesting to hear it last night, after the lapse of many seasons, in view of the recent performance of Schumann's version by David Bispham and the Damrosch orchestra, with its setting of the Byronic text as melodrame in the old sense, to be spoken against an orchestral background of incidental music.

This Tschaikowsky music cuts deep. The subject readily appealed to the Russian, with its groping, baffled, yet noble figure, its hint of the supernatural, its setting amid the vast fastnesses of the Alps. In "Manfred" he has isolated the tragedy of a solitary soul; elsewhere (in spite of the recently revealed "programme" of the "Pathetic" symphony) he has expressed more impersonally the epic quality of sublime suffering. But he is poignant here to a degree rarely attained by a modern composer; the moods of the first and the final movements are fiercely intense. The outcry of the trombones and tubas, followed by the lashing fugue, preceding the calm sunset of Manfred's life, represents Tschaikowsky at an exalted moment of creative fury.

Mr. Gericke and the orchestra played this Tschaikowsky music with extraordinary impressiveness. The conductor cast off his habitual cloak of caution and struck out boldly, and the orchestra responded with heartfelt readiness. After it was all over, Mr. Gericke made the players stand up to take their share of the tremendous and lasting applause.

Fritz Kreisler played the Brahms violin concerto superbly. This music has not in many years, if ever, been made so potently beautiful as last night. When he ended the first movement's brilliant cadenza and soared away on the lofty theme that is surely one of Brahms's most cherished legacies, it seemed that he had reached the acme of what a violin can utter. Mr. Kreisler might well be content to go down in musical tradition at the level he reached last night.

Willy Hess, concert master of the Boston orchestra, conducted this concerto and showed a clean, resolute beat. Mr. Gericke resumed the baton for the Beethoven overture, which was performed with a freshness and relish that were more than commendable in so familiar a work.

The Boston orchestra's last matinee will take place to-morrow, with Ernest Schelling, pianist, as soloist, and a good programme.

BOSTON BAND HAS TO BOW AFTER PLAYING 'MANFRED'

Tschaikowsky Symphony Stirs Audience in Carnegie Hall.

KREISLER IN A BRAHMS WORK

Plays Concerto with Fine Sweep, and Orchestra, Under Hess, Lends Almost Perfect Support.

One of the most enthusiastic audiences of the season greeted Mr. Gericke and his Boston Symphony Orchestra at their last evening concert in Carnegie Hall last night. After Tschaikowsky's long "Manfred" symphony the conductor was called to the front repeatedly. Mr. Gericke finally beckoned to his men to rise, and as that body of virtuosos stood up the house resounded with bravos.

It was not Tschaikowsky's tone poem, beautiful as it is in moments, that gave the greatest pleasure of the evening. Brahms's violin concerto, played by Fritz Kreisler, with Hess, the concert master, in Mr. Gericke's place at the conductor's desk, proved the real climax of the concert. This exceptionally noble and beautiful composition had an inspired performance. It seemed those who say they are unmoved by this work must have been shaken in their beliefs last night. Kreisler played with a sweep, intensity and emotional depth he hardly has equaled before this season, displaying at the same time his amazing technical mastery in the racking difficulties the composer had piled up.

Kreisler's success was due in great part, no doubt, to the almost perfect support he had from the incomparable Boston Orchestra under the inspiring leadership of Willy Hess. Mr. Hess proved himself, at the conductor's stand, a man of experience, authority and fine sensibility. He kept his men admirably in hand, defined clearly to them by gesture his demands, and infused into their playing an added zest and enthusiasm.

Tschaikowsky's symphony, which is a free musical interpretation of Byron's "Manfred," is acclaimed by some as one of the composer's greatest productions. It certainly is in length, for it occupies close to an hour. To our way of thinking there are few works of the Russian which bear so clearly the marks of labor and want of true inspiration. There is much to arouse admiration in the workmanship, and certain portions of the first movement—"Manfred's Wanderings and Despair"—and the last, which illustrates his visit to the palace of Arimanes, his invocation to Astarte and his death, reach moving climaxes. But on the whole the musical effects are on the surface.

Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, No. 3, ended the programme. At the Boston Orchestra's last concert of the season, to-morrow afternoon, the programme will comprise Wagner's "Faust" overture; Bach's Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form, arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich; Liszt's piano concerto, No. 1, in E flat major, and Brahms's Symphony, No. 1, in C minor, opus 68. Ernest Schelling will be the soloist.

on his native heath, so to speak. The applause was long continued. After Brahms redivivus, the Beethoven dramatic overture which catalogues damn with the faint name of "Leonora No. 3," brought Mr. Gericke out again, and the fifth evening of the nineteenth season came to a close.

There are concerts to-night in Brooklyn, with Mme. Gadski, and to-morrow afternoon with the new Ernest Shelling, Paderewski's pupil, in Carnegie Hall. On Monday the orchestra plays with Paderewski in New Haven.

BOSTON SYMPHONY STIRS ENTHUSIASM

Audience Compels Orchestra to Acknowledge Applause by Rising.

Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening, with incomparable art, the hero's wanderings and despair, the fairy of the Alps, the pastoral, the invocation to Astarte and the description of Manfred's death were in accents romantic and passionate.

The applause of the great audience was so cordial and enthusiastic that to acknowledge it the entire orchestra had to rise. Willy Hess took the place of Wilhelm Gericke to conduct the Brahms concerto for violin. Fritz Kreisler was admirable in it. The last number of the programme was the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven.

STAID GERICKE BREAKS HIS "NO-ENCORE" RULE

Enthusiasm Compels the Repetition of a Bach-Bachrich Number.

GREAT DAY FOR BOSTONIANS

Symphony Orchestra Shows Unusual Fervor at Its Last Concert of Season in Carnegie Hall.

Matinee audiences, particularly those which attend the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, seldom reveal such enthusiasm as did yesterday's gathering in Carnegie Hall, when that famous band of musicians gave its last performance of the season. Wilhelm Gericke, the orchestra's staid, scholarly conductor, seldom has displayed as much fervor as he did on this occasion. It was a concert to treasure long in one's memory, this symphonic farewell.

All the virtuosity, the translucent purity and balance of tone for which they are famed, were prominent in the playing of the men from Boston; but at the same time there was an invigorating impulse and energy which added immensely to the afternoon's enjoyment. What was this something which suddenly had seized the usually dry and over-reserved Gericke? Even Wagner's "Faust" overture, which opened the programme, was given with a warmth and poignancy of expression which sent ripples of emotion down one's spine. Mr. Gericke is not a Wagner leader by nature; but yesterday he certainly read admirably—at times inspiringly—the appealing "Faust" overture, with its suggestions of "Tristan," "Lohengrin" and "The Flying Dutchman."

Sigismund Bachrich's finely sonorous and full arrangement for string orchestra of a prelude, an adagio and a gavotte in rondo form by Bach was given with such unanimity, such perfection of ensemble and delightful refinement of nuance—as if every voice was sung by a single instrument of enormous tone capacity—that the enthusiasm of the audience would not be satisfied save by a repetition. Many times Mr. Gericke bowed his acknowledgments with the utmost seriousness of face. He even asked his men to stand up in a body. There was no stemming the torrent of approval. Then the conductor did what perhaps was unprecedented in the history of Boston's orchestra—at least under his leadership. He actually gave way to the popular demand and the "gavotte" was repeated.

Ernest Schelling played Liszt's concerto No. 1, in E flat major, with pleasing results; but his interpretation was wanting in marrow, force and distinction. Mr. Schelling, whose fingers and wrists are remarkably flexible, has a fluent and limpid technique and a wonderfully luscious and expressive touch. His legato is admirable and his staccato equally good. But apparently he lacks the breadth of style and temperamental fervor demanded by such a composition as the Liszt concerto.

Mr. Gericke is reputed to be at his best in Brahms music, and it must be said his performance yesterday of that composer's symphony No. 1, in C minor, opus 68—a work which glows with the beauty of inspiration—was worthy of deep admiration. At the same time the leader's most noticeable fault, the metrical rigidity of his tempos, often is as provoking in the music of Brahms as in that of Liszt, Wagner or Strauss. It robbed the andante, that pure orchestral song, of much of its great charm.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERT

One Long to Be Remembered for Its Excellence—Triumph for Fritz Kreisler.

For exquisite orchestral playing and for a wonderful solo performance last evening's concert at Carnegie Hall of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will long be remembered by the music lovers.

The opening number was Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony, in which these virtuosi excelled themselves. Such artistci dexterity and such careful regard for beauty of tone and for balance of forces has scarcely been equalled here. Especially noteworthy was the lightness with which the orchestra played the shimmering music of the second movement, "The Fairy of the Alps." And the succeeding pastorale gave opportunities to the orchestra's famous solo players.

So, too, the Beethoven "Leonore Overture No. 3" was performed as seldom it has been done here in years.

But even more praiseworthy than these was the playing of Fritz Kreisler in the Brahms violin concerto. Kreisler succeeded in bringing this underestimated work of Brahms very near to the comprehension and enjoyment of his listeners by reading into it a temperamental swing that few suspected to lurk in this work. He made the first movement sound mighty, he laid bare the tender beauties of the second one, and the finale was impressively Hungarian in its impetuous rush. It was huge violin playing, and the audience realized it, calling the artist out times without number. Kreisler's accompaniments were conducted by Willy Hess, the orchestra's concertmaster, the first time that Hess has been seen here as a conductor. The audience was large. In one of the boxes sat Paderewski.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA IN GREAT MUSIC

Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" Symphony the Clou of a Fine Concert—Kreisler at His Best.

Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony, which, with the Brahms violin concerto and Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, No. 3, formed last night's Boston Symphony Orchestra programme at Carnegie Hall, brought to a noble climax the season's New York doings of this admirable organization.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

FAREWELLS OF GERICKE AND THE MEN FROM BOSTON.

"Manfred" Symphony by the Virtuoso Orchestra of This Land—M. Paderewski Is Among Those Present—Melba's Tour Ends To-night in the South—People's Symphony Concert.

Mr. Wilhelm Gericke in his most genial mood at Carnegie Hall last night gave the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Thursday subscribers in towe one farewell concert of pure delight and pleasant memories. Too often that virtuoso orchestra has rejoiced in its own strength by playing a programme of the local band's right after them, and playing it better. Last night, in fact, the symphony was Tschaikowsky's "Manfred," which the New York Symphony men had given. But on the same stage where Mr. Walter Damrosch lifted Tschaikowsky into grand opera with the aid of Mr. David Bispham's bootstraps and the Byron poem, Mr. Gericke stuck to his symphonic text. He gave the absolute music, unadorned. As a symphony, it was charming, with many an echo of the Fifth and the Pathétique. The "Pastorale" found some vernal woodwind players like sheep astray, for a wonder. The diaphanous scherzo of "The Fairy of the Alps" was a rainbow of sound. No other orchestra could so have played it up to a vanishing point on the first violin of Willy Hess. The mountainous lady, by the way, as Mr. Philip Hale's programme note took care to say, was a pure fiction of Peter himself and none of your young women "after Byron."

"Manfred" somehow keeps you awake with his well-bred despair. The Manfred behind the music is a sort of mixed cocktail of Don Juan Scotch and Dr. Faustus Kümmel, with a chaser of "Tannhäuser" bacchanale. At the conclusion, Gericke was thrice recalled, while his men, like another Seventy against Thebes, stood up and bowed with him.

Fritz Kreisler with his flaming temperament set the Brahms violin concerto ablaze. Mr. Hess made hi s first appearance here as conductor. The solo cadenza in chords of orchestral richness is Kreisler's own specialty now, in whatever he plays. But the Hungarian rondo was a piece of interpretation that found the young Austrian player

Staats 19.

Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester.

Das Publikum ist manchmal gar zu launenhaft! In Carnegie Hall wurde gestern Nachmittag, bei Gelegenheit des letzten Konzerts des Bostoner Symphonie-orchesters, der Dirigent, Herr Gericke, nach dem Vortrage einer Bach'schen Gavotte derart mit Beifall überschüttet, als wenn er eine unglaublich große That vollbracht hätte. Diese Bach'sche Gavotte, im Arrangement für Streichorchester, zu dirigiren, ist ein Meisterstück, das wahrscheinlich jedes einzelne Mitglied des Orchesters, vom Konzertmeister abwärts, gerade so gut vollbringen könnte. Weshalb also diese Erregung des Publikums? Weil die Leute immer wieder ihre Naivetät offenbaren müssen, weil gestern Nachmittag wenigstens zwei Drittel der Anwesenden ihre erste Bekanntschaft mit dieser Gavotte machten. Und da sie nun plötzlich erfuhren, daß Bach etwas so Köstliches komponirt hatte, glaubten sie Herrn Gericke dafür den Dank abstatten zu müssen.

Umgekehrt erhielt Herr Gericke so gut wie gar keinen Beifall nach der Wagner'schen „Faust"-Ouverture. Und da hatte er so viel mehr thun können, und thatsächlich gethan, als in allen anderen Nummern des Programms! Die Interpretation war zwar nicht im höheren Sinne „faustisch", aber sie war zum wenigsten genügend musikalisch; sie hätte, in der That, eine viel tiefere Wirkung auf das Publikum machen müssen, wenn besagtes, hochverehrliches Publikum eben selbst ein wenig „tiefer" gewesen wäre.

Bei aller inbrünstigen Verehrung für Bach, die der ernsthafte Musiker im Herzen trägt, kann es Einem doch schwül werden, wenn eine Bach-Nummer die Hurrah-Canaille auf die Beine bringt. Jene F-dur-Gavotte wurde vom Streichorchester vorgetragen, für das Johann Sebastian sie nicht geschrieben hat; aber der Herr Bachrich in Wien hat sich nicht enthalten können, sie für besagte Instrumente zu arrangiren. Es ist, grammatikalisch, ja nur ein geringer Unterschied zwischen Bach und Bachrich, aber das Publikum applaudirte gestern den letzteren, und es hatte offenbar keine Ahnung davon, daß Bachrich aus Bach einen gespreizten Pfau gemacht hatte. Diese Bachrich'schen Arrangements werden das wahre Verständnis für Bach nicht um einen Zoll steigern; und wenn sie ihn so wie gestern „populariſiren", wird Bach schließlich den Schaden davon haben.

Offenbar haben die „Applausejungen" das Gefühl, diese Bach'sche Garotte sei das Signal für eine Demonstration. Gericke schien mit Recht überrascht zu sein, und schließlich veranlaßte er das Orchester, sich dankend von den Sitzen zu erheben. Und als dann die Leute immer noch nicht still blieben, brach Gericke selbst die eiserne Regel und wiederholte die Gavotte. Darnach darf er sich nicht beklagen, wenn irgend ein Solist in diesen Konzerten eine Zugabe spielt.

Das Komischste aber war, daß die guten Leute im Auditorium glaubten, sie brächten dem Bostoner Symphonieorchester eine Ovation: und dabei feierten sie nur dessen Streichkörper. Die Bläser saßen dabei und versuchten intelligent auszusehen. Oh ja, das Publikum ist — räthselhaft —

Wie angedeutet, wurde die Wagner'sche „Faust"-Ouverture verständnisvoll, wenn auch nicht mit Inspiration gespielt. An der Wiedergabe der ersten Brahms'schen Symphonie fanden sicherlich die intimeren Brahms-Freunde mehr Gefallen, als das Publikum, das bei dieser technisch ausgezeichneten Leistung des Orchesters furchtbar kühl blieb. Es lebe das musikalische Verständnis!

Ein Herr Ernst Schalling, der aus Philadelphia stammt und in Europa und Südamerika konzertirt haben soll, der ferner im Programmbuch als ein Schüler von Paderewski genannt wurde, spielte das Liszt'sche Es-dur Konzert in einer Weise, die schärfste Verurtheilung verdient. Mit geringerem Verständnis für seinen geistigen Inhalt und mit schadhafterer Technik ist das schöne Konzert hier seit Jahren nicht gespielt worden. Wie konnte sich das Bostoner Symphonieorchester mit solchen „Virtuosen" belasten, wie konnte der Konzertmeister ihm, dem „Virtuosen", mit solcher Vehemenz applaudiren? Wäre es nicht taktvoller, das letztere dem Publikum zu überlassen? Dieser Herr Schalling hat nach dem, was er gestern hören ließ, für das Klavierspiel nur Finger in's Gefecht zu führen, und leider scheinen auch diese Finger von einer förmlich russischen Strategie beherrscht zu werden. Hat jemand gestern auch nur eine einzige von jenen charakteristischen Oktaven-Cadenzen „rein" gehört? Aber ach! die Mängel der Technik wären eher zu vergessen, als die Verstöße gegen den heiligen Geist.

Aber wiederum das Publikum: es schien zu denken, daß dieser Pianist, der so viel hatte, der heftigste Beifalls-Demonstra- [illegible] der heiligsten Beifalls-Demonstra- [illegible] werth sei. Und so mag sich viel- [illegible] mit dem Bewußt- [illegible] Triumphes in's Bett

N. York March 19.
Times 19.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA'S LAST CONCERT HERE

Its Series Closed Yesterday Afternoon in Carnegie Hall.

PLAYING AT ITS BEST

Wagner's "Faust" Overture, a Bach Suite, and Brahms's C Minor Symphony Given.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra brought its season in New York to a close yesterday afternoon with a concert that was a fitting climax to the enjoyment it has given to the music lovers of this city. It was not easy to imagine a performance more perfect than that of Thursday evening, and if not more perfect this one was, at least, more enjoyable in that the orchestral pieces, all familiar, were all such as to appeal to the sense of pure musical beauty. They were Wagner's "Faust" overture, Bachrich's effective arrangement for string orchestra of three movements by Bach, and Brahms's first symphony in C minor. All this music Mr. Gericke read with commanding authority, sympathy, and penetration into the widely diverse spirit of the three composers represented by it. There was far more than correctness, repose, balance, and all the other elements of the unquestionable technical mastery that has long been recognized as possessed by him. There were fire, poetic imagination, deep feeling, the power of possessing himself of the essential characteristics of the great art with which he was dealing. Mr. Gericke has never played with so much of the emotional and dramatic quality of a great conductor as he has in the season now closed.

Nor has the orchestra ever shown more of the sheer beauty of tone, more of the perfect ensemble which means flexibility, the finest adjustment of color values and dynamic effects, and the broad sweep of line. The exquisite perfection of the woodwind players was shown at its highest in the "Faust" overture, and for this enjoyment New York music lovers are particularly beholden. It is something that is not offered them at home. The virility and elasticity of the strings in the suite of Bach pieces were inspiring, and the captivating rhythms and melodiousness of the gavotte that comes last in it, sent the audience into such a rhapsody of applause that Mr. Gericke made his men rise in a body and bow, as he did the other evening, and then was moved, as he so very rarely is, to repeat the piece. It was only a pity that the whole orchestra could not share in this particular honor.

Mr. Gericke possesses the secret of Brahms as few other conductors have possessed it, and all the beautiful qualities of his reading and of the orchestra's playing were raised to a higher power in their performance of the symphony.

The soloist was Mr. Ernest Schelling, who played for the first time in New York. He is a young American who has studied in Paris and with Paderewski and who returns to his native land with a record of success in many European cities and in South America, and with the repute of a composer of talent and originality. It seemed as if the choice of Liszt's E flat concerto was not altogether a fortunate one for a musician of the temperament and qualities ascribed to Mr. Schelling. It is purely a virtuoso piece and requires, more than all else, brilliancy and dexterity and the power of making "pianistic" effects sound to their utmost. Mr. Schelling showed substantial qualities of musicianship, so far as they have a place in this concerto, but there was not the brillliancy and accuracy of technique that the piece requires; nor did he give it that capricious and somewhat fanciful spirit that belongs to it. He showed both strength and delicacy yesterday; but there was some unfortunate blurring of octave passages by false notes, and the music did not glitter and dazzle. He was, however, rewarded with most demonstrative applause and was several times recalled. A disclosure of the more serious and artistic qualities of Mr. Schelling's piano playing ought to be made; and to some extent it doubtless will be made at his appearance with Mr. Kneisel this week.

Boston Symphony Concert.

Its farewell for the season was said by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon in a blaze of musical glory. Each member of the organization, from Mr. Gericke down to his artistic kettledrummer, seemed bent upon outdoing himself. The result was a memorable concert, rousing the crowded house to enthusiasm, at once the most intense and the best deserved to which Carnegie Hall has echoed in many a day.

Mr. Gericke broke his strict rule against encores by yielding at one point to the overwhelming demand of the house, doubtless as a special farewell courtesy. The strings of the orchestra had given an inspiring performance of a Bach suite, and its final number, a "gavotte in rondo form," had been fairly electrifying in brilliancy.

Staats 19.

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester.

Auch das Bostoner Symphonieorchester ist nunmehr bei seinen letzten Konzerten angelangt: gestern Abend brachte es dem New Yorker Publikum sein letztes Abendkonzert in Carnegie Hall dar, und am nächsten Samstag wird es das letzte Nachmittagskonzert folgen lassen. Das gestrige Programm bestand aus Tschaikowsky's „Manfred"-Symphonie, dem Brahms'schen Violinkoncert, von Kreisler gespielt, und der dritten „Leonore"-Ouverture von Beethoven.

Es war ein Abend höchst erfreulichen Kunstgenußes. Der regelmäßige Besucher dieser Konzerte mag es endlich müde werden, immer wieder die außerordentlichen Eigenschaften des Bostoner Orchesters zu preisen, aber was hilft es ihm, wenn die Veranlassung beinahe mit jedem Besuch der Bostoner in unserer Stadt gegeben wird? Im vorigen Winter stand es nicht so günstig. Da hatten gewisse Personalveränderungen an wichtigen Pulten des Orchesters die Organisation recht erheblich geschädigt. Das ist aber in dieser Saison wieder völlig ausgeglichen worden, und die Bostoner stehen wieder unter den Orchestern des Landes obenan. Daß unser großes, reiches New York in dieser Beziehung noch nicht einmal an zweiter Stelle kommt, ist bedauerlich, freilich verschafft uns gerade dieser Anstand den Genuß, die Bostoner in jeder Saison zehn Male zu hören.

Gestern Abend war Tschaikowsky's groß angelegte und beinahe durchweg fesselnde „Manfred"-Symphonie das Hauptstück des Programms. Die technische Vollendung, die das Orchester unter Wilhelm Gericke's Leitung bei der Wiedergabe dieser komplizirten und an originellen Klangeffekten reichen Symphonie bekundete, fühlt man sich versucht als beispiellos zu bezeichnen. Da war Alles bis in die bescheidensten Einzelheiten ausgearbeitet worden, und die Klangwirkungen bekamen manchmal etwas Magisches. Es muß auch anerkannt werden, daß Herr Gericke wenigstens stellenweise die ihm zur zweiten Natur gewordene Zurückhaltung und Mäßigung fallen ließ und ein paar recht kräftige Fortissimi gestattete; namentlich im letzten Satz. Um gewisse elementare Wirkungen herauszuholen, die in der Partitur liegen, fehlte es freilich dem Bostoner Dirigenten an Temperament. Gebärdet sich doch dieser Tschaikowsky'sche „Manfred" manchmal etwas gar zu russisch-wild. Immerhin, da es sich in erster Linie um Tschaikowsky und erst in zweiter um Manfred handelt, ist bei einer Aufführung dieses charakteristischen Tonbildes jene wilde Kraft des Ausdrucks wünschenswerth. Aber trotzdem war gestern die Wirkung eine große, und der Beifall wuchs nach dem letzten Satz derart an, daß Dirigent Gericke sich bewogen fühlte, die Musiker zum Erheben von ihren Sitzen zu veranlaen. Und dann bekam das Orchester eine richtige Ovation.

Solist des Abends war Fritz Kreisler, der wieder das Brahms'sche Violinconcert spielte, das er schon bei seinem ersten Auftreten in diesem Winter vorgetragen hatte. Aber mit so viel Größe des Stil's und mit so viel Schwung hat man das schwierige und in mancher Beziehung ungefügige Concert hier noch nicht von ihm gehört. Kreisler wächst zusehends. Es liegt etwas von einem innerlichen Fanatismus in seinem Spiel, und diese echte, innere Begeisterung zwingt auch den Zuhörer in den Bann des Spielers. Es ist garnicht abzusehen, was bei solchem wundervollen Streben noch aus dem reich begabten Kreisler werden mag. Schon heute ist man in Verlegenheit, wenn man ebenbürtige Rivalen aufzählen soll; in einigen Jahren mag Kreisler auf dem einsamen Gipfel des Virtuosenthums angekommen sein.

Stadt 19.

One of the prominent features of the past week in music was the masterful playing of young Mr. Kreisler. He was heard three times, twice in combination with Mr. Ysaye at the concerts in aid of the Orthopædic Hospital and once with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On Tuesday afternoon he played the Beethoven concerto and on Thursday evening the Brahms concerto, while on both Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon he played with Ysaye the Bach double concerto.

In the Bach music he agreeably surprised even his admirers by the continuance of his performance, which was warm without being exaggerated and was notably pure in style. The Beethoven concerto afforded him a wider scope for the play of his fiery temperament, and he gave the composition an interpretation filled with emotional intensity, yet withal couched in dignified accents.

Kreisler used to let his temperament run away with him at times; and then his technical sins were many. Now he seems to have reached that stage of artistic development at which he has perfect confidence in his technical certainty and can attack everything with the utmost boldness, while his temperament is under a firmer grip of the intelligence than it formerly was.

In his performance of the Brahms concerto on Thursday night these conditions were disclosed most convincingly. The way in which he went at the formidably difficult cadenza was startling, yet he hurled off its difficulties with consummate mastery. Brilliant as this tour de force was, it was not an empty parade of technical skill. It was a thoroughly musical performance.

Kreisler is only 30 years old. The best years of his artistic life are before him. He has advanced so rapidly and so confidently in the past year that it will be altogether strange if the next ten years do not place him among the greatest violinists of his time.

AUDIENCE CHEERS THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

A captivated audience at Carnegie Hall yesterday cheered the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It played with exquisite art the Faust overture of Wagner, the prelude, adagio and gavotte in Rondo form of Bach, arranged for strings; Liszt's first piano concerto, and Brahms's First Symphony. The Bach number was applauded violently.

Gericke bowed, the first violin bowed, the entire orchestra stood up and bowed. The gavotte had to be played again. Ernst Schelling, pupil of Paderewski, was the pianist. He had learning, tact, a great deal of ability. He was heartily commended.

MUSIC.

The Boston Orchestra's Last Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra closed its season in New-York yesterday with its fifth afternoon concert in Carnegie Hall. The programme offered no novelty, but the familiar pieces on it were played with a marvellous finish and beauty of tone and with a spirit and enthusiasm that revealed their inmost beauties. The concert was a fitting close to a series that has given some of the purest enjoyment to lovers of orchestral music in New-York. The programme comprised Wagner's "Eine Faust Ouverture," the arrangement by Bachrich for string orchestra of three pieces by Bach, Brahms's first symphony in C minor and Liszt's E flat concerto, played by Mr. Ernest Schelling.

The perfection of the orchestra's playing on Thursday evening was duplicated at this concert, which marked as high a point as the Boston players have often reached in respect of spirit, perfect beauty and balance of tone and warmth of expression. Mr. Gericke has seldom conducted with more fire and energy, or entered more deeply into the poetical spirit of the music he had in hand. In the Brahms symphony he found and revealed the true essence of the music, with splendid vigor and contagious enthusiasm. In Bachrich's clever elaboration of movements by Bach, gathered from different sources, the strings were played with superb brilliancy, and the final "gavotte in rondo form" pleased the audience so much that Mr. Gericke caused his men to rise in a body and bow in response to the applause, as he did on Thursday evening, and when this would not suffice he broke his long standing rule by playing the movement over again.

Mr. Schelling made his first appearance in New-York at this concert. He is a young American who has studied at the Paris Conservatory and with Mr. Paderewski, and is said to have gifts as a composer. In playing Liszt's concerto he undertook a piece that makes its chief appeal to the virtuoso, and it cannot truly be said that he displayed the brilliancy of virtuoso powers that it demands. There were imperfections to be heard in his technique that dimmed the brilliancy of some of his passage, and he showed at times some deficiency in rhythmic incisiveness. We are, in truth, accustomed to hearing this concerto better played; and if it must be played at all, of which the necessity from a musical point of view is never very evident, it ought to be better played. Fortunately, Mr. Schelling is to appear again in New-York, and with an opportunity to show other aspects of his quality as an artist.

[81]

Staats 19.

Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester.

Das Publikum ist manchmal gar zu launenhaft! In Carnegie Hall wurde gestern Nachmittag, bei Gelegenheit des letzten Konzerts des Bostoner Symphonie-orchesters, der Dirigent, Herr Gericke, nach dem Vortrage einer Bach'schen Gavotte derart mit Beifall überschüttet, als wenn er eine unglaublich große That vollbracht hätte. Diese Bach'sche Gavotte, im Arrangement für Streichorchester, zu dirigiren, ist ein Meisterstück, das wahrscheinlich jedes einzelne Mitglied des Orchesters, vom Konzertmeister abwärts, gerade so gut vollbringen könnte. Weshalb also diese Erregung des Publikums? Weil die Leute immer wieder ihre Naivetät offenbaren müssen, weil gestern Nachmittag wenigstens zwei Drittel der Anwesenden ihre erste Bekanntschaft mit dieser Gavotte machten. Und da sie nun plötzlich erfuhren, daß Bach etwas so Köstliches komponirt hatte, glaubten sie Herrn Gericke dafür den Dank abstatten zu müssen.

Umgekehrt erhielt Herr Gericke so gut wie gar keinen Beifall nach der Wagner'schen „Faust"-Ouverture. Und da hatte er so viel mehr thun können, und thatsächlich gethan, als in allen anderen Nummern des Programms! Die Interpretation war zwar nicht im höheren Sinne „faustisch", aber sie war zum wenigsten genügend musikalisch; sie hätte, in der That, eine viel tiefere Wirkung auf das Publikum machen müssen, wenn besagtes, hochverehrliches Publikum eben selbst ein wenig „tiefer" gewesen wäre.

Bei aller inbrünstigen Verehrung für Bach, die der ernsthafte Musiker im Herzen trägt, kann es Einem doch schwül werden, wenn eine Bach-Nummer die Hurrah-Canaille auf die Beine bringt. Jene F-dur-Gavotte wurde vom Streichorchester vorgetragen, für das Johann Sebastian sie nicht geschrieben hat; aber der Herr Bachrich in Wien hat sich nicht enthalten können, sie für besagte Instrumente zu arrangiren. Es ist, grammatikalisch, ja nur ein geringer Unterschied zwischen Bach und Bachrich, aber das Publikum applaudirte gestern den letzteren, und es hatte offenbar keine Ahnung davon, daß Bachrich aus Bach einen gespreizten Pfau gemacht hatte. Diese Bachrich'schen Arrangements werden das wahre Verständnis für Bach nicht um einen Zoll steigern; und wenn sie ihn so wie gestern „populariſiren", wird Bach schließlich den Schaden davon haben.

Offenbar haben die „Applausejungen" das Gefühl, diese Bach'sche Garotte sei das Signal für eine Demonstration. Gericke schien mit Recht überrascht zu sein, und schließlich veranlaßte er das Orchester, sich dankend von den Sitzen zu erheben. Und als dann die Leute immer noch nicht still blieben, brach Gericke selbst die eiserne Regel und wiederholte die Gavotte. Darnach darf er sich nicht beklagen, wenn irgend ein Solist in diesen Konzerten eine Zugabe spielt.

Das Komischste aber war, daß die guten Leute im Auditorium glaubten, sie brächten dem Bostoner Symphonieorchester eine Ovation: und dabei feierten sie nur dessen Streichkörper. Die Bläser saßen dabei und versuchten intelligent auszusehen. Oh ja, das Publikum ist — räthselhaft —

Wie angedeutet, wurde die Wagner'sche „Faust"-Ouverture verständnisvoll, wenn auch nicht mit Inspiration gespielt. An der Wiedergabe der ersten Brahms'schen Symphonie fanden sicherlich die intimeren Brahms-Freunde mehr Gefallen, als das Publikum, das bei dieser technisch ausgezeichneten Leistung des Orchesters furchtbar kühl blieb. Es lebe das musikalische Verständnis!

Ein Herr Ernst Schalling, der aus Philadelphia stammt und in Europa und Südamerika konzertirt haben soll, der ferner im Programmbuch als ein Schüler von Paderewski genannt wurde, spielte das Liszt'sche Es-dm Konzert in einer Weise, die schärfste Verurtheilung verdient. Mit geringerem Verständnis für seinen geistigen Inhalt und mit schadhafterer Technik ist das schöne Konzert hier seit Jahren nicht gespielt worden. Wie konnte sich das Bostoner Symphonieorchester mit solchen „Virtuosen" belasten, wie konnte der Konzertmeister ihm, dem „Virtuosen", mit solcher Vehemenz applaudiren? Wäre es nicht taktvoller, das letztere dem Publikum zu überlassen? Dieser Herr Schalling hat nach dem, was er gestern hören ließ, für das Klavierspiel nur Finger in's Gefecht zu führen, und leider scheinen auch diese Finger von einer förmlich russischen Strategie beherrscht zu werden. Hat jemand gestern auch nur eine einzige von jenen charakteristischen Octaven-Cadenzen „rein" gehört? Aber ach! die Mängel der Technik wären eher zu vergessen, als die Verstöße gegen den heiligen Geist.

Aber wiederum das Publikum: es schien zu denken, daß dieser Pianist, der so viel hatte, der heftigste Beifalls-Demonstrationen werth sei. Und so mag sich vielleicht Herr Schalling mit dem Bewußtsein eines errungenen Triumphes in's Bett

N. York Staats Zeitung 19.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA'S LAST CONCERT HERE

Its Series Closed Yesterday Afternoon in Carnegie Hall.

PLAYING AT ITS BEST

Wagner's "Faust" Overture, a Bach Suite, and Brahms's C Minor Symphony Given.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra brought its season in New York to a close yesterday afternoon with a concert that was a fitting climax to the enjoyment it has given to the music lovers of this city. It was not easy to imagine a performance more perfect than that of Thursday evening, and if not more perfect this one was, at least, more enjoyable in that the orchestral pieces, all familiar, were all such as to appeal to the sense of pure musical beauty. They were Wagner's "Faust" overture, Bachrich's effective arrangement for string orchestra of three movements by Bach, and Brahms's first symphony in C minor. All this music Mr. Gericke read with commanding authority, sympathy, and penetration into the widely diverse spirit of the three composers represented by it. There was far more than correctness, repose, balance, and all the other elements of the unquestionable technical mastery that has long been recognized as possessed by him. There were fire, poetic imagination, deep feeling, the power of possessing himself of the essential characteristics of the great art with which he was dealing. Mr. Gericke has never played with so much of the emotional and dramatic quality of a great conductor as he has in the season now closed.

Nor has the orchestra ever shown more of the sheer beauty of tone, more of the perfect ensemble which means flexibility, the finest adjustment of color values and dynamic effects, and the broad sweep of line. The exquisite perfection of the woodwind players was shown at its highest in the "Faust" overture, and for this enjoyment New York music lovers are particularly beholden. It is something that is not offered them at home. The virility and elasticity of the strings in the suite of Bach pieces were inspiring, and the captivating rhythms and melodiousness of the gavotte that comes last in it, sent the audience into such a rhapsody of applause that Mr. Gericke made his men rise in a body and bow, as he did the other evening, and then was moved, as he so very rarely is, to repeat the piece. It was only a pity that the whole orchestra could not share in this particular honor.

Mr. Gericke possesses the secret of Brahms as few other conductors have possessed it, and all the beautiful qualities of his reading and of the orchestra's playing were raised to a higher power in their performance of the symphony.

The soloist was Mr. Ernest Schelling, who played for the first time in New York. He is a young American who has studied in Paris and with Paderewski and who returns to his native land with a record of success in many European cities and in South America, and with the repute of a composer of talent and originality. It seemed as if the choice of Liszt's E flat concerto was not altogether a fortunate one for a musician of the temperament and qualities ascribed to Mr. Schelling. It is purely a virtuoso piece and requires, more than all else, brilliancy and dexterity and the power of making "pianistic" effects sound to their utmost. Mr. Schelling showed substantial qualities of musicianship, so far as they have a place in this concerto, but there was not the brillliancy and accuracy of technique that the piece requires; nor did he give it that capricious and somewhat fanciful spirit that belongs to it. He showed both strength and delicacy yesterday; but there was some unfortunate blurring of octave passages by false notes, and the music did not glitter and dazzle. He was, however, rewarded with most demonstrative applause and was several times recalled. A disclosure of the more serious and artistic qualities of Mr. Schelling's piano playing ought to be made; and to some extent it doubtless will be made at his appearance with Mr. Kneisel this week.

Boston Symphony Concert.

Its farewell for the season was said by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon in a blaze of musical glory. Each member of the organization, from Mr. Gericke down to his artistic kettledrummer, seemed bent upon outdoing himself. The result was a memorable concert, rousing the crowded house to enthusiasm, at once the most intense and the best deserved to which Carnegie Hall has echoed in many a day.

Mr. Gericke broke his strict rule against encores by yielding at one point to the overwhelming demand of the house, doubtless as a special farewell courtesy. The strings of the orchestra had given an inspiring performance of a Bach suite, and its final number, a "gavotte in rondo form," had been fairly electrifying in brilliancy.

Staats 19.

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester.

Auch das Bostoner Symphonieorchester ist nunmehr bei seinen letzten Konzerten angelangt: gestern Abend brachte es dem New Yorker Publikum sein letztes Abendkonzert in Carnegie Hall dar, und am nächsten Samstag wird es das letzte Nachmittagskonzert folgen lassen. Das gestrige Programm bestand aus Tschaikowsky's „Manfred"-Symphonie, dem Brahms'schen Violinkoncert, von Kreisler gespielt, und der dritten „Leonore"-Ouverture von Beethoven.

Es war ein Abend höchst erfreulichen Kunstgenußes. Der regelmäßige Besucher dieser Konzerte mag es endlich müde werden, immer wieder die außerordentlichen Eigenschaften des Bostoner Orchesters zu preisen, aber was hilft es ihm, wenn die Veranlassung beinahe mit jedem Besuch der Bostoner in unserer Stadt gegeben wird? Im vorigen Winter stand es nicht so günstig. Da hatten gewisse Personalveränderungen an wichtigen Pulten des Orchesters die Organisation recht erheblich geschädigt. Das ist aber in dieser Saison wieder völlig ausgeglichen worden, und die Bostoner stehen wieder unter den Orchestern des Landes obenan. Daß unser großes, reiches New York in dieser Beziehung noch nicht einmal an zweiter Stelle kommt, ist bedauerlich, freilich verschafft uns gerade dieser Anstand den Genuß, die Bostoner in jeder Saison zehn Male zu hören.

Gestern Abend war Tschaikowsky's groß angelegte und beinahe durchweg fesselnde „Manfred"-Symphonie das Hauptstück des Programms. Die technische Vollendung, die das Orchester unter Wilhelm Gericke's Leitung bei der Wiedergabe dieser komplizirten und an originellen Klangeffekten reichen Symphonie bekundete, fühlt man sich versucht als beispiellos zu bezeichnen. Da war Alles bis in die bescheidensten Einzelheiten ausgearbeitet worden, und die Klangwirkungen bekamen manchmal etwas Magisches. Es muß auch anerkannt werden, daß Herr Gericke wenigstens stellenweise die ihm zur zweiten Natur gewordene Zurückhaltung und Mäßigung fallen ließ und ein paar recht kräftige Fortissimi gestattete; namentlich im letzten Satz. Um gewisse elementare Wirkungen herauszuholen, die in der Partitur liegen, fehlte es freilich dem Bostoner Dirigenten an Temperament. Gebärdet sich doch dieser Tschaikowsky'sche „Manfred" manchmal etwas gar zu russisch-wild. Immerhin, da es sich in erster Linie um Tschaikowsky und erst in zweiter um Manfred handelt, ist bei einer Aufführung dieses charakteristischen Tonbildes jene wilde Kraft des Ausdrucks wünschenswerth. Aber trotzdem war gestern die Wirkung eine große, und der Beifall wuchs nach dem letzten Satz derart an, daß Dirigent Gericke sich bewogen fühlte, die Musiker zum Erheben von ihren Sitzen zu veranlaen. Und dann bekam das Orchester eine richtige Ovation.

Solist des Abends war Fritz Kreisler, der wieder das Brahms'sche Violinconcert spielte, das er schon bei seinem ersten Auftreten in diesem Winter vorgetragen hatte. Aber mit so viel Größe des Stil's und mit so viel Schwung hat man das schwierige und in mancher Beziehung ungefüge Concert hier noch nicht von ihm gehört. Kreisler wächst zusehends. Es liegt etwas von einem innerlichen Fanatismus in seinem Spiel, und diese echte, innere Begeisterung zwingt auch den Zuhörer in den Bann des Spielers. Es ist garnicht abzusehen, was bei solchem wundervollen Streben noch aus dem reich begabten Kreisler werden mag. Schon heute ist man in Verlegenheit, wenn man ebenbürtige Rivalen aufzählen soll; in einigen Jahren mag Kreisler auf dem einsamen Gipfel des Virtuosenthums angekommen sein.

Waldo-Symphonieconcert.

AUDIENCE CHEERS THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

A captivated audience at Carnegie Hall yesterday cheered the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It played with exquisite art the Faust overture of Wagner, the prelude, adagio and gavotte in Rondo form of Bach, arranged for strings; Liszt's first piano concerto, and Brahms's First Symphony. The Bach number was applauded violently.

Gericke bowed, the first violin bowed, the entire orchestra stood up and bowed. The gavotte had to be played again. Ernst Schelling, pupil of Paderewski, was the pianist. He had learning, tact, a great deal of ability. He was heartily commended.

Jan. 12. 19.

One of the prominent features of the past week in music was the masterful playing of young Mr. Kreisler. He was heard three times, twice in combination with Mr. Ysaye at the concerts in aid of the Orthopædic Hospital and once with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On Tuesday afternoon he played the Beethoven concerto and on Thursday evening the Brahms concerto, while on both Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon he played with Ysaye the Bach double concerto.

In the Bach music he agreeably surprised even his admirers by the continuance of his performance, which was warm without being exaggerated and was notably pure in style. The Beethoven concerto afforded him a wider scope for the play of his fiery temperament, and he gave the composition an interpretation filled with emotional intensity, yet withal couched in dignified accents.

Kreisler used to let his temperament run away with him at times; and then his technical sins were many. Now he seems to have reached that stage of artistic development at which he has perfect confidence in his technical certainty and can attack everything with the utmost boldness, while his temperament is under a firmer grip of the intelligence than it formerly was.

In his performance of the Brahms concerto on Thursday night these conditions were disclosed most convincingly. The way in which he went at the formidably difficult cadenza was startling, yet he hurled off its difficulties with consummate mastery. Brilliant as this tour de force was, it was not an empty parade of technical skill. It was a thoroughly musical performance.

Kreisler is only 30 years old. The best years of his artistic life are before him. He has advanced so rapidly and so confidently in the past year that it will be altogether strange if the next ten years do not place him among the greatest violinists of his time.

MUSIC.

The Boston Orchestra's Last Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra closed its season in New-York yesterday with its fifth afternoon concert in Carnegie Hall. The programme offered no novelty, but the familiar pieces on it were played with a marvellous finish and beauty of tone and with a spirit and enthusiasm that revealed their inmost beauties. The concert was a fitting close to a series that has given some of the purest enjoyment to lovers of orchestral music in New-York. The programme comprised Wagner's "Eine Faust Ouverture," the arrangement by Bachrich for string orchestra of three pieces by Bach, Brahms's first symphony in C minor and Liszt's E flat concerto, played by Mr. Ernest Schelling.

The perfection of the orchestra's playing on Thursday evening was duplicated at this concert, which marked as high a point as the Boston players have often reached in respect of spirit, perfect beauty and balance of tone and warmth of expression. Mr. Gericke has seldom conducted with more fire and energy, or entered more deeply into the poetical spirit of the music he had in hand. In the Brahms symphony he found and revealed the true essence of the music, with splendid vigor and contagious enthusiasm. In Bachrich's clever elaboration of movements by Bach, gathered from different sources, the strings were played with superb brilliancy, and the final "gavotte in rondo form" pleased the audience so much that Mr. Gericke caused his men to rise in a body and bow in response to the applause, as he did on Thursday evening, and when this would not suffice he broke his long standing rule by playing the movement over again.

Mr. Schelling made his first appearance in New-York at this concert. He is a young American who has studied at the Paris Conservatory and with Mr. Paderewski, and is said to have gifts as a composer. In playing Liszt's concerto he undertook a piece that makes its chief appeal to the virtuoso, and it cannot truly be said that he displayed the brilliancy of virtuoso powers that it demands. There were imperfections to be heard in his technique that dimmed the brilliancy of some of his passage, and he showed at times some deficiency in rhythmic incisiveness. We are, in truth, accustomed to hearing this concerto better played; and if it must be played at all, of which the necessity from a musical point of view is never very evident, it ought to be better played. Fortunately, Mr. Schelling is to appear again in New-York, and with an opportunity to show other aspects of his quality as an artist.

[81]

Globe 2-?

ERNEST SCHELLING.

GERICKE has invariably denied the soloists with the Boston Orchestra an encore, but he could not refuse it on Saturday afternoon when the audience insisted upon it for his men. The strings had been playing the three fragments of Bach that Bachrich has arranged in a little suite—playing them with the depth and resonance, the vitality and pliancy, the smoothness and shimmer, that no other string choir that we hear approaches. The sang with one voice, or with many they wove the strands of Bach's music to the ear, as a web of cloth grows to the eye on the loom. The musical feeling behind matched the technical felicity of the performance. The suite ends with a gavotte. The strings danced it with the keenest and most delicate sense of rhythm. Carnegie Hall rang with the answering applause. It might have been a star conductor and a symphony of Tschaikowsky's instead of a trifle of Bach's and the string choir of an orchestra, in which the audience was rejoicing. Gericke bowed. The men rose and bowed. But there was no satisfying their hearers until they had repeated the gavotte.

The performance of Wagner's "Faust" overture and of Brahms's first symphony deserved as much. Like many another at these concerts of late, it proved triumphantly that neither band nor conductor sit content in cold and placid virtuosity. What Gericke and his men understand and practise; what it is a pity that more conductors and more orchestras do not understand and practise, is that the more efficient the means of expression, the more fully and significantly will the thing expressed come to their hearers. The composer, who ought to be on fire with zeal for the music that he was writing, proceeds self-unconsciously upon the supposition that it will have a nearly perfect performance. For such a performance he proportions and contrasts his masses of tone, lays on his instrumental shadings, works out his illuminating details, shapes the outlines, and fills up the contents of his melodies. By the beauty of tone that the players impart to them his listeners will hear them as his imagination heard them. He trusts his orchestra for all that he has wrought and much that lies behind it. The Boston men almost always reward this trust. The wood winds in the "Faust" overture might have been the voices of Wagner's imagining. The tremulous strings in the beginning of the last movement of the symphony were almost magical.

And what is the first business of the conductor? To make the composer eloquent. Then let that conductor color and warm the eloquence with as much of his temperament as he may. First of all let us in the audience hear the composer, and almost always Gericke does make whatever music he undertakes sound, and sound characteristically. It is absurd to call him a conductor with no warmth of feeling and no responsive temperament except for musical design and technical perfection. If he were such he could not have played Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" on Thursday or Wagner's overture on Saturday with the fire and the force that he brought to them. Here he was summoning the high colors and intense moods of musical melodrama. The playing of Brahms's symphony was a soberer and a finer achievement, full of Gericke's best gift—a continent power that mental penetration and force shape and control. The final movement was eloquent with the hymn to joy that Brahms made of it. Yet conductor, men, and auditors were not "all out" at the end, and the impression was the deeper and larger for it. It was absurd to call the slow movement crabbed when he and his men sang it with such beauty of sustained and pliant tone as they brought to it. A conductor must unweave Brahms before his hearers. Gericke does it, keeps the beauty of musical line in every strand and makes it a part of the whole musical web. His Brahms is eloquent, because it is clear, because it has tonal beauty, because it never forces Brahms's own continence.

Ernest Schelling, the young pianist of the afternoon, was disappointing—more, you suspected, from an unwisely chosen concerto than from any lack of considerable talents. The concerto was the first of Liszt's. It cries out for brilliancy. Without brilliancy little remains. It asks a free and sweeping virtuosity. It must sound almost like a huge and glorified improvisation; and it must sound until pianist and listeners are fairly intoxicated with it. The qualities that would make it such were lacking in Schelling's performance. It was tame, and a tame Liszt hovers dangerously near a commonplace one. On the other hand, he played often with a clear suavity of tone, a touch that can shade delicately and emphasize without exaggeration, an evident regard for lucid musical expression, and a general sobriety of musical feeling. These are traits that, in better chosen music, should make Schelling interesting.

MR. ERNEST SCHELLING HEARD AS PADEREWSKI'S PUPIL.

Philadelphia Pianist Plays at the Boston Symphony's Farewell While Gericke, as a Matinee Idol in Spite of "Baton Prima Donna" Rivals, Makes History Here by Giving a Conductor's Encore to Bach and by Greeting His Audience with a Smile—More Riots Than Tickets at the Paderewski Sale—Mr. Coudert and Others—The "Elijah" To-night.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's last matinée for the season took a great company of music lovers to Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon to enjoy an excellent programme. After the second number two things unknown to history happened—Gericke gave an encore and smiled while he was doing it. Bach's prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form, arranged for strings by Bachrich, played admirably, came so full of life and spirit, like a burs, of spring, that the audience was not satisfied with the conductor's bows nor the bows of the orchestra, but kept up its applause until Mr. Gericke had to depart from his old rules and repeat the last movement. Wagner's "Faust" overture and Brahms's Symphony No. 1. In C minor, also finely rendered, were the other two orchestral numbers.

A young American pianist, Ernest Schelling, was the soloist, and on the whole made an excellent impression on his first appearance in this city. He was born in Philadelphia, where his family is well known, and is now about 30 years old. He entered the Paris Conservatory when he was nine years old, and continued his studies at Basel with Hans Huber. As a lad he played in London, Paris and in cities of Germany, Switzerland, Sweden and Denmark. Paderewski became interested in him and taught him for some time. During the last four years Mr. Schelling has appeared as a virtuoso in cities of Europe and South America. He is pianist to the Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and for several years past has been living in the court of that German Prince. He came to this country a few months ago and made his first public appearance in Boston with the symphony orchestra, with which he has since been making a tour.

The selection for Saturday, Liszt's E flat concerto, for pianoforte and orchestra, was not a fortunate one for him He possesses a splendid technique and played many of the most intricate passages with wonderful facility. Pleasing as this performance was as a whole, it was evident that the artist would have appeared to better advantage in more serious music. He was at evident disadvantage on account of a piano which was totally inadequate to his needs, and it was easy to see that in recital he would show fuller powers. The audience was most enthusiastic and called him back again and again.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

One of the most encouraging phenomena in the musical world is the growing popularity of Bach. The pianists have played him for some years more and more frequently, while the violinists—particularly Ysaye and Kreisler—have given us more of Bach than of any one else, apparently to everybody's satisfaction. His choral works are not heard as often as could be desired, and for orchestra, unfortunately, he wrote little; wherefore, one must welcome the making of suites out of orchestrated parts of other works, like the "Divertimento" with which Anton Seidl once aroused so much enthusiasm at a Philharmonic concert.

At Saturday afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Mr. Gericke produced a similar suite, compounded by Bachrich out of the third partita for violin and the second sonata for violin; and again the result was a great outburst of enthusiasm, which continued so long that Mr. Gericke was obliged to break the rule and repeat the final gavotte. The orchestra deserved this ovation, for it—that is, the strings—never played anything more superbly than this suite, notably the adagio, in which there was a noble quality of tone and a surging of emotional sound that made one bless both Bach and Bachrich for their work. The other orchestral numbers were Wagner's "Faust" overture and Brahms's first symphony.

The soloist of the occasion was Paderewski's friend and protégé, Mr. Ernest Schelling, who played the first Liszt concerto. Mr. Schelling is, like Mr. Kreisler, only thirty years old, but he has already appeared with success in various European and South American cities. Lately he has devoted much of his time to composing, and that, perhaps, is why he plays like a composer rather than a virtuoso, which may, on the whole, be interpreted as a compliment. He might have played parts of the concerto with a more dazzling brilliancy, but in Liszt's music—even in the concertos, which are intended as show pieces—there is always a substratum of melodic thought and harmonic detail that raises it to a high artistic level, and it was in the emphasizing of these musical elements that Mr. Schelling excelled. He is evidently one of the coming men; he was most cordially applauded by the audience, and recalled several times. To-morrow night he will be heard in Mendelssohn Hall with the Kneisel Quartet.

BOSTON SYMPHONY SEASON ENDED

Brilliant Close of the New York Series—Unexpected Result of Request Programme Ballot in Philadelphia.

Wilhelm Gericke, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appears to the ordinary observer a man of rare temperamental poise. Yet he, too, has his gamut of emotional pressure, and regular auditors of the New York series of concerts have found wide variations in his attitude, for instance, toward modern music.

Mr. Gericke has played Dvorak's "New World" symphony here in a way absolutely irritating in its tameness. He has often read Wagner with a restricted range of feeling when the flood gates should have been opened. Tschaikowsky, too, has more than once been mulcted, at his hands, of half his poignant intensity.

But this year Mr. Gericke has done several surprising things in this particular domain of his activity. The Tschaikowsky "Manfred" symphony was read last Thursday night, as already recorded here, with amazing power and vitality. Saturday's final matinee programme went with a sweep and vigor that could not be gainsaid. Wagner's "A Faust Overture," with its urgent work for the strings, had a noteworthy performance, while the accompaniment of the Liszt E flat major piano concerto was not only brilliant, but went with apparent relish. The Bach prelude, adagio and gavotte, arranged for strings by Bachrich, might have been counted on, of course, for a true interpretation—it was so well done that the audience demanded a repetition. Brahms's first symphony has always been a thing of serious delight under Mr. Gericke's baton, and never more so than this time.

Ernest Schelling, the young American pianist, and one of Paderewski's few proteges, was not happy in his choice of the Liszt concerto for his New York debut. The virtuoso in him did not quite level up to the demands of this difficult piano score. The repertory of Mr. Schelling is said to contain two Beethoven concertos, the two by Chopin, and one each of Schumann, Rubinstein, Saint-Saens, Tschaikowsky and Grieg, besides Paderewski's "Polish Fantasia" and other works. One of these would probably have shown to better advantage his real qualities. As Mr. Schelling will appear to-morrow night with the Kneisels, his work may be studied then, perhaps to more advantage.

Life March 16.

MUSIC

WHILE Herr Conried has not fulfilled quite all his promises, this season's opera has been far more satisfying than its immediate predecessor. Of good singers there were a greater number. To be sure, some of the promised operas were not given, and further acquaintance with Coppelia was desired; but there was solemn compensation—to many, perhaps—in a generous sufficiency of Parsifal. This over-advertised production, however, inspired less interest than a year ago.

The season's last concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra takes place on March 16th, to the deep regret of a host of serious lovers of what is best in music. Thanks to Boston for sending forth into the wilderness this incomparable band of musicians.

If large and enthusiastic audiences are a proof of success, Mr. Bagby may rest content with his season's work. He has earned the gratitude of many lovers of good music.

Mr. Arthur Whiteing recently brought to a close a series of talks on several composers, illustrating them on the piano. The last, of which Brahms was the subject, was of unusual interest, and Mr. Whiteing's playing of some of the composer's last works was thoroughly sympathetic. The three great violinists—Kreisler, Ysaye and the wonderful boy, Vecsey — added materially to the season's pleasure.

THE SUN

BALTIMORE, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15, 1905.

LAST CONCERT THE BEST

Magnificent Performance By The Boston Symphony.

"BRAVOES" FOR THE PLAYERS

Tschaikowsky Symphony Based On Byron's "Manfred"—Program An Admirable One.

It is only rarely that the Boston Symphony Orchestra evokes as great enthusiasm as that with which the playing of the organization under the leadership of its director, Wilhelm Gericke, was greeted at the Lyric last night.

But it is equally unusual for the flawlessness of the performance to be vitalized by as great vigor and warmth. The concert was the last of this season's series, and in many respects the best, and the great hall was taxed almost to the limit of its seating capacity. The semi-social aspect of the occasion, the concerts having long been considered as adjuncts of the social, as well as vents of the musical, season, gave a gala air to the scene.

Opening with one of the most richly orchestrated specimens of descriptive music, the Tschaikowsky symphony, based on Byron's "Manfred" and ending with Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, the program was admirable in the deference shown to the preferences of the more conservative music lovers, as well as to those of the advocates of the music of the future. The solo offering was Volkmann's concerto in A minor for violoncello and orchestra, and the soloist was Mr. Rudolf Krasselt, a young but talented member of the organization, whose right to the term and rank of "artist" was fully proved by his playing. His tone was beautifully round and mellow, his technique brilliant and his musicianship authoritative.

Balakiréff, the Russian musician who suggested the subject of "Manfred" to Tschaikowsky as the basis of a symphonic poem, is also said to have been responsible for the arrangement of the symphony into the four divisions into which it was cast by the composer. The first movement, at his suggestion, portrays Manfred's wanderings, his despair and search for forgetfulness.

In the second, the vivace movement, it is the fairy of the Alps, evoked from the glistening cataract the witch, to whom the story of his hapless love for Astarte is futilely told. The third movement, the pastorate, was suggested by the scene between Manfred and the hunter, and in the fourth and closing movement the bacchanal in the hall of Arimanes, then the invocation to Astarte, with her prediction of Manfred's approaching dissolution, and finally Manfred's death are depicted.

The opening movement is fertile in the psychological suggestions that may be read into it, but the themes of anguish and mental distress in this give way to the grace, beauty and mysteriousness in the "Fairy" movement. The same characteristics, but with greater repose and more sustained beauty, distinguished the third picture—the word comes more naturally than movement, so skilfully do the varied tones reproduce the effects suggested.

That peace comes to Manfred after his wanderings is hinted by the employment in the finale of richly sustained organ chords. But the device jars; the suddenness of the transition from the coloring given the picture by the orchestral tones to that lent it by the single instrument is too startling to be agreeable.

But the varied and exquisite beauty of the rest of the tone pictures made the performance of the symphony one long to be remembered, and the audience expressed its pleasure in enthusiastic applause and even in "bravos," which recalled Mr. Gericke to the stand again and again.

[82]

ERNEST SCHELLING.

GERICKE has invariably denied the soloists with the Boston Orchestra an encore, but he could not refuse it on Saturday afternoon when the audience insisted upon it for his men. The strings had been playing the three fragments of Bach that Bachrich has arranged in a little suite—playing them with the depth and resonance, the vitality and pliancy, the smoothness and shimmer, that no other string choir that we hear approaches. The sang with one voice, or with many they wove the strands of Bach's music to the ear, as a web of cloth grows to the eye on the loom. The musical feeling behind matched the technical felicity of the performance. The suite ends with a gavotte. The strings danced it with the keenest and most delicate sense of rhythm. Carnegie Hall rang with the answering applause. It might have been a star conductor and a symphony of Tschaikowsky's instead of a trifle of Bach's and the string choir of an orchestra, in which the audience was rejoicing. Gericke bowed. The men rose and bowed. But there was no satisfying their hearers until they had repeated the gavotte.

The performance of Wagner's "Faust" overture and of Brahms's first symphony deserved as much. Like many another at these concerts of late, it proved triumphantly that neither band nor conductor is content in cold and placid virtuosity. What Gericke and his men understand and practise; what it is a pity that more conductors and more orchestras do not understand and practise, is that the more efficient the means of expression, the more fully and significantly will the thing expressed come to their hearers. The composer, who ought to be on fire with zeal for the music that he was writing, proceeds self-unconsciously upon the supposition that it will have a nearly perfect performance. For such a performance he proportions and contrasts his masses of tone, lays on his instrumental shadings, works out his illuminating details, shapes the outlines, and fills up the contents of his melodies. By the beauty of tone that the players impart to them his listeners will hear them as his imagination heard them. He trusts his orchestra for all that he has wrought and much that lies behind it. The Boston men almost always reward this trust. The wood winds in the "Faust" overture might have been the voices of Wagner's imagining. The tremulous strings in the beginning of the last movement of the symphony were almost magical.

And what is the first business of the conductor? To make the composer eloquent. Then let that conductor color and warm the eloquence with as much of his temperament as he may. First of all let us in the audience hear the composer, and almost always Gericke does make whatever music he undertakes sound, and sound characteristically. It is absurd to call him a conductor with no warmth of feeling and no responsive temperament except for musical design and technical perfection. If he were such he could not have played Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" on Thursday or Wagner's overture on Saturday with the fire and the force that he brought to them. Here he was summoning the high colors and intense moods of musical melodrama. The playing of Brahms's symphony was a soberer and a finer achievement, full of Gericke's best gift—a continent power that mental penetration and force shape and control. The final movement was eloquent with the hymn to joy that Brahms made of it. Yet conductor, men, and auditors were not "all out" at the end, and the impression was the deeper and larger for it. It was absurd to call the slow movement crabbed when he and his men sang it with such beauty of sustained and pliant tone as they brought to it. A conductor must unweave Brahms before his hearers. Gericke does it, keeps the beauty of musical line in every strand and makes it a part of the whole musical web. His Brahms is eloquent, because it is clear, because it has tonal beauty, because it never forces Brahms's own continence.

Ernest Schelling, the young pianist of the afternoon, was disappointing—more, you suspected, from an unwisely chosen concerto than from any lack of considerable talents. The concerto was the first of Liszt's. It cries out for brilliancy. Without brilliancy little remains. It asks a free and sweeping virtuosity. It must sound almost like a huge and glorified improvisation; and it must sound until pianist and listeners are fairly intoxicated with it. The qualities that would make it such were lacking in Schelling's performance. It was tame, and a tame Liszt hovers dangerously near a commonplace one. On the other hand, he played often with a clear suavity of tone, a touch that can shade delicately and emphasize without exaggeration, an evident regard for lucid musical expression, and a general sobriety of musical feeling. These are traits that, in better chosen music, should make Schelling interesting.

MR. ERNEST SCHELLING HEARD AS PADEREWSKI'S PUPIL.

Philadelphia Pianist Plays at the Boston Symphony's Farewell While Gericke, as a Matinee Idol in Spite of "Baton Prima Donna" Rivals, Makes History Here by Giving a Conductor's Encore to Bach and by Greeting His Audience with a Smile—More Riots Than Tickets at the Paderewski Sale Mr. Coudert and Others—The "Elijah" To-night.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's last matinée for the season took a great company of music lovers to Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon to enjoy an excellent programme. After the second number two things unknown to history happened - Gericke gave an encore and smiled while he was doing it. Bach's prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form, arranged for strings by Bachrich, played admirably, came so full of life and spirit, like a burs, of spring, that the audience was not satisfied with the conductor's bows nor the bows of the orchestra, but kept up its applause until Mr. Gericke had to depart from his old rules and repeat the last movement. Wagner's "Faust" overture and Brahms's Symphony No. 1. in C minor, also finely rendered, were the other two orchestral numbers.

A young American pianist, Ernest Schelling, was the soloist, and on the whole made an excellent impression on his first appearance in this city. He was born in Philadelphia, where his family is well known, and is now about 30 years old. He entered the Paris Conservatory when he was nine years old, and continued his studies at Basel with Hans Huber. As a lad he played in London, Paris and in cities of Germany, Switzerland, Sweden and Denmark. Paderewski became interested in him and taught him for some time. During the last four years Mr. Schelling has appeared as a virtuoso in cities of Europe and South America. He is pianist to the Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and for several years past has been living in the court of that German Prince. He came to this country a few months ago and made his first public appearance in Boston with the symphony orchestra, with which he has since been making a tour.

The selection for Saturday, Liszt's E flat concerto, for pianoforte and orchestra, was not a fortunate one for him. He possesses a splendid technique and played many of the most intricate passages with wonderful facility. Pleasing as this performance was as a whole, it was evident that the artist would have appeared to better advantage in more serious music. He was at evident disadvantage on account of a piano which was totally inadequate to his needs, and it was easy to see that in recital he would show fuller powers. The audience was most enthusiastic and called him back again and again.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

One of the most encouraging phenomena in the musical world is the growing popularity of Bach. The pianists have played him for some years more and more frequently, while the violinists—particularly Ysaye and Kreisler—have given us more of Bach than of any one else, apparently to everybody's satisfaction. His choral works are not heard as often as could be desired, and for orchestra, unfortunately, he wrote little; wherefore, one must welcome the making of suites out of orchestrated parts of other works, like the "Divertimento" with which Anton Seidl once aroused so much enthusiasm at a Philharmonic concert.

At Saturday afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Mr. Gericke produced a similar suite, compounded by Bachrich out of the third partita for violin and the second sonata for violin; and again the result was a great outburst of enthusiasm, which continued so long that Mr. Gericke was obliged to break the rule and repeat the final gavotte. The orchestra deserved this ovation, for it—that is, the strings—never played anything more superbly than this suite, notably the adagio, in which there was a noble quality of tone and a surging of emotional sound that made one bless both Bach and Bachrich for their work. The other orchestral numbers were Wagner's "Faust" overture and Brahms's first symphony.

The soloist of the occasion was Paderewski's friend and protégé, Mr. Ernest Schelling, who played the first Liszt concerto. Mr. Schelling is, like Mr. Kreisler, only thirty years old, but he has already appeared with success in various European and South American cities. Lately he has devoted much of his time to composing, and that, perhaps, is why he plays like a composer rather than a virtuoso, which may, on the whole, be interpreted as a compliment. He might have played parts of the concerto with a more dazzling brilliancy, but in Liszt's music—even in the concertos, which are intended as show pieces—there is always a substratum of melodic thought and harmonic detail that raises it to a high artistic level, and it was in the emphasizing of these musical elements that Mr. Schelling excelled. He is evidently one of the coming men; he was most cordially applauded by the audience, and recalled several times. To-morrow night he will be heard in Mendelssohn Hall with the Kneisel Quartet.

BOSTON SYMPHONY SEASON ENDED

Brilliant Close of the New York Series —Unexpected Result of Request Programme Ballot in Philadelphia.

Wilhelm Gericke, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appears to the ordinary observer a man of rare temperamental poise. Yet he, too, has his gamut of emotional pressure, and regular auditors of the New York series of concerts have found wide variations in his attitude, for instance, toward modern music.

Mr. Gericke has played Dvorak's "New World" symphony here in a way absolutely irritating in its tameness. He has often read Wagner with a restricted range of feeling when the flood gates should have been opened. Tschaikowsky, too, has more than once been mulcted, at his hands, of half his poignant intensity.

But this year Mr. Gericke has done several surprising things in this particular domain of his activity. The Tschaikowsky "Manfred" symphony was read last Thursday night, as already recorded here, with amazing power and vitality. Saturday's final matinee programme went with a sweep and vigor that could not be gainsaid. Wagner's "A Faust Overture," with its urgent work for the strings, had a noteworthy performance, while the accompaniment of the Liszt E flat major piano concerto was not only brilliant, but went with apparent relish. The Bach prelude, adagio and gavotte, arranged for strings by Bachrich, might have been counted on, of course, for a true interpretation—it was so well done that the audience demanded a repetition. Brahms's first symphony has always been a thing of serious delight under Mr. Gericke's baton, and never more so than this time.

Ernest Schelling, the young American pianist, and one of Paderewski's few proteges, was not happy in his choice of the Liszt concerto for his New York debut. The virtuoso in him did not quite level up to the demands of this difficult piano score. The repertory of Mr. Schelling is said to contain two Beethoven concertos, the two by Chopin, and one each of Schumann, Rubinstein, Saint-Saens, Tschaikowsky and Grieg, besides Paderewski's "Polish Fantasia" and other works. One of these would probably have shown to better advantage his real qualities. As Mr. Schelling will appear to-morrow night with the Kneisels, his work may be studied then, perhaps to more advantage.

Life March 16.

MUSIC

WHILE Herr Conried has not fulfilled quite all his promises, this season's opera has been far more satisfying than its immediate predecessor. Of good singers there were a greater number. To be sure, some of the promised operas were not given, and further acquaintance with Coppelia was desired; but there was solemn compensation—to many, perhaps—in a generous sufficiency of Parsifal. This over-advertised production, however, inspired less interest than a year ago.

The season's last concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra takes place on March 16th, to the deep regret of a host of serious lovers of what is best in music. Thanks to Boston for sending forth into the wilderness this incomparable band of musicians.

If large and enthusiastic audiences are a proof of success, Mr. Bagby may rest content with his season's work. He has earned the gratitude of many lovers of good music.

Mr. Arthur Whiteing recently brought to a close a series of talks on several composers, illustrating them on the piano. The last, of which Brahms was the subject, was of unusual interest, and Mr. Whiteing's playing of some of the composer's last works was thoroughly sympathetic. The three great violinists—Kreisler, Ysaye and the wonderful boy, Vecsey — added materially to the season's pleasure.

THE SUN

BALTIMORE, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15, 1905.

LAST CONCERT THE BEST

Magnificent Performance By The Boston Symphony.

"BRAVOES" FOR THE PLAYERS

Tschaikowsky Symphony Based On Byron's "Manfred"--Program An Admirable One.

It is only rarely that the Boston Symphony Orchestra evokes as great enthusiasm as that with which the playing of the organization under the leadership of its director, Wilhelm Gericke, was greeted at the Lyric last night.

But it is equally unusual for the flawlessness of the performance to be vitalized by as great vigor and warmth. The concert was the last of this season's series, and in many respects the best, and the great hall was taxed almost to the limit of its seating capacity. The semi-social aspect of the occasion, the concerts having long been considered as adjuncts of the social, as well as vents of the musical, season, gave a gala air to the scene.

Opening with one of the most richly orchestrated specimens of descriptive music, the Tschaikowsky symphony, based on Byron's "Manfred" and ending with Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, the program was admirable in the deference shown to the preferences of the more conservative music lovers, as well as to those of the advocates of the music of the future. The solo offering was Volkmann's concerto in A minor for violoncello and orchestra, and the soloist was Mr. Rudolf Krasselt, a young but talented member of the organization, whose right to the term and rank of "artist" was fully proved by his playing. His tone was beautifully round and mellow, his technique brilliant and his musicianship authoritative.

Balakireff, the Russian musician who suggested the subject of "Manfred" to Tschaikowsky as the basis of a symphonic poem, is also said to have been responsible for the arrangement of the symphony into the four divisions into which it was cast by the composer. The first movement, at his suggestion, portrays Manfred's wanderings, his despair and search for forgetfulness.

In the second, the vivace movement, it is the fairy of the Alps, evoked from the glistening cataract the witch, to whom the story of his hapless love for Astarte is futilely told. The third movement, the pastorate, was suggested by the scene between Manfred and the hunter, and in the fourth and closing movement the bacchanal in the hall of Arimanes, then the invocation to Astarte, with her prediction of Manfred's approaching dissolution, and finally Manfred's death are depicted.

The opening movement is fertile in the psychological suggestions that may be read into it, but the themes of anguish and mental distress in this give way to the grace, beauty and mysteriousness in the "Fairy" movement. The same characteristics, but with greater repose and more sustained beauty, distinguished the third picture—the word comes more naturally than movement, so skilfully do the varied tones reproduce the effects suggested.

That peace comes to Manfred after his wanderings is hinted by the employment in the finale of richly sustained organ chords. But the device jars; the suddenness of the transition from the coloring given the picture by the orchestral tones to that lent it by the single instrument is too startling to be agreeable.

But the varied and exquisite beauty of the rest of the tone pictures made the performance of the symphony one long to be remembered, and the audience expressed its pleasure in enthusiastic applause and even in "bravos," which recalled Mr. Gericke to the stand again and again.

[82]

Baltimore American

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERT

Splendid Program Rendered at the Lyric—Mr. Rudolf Krasselt the Soloist.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its fifth and last concert for the present season at the Lyric last evening, presenting the following excellent program:

Tschaikowsky—
"Manfred," Symphony after the Poem by Byron, Op. 58
I. Manfred's Wanderings and Despair.
Lento lugubre.
Moderato con moto.
Andante.
Andante con duolo.
II. The Fairy of the Alps.
Vivace con spirito.
Trio: L'istesso tempo.
III. Pastorale: Andante con moto.
IV. The Palace of Arimanes; Invocation to Astarte; Manfred's Death
Allegro con fuoco.
Andante con duolo.
Tempo primo.
Largo.
Volkmann—
Concerto in A minor, for violoncello and orchestra, Op. 33
Beethoven—
Overture to "Lenore" No. 3
Soloist—Mr. Rudolf Krasselt.

It may be said truly that the Boston season ended in a blaze of glory, as the symphony was not only a novelty, but one of the finest ever given here. Mr. Rudolph Krosselt proved a capable violoncellist, and the closing overture, "Leonora," No. 3, is always a favorite in this city, and at the same time a work the orchestra might play with eyes shut. The Manfred symphony is a most typical and perfect specimen of true program music. The literary subject is well chosen by the composer and thoroughly translated into the universal language of good music—a speech which no man has ever understood better than the Russian composer Tschaikowsky.

Byron's dramatic poem, "Manfred," was was one of the most feverish of his brain productions. He goes far in it toward giving pure fancy local habitation and names. But in the present practical age of scientific research, it is hard to give mental shape and form to such creatures as Arimanes and Astarte. However, the poem remains as it was, and human imagination is as it used to be, and, therefore, several great musicians have endeavored to interpret the weird poem musically.

Although thoroughly imaginary, Byron put much of his own soul life into it. The first movement gives the soul despair which was almost characteristic of the sensitive, morbid English poet. This mood Schumann put into German, and Tschaikowsky into Russian. But it is simply human everywhere.

It is interrupted, as in "Faust" also, by the vision of a beautiful woman, which is the subject of the symphony's second movement.

The contrast between soul despair and the simple pastoral life of the chamois hunter is wrought up through the third movement, and the underground bacchanale of evil spirits in the hall of Arimanes, the evil one, ends the symphony, sugesting the Witches' Sabbath in the damnation of Faust and in the Berlioz Fantastic Symphony.

Like Berlioz, Tschaikowsky introduces the fugue form into hell music, possibly because, as Berlioz said, it belonged there. It is only necessary to think of Byron's poem to have it appearing all through the symphony. Astarte is associated with the harp subjects, the hunter with the oboes and English horn, while the answer of the witches, the droning of the abbot and the human feeling of Manfred are all in evidence. Even the abbot's doubt at the end is musically given —"He's gone; whither I dread to think, but he is gone."

Mr. Krosselt is a young, but very talented cellist. The Volkmann concerto gave him good chance to exhibit his fine technique. But the work is long drawn out, and through unconscious cerebration, of course, somewhat reminiscent of Schubert. The Beethoven Leonora overture No. 3 was a splendid ending for the concert and the season, leaving the hearts of all the music-loving public a bud-forming welcome for the coming season.

At the conclusion of the symphony Mr. Gericke was several times recalled. He waved his hands toward his orchestra, and as the applause still continued all its members rose and bowed.

Springfield Mass. 21.

COURT SQUARE THEATER,
Monday Evening, March 27, 8.15.

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Conductor,
MR WILHELM
GERICKE.
Soloist,
MR GIUSEPPE
CAMPANARI.

Tickets $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c.
Sale opens Tuesday, March 21, at Theater box office. Mail orders addressed to Wm. F. A. Engel, local manager, will have prompt

---

COURT SQUARE THEATER

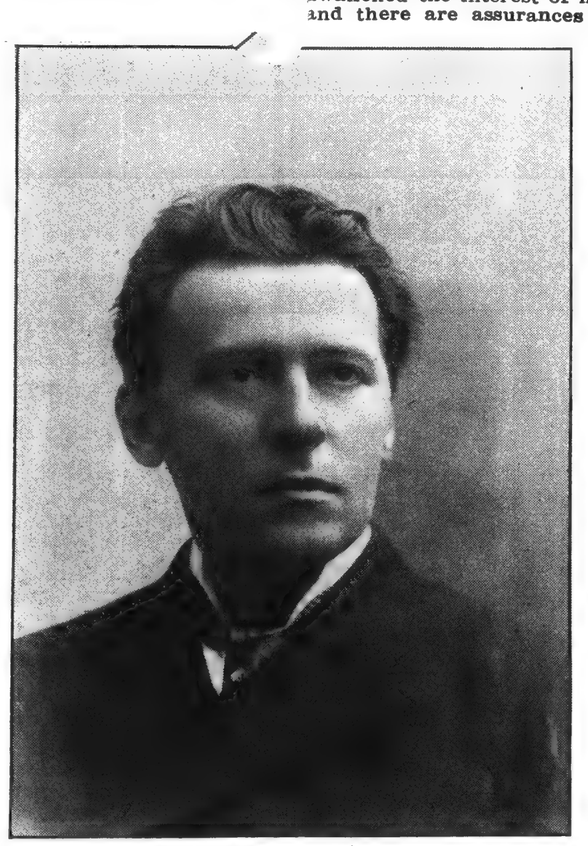
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 27--8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CONDUCTOR
MR. WILHELM GERICKE
SOLOIST
MR. GIUSEPPE CAMPANARI

Tickets $1.50, $1.00, .75, .50. Sale opens Tuesday, March 21 at Theater Box office. Mail orders addressed to Wm. F. A. Engel, local manager, will have prompt and careful attention.

Patrons who wish to reserve the same seats they purchase for this concert for the two concerts next season, can do so by registering their name and seats at the Box office.



GIUSEPPE CAMPANARI

Soloist With Boston Symphony Orchestra at Court Square Theater Monday, March 27

The Republican.

, MARCH 23, 1905. ELD.

W. F. A. Engel, local manager, will place on exhibition to-day, in the window of Otto Baab's piano store, a large and new group photograph of the Boston symphony orchestra.

Symphony Seat Sale.

The seat sale for the concert to be given in Court Square Theater a week from this evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Sig. Campanari as soloist, opens to-morrow morning.

The music critic of the New York Sun pays Mr. Gericke and his orchestra a glowing tribute in writing of their last concert of this season in New York. He says:—"Mr. Gericke has never played with so much of the emotional and dramatic quality of a great conductor as he has in the season now closed. Nor has the orchestra ever shown more of the sheer beauty of tone, more of the perfect ensemble which means flexibility, the finest adjustment of color values and dynamic effects, and the broad sweep of line. The exquisite perfection of the wood-wind players was shown at its highest in the Faust overture, and for this enjoyment New York music lovers are particularly beholden. It is something that is not offered them at home."

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The return engagement of the Boston Symphony orchestra has already awakened the interest of music lovers and there are assurances of a large audience. The plan whereby people who engage seats can have them secured for future engagements of the orchestra is welcomed with great pleasure by music lovers. The soloist will be Sig Giuseppe Campanari. The program will be as follows:

A Faust Overture ..... Wagner
Recitative, The gods have foreshewn me the future, and Aria, Foreboding fears of ill, from Iphigenia in Tauris ..... Gluck
Prelude, adagio, and gavotte in rondo form ..... Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Turn your glance on him, from Cosi fan Tutte ..... Mozart
Symphony in C major, No 7 ..... Schubert
I. Andante; allegro, ma non troppo.
II. Andante con moto.
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace. Trio.
IV. Finale: Allegro vivace.
Soloist, Giuseppe Campanari
Conductor, Wilhelm Gericke

Boston Symphony Program.

The program for the next appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Court Square Theater, the 27th, is one that will appeal with considerable force, and there will be gratification in the announcement that the soloist will be Signor Giuseppe Campanari, one of this city's favorite soloists. Campanari is now at his very best and is singing with greater power than ever before in his career as a baritone singer. The symphony program should give unbounded pleasure, the arrangement being as follows:—

A "Faust" overture ..... Wagner
Recitation and Aria ("Iphigencia"), Gluck
Mr. Campanari.
Prelude, adagio and gavotte, Bach-Bachrich
Aria from "Cosi fan tutte"....Mozart
Mr. Campanari.
...phony in C major, No. 7, Schubert

Court Square Theatre Program

Return engagement of the

Boston Symphony Orchestra

COURT SQUARE THEATRE
Monday Evening, March 27 at 8.15.

Seat sale will open Thursday, March 21, at Theatre Box Office.

Mail orders addressed to Wm. F. A. Engel, Local Manager, will have prompt and careful attention.

SOLOIST:

Guiseppe Campanari

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Program for the Concert to be Given in Court Square Theater the 27th.

A program will be given at the second concert by the Boston symphony orchestra in Court Square theater Monday, the 27th, which it is believed will be fully as popular as that of the last concert, which sent every one away with a feeling of vast contentment. A special attraction will be the appearance of the distinguished Italian baritone, Giuseppi Campanari, who will be heard in two fine arias. At previous concerts the soloist has been either a pianist or a violinist, and a singer will be a change probably not unwelcome to many people. Certainly there are few singers the public would rather hear than Campanari, who has been one of the chief stars of the metropolitan grand opera in New York, and has been meeting with great success on this concert tour this season. The program is identical with that given in Boston the 4th, which was praised as one of the best of the season. The symphony is the great C major by Schubert, which has not been given in this city for many years. It is by far the finest of the symphonies which Schubert finished, and shows almost as much inspiration as the two extant movements of the B minor. Only the best of the Beethoven symphonies are equally great. The "Faust" overture by Wagner, with which the concert opens, is a splendid work, and not so familiar as some of his overtures. The Bach numbers are always pleasing to a general audience, and bring out most effectively the unequaled strings of the Boston organization. The program:—

A "Faust" overture ..... Wagner
Recitation and Aria ("Iphigencia") .... Gluck
Mr Campanari.
Prelude, adagio and gavotte .. Bach-Bachrich
Aria from "Cosi fan tutte" ..... Mozart
Mr Campanari.
Symphony in C major, No 7 ..... Schubert

COURT SQUARE THEATER.
Monday Evening, March 27, 8.15.

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CONDUCTOR,
MR. WILHELM GERICKE.
SOLOIST,
MR. GIUSEPPE CAMPANARI.

Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75c, 50c.
Sale opens Tuesday, March 21, at Theater box office. Mail orders addressed to Wm. F. A. Engel, local manager, will have prompt and careful attention. Patrons who wish to reserve the same seats they purchase for this concert for the two concerts next season, can do so by registering their name and seats at the Box office.

[83]

Baltimore American

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERT

Splendid Program Rendered at the Lyric—Mr. Rudolf Krasselt the Soloist.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its fifth and last concert for the present season at the Lyric last evening, presenting the following excellent program:

Tschaikowsky—
"Manfred," Symphony after the Poem by Byron, Op. 58
I. Manfred's Wanderings and Despair.
Lento lugubre.
Moderato con moto.
Andante.
Andante con duolo.
II. The Fairy of the Alps.
Vivace con spirito.
Trio: L'istesso tempo.
III. Pastorale: Andante con moto.
IV. The Palace of Arimanes; Invocation to Astarte; Manfred's Death
Allegro con fuoco.
Andante con duolo.
Tempo primo.
Largo.
Volkmann—
Concerto in A minor, for violoncello and orchestra, Op. 33
Beethoven—
Overture to "Lenore" No. 3
Soloist—Mr. Rudolf Krasselt.

It may be said truly that the Boston season ended in a blaze of glory, as the symphony was not only a novelty, but one of the finest ever given here. Mr. Rudolph Krosselt proved a capable violoncellist, and the closing overture, "Leonora," No. 3, is always a favorite in this city, and at the same time a work the orchestra might play with eyes shut. The Manfred symphony is a most typical and perfect specimen of true program music. The literary subject is well chosen by the composer and thoroughly translated into the universal language of good music—a speech which no man has ever understood better than the Russian composer Tschaikowsky.

Byron's dramatic poem, "Manfred," was was one of the most feverish of his brain productions. He goes far in it toward giving pure fancy local habitation and names. But in the present practical age of scientific research, it is hard to give mental shape and form to such creatures as Arimanes and Astarte. However, the poem remains as it was, and human imagination is as it used to be, and, therefore, several great musicians have endeavored to interpret the weird poem musically.

Although thoroughly imaginary, Byron put much of his own soul life into it. The first movement gives the soul despair which was almost characteristic of the sensitive, morbid English poet. This mood Schumann put into German, and Tschaikowsky into Russian. But it is simply human everywhere.

It is interrupted, as in "Faust" also, by the vision of a beautiful woman, which is the subject of the symphony's second movement.

The contrast between soul despair and the simple pastoral life of the chamois hunter is wrought up through the third movement, and the underground bacchanale of evil spirits in the hall of Arimanes, the evil one, ends the symphony, sugesting the Witches' Sabbath in the damnation of Faust and in the Berlioz Fantastic Symphony.

Like Berlioz, Tschaikowsky introduces the fugue form into hell music, possibly because, as Berlioz said, it belonged there. It is only necessary to think of Byron's poem to have it appearing all through the symphony. Astarte is associated with the harp subjects, the hunter with the oboes and English horn, while the answer of the witches, the droning of the abbot and the human feeling of Manfred are all in evidence. Even the abbot's doubt at the end is musically given —"He's gone; whither I dread to think, but he is gone."

Mr. Krosselt is a young, but very talented cellist. The Volkmann concerto gave him good chance to exhibit his fine technique. But the work is long drawn out, and through unconscious cerebration, of course, somewhat reminiscent of Schubert. The Beethoven Leonora overture No. 3 was a splendid ending for the concert and the season, leaving the hearts of all the music-loving public a bud-forming welcome for the coming season.

At the conclusion of the symphony Mr. Gericke was several times recalled. He waved his hands toward his orchestra, and as the applause still continued all its members rose and bowed.

COURT SQUARE THEATER.
Monday Evening, March 27, 8.15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Conductor,
MR WILHELM GERICKE.
Soloist,
MR GIUSEPPE CAMPANARI.
Tickets $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c.
Sale opens Tuesday, March 21, at Theater Box office. Mail orders addressed to Wm. F. A. Engel, local manager, will have prompt and careful attention.

COURT SQUARE THEATER
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 27--8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CONDUCTOR
MR. WILHELM GERICKE
SOLOIST
MR. GIUSEPPE CAMPANARI
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, .75, .50. Sale opens Tuesday, March 21 at Theater Box office. Mail orders addressed to Wm. F. A. Engel, local manager. will have prompt and careful attention.
Patrons who wish to reserve the same seats they purchase for this concert for the two concerts next season, can do so by registering their name and seats at the Box office.

The Republican.

, MARCH 23, 1905. ELD.

W. F. A. Engel, local manager, will place on exhibition to-day, in the window of Otto Baab's piano store, a large and new group photograph of the Boston symphony orchestra.

Symphony Seat Sale.

The seat sale for the concert to be given in Court Square Theater a week from this evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Sig. Campanari as soloist, opens to-morrow morning.

The music critic of the New York Sun pays Mr. Gericke and his orchestra a glowing tribute in writing of their last concert of this season in New York. He says:—"Mr. Gericke has never played with so much of the emotional and dramatic quality of a great conductor as he has in the season now closed. Nor has the orchestra ever shown more of the sheer beauty of tone, more of the perfect ensemble which means flexibility, the finest adjustment of color values and dynamic effects, and the broad sweep of line. The exquisite perfection of the wood-wind players was shown at its highest in the Faust overture, and for this enjoyment New York music lovers are particularly beholden. It is something that is not offered them at home."

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The return engagement of the Boston Symphony orchestra has already awakened the interest of music lovers and there are assurances of a large audience. The plan whereby people who engage seats can have them secured for future engagements of the orchestra is welcomed with great pleasure by music lovers. The soloist will be Sig Giuseppe Campanari. The program will be as follows:

A Faust Overture ..... Wagner
Recitative, The gods have foreshewn me the future, and Aria, Foreboding fears of ill, from Iphigenia in Tauris ..... Gluck
Prelude, adagio, and gavotte in rondo form ..... Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Turn your glance on him, from Cosi fan Tutte ..... Mozart
Symphony in C major, No 7 ..... Schubert
I. Andante; allegro, ma non troppo.
II. Andante con moto.
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace. Trio.
IV. Finale: Allegro vivace.
Soloist, Giuseppe Campanari
Conductor, Wilhelm Gericke

GIUSEPPE CAMPANARI
Soloist With Boston Symphony Orchestra at Court Square Theater Monday, March 27

Boston Symphony Program.

The program for the next appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Court Square Theater, the 27th, is one that will appeal with considerable force, and there will be gratification in the announcement that the soloist will be Signor Giuseppe Campanari, one of this city's favorite soloists. Campanari is now at his very best and is singing with greater power than ever before in his career as a baritone singer. The symphony program should give unbounded pleasure, the arrangement being as follows:—

A "Faust" overture .....Wagner
Recitation and Aria ("Iphigencia"), Gluck
Mr. Campanari.
Prelude, adagio and gavotte, Bach-Bachrich
Aria from "Cosi fan tutte"....Mozart
Mr. Campanari.
Symphony in C major, No. 7, Schubert

COURT SQUARE THEATER.
Monday Evening, March 27, 8.15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CONDUCTOR,
MR WILHELM GERICKE.
SOLOIST,
MR GIUSEPPE CAMPANARI.
Sale opens Tuesday, March 21, at Theater box office. TICKETS $1.50, $1.00, 75c, 50c.
Mail orders addressed to Wm. F. A. Engel, local manager, will have prompt and careful attention. Patrons who wish to reserve the same seats they purchase for this concert for the two concerts next season, can do so by registering their name and seats at the Box office.

Court Square Theatre Program

Return engagement of
Boston Symphony Orchestra
COURT SQUARE THEATRE
Monday Evening, March 27 at 8.15.
Seat sale will open Thursday, March 21, at Theatre Box Office.
Mail orders addressed to Wm. F. A. Engel, Local Manager will have prompt and careful attention.
SOLOIST:
Guiseppe Campanari

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Program for the Concert to be Given in Court Square Theater the 27th.

A program will be given at the second concert by the Boston symphony orchestra in Court Square theater Monday, the 27th, which it is believed will be fully as popular as that of the last concert, which sent every one away with a feeling of most contentment. A special atraction will be the appearance of the distinguished Italian baritone, Giuseppi Campanari, who will be heard in two fine arias. At previous concerts the soloist has been either a pianist or a violinist, and a singer will be a change probably not unwelcome to many people. Certainly there are few singers the public would rather hear than Campanari, who has been one of the chief stars of the metropolitan grand opera co. New York, and has been meeting with great success on this concert tour this season. The program is identical with that given in Boston the 4th, which was praised as one of the best of the season. The symphony is the great C major by Schubert, which has not been given here for many years. It is by far the finest of the symphonies which Schubert finished and shows almost as much inspiration as the two extant movements of the B minor. Only the best of the Beethoven symphonies are equally great. The "Faust" overture by Wagner, with which the concert opens, is a splendid work, and not so familiar as some of his overtures. The Bach numbers are always pleasing to a general audience, and bring out most effectively the unequaled strings of the Boston organization. The program:—

A "Faust" overture ..... Wagner
Recitation and Aria ("Iphigencia") ..... Gluck
Mr Campanari.
Prelude, adagio and gavotte ..... Bach-Bachrich
Aria from "Cosi fan tutte" ..... Mozart
Mr Campanari.
Symphony in C major, No 7 ..... Schubert

Republican March 28

The Republican.

MARCH 21, 1905.

IN ... SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Opening of Sale of Tickets for the Second Concert, With Campanari as Soloist.

The tickets for the second concert by the Boston symphony orchestra, to be given in Court Square theater Monday evening, the 27th, go on sale this morning at the box-office of the theater and it is to be hoped that the sale will prove as gratifying as at the previous concert. The program will be no less attractive and the appearance of one of the most popular singers in the country, the Italian baritone Campanari, should serve to draw a good many who are not specially devoted to orchestral music. As at the last concert, a popular scale of prices will obtain, the upper balcony, which is one of the very best places in the theater for a concert of this sort, being thrown open at 50 cents—a remarkable opportunity to hear a splendid orchestra at small cost.

At the January concert the theater was almost entirely filled, and although at the reduced scale the total proceeds were not larger than in previous years, the very large attendance argued so widespread an interest in the famous Boston orchestra that it was decided as an experiment to try giving this city two concerts a year. The number is not greater than Springfield and the neighboring towns ought to be able to support regularly; indeed, it is to be hoped that in a few years the Boston symphony habit will be so firmly acquired that we shall have to increase the number like Hartford, which for several years has given enthusiastic support to ... But at present the ... work for its two concerts, and ... patronage can be secured ... musical public takes an active ... matter. The large attendance at the last concert was due to this ... factor. There are ... musicians and musical enthusiasts ... the orchestra themselves, ... they wield a potent influence, because their opinions carry ... and it is within their power to make or mar the fortunes of a concert. This is the time when a special effort should be made to establish the city on the two-concert basis. With this first concert a beginning is made of the season-ticket principle, the purchasers of tickets being entitled to reserve the same seats for next year if they choose.

G. CAMPANARI.

Mr Campanari, who is to appear at this concert, is one of the foremost operatic and concert baritones in the country, and is at the height of his powers and of his popularity. There is grief among the patrons of grand opera in New York that he has left opera this year to star at the head of his own company, but the country at large has been the gainer, and he has met with the most enthusiastic reception everywhere. This fine artist came to this country as a young man to play the 'cello in the Boston symphony orchestra, and his former associates say that he was a very good player, though he seldom touches his instrument now. It is perhaps due to his 'cello playing, however, that he acquired that beautiful cantabile in which few baritones can rival him. His voice is smooth and luscious, and he uses it with thrilling effect: the tone all "comes out"; it carries like a bullet. He is almost as fine in acting as in singing. "Why, this is like seeing Salvini come on the stage," exclaimed one opera goer who saw him for the first time in "Aida." He is so full of the emotional Italian temperament that it is hard for him to preserve the decorous stiffness of the concert stage, and the audience always sympathizes with his enthusiasm. He has been one of the baritone favorites at the music festivals here whenever he has appeared, and his name will add materially to the popularity of the concert next week.

SECOND SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Last Appearance for the Season of the Boston Orchestra in Court Square Theater With Campanari.

The concert given in Court Square theater last evening by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a fine performance in itself, and notable as the beginning of a new order of things—the establishment here of a real though tiny orchestral season. The audience was large enough to make the outlook for a continuance of these concerts bright, and enthusiasm rose to about as high a pitch as at the previous concert in January. The program last evening was nearly but not quite so good as the one given on that occasion, which embraced Mendelssohn's "Camacho's Wedding," the Tschaikowsky B flat minor concerto, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and Beethoven's fifth symphony.

Last evening we had to set against these Wagner's "Faust" overture, a greater work than Mendelssohn's "Camacho" and yet not so successful; the lovely Bachrich arrangements of Bach, which offer no point of comparison with either the Tschaikowsky concerto or the Debussy eclogue, and Schubert's C major symphony, which is one of the few, the very few, symphonies that can be rated with Beethoven's C minor. Set side by side this way, as naval experts balance the battle ships, cruisers and torpedo boats in two rival fleets, there is no appreciable difference in the two programs: yet in the total effect there was at once more variety and more concentration in the January program. The light and sparkling Mendelssohn overture, the powerfully emotional Tschaikowsky concerto, the deliciously-colored eclogue, and the profound and moving C minor symphony—each item was perfect of its kind, and the kinds were as different as possible.

The program last night was very fine: no one could possibly have any quarrel with it, but if the effect was not quite so powerful the reason is not hard to see. The beauties of the evening were more diffused; there was less climax, less compression of energy. The "Faust" overture, for example, is a beautiful work, yet it is not entirely characteristic of the composer's genius. Wagner had not quite found himself, and he himself discarded this fragment of a projected symphonic poem as unsatisfactory, and turned to more congenial work. It is, as a matter of fact, a very interesting composition, but its very subject gives it a brooding, subjective, intimate character, and weakens its hold upon a general audience. As a concert piece it cannot be called effective in the sense in which the "Flying Dutchman" overture, which he wrote next, is effective. It leaves all but the exceptional hearer nearly unmoved and rather noncommittal. It is not a work that would make musical converts, and it is enjoyed best by those who already know it thoroughly. That it left the audience a little cold is not surprising.

Very different was the effect of the Bach movements which Sigismund Bachrich has so skilfully arranged for string orchestra. Composed for a solo violin, they are even more effective in this form, and played as the superb strings of the Boston orchestra play them they never fail to charm the musical and the unmusical alike. The clear, brilliant fiddling of the prelude, the tender grace of the andante, and the capricious humor of the gavotte each in turn delighted the ear, and at the close it took Mr Gericke some time and a great many bows to uphold the traditions of the orchestra against an encore. The genius of Bach never shows to greater advantage than in composition for strings, where his unrivaled freedom of invention is displayed so perfectly by the flexibility of the medium. The organ, lacking rhythm, and only suggesting rather than actually carrying out the rich variety of his phrasing, is adapted for the grander and more austere side of his nature, but lacks the peculiar sparkle and charm of the orchestral pieces. What would Bach not have done with a modern orchestra.

The truly modern orchestra was not displayed at all last evening, but it is perhaps as well to have a thorough grounding in the great classics first. What the men of to-day are trying to do can be appreciated better after a careful study of what Mozart, Beethoven and Schubert did so beautifully. With two concerts a year we shall get to the moderns in due time. Certainly it would be hard to find a lovelier work upon which to form a memorial taste than the C major symphony of Schubert with which the program closed last evening. To match it one must turn to the very greatest of the Beethoven symphonies or to the heavenly B minor which Schubert left unfinished. There is perhaps nothing in the C major quite so transcendently beautiful as that melody for the violoncellos which sings itself over and over in the divine allegro of the "Unfinished," but is there any other symphony which contains quite so much that is beautiful as the C major? In plastic charm it has as much the better of the great Beethoven symphonies as they have the better in concentrated weight of utterance. There are those who complain of its length, which is precisely three-quarters of an hour, but they are all golden minutes, and the hearer is drawn on and on, ravished by the sweet succession of charms till all sense of time is lost. Nowhere does Schubert appear more the inspired improvisator than in this glorious symphony, which lacks only a weightier burden to equal the greater Beethoven works with which only it can be measured.

The soloist last evening was the baritone, Mr Campanari, who was the first singer who has appeared here with the orchestra, pianists and violinists having been the rule. There could hardly have been a better choice of a singer, and his appearance with the orchestra was the more appropriate because of his former service with it as a violoncellist. Mr Campanari is without question one of the very greatest of the baritones of the present day, and he has lost none of his power to charm since the days when he used to be a favorite singer at the festivals here. They were saying not long ago that Italy no longer produces singers; so long as Caruso and Campanari are in the field it will not be difficult to understand the secret of Italian supremacy in song. Emotional intensity which reinforces instead of cramping and killing the melody, that is the secret of the special charm which both these great singers exercise. Campanari's voice is beautiful, but, after all, it is the emotional thrill of it that delights his hearers, and there was general satisfaction that he substituted for the fine, but less effective, Gluck aria the highly dramatic prolog from Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci," which he sings with such prodigious effect. For his other appearance he sang the aria "Rivolgete a lui," from Mozart's "Cosi fan tutte." Both were superbly done, and the audience would gladly have encored them both. The singing contributed precisely that vigor of appeal which the program would otherwise have lacked, and left the orchestra free to lead its hearers through the enchanted mazes of Schubert's long and lovely symphony. It was a concert that left keen anticipations of the good things to come next season.

COURT SQUARE THEATER,
Monday Evening, March 27, 8.15.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Conductor,
MR WILHELM
GERICKE.
Soloist,
MR GIUSEPPE
CAMPANARI.

Tickets $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c.
Sale opens Tuesday, March 21, at Theater Box office. Mail orders addressed to Wm. F. A. Engel, local manager, will have prompt and careful attention.

The Boston Journal

SYMPHONY PLAYS MOST ARTISTICALLY

Several Selections Heard Here Formerly Are Given in a Decidedly Notable Manner.

The twentieth concert of the Symphony Orchestra was a well-balanced presentation of music that made many and varied appeals to the listener. It was marked, also, by as fine and artistic playing as we have had this year, all things considered.

Brahms' "Tragic Overture," the first work on the program, wears admirably and bears its name more honorably with each successive hearing. With no onslaughts of noise, it yet impresses its somber suggestiveness by its inherent nobility of gloom.

Mr. Barleben, one of the second violins of the orchestra, played Tschaikowsky's violin concerto in D major, and did it admirably as well as modestly. This work, which Brodsky made so boisterous, if not savage, in the Tremont Theater some twelve years ago, calls for a more fiery style, in its last movement at least, than Mr. Barleben possesses, but otherwise his performance of it was altogether fine.

Hugo Wolf's "Italian Serenade," heard here several times as a quartet for strings, was given in its original orchestral form, with revisions by Reger. It is a fascinating bit of tone color in any form, but on the whole it appears to be of greater charm in its smaller shape. Mr. Ferir's playing of the viola solo passages was noteworthy.

The Huber symphony attempting to draw in tone a composer's impressions of the pictures of Boecklin is an honest, clean-cut musical work which sounds well as absolute music, but scarcely suggests the highly imaginative paintings of the artist, or paintings of any artist, for that matter. It is well nigh impossible to transfer a particular set of emotions from the canvas to the clef. Huber, at all events, could not do it. His work, therefore, may as well be judged without reference to Boecklin.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Brahms.....Tragic Overture
Tschaikowsky.....Concerto for Violin
Soloist, Mr. Karl Barleben.
Hugo Wolf.....Italian Serenade (first time)
Hans Huber.....Symphony in E minor

It was a very earnest concert from first to last, each selection requiring some musical intelligence on the part of the auditor; there was not a single number on the programme that could fairly be called popular or entirely easy of comprehension. The Brahms overture loses nothing of its dignity by repeated hearing. It received a perfect performance.

Mr. Barleben made a decided success with Tschaikowsky's violin concerto. He was not entirely equal in performance, but his broad bowing in the G string work, which is so prominent in the finale, was very finely done, and the harmonics of the same movement were very pure and full-toned. The double-stopping of the first movement and the sympathetic quality of tone in the second movement are also to be chronicled with praise. Once in a while one desired more power and even more brutality, for this work has its savage touches.

It was just these fierce Muscovite effects that set the critics so thoroughly against the concerto in its early days—this and the malevolence of Hanslick. Spite of some uninspired passages in the first of the concerto, it has the true spirit of the Russian folk-music, which gives it a peculiar force. Its flavor might not please a musical Chesterfield any more than the writings of Maxime Gorky would.

Tschaikowsky makes less of the orchestra in this concerto than is his wont, but all that there was in the score was well brought out by Mr. Hess, our "concerto-conductor." There is a strong element of contrast between the elegant lace-handkerchief grief of the slow movement and the utterly woe-begone misery of the finale. Your true Muscovite makes no halfway work with dejection. The audience seemed to appreciate both the work and its interpretation, and Mr. Barleben was recalled over and over again with great enthusiasm.

Wolf's "Italian Serenade" is more effective in its orchestral version than as a string quartette. It has been introduced to Boston by the Kneisel Quartette in the latter guise. As a quartette it largely resolves itself into a violin solo with accompaniment, but in the orchestral score it has prominent passages for viola, violoncello and other instruments. It is light and melodic and contains many suggestions of bird carols and dance rhythms. It is a charming gossamer web with sufficient vagueness and suggestion to place it in the modern school of impressionism. It is not without its bizarre touches. It is rather subjective than objective music; it does not clearly picture scenes of Italian life, but it causes the auditor to dream of them.

Hans Huber's pictorial symphony grows greatly upon a second hearing. It has the merit of working steadily up to a climax, its last movement being by far its greatest. It has been so recently performed that we need not tell its story again, merely reminding the reader that this is the work that celebrates the Swiss painter Boecklin, and its movements are inspired by different works of that artist. It is a good example of the correlation of the arts.

Poetry inspires music, why should painting not do so as well? Liszt evolved his "Todtentanz" and his "Battle of the Huns" from paintings; Paine wreathed 2 pictures of the Isles of Shoals, by Appleton Brown, into "An Island Fantasy"; Boecklin himself has been set to music, outside of this symphony, by Weingartner. Nevertheless this is the only time that an entire picture gallery has been portrayed in tones.

Many are the inspirations of music, yet the variation form of composition seems most prone to seek unusual stimuli. Handel set a blacksmith to variations (although we do not guarantee the authenticity of this party), Rameau varied a clucking hen, Strauss gave the phases of Don Quixote's career in variations, Elgar made a number of his friends stand sponsor to a set of variations, and here we have a sort of Art-club finale in the same form.

Such variations as those of Strauss, Elgar and Huber are upon the border line between variation and development, and show an interesting new path which the modern may take in musical form. In the present symphony these variations were not only beautiful in themselves, but served to display the technique of several instruments in "obbligati."

The flute, clarinette, harp, first violin (solo), all had their opportunity, and the result was a display of virtuosity that one does not often obtain in an orchestral work.

The symphony is worth hearing again soon. It is one of the great compositions of the modern repertoire, and it is not the less great because it avoids eccentricities. The use of the organ in the finale added a peculiar majesty and power to that movement.

Louis C. Elson.

[84]

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, APRIL 2, 1905.

Last evening's Symphony program comprised one novelty, Hugo Wolf's "Italian Serenade," given for the first time here. Mr Karl Barleben was the soloist in the violin D major concerto by Tschaikowsky, and Brahms' "Tragic" overture and Huber's E minor symphony completed the selections. Mr Barleben, who is the leader of the second violins, furnished additional proof that our orchestra not only is the foremost in America, but that it has several members whose abilities as solo performers are worthy of serious consideration, for this modest artist played the immensely difficult Tschaikowsky concerto in a manner to elicit approbation of the warmest kind. Perhaps some of Mr Barleben's interpretation was a bit too refined and lacking in vigor in the rugged passages, but in the lighter episodes his work was of a high order of merit. All the technical difficulties were skilfully mastered, his tone production was very sweet and mellow, and his light and shade in expression was admirably balanced.

Special mention of the ornamental passages and the unaccompanied cadenza of the first part is deserved, for in the latter especially his finger work in the exacting chord passages was very clear and rapid in execution. The legato themes of the second movement were given with great beauty of tone and if Mr Barleben was less satisfactory in the closing movement it was from the peculiar nature of the score and not particularly due to the performer. The finale was not as interesting as the other parts on account of the numerous repetitions of different phrases. The spontaneous applause which greeted Mr Barleben's performance showed that his admirable interpretation was most heartily appreciated.

The orchestra ably supplemented Mr Barleben's work. Hugo Wolf's "Italian" serenade is a pleasing little work though not so fantastic in method and matter as other of his compositions recently heard in this city. The general tone of the serenade is cast in a delicate form, with some exquisite melodic moments for the cellos and violins, which of course were given with splendid effect by these contingents. It is the one finished movement in a projected suite of three.

Brahms' "Tragic" overture was played with due sonority. To many people it is not a very impressive work, as was evident last evening. Huber's E minor symphony, which fairly reveis in descriptive tonal coloring, received sympathetic treatment, the almost innumerable "musical pictures" of the finale giving each contingent opportunities to show their abilities in the most favorable light. Mr Hess conducted the violin concerto admirably. Mr Gericke led the other numbers.

This week the program will comprise the Smetana overture, "The Kiss," first time here; Handel's concerto grosso, for two solo violins, cello and string orchestra; Saint-Saens' symphonic poem, "The Youth of Hercules," and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony.

SUNDAY HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.

VOL. CXVII., NO. 92.

SUNDAY, APRIL 2, 1905.

20TH SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Second Performance of Huber's Symphony Is Given—Programme of High Order.

The programme of the 20th Symphony concert, given in Symphony Hall last evening, Mr. Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

Tragic overture.....Brahms
Violin concerto in D major.....Tschaikowsky
Italian serenade.....Hugo Wolf
(First time.)
Symphony in E minor, No. 2.....Huber

The orchestral performance was of a high order. The overture by Brahms is a noble work. It is not, perhaps, so profoundly tragic in its sentiment as Mr. Chadwick's "Melpomene," in the expression of bodement, in the suggestion of the tale of Pelops' line or of Maeterlinck's old man by the fireside; but the mood is well established and there is a certain lofty serenity in the musical portraiture of sorrow that is more effective than the furious and discordant woe of ultra-modern composers who put their trust in whole batteries of pulsatile instruments; just as there is more true tragic feeling in the simple music of Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande" suite than in Tanieff's prologue to the tale of Orestes.

One may well wonder today at the extraordinary judgment passed by Edward Hanslick on Tschaikowsky's violin concerto when it was first performed in Vienna, as one may wonder that the writer included it in a bound volume of his feuilletons. The judgment was so violently, so absurdly unjust. "Music that stinks in the ear." The work is not one of Tschaikowsky's best, but it is an eminently sincere composition, one without trickery and applause traps. The first movement is soberly planned; the canzonetta has a distinctive charm in its folk-song melancholy; and the finale is characteristically Russian in its dance tunes with sadness in the hearts of the dancers, in the endless and oriental repetition of a phrase.

Mr. Barleben played the concerto in a highly creditable manner. His reading was thoughtfully musical; there was a poetic spirit in his interpretation of the canzonetta. In the finale there might have been more abandon and appropriate coarseness. For the elemental coarseness of a great man is not to be ignored, not to be sandpapered.

The Italian serenade of the unfortunate Hugo Wolf was produced here in the form of a string quartet early in the season by the Kneisels, and it was repeated at their last concert. The orchestral version performed here last night was the original, but this has been revised by Max Reger. It would be interesting to know just what Reger did to it. In spite of delightful effects of color, the work leaves the impression that it was thought out originally for the piano. Wolf's "Penthisela" is a [illegible] that he was not a great orchestral [illegible] he did not write fluently [illegible] Ferir played the [illegible] beauty of tone; but [illegible] the whole seems Huber's "Boecklin" symphony has been played here before. It is a sound and carefully made composition without any marked display of imagination, and the one quality of any work that attempts to be a translation into music of specific pictures by a painter or endeavors to fix by music the painter's characteristics in the mind of a hearer should surely be imagination. Huber's task was a wellnigh impossible one. In the first place he had to reckon with the fact that many in the audience might not be familiar with the pictures that suggested music to him. In the second place, he that writes such music should have as much imagination as the painter. Huber is an orthodox, well-trained musician; but he is not a Boecklin.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, APRIL 3, 1905

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

Here is the programme of the twentieth symphony concert, of which the soloist was Mr. Karl Barleben, on Saturday evening last, in Symphony Hall.

Brahms: Tragic Overture, Op. 81.
Tchaikovsky: Concerto for Violin, in D major, Op. 35.
Hugo Wolf: Italian Serenade for Small Orchestra.
(First time.)
Hans Huber: Symphony No. 2, in E minor, Op. 115.

The air was heavy in Symphony Hall after the Paderewski recital, and the concert proved rather dull—probably a case of cause and effect, since the programme of the concert was interesting enough and the performance was brilliant. But, whatever the cause, the fact remains that enthusiasm, aroused by the splendid reading of the Brahms tragic overture, steadily declined throughout the evening, which was a long one, with a symphony at the end which might better have appeared at the beginning.

It is questionable, indeed, if the symphony need have reappeared at all. Huber admired Böcklin's peculiar pictures to such an extent that he wrote a symphony inspired by certain of them. The work may quite likely be of interest to such people as are familiar with Böcklin's art. But, here in Boston, how many of us have had opportunity to become familiar with Böcklin's pictures? In a window on Boylston street there have lately been exhibited several prints after Böcklin, but of the audience Saturday night few people can possibly be well acquainted with the painter's original works. If Huber had been a man of sufficient calibre to write a symphony in itself beautiful and imaginative, one could listen to it very well without a knowledge of the pictures that brought him inspiration, as Liszt's "Todtentanz" is effective for persons who have not had the good fortune to visit Pisa, or who, if they have, paid slight attention to the Orcagna frescoes. Huber, however, is not a man of powerful genius, and his symphony proves more pretentious than interesting.

The novelty of the concert, Hugo Wolf's "Italian Serenade," was only a semi-novelty, the Kneisel Quartet having played the piece twice this winter in a version made by the composer for string quartet, the first time with tremendous success, the second time with less. Charming and pretty as the composition is, on a second hearing it showed itself less noteworthy than one had thought, and now, in orchestral garb, it seems of still less account. Oddly enough, the serenade for orchestra and the serenade for string quartet sound little alike, the latter being gay and lively, the former, while much more like a serenade, sounding labored and incoherent. Although exquisitely played, the orchestral version made but little effect, whereas the quartet arrangement excited enthusiasm.

There was also the Tchaikovsky violin concerto, played by Mr. Karl Barleben, a member of the orchestra who has not before appeared here in the capacity of soloist. Evidently a player of ability, with a pleasant tone, the power to play better in tune than most violinists, an excellent technique, and thorough musicianliness, Mr. Barleben would have shown more sagacity had he chosen a concerto by Vieuxtemps than the Tchaikovsky work, since he is far from possessing the temperament by the display of which this concerto can alone be made effective. Mr. Barleben was happiest in the slow movement, playing it very artistically indeed. He was warmly applauded. The programme for Saturday's concert is as follows: Smetana, Overture, "The Kiss" (first time). Handel, Concerto Grosso, No. 12, for two solo violins, solo violoncello and string orchestra. Saint-Saëns, Symphonic Poem, "The Youth of Hercules." Beethoven, Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"; first performance, April 7, 1805, in Vienna.

R. R. G.

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

Issued Sunday by Post Publishing Co.

APRIL 9, 1905. NO. 2; VOL. 36

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

The programme of the 21st Symphony concert last evening included the following numbers:

Overture, "Leonore" No. 3.....Beethoven
Concerto Grosso No. 12.....Handel
"The Youth of Hercules," symphonic poem
Saint-Saens
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica".....Beethoven

For some unexplained reason Mr. Gericke substituted the Beethoven overture for the overture to Smetana's opera, "The Kiss," which was to have been given, and as is understood, was played at the Friday rehearsal. There were many patrons that desired to hear the Smetana overture, as it was to be for the first time in America, and not to have heard it undoubtedly was a disappointment.

The programme as given offered mostly familiar numbers. The Saint-Saens symphonic poem, "The Youth of Hercules," was made familiar here years ago by Theodore Thomas, and has ever since been a great favorite.

EVENING TIMES, PAWTUCKET,

R. I., SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1905.

Memorial Hall, Providence,
FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, At 8:15
First Appearance
Boston Symphony Quartette
Professor WILLY HESS, First Violin
OTTO ROTH, Second Violin
EMILE FERIR, Viola
RUDOLF KRASSELT, Violoncello
Tickets on sale at Steinert's on Monday, April 3, to Boston Symphony Orchestra subscribers only. Public sale Monday, April 10.

Boston Symphony Quartette.

At the courteous and thoughtful suggestion of the committee of guarantors for the three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season, the management of the latter organization has decided to give a concert in Memorial Hall on Friday evening, April 14, by the Boston Symphony Quartette, Prof. Willy Hess, first violin; Mr. Otto Roth, second violin: Mr. Emile Ferir, viola, and Mr. Rudolf Krasselt, violoncello. This will be the first appearance of the quartette in Providence. Tickets will be placed on sale at M. Steinert & Sons, 327 Westminster street, next Monday, April 3, and are available only to subscribers to the three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra the present season during this week. On the following Monday, April 10, the sale will be opened to the general public.

SUNDAY HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.

VOL. CXVII., NO. 99.

SUNDAY, APRIL 9, 1905.

"EROICA" GIVEN ON CENTENARY

That and "Leonore" No. 3 Overture Given at 21st Symphony Concert as Tribute to Beethoven—Anniversary Really Fell in December.

"EROICA" SEEMS LONG, AS COMPOSER FEARED

Handel's Concerto Grosso No. 12 and Saint-Saens' "Youth of Hercules" Are Other Numbers of Programme.

The programme of the 21st concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Gericke conductor, was as follows:

Overture, "Leonore" No. 3.....Beethoven
Concerto Grosso No. 12, in B minor.....Handel
"The Youth of Hercules".....Saint-Saens
Symphony No. 3, E flat major, "Eroica"
Beethoven

The programme was suddenly changed, possibly as a tribute to Beethoven, whose "Eroica" symphony was first performed in Vienna, April 7, 1805. The overture, "Leonore" No. 3, was substituted for the overture to Smetana's opera "The Kiss," which had been announced.

The "Eroica" was first performed 100 years ago on April 7, according to the authoritative biographers of Beethoven and according to evidence contemporaneous with the performance. Yet Austrian journals this season have spoken of March 7 as the date of the concert, and this date was observed by the Royal orchestra of Dresden at its symphony concert. As a matter of fact the very first performance was at a private concert at Prince Lobkowitz's some time in December of 1804, when the composer conducted and came to grief in the second half of the first allegro, so that a fresh start was necessary. And what were the criticisms at the first public performance? Beethoven again conducted, and some one shouted from the gallery: "I'd give another kreutzer if they would stop." Some said the work would gain if it were shortened, if there were more "light, clearness, unity"; others found it a mixture of "the excellent, the grotesque, the tiresome." The fast friends of the composer hailed it as a masterpiece.

Beethoven himself must have had misgivings about the length of the work, for he wrote this note in the score: "Since this symphony is longer than an ordinary symphony, it should be performed at the beginning rather than at the end of a concert, either after an overture or an aria, or after a concerto. If it be performed too late, there is the danger that it will not produce on the audience, whose attention will be already wearied by preceding pieces, the effect which the composer purposed in his own mind to attain." Alas, little or no attention is paid to this request today, and it must be confessed that after an hour of listening to music good, bad or indifferent, wherever or whenever the symphony is played, it does seem too long, even when the performance is most admirable.

The commentators have been busy with the work, but, in spite of their most ingenious labor, they have been unable to lessen the grandeur or chip the beauty of its pages. One fanatical worshipper of the composer found in the fugued passage of the first movement the entrance of the 19th century. Wagner insisted that the word "heroic" refers, not to any particular hero, not to Napoleon, whom Beethoven undoubtedly had in mind when he was composing the symphony, but to the full-fledged man in whom are all the purely human feelings. That mad wag, von Buelow, solemnly rededicated the symphony to Bismarck. The commentators imagine vain things, they chatter and write and have their little day. They pass away and their words are forgotten or are preserved for the wonder or the amusement of generations after them; the work itself remains, nor do 100 years tarnish or belittle it. Certain formulas, as formulas, may seem old-fashioned, but they are still vitalized by the weight of the thought cast in the bygone mold. This is music that is the expression of that which is unutterable in speech. Still is the plaintive second theme of the first movement charged with ineffable yearning. Still in the rich treatment of the musical thoughts is seen the working of a titanic yet very human mind.

It has been asked, and not so irreverently as might appear, why masterpieces are such a bore. These questioners would lump "King Lear," "Paradise Lost," "The Divine Comedy," the "Eroica" and the Ninth together. The question is as a recoil from the feeling of being o'ermastered, almost crushed. They that would have the indisputably great musical works performed in and out of season, they that would have them as daily and necessary food, would work quicker and more enduring injury to them than the longest flight of time.

Handel's concerto is interesting, chiefly by reason of the beautiful larghetto, an air that is both tender and solemn. It is doubtful whether he himself took the allegros seriously. It is recorded of him that he once answered a flatterer, a man like Chrysander, who applied the doctrine of plenary inspiration to every bit of Handel's enormous musical baggage, by saying the orchestral concerto or suite to which the flatterer had reference was poor stuff, written in haste, to serve some passing and inconsiderable occasion. These allegros often remind one of the operation of sawing wood; there is the same impression of perfunctory work and of monotonous expression.

Saint-Saens' symphonic poem gave much pleasure, although the end for once seemed ineffective, thin where it should overwhelm by its majestic breadth. When it was first produced certain Parisian critics denied the possibility of painting in tones a mental conflict and a mental decision—abstract matters, as a choice between virtue and pleasure. It may be said of the music that Pleasure as portrayed by Saint-Saens is more radiant and enchanting than Virtue, so that the choice of Hercules is the more to be commended; but the musician and the idle lover of music will find keener pleasure in the representation of Pleasure, both in dress and in thought.

MUSIC NOTES

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, APRIL 9, 1905.

The 21st Symphony program was purely orchestral, opening with the first performance here of the overture to Smetana's opera, "The Kiss," followed by Handel's "Concerto Grosso," No. 12; Saint-Saens' symphonic poem, "The Youth of Hercules," and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony. At the rear of the platform was suspended a gigantic wreath of laurel bearing the name of the composer and the years 1805-1905, in commemoration of the first performance of the "Eroica" in Vienna, April 7, 1805, just 100 years prior to last Friday's rehearsal in Symphony hall. The great work was finely read by Mr Gericke and although there is considerable uninteresting material in the first and closing movements, the audience gave every indication that the splendidly sympathetic interpretation made the "Eroica" the real feature of the program.

The funeral march, with its appealing and sonorous background of the heavier instruments, was given with a dignity and grandeur of exposition that was effective in every way, thoroughly typifying in music the solemnity of the composer's ideas. Equally artistic was the playing of the scherzo, the lighter contrasting figures of this movement showing the string and wood wind contingents at their best. These movements coming in sequence displayed the resources of the orchestra to great advantage by giving prominence to each section in various ways. The finale calls for no special mention save perhaps in the climax, which was very brilliantly played.

The Smetana overture is a charmingly melodic bit illustrating a superstition about a kiss which a maiden refuses to her widower lover before they are married. He makes light of the belief, but finally, after a season of remorse, waits for the kiss till the day of the wedding. The various episodes were depicted by the orchestra in a pleasing manner, as was to be expected, for there is little in the work which offered any difficulties in execution. In connection with these two composers may be mentioned the sad coincidence that when Beethoven wrote the "Eroica" he began to show signs of deafness, and Smetana was similarly afflicted when he wrote "The Kiss."

Handel's 12th 'Concerto Grosso," severe in structure and mainly interesting to experts and musical students, was played in proper form, Messrs Hess, Adamowski and Kressalt, who were the soloists, being easily adequate to all requirements. Saint-Saens' symphonic poem was delightfully interpreted, the flowing melodies given by the harp, wood winds and violins being deserving of special mention for their beauty and harmony of phrasing and tonal colorings.

At this week's rehearsal and concert Ellison Van Hoose will be the soloist. The program will open with Hadley's symphony, "The Four Seasons," played for the first time in Boston. The other numbers will include Massenet's "Griselidis" and "Lohengrin's Legend," sung by Mr Van Hoose; Brahm's Haydn variations and Liszt's symphonic poem, "Fest-Klange."

[85]

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Beethoven. Overture, "Leonora, No. 3."
Handel. Concerto Grosso, No. 12, for two solo violins.
Saint-Saens. Solo Violoncello and String Orchestra.
Beethoven. Symphonic Poem, "The Youth of Hercules."
Beethoven. Symphony No. 3, "Eroica."
First performance, April 7, 1805, in Vienna.

Some hidden exigencies caused Smetana's overture, "The Kiss," which had been promised, to disappear from the programme, and Beethoven's chief overture to take its place. This, with the great laurel wreath upon the stage, made the occasion more than ever a Beethoven celebration. It caused us to wonder mildly whether there will be, somewhere about 2004, a centennial celebration of D'Indy's second symphony, or Strauss' "Heldenleben"?

The overture was brilliantly performed and was applauded vociferously, Mr. Gericke being twice recalled to the stand to bow his acknowledgments to the audience. So it seems that Beethoven is not quite ready to be shelved in spite of some adverse American criticisms which he has recently received.

The Handelian work gave a good display of the old master's combination of melody and counterpoint. Handel is generally more popular and more easy of comprehension than Bach. The Larghetto reminded strongly of that celebrated largo in which Xerxes pours forth his horticultural views about the plane tree.

The fugal style of the finale was also a good compromise between melody and learning. Mr. Gericke took the tempi in a properly conservative manner. One must not forget that the old tempo marks are to be read in a moderate manner; the quick movements were less quick, the slow movements less slow, than at present. The soloists in the concerto did excellently.

Saint-Saens' "Youth of Hercules" is not the most graphic of his symphonic poems, but it is clear and comprehensible music, with some touches that are as delicate, and more intelligible, than some of Debussy's tender phrases in his more modern works. Possibly this number was taken too gently. Even in the climaxes we could not discover anything that would suggest the champion heavyweight of Olympus.

With Beethoven's Heroic symphony the concert came to a fiery end. It was fitting to celebrate the centennial of so important a work. It was practically the beginning of a new symphonic school, this work of a century ago. Beethoven's 2 first symphonies are not epoch-making works. Had the composer died before writing the third symphony (at about the age that Schubert did) we should only know him as a somewhat modernized Haydn.

There were 2 great symphonies existing before the "Heroic" was created; the "Jupiter" and the delicate G minor of Mozart, both composed in 1788; but the first leaned towards the old contrapuntal vein, and the second was sweet and tender rather than epic.

It must cause the critic to become timorous of venturing absolute opinions on modern or pioneer works when he thinks of how our forefathers shuddered at the audacity of this new school, a century ago, and how Weber sneered and thought Beethoven ready for a madhouse. But it seems very moderate at present.

In the midst of all this picture of passion and emotion Beethoven does not depart from form. Only the funeral march deviates a little from the accepted rondo or minuet paths.

Today your radical composer would require 50 consecutive fifths and 100 unresolved dissonances to portray any hero whatever, even if the composer were celebrating himself as that hero,—a custom which is coming into vogue. And as regards the instrumental forces, Richard Strauss required an orchestra of about double this size merely to picture the every day events in his domestic circle. There are giants in these days!

Mr. Gericke brought out fine contrasts in the opening allegro. Like Wagner in his theme of "Volsung Heroism," Beethoven pictures both force and sweetness in his ideal man. Possibly we might have asked for more of the shock of battle in the performance of the development. The conductor certainly softened down the violins in the dominant against the entrance of the horn in the tonic, at the end of this section. Although both harmonies are marked pianissimo, we think that they should balance sufficiently to show their clash; the violins should not be subdued to inaudibility.

The horns, by the way, were only mediocre in this symphony, and they have some very prominent passages. The phrases in the trio of the scherzo may seem simple enough nowadays, but we must remember that in Beethoven's time they possessed only the Waldhorn, the horn without any keys and able to give only a broken scale. So that even with a trio of these instruments the old composer sometimes found himself in a three-horned dilemma.

The finale has faded the most in this symphony. Beethoven's mingling of thematic development and square-cut variation was bold in its day, but in this field we have definitely progressed, and many of our modern composers have achieved greater successes in the variation form.

Louis C. Elson.

The Boston Journal

SYMPHONY PLAYS MOSTLY BEETHOVEN

Twenty-First Concert Presents the All-Embracing Spirit of the Great Master.

The twenty-first Symphony concert was in a way a Beethoven memorial. It was 100 years ago, within a single day, that the great "Eroica" symphony had its first public performance in Vienna. On Saturday night a vast audience rejoiced to hear the old masterpiece again.

So all-embracing was the Beethoven spirit that the 'Leonore N. 3" overture took the place that had been assigned to Smetana's "Kiss" overture, which was rather a pity, for we do not get brand-new Smetana pieces very often, while "Leonore' overtures of three sorts we have with us always.

The "big concerto" of Handel's is an adequate musical exemplar of the frog who tried to expand himself into an ox. Played in a salon, with a small band of strings, the work would be pleasing enough as a type of the courtly old snuff-box, lace-and-velvet style. It does not, to be sure, burst like the frog, but it seems perilously swollen.

Saint-Saens' "Youth of Hercules" was once upon a time considered very turbulent and hot-blooded, especialy in its strong finale. But whether time is dulling the former effect or the playing was tamer than usual, the fact is that it seemed unimpressive.

The "Eroica," which Beethoven expressly stated ought to be placed at the beginning of a concert on account of its length, came last, as usual. Truly, its colossal proportions almost overweighted the average listener. Great as it is, rich in thought, splendid in expression, immensely human, touching and noble, its bulk tells against it.

The Evening Times.

FRIDAY, APRIL 14, 1905.

Boston Symphony Quartette.

This evening in Memorial Hall, Rhode Island School of Design, Benefit street, the Boston Symphony Quartette, Professor Willy Hess, first violin; Mr. Otto Roth, second violin; Mr. Emile Ferid, viola, and Mr. Rudolf Krasselt, violoncello, will make their first appearance in Providence. This concert is given at the thoughtful suggestion of the committee of guarantors of the three concerts given this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra as an appropriate sequel to three of as successful concerts as have ever been given by any musical organization. The tickets have been placed at the very low price of 50 cents and 75 cents that this concert may easily be within the reach of all and is in the nature of a complimentary concert to season ticket holders for the Symphony series.

Tickets can be had at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Providence.

Memorial Hall, Providence,
FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, At 8:15
First Appearance
Boston Symphony Quartette
Professor WILLY HESS, First Violin
OTTO ROTH, Second Violin
EMILE FERIR, Viola
RUDOLF KRASSELT, Violoncello
Tickets on sale at Steinert's, Providence.
ap 14-1t

MEMORIAL HALL : : : : PROVIDENCE

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL FOURTEENTH

AT 8.15

The Boston Symphony Quartet

Professor WILLY HESS, First Violin
OTTO ROTH . . Second Violin
EMILE FERIR . . . . . Viola
RUDOLF KRASSELT, Violoncello

Programme

TSCHAIKOWSKI . . . . . Quartet in F major, Op. 22, No. 2

Adagio. Moderato assai.
Allegro giusto. L'istesso tempo. Tempo I.
Andante ma non troppo.
Allegro con moto.

SOLI FOR VIOLONCELLO

BACH . . . . . Air
VAN GOENS . . . . . Scherzo

Mr. KRASSELT

SCHUBERT Andante and Variations from Quartet in D minor, Op. posth.

SOLI FOR VIOLIN

WIENIAWSKI . . . . . Légende, Op. 17
RIES . . . . . Moto Perpetuo

Mr. HESS

HAYDN . . . . . Quartet in D minor, Op. 76, No. 2

Allegro.
Andante più allegretto.
Menuetto (Allegro ma non troppo). Trio.
Finale: Vivace assai.

Accompanist, Mr. MAX ZACH

THE PIANO USED IS A STEINWAY

The Providence Journal.

Published by the Providence Journal Co.
Nos. 209 and 213 Westminster St.
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1905.

SYMPHONY QUARTET.

New Organization Gave First Concert Here Last Evening.

The Boston Symphony Quartet made its first appearance in Providence last evening at Memorial Hall, Benefit street, and delighted a large audience with an hour and a half of excellent chamber music played in a most finished and artistic manner. The programme consisted of the following numbers:

Quartet in F-major, op. 22, No. 2..Tschaikowsky
Soli for violoncello, air.....Bach
Scherzo.....Van Goens
Mr. Krasselt.
Andante and variations from quartet in D-minor, op. posth.....Schubert
Soli for violin, Legende, op. 17....Wieniawski
Moto Perpetuo.....Ries
Mr. Hess.
Quartet in D-minor, op. 76, No. 2.....Haydn

The quartet, as might be inferred from its name, is composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its personnel being made up as follows: Prof. Willy Hess, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; Emile Ferir, viola; Rudolf Krasselt, violoncello. The organization is a comparatively new one, having been organized by Prof. Hess since he assumed the post of concert-master of the orchestra last fall. Of the other members of the quartet, Mr. Roth was associated for several years with the Kneisel Quartet, and Messrs. Ferir and Krasselt are, like Prof. Hess, newcomers and leaders in their respective departments of the string section of the orchestra.

When the members of the Kneisel Quartet withdrew, two years ago, from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra it was felt that that organization had suffered a severe loss. Now that their places have at last been filled by equally capable artists it is quite natural that the newcomers should feel impelled to emulate the success of their predecessors in the chamber music field. Nor is there any reason why they should fail to do so. Individually, they are one and all superb artists; all that they need for a perfect ensemble is time for the intimate acquaintance, the "shaking together" that comes—even to the best players—only with long and constant practice. Not that they do not already present a fine ensemble; they are too good musicians and too experienced players to come short of any point of skill or knowledge. But there is an extreme fineness of polish, a subtleness of sympathetic union, an intangible something that is easier felt than described, which can come only from long association. That the Boston Symphony Quartet will achieve this final mark of perfection if it holds together can hardly be doubted. Certainly their playing last night was eminently artistic and enjoyable.

While the concerted numbers were given with a fine degree of spirit and admirable tonal effect, a special degree of interest attached to the solo playing. Pleasant anticipation was inseparable from Mr. Hess's appearance in view of the pronounced success scored by him at the last symphony concert. Again he showed himself a masterly player, full of energy and nervous force, completely equipped on the technical side, and moved by a degree of musical taste not only highly developed but unusually well balanced. Mr. Krasselt, who has taken the place of Mr. Schroeder as first 'cellist of the orchestra, is a young player of remarkable present achievement and unlimited promise. The tone he draws from his instrument is of exquisite quality, while his style is broad, full of grace and in every way that of the finished artist. His two numbers were well contrasted and displayed to the full both his admirable singing legato and his sure and facile technic.

Both artists were recalled again and again by the most sincere and long-continued applause, and each contributed a brief encore number. The accompaniments for the solos were played by Mr. Max Zach with judicious reserve and sympathetic feeling.

[86]

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Beethoven. Overture, "Leonora, No. 3."
Handel. Concerto Grosso, No. 12, for two solo violins, Solo Violoncello and String Orchestra.
Saint-Saens. Symphonic Poem, "The Youth of Hercules."
Beethoven. Symphony No. 2, "Eroica."
First performance, April 7, 1805, in Vienna.

Some hidden exigencies caused Smetana's overture, "The Kiss," which had been promised, to disappear from the programme, and Beethoven's chief overture to take its place. This, with the great laurel wreath upon the stage, made the occasion more than ever a Beethoven celebration. It caused us to wonder mildly whether there will be, somewhere about 2004, a centennial celebration of Dandy's second symphony, or Strauss' "Heldenleben"?

The overture was brilliantly performed and was applauded vociferously. Mr. Gericke was forced twice recalled to the stand to bow his acknowledgments to the audience. So it seems that Beethoven is not quite ready to be shelved in spite of some adverse American criticisms which he has recently received.

The Handelian work gave a good display of the old master's combination of melody and counterpoint. Handel is generally more peculiar and less open of comprehension than Bach. The Larghetto reminded strongly of that celebrated largo in which Xerxes pours forth his horticultural views about the plane tree.

The regal style of the finale was also a good compromise between melody and fugue. Mr. Gericke took the tempi in a manner conservative manner. One must not forget that the old tempo marks do not read in a moderate manner; the quick movements are less quick, the slow movements less slow, than at present. The soloists in this work did excellently.

Saint-Saens' "Youth of Hercules" is not the best example of his symphonic poems. It is clear and comprehensible music, [illegible] than some of Debussy's [illegible] in his more modern work. Possibly the manner was taken too seriously. Even in the climaxes we could not discover anything that would suggest the champion heavyweight of Olympus.

With Beethoven's Heroic symphony the concert came to a fitting end. It was fitting to celebrate the memorial of so important a work. It was practically the beginning of a new symphonic school, this work of a century ago. Beethoven's first symphonies are not epoch-making works. Had the composer died before writing the third symphony it is doubtful if we should have heard of him. Indeed we should only know him as a somewhat modernized Haydn.

There were 2 great symphonies existing before the "Heroic" was created; the "Jupiter" and the delicate G minor of Mozart, both composed in 1788, and the first leaned towards the 18th century and the second was sweet and tender rather than virile.

It is best not for the critic to become timorous of venturing absolute opinions on modern or pioneer works when he thinks of how our forefathers shuddered at the audacity of this new school a century ago, and how Weber sneered at though Beethoven ready for a madhouse. But it seems very moderate at present.

In the midst of all this picture of passion and emotion Beethoven does not depart from form. Only the funeral march deviates a little from the accepted rondo or minuet paths.

Today your typical composer would require 50 consecutive fifths and 100 unresolved dissonances to portray any hero whatever, even if the composer were celebrating himself as that heroic custom which is coming into vogue. And as regards the instrumental forces, Richard Strauss required an orchestra of about double its size merely to picture the every day events in his domestic circle. There are giants in these days!

Mr. Gericke brought out fine contrasts in the opening Allegro. Like Wagner in his theme of "Young Heroism," Beethoven paints both force and sweetness in his ideal hero. Possibly we might have asked for more of the shock of battle in the performance of the development. The conductor certainly softened down the violins in the [illegible] at the entrance of the horn in the tonic, at the end of this section. Although both harmonies are marked pianissimo, we think that they should balance sufficiently to show their clash; the violins should not be subdued to inaudibility.

The horns, by the way, were only mediocre in this symphony, and they have some very prominent passages. The phrases in the trio of the scherzo may seem simple enough nowadays, but we must remember that in Beethoven's time they possessed only the Waldhorn, the horn without any keys and able to give only a broken scale. So that even with a trio of these instruments the old composer sometimes found himself in a three-horned dilemma.

The finale has faded the most in this symphony. Beethoven's mingling of thematic development and square-cut variation was bold in its day, but in this field we have definitely progressed, and many of our modern composers have achieved greater successes in the variation form.

Louis C. Elson.

The Boston Journal

SYMPHONY PLAYS MOSTLY BEETHOVEN

Twenty-First Concert Presents the All-Embracing Spirit of the Great Master.

The twenty-first Symphony concert was in a way a Beethoven memorial. It was 100 years ago, within a single day, that the great "Eroica" symphony had its first public performance in Vienna. On Saturday night a vast audience rejoiced to hear the old masterpiece again.

So all-embracing was the Beethoven spirit that the 'Leonore N. 3" overture took the place that had been assigned to Smetana's "Kiss" overture, which was rather a pity, for we do not get brand-new Smetana pieces very often, while "Leonore' overtures of three sorts we have with us always.

The "big concerto" of Handel's is an adequate musical exemplar of the frog who tried to expand himself into an ox. Played in a salon, with a small band of strings, the work would be pleasing enough as a type of the courtly old snuff-box, lace-and-velvet style. It does not, to be sure, burst like the frog, but it seems perilously swollen.

Saint-Saens' "Youth of Hercules" was once upon a time considered very turbulent and hot-blooded, especialy in its strong finale. But whether time is dulling the former effect or the playing was tamer than usual, the fact is that it seemed unimpressive.

The "Eroica," which Beethoven expressly stated ought to be placed at the beginning of a concert on account of its length, came last, as usual. Truly, its colossal proportions almost overweighted the average listener. Great as it is, rich in thought, splendid in expression, immensely human, touching and noble, its bulk tells against it.

The Evening Times.

FRIDAY, APRIL 14, 1905.

Boston Symphony Quartette.

This evening in Memorial Hall, Rhode Island School of Design, Benefit street, the Boston Symphony Quartette, Professor Willy Hess, first violin; Mr. Otto Roth, second violin; Mr. Emile Ferid, viola, and Mr. Rudolf Krasselt, violoncello, will make their first appearance in Providence. This concert is given at the thoughtful suggestion of the committee of guarantors of the three concerts given this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra as an appropriate sequel to three of as successful concerts as have ever been given by any musical organization. The tickets have been placed at the very low price of 50 cents and 75 cents that this concert may easily be within the reach of all and is in the nature of a complimentary concert to season ticket holders for the Symphony series.

Tickets can be had at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Providence.

Memorial Hall, Providence,

FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, At 8:15

First Appearance

Boston Symphony Quartette

Professor WILLY HESS, First Violin
OTTO ROTH, Second Violin
EMILE FERIR, Viola
RUDOLF KRASSELT, Violoncello

Tickets on sale at Steinert's, Providence.

ap 14-1t

MEMORIAL HALL : : : : PROVIDENCE

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL FOURTEENTH

AT 8.15

The Boston Symphony Quartet

Professor WILLY HESS, First Violin
OTTO ROTH . . Second Violin
EMILE FERIR . . . . . Viola
RUDOLF KRASSELT, Violoncello

Programme

TSCHAIKOWSKI . . . . . Quartet in F major, Op. 22, No. 2

Adagio. Moderato assai.
Allegro giusto. L'istesso tempo. Tempo I.
Andante ma non troppo.
Allegro con moto.

SOLI FOR VIOLONCELLO

BACH . . . . . Air

VAN GOENS . . . . . Scherzo

Mr. KRASSELT

SCHUBERT Andante and Variations from Quartet in D minor, Op. posth.

SOLI FOR VIOLIN

WIENIAWSKI . . . . . Légende, Op. 17

RIES . . . . . Moto Perpetuo

Mr. HESS

HAYDN . . . . . Quartet in D minor, Op. 76, No. 2

Allegro.
Andante più allegretto.
Menuetto (Allegro ma non troppo). Trio.
Finale: Vivace assai.

Accompanist, Mr. MAX ZACH

THE PIANO USED IS A STEINWAY

The Providence Journal.

Published by the Providence Journal Co.
Nos. 209 and 213 Westminster St.
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1905.

SYMPHONY QUARTET.

New Organization Gave First Concert Here Last Evening.

The Boston Symphony Quartet made its first appearance in Providence last evening at Memorial Hall, Benefit street, and delighted a large audience with an hour and a half of excellent chamber music played in a most finished and artistic manner. The programme consisted of the following numbers:

Quartet in F-major, op. 22, No. 2..Tschaikowsky
Soli for violoncello, air.....Bach
Scherzo.....Van Goens
Mr. Krasselt.
Andante and variations from quartet in D-minor, op posth.....Schubert
Soli for violin, Legende, op. 17....Wieniawski
Moto Perpetuo.....Rles
Mr. Hess.
Quartet in D-minor, op. 76, No. 2.....Haydn

The quartet, as might be inferred from its name, is composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its personnel being made up as follows: Prof. Willy Hess, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; Emile Ferir, viola; Rudolf Krasselt, violoncello. The organization is a comparatively new one, having been organized by Prof. Hess since he assumed the post of concert-master of the orchestra last fall. Of the other members of the quartet, Mr. Roth was associated for several years with the Kneisel Quartet, and Messrs. Ferir and Krasselt are, like Prof. Hess, newcomers and leaders in their respective departments of the string section of the orchestra.

When the members of the Kneisel Quartet withdrew, two years ago, from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra it was felt that that organization had suffered a severe loss. Now that their places have at last been filled by equally capable artists it is quite natural that the newcomers should feel impelled to emulate the success of their predecessors in the chamber music field. Nor is there any reason why they should fail to do so. Individually, they are one and all superb artists; all that they need for a perfect ensemble is time for the intimate acquaintance, the "shaking together" that comes—even to the best players—only with long and constant practice. Not that they do not already present a fine ensemble; they are too good musicians and too experienced players to come short of any point of skill or knowledge. But there is an extreme fineness of polish, a subtleness of sympathetic union, an intangible something that is easier felt than described, which can come only from long association. That the Boston Symphony Quartet will achieve this final mark of perfection if it holds together can hardly be doubted. Certainly their playing last night was eminently artistic and enjoyable.

While the concerted numbers were given with a fine degree of spirit and admirable tonal effect, a special degree of interest attached to the solo playing. Pleasant anticipation was inseparable from Mr. Hess's appearance in view of the pronounced success scored by him at the last symphony concert. Again he showed himself a masterly player, full of energy and nervous force, completely equipped on the technical side, and moved by a degree of musical taste not only highly developed but unusually well balanced. Mr. Krasselt, who has taken the place of Mr. Schroeder as first 'cellist of the orchestra, is a young player of remarkable present achievement and unlimited promise. The tone he draws from his instrument is of exquisite quality, while his style is broad, full of grace and in every way that of the finished artist. His two numbers were well contrasted and displayed to the full both his admirable singing legato and his sure and facile technic.

Both artists were recalled again and again by the most sincere and long-continued applause, and each contributed a brief encore number. The accompaniments for the solos were played by Mr. Max Zach with judicious reserve and sympathetic feeling.

[86]

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, APRIL 10, 1905

Entered at Post Office, Boston, Mass., as

MUSIC AND DRAMA

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

For some unexplained reason, the programme of the twenty-first symphony concert was changed, Beethoven's overture to Leonore, No. 3, being played in place of Smetana's overture to the opera "The Kiss." Since April 7, 1905, is a Beethoven anniversary, the "Eroica" symphony having been produced for the first time on April 7, 1805, at Vienna, the performance of a Beethoven overture was not at all out of character. This was the programme of the concert:

Beethoven: Overture to "Leonore," No. 3.
Handel: Concerto Grosso, No. 12, in B minor.
Saint-Saëns: Symphonic Poem, "The Youth of Hercules," No. 4, Op. 50.
Beethoven: Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major. "Eroica," Op. 55. (First performance, April 7, 1805, in Vienna.)

Despite its undue length and its lack of novelties, the concert of Saturday was one to give extreme pleasure, not only from the programme, but also from the remarkable brilliancy of the performance. The Leonore overture in particular, despite its composer's adherence to the sonata form, seemed as dramatic and moving as the most formless symphonic poem a modern could imagine—and it goes without saying, vastly more poetical. Musical idioms, after all, amount to little. Given Beethoven, with his inexhaustible fund of big ideas and with his dramatic sense, the sonata form could not prove too cramping for him to produce a work that, even today, makes a potent appeal to all intelligent and sensitive listeners, emotionally no less than musically and æsthetically. In the case of a composer of slight imagination and power, on the other hand, the broadest license of form and the utmost skill in orchestration will not enable him to write music that one cares to hear more than once to gratify one's curiosity.

And as with the overture, so, after one hundred years, is it with the "Eroica" symphony. If, like any other masterpiece, it be not heard too often, this symphony cannot fail to impress all hearers by its amazing beauty of melody, form and color, as well as by its intellectual and emotional strength and grandeur. It matters little what hero Beethoven had in mind when writing the work; its contents are unmistakably heroic. That its beauty may never be dimmed by undue familiarity, it might be wise to reserve performances of the "Eroica" symphony for festal or memorial occasions, which its presence would always ennoble. In this connection, by the way, Beethoven's recommendation may be reproduced here: "Since this symphony is longer than an ordinary symphony, it should be performed at the beginning rather than at the end of a concert, either after an overture or an aria, or after a concerto. If it be performed too late, there is danger that it will not produce on the audience, whose attention will be already wearied by preceeding pieces, the effect which the composer purposed in his own mind to attain"—a very present danger indeed, which it is of interest to learn that Beethoven recognized. Although a Beethoven symphony is not as formidable now as it would have been a century ago, it is not a waltz from the "Fledermaus." The least of Beethoven's symphonies can be the more heartily enjoyed when the ears and mind are fresh, and the case is not different with other symphonies of length and serious import. On Saturday, it must be recorded, the "Eroica" was played lovingly and brilliantly, with impressive results.

After the Beethoven works, the Handel concerto for strings seemed to give most pleasure, particularly the exquisite movement defined as "Larghetto e piano." In the face of the decree from New York that recently has refused Handel a place among the greatest of composers, it is easy to agree with Mr. Runciman that Handel has surpassed all composers of all times in the attainment of beauty in melodies. This larghetto would surely bear testimony to the truth of the London critic's theory. As for the quick movements of the concerto, old-fashioned they undeniably are, but, none the less, would it be hard to claim that they are wanting in a certain dignity or in a bustling good humor that marks them as Handel's own, far superior to anything else of the kind that was written at the same period. The superb playing of the concerto by the string band aroused enthusiasm.

And then there was Saint-Saëns's symphonic poem, "The Youth of Hercules," in which there is depicted the hero's mental struggle as to whether he shall choose to follow Virtue or Pleasure through life. Musicians, it would seem from their writings find virtue unattractive. As examples, compare the holy Elizabeth of Wagner with his Venus, his righteous Fricka with the sinning Sieglinde, or even Elsa with the impetuous and wicked Ortrud. Why did Wilhelm Meister prefer the plaintive Mignon to the sprightly Philine? And who can blame Don José for finding Michaela less engaging than Carmen? To judge by their works, musicians cannot fancy virtue. Saint-Saëns, therefore, is a man to be set apart, for in his symphonic poem of Hercules he has certainly conceived the way of virtue to lie in pleasant places, expressed by graceful, charming music, whereas the orgies typical of pleasure are but feebly and unenticingly suggested. To be frank, this music of Saint-Saëns, notwithstanding its sonority and its perfection of technique, sounds more old-fashioned than the concerto grosso of Handel.

Mr. Ellison Van Hoose will be the soloist at this week's concert. Here is the programme: Hadley, Symphony No. 2, "The Four Seasons" (first time in Boston); Massenet, aria, "Griselidis"; Brahms, Haydn Variations; Wagner, Lohengrin's Legend; Liszt, Symphonic Poem, No. 7, "Fest-Klänge."

R. R. G.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Hadley..Symphony No. 2, "The Four Seasons." (First time in Boston)
Massenet ..... "Griselidis"
Mr. Ellison Van Hoose.
Brahms.....Haydn Variations
Wagner.....Lohengrin's Legend
Mr. Van Hoose.
Liszt...Symphonic Poem, No. 7, "Fest-Klaenge"

Mr. Gericke was slightly indisposed and Mr. Hess conducted this concert. He won much applause and his work deserves commendation. He did not make as much out of the Brahms variations as Mr. Gericke could have done, but he certainly gave every ounce of effect to the "Fest-Klaenge," with which the concert ended. He also was most conscientious in the direction of Mr. Hadley's symphony.

This new symphony has won 2 musical prizes, and is one of the few important American works in the large orchestral form. It is not an equal work, but it contains points of much beauty and some very interesting development. Of course a large orchestra is used; larger than one finds in any of the Brahms symphonies, larger even than that used by Beethoven in his 9th symphony, but not as tremendous as Van Der Stucken uses in "Radcliffe" or "Pax Triumphans." It is a clean-cut work in classical form.

Its first movement, entitled "Winter," is an easily followed sonata-allegro, with a bold and fiery development section. In this latter division there is effective syncopation, evil-toned muted horns, and many other points that prove it to have been a very hard winter. There is a clear return of themes with changed orchestration which is very effective.

Although bearing a title, this movement cannot be called "programme-music," for it gives a portrayal of moods rather than of objects; it is, as Beethoven once said of a similar movement: "Mehr ein Bild der Empfindungen als Malerei." It might picture King Lear, or a Roosevelt oration, or anything else that is strenuous. The second movement is entitled "Spring." We generally look with suspicion on spring chickens, spring medicines and spring symphonies, but this dainty Scherzo bears minute scrutiny. It is the most graceful and most effective part of the symphony. Was it Tennyson who wrote:—

> In the spring the dove is burnished;
> Every zephyr is a good wind.
> In the spring composer's fancies
> Lightly turn to thoughts of woodwind.

Of course there are pipings and flutings, tinklings of Glockenspiel and other touches of light happiness, and the movement is not too long.

In the third movement ("Summer") the composer is definitely launched in picture-painting, and bids us think of a mountain lake at midnight. Cowen did this sort of water romance better, in his Scandinavian symphony, in the movement called "On the Fjord"; but Mr. Hadley has some beautiful points, too, especially in his chief figure, which is an Indian theme, whether aboriginal or not we do not know,—nor care—since it is attractive and works up well.

There is a gradual falling-off in power after the first 2 movements of the work, and the finale is comparatively weak. The composition lacks a true climax, the falling of the leaves (its title is "Autumn") is not very characteristic, and the hunting episode is but a platitude. It may be worth Mr. Hadley's while, some day, to write a stronger finale to this symphony. It is certainly a sterling work and deserves an effective finale. It is a matter of felicitation that our young American composer has not tried to out-Wagner Wagner, or to invent new dissonances, or to give a musical puzzle-picture, as some modern composers with fewer ideas than he are constantly doing.

Mr. Van Hoose was in excellent voice, and made a fine effect in Alain's aria from "Griselida," his notes even in highest register, both chest and demi-falsetto, were perfectly intoned and excellent in quality. He was at his best in Massenet's aria, and was also commendable in the "Lohengrin" number, although a little more of massive power might have been demanded at the climax of the latter. He was recalled twice, with much heartiness.

The Brahms variations were a good intellectual exercise, but not of a character to arouse enthusiasm. We doubt if Mr. Hess brought out all that was in the work. But in the last number the new conductor shone resplendent. It is by no means the best of Liszt's symphonic poems, this picture of festivity, for in it Liszt becomes a diluted Wagner. He has built a magnificent portico to a peasant's hut; the lofty phrases that seem to herald mighty deeds, dissolve into dance rhythms, so that at times the work becomes a symphonic quadrille. For all that, it was delightful to note the freedom and heartiness with which Mr. Hess invested it; it became a veritable feast-clangor; it almost persuaded the auditor that it was great music.

Louis C. Elson.

SUNDAY HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVII., NO. 106.

SUNDAY, APRIL 16, 1905.

HADLEY'S FRANK SYMPHONY HEARD

It Is Feature of the 22d Symphony Concert—Mr. Hess Conducts Owing to Slight Indisposition of Mr. Gericke.

The programme of the 22d Symphony concert, given last night in Symphony Hall, was as follows:

Symphony No. 2, in "The Four Seasons".. Hadley
Alain's Air from the opera "Griselda".... Massenet
Variations on a Theme by Haydn.....Brahms
Lohengrin's Narrative from "Lohengrin".. Wagner
Symphonic Poem, "Fest-Klaenge".....Liszt

The feature of the concert was the production of Mr. Hadley's symphony, which took two prizes in 1901, one offered in competition by Mr. Paderewski, the other by the New England Conservatory of Music. The symphony has been played by the leading orchestras of New York, Chicago and Pittsburg. Mr. Lang purposed to produce it here last season at a Chickering concert; and now in 1905 it is heard at last in Boston. It would be a pleasure to discuss the work at length, but the pressure on the columns of The Herald of today forbids anything more than a note.

Mr. Hadley is a believer in programme music, but he himself has not written an elaborate argument of the whole work. The first two movements, "Winter" and "Spring," are portrayals of moods, and the poetic mottoes added by Mr. Krehbiel probably serve as well as any others that might be taken from an anthology. The third and fourth movements admit of a more detailed programme, but the music would make its way without any allusion to "midnight scene on a lake surrounded by mountains" or to "the falling of thousands of leaves in a forest."

The musical thoughts are frank in themselves, and they are not tortured in the expression. At its best the work has pleasing buoyancy and enthusiasm. The scherzo "Spring" is delightfully fresh throughout, and there are poetic passages in "Summer." The opening of "Winter" has distinctive force, though the movement as a whole is not on so high a plane as that of the two that follow. The finale is the weakest in its structure; nor is the chief theme one that we should associate naturally with "destiny." The symphony is scored effectively, at times brilliantly, and it may be said that it is interesting as absolute music, without any reference to a programme. The movements in turn were heartily applauded, and the applause was an expression of honest enjoyment; it was not merely perfunctory or complimentary. This must suffice for the present. We hope to refer to the symphony next Sunday.

Mr. Van Hoose sang Alain's air from Massenet's "Griselda" for the first time at these concerts. He was in excellent voice, and the voice itself again had the beautiful quality which characterized it when he first came before the Boston public. There was a period after his return from Paris when he seemed to have gained in brilliance at the expense of tonal richness. The air is in Massenet's later style—that is, there is his well known formula of passionate expression—but the passion is a semblance without true sensuousness or fire. Yet, as sung by Mr. Van Hoose, the air is an effective concert piece.

Mr. Hess conducted with success the concerts of Friday and last night, in consequence of Mr. Gericke's slight indisposition. In the aria by Massenet the orchestra overpowered the singer at times; but was the instrumentation that of Massenet? It did not have his characteristic stamp.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, APRIL 16, 1905.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The 23d Symphony program began with the first performance in this city of the "Four Seasons" symphony, the work of the young American composer, Mr Henry K. Hadley, which, in 1901, was awarded two first prizes in competitions established by the N. E. conservatory of Music and Mr Paderewski. Mr Ellison Van Hoose was the soloist in vocal selections from Massenet's "Griselda" and Wagner's "Lohengrin." Brahms' variations on a theme by Haydn and Liszt's symphonic poem, "Fest Klange," were the other numbers. Mr Hadley, who is a Somerville boy and well known hereabouts, has written a dignified and ambitious work which shows that he has clear ideas regarding musical expression and color, excellent knowledge of instrumentation and an originality in some of the combinations which emphasize his right to rank high as a composer of serious works.

The title, "The Four Seasons," is explanatory of the four movements of the symphony, which are called "Winter," "Spring," "Summer" and "Autumn." The influence of other composers is shown in the composition, but the suggestions are not unduly prominent and the "pictures" find apt illustrations in forms in which Mr Hadley's creative abilities are to be acknowledged.

"Winter" shows the desolation, austerity and wildness of that season of the year. "Spring," the most delightful of the four parts, is a cleverly orchestrated scherzo in which elves dance and romp in the moonlight. In "Summer" is heard the Indian love song, then a touch of the mystic, in which the full orchestration is impressively employed at first and finally fades away into pianissimo. "Autumn" has a very pretty idea in staccato figures by the violins, suggesting falling leaves, a hunting theme and a sad refrain which closes the movement with a motif symbolizing destiny. Throughout the work the contrasts are managed quite smoothly, and although some of the thematic material is familiar in treatment the symphony is effective, very interesting as a whole, scholarly and a credit to American music.

The turbulence of the first part was given with good results and the charming "Spring" melodies, mainly voiced by the flute, went as trippingly and daintily as its elfin atmosphere suggested. In the "Summer" movement there was much to enjoy in the splendid work of the wood winds, in the fortissimo passages by the whole orchestra and in the closing measures in pianissimo by the harp and lighter strings against a sustained background by the other instruments. The features of the last movement were the charming staccato reiteration by the strings in unison and the hunting music in which the horns were heard to good advantage.

Mr Van Hoose, tenor, sang with his usual skill of expression and sweetness of tone, being specially pleasing in the "Griselda" aria, which was somewhat better suited to his vocal style than was the excerpt from "Lohengrin." The orchestra played the Brahms variations well enough and showed its ability to compass easily the harmonic difficulties of a selection that isn't particularly interesting. The Liszt "Festival Echoes," with its gradations from the pomp of a ceremonial to those of holiday festivities, was interpreted admirably. Mr Hess conducted in place of Mr Gericke, who was ill.

This week's rehearsal will take place Thursday afternoon and Paderewski will be the soloist. The program will be as follows: Mendelssohn's overture, "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage"; Chopin's F minor concerto for piano, Gustav Strube's symphonic poem, "Longing," and Sgambati's D major symphony.

Boston Transcript

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

Mr. Gericke not being well, the twenty-second public rehearsal and concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra were conducted by Mr. Willy Hess. The soloist was Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, tenor, and this was the programme:

Hadley: Symphony No. 2, "The Four Seasons," F minor, Op. 30.
Massenet: Air of Alain, "Open, ye Gates of Paradise," from the Opera "Griselda."
Brahms: Variations on a theme of Josef Haydn, Op. 56A.
Wagner: Lohengrin's Narrative, from the Opera "Lohengrin," Act III., Scene 3.
Liszt: Symphonic Poem, No. 7, "Fest-Klänge."

The chief feature of the concert was the production, for the first time in Boston, of Mr. Henry K. Hadley's symphony, "The Four Seasons," which, in the autumn of 1901, secured two prizes for orchestral compositions, one offered by Mr. Paderewski, the other by the New England Conservatory of Music. The work has already been played in New York, Chicago and Pittsburg, and last year Mr. Lang was prepared to bring it out at one of the Chickering Orchestral Concerts, but was prevented.

The symphony by Mr. Hadley was a comfort to hear, inasmuch as it is not painfully academic, as those written with a view to gaining the approval of a dry old professor of a German conservatory, nor yet far-fetched and unnatural, like the work of some young composers who have been led to imitate the peculiar idioms of modern French writers. Mr. Hadley's composition, on the contrary, is entirely frank and simple, comprehensible, melodious and yet modern in spirit. Above all else, it has the merit of actually saying something, in place of toying with a series of formulas; its composer is clearly a man of musical ideas.

Although the symphony is furnished with a somewhat elaborate programme, it appears that the programme was imagined rather by Mr. Krehbiel than by Mr. Hadley. Be this as it may, the titles of the four movements, Winter, Spring, Summer, Autumn, answer every purpose, without further indications of the composer's meaning. The first movement, Winter, considered as programme music, seems the least picturesque of the four. As absolute music, on the other hand, it can be called a remarkably well-written movement of stormy, passionate character, with a first theme that commands attention. The picture of spring, in the form of a scherzo, is delightful, conceived and executed with an admirable lightness of touch. And still more attractive is the summer episode, a musical picture, according to Mr. Krehbiel, of a mountain lake under the full moon, with an Indian love song, etc. The programme is scarcely necessary. Without it, Mr. Hadley's impression of summer is imaginative and suggestive, with a wealth of sensuous melody most beautifully orchestrated. As for the finale, it is a weak illustration of Mr. Krehbiel's programme, but, in itself, it is a poetical and tenderly felt sketch of the autumn mood which is rife when the leaves fall and all the world is brown. The first episode, developed at length, is pervaded with a spirit of gentle melancholy, interrupted only by a charming hunting scene, and then resumed, to be continued to a quiet close. This ending is unusual for that of a symphony, but how, logically, could a movement termed "Autumn" end otherwise than quietly? Mr. Hadley is to be congratulated on his symphony not only on what he has accomplished but also on what he has refrained from attempting. His composition most assuredly shows technical skill, a certain gift of poetry, and, above all, the rare disposition to write simply and naturally, without a violent effort to avoid the commonplace at whatever cost. The symphony, which was very heartily applauded, deserves to be heard again in Boston.

Since Mr. Gericke was absent and Mr. Hess was conducting works not prepared by himself, it is not proper to comment on the concert further than to say that all the compositions went smoothly and nicely. Mr. Van Hoose, in grand voice, sang the pretty aria from Massenet's "Grisélidis" very beautifully, with tasteful phrasing, with admirable tonal quality, and with genuine warmth. The excerpt from "Lohengrin" he also sang well, although not so well as the French piece. He was applauded cordially.

At the coming concert Mr. Paderewski will play, and this will be the programme: Overture, "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," Mendelssohn; concerto for pianoforte, No. 2, in F minor, Chopin; symphonic poem, "Longing," Gustav Strube; Symphony No. 1, in D major, Sgambati.

R. R. G.

---

[87]

4
SUNDAY HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVII., NO. 113.
SUNDAY, APRIL 23, 1905.

PRAISE

PLAY STRUBE'S NEW SYMPHONY

Symphony Orchestra, for Its 23d Concert, Produces His "Longing," for Viola and Orchestra, with Wonderful Effect.

THE AUDIENCE WILDLY APPLAUDS PADEREWSKI

He Plays the Concerto and Several Encore Pieces Like the Paderewski of Earlier Years, but Still Has Mannerisms.

The programme of the 23d Symphony concert in Symphony Hall last night, Mr. G. [illegible] conductor, was as follows:

Overture, "Sea-Calm and Prosperous Voyage".....Mendelssohn
Symphonic poem, "Longing" (first time).....Strube
Concerto in F minor, No. 2, for piano.....Chopin Symphony in D.....Franck
(By request.)

This concert was one of unusual interest to the hearer in search of varied entertainment. There was a familiar and well understood overture by Mendelssohn, there was a new symphonic poem by Mr. Strube which displayed [illegible] of Mr. Ferir as well as the talent of the composer; Mr. Paderewski played a concerto by Chopin and thus turned a symphony concert into a piano recital for a while, and there was the impressive and noble symphony of César Franck. Thus there were exhibitions of personality and of art.

Mendelssohn's musical portraiture of a dead calm at sea is still expressive even to those who have heard the music of Rimsky-Korsakoff, who knew the ocean as a professional, not as an English channel amateur. It is the painting of the prosperous voyage that now seems hopelessly old-fashioned, fit to be classed with "Moonlight on the Hudson" and other "musical sketches."

In the Russian's "Scheherazade" and "Sadko," there is the sea, with the sight and the sound and the foam of it. In Mendelssohn's music there is the return of a Nantasket boat, on time, with whooping friends on the wharf and a suggestion of the rush to the street cars. There is more of the thought of the sea in the same composer's "Hebrides" overture, which makes no such a direct challenge to attention. Still, the first section, the sea calm, is worthy of the composer, who, after the worst has been said in praise or in blame, remains a charming melodist, if not a marine painter of indisputable power.

Mr. Strube's symphonic poem, "Longing," was [illegible] early this year. It was suggested by a poem in free verse by Mr. William Lyman Johnson of this city, and according to the poet's short analysis of the work, the music should remind one of "tenderest nightfall, filled with peace and fragrant sounds. The solo viola expresses the longing for the peace and hope that mournful mothering night brings to him, who is tired of the clamor, din and gossip of the day and all that the struggle for existence suggests. There is the longing, to quote from Mr. Johnson's poem, for "The twilight—calm and rest,

Of moonlight on a field of lilies,
And Jesus walking in their midst."

Without any knowledge of the poem the music would be poetic, and the [illegible] would furnish a clew. With a knowledge of the poem it is illustrative as well as the music is poetic. The Herald earlier in the season called attention to the fact that Mr. Strube, a musician of [illegible] talent and versatility, had fallen into the way of using a musical speech that did not seem natural to him. This symphonic poem is free from the mannerisms. The music is here the natural, inevitable expression of spontaneous thought, and this thought is continuous, not merely episodic.

To use a phrase that has been sadly [illegible], this music came from the composer's heart, not merely from the brain, and although in the expression there is a free use of ultra-modern harmonies and orchestral devices, there is not for a moment any suggestion of experimentation, nor is the composer discovered as one wishing to make the bourgeois sit up. The thought is not frittered away in the telling, and technical ingenuity is used only to point the musical message.

Mr. Strube has profited by the inventions of d'Indy and Debussey et al, and their superior refinements of instrumentation, but he has made them his own, so that they do not interrupt as orchestral or harmonic quotations what he himself has to say. The symphonic poem is, on the whole, the clearest, sanest, most truly emotional and imaginative of Mr. Strube's later works. He conducted, and he was indeed fortunate in his interpreters. Mr. Ferir played with wonderfully beautiful tone and the finest feeling; the men of the orchestra were in full sympathy with their colleague.

The Herald [illegible] on certain injurious [illegible] that marred sadly the performance of Mr. Paderewski at his recital, it is a pleasure to say that in his performance of the concerto last evening he was for the most part the Paderewski of earlier years, sympathetic, emotional, brilliant, hypnotic. Whether Chopin himself would know this concerto as it is orchestrated and played today by any distinguished pianist is a question that need not be discussed at this moment; it is not easy to imagine Chopin playing in any huge modern concert hall. Mr. Paderewski's performance abounded in tonal contrasts and in haunting cantabile; it was apparently spontaneous and yet cunningly prepared and finished. In the performance of the second movement the pianist reached his height.

The wildly applausive audience insisted on encore pieces. Mr. Gericke, who has so often forbidden these additions to a programme, yielded, and Mr. Paderewski played an etude by Chopin (E major), the waltz in C sharp minor by the same composer and the arrangement of Schubert's Erl King. In the etude there was a tendency to sentimentalize. The performance of the waltz was mannered in the extreme, and the liberties in rhythm were extravagant and ineffective. The performance of the Erl King was thunderously undistinguished.

The performance of the orchestra was of the highest order. Frank's great symphony was played not long ago with such effect that the request for a repetition was not surprising. All in all, a concert to be remembered.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Mendelssohn. Overture, "Sea-Calm and Prosperous Voyage."
Strube. Symphonic Poem, "Longing," first time. Viola, Mr. E. Ferir.
Chopin. Concerto No. 2, for Pianoforte, in F Minor.
Soloist, Mr. Ignaz Paderewski.
Caesar Franck. Symphtony in D Minor. By request.

The concert of last Saturday was passionate in character, even to the verge of strenuousness. Mendelssohn's overture, if not wildly turbulent, presented a voyage of some animation and spirit, with enough of drum and trumpet in its finale to make it suggest a triumphal entry by Rodzhestvensky into Kamranh Bay. The Strube number added its share of emotional and harmonic excitement, and if Chopin's tonal poetry was of a quieter nature, the insistent power of the final symphony brought a stirring close to the evening.

Mendelssohn's work suggests the inevitable comparison with his great "Hebrides" overture, and its wonderful rhythmic echo of the waves. Beside it the "Sea-Calm" seems faded and conventional, but the work is not without instrumental touches that must have been effective in their day. The sustained high notes on the violin still depict a solitude scarcely less impressive than that of Borodin's Steppes or the Campagna of Richard Strauss; and the prosperous voyage, though lacking the wind-machine and other accessories of modern realism, gave an adequate picture of fair weather and smooth sailing.

Mr. Gustave Strube's symphonic poem, like his previous works, showed him as a member of the ultra-modern school, and a seeker after strange harmonies. In this number, however, he did not allow the search after novelty to draw him away from the beautiful, and the composition contained many passages of effective charm. The orchestration, too, deserves praise for its mastery of delicate effects. Mr. Ferir's solo work was altogether commendable, and fully up to the high standard that his hearers always expect from him.

In discussing this work and its school, the reviewer may well hesitate before expressing any adverse opinion. Over a century ago, Benjamin Franklin, in his autobiography, lamented the discords that were creeping into music, and pleaded for the simpler style of his youth. Beethoven, in his day, was looked upon as a wild radical, and Wagner shared the same fate half a century later.

It may be that those men of today who seem merely ingenious harmony-jugglers will at some time be looked on as the pioneers of a future school. To the present writer, however, their work seems incoherent. The endless melodic recitative of Wagner is not the strongest point in his works, but it allowed him to develop the full richness of his harmonic effects. Now, however, the radicals go still further, and give us disjointed harmonies, and create a musical kaleidoscope of jumbled chords, apparently without any underlying plan.

It was natural that the lion's share of the evening's applause should be devoted to the great and only Paderewski. Once again he proved himself the incomparable artist that we have known of old, and the enthusiasm over his performance included shouts and handkerchief-wavings that seemed strange in the staid symphonic precincts. De Pachmann may at times equal him in emotional power, Busoni may sometimes surpass him in intellectual force, but he remains the broadest and most versatile of all the living pianists.

His rendering of the Chopin concerto was a delight from first note to last, and resulted in the forcing of an encore, in defiance of symphonic precedent. The beautiful E-major Etude and dainty C-sharp minor valse continued the Chopin mood, while the brilliant "Erl-King" transcription won further laurels. It is easy to predict that the coming pension fund concert, April 30, with Paderewski as soloist, will prove a complete success.

Franck's great symphony lost nothing in power and earnestness because of its repetition from a recent concert. It is massive in its solidity, possessing an enduring strength that his pupils have as yet failed to equal, in spite of their many efforts. Its themes are clear and well-marked, its development logical, its harmonies sane and unforced, and its interest well sustained until the final climax. It certainly proves that Franck must not be held responsible for the unclear work of some of his followers.

The next programme includes Schumann's second symphony, the "Don Juan" of Strauss, the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," and a Fantasie by Guy-Ropartz as the inevitable novelty.

Arthur Elson.

The Boston Post

The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

PADEREWSKI THE SOLOIST

Mr. Paderewski was the soloist at the Symphony concert last evening and the programme was as follows:

Overture, "Sea-Calm and Prosperous Voyage".....Mendelssohn
Symphonic poem, "Longing".....Strube
Concerto for pianoforte No. 2.....Chopin
Symphony, D minor.....Franck

The novelty of the evening was Gustav Strube's symphonic poem, "Longing," for viola and orchestra, dedicated to E. Ferir, who played the solo instrument on this occasion. The work was suggested by William Lyman Johnson's poem and the performance last evening was the first.

Mr. Strube's thoughts in this latest effort are not quite so vague and meaningless as in some of his previous works, and the poem is pictured with considerable imaginative ideas which are very effectively scored. Mr. Ferir played the solo viola part admirably, and the work was well received. Whether it would gain in interest with another hearing may, however, be questioned.

Mendelssohn's early overture proved pleasing to the audience and it was superbly performed. The great symphony of Cesar Franck improves upon acquaintance, and it would have been even better appreciated if it had not come at the end of a concert already over-extended as to time.

Mr. Paderewski was naturally the "feature" for a large portion of the audience. In the Chopin F minor concerto he indulged in less pounding than at his recent recital, and for this relief one is truly grateful. The interpretation of this most poetic of concertos was at times admirable, with other moments that were marked by coarseness of tone and more or less exaggeration. The first movement proved the best on the average. The pianist received his usual ovations and the "extras" included the Chopin study in E, from Op. 10; the C sharp minor waltz, Op. 64, No. 2, and Liszt's transcription of Schubert's "Erl King." The Chopin numbers were enjoyable, but the last number was a piece of noise to "catch the gallery," as it were, but in no sense an artistic effort.

The last rehearsal and concert of the present season will be this coming week.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, APRIL 23, 1905.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The appearance of Paderewski at the Symphony concert was marked by scenes of enthusiasm on the part of the auditors exceeding that shown at any previous time this season. The program comprised Chopin's second pianoforte concerto, with Paderewski as soloist; Mendelssohn's overture, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage"; Strube's symphonic poem, "Longing," for viola and orchestra, E. Fevir soloist, and Cesar Franck's D minor symphony. Mr Strube's work was dedicated to Mr Fevir and was suggested by a poem by Mr William Lyman Johnson of this city. The music expresses the calm and rest of the twilight hours and nightfall, free from the din and clamor of the day. The flowing legato melodies given to the viola are very sweet and significant in their suggestions of the poetic subject, and the orchestral background is splendidly outlined and developed by the composer, whose skill in instrumentation is so well and favorably known to concert patrons. Mr Fevir played the viola part with great delicacy and beauty of tone. Mr Strube conducted this number and at the close he and Mr Fevir were greeted with very hearty tributes of applause.

It is almost useless to criticise Paderewski's performance, for, to use a current phrase, "the audience fairly went wild" over him. At the close of his playing he was obliged to return again and again to the platform, and finally, to still the tumult, added encore numbers, an unusual thing at a Symphony concert, and more journeying to the stage midst applause which continued until Mr Gericke took up the baton preparatory to beginning the Franck symphony. There was no trace of the "pounding" with which Paderewski has been charged this season. On the contrary, the interpretation was of wonderful beauty, impeccable in execution and exquisite in finish and tonal coloring. A superb performance in which the orchestra deserves to share in praise, especially for the work in the second movement in which occurs the charming accompaniment by muted strings.

The Mendelssohn overture was as delightfully restful in a musical way as one would wish and the peculiar and somewhat startling features of the Franck symphony were brought out vividly by the orchestra, both pieces being up to the usual standard of execution. It is doubtful though if any number on the program received its fair share of appreciation, for Paderewski appeared to be the magnet, all else was but secondary.

The Symphony season will close this week with the following program: Schumann's second symphony, a fantasy in D-major by Guy-Ropartz, "Don Juan," symphonic poem by Richard Strauss, and an excerpt from Wagner's opera, "Die Meistersinger."

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, APRIL 24, 1905

Symphony Hall: Symphony Orchestra

The Symphony concert of Saturday evening was in many ways a notable event, the occasion being distinguished by the production of a new work of consequence, by the repetition of César Franck's noble symphony, and by the presence of Mr. Paderewski, as soloist. This was the programme:

Mendelssohn: Overture, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage," Op. 27.
Strube: Symphonic Poem, "Longing," for Viola and Orchestra.
(First performance.)
Viola, Mr. E. Ferir.
Chopin: Concerto No. 2, in F minor, for Pianoforte and Orchestra, Op. 21.
César Franck: Symphony in D minor.
(By request.)

Mr. Strube's orchestral poem "Longing" was inspired by some verses of Mr. William Lyman Johnson, one stanza of which should be quoted:

Give me the twilight—calm and rest,
When fading day has hushed its crimson fires;
Give me the twilight—calm and peace,
That quiets my intolerable hope and longing.
Give me the peace when purple—priested eve
Hushes, with incensed benediction,
The clamor, din and gossip of the day,
And gathering dews come like a mist of slumber
Upon the fevered forehead of the staring day.
Give me the holy and heart—resting peace
Of moonlight on a field of lilies,
And Jesus walking in their midst.

Mr. Strube's music sympathetically suggests the spirit of the poem. Written in the idiom of modern French composers, it none the less seems natural and facile, free from the sense of effort that surrounds the attempts of most non-Gallic writers, who try to be like Debussy and Vincent d'Indy. Mr. Strube, on the contrary, has made this style his own. He remains individual, however, for, above all else, he is sincere, and sincerity is bound always to result in individuality. This latest composition of Mr. Strube's has more in its favor than a manifest sincerity; it is also genuinely poetic. In its pages there is expressed a strong feeling for the quiet and mystery of night. As programme music this piece by Mr. Strube is highly successful; without more of a programme than the mere title, it would still make an appeal, for it is melodious, imaginative, beautiful in color and atmospheric. The exquisite use of the viola makes one wonder that this instrument should be so neglected for solo work. The viola part was very beautifully played by Mr. Ferir, a rare artist, and the orchestra, under the composer's direction, gave a very beautiful performance of the new poem. Both composer and performers were heartily applauded.

And then came Mr. Paderewski, who played the Chopin F minor concerto wonderfully, as only he himself can play, when he chooses to take sufficient pains. With only very occasional blemishes of harsh tone, Mr. Paderewski's performance will long be remembered as standard-setting in pianoforte playing, so rhythmical was it, so remarkable for song, so varied in color, so warmly emotional and so poetic. After the concerto the applause would come to no end, and at last Mr. Paderewski sat himself down to the instrument and played, before he was allowed to leave, three encores—a Chopin study, the Chopin C-sharp minor waltz and a version of the "Erl King." In these solo pieces Mr. Paderewski's art was of a less exalted quality than was that shown in the concerto, over-sentimentality and distorted rhythm coming to the fore. The "Erl King," however, was effective.

All musical people must have been pleased with the opportunity to hear the César Franck symphony again, before they had had time to forget its wondrous beauties. If the symphony seemed, two months ago, almost more beautiful than one has a right to expect of the product of a merely mortal brain, last Saturday it seemed a hundred fold greater than it did before. With such music it is necessary to become thoroughly acquainted, if not familiar, and the quickest way to acquaintance lies through two successive performances with a short interval between them. The reading of the symphony on Saturday, in sympathy, in finesse and in lofty grandeur, surpassed anything Mr. Gericke has done here this season. Both for his splendid performance and for his wise move in bringing out the symphony once more is he to be warmly thanked and congratulated.

At the coming concert, the last of the season, there is to be another repetition, Richard Strauss's "Don Juan" coming to a second hearing this season. The programme will be as follows: Schumann, Symphony No. 2, in C major; Guy-Ropartz, Fantasy in D major, first time; Richard Strauss, symphonic poem, "Don Juan," by request; Wagner, Vorspiel to "Die Meistersinger."

R. R. G.

[88]

BLANK PAGE

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

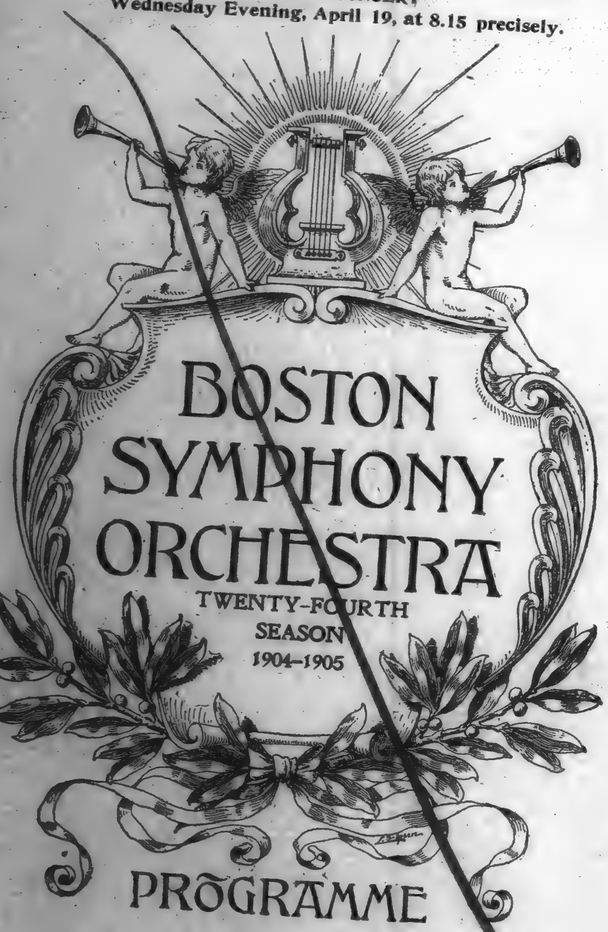
- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

Academy of Music . . . Northampton

SMITH COLLEGE, DEPARTMENT OF MUSIC

EIGHTH CONCERT

Wednesday Evening, April 19, at 8.15 precisely.



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON

1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

IX. CONCERT.

[Last of the Season.]

THURSDAY, APRIL 27, AT 7.45, P. M.

Programme.

MENDELSSOHN, OVERTURE, "Sea-Calm and Prosperous Voyage,"

CHOPIN, CONCERTO in E minor, for PIANOFORTE and ORCHESTRA, op. 11.
I. Allegro maestoso.
II. Romance: Larghetto.
III. Rondo: Vivace.

BRAHMS, SYMPHONY No. 1, in C minor, op. 68.
I. Un poco sostenuto; Allegro.
II. Andante sostenuto.
III. Un poco allegretto e grazioso. L'istesso tempo.
IV. Adagio; Allegro non troppo, ma con brio.

Soloist:

Mme. ANTOINETTE SZUMOWSKA.

The Pianoforte is a Mason and Hamlin.

[90]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

Academy of Music . . . Northampton

SMITH COLLEGE, DEPARTMENT OF MUSIC

EIGHTH CONCERT

Wednesday Evening, April 19, at 8.15 precisely.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON

1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

IX. CONCERT.

[Last of the Season.]

THURSDAY, APRIL 27, AT 7.45, P. M.

Programme.

MENDELSSOHN. OVERTURE, "Sea-Calm and Prosperous Voyage,"

CHOPIN. CONCERTO in E minor, for PIANOFORTE and ORCHESTRA, op. 11.
I. Allegro maestoso.
II. Romance: Larghetto.
III. Rondo: Vivace.

BRAHMS. SYMPHONY No. 1, in C minor, op. 68.
I. Un poco sostenuto; Allegro.
II. Andante sostenuto.
III. Un poco allegretto e grazioso. L'istesso tempo.
IV. Adagio; Allegro non troppo, ma con brio.

Soloist:

Mme. ANTOINETTE SZUMOWSKA.

The Pianoforte is a Mason and Hamlin.

[96]

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

VIII. CONCERT.

THURSDAY, APRIL 6, AT 7.45, P. M.

Programme.

BEETHOVEN, OVERTURE to "Leonore" No. 3, op. 72.

L. SPOHR, CONCERTO for VIOLIN, in D minor, No. 9.
I. Allegro.
II. Adagio.
III. Allegretto.

WAGNER, INTRODUCTION to Act III. of "Lohengrin."

TSCHAIKOWSKY, SYMPHONY No. 6, "Pathetic," in B minor, op. 74.
I. Adagio: Allegro non troppo.
II. Allegro con grazia.
III. Allegro molto vivace.
IV. Finale: Adagio lamentoso.

Soloist:

Professor WILLY HESS.

Ninth and last concert of the season Thursday, April 27.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

Court Square Theatre . . . Springfield

Monday Evening, March 27, at 8.15 precisely.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. 2 F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

VIII CONCERT.

THURSDAY, APRIL 6, AT 7.15 P.M.

Programme.

BEETHOVEN, OVERTURE to "Leonore" No. 3, op. 72.

L. SPOHR, CONCERTO for VIOLIN, in D minor, No. 9.
I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Allegro

WAGNER, INTRODUCTION to Act III of "Lohengrin."

TSCHAIKOWSKY, SYMPHONY No. 6, "Pathetic," in B minor, op. 74.
I. Adagio; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegro con grazia
III. Allegro molto vivace
IV. Finale. Adagio lamentoso

Soloist:

Professor WILLY HESS

Ninth and last concert of the season Thursday, April 27.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

Court Square Theatre . . . Springfield

Monday Evening, March 27, at 8.15 precisely.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON 1904–1905

PROGRAMME

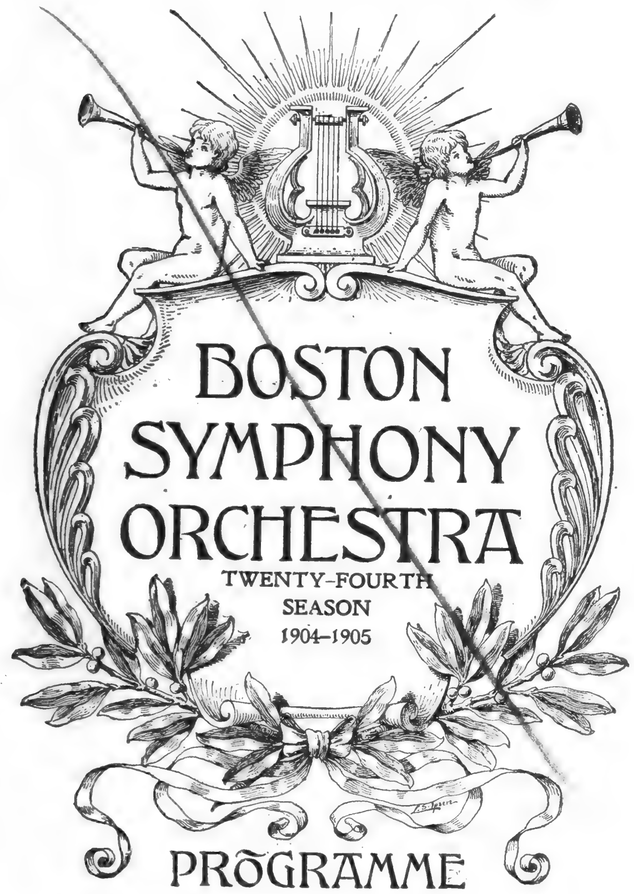
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. 2 F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

[91]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

WOOLSEY HALL . . . NEW HAVEN

Monday Evening, March 20, at 8.15 precisely

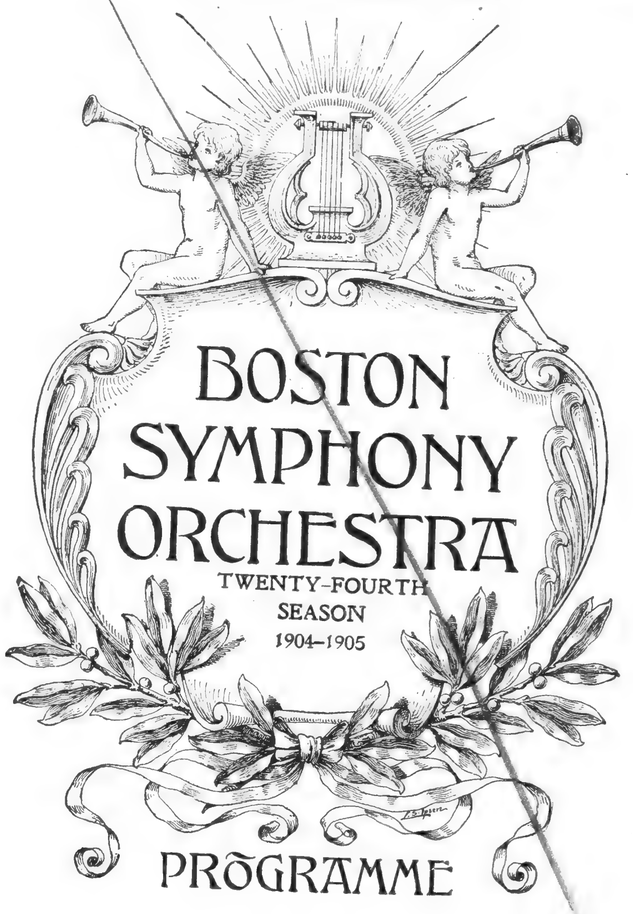


C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

FOOT-GUARD HALL . . . HARTFORD

Tuesday Evening, March 21, at 8.15



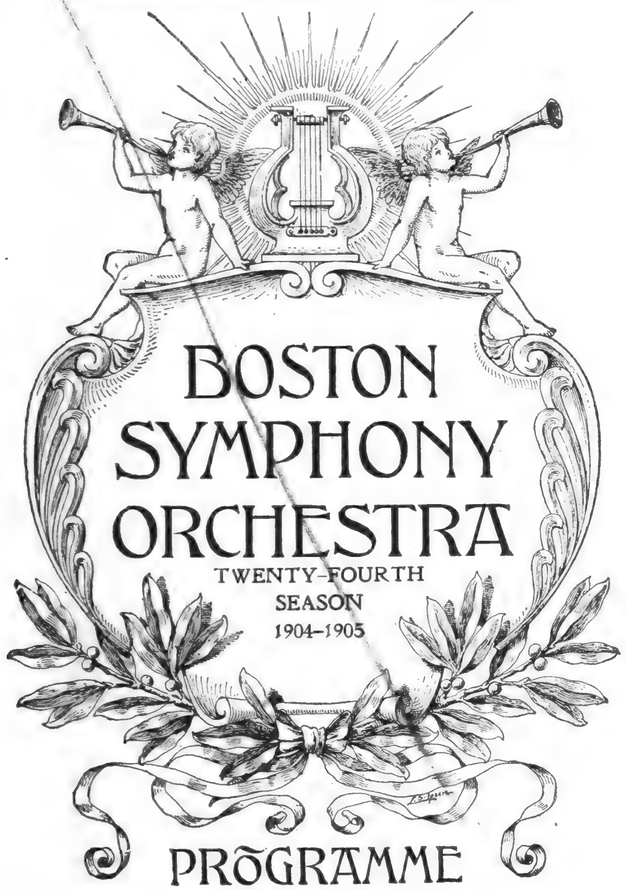
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. 3 F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

[24]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

CARNEGIE HALL . . . NEW YORK

Thursday Evening, March 16, at 8.15 precisely.
Saturday Afternoon, March 18, at 2.30 precisely.



PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. 5 F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

Tickets at Carnegie Hall.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

BAPTIST TEMPLE . . . BROOKLYN

Friday Evening, March 17, at 8.25 precisely.

Under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. 5 F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Wednesday Evening, March 15, at 8.15 precisely.

SECOND SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH
SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

5

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE LYRIC . . . . . BALTIMORE

Tuesday Evening, March 14, at 8.15 precisely.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH
SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

5

Tickets, with reserved seats, on sale at Albaugh's,
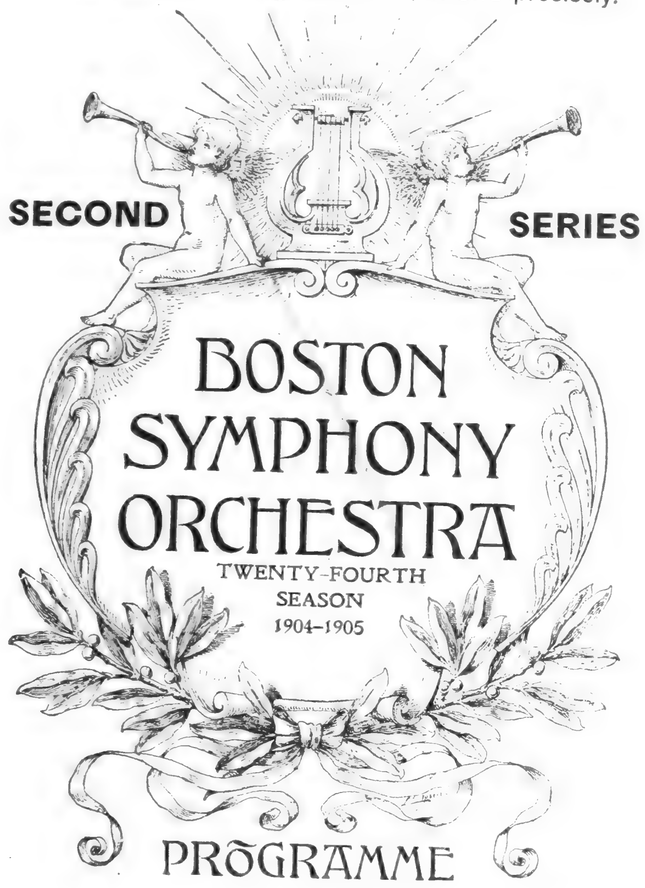
15 North Charles Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Wednesday Evening, March 15, at 8.15 precisely.



C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

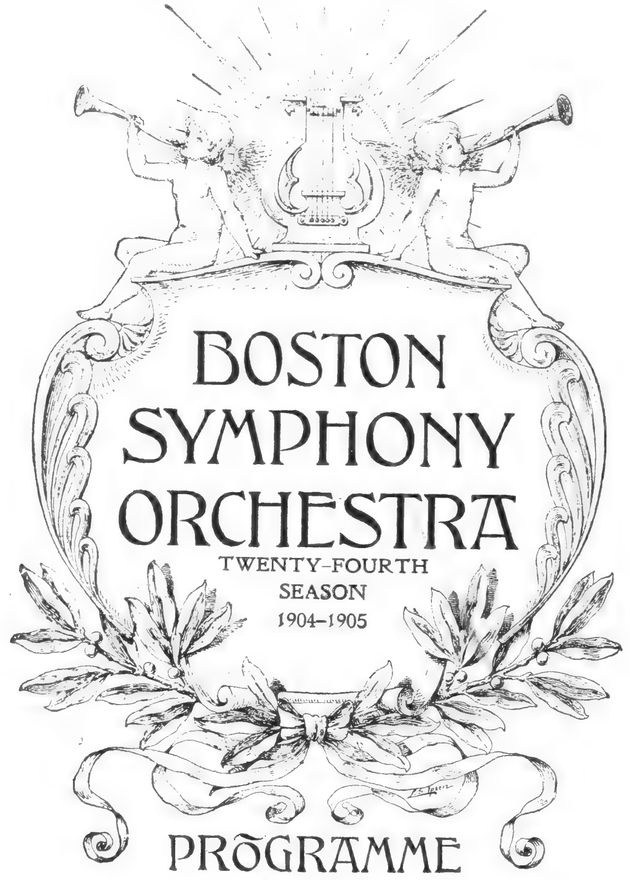
5

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE LYRIC . . . . . BALTIMORE

Tuesday Evening, March 14, at 8.15 precisely.



C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

5

Tickets, with reserved seats, on sale at Albaugh's,
15 North Charles Street.

[94]

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

VII. CONCERT.

THURSDAY, MARCH 9, AT 7.45. P. M.

Programme.

SINDING,	"EPISODES CHEVALERESQUES," SUITE in F major for ORCHESTRA, op. 35. I. Tempo di marcia. II. Andante funebre. III. Finale. Allegro moderato. (First time at these concerts.)
HAYDN,	ARIA, from "The Seasons."
WEBER,	"Invitation to Dance."
	SONGS with PIANOFORTE.
a) SCHUBERT,	"AUFENTHALT."
b) LEONCAVALLO,	"NUIT EN DÉCEMBRE."
c) MRS. H. H. A. BEACH,	"JUNI."
RIMSKY-KORSAKOFF,	SYMPHONIC SUITE, "Scherezade," op. 35, (After "The Thousand Nights and a Night.") I. The Sea and Sinbad's Ship. II. The Story of the Kalander Prince. III. The Young Prince and the Young Princess. IV. Festival at Bagdad. The Sea. The Ship goes to pieces against a Rock surmounted by a brouze warrior. Conclusion.

Soloist:

Mme. EVTA KILESKI-BRADBURY.

The Pianoforte is a Steinway.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Monday Evening, March 13, at 8.15 precisely.

FIRST SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON 1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

5

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street.

[95]

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

VII. CONCERT.

THURSDAY, MARCH 9, AT 7.45 P. M.

Programme.

SINDING. "EPISODES CHEVALERESQUES," SUITE in F major for ORCHESTRA, op. 35.
I. Tempo di marcia.
II. Andante funebre.
III. Finale: Allegro moderato.
(First time at these concerts.)

HAYDN. ARIA, from "The Seasons."

WEBER. "Invitation to Dance."

SONGS with PIANOFORTE.

a) SCHUBERT. "AUFENTHALT."
b) LEONCAVALLO. "NUIT EN DÉCEMBRE."
c) MRS. H. H. A. BEACH. "JUNI."

RIMSKY-KORSAKOFF. SYMPHONIC SUITE, "Scheherazade," op. 35.
(After "The Thousand Nights and a Night.")
I. The Sea and Sinbad's Ship. II. The Story of the Kalander Prince. III. The Young Prince and the Young Princess. IV. Festival at Bagdad. The Sea. The Ship goes to pieces against a Rock surmounted by a bronze warrior. Conclusion.

Soloist:

Mme. EVTA KILESKI-BRADBURY.

The Pianoforte is a Steinway.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Monday Evening, March 13, at 8.15 precisely.

FIRST SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON 1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

5

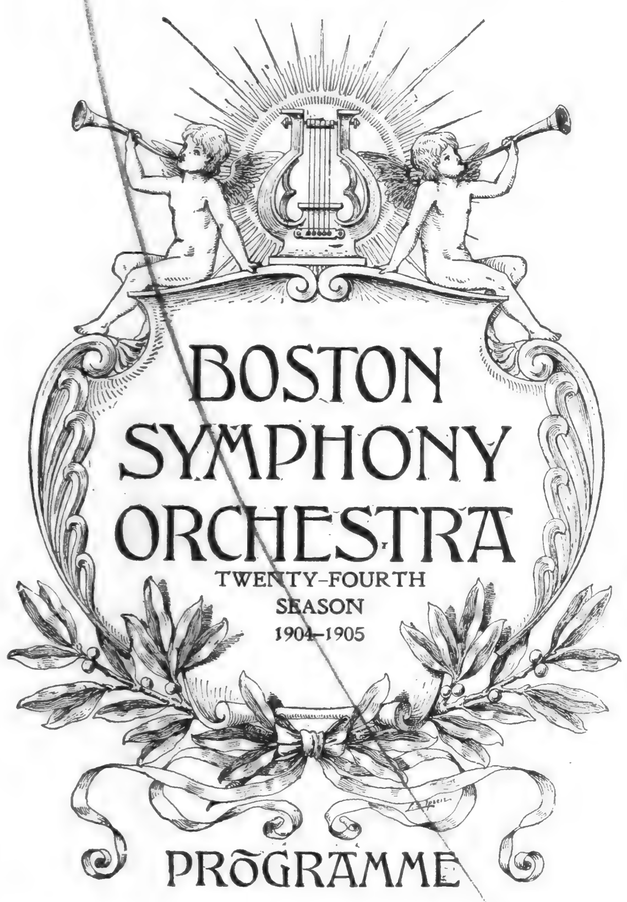
Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street.

[95]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

FOOT-GUARD HALL . . . HARTFORD

Monday Evening, January 16, at 8.15



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH
SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

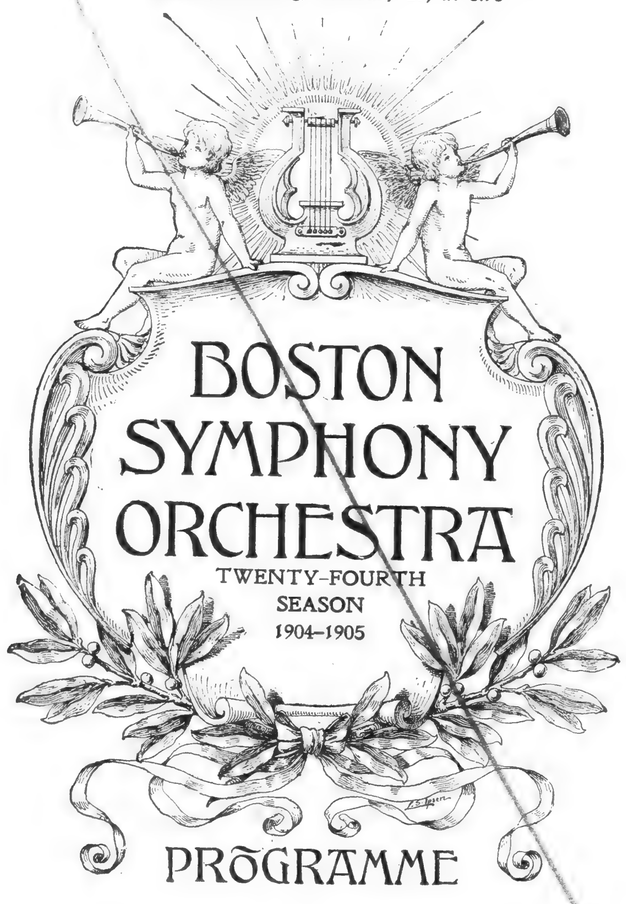
C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

HARMANUS BLEECKER HALL . . . ALBANY

Monday Evening, February 27, at 8.15



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH
SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

[96]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

BAPTIST TEMPLE . . . BROOKLYN

Friday Evening, February 17, at 8.25 precisely.

Under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

INFANTRY HALL . . . PROVIDENCE

Tuesday Evening, February 21, at 8.15.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

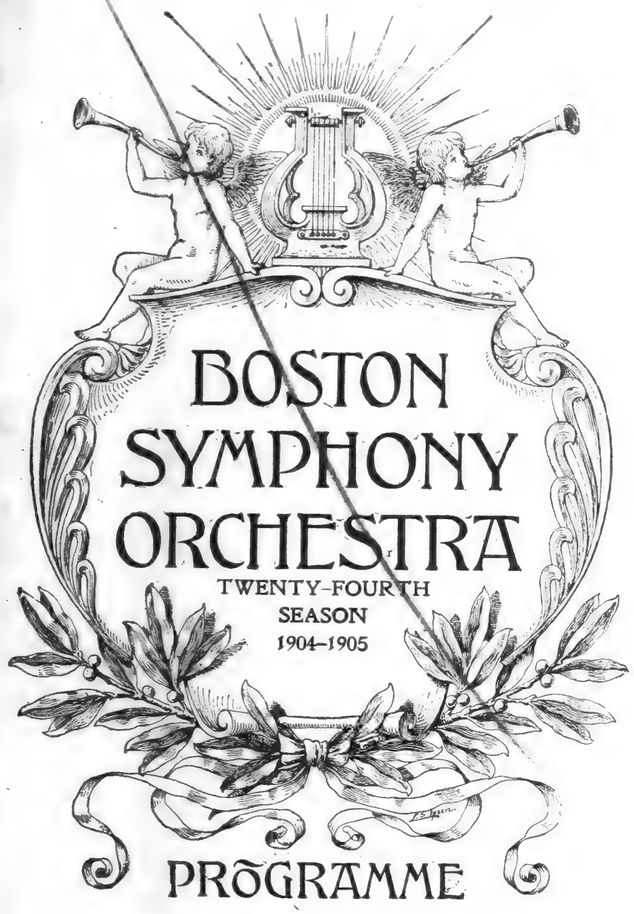
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

[97]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE LYRIC . . . . . BALTIMORE

Tuesday Evening, February 14, at 8.15 precisely.



C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

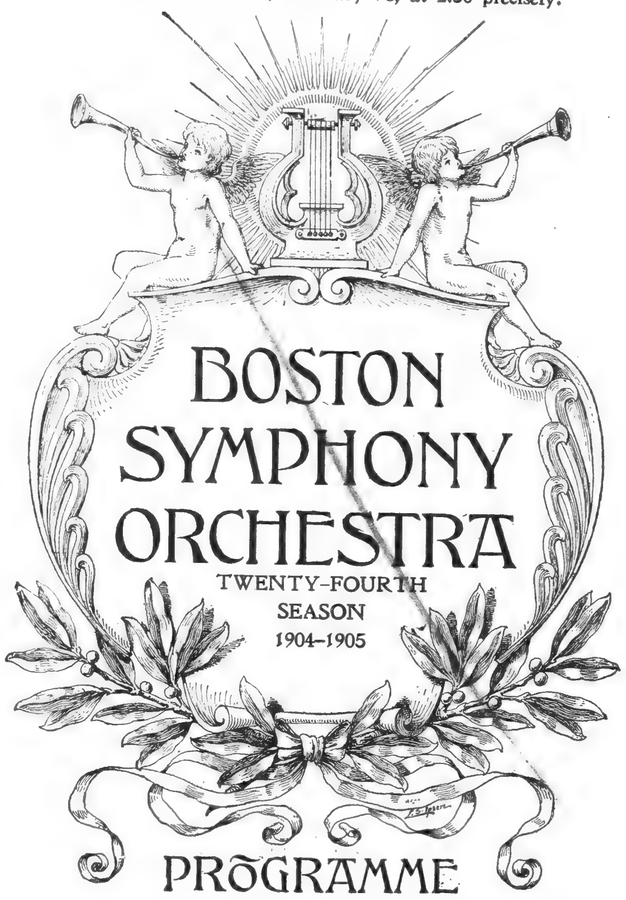
4

Tickets, with reserved seats, on sale at Albaugh's, 15 North Charles Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

CARNEGIE HALL . . . . NEW YORK

Thursday Evening, February 16, at 8.15 precisely.
Saturday Afternoon, February 18, at 2.30 precisely.



C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

4

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

Tickets at Carnegie Hall.

[78]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Monday Evening, February 13, at 8.15 precisely.

FIRST SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON 1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

4

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street.

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

V. CONCERT.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 26, AT 7.45, P. M.

Programme.

BRAHMS, SYMPHONY in F major No. 3, op. 90.
I. Allegro con brio.
II. Andante.
III. Poco Allegretto.
IV. Allegro.

RACHMANINOFF, CONCERTO for PIANOFORTE and ORCHESTRA, in F sharp minor, No. 1, op. 1.
I. Vivace, moderato, vivo, etc.
II. Andante cantabile.
III. Allegro scherzando; Andante espressivo; Allegro scherzando: maestoso: piu vivo.

DEBUSSY, PRELUDE to Stéphanie Mallarmé's Ellogue, "The Afternoon of a Faun."

GOLDMARK, OVERTURE, "Sappho."

Soloist:

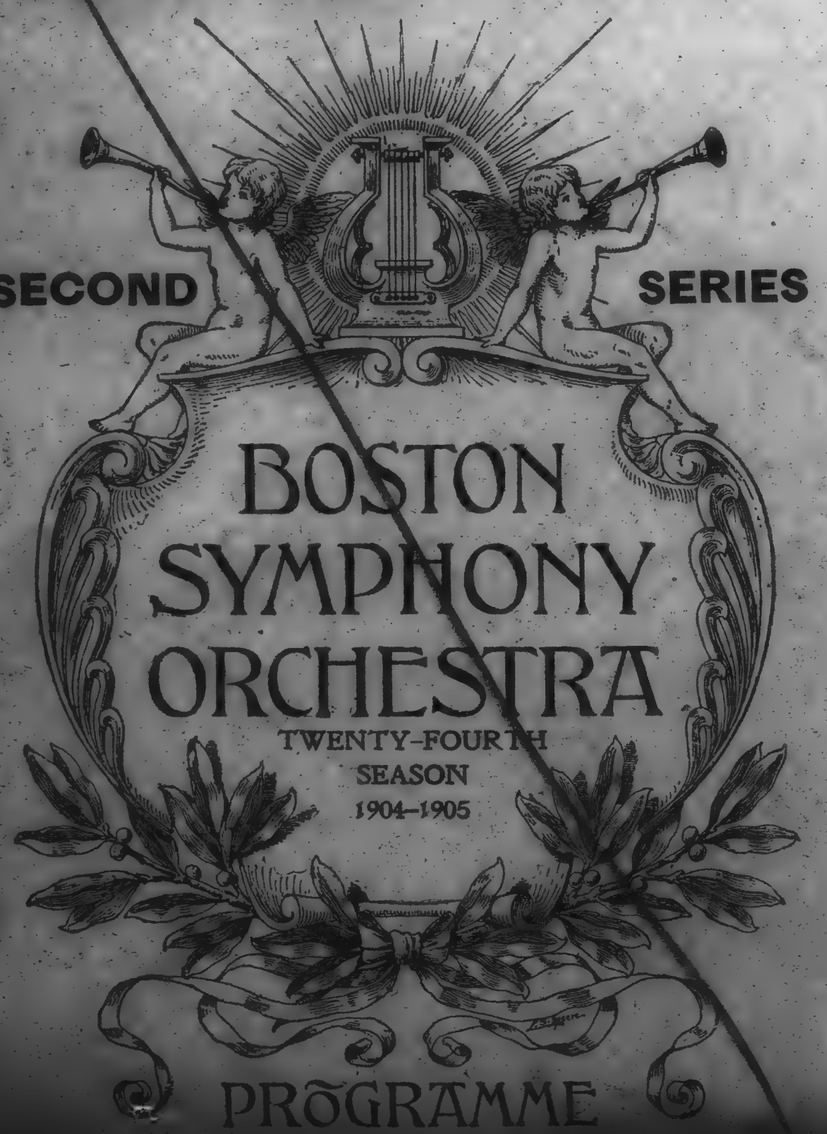
Mr. CARLO BUONAMICI.

The Pianoforte is a Steinway.

Sixth Concert, Thursday Evening, February 9.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Wednesday Evening, February 15, at 8.15 precisely.



SECOND SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON 1904–1905

PROGRAMME

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street.

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

VI. CONCERT.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, AT 7.45, P. M.

Programme.

DVOŘÁK, OVERTURE, "Carneval," op. 92.

WIENIAWSKI, CONCERTO in D minor, No. 2, for VIOLIN and ORCHESTRA, op. 22.
I. Allegro moderato.
II. Romance: Andante non troppo.
III. Allegro con fuoco; Allegro moderato (à la Zingara.)

BERLIOZ, SECOND MOVEMENT from FANTASTIC SYMPHONY, No. 1, in C major, op. 16a.
II. A BALL. Waltz: Allegro non troppo.

BEETHOVEN, SYMPHONY in C minor, No. 5, op. 67.
I. Allegro con brio.
II. Andante con moto.
III. Allegro: Trio.
IV. Allegro.

Soloist:

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Monday Evening, February 13, at 8.15 precisely.

FIRST SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

4

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street.

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

V. CONCERT.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 26, AT 7.45 P. M.

Programme.

BRAHMS, SYMPHONY in F major No. [illegible]
I. Allegro con brio.
II. Andante.
III. Poco Allegretto.
IV. Allegro.

RACHMANINOFF, CONCERTO for PIANOFOR[illegible] sharp minor, No. 1, op. 1.
I. Vivace moderato vivo, etc.
II. Andante cantabile.
III. Allegro scherzando. Andante scherzando. Maestoso. più [illegible]

DEBUSSY, PRELUDE to Stéphanie "Afternoon of a Faun."

GOLDMARK, OVERTURE, "Sappho."

Soloist:

Mr. CARLO BUONAMICI

The Pianoforte [illegible]

Sixth Concert, Thursday Evening, February [illegible]

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Wednesday Evening, February 15, at 8.15 precisely.

SECOND SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

4

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street.

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

VI. CONCERT.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, AT 7.45 P. M.

Programme.

DVOŘÁK, OVERTURE, "Carneva[illegible] Op. 92.

WIENIAWSKI, CONCERTO in D minor, No. 2, for VIOLIN and ORCHESTRA, op. 22.
I. Allegro moderato.
II. Romance: Andante non tr[illegible]
III. Allegro con fuoco: Allegro [illegible]

BERLIOZ, SECOND MOVEMENT from FANTASTIC SYMPHONY, No. 1, in C major, op. [illegible]
II. A BALL. Waltz: Allegro non [illegible]

BEETHOVEN, SYMPHONY in C minor, No. [illegible]
I. Allegro con brio.
II. Andante con moto.
III. Allegro: Trio.
IV. Allegro.

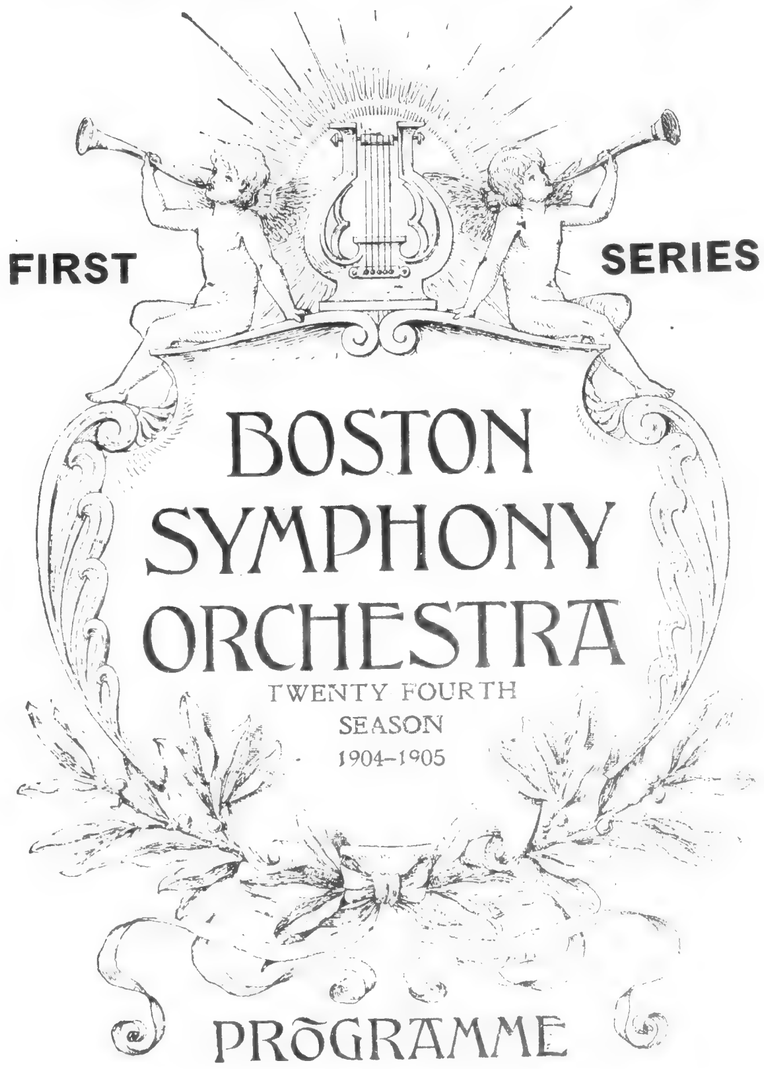
Soloist:

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Monday Evening, February 13, at 8.15 precisely,



FIRST SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY FOURTH
SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

4

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms
1115 Chestnut Street

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05

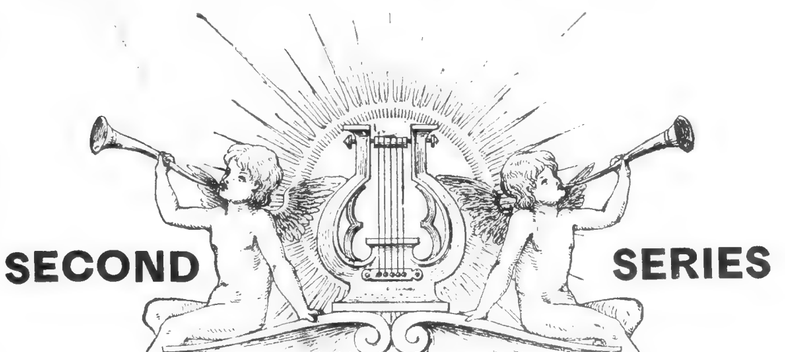
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

WILHELM GERICKE, Cond.

V. CONCERT.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Wednesday Evening, February 15, at 8.15 precisely.



SECOND SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH
SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

4

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street.

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

VI. CONCERT.

TUESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 21,

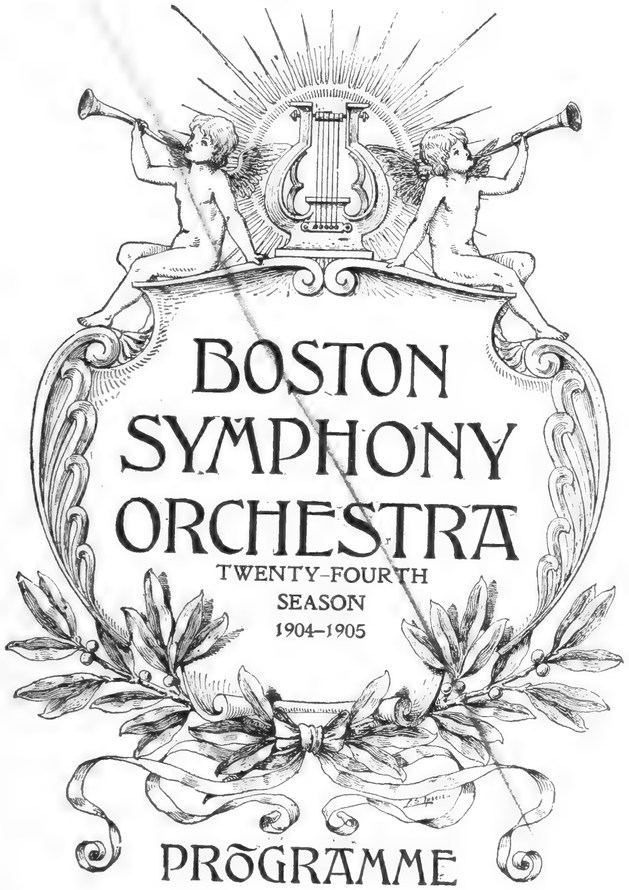
Programme.

[99]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

FOOT-GUARD HALL . . . HARTFORD

Monday Evening, January 16, at 8.15



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON 1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

Court Square Theatre . . . Springfield

Tuesday Evening, January 17, at 8.15 precisely.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON 1904–1905

PROGRAMME

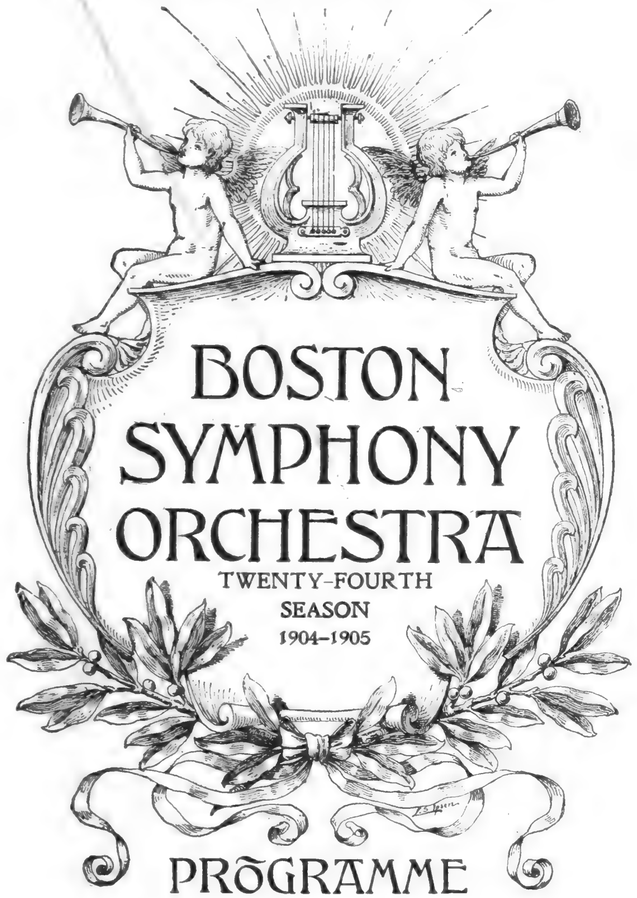
C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

CARNEGIE HALL . . . NEW YORK

Thursday Evening, January 12, at 8.15 precisely.
Saturday Afternoon, January 14, at 2.30 precisely.



C. A. ELLIS, Manager. 3 F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

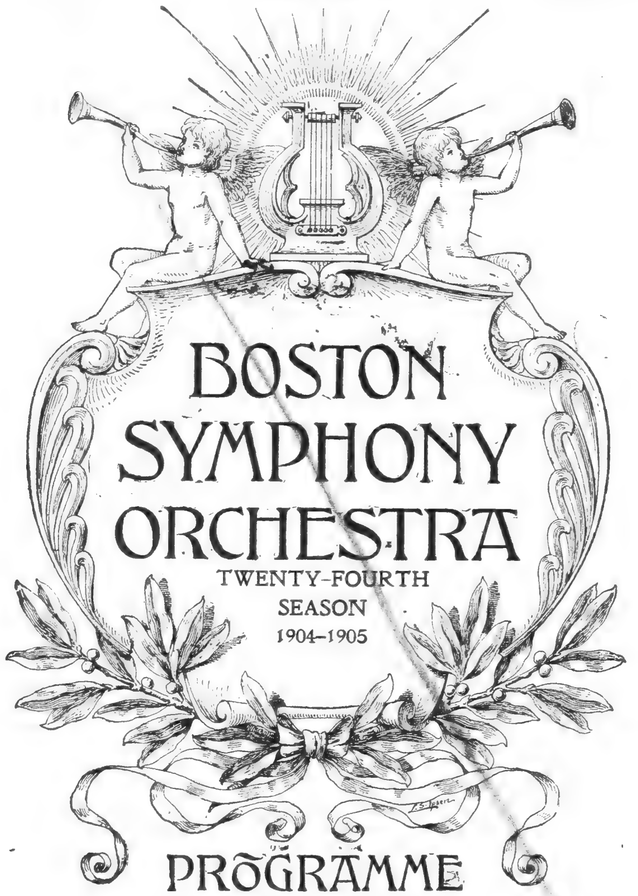
Tickets at Carnegie Hall.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

BAPTIST TEMPLE . . . BROOKLYN

Friday Evening, January 13, at 8.25 precisely.

Under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn.

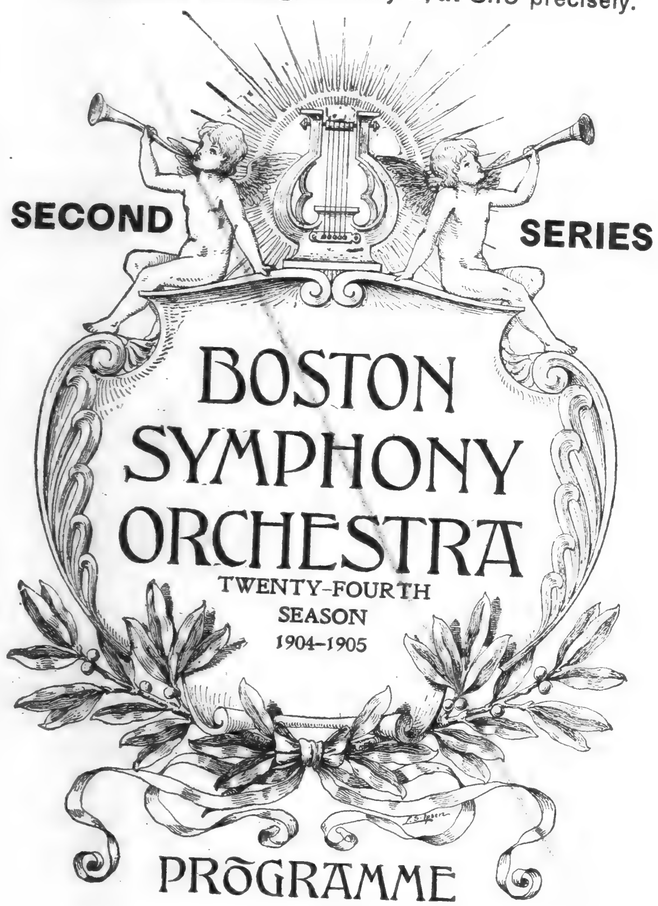


C. A. ELLIS, Manager. 3 F. R COMEE, Asst. Manager.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Wednesday Evening, January 11, at 8.15 precisely.



SECOND SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

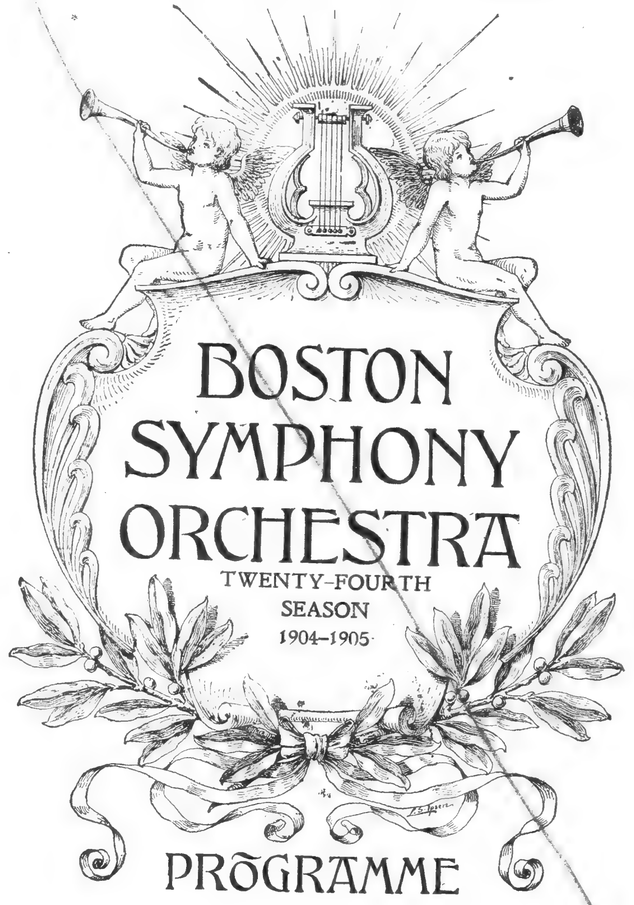
3

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE LYRIC . . . . . BALTIMORE

Tuesday Evening, January 10, at 8.15 precisely.



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

3

Tickets, with reserved seats, on sale at Albaugh's,
15 North Charles Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Wednesday Evening, January 11, at 8.15 precisely.

SECOND SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH
SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

3

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms
1115 Chestnut Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE LYRIC . . . . . BALTIMORE

Tuesday Evening, January 10, at 8.15 precisely.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH
SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

3

Tickets, with reserved seats, on sale at Albaugh's,
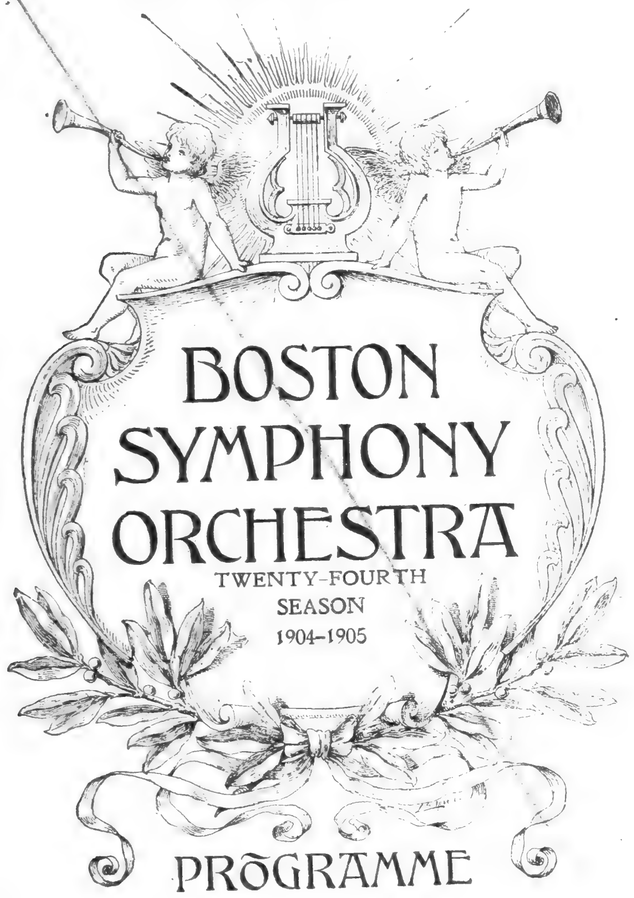
15 North Charles Street.

[601]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

INFANTRY HALL . . . PROVIDENCE

Tuesday Evening, January 3, at 8.15.



C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

2

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Monday Evening, January 9, at 8.15 precisely.

FIRST SERIES

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

3

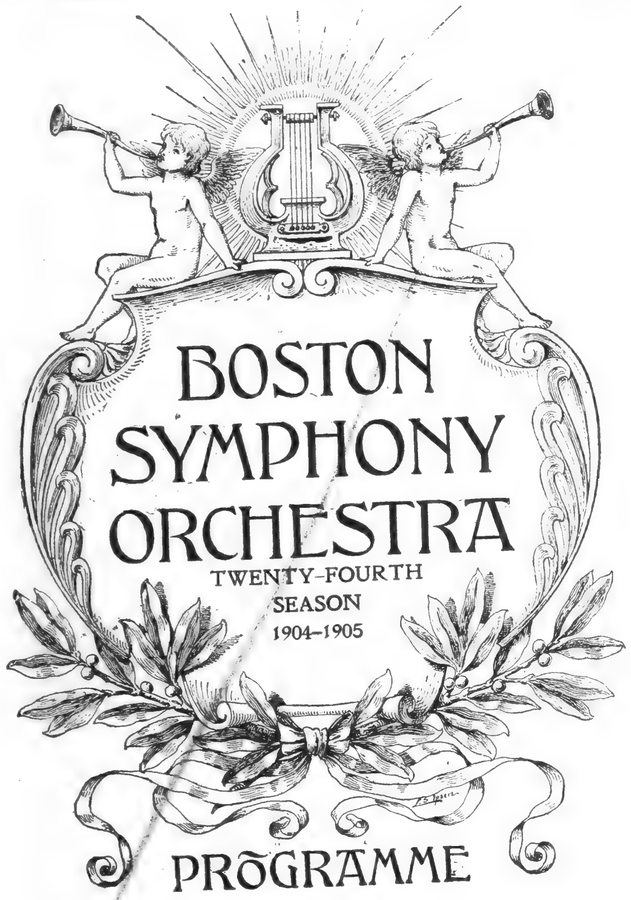
Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street.

[103]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

CITY HALL . . . . . PORTLAND

Tuesday Evening, December 20, at eight precisely



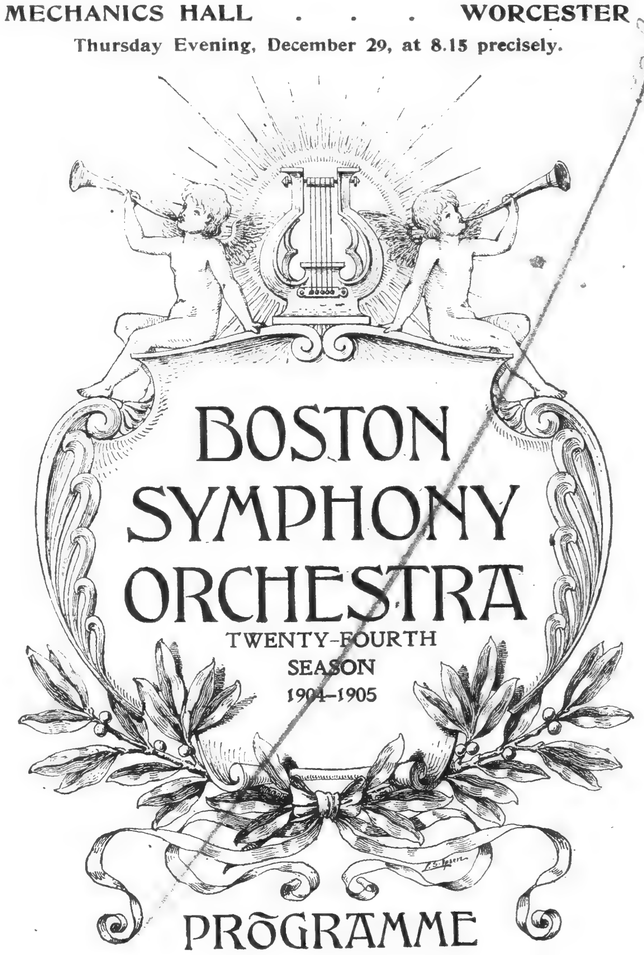
C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

MECHANICS HALL . . . WORCESTER

Thursday Evening, December 29, at 8.15 precisely.



C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

[10

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

IV. CONCERT.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 15, AT 7.45, P. M.

Programme.

HAYDN, SYMPHONY in E flat major, (B. & H. No. 1.)
I. Adagio: Allegro con spirito.
II. Andante.
III. Menuetto: Trio.
IV. Allegro con spirito.

MASSENET, ARIA from "Griselidis."

LISZT, LEGEND: "The Sermon of St. Francis of Assisi to the Birds," transcribed for ORCHESTRA by FELIX MOTTL.

WAGNER, WALTHER'S PREISLIED, from "Die Meistersinger."

SCHUMANN, SYMPHONY in E flat major, No. 3, Rhenish, op. 97
I. Lebhaft.
II. Scherzo: Sehr mässig.
III. Nicht schnell.
IV. Feierlich.
V. Lebhaft.

Soloist:

Mr. ELLISON VAN HOOSE.

Fifth Concert, Thursday Evening, January 5.

[501]

FIRST ANNUAL CONCERT

BY THE

MUSICAL CLUB

OF THE

DEPARTMENT OF MUSIC

HARVARD UNIVERSITY

MONDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 19, 1904, AT EIGHT,

IN THE FOGG LECTURE HALL, CAMBRIDGE.

Programme.

BRAHMS,	FIRST MOVEMENT from SONATA for PIANO and VIOLIN in A. op. 100. G. R. JONES, '05. A. W. LOCKE, '05.
a) BRAHMS,	DIE MAINACHT.
b) LASSEN,	DU MEINER SEELE SCHÖNSTER TRAUM.
c) CLAYTON JOHNS,	IF LOVE WERE NOT.
d) LEONCAVALLO,	PROLOGUE to "I. Pagliacci." JOHN S. CODMAN, '90.
a) PERCY LEE ATHERTON, '93,	ROMANZA in A flat. op. 24.
b) TSCHAIKOWSKY,	HUMORESKE in G. LEO MAYER, '05.
a) BACH,	PRELUDE and FUGUE in F minor.
b) BRAHMS,	RHAPSODIE in D minor. op. 79, No. 2.
c) CHOPIN,	IMPROMPTU in F sharp. op. 36.
d) CHOPIN,	BALLADE in A flat. op. 47. LELAND B. HALL, 05.
ARENSKY,	TRIO in D minor for PIANO, VIOLIN and 'CELLO. op. 32. G. R. JONES, '05. P. M. BROWN, '02. A. W. LOCKE, '05.

Tickets with reserved seats, One Dollar, are on sale at Sever's Book Store, Harvard Square.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

CARNEGIE HALL . . . NEW YORK

Thursday Evening, December 8, at 8.15 precisely.
Saturday Afternoon, December 10, at 2.30 precisely.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. 2 F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

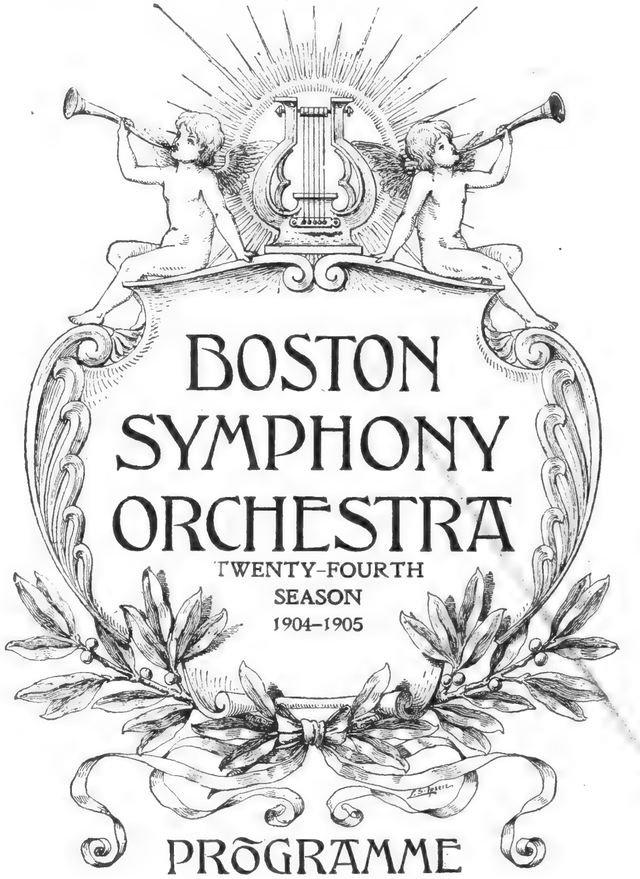
Tickets at Carnegie Hall.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

BAPTIST TEMPLE . . . BROOKLYN

Friday Evening, December 9, at 8.25 precisely.

Under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn.



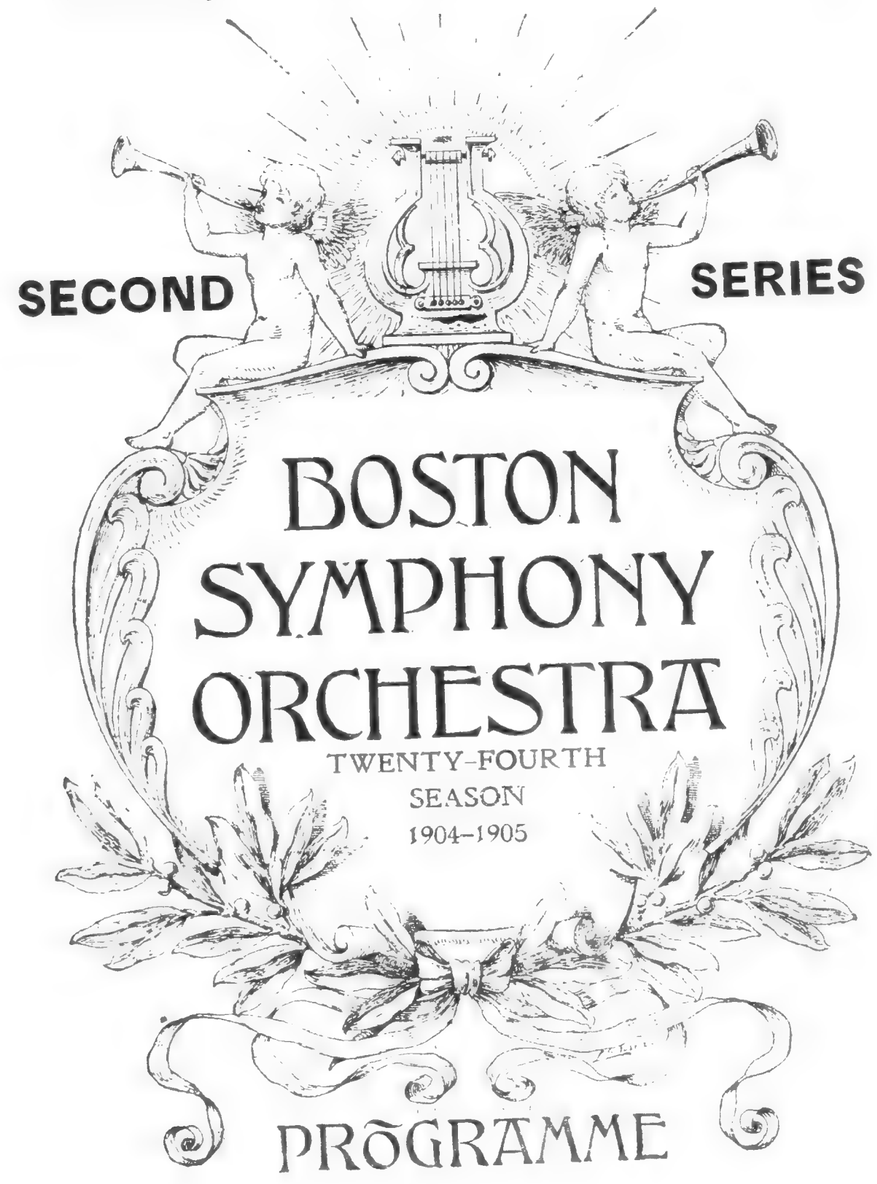
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. 2 F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

[30]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Wednesday Evening, December 7, at 8.15 precisely.



SECOND SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH
SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA
Monday Evening, December 5, at 8.15 precisely.

FIRST SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH
SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

2

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE LYRIC . . . . . BALTIMORE
Tuesday Evening, December 6, at 8.15 precisely.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH
SEASON
1904–1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

2

Tickets, with reserved seats, on sale at Albaugh's, 15 North Charles Street.

[801]

SYMPHONY HALL

Sunday Evening, November 27, at eight

Pension Fund Concert

BY THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

ASSISTED BY

De PACHMANN

WALLACE GOODRICH, Organist
and Vocal Artists to be announced

PROGRAM

1. OVERTURE, "Star of the North" . . . Meyerbeer
2. CONCERTO in E-flat major, for Piano and Orchestra, Liszt
3. HUNGARIAN SCENE (First time) . . Massenet
4. SELECTIONS FROM "HANSEL AND GRETEL," for Voices and Orchestra . . . Humperdinck
5. PIANO SOLO
6. TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, for Strings and Organ, Sgambati
7. CAPRICCIO ITALIEN . . . . Tschaikowsky

TICKETS, $2.00, $1.50, and $1.00, on sale at Symphony Hall, Monday, November 21.

Symphony Hall . Sunday Evening, November 27
at eight

Pension Fund Concert

BY THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

ASSISTED BY

De PACHMANN

MRS. GRACE B. WILLIAMS, Soprano
MRS. HELEN ALLEN HUNT, Contralto
WALLACE GOODRICH . Organist

PROGRAM

1. OVERTURE, "Star of the North" . . . . Meyerbeer
2. CONCERTO in E-flat major, for Piano and Orchestra, Liszt
3. HUNGARIAN SCENES . . . . . J. Massenet
   SECOND SUITE (First time).
   I. Allegro risoluto.
   II. Allegretto leggiero.
   III. Andantino, tr s calme.
   IV. Allegro risoluto; Andante molto sostenuto religioso; Allegro risoluto.
4. SELECTIONS FROM "HANSEL AND GRETEL," for Voices and Orchestra . . . . . Humperdinck
5. PIANO SOLO . . . . . Chopin
   a. Nocturne in F minor, Op. 55, No. 1
   b. Berceuse in D-flat, Op. 57
   c. Etude in A-flat, Op. 25, No. 1
6. TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, for Strings and Organ . Sgambati
   (First time.)
7. CAPRICCIO ITALIEN . . . . . Tschaikowsky

THE PIANO IS A BALDWIN

SYMPHONY HALL

Sunday Evening, November 27, at eight

Pension Fund Concert

BY THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

ASSISTED BY

De PACHMANN

WALLACE GOODRICH, Organist
and Vocal Artists to be announced

PROGRAM

1. OVERTURE, "Star of the North" . . . Meyerbeer
2. CONCERTO in E-flat major, for Piano and Orchestra, Liszt
3. HUNGARIAN SCENE (First time) . . Massenet
4. SELECTIONS FROM "HANSEL AND GRETEL," for Voices and Orchestra . . . Humperdinck
5. PIANO SOLO
6. TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, for Strings and Organ, Sgambati
7. CAPRICCIO ITALIEN . . . . Tschaikowsky

TICKETS, $2.00, $1.50, and $1.00, on sale at Symphony Hall, Monday, November 21.

Symphony Hall . Sunday Evening, November 27
at eight

Pension Fund Concert

BY THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

ASSISTED BY

De PACHMANN

MRS. GRACE B. WILLIAMS, Soprano
MRS. HELEN ALLEN HUNT, Contralto
WALLACE GOODRICH . Organist

PROGRAM

1. OVERTURE, "Star of the North" . . . . Meyerbeer
2. CONCERTO in E-flat major, for Piano and Orchestra. Liszt
3. HUNGARIAN SCENES . . . . . J. Massenet
   SECOND SUITE (First time).
   I. Allegro risoluto.
   II Allegretto leggiero.
   III. Andantino, tr s calme.
   IV. Allegro risoluto; Andante molto sostenuto religioso; Allegro risoluto.
4. SELECTIONS FROM "HANSEL AND GRETEL," for Voices and Orchestra . . . . . Humperdinck
5. PIANO SOLO . . . . . Chopin
   a. Nocturne in F minor, Op. 55, No. 1
   b. Berceuse in D-flat, Op. 57
   c. Etude in A-flat, Op. 25, No. 1
6. TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, for Strings and Organ . Sgambati
   (First time.)
7. CAPRICCIO ITALIEN . . . . . Tschaikowsky

THE PIANO IS A BALDWIN

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

INFANTRY HALL . . . PROVIDENCE

Tuesday Evening, November 22, at 8.15.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON
1904-1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

1

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

III. CONCERT.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 1, AT 7.45, P. M.

Programme.

WEBER, — OVERTURE to "Oberon."

VOLKMANN, — SERENADE No. 3, in D minor, op. 69.
Mr. RUDOLF KRASSELT, Solo Violoncello.

BACH, — THREE MOVEMENTS.
Orchestrated by W. GERICKE.

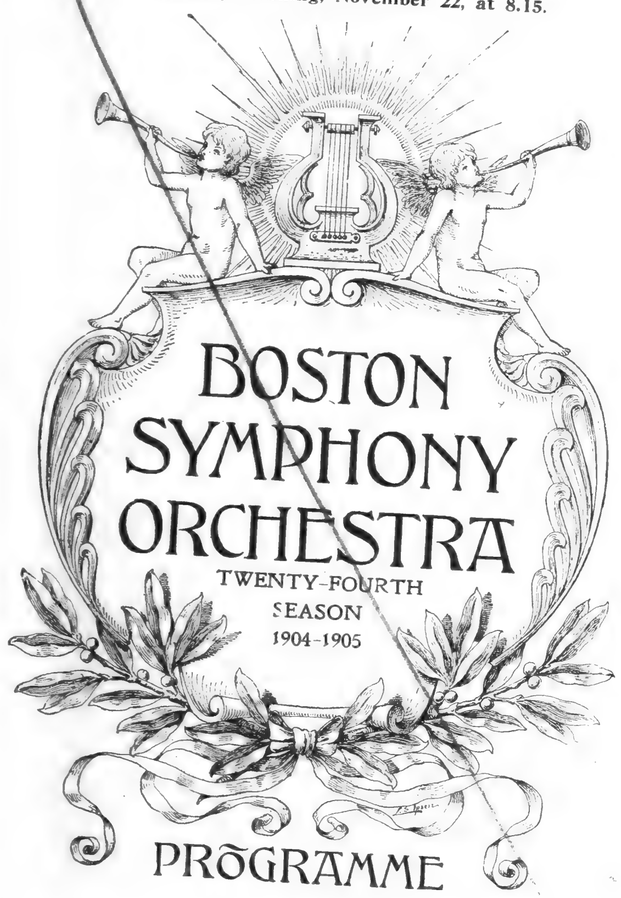
JOSEPH SUK, — SYMPHONY in E major, op. 14.
I. Allegro ma non troppo.
II. Adagio.
III. Allegro vivace.
IV. Allegro.

Fourth Concert, Thursday Evening, December 15.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

INFANTRY HALL . . . PROVIDENCE

Tuesday Evening, November 22, at 8.15.



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON
1904-1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. 1 F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

III. CONCERT.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 1, AT 7.45, P. M.

Programme.

WEBER. OVERTURE to "Oberon."

VOLKMANN. SERENADE No. 3, in D minor, op. 69.
Mr. RUDOLF KRASSELT, Solo Violoncello.

BACH. THREE MOVEMENTS.
Orchestrated by W. GERICKE.

JOSEPH SUK. SYMPHONY in E major, op. 14.
I. Allegro ma non troppo.
II. Adagio.
III. Allegro vivace.
IV. Allegro.

Fourth Concert, Thursday Evening, December 15.

[10]

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

II. CONCERT.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, AT 7.45, P. M.

Programme.

BEETHOVEN.	SYMPHONY No. 4, in B flat major, op. 60. I. Adagio Allegro vivace. II. Adagio. III. Allegro vivace Trio: Un poco meno allegro. IV. Finale: Allegro ma non troppo.
SAINT-SAËNS.	CONCERTO for PIANOFORTE, No. 2, in G minor, op. 22. I. Andante sostenuto. II. Allegretto scherzando. III. Presto.
DUKAS.	SCHERZO, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." (After a ballad by Goethe.)
WAGNER.	OVERTURE to "Tannhaeuser."

Soloist:

Mr. LOUIS BACHNER.

The Pianoforte is a Mason and Hamlin.

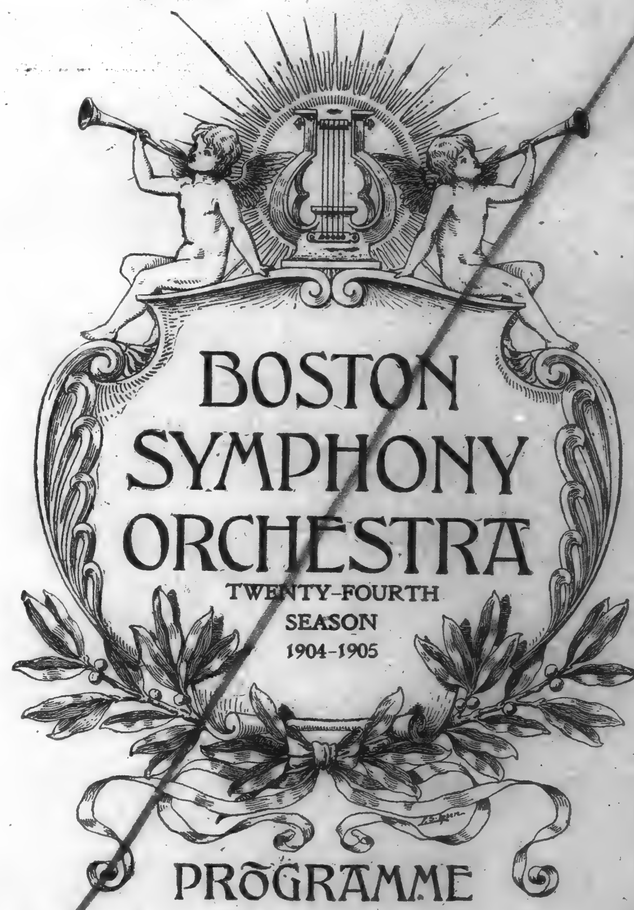
Third Concert, Thursday Evening, December 1.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

R. L. Flanders

MUSIC HALL . . . . . TROY

Monday Evening, November 14, at 8.15.



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON 1904-1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

WILHELM GERICKE, Conducter.

II. CONCERT.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, AT 7.45, P. M.

Programme.

BEETHOVEN. SYMPHONY No. 4, in B flat major, op. 60
I. Adagio; Allegro vivace.
II. Adagio.
III. Allegro vivace. Trio. Un poco meno Allegro.
IV. Finale: Allegro ma non troppo.

SAINT-SAËNS. CONCERTO for PIANOFORTE, No. 2, in C minor, op. 22.
I. Andante sostenuto.
II. Allegretto scherzando.
III. Presto.

DUKAS. SCHERZO, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice."
(After a ballad by Goethe.)

WAGNER. OVERTURE to "Tannhaeuser."

Soloist:

Mr. LOUIS BACHNER.

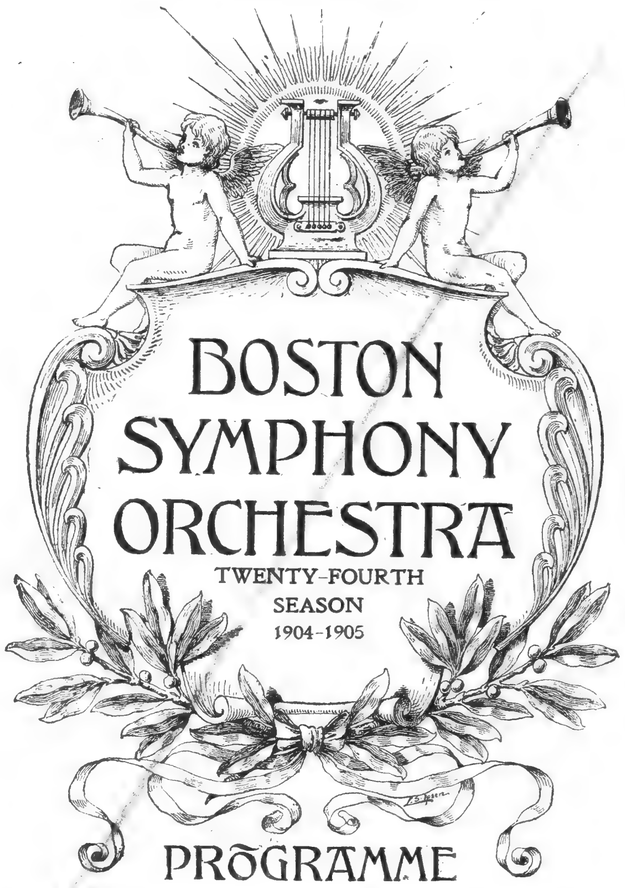
The Pianoforte is a Mason and Hamlin.

Third Concert, Thursday Evening, December 1

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

MUSIC HALL . . . . . TROY

Monday Evening, November 14, at 8.15.



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON 1904-1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

CARNEGIE HALL . . . NEW YORK

Thursday Evening, November 3, at 8.15 precisely.
Saturday Afternoon, November 5, at 2.30 precisely.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

1

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

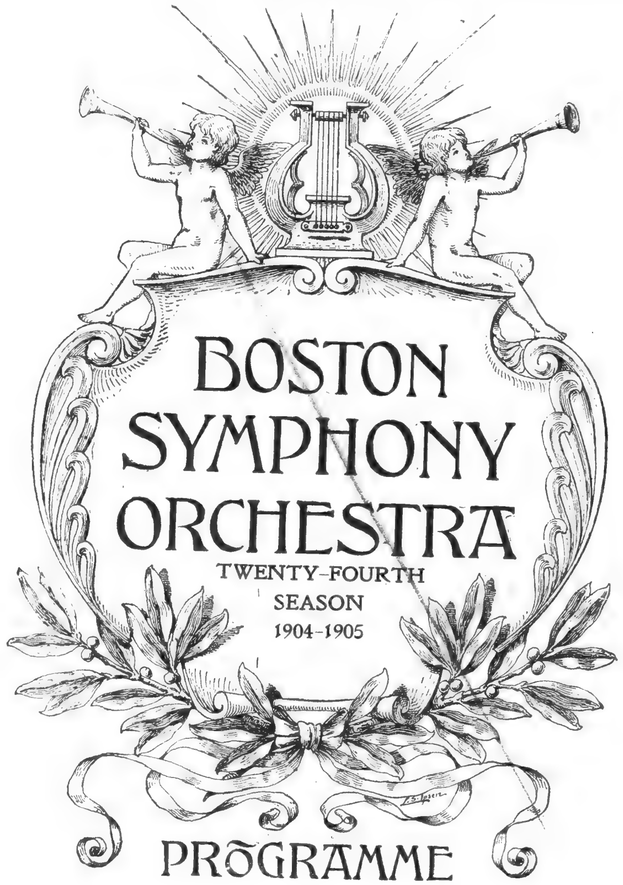
Tickets at Carnegie Hall.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

BAPTIST TEMPLE . . . BROOKLYN

Friday Evening, November 4, at 8.25 precisely.

Under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn.



C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

1

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

[12]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE LYRIC . . . . . BALTIMORE

Tuesday Evening, November 1, at 8.15 precisely.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH
SEASON
1904-1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

1

Tickets, with reserved seats, on sale at Albaugh's, 15 North Charles Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Wednesday Evening, November 2, at 8.15 precisely.

SECOND SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH
SEASON
1904-1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

1

Tickets on sale at The Heppe Piano Rooms, 1115 Chestnut Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE LYRIC . . . . . BALTIMORE

Tuesday Evening, November 1, at 8.15 precisely.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

1

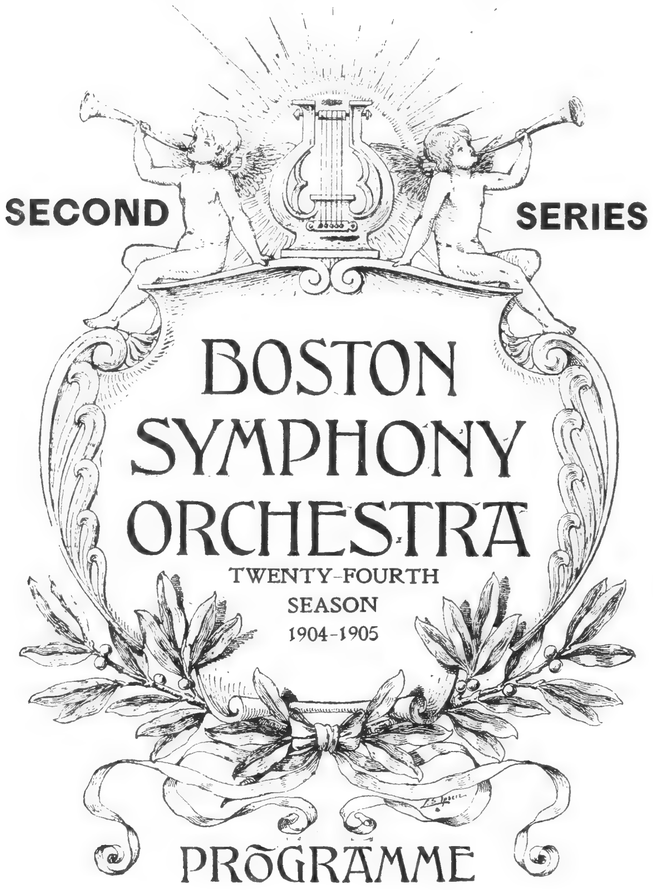
Tickets, with reserved seat , ot.
sale at Albaugh's,
15 North Charles Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Wednesday Evening, November 2, at 8.15 precisely.

SECOND SERIES



C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager.

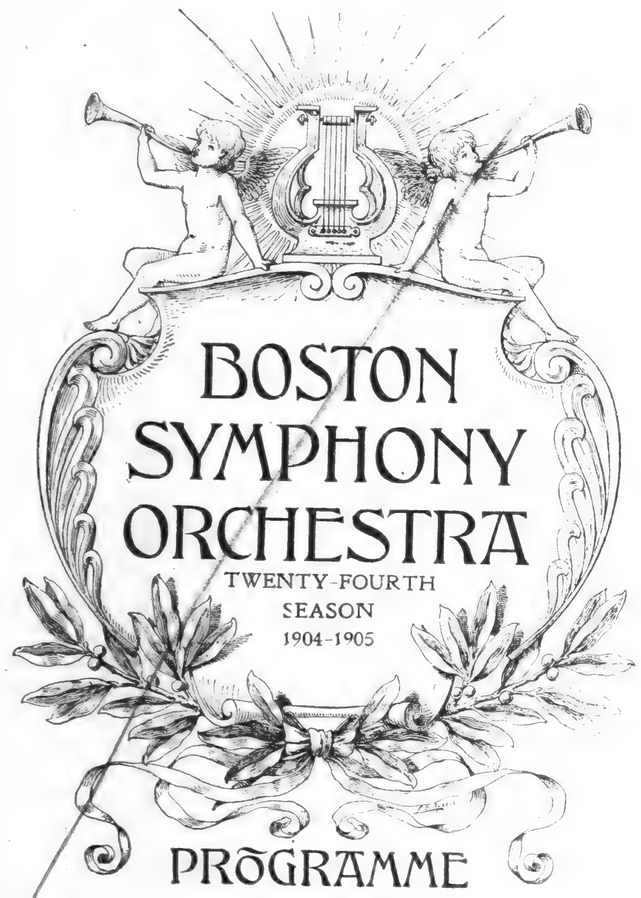
1

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

FOOT-GUARD HALL . . . HARTFORD

Monday Evening, October 17, at 8



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON
1904-1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager

1

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . PHILADELPHIA

Monday Evening, October 31, at 8.15 precisely

FIRST SERIES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON
1904-1905

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager

1

Tickets on sale at
The Heppe Piano Rooms,
1115 Chestnut Street

Carnegie Hall
New York

Twenty-fourth Season
Nineteen Hundred Four and Five

The BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

NINETY-FOUR PERFORMERS

MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

A PERMANENT ORCHESTRA
MAINTAINED SOLELY FOR
CONCERT PERFORMANCES

C. A. ELLIS, Manager
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager

Carnegie Hall

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

FIVE CONCERTS
THURSDAY EVENINGS AT 8.15

NOVEMBER 3
DECEMBER 8
JANUARY 12
FEBRUARY 16
MARCH 16 and

FIVE MATINEES
SATURDAY AFTERNOONS AT 2.30

NOVEMBER 5
DECEMBER 10
JANUARY 14
FEBRUARY 18
MARCH 18

Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series of five matinees or five concerts, $7.50, $6, $5, and $3, and boxes $50 and $40, according to location. Programme books, with descriptive notes on the works to be performed, will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

☞ The programmes for the afternoon and evening series will be entirely different.

SOLO ARTISTS

Miss MURIEL FOSTER
Miss EDITH WALKER
Mr. D'ALBERT
Mr. DE PACHMANN
Mr. RAFAEL JOSEFFY
Mr. SCHELLING
Mr. YSAYE
Mr. FRITZ KREISLER
Miss MARIE NICHOLS
Mr. WILLY HESS

[511]

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Carnegie Hall

Carnegie Hall

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

The novelties to be played will be chosen from the following list:—

Hugo Wolf	Symphonic Poem, "Penthesilea"
Liszt	Symphony No. 1
J. Fauré	"Vogelpredigt des heiligen Franz von Assisi"
Van Der Stucken	"Pellias and Mellisande"
Debussy	"Pax Triumphans"
Converse	Prelude, "L'Après-midi d'une Faune"
R. Caetani	Two Pieces for Piano and Orchestra
C. Goldmark	Prélude Symphonique, Op. 11
Sinding	Overture
Rimsky-Korsakoff	Suite, Op. 35
Hadley	"Sadkow"
Gluck (Mottl)	Symphony
Guy Ropartz	Ballet Music from Suite II.
Schillings	Fantasie in D major
	"Der Vespertag"

Sea five corc worl
purc

Carnegie Hall
New York

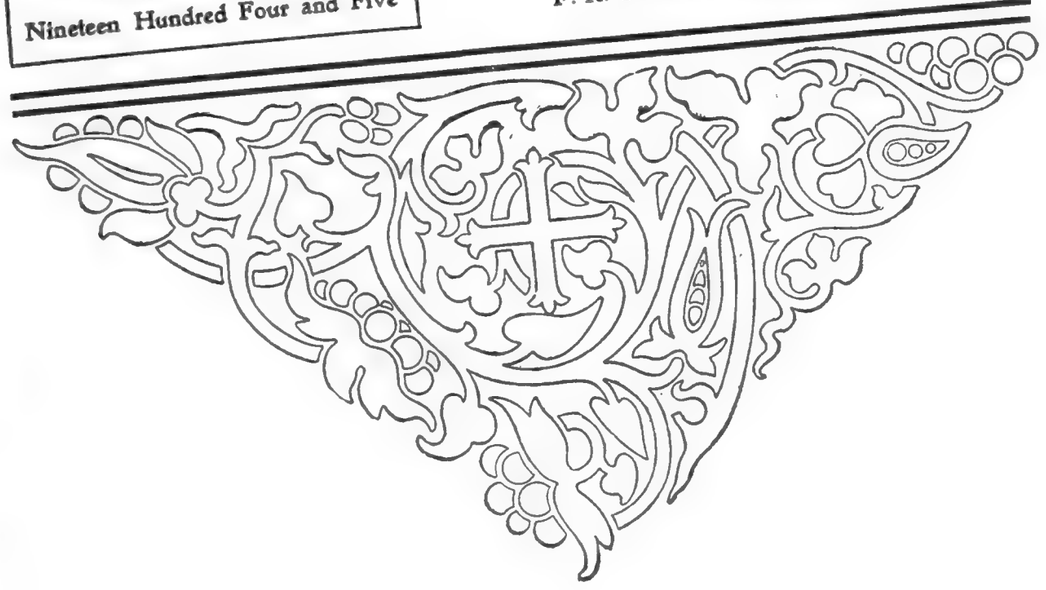
Twenty-fourth Season
Nineteen Hundred Four and Five

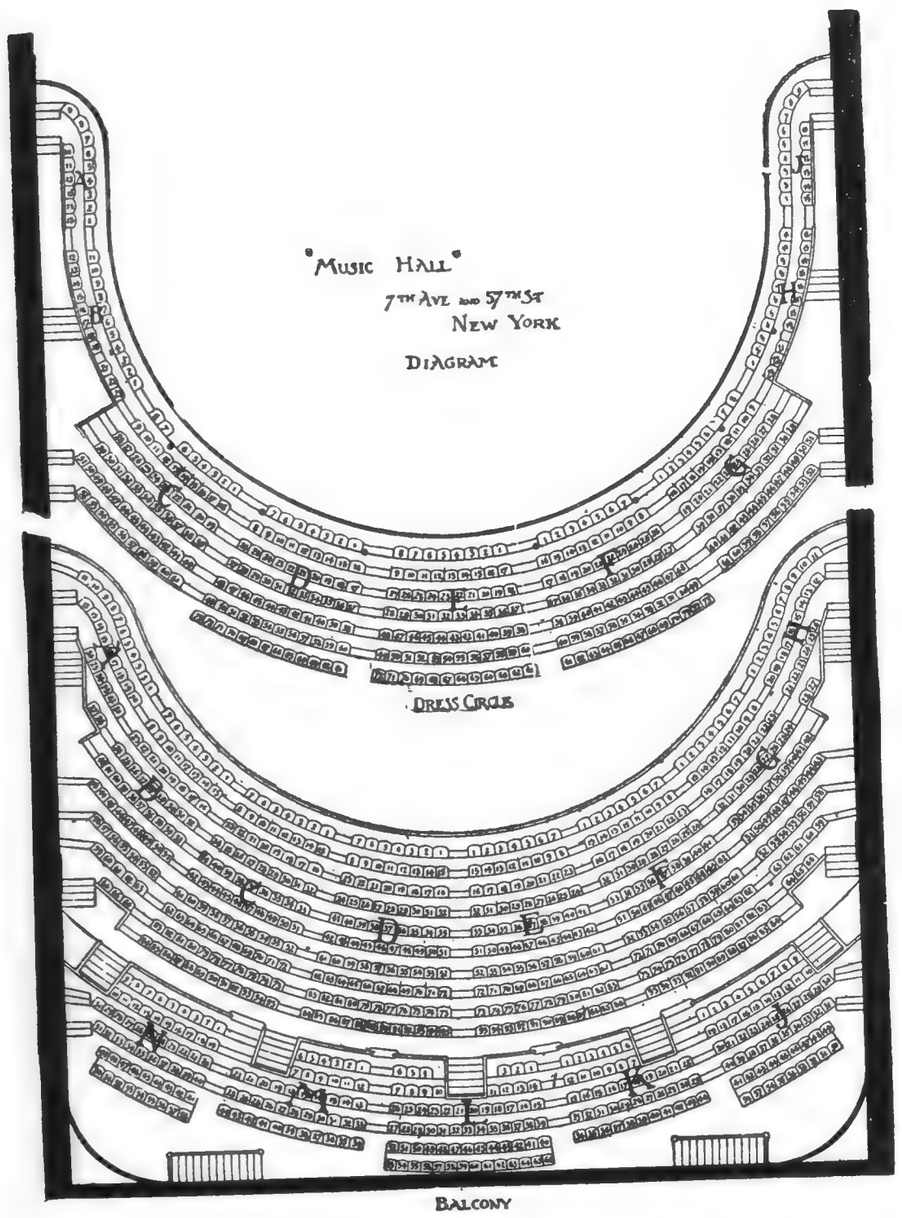
The BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

NINETY-FOUR PERFORMERS
MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

A PERMANENT ORCHESTRA
MAINTAINED SOLELY FOR
CONCERT PERFORMANCES

C. A. ELLIS, Manager
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager





(Over)

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

Symphony Hall, Boston.

Dear Sir:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. Ellis, Manager.
F. R. Comee, Assistant Manager.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

Symphony Hall, Boston.

Dear Madam:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. Ellis, Manager.
F. R. Comee, Assistant Manager.

Carnegie Hall
New York

The BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

NINETY-FOUR PERFORMERS
MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

A PERMANENT ORCHESTRA
MAINTAINED SOLELY FOR
CONCERT PERFORMANCES

C. A. ELLIS, Manager
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager

Twenty-fourth Season
Nineteen Hundred Four and Five

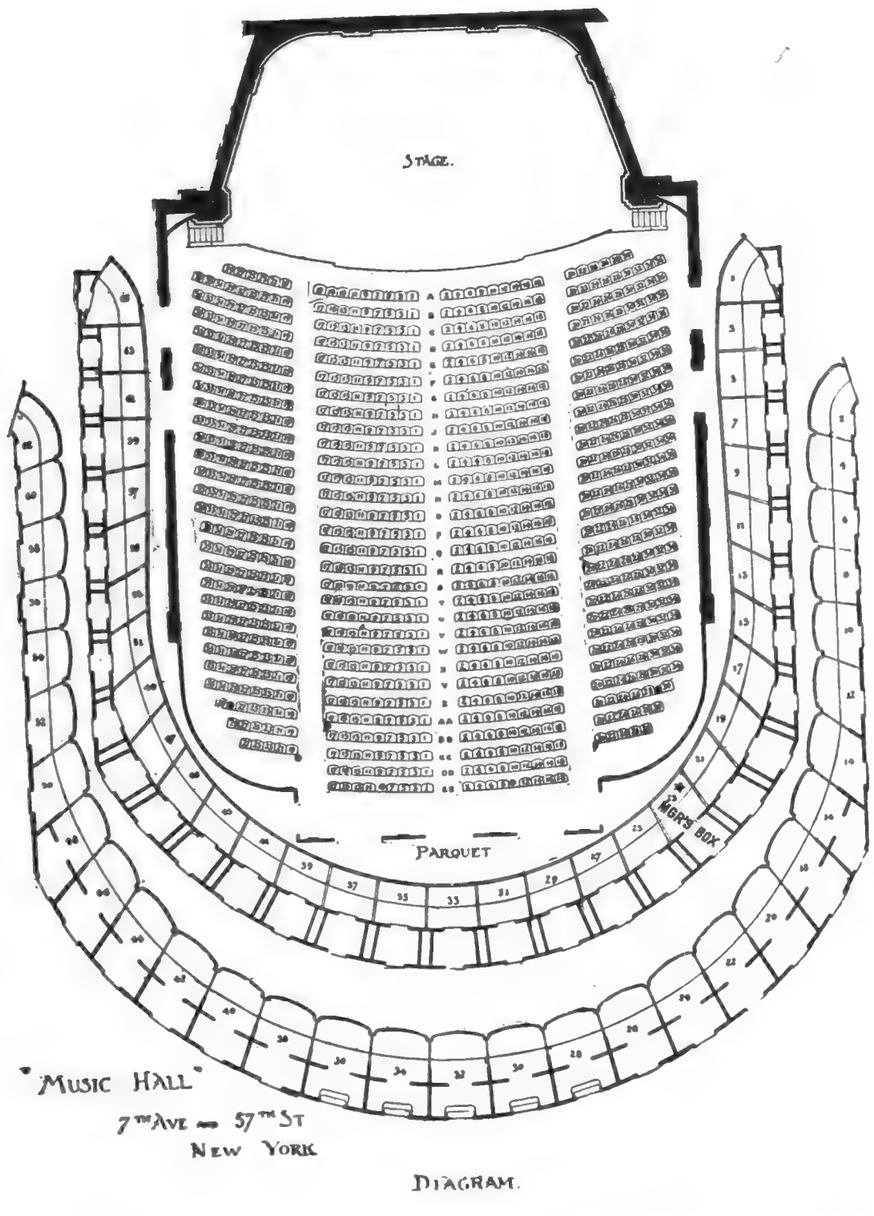

DIAGRAM.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Hall

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the concerts by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at Carnegie Hall last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 15, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

[911]

The Lyric
Baltimore

Twenty-fourth Season
Nineteen Hundred Four and Five

The BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

NINETY-FOUR PERFORMERS
MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

A PERMANENT ORCHESTRA
MAINTAINED SOLELY FOR
CONCERT PERFORMANCES

C. A. ELLIS, Manager
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager

BALTIMORE, October 1, 1904.

I hereby subscribe for season tickets for the series of five Tuesday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at The Lyric.

Location of seats last season .....

.....

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at The Lyric last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

The Lyric

[911]

FIVE CONCERTS

TUESDAY EVENINGS AT 8.15 O'CLOCK

NOVEMBER 1
DECEMBER 6
JANUARY 10
FEBRUARY 14
MARCH 14

Boxes seating six, $60 each, for the series of five concerts.

Season tickets, with reserved seats, for the series of five concerts, $7 and $5, according to location.

The sale of tickets will open Monday morning, October 10, at Albaugh's, 201 North Charles Street.

Programme books, with descriptive notes on the works to be performed, will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

SOLO ARTISTS

Mme. LOUISE HOMER
Mr. YSAYE
Miss MURIEL FOSTER
Mr. D'ALBERT
Mr. WILLY HESS

BALTIMORE, October 1, 1904.

I hereby subscribe for ..... season tickets for the series of five Tuesday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at The Lyric.

Location of seats last season .....

.....

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at The Lyric last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

The Lyric

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at The Lyric last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BALTIMORE, October 1, 1904.

I hereby subscribe for ..... season tickets for the series of five Tuesday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at The Lyric.

.....

.....

Location of seats last season .....

.....

[911]

The Lyric

following list:—

Hugo Wolf	Symphonic Poem, "Penthesilea"
Saint-Saëns	Symphony No. 1
Liszt	"Vogelpredigt des heiligen Franz von Assisi"
	"Pellias and Mellisande"
J. Fauré	"Pax Triumphans"
Van Der Stucken	Prelude, "L'Après-midi d'une Faune"
Debussy	Two Pieces for Piano and Orchestra
Converse	Prélude Symphonique, Op. 11
R. Caetani	Overture
C. Goldmark	Suite, Op. 35
Sinding	"Sadkow"
Rimsky-Korsakoff	Symphony
Hadley	Ballet Music from Suite II.
Gluck (Mottl)	Fantasie in D major
Guy Ropartz	Fantasie in D major
Schillings	"Der Vespertag"

[116]

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the Tuesday evening concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at The Lyric last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

BALTIMORE, October 1, 1904.

I hereby subscribe for.....season tickets for the series of five Tuesday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at The Lyric.

.....

.....

Location of seats last season.....

.....

The Lyric

THE NOVELTIES [illegible] ONE

following list: —

Hugo Wolf	Symphonic Poem, "Penthesilea"
Saint-Saëns	Symphony No. 1
Liszt	"Vogelpredigt des heiligen Franz von Assisi"
J. Fauré	"Pellias and Mellisande"
Van Der Stucken	"Pax Triumphans"
Debussy	Prelude, "L'Après-midi d'une Faune"
Converse	Two Pieces for Piano and Orchestra
R. Caetani	Prélude Symphonique, Op. 11
C. Goldmark	Overture
Sinding	Suite, Op. 35
Rimsky-Korsakoff	"Sadkow"
Hadley	Symphony
Gluck (Motti)	Ballet Music from Suite II.
Guy Ropartz	Fantasie in D major
Schillings	"Der Vespertag"

[11]

Academy of Music
Philadelphia

Twenty-fourth Season
Nineteen Hundred Four and Five

The BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

NINETY-FOUR PERFORMERS
MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

A PERMANENT ORCHESTRA
MAINTAINED SOLELY FOR
CONCERT PERFORMANCES

C. A. ELLIS, Manager
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager

PHILADELPHIA, September 28, 1904.

I hereby subscribe for ..... season tickets for the second series of five Wednesday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music.

.....

.....

Location of seats last season .....

.....

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON,
October 20, 1904.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

PHILADELPHIA CONCERTS

We beg to courteously remind you that we have not received a renewal of your last season's subscription. Will you kindly send your decision at your earliest convenience, and oblige

Cordially yours,

CHARLES A. ELLIS, Manager.
FREDERIC R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

[11]

Academy of Music
Philadelphia

Twenty-fourth Season
Nineteen Hundred Four and Five

The BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

NINETY-FOUR PERFORMERS
MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

A PERMANENT ORCHESTRA
MAINTAINED SOLELY FOR
CONCERT PERFORMANCES

C. A. ELLIS, Manager
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager

PHILADELPHIA, September 28, 1904.

I hereby subscribe for ... season tickets for the second series of five Wednesday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music.

Location of seats last season

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON,
October 20, 1904.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

PHILADELPHIA CONCERTS

We beg to courteously remind you that we have not received a renewal of your last season's subscription. Will you kindly send your decision at your earliest convenience, and oblige

Cordially yours,

CHARLES A. ELLIS, Manager.
FREDERIC R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

[211]

TWO SERIES OF

FIVE CONCERTS EACH

First Series Monday Evenings at 8.15		Second Series Wednesday Evenings at 8.15
October	31	November	2
December	5	December	7
January	9	January	11
February	13	February	15
March	13	March	15

The scale of prices will be the same for each series.

Proscenium boxes seating eight, and boxes seating six and four, will be sold at $75, $63, and $42, respectively, for the series of five concerts.

Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series of five concerts, $7, $5, and $3.50, according to location.

The public sale of tickets for the first series will open Monday morning, October 10, and for the second series on the following Wednesday morning, October 12, at the Heppe Piano Rooms, 1115 Chestnut Street.

Programme books, with descriptive notes on the works to be performed, will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

SOLO ARTISTS

Miss MURIEL FOSTER
Miss EDITH WALKER
Mr. D'ALBERT
Mr. DE PACHMANN
Mr. RAFAEL JOSEFFY
Mr. SCHELLING
Mr. YSAYE
Mr. FRITZ KREISLER
Miss MARIE NICHOLS
Mr. WILLY HESS
(His first appearance in Philadelphia)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Both series of concerts will be the same in character and equally attractive, but with different programmes and soloists.

Season ticket holders of last season will be allowed to retain the same seats for both the first and second series, payment for the same to be made on or before Saturday, October 8, for the first series, and Monday, October 10, for the second series, by cash, money order, or check, made payable to Miss H. Harris, to whom all renewals of seats should be sent, at 1115 Chestnut Street.

PHILADELPHIA, September 28, 1904.

I hereby subscribe for .....season tickets for the second series of five Wednesday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music.

.....

.....

Location of seats last season .....

.....

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON,
October 20, 1904.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

PHILADELPHIA CONCERTS

We beg to courteously remind you that we have not received a renewal of your last season's subscription. Will you kindly send your decision at your earliest convenience, and oblige

Cordially yours,

CHARLES A. ELLIS, Manager.
FREDERIC R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON,

October 20, 1904.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

PHILADELPHIA CONCERTS

We beg to courteously remind you that we have not received a renewal of your last season's subscription. Will you kindly send your decision at your earliest con-

PHILADELPHIA, September 28, 1904.

I hereby subscribe for .....season tickets for the second series of five Wednesday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music.

.....

The novelties to be played will be chosen from the following list:—

Hugo Wolf	Symphonic Poem, "Penthesilea"
Saint-Saëns	Symphony No. 1
Liszt	"Vogelpredigt des heiligen Franz von Assisi"
	"Pellias and Mellisande"
J. Fauré	"Pax Triumphans"
Van Der Stucken	Prelude, "L'Après-midi d'une Faune"
Debussy	Prelude, "L'Après-midi d'une Faune"
Converse	Two Pieces for Piano and Orchestra
	Prélude Symphonique, Op. 11
R. Caetani	Overture
C. Goldmark	Suite, Op. 33
Sinding	"Sadkow"
Rimsky-Korsakoff	Symphony
Hadley	Ballet Music from Suite II.
Gluck (Motti)	Fantasie in D major
Guy Ropartz	"Der Vespertag"
Schillings

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

PHILADELPHIA, September 28, 1904.

I hereby subscribe for ..... season tickets for the first series of five Monday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music.

Location of seats last season .....

[811]

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserved the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

[811]

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 8, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

PHILADELPHIA, September 28, 1904.

I hereby subscribe for season tickets for the first series of five Monday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music.

Location of seats last season

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserved the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Orch. 1st Mus. A.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

[811]

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the first (Monday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be p ope

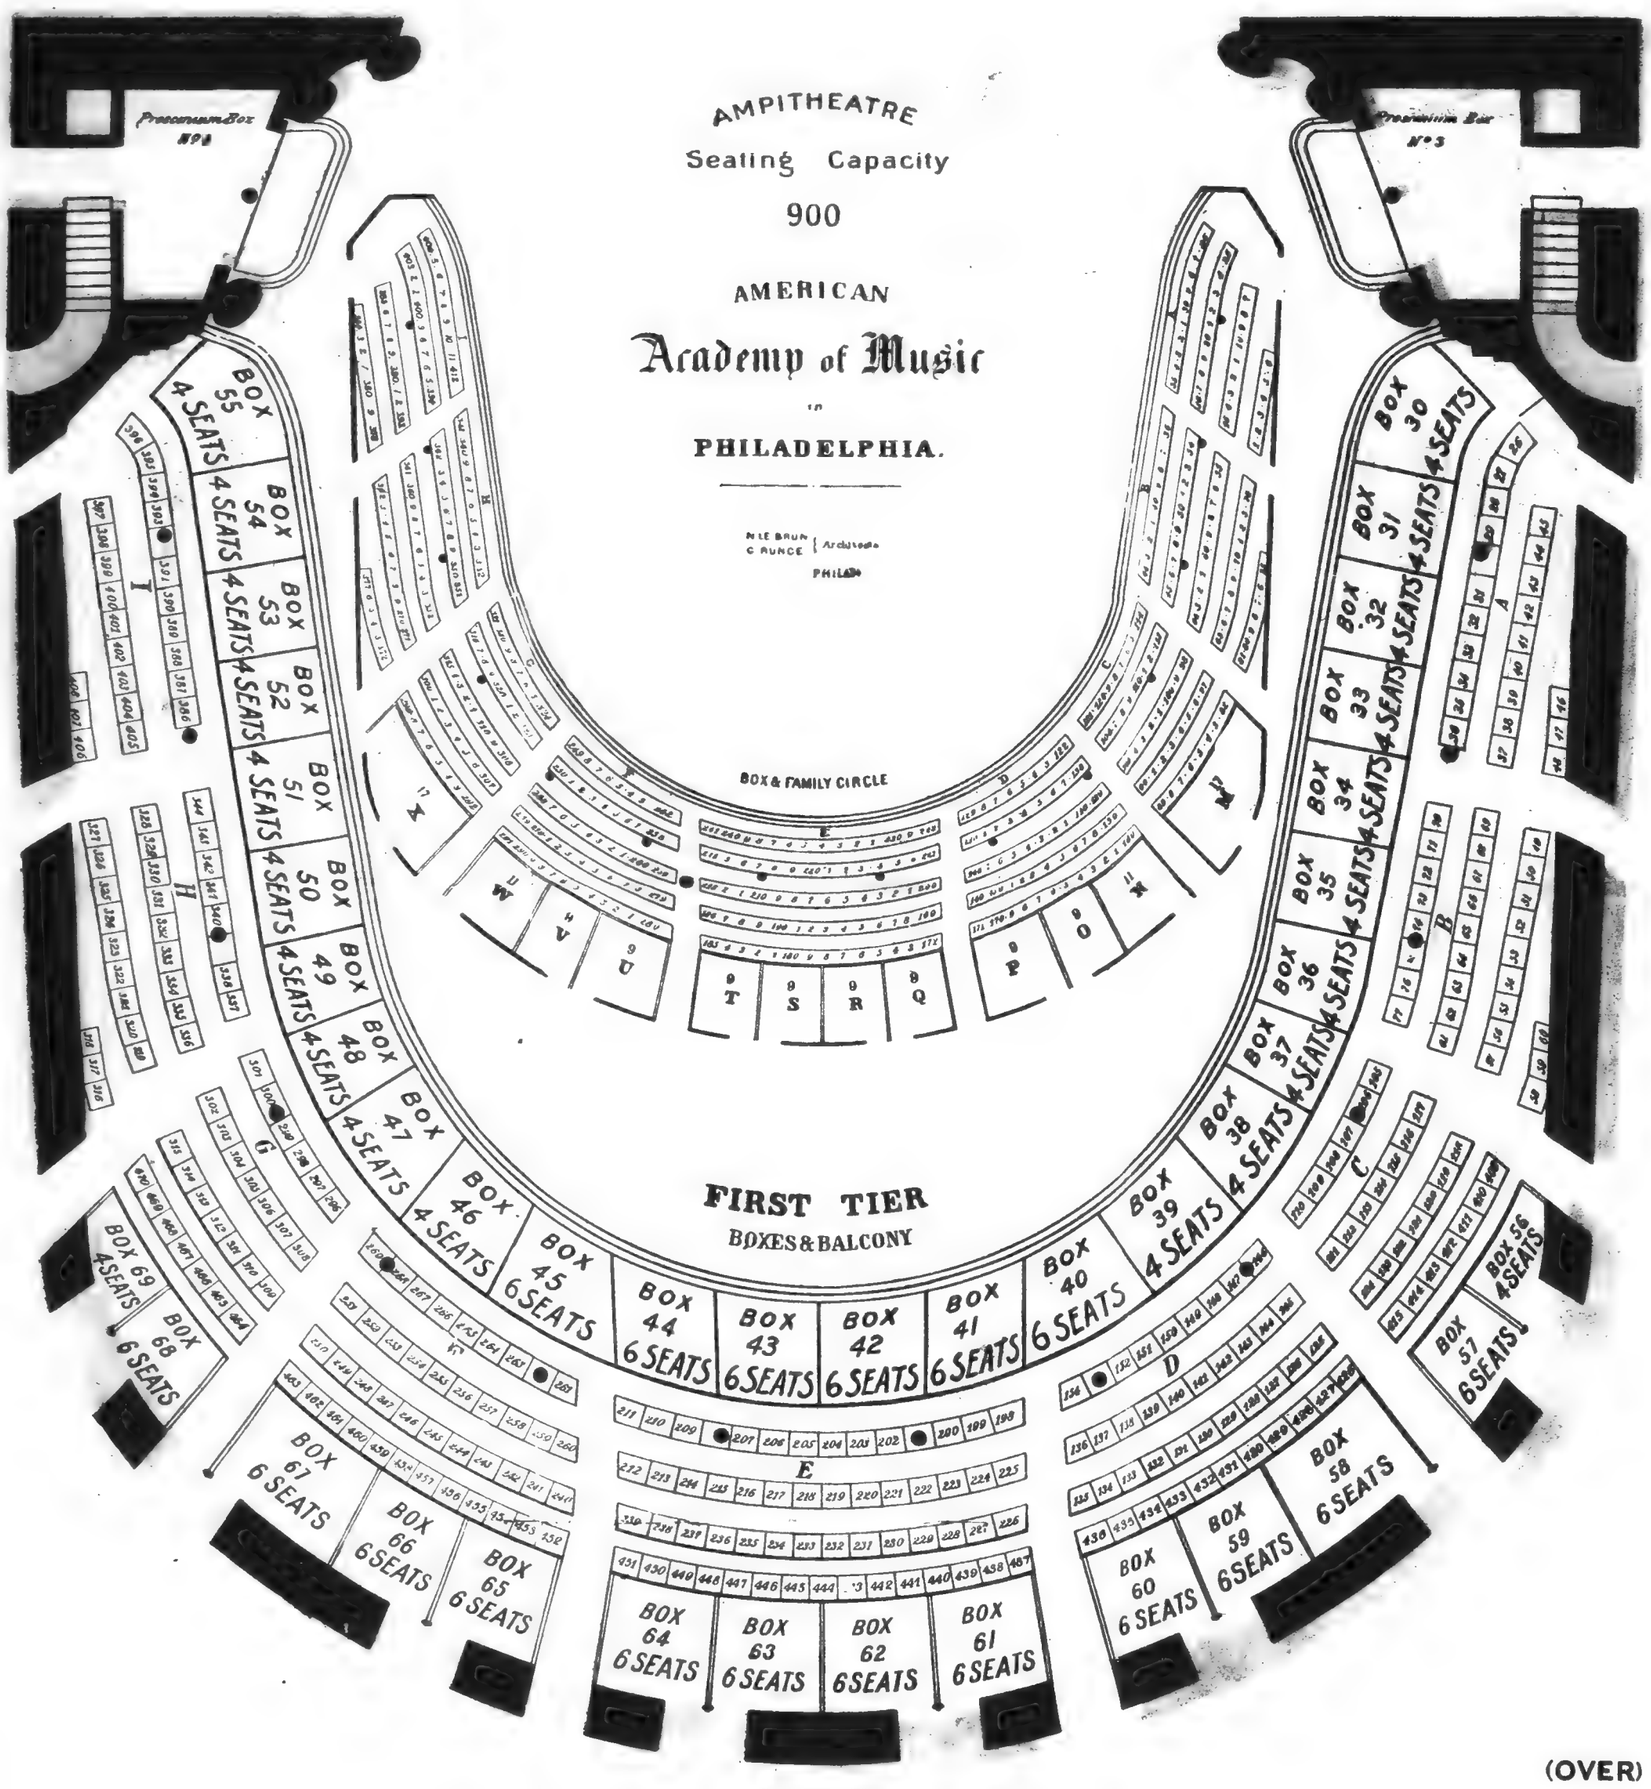
orde



ESTRA
EIGHTY-ONE
DUCTOR

HONY HALL, BOSTON.

es of concerts of the ast season, we should ublic subscription is ign and mail enclosed

, Manager.
E, Assistant Manager.

(OVER)

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

[811]

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON

DEAR MADAM:

Bost
be pl opene order

ESTRA
IGHTY-ONE
UCTOR

NY HALL, BOSTON.

of concerts of the t season, we should blic subscription is and mail enclosed

lanager.
Assistant Manager.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR SIR:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOUNDED A.D. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

DEAR MADAM:

As a subscriber to the second (Wednesday evening) series of concerts of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the Academy of Music last season, we should be pleased to reserve the same seats for you before the public subscription is opened.

Should you desire to renew your subscription, please sign and mail enclosed order before October 10, indicating the location of seats.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

[611]

SOLO ARTISTS

Mrs. METHOD

Mr. LOUIS BACHNER

Mr. BUONAMICI

Mr. WILLY HESS

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI

Mr. RUDOLF KRASSELT

AND OTHERS TO BE ANNOUNCED

CAMBRIDGE, October 15, 1904.

I hereby subscribe for ..... season tickets for the series of nine Thursday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Sanders Theatre.

.....

.....

Location of seats last season,.....

.....

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

I. CONCERT.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, AT 7.45, P. M.

Programme.

DVOŘÁK, OVERTURE to "Othello." op. 93.

MOZART, ARIA, "Deh' Vieni, from "Marriage of Figaro."

DVOŘÁK, SUITE in D major, op. 39.
I. Præludium, (Pastorale).
II. Polka: Trio.
III. Menuett, (Sousedska).
IV. Romanze.
V. Finale, (Furiant).

SONGS with ORCHESTRA.

a) MASSENET, "AIR DE GRISELIDIS."

b) MOSZKOWSKI, "PRES DU BERCEAU."

DVOŘÁK, SYMPHONY No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World." op. 95.
I. Adagio: Allegro molto.
II. Largo.
III. Scherzo.
IV. Allegro con fuoco.

Soloist:

Mrs. MINNIE METHOT.

Second Concert, Thursday Evening, November 10.

CAMBRIDGE, October 15, 1904.

I hereby subscribe for ..... season tickets for the series of nine Thursday Evening Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Sanders Theatre.

.....

.....

.....

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

SEASON 1904-05.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

I. CONCERT.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, AT 7.45, P. M.

Programme.

DVOŘÁK, OVERTURE to "Otello," op. 93.

MOZART, ARIA, "Deh, Vieni, from "Marriage of Figaro."

DVOŘÁK, SUITE in D major, op. 39.
I. Præludium, (Pastorale).
II. Polka: Trio.
III. Menuett, (Soused ka).
IV. Romanze.
V. Finale, (Furiant).

SONGS with ORCHESTRA.

The novelties to be played will be chosen from the following list: —

Hugo Wolf	Symphonic Poem, "Penthesilea"
Saint-Saëns	Symphony No. 1
Liszt	"Vogelpredigt des heiligen Franz von Assisi"
J. Fauré	"Pellias and Mellisande"
Van Der Stucken	"Pax Triumphans"
Debussy	Prelude, "L'Après-midi d'une Faune"
Converse	Two Pieces for Piano and Orchestra
R. Caetani	Prélude Symphonique, Op. 11
C. Goldmark	Overture
Sinding	Suite, Op. 35
Rimsky-Korsakoff	"Sadkow"
Hadley	Symphony
Gluck (Mottl)	Ballet Music from Suite II.
Guy Ropartz	Fantasie in D major
Schillings	"Der Vespertag"

DECEMBER	5
JANUARY	26
FEBRUARY	9
MARCH	9
APRIL	6
APRIL	27

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

SEASON TICKETS for the nine concerts, $7.00.

The sale will be conducted according to the plan in use last season.

Subscribers of last season may secure the same seats by filling out and mailing the enclosed blank, with check payable to C. W. Sever & Co., on or before October 19, 1904. On receipt of check, tickets will be mailed.

The unclaimed seats will be offered for sale in the usual manner at Sever's University Bookstore, Harvard Square, Cambridge, on Saturday morning, October 22, 1904, at 8 o'clock.

A limited number of seats have been reserved for college officers and invited guests.

Twenty-fourth Season
Nineteen Hundred Four and Five

A PERMANENT ORCHESTRA
MAINTAINED SOLELY FOR
CONCERT PERFORMANCES

C. A. ELLIS, Manager
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager

END OF VOLUME

REDUCTION

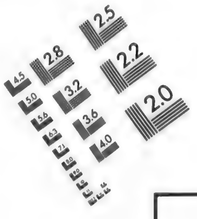
RATIO

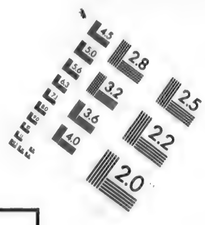
12x

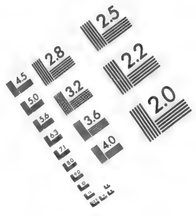
2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

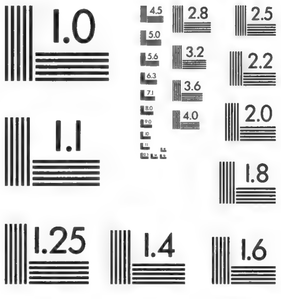






150 mm

100 mm



ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

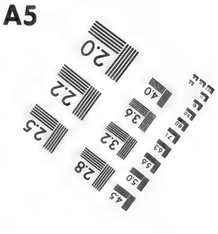
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm

A5



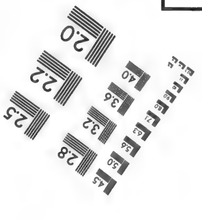
A4

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119



ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

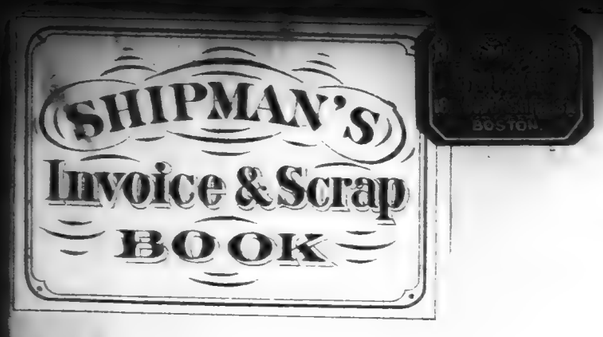
3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

VOLUME 22

Pops

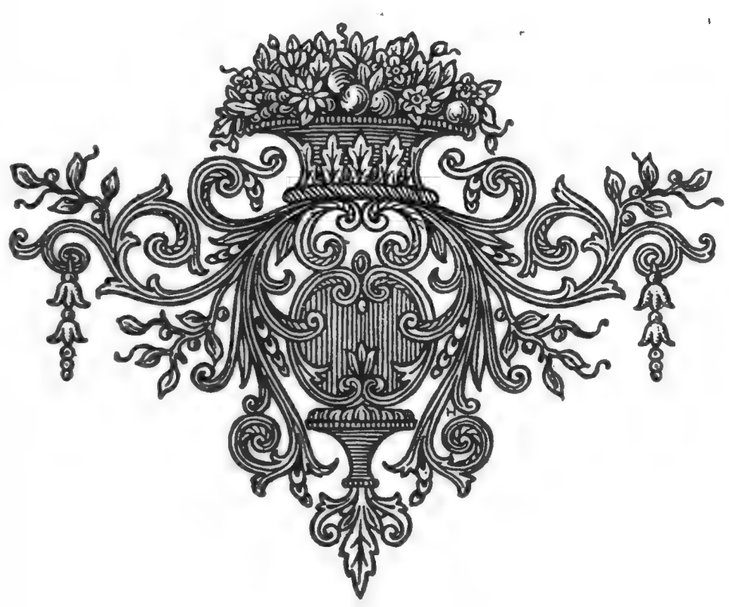
1904 - 1905



SHIPMAN'S
Invoice & Scrap
BOOK

BLANK PAGE

SYMPHONY HALL POPS



NINETEENTH SEASON
Nineteen Hundred & Four

HONY
LL
PS

H SEASON
red & Four

~ ~ BILL OF FARE ~ ~

▲ LUNCH ▲

SANDWICHES.

Ham	10
Tongue	10
Chicken	15
Swiss Cheese	15
Roquefort Cheese	15
Brie Cheese	15
Neufchatel Cheese	15
American Cheese	15
Sardine	15

ICE-CREAM.

Vanilla	20
Strawberry	20
Chocolate	20
Harlequin	25
Cake	15

PER PLATE.

Cold Ham	25
Cold Smoked Tongue	30
Cold Chicken	30
Swiss Cheese and Water Crackers	25
Roquefort " " " "	25
Brie " " " "	25
Sardines	30
Pretzels	10

SALADS.

Lobster	40
Chicken	40

CONFECTIONS.

The Walter M. Lowney Co. Assorted Chocolates.

One pound packages.....75, 60, and 50
One-half pound packages.....35 and 30

Assorted Chocolates and Bonbons.

1 lb. packages, 50. ½ lb. packages, 30

Chocolate Caramels, 1 lb., 50; ½ lb., 30
Chocolate Peppermints.....½ lb., 25

▲ ▲ CIGARS ▲ ▲

(All Cigars will be enclosed in sealed envelopes, with the price printed thereon.)

Marguerite, Conchas	From Estabrook & Eaton.	10c., 3 for 25c.
Marguerite, Panetelas		10c., 3 for 25c.
Salerosa, Ideals		10c. each
E. & E., Invincibles		15c., 2 for 25c.
El Principe de Gales, Londres Grande		10c. each
Manuel Garcia, Conchas Elegante		15c., 2 for 25c.
Lords of England, Delmonte		20c., 3 for 50c.
Bock & Co., Especiales de E. & E.		20c., 5 for $1.00
La Carolina, Perfectos		25c. each
Barrister, Perfecto	From Daniel Frank & Co.	10c., 3 for 25c.
Barrister, Conchas		10c., 3 for 25c.
N. S., Londres		10c., 3 for 25c.
Celebridad, Perfecto		10c. each
The American, Puritanos Finos		15c., 2 for 25c.
The American, Concha Fina Especial		10c., 3 for 25c.
The American, Perfecto Fino		20c., 3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter, Puritanos Finos		15c., 2 for 25c.
Garcia, D. F. & Co., Conchas Especiales		10c. each
El Roble Conchas Especiales		10c., 3 for 25c.
Buscador Rothschild	From S. S. Pierce Co.	15c., 2 for 25c.
Pembina Bouquet		10c., 3 for 25c.
Overland Perfecto		15c., 2 for 25c.
Blason Regalia Chiquita		15c., 2 for 25c.
Iberia Bacheler		15c., 2 for 25c.
Iberia Claveles		15c. straight
Cosmopolitana Perfecto Extra		25c. "
El Blason Bouquet Extra		20c., 3 for 50c.
Iberia Mercedes		20c., 3 for 50c.
Iberia Americans		25c.
Iberia Regalia Fina Especial		20c., 3 for 50c.
Punch Perfectos		25c.
Iberia Emenencia		25c.
Ginita Deliciosos Extra		10c., 3 for 25c.
Matilde Rothschilds	From C. B. Perkins & Co.	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra		15c., 2 for 25c.
Matilde Perfecto Finos		20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos Extra		15c. each
Tedesco Exquisites		15c., 2 for 25c.
Toinette Perfecto		10c., 3 for 25c.
Sweet Caporal Cigarettes (Twenties)	15c.	No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip.....15c.
Mah Mal No. 5	15c.	No. 2 " " " club size, 20c.
Mah Mal No. 3	25c.	Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip.....25c.
Mah Mal No. 1	30c.	Mah Mal Gold Tip .....25c.

▲ LIST OF DRINKS ▲

SCHLITZ BREWING CO. Milwaukee Beer on draught.....10
McCORMICK BREWING CO. Triune Ale on draught.....10

Claret	15
Rhine Wine	15
Claret Punch	20
Claret Cobbler	20
Rhine Wine Cobbler	20
Plain Soda	10
Plain Lemonade	10
Lemonade with Wine	15
Soda Lemonade	15
Soda Lemonade with Wine	20
Egg Lemonade	20
Apollinaris Lemonade	20
Pureoxia Soda Lemonade	15
Londonderry Lithia Lemonade

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC ALES AND LAGER BEER.

	PT.
Bass & Co.'s Pale Ale (Foster's Bottling)	25
Bass & Co.'s Pale Ale, White Label	25
" " " Dog's Head	25
Van Nostrand's P. B. Ale	20
Guinness' Stout	25
Muir's Scotch Ale	25
Pilsener Beer	25
Culmbacher Beer	25
Schlitz Milwaukee Beer	20
Schlitz Milwaukee Export Beer	25
Schlitz Milwaukee Pale Beer	25
Schlitz Milwaukee Dark Beer	25
Boston Club Lager (Van Nostrand)	20

	PT.
Norfolk Cabinet Beer	20
Anheuser Beer (Anheuser-Busch Brew. Ass'n)	20
Original Budweiser Beer (Anheuser-Busch Brew. Ass'n)	25
King's Bohemian Beer	20
Red Fox Ale	20
Ginger Ale (C. & C.)	25
Cochrane's Belfast Ginger Ale	25
S. S. Pierce's Cider....Half Pints	15
Tally Ho Ginger Ale	15
Pureoxia Dry Ginger Ale ...Pints	15
Pureoxia Dry Ginger Ale, Half Pints	10

RHINE WINES.

	QT.	PT.
Table Wine	1.00
Zeltinger (Moselle), 1895	1.50	.75
Niersteiner, 1893	1.50	.75
Liebfraumilch, 1893	2.00
Johannisberger Cabinet, Yellow Seal, 1886	2.50
Sparkling Hock	2.50	1.25
Sparkling Moselle	2.50	1.25
Baron R. de Luze Sparkling Dry Comet	3.00	1.50
Riesling (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
Zeltinger Moselle, Carl Acker (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
Laubenheimer, Carl Acker (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	2.00	1.00
Liebfraumilch, Carl Acker (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	2.00	1.00

CLARETS.

	QT.	PT.
Ordinaire	.80	.40
Pontet Canet (Genoud, Pere et Fils, Bordeaux)	1.25	.75
Medoc Magnums (A. de Luze & Fils), 1893	1.00	.50
Pontet Canet (A. de Luze & Fils), 1895	1.50	.75
Chateau La Rose (A. de Luze & Fils), 1895	2.00	1.00
Chateau Lafite (A. de Luze & Fils), 1895	2.50
Zinfandel (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.00	.60
Medoc, Couse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.00	.60
St. Julien, Couse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
Pontet Canet, Couse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
La Rose, Couse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	2.00	1.00

SAUTERNES.

	QT.	PT.
Haut Sauterne (Genoud, Pere et Fils, Bordeaux)	1.25	.75
Barsac (A. de Luze & Fils), 1881	1.00	.50
Sauterne (A. de Luze & Fils), 1893	1.50	.75
Haut Sauterne (A. de Luze & Fils), 1878	2.00	1.00
California Sauterne (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
Sauterne, Couse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
Haut Sauterne, Couse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	2.00	1.00

MINERAL WATERS.

	QT.	PT.
Apollinaris	35	.20
Apollinaris	Splits	.10
Pureoxia Siphons of Seltzer		.20
Pureoxia Siphons, Carbonic		.20
Pureoxia Club Soda		.20
Londonderry Lithia Water	35	.20
Londonderry Lithia Water	Splits	.10

PATRONS WILL PLEASE PAY WAITERS.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

HONY
LL
PS

H SEASON
lred & Four

[3]

SYMPHONY HALL

POPS

NINETEENTH SEASON

Nineteen Hundred & Four

~ ~ BILL OF FARE ~ ~

▲ LUNCH ▲

SANDWICHES.

Ham	10
Tongue	10
Chicken	15
Swiss Cheese	15
Roquefort Cheese	15
Brie Cheese	15
Neufchatel Cheese	15
American Cheese	15
Sardine	15

ICE-CREAM.

Vanilla	20
Strawberry	20
Chocolate	20
Harlequin	20
Cake	25
	15

PER PLATE.

Cold Ham	25
Cold Smoked Tongue	30
Cold Chicken	30
Swiss Cheese and Water Crackers	25
Roquefort " " " "	25
Brie " " " "	25
American " " " "	25
Neufchatel " " " "	25
Sardines	20
Pretzels	30

SALADS.

Lobster	40
Chicken	40

CONFECTIONS.

The Walter M. Lowney Co. Assorted Chocolates.

One pound packages.....75, 60, and 50
One-half pound packages.....35 and 30

Assorted Chocolates and Bonbons.

1 lb. packages, 50. ½ lb. packages, 30

Chocolate Caramels, 1 lb., 50; ½ lb., 30
Chocolate Peppermints.....½ lb. 25

▲ ▲ CIGARS ▲ ▲

(All Cigars will be enclosed in sealed envelopes, with the price printed thereon.)

From Estabrook & Eaton.

Marguerite, Conchas	10c., 3 for 25c.
Marguerite, Panetelas	10c., 3 for 25c.
Salerosa, Idea's	10c. each
E. & E., Invincibles	15c., 2 for 25c.
El Principe de Gales, Londres Grande	10c. each
Bock & Co., Reciprocity	15c., 2 for 25c.
Lords of England, Delmonte	20c., 3 for 50c.
Bock & Co., Especiales de E. & E.	20c., 5 for $1.00
La Carolina, Perfectos	25c. each

From Daniel Frank & Co.

Barrister, Perfecto	10c., 3 for 25c.
Barrister, Conchas	10c., 3 for 25c.
N. S., Londres	10c., 3 for 25c.
Celebridad, Perfecto	10c. each
The American, Puritanos Finos	15c., 2 for 25c.
The American, Concha Fina Especial	10c., 3 for 25c.
The American, Perfecto Fino	20c., 3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter, Puritanos Finos	15c., 2 for 25c.
Garcia, D. F. & Co., Conchas Especiales	10c. each
El Roble Conchas Especiales	10c., 3 for 25c.

From S. S. Pierce Co.

Buscador Rothschild	15c., 2 for 25c.
Pembina Bouquet	10c., 3 for 25c.
Overland Perfecto	15c., 2 for 25c.
Blason Regalia Chiquita	10c., 3 for 25c.
Iberia Bacheler	15c., 2 for 25c.
Iberia Claveles	15c., 2 for 25c.
Cosmopolitana Perfecto Extra	15c., 2 for 25c.
El Blason Bouquet Extra	15c. straight
Iberia Mercedes	25c. "
Iberia Americans	20c., 3 for 50c.
Iberia Regalia Fina Especial	20c., 3 for 50c.
Punch Perfectos	25c.
Iberia Emenencia	20c., 3 for 50c.
Ginita Deliciosos Extra	25c.
Matilde Rothschilds	25c.

From C. B. Perkins & Co.

Elena Reina Victoria Extra	10c., 3 for 25c.
Matilde Perfecto Finos	15c., 2 for 25c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos Extra	15c., 2 for 25c.
Tedesco Exquisites	20c., 3 for 50c.
Toinette Perfecto	15c. each
Sweet Caporal Cigarettes (Twenties) 15c.	15c., 2 for 25c.
Mah Mal No. 5 15c.	10c., 3 for 25c.
Mah Mal No. 3 25c.	No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip.....15c.
Mah Mal No. 1 30c.	No. 2 " " " club size, 20c.
	Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip.....25c.
	Mah Mal Gold Tip .....25c.

▲ LIST OF DRINKS ▲

SCHLITZ BREWING CO. Milwaukee Beer on draught	10
McCORMICK BREWING CO. Triune Ale on draught	10
Claret	15
Rhine Wine	15
Rhine Wine and Seltzer	15
Claret Punch	20
Claret Cobbler	20
Rhine Wine Cobbler	20
Plain Soda	10
Plain Lemonade	10
Lemonade with Wine	10
Soda Lemonade	15
Soda Lemonade with Wine	15
Egg Lemonade	20
Apollinaris Lemonade	20
Pureoxia Soda Lemonade	20
Londonderry Lithia Lemonade	15

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC ALES, LAGER BEER, AND CIDER.

	PT.
Bass & Co.'s Pale Ale (Foster's Bottling)	25
Bass & Co.'s Pale Ale, White Label	25
" " " " Dog's Head	25
Van Nostrand's P. B. Ale	20
Guinness' Stout	25
Muir's Scotch Ale	25
Pilsener Beer	25
Culmbacher Beer	25
Schlitz Milwaukee Beer	20
Schlitz Milwaukee Export Beer	25
Schlitz Milwaukee Pale Beer	25
Schlitz Milwaukee Dark Beer	25
Boston Club Lager (Van Nostrand)	20
Norfolk Cabinet Beer	20

	PT.
Anheuser Beer (Anheuser-Busch Brew. Ass'n)	20
Original Budweiser Beer (Anheuser-Busch Brew. Ass'n)	25
King's Bohemian Beer	20
Red Fox Ale	20
McCormick Brewing Co. Triune Ale	20
Ginger Ale (C. & C.)	25
Cochrane's Belfast Ginger Ale	25
"Duffy's 1842" Cider, non-alcoholic. Pts.	25
Half Pints	15
S. S. Pierce's Cider....Half Pints	15
Tally Ho Ginger Ale	15
Pureoxia Dry Ginger Ale ...Pints	15
Pureoxia Dry Ginger Ale, Half Pints	10

RHINE WINES.

	QT.	PT.
Table Wine	1.00
Zeltinger (Moselle), 1895	1.50	.75
Niersteiner, 1893	1.50	.75
Liebfraumilch, 1893	2.00
Johannisberger Cabinet, Yellow Seal, 1886	2.50
Sparkling Hock	2.50	1.25
Sparkling Moselle	2.50	1.25
Baron R. de Luze Sparkling Dry Comet	3.00	1.50
California Riesling (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
Zeltinger Moselle, Carl Acker (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
Laubenheimer, Carl Acker (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	2.00	1.00
Liebfraumilch, Carl Acker (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	2.00	1.00
Rudesheim (Deinhard & Co)	1.50	.75
Niersteiner Riesling (Deinhard & Co.)	1.50	.75

CLARETS.

	QT.	PT.
Ordinaire	80	.40
Medoc Magnums (A. de Luze & Fils), 1893	1.00	.50
Pontet Canet (A. de Luze & Fils), 1895	1.50	.75
Chateau La Rose (A. de Luze & Fils), 1895	2.00	1.00
Chateau Lafite (A. de Luze & Fils), 1895	2.50
Zinfandel (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.00	.60
Medoc, Cruse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.00	.60
St. Julien, Cruse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
Pontet Canet, Cruse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
La Rose, Cruse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	2.00	1.00

SAUTERNES.

	QT.	PT.
Barsac (A. de Luze & Fils), 1881	1.00	.50
Sauterne (A. de Luze & Fils), 1893	1.50	.75
Haut Sauterne (A. de Luze & Fils), 1878	2.00	1.00
California Sauterne (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
Sauterne, Cruse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
Haut Sauterne, Cruse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	2.00	1.00

MINERAL WATERS.

	QT.	PT.
Apollinaris	35	.20
Apollinaris	Splits	.10
Pureoxia Siphons of Seltzer		.20
Pureoxia Siphons, Carbonic		.20
Pureoxia Club Soda		.20
Londonderry Lithia Water	35	.20
Londonderry Lithia Water	Splits	.10

PATRONS WILL PLEASE PAY WAITERS.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

STAGE.

1	2	3
4	5	6	7	8
9	10	11	12	13
14	15	16	17	18
19	20	21	22	23
24	25	26	27	28
29	30	31	32	33
34	35	36	37	38
39	40	41	42	43

AISLE.

		1	2	3
4	5	6	7	8
9	10	11	12	13
14	15	16	17	18
19	20	21	22	23
24	25	26	27	28
29	30	31	32	33
34	35	36	37	38
39	40	41	42	43

MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE.

ENTRANCE. AISLE. ENTRANCE.

1	2	3	4	5
6	7	8	9	10
11	12	13	14	15
16	17	18	19	20
21	22	23	24	25
26	27	28	29	30

AISLE.

1	2	3	4	5
6	7	8	9	10
11	12	13	14	15
16	17	18	19	20
21	22	23	24	25
26	27	28	29	30

HUNTINGTON AVENUE ENTRANCE.

SYMPHONY HALL.

[4]

COLORED PAPER

Symphony Hall "Pops"

SEASON 1904.

C. A. ELLIS,
Manager.

F. R. COMEE,
Assistant Manager.

1351

Admit One

SYMPHONY HALL

Saturday Evening, May. 7

5 "POPS" PRICE 75 CENTS

MAY 7 5 RETAIN CHECK

TABLE B FLOOR

CHA. A. ELLIS, MGR. F. R. COMEE, ASST. MGR.

SYMPHONY HALL

Saturday Evening, May. 7

5 "POPS" PRICE 75 CENTS

MAY 7 5

TABLE C FLOOR

SYMPHONY HALL

Saturday Evening, May. 7

5 "POPS" PRICE 75 CENTS

MAY 7 5 RETAIN CHECK

TABLE D FLOOR

CHA. A. ELLIS, MGR. F. R. COMEE, ASST. MGR.

SYMPHONY HALL

Saturday Evening, May. 7

5 "POPS" PRICE 75 CENTS

MAY 7 5 RETAIN CHECK

CENTRE B Balcony 1

CHA. A. ELLIS, MGR. F. R. COMEE, ASST. MGR.

SYMPHONY HALL

NINETEENTH SEASON.

Commencing MONDAY, MAY 9.

POPS

Grand Orchestra of Fifty

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor

EVERY NIGHT EXCEPT SUNDAY.

Admission, 50 Cents.

Reserved Seats, 25 Cents Extra.

TELEPHONE, 1492 BACK BAY.

Monday, May 9.

1. March. "Pomp and Circumstance" . . . Elgar
2. Overture. "Piccolino" . . . . . Guirod
3. Waltz. "L'Amoureuse" . . . . . Berger
4. Selection. "Mikado" . . . . . Sullivan

5. Overture. "Zampa" . . . . . Herold
6. "Narcissus" . . . . . Nevin
7. Overture. "Fledermaus" . . . . J. Strauss
8. Selection. "Fencing Master" . . . De Koven

9. Intermezzo. "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . . Mascagni
10. Waltz. "New Vienna" . . . . J. Strauss
11. Selection. "Prince of Pilsen" . . . . Luders
12. March. "Up the Street" . . . . . Sousa

Tuesday, May 10.

1. March. "Fatanitza" . . . . . Suppe
2. Overture. "Stradella" . . . . . Flotow
3. Selection. "The Gondoliers" . . . . Sullivan
4. Waltz. "Skaters" . . . . . Waldteufel

5. Overture. "Fra Diavolo" . . . . . Auber
6. Evening Song . . . . . Elgar
7. "Ride of the Walkure" . . . . . Wagner
8. Valse from the Opera, "Eugene Onegin" . Tschaikowsky

9. Overture. "Pique Dame" . . . . . Suppe
10. Waltz. "Kaiser" . . . . . J. Strauss
11. Selection. "Three Little Maids" . . . Rubin
12. March. "Washington Post" . . . . Sousa

Wednesday, May 11.

1. March. "Cruiser Harvard" . . . . . Strube
2. Overture. "Oberon" . . . . . Weber
3. Waltz. "Harlequin en Voyage" . . . . Zach
4. Selection. "Fatanitza" . . . . . Suppe

5. Ballet. "Nut Cracker" . . . . Tschaikowsky
6. "Chanson d'Amour" . . . . . Elgar
7. Selection. "Romeo and Juliet" . . . Gounod
8. Overture. "Semiramide" . . . . Rossini

9. Prelude to "Radcliff" . . . . . Mascagni
10. Waltz. "In Lauschiger Nacht" . . . . Ziehrer
11. Selection. "Yankee Consul" . . . . Robyn
12. March. "Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . Sousa

Thursday, May 12.

1. Persian March . . . . . Strauss
2. Overture. "Les Dragons de Villars" . . Malliard
3. Waltz. "Vienna Blood." . . . . Strauss
4. Selection. "Pinafore." . . . . Sullivan
5. Suite "Peer Gynt." . . . . Grieg
6. Serenade from "Les Contes d'Hoffmann." . Offenbach
7. Bridal Procession from "Lohengrin." . . Wagner
8. Selection from "Traviata." . . . . Verdi
9. Overture. "Pique Dame." . . . . Suppe
10. Valse Bleu. . . . . Berger
11. Selection. "Three Little Maids." . . . Rubin
12. Hungarian March. . . . . Moldauer

Friday, May 13.

1. Coronation March. . . . . Meyerbeer
2. Overture. "Dame Blanche." . . . . Boieldieu
3. Waltz. "Tales from the Vienna Woods." . J. Strauss
4. Selection. "Gondoliers." . . . . Sullivan
5. English Dances. . . . . Cowen
6. Danse Macabre . . . . . Saint-Saens
7. Waltz. "Eugene Onegin." . . . . Tschaikowsky
8. Overture. "Light Cavalry." . . . . Suppe
9. Selection. "Aida." . . . . Verdi
10. Waltz. "Violets." . . . . Waldteufel
11. Selection. "Prince of Pilsen." . . . . Luders
12. March. "King Cotton." . . . . Sousa

Saturday May 14.

1. March. "Tambour Battant." . . . . Messager
2. Overture. "Si j'etais Roi." . . . . Adam
3. Selection. "Toreador." . . . . Caryll
4. Waltz. "Estudiantina." . . . . Waldteufel
5. Ballet Music from "Henry VIII." . . Saint-Saens
6. Largo Solo Violin, Mr. A. Birnbaum. . . . Handel
7. Selection. "Carmen." . . . . Bizet
8. Overture. "Raymond." . . . . A. Thomas
9. Prelude to Act III "Lohengrin." . . . Wagner
10. Waltz. "Grubenlichter." . . . . Zeller
11. Selection. "Peggy from Paris." . . . Loraine
12. March. "Stars and Stripes Forever." . . Sousa

The Libbie Show Print, 242 Dover St., Boston.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, May 3, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 1

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

CLOTHING
CARPETS
RUGS
PORTIERES
BLANKETS
DRAPERIES
FEATHERS
GLOVES
LACE CURTAINS
REAL LACES ETC
CLEANSED OR DYED
AND REFINISHED
PROPERLY BY

LEWANDO'S

17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
2206 Washington St Roxbury
1274 Massachusetts Avenue
Cambridge

Also New York Philadelphia Newport Hartford New Haven Providence Lynn Watertown (Newton delivery) Worcester Washington

Teams Telephones

We also do more fine laundry work than any other establishment

TUESDAY, MAY 3.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Tannhauser"	Wagner
2.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
3.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
4.	WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht"	Ziehrer
5.	FANTASIA on "I Pagliacci" (First time.)	Leoncavallo
6.	PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
7.	HYMN TO ST. CECILIA Violin solo by Mr. A. BIRNBAUM.	Gounod
8.	COUNTRY DANCE	Nevin
9.	OVERTURE, "Orpheus"	Offenbach
10.	SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen"	Luders
11.	WALTZ, "Blue Danube"	J. Strauss
12.	MARCH, "El Capitan"	Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

The Imperial Edition of Classics and Standard Songs.
$1.50 Each.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY OF SONG, containing 44 Songs and 6 Duets of the Great Masters.

THE SOPRANO ALBUM, 42 Classics and Standard Songs.

THE BARITONE ALBUM, 55 Classics and Standard Songs.

No Such Choice Selections ever before Published.

To be had from all Dealers in Boston and

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, New York.

On sale in the Hall or may be ordered of the Waiter

LOWNEY'S
Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece."

One pound packages, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35 and 30 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Caramels and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes.

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

The
Mason & Hamlin
PIANOFORTES
are manufactured on basic scientific principles, from the best obtainable materials and by master mechanics.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Wednesday, May 4, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 2

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. P. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK

VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
8.00 a.m.	8.04 a.m.	Hartford	1.59 p.m.
bL 10.00 "	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.00 "
10.03 "	10.07 "	" "	4.28 "
aL 1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m.	" "	5.57 "
1.03 "	1.07 "	" "	6.58 "
2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.57 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.00 "
aL 5.00 "	5.04 "	" "	10.02 "
a 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

L Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
c 10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.28 p.m.
a 1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	" "	6.58 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	" "	9.00 "
d 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New London; b New London to New York; c New London to Stamford; d Providence to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m., Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Pilgrim" or "Plymouth," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.
362 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 4.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Tambour-battant" . . . . . Messager
2. OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry" . . . . . Suppé
3. SUITE FROM BALLET, "La Belle au Bois Dormant," Tschaikowsky
4. WALTZ, "Gross Wien" . . . . . J. Strauss

5. FANTASIA on "La Bohème" . . . . . Puccini
6. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . . Gounod
7. "NARCISSUS" . . . . . Nevin
8. BALLET from "Gioconda" . . . . . Poncielli
   (First time.)

9. SELECTION, "Robin Hood" . . . . . De Koven
10. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
11. SELECTION, "Peggy from Paris" . . . . . Loraine
12. MARCH, "Tabasco" . . . . . Chadwick

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

President Suspenders
BEAT THE BAND
Better than a Belt
Their construction gives most
Comfort and Service
Try them warm days
Any store, 50c. and $1

Tally-Ho Ginger Ale

Sold at these Concerts

Veuve Chaffard

PURE OLIVE OIL

In Honest Bottles

C. C. HARVEY & COMPANY

144 Boylston Street

Representatives of

KNABE PIANOS

We unhesitatingly assert that the New Knabe Mignon Grand is by far the best small grand piano yet produced by any maker.

THE KNABE PIANO

Is a high-grade, artistic product, suited to the every-day requirements of the American public.

RENTAL DEPARTMENT. We will rent any grade, new or second-hand piano at lower prices than any other house. We make a specialty of summer rentals, and can please you with the qualtty of our stock.

Sole representatives of the Angelus Piano Player. Large circulating music library

C. C. HARVEY & CO., 144 Boylston Street
Telephone, 134 Oxford

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

A. DE LUZE & FILS
BORDEAUX
Clarets and Sauternes

D. LEIDEN
SPARKLING HOCK
AND MOSELLE
Sold at these concerts

Boston, Thursday, May 5, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 3.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 5.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg"	Kral
2.	OVERTURE, "Zampa"	Hérold
3.	WALTZ, "Éternelle Ivresse"	Ganne
4.	SELECTION, "Pirates of Penzance"	Sullivan
5.	OVERTURE, "Raymond"	A. Thomas
6.	LARGO	Handel
	Violin Solo by Mr. A. BIRNBAUM.
7.	BALLET MUSIC from "Boabdil"	Moszkowski
8.	VALSE, Op. 96	B. Godard
9.	OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi"	Adam
10.	WALTZ, "Wine, Woman, and Song"	J. Strauss
11.	SELECTION, "King Dodo"	Luders
12.	MARCH, "Boccaccio"	Suppé

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

Jordan Hall, Tuesday Evening, May 10
J. C. TROWBRIDGE ANNOUNCES
ELTINGE
Only Boston appearance this season. New songs, unique dances, and beautiful gowns.
Assisted by MRS. ANDROS HAWLEY, SOPRANO, MISS GORDON WALKER, HARPIST, and the HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Tickets, $1.00 and 75 cents,
On sale at Herrick's, Heard's, and at Jordan Hall.

Mah Mal
EGYPTIAN
CIGARETTES
Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s	15 cents per box
No. 3s	25 cents per box
No. 1s	30 cents per box
Gold Tip	25 cents per box

Also sold by
S. S. PIERCE CO.
BOSTON, BROOKLINE

SCHOOL OF OPERA
MONS. A. GIRAUDET
PROFESSEUR DU CONSERVATOIRE DE PARIS

PROGRAMME FOR THE MAY EXAMINATION, BOSTON THEATRE

DUO ET SCENA DU CID, . . . Massenet
DUO ET SCENA DE RIGOLETTO, Verdi
DUO ET SCENA D'HAMLET (Hamlet et Ophelie), DUO ET SCENA D'HAMLET (Hamlet et la Regina), Am. Thomas
SCENE DE ROBERT LE DIABLE, . . Meyerbeer
a VALSE INFERNALE
b SCENE ET COUPLETS D'ALICE
c DUO DE BERTRAM ET ALICE SCENE DU 5 ACTE DE L'AFRICAINE, Meyerbeer
SCENE D'AIDA, ... Verdi
SCENE DE MIGNON, ... Am. Thomas a BERCEUSE
b ROMANCE
c DUO
d TRIO FINAL

Mr. GIRAUDET will teach until June 15, and will return from Paris to resume work in Boston, September 20.
For information concerning lessons (singing and coaching), opera work (class and private), repertoire, etc., address the SECRETARY of the

WM. L. WHITNEY INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL FOR VOCALISTS AND PIANISTS
Symphony Chambers, 246 Huntington Avenue

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Friday, May 6, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 4.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 6.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Prophet" . . . . . Meyerbeer
2. OVERTURE, "Martha" . . . . . Flotow
3. WALTZ, "Violettes" . . . . . Waldteufel
4. SELECTION, "Country Girl" . . . . . Monckton

5. BALLET, "Coppelia" . . . . . Delibes
6. INTERMEZZO, "Contes d'Hoffman" . . . . . Offenbach
7. OVERTURE, "1812" . . . . . Tschaikowsky
8. MORNING SONG . . . . . Elgar

9. OVERTURE, "Galatea" . . . . . Suppé
10. WALTZ, "Artist's Life" . . . . . J. Strauss
11. SELECTION, "Three Little Maids" . . . . . Rubin
12. MARCH, "High School Cadets" . . . . . Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

MENASHI AND RED LION CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

Charles B. Perkins & Co.

The following choice selection of our CIGARS Always on sale at Pop Concerts:

Ginita Deliciosos Extra	10c., 3 for 25c.
Matilde Rothschilds	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra	15c., 2 for 25c.
Matilde Perfecto Finos	20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos Extra	15c.
Tedesco Exquisites	15c., 2 for 25c.
Toinette Perfecto	10c., 3 for 25c.

TREMONT THEATRE

EVERY EVENING AT EIGHT

"Another Winner"

HENRY W. SAVAGE'S ANNUAL SPRING PRODUCTION

WOODLAND

A FOREST FANTASY

Book by FRANK PIXLEY
Music by GUSTAV LUDERS
Authors of "PRINCE OF PILSEN" and "KING DODO"

Staged under direction of GEORGE F. MARION

MATINEES WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY AT 2

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad

ROYAL BLUE LINE

ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION

$27.25

Round trip from BOSTON via NEW YORK and WASHINGTON, D.C., with stop-over privileges; a diverse route returning at slightly increased cost.

Illustrated folder and details on application.

ROYAL BLUE LINE OFFICE

No. 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Boston and Albany

3 Trains a day leave Boston, Forenoon, Afternoon, and Evening, for the St. Louis Exposition

PULLMAN SLEEPING CARS run through without change via the

New York Central Lines

EXCURSION RATES.

	A	B	C
From BOSTON	$42.00	$35.00	$28.25
" WORCESTER	40.40	33.70	27.25
" SPRINGFIELD	38.80	32.35	26.25
" PITTSFIELD	38.25	31.90	25.90

TICKET CONDITIONS.

A. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit December 15.
B. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit 60 days.
C. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit 15 days.
Limits and Stop-overs. Stop-overs will be permitted on fares shown in Classes A and B at such points as may be authorized by roads over which ticket reads, within final limit of ticket.

BOSTON & ALBANY'S ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION FOLDER, containing description and illustrations, rates, maps of New York Central Lines between New England and St. Louis, the Exposition Grounds, and City of St. Louis, may be secured by enclosing stamp to the undersigned.

A. S. HANSON, Gen. Pass. Agt., Boston. J. L. WHITE, 366 Washington St., Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

SYMPHONY HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Notice to Advertisers.

The advertising columns in the programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

In order to thoroughly enjoy the Concerts, smoke

Daniel Frank & Co.'s

Barrister Perfecto . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Barrister Conchas . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
N. S. Londres . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Celebridad Perfecto, 10c. each.
Garcia, D. F. & Co.,
Conchas . . 10c. each.
The American Puritanos
Finos . . . . . 15c.
2 for 25c.
The American Concha
Fina Especial . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
The American Perfecto
Fino . . . . . 20c.
3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter Puritanos
Finos . . . . . 15c.
2 for 25c.

On sale at the "POPS"

Boston, Saturday, May 7, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 5.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 7.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Queen of Sheba" . . . . . Gounod
2. OVERTURE, "William Tell" . . . . . Rossini
   Solo Violoncello, Mr. J. KELLER.
3. SELECTION, "Geisha" . . . . . Jones
4. WALTZ, "Morgenblätter" . . . . . J. Strauss

5. FIRE CHARM, from "Die Walküre" . . . . Wagner
6. PRELUDE, "The Deluge" . . . . . Saint-Saëns
   Violin Solo by Mr. A. BIRNBAUM.
7. MARCH, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner
8. SELECTION, "Grand Duchess" . . . . . Offenbach

9. OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant" . . . . . Suppé
10. WALTZ, "España" . . . . . Chabrier
11. SELECTIONS, "Peggy from Paris" . . . . Loraine
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . . Sousa

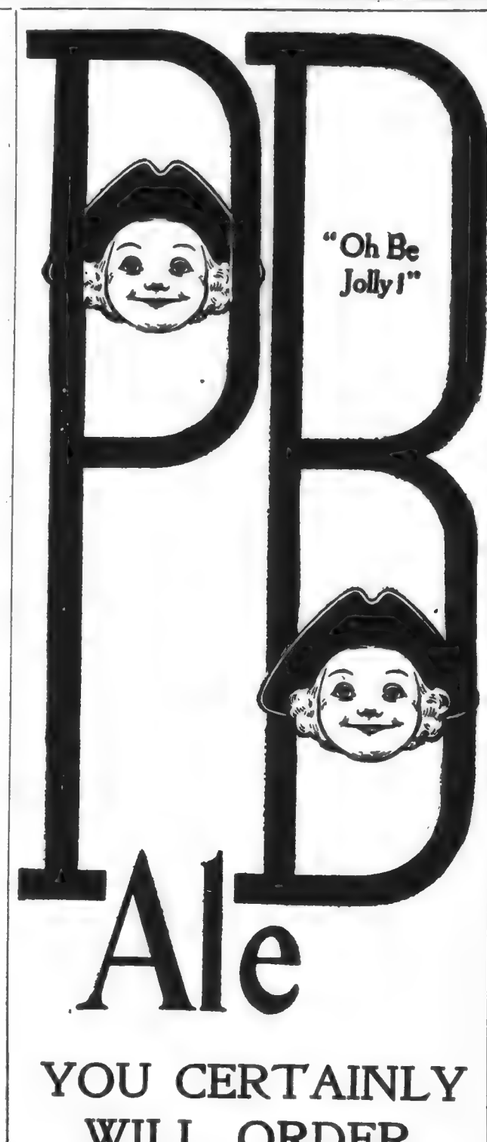
The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

COAT ROOM A.

HUNTINGTON AVENUE ENTRANCE.

Garments, Umbrellas, and Bicycles

CHECKED FREE.



Ale

YOU CERTAINLY WILL ORDER

P. B.

Beckon to the waiter!

NORFOLK CABINET LAGER BEER

THE large sales of Norfolk Cabinet at the "Pops" during past years are entirely due to the sound footing of confidence which experience inspires. Brewed from the highest grades of malt and hops, thoroughly aged, and properly sterilized, in delicacy of flavor and purity it is the ideal table beer.

MASSACHUSETTS BREWERIES CO.
17 Otis Street, Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Monday, May 9, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 6.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 9.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Pomp and Circumstance"	Elgar
2.	OVERTURE, "Zampa"	Hérold
3.	WALTZ, "L'Amoureuse"	Berger
4.	SELECTION, "Mikado"	Sullivan
5.	OVERTURE, "Martha"	Flotow
6.	SERENADE	Widor
7.	OVERTURE, "Fledermaus"	J. Strauss
8.	MARCHE HÉROIQUE (First time.)	Lebailly
9.	INTERMEZZO, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
10.	WALTZ, "New Vienna"	J. Strauss
11.	SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen"	Luders
12.	MARCH, "Up the Street"	Morse

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

ESTABROOK AND EATON. IMPORTERS OF CIGARS. 222-224 WASHINGTON ST. BOSTON

MARGUERITE,
Conchas, . 10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE,
Panetelas, 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA,
Ideals, . . . 10c. each.
E. & E.,
Invincibles, 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande, 10c. each.
MANUEL GARCIA,
Conchas Elegante,
15c., 2 for 25c.
LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmonte, 20c., 3 for 50c.
BOCK & CO.,
Especiales de E. & E.,
20c., 5 for $1.00.
LA CAROLINA,
Perfectos, . . 25c. each.

On sale at the "Pops"

Estabrook & Eaton
CIGAR IMPORTERS
222 and 224 Washington Street.
Masonic Building, Boylston Street.
Merchants Building, 77 Summer St.

376 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

For High Balls
Insist upon getting
Apollinaris
"RENDERS SPIRITS MORE WHOLESOME."

GEO. H. ELLIS CO.
PRINTERS
272 CONGRESS ST.
BOSTON

RED FOX ALE

Unquestionably the finest ale sold to-day.

Red Fox Ale combines delicacy of flavor with highly nourishing qualities.

If hitherto wedded to English brews, try RED FOX ALE.

Massachusetts Breweries Co.
17 Otis Street, Boston

Boston and Albany

3 Trains a day leave Boston, Forenoon, Afternoon, and Evening, for the
St. Louis Exposition
PULLMAN SLEEPING CARS
run through without change via the
New York Central Lines

EXCURSION RATES.

	A	B	C
From BOSTON	$42.00	$35.00	$28.25
" WORCESTER	40.40	33.70	27.25
" SPRINGFIELD	38.80	32.35	26 25
" PITTSFIELD	38.25	31.90	25.90

TICKET CONDITIONS.

A. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit December 15.
B. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit 60 days.
C. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit 15 days.
Limits and Stop-overs. Stop-overs will be permitted on fares shown in Classes A and B at such points as may be authorized by roads over which ticket reads, within final limit of ticket.

BOSTON & ALBANY'S ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION FOLDER, containing description and illustrations, rates, maps of New York Central Lines between New England and St. Louis, the Exposition Grounds, and City of St. Louis, may be secured by enclosing stamp to the undersigned.

A. S. HANSON, Gen. Pass. Agt., Boston. J. L. WHITE, 366 Washington St., Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, May 10, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 7.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 10.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Fatanitza"	Suppé
2.	OVERTURE, "Stradella"	Flotow
3.	SELECTION, "The Gondoliers"	Sullivan
4.	WALTZ, "Skaters"	Waldteufel
5.	OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo"	Auber
6.	FANTASIE, "La Bohème"	Puccini
7.	"RIDE OF THE WALKÜRE"	Wagner
8.	VALSE from the Opera, "Eugene Onegin"	Tschaikowsky
9.	OVERTURE, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "Kaiser"	J. Strauss
11.	SELECTION, "Three Little Maids"	Rubin
12.	MARCH, "Washington Post"	Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

TRADE MARK

Wood, Pollard & Co.

Importers and Grocers.

101, 103, 105 Causeway Street
113, 115, 117 Causeway Street
263, 265, 267 Friend Street
172, 174 Summer Street
621, 623, 625 Atlantic Avenue
264, 266, 268 Purchase Street
Dewey Square

CORDOVA
Imported Cigars

DON RODRIGO
Clear Havana Cigars

GRAFTON
Domestic Cigars

Wood, Pollard & Co.
BOSTON

BÜRGERLICHES BRÄUHAUS
PILSNER AND MÜNCHNER HOF BRÄU BIERS
IN BOTTLES
ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS
AND BY THE
Harrison Bottling Co., 33 and 34 Lewis Wharf
Telephone, Richmond 1119
SOLE NEW ENGLAND AGENTS FOR
Königliches Hofbräuhaus, München, Bavaria. Bürgerliches Bräuhaus, Würzburg, Bavaria
William A. Miles & Co.'s New York Croton Brewery Ales.
Iroquois Brewing Co. Buffalo (N.Y.) Beers.
Boston Agents for Frank Jones Portsmouth Ales.

Compared with any other table water, whether foreign or domestic,

Londonderry Lithia Water

excels in brilliancy and taste, and is universally conceded to be the most satisfactory diluent for wines and liquors: it blends perfectly.
"Reliable goods and an attractive package."
The sparkling in quarts, pints, and splits. The still in half-gallon bottles.

The only Lithia Water sold at these Concerts

McCORMICK BREWERY CO.'S
TRIUNE ALE

Used exclusively on draft at these concerts

TRIUNE
REGISTERED TRADE MARK
THREE IN ONE
HOPS WATER ALE MALT

Also in bottles

Telephone, 144 Roxbury BOSTON

DRINK

HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.

JOS. GAHM & SON, New England Agents
125 Purchase Street

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Wednesday, May 11, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 8.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 11.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Cruiser Harvard" . . . . . Strube
2. OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor" . . . . Nicolai
3. WALTZ, "Harlequin en Voyage" . . . . . Zach
4. SELECTION, "Fatanitza" . . . . . Suppé

5. FANTASY, "La Bohème" . . . . . Puccini
6. TANNHAUSER MARCH . . . . . Wagner
7. INTERMEZZO, "Contes d'Hoffman" . . . . . Offenbach
8. OVERTURE, "Semiramide" . . . . . Rossini

9. INTERMEZZO, "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . . . Mascagni
10. WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht" . . . . . Ziehrer
11. SELECTION, "Yankee Consul" . . . . . Robyn
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . . Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

CLOTHING
CARPETS
RUGS
PORTIERES
BLANKETS
DRAPERIES
FEATHERS
GLOVES
LACE CURTAINS
REAL LACES ETC
CLEANSED OR DYED
AND REFINISHED
PROPERLY BY

LEWANDO'S

17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
2206 Washington St Roxbury
1274 Massachusetts Avenue
Cambridge

Also New York Philadelphia Newport Hartford New Haven Providence Lynn Watertown (Newton delivery) Worcester Washington

Teams Telephones

We also do more fine laundry work than any other establishment

To the Professional Singer
To the Teacher of Singing
To the Pupil

We can offer the largest variety of English Songs, composed by the best known Musicians.

Songs in all styles and in keys to suit all voices.

Write for Lists.

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, New York.

On sale in the Hall or may be ordered of the Waiter

LOWNEY'S
Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece."

One pound packages, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35 and 30 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Caramels and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes.

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

The
Mason & Hamlin
PIANOFORTES
are manufactured on basic scientific principles, from the best obtainable materials and by master mechanics.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Thursday, May 12, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 9.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK
VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
8.00 a.m.	8.04 a.m.	Hartford	1.59 p.m.
bL 10.00 "	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.00 "
10.03 "	10.07 "	" "	4.28 "
aL 1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m.	" "	5.57 "
1.03 "	1.07 "	" "	6.58 "
2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.57 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.00 "
aL 5.00 "	5.04 "	" "	10.02 "
a 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

L Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
c 10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.28 p.m.
a 1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	" "	6.58 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	" "	9.00 "
d 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New London; b New London to New York; c New London to Stamford; d Providence to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m., Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Pilgrim" or "Plymouth," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.
362 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.

THURSDAY, MAY 12.

PROGRAMME.

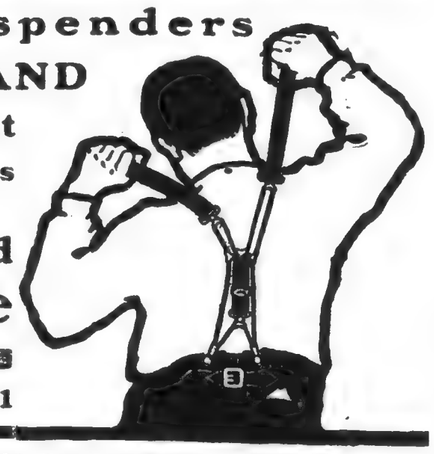
1. PERSIAN MARCH . . . . . Strauss
2. OVERTURE, "Les Dragons de Villars" . . . Malliard
3. WALTZ, "Vienna Blood" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Pinafore" . . . . . Sullivan

5. SUITE, "Peer Gynt" . . . . . Grieg
6. "CHANSON D'AMOUR" . . . . . Elgar
7. BRIDAL PROCESSION from "Lohengrin" . . . Wagner
8. SELECTION from "Traviata" . . . . Verdi

9. OVERTURE, "Banditen Streiche" . . . . . Suppé
10. VALSE BLEU . . . . . Berger
11. SELECTION, "Three Little Maids" . . . . Rubin
12. HUNGARIAN MARCH . . . . . Moldauer

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

President Suspenders
BEAT THE BAND
Better than a Belt
Their construction gives most
Comfort and Service
Try them warm days.
Any store, 50c. and $1



Tally-Ho Ginger Ale

Sold at these Concerts

Better than Coffee
Richer than Coffee
Nine-tenths Coffee

C. C. HARVEY & COMPANY
144 Boylston Street
Representatives of
KNABE PIANOS

We unhesitatingly assert that the New Knabe Mignon Grand is by far the best small grand piano yet produced by any maker.

THE KNABE PIANO

Is a high-grade, artistic product, suited to the every-day requirements of the American public.

RENTAL DEPARTMENT. We will rent any grade, new or second-hand piano at lower prices than any other house. We make a specialty of summer rentals, and can please you with the quality of our stock.

Sole representatives of the Angelus Piano Player. Large circulating music library

C. C. HARVEY & CO., 144 Boylston Street
Telephone, 134 Oxford

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Foster's Bugle Brand
Bottling

Bass Ale

Sold at these concerts

Boston, Friday, May 13, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 10.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 13.

PROGRAMME.

1.	CORONATION MARCH	Meyerbeer
2.	OVERTURE, "Dame Blanche"	Boieldieu
3.	WALTZ, "Tales from the Vienna Woods"	J. Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Gondoliers"	Sullivan
5.	ENGLISH DANCES	Cowen
6.	MALAGUENA from "Boabdil"	Moszkowski
7.	WALTZ, "Eugene Onegin"	Tschaikowsky
8.	OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry"	Suppé
9.	SELECTION, "Aïda"	Verdi
10.	WALTZ, "Violets"	Waldteufel
11.	SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen"	Luders
12.	MARCH, "King Cotton"	Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

The BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PROGRAMME

For the twenty-four Boston Concerts, with Historical and Descriptive Notes by Philip Hale. Bound copies of the Programme for the entire season can be had at $1.50 by applying before the last concert. Address all communications to

F. R. COMEE,
Symphony Hall, Boston.

Mah Mal

EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s	15 cents per box
No. 3s	25 cents per box
No. 1s	30 cents per box
Gold Tip	25 cents per box

Also sold by
S. S. PIERCE CO.
BOSTON, BROOKLINE

WM. L. WHITNEY
INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL FOR VOCALISTS

FLORENCE BOSTON PARIS

SYMPHONY CHAMBERS

246 Huntington Avenue BOSTON, MASS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

MENASHI
AND
RED LION
CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

Boston, Saturday, May 14, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 11.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 14.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Tambour Battant" . . . . . Messager
2. OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi" . . . . . Adam
3. SELECTION, "Toreador" . . . . . Caryll
4. WALTZ, "Estudiantina" . . . . . Waldteufel

5. BALLET MUSIC from "Henry VIII." . . . . Saint-Saëns
6. LARGO . . . . . Handel
   Solo violin, Mr. A. BIRNBAUM.
7. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet
8. OVERTURE, "Raymond" . . . . . A. Thomas

9. PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin" . . . Wagner
10. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
11. SELECTION, "Peggy from Paris" . . . . . Loraine
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . . Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

Charles B. Perkins & Co.

The following choice selection of our CIGARS Always on sale at Pop Concerts:

Ginita Deliciosos Extra	10c., 3 for 25c.
Matilde Rothschilds	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra	15c., 2 for 25c.
Matilde Perfecto Finos	20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos Extra	15c.
Tedesco Exquisites	15c., 2 for 25c.
Toinette Perfecto	10c., 3 for 25c.

TREMONT THEATRE

EVERY EVENING AT EIGHT

"Another Winner"

HENRY W. SAVAGE'S
ANNUAL SPRING PRODUCTION

WOODLAND

A FOREST FANTASY

Book by FRANK PIXLEY
Music by GUSTAV LUDERS
Authors of "PRINCE OF PILSEN" and "KING DODO"

Staged under direction of
GEORGE F. MARION

MATINEES WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY AT 2

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad

ROYAL BLUE LINE

ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION

$27.25

Round trip from BOSTON via NEW YORK and WASHINGTON, D.C., with stop-over privileges; a diverse route returning at slightly increased cost.

Illustrated folder and details on application.

ROYAL BLUE LINE OFFICE

No. 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

RED FOX ALE

Unquestionably the finest ale sold to-day.

Red Fox Ale combines delicacy of flavor with highly nourishing qualities.

If hitherto wedded to English brews, try RED FOX ALE.

Massachusetts Breweries Co.
17 Otis Street, Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

SYMPHONY HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Notice to Advertisers.

The advertising columns in the programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

In order to thoroughly enjoy the Concerts, smoke

Daniel Frank & Co.'s

Barrister Perfecto . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Barrister Conchas . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
N. S. Londres . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Celebridad Perfecto, 10c. each.
Garcia, D. F. & Co., Conchas . . 10c. each.
The American Puritanos Finos . . . . . 15c.
2 for 25c.
The American Concha Fina Especial . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
The American Perfecto Fino . . . . . 20c.
3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter Puritanos Finos . . . . . 15c.
2 for 25c.

On sale at the "POPS"

Boston, Monday, May 16, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 12.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 16.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCHE MILITAIRE	Ganne
2.	OVERTURE, "Galatea"	Suppé
3.	WALTZ, "Thousand and One Nights"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Faust"	Gounod
5.	SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland"	Herbert
6.	"NARCISSUS"	Nevin
7.	BALLET MUSIC, "Gioconda"	Poncielli
8.	OVERTURE, "1812"	Tschaikowski
9.	SELECTION, "The Brigands"	Offenbach
10.	WALTZ, "Barcarolle"	Waldteufel
11.	SELECTION, "Yankee Consul"	Robyn
12.	MARCH, "King Cotton"	Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

COAT ROOM A.

HUNTINGTON AVENUE ENTRANCE.

Garments, Umbrellas, and Bicycles

CHECKED FREE.

Ale

YOU CERTAINLY WILL ORDER

P. B.

Beckon to the waiter!

NORFOLK CABINET LAGER BEER

THE large sales of Norfolk Cabinet at the "Pops" during past years are entirely due to the sound footing of confidence which experience inspires. Brewed from the highest grades of malt and hops, thoroughly aged, and properly sterilized, in delicacy of flavor and purity it is the ideal table beer.

MASSACHUSETTS BREWERIES CO.
17 Otis Street, Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

ESTABROOK AND EATON. IMPORTERS OF CIGARS. 222-224 WASHINGTON ST. BOSTON

MARGUERITE,
Conchas, . 10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE,
Panetelas, 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA,
Ideals, . . . 10c. each.
E. & E.,
Invincibles, 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande, 10c. each.
MANUEL GARCIA,
Conchas Elegante,
15c., 2 for 25c.
LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmonte, 20c., 3 for 50c.
BOCK & CO.,
Especiales de E. & E.,
20c., 5 for $1.00.
LA CAROLINA,
Perfectos, . . 25c. each.

On sale at the "Pops"

Estabrook & Eaton
CIGAR IMPORTERS
222 and 224 Washington Street.
Mason c Building, Boylston Street.
Merchan's Building, 77 Summer St.

376 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Boston, Tuesday, May 17, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 13.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 17.

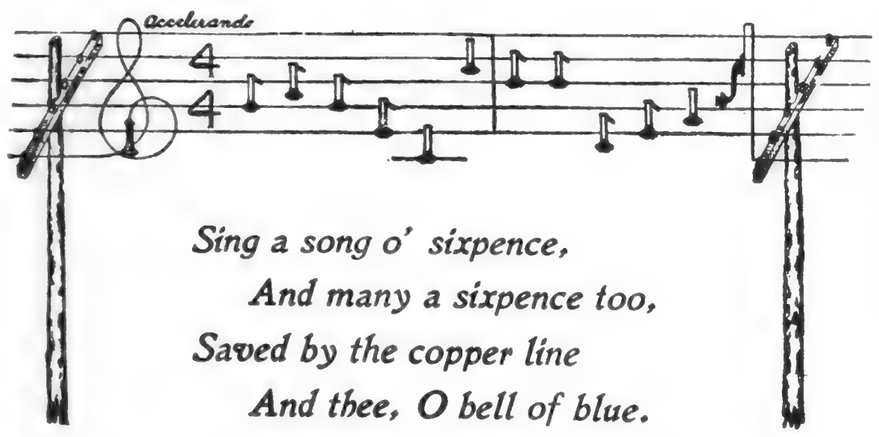
PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Obersteiger"	Zeller
2.	OVERTURE, "Stradella"	Flotow
3.	SELECTION, "Aïda"	Verdi
4.	WALTZ, "Doctrinen"	Ed. Strauss
5.	BERCEUSE	Clayton Johns
6.	PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
7.	FANTASIE, "La Bohème"	Puccini
8.	VALSE CAPRICE	Rubinstein
9.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
10.	WALTZ, "España"	Chabrier
11.	SELECTION, "King Dodo"	Luders
12.	MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg"	Kral

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

For High Balls
Insist upon getting
Apollinaris
"RENDERS SPIRITS MORE WHOLESOME."

GEO. H. ELLIS CO.
PRINTERS
272 CONGRESS ST.
BOSTON



Sing a song o' sixpence,
And many a sixpence too,
Saved by the copper line
And thee, O bell of blue.

The above will be translated into prose, with many additional facts, to any body inquiring at or writing to

New England Telephone & Telegraph Company
Contract Department
101 Milk Street, Boston, Mass. Telephone, Main 6028

Boston and Albany

3 Trains a day leave Boston, Forenoon, Afternoon, and Evening, for the
St. Louis Exposition
PULLMAN SLEEPING CARS
run through without change via the
New York Central Lines

EXCURSION RATES.

	A	B	C
From BOSTON	$42.00	$35.00	$28.25
" WORCESTER	40.40	33.70	27.25
" SPRINGFIELD	38.80	32.35	26.25
" PITTSFIELD	38.25	31.90	25.90

TICKET CONDITIONS.
A. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit December 15.
B. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit 60 days.
C. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit 15 days.
Limits and Stop-overs. Stop-overs will be permitted on fares shown in Classes A and B at such points as may be authorized by roads over which ticket reads, within final limit of ticket.

BOSTON & ALBANY'S ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION FOLDER, containing description and illustrations, rates, maps of New York Central Lines between New England and St. Louis, the Exposition Grounds, and City of St. Louis, may be secured by enclosing stamp to the undersigned.
A. S. HANSON, Gen. Pass Agt., Boston. J. L. WHITE, 366 Washington St., Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Wednesday, May 18, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 14.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 18.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Loraine" . . . . . Ganne
2. OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant" . . . . . Suppé
   Solo Violoncello, Mr. J. KELLER.
3. WALTZ, "Éternelle Ivresse" . . . . . Ganne
4. SELECTION, "Giroflé-Girofla" . . . . . Lecocq
5. MALAGUENA from "Boabdil" . . . . . Moszkowski
6. SCHERZO AND WEDDING MARCH from "Midsummer Night's Dream" Music . . . . . Mendelssohn
7. OVERTURE, "Raymond" . . . . . A. Thomas
8. SELECTION "Traviata" . . . . . Verdi
9. GRACEFUL DANCE . . . . . Sullivan
10. WALTZ, "Artist's Life" . . . . . Strauss
11. SELECTION, "King Dodo" . . . . . Luders
12. MARCH, "Radetzky" . . . . . Strauss

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

TRADE MARK

Wood, Pollard & Co.

Importers and Grocers.

101, 103, 105 Causeway Street
113, 115, 117 Causeway Street
263, 265, 267 Friend Street
172, 174 Summer Street
621, 623, 625 Atlantic Avenue
264, 266, 268 Purchase Street
Dewey Square

CORDOVA
Imported Cigars

DON RODRIGO
Clear Havana Cigars

GRAFTON
Domestic Cigars

Wood, Pollard & Co.
BOSTON

BÜRGERLICHES BRÄUHAUS
PILSNER AND MÜNCHNER HOF BRÄU BIERS
IN BOTTLES
ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS
AND BY THE
Harrison Bottling Co., 33 and 34 Lewis Wharf
Telephone, Richmond 1119
SOLE NEW ENGLAND AGENTS FOR
Königliches Hofbräuhaus, München, Bavaria. Bürgerliches Bräuhaus, Würzburg, Bavaria
William A. Miles & Co.'s New York Croton Brewery Ales.
Iroquois Brewing Co. Buffalo (N.Y.) Beers.
Boston Agents for Frank Jones Portsmouth Ales.

Compared with any other table water, whether foreign or domestic,

Londonderry Lithia Water

excels in brilliancy and taste, and is universally conceded to be the most satisfactory diluent for wines and liquors: it blends perfectly.
"Reliable goods and an attractive package."
The sparkling in quarts, pints, and splits. The still in half-gallon bottles.

The only Lithia Water sold at these Concerts

McCORMICK BREWERY CO.'S
TRIUNE ALE

Used exclusively on draft at these concerts

TRIUNE
REGISTERED TRADE MARK
THREE IN ONE
HOPS WATER ALE MALT

Also in bottles

Telephone, 144 Roxbury BOSTON

DRINK

HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.

JOS. GAHM & SON, New England Agents
125 Purchase Street

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Thursday, May 19, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 15.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

CLOTHING
CARPETS
RUGS
PORTIERES
BLANKETS
DRAPERIES
FEATHERS
GLOVES
LACE CURTAINS
REAL LACES ETC
CLEANSED OR DYED
AND REFINISHED
PROPERLY BY

LEWANDO'S

17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
2206 Washington St Roxbury
1274 Massachusetts Avenue
Cambridge

Also New York Philadelphia Newport Hartford New Haven Providence Lynn Watertown (Newton delivery) Worcester Washington

Teams Telephones

We also do more fine laundry work than any other establishment

THURSDAY, MAY 19.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Tambour Battant" . . . . . Messager
2. SUITE, "Peer Gynt" . . . . . Grieg
3. WALTZ, "Roses from the South" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Country Girl" . . . . . Monckton

5. BALLET MUSIC from "Gioconda" . . . . Poncielli
6. HYMN TO ST. CECILIA . . . . . Gounod
   Solo Violin, Mr. A. BIRNBAUM
7. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet
8. OVERTURE, "Masaniello" . . . . . Auber

9. OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry" . . . . . Suppé
10. WALTZ, "España" . . . . . Waldteufel
11. SELECTION, "Three Little Maids" . . . . Rubin
12. MARCH, "King Cotton" . . . . . Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

French Waltzes by Famous Writers.

Successful in All Countries.

DANS LES LARMES . . .	by R. BERGER.
VALSE TRISTE . . .	" "
VALSE ENCHANTEE . .	" "
REPONSE A AMOUREUSE .	" "
PETITE ANNONCE . . .	" "
LA FRANCE	J. MARTORELL
ETERNELLE IVRESSE . .	L. GANNE

To be had from all Music Stores or

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, New York.

On sale in the Hall or may be ordered of the Waiter

LOWNEY'S
Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece."

One pound packages, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35 and 30 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Caramels and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes.

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

The
Mason & Hamlin
PIANOFORTES
are manufactured on basic scientific principles, from the best obtainable materials and by master mechanics.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Friday, May 20, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 16.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK
VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
8.00 a.m.	8.04 a.m.	Hartford	1.59 p.m.
bL 10.00 "	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.00 "
10.03 "	10.07 "	" "	4.28 "
aL 1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m.	" "	5.57 "
1.03 "	1.07 "	" "	6.58 "
2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.57 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.00 "
aL 5.00 "	5.04 "	" "	10.02 "
a 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

L Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
c 10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.28 p.m.
a 1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	" "	6.58 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	" "	9.00 "
d 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New London; b New London to New York; c New London to Stamford; d Providence to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m., Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Pilgrim" or "Plymouth," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.
362 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.

FRIDAY, MAY 20.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Queen of Sheba" . . . . . Gounod
2. OVERTURE, "Mignon" . . . . . A. Thomas
3. SELECTION, "Fortune Teller" . . . . . Herbert
4. WALTZ, "Violettes". . . . . Waldteufel
5. SUITE FROM BALLET, "La Belle au Bois Dormant," Tschaikowsky
   (a) Andante
   (b) Valse
6. PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin" . . . Wagner
7. SCENE AND WALTZ, "Gretna Green" . . . . Guiraud
8. SELECTION, "Aïda" . . . . . Verdi
9. OVERTURE, "Orpheus" . . . . . Offenbach
10. WALTZ, "Morgenblätter". . . . . J. Strauss
11. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert
12. MARCH, "Up the Street" . . . . . Morse

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

Tally-Ho Ginger Ale

Sold at these Concerts

Veuve Chaffard

PURE OLIVE OIL

In Honest Bottles

Shirley, Mass.
Doubly Famous for its Nineteenth Century Shakers
Twentieth Century Suspenders Known everywhere as the
"PRESIDENT"
Refuse all substitutes

C. C. HARVEY & COMPANY

144 Boylston Street

Representatives of

KNABE PIANOS

We unhesitatingly assert that the New Knabe Mignon Grand is by far the best small grand piano yet produced by any maker.

THE KNABE PIANO

Is a high-grade, artistic product, suited to the every-day requirements of the American public.

RENTAL DEPARTMENT. We will rent any grade, new or second-hand piano at lower prices than any other house. We make a specialty of summer rentals, and can please you with the quality of our stock.

Sole representatives of the Angelus Piano Player. Large circulating music library

C. C. HARVEY & CO., 144 Boylston Street
Telephone, 134 Oxford

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Saturday, May 21, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 17.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 21.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Tambour Battant" . . . . . Messager
2. OVERTURE, "Martha" . . . . . Flotow
3. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . . Gounod
4. WALTZ, "Barcarolle" . . . . . Waldteufel

5. BALLET MUSIC, "Gioconda" . . . . . Ponchielli
6. INTERMEZZO, "Contes d'Hoffman" . . . . Offenbach
7. SUITE from Ballet, "La Belle au Bois Dormant" . Tschaikowsky
8. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert

9. OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant" . . . . . Suppé
   Solo Violoncello, Mr. J. KELLER.
10. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
11. SELECTION, "Peggy from Paris" . . . . . Loraine
12. MARCH, "El Capitan" . . . . . Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

A. DE LUZE & FILS
BORDEAUX
Clarets and Sauternes

D. LEIDEN
SPARKLING HOCK
AND MOSELLE
Sold at these concerts

Champagne Nectar
"DUFFY'S 1842" CIDER
Sparkling. Non-alcoholic
THE BEST FAMILY BEVERAGE
Served at the Pops

HAYNES-PIPER COMPANY
NEW ENGLAND AGENTS,
17 LEWIS WHARF BOSTON, MASS.

Mah Mal
EGYPTIAN
CIGARETTES
Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s . . 15 cents per box
No. 3s . . 25 cents per box
No. 1s . . 30 cents per box
Gold Tip . . 25 cents per box

Also sold by
S. S. PIERCE CO.
BOSTON, BROOKLINE

WM. L. WHITNEY
INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL FOR VOCALISTS
FLORENCE BOSTON PARIS

SYMPHONY CHAMBERS
246 Huntington Avenue BOSTON, MASS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Monday, May 23, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 18.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

MENASHI AND RED LION CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

MONDAY, MAY 23.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Zaragoza"	Ortega
2.	OVERTURE, "Phèdre"	Massenet
3.	WALTZ, "Vienna Beauties"	Ziehrer
4.	SELECTION, "Serenade"	Herbert
5.	"AU CLAIR DE LUNE"	Maquarre
6.	POLONAISE	Liszt
7.	"LETTRE DE MANON"	Gillet
8.	SELECTION, "Grande Duchesse"	Offenbach
9.	OVERTURE, "Galatea"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "Roses from the South"	Strauss
11.	SELECTION, "Yankee Consul"	Robyn
12.	MARCH, "Teufel"	Suppé

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

Charles B. Perkins & Co.

The following choice selection of our CIGARS Always on sale at Pop Concerts:

Ginita Deliciosos Extra	10c., 3 for 25c.
Matilde Rothschilds	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra	15c., 2 for 25c.
Matilde Perfecto Finos	20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos Extra	15c.
Tedesco Exquisites	15c., 2 for 25c.
Toinette Perfecto	10c., 3 for 25c.

TREMONT THEATRE

EVERY EVENING AT EIGHT

"Another Winner"

HENRY W. SAVAGE'S ANNUAL SPRING PRODUCTION

WOODLAND

A FOREST FANTASY

Book by FRANK PIXLEY
Music by GUSTAV LUDERS
Authors of "PRINCE OF PILSEN" and "KING DODO"

Staged under direction of GEORGE F. MARION

MATINEES WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY AT 2

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad

ROYAL BLUE LINE

ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION

$27.25

Round trip from BOSTON via NEW YORK and WASHINGTON, D.C., with stop-over privileges; a diverse route returning at slightly increased cost.

Illustrated folder and details on application.

ROYAL BLUE LINE OFFICE

No. 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

RED FOX ALE

Unquestionably the finest ale sold to-day.

Red Fox Ale combines delicacy of flavor with highly nourishing qualities.

If hitherto wedded to English brews, try RED FOX ALE.

Massachusetts Breweries Co.
17 Otis Street, Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

SYMPHONY HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Boston, Tuesday, May 24, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 19.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

Notice to Advertisers.

The advertising columns in the programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

In order to thoroughly enjoy the Concerts, smoke

Daniel Frank & Co.'s

Barrister Perfecto . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Barrister Conchas . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
N. S. Londres . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Celebridad Perfecto, 10c. each.
Garcia, D. F. & Co.,
Conchas . . 10c. each.
The American Puritanos
Finos . . . . . 15c.
2 for 25c.
The American Concha
Fina Especial . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
The American Perfecto
Fino . . . . . 20c.
3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter Puritanos
Finos . . . . . 15c.
2 for 25c.

On sale at the "POPS"

TUESDAY, MAY 24.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Vienna always Vienna" . . . . . Schrammel
2. OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi" . . . . . Adam
3. SELECTION, "Babette" . . . . . Herbert
4. WALTZ, "Barcarole" . . . . . Waldteufel

5. OVERTURE, "Euphrosyne" . . . . . Converse
6. INTERMEZZO, "Contes d'Hoffmann" . . . . . Offenbach
7. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . . Gounod
8. OVERTURE, "Semiramide" . . . . . Rossini

9. CZARINA MAZOURKA . . . . . Ganne
10. WALTZ, "Harlequin en Voyage" . . . . . Zach
11. SELECTION, "King Dodo" . . . . . Luders
12. MARCH, "Serenade" . . . . . Herbert

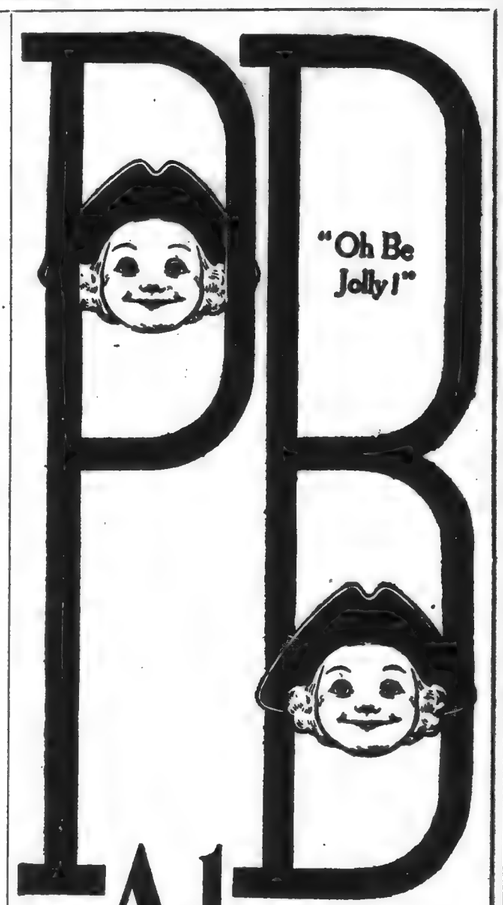
The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

COAT ROOM A.

HUNTINGTON AVENUE ENTRANCE.

Garments, Umbrellas, and Bicycles

CHECKED FREE.



P B Ale

YOU CERTAINLY WILL ORDER

P. B.

Beckon to the waiter!

NORFOLK CABINET LAGER BEER

THE large sales of Norfolk Cabinet at the "Pops" during past years are entirely due to the sound footing of confidence which experience inspires. Brewed from the highest grades of malt and hops, thoroughly aged, and properly sterilized, in delicacy of flavor and purity it is the ideal table beer.

MASSACHUSETTS BREWERIES CO.
17 Otis Street, Boston

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

ESTABROOK AND EATON.
IMPORTERS OF CIGARS. 222-224 WASHINGTON ST. BOSTON.

MARGUERITE,
Conchas, . 10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE,
Panetelas, 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA,
Ideals, . . . 10c. each.
E. & E.,
Invincibles, 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande, 10c. each.
MANUEL GARCIA,
Conchas Elegante,
15c., 2 for 25c.
LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmonte, 20c., 3 for 50c.

Boston, Wednesday, May 25, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 20.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 25.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa
2.	OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
3.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
4.	WALTZ, "The Skaters"	Waldteufel
5.	PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
6.	LARGO	Handel
	Solo Violin, Mr. A. BIRNBAUM.
7.	OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppé
	Solo Violoncello, Mr. J. KELLER.
8.	SELECTION, "Pinafore"	Sullivan
9.	SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
10.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
11.	SELECTION, "Faust"	Gounod
12.	MARCH, "Up the Street"	Morse

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

TRADE MARK

Wood, Pollard & Co.

Importers and Grocers.

101, 103, 105 Causeway Street
113, 115, 117 Causeway Street
263, 265, 267 Friend Street
172, 174 Summer Street
621, 623, 625 Atlantic Avenue
264, 266, 268 Purchase Street
Dewey Square

CORDOVA

"POP" CONCERT
SYMPHONY HALL
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

TWENTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION
National Electric Light Association
MAY TWENTY-FIFTH NINETEEN HUNDRED AND FOUR

MENU

SANDWICHES PRETZELS CHEESE
ICE CREAM CAKE
LAGER BEER ON DRAUGHT OR BOTTLED
ALE ON DRAUGHT OR BOTTLED
RHINE WINE CUP
CLARET PUNCH LEMONADE
GINGER ALE MINERAL WATER
CIGARS CIGARETTES

Guests will please write their orders on checks supplied by waiters and sign their names.

additional facts, to any body
New England Telephone
Contract
101 Milk Street, Boston, Mass.

inquiring at or writing to & Telegraph Company Department
Telephone, Main 6028

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON
THE "POPS"
National Electric Light Association
WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 25, 1904

ORDER BLANK
Please fill out and hand to waiter.

Sign here. _____

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Wednesday, May 25, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 20.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 25.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa
2.	OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
3.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
4.	WALTZ, "The Skaters"	Waldteufel
5.	PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
6.	LARGO (Solo Violin, Mr. A. BIRNBAUM.)	Handel
7.	OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant" (Solo Violoncello, Mr. J. KELLER.)	Suppé
8.	SELECTION, "Pinafore"	Sullivan
9.	SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
10.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
11.	SELECTION, "Faust"	Gounod
12.	MARCH, "Up the Street"	Morse

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

ESTABROOK AND EATON. IMPORTERS OF CIGARS. 222-224 WASHINGTON ST. BOSTON

MARGUERITE, Conchas, . 10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE, Panetelas, 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA, Ideals, . . . 10c. each.
E. & E., Invincibles, 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES, Londres Grande, 10c. each.
MANUEL GARCIA, Conchas Elegante, 15c., 2 for 25c.
LORDS OF ENGLAND, Delmonte, 20c., 3 for 50c.

E. & E., c., 5 for $1.00.
IA, . . 25c. each.

the "Pops"

& Eaton IPORTERS
ington Street.
Boylston Street.
g, 77 Summer St.

Worcester, Mass.

TRADE MARK

Wood, Pollard & Co.

Importers and Grocers.

101, 103, 105 Causeway Street
113, 115, 117 Causeway Street
263, 265, 267 Friend Street
172, 174 Summer Street
621, 623, 625 Atlantic Avenue
264, 266, 268 Purchase Street
Dewey Square

CORDOVA

For Hig Insist upo
Apolli
"RENDERS SPI

Sing a song o' sixpence,
And many a sixpence too,
Saved by the copper line
And thee, O bell of blue.

translated into prose, with many additional facts, to anybody inquiring at or writing to

New England Telephone & Telegraph Company

Contract Department

101 Milk Street, Boston, Mass. Telephone, Main 6028

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON

THE "POPS"

National Electric Light Association

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 25, 1904

ORDER BLANK

Please fill out and hand to waiter.

Sign here. _____

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Wednesday, May 25, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 20.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 25.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa
2.	OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
3.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
4.	WALTZ, "The Skaters"	Waldteufel
5.	PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
6.	LARGO	Handel
	Solo Violin, Mr. A. BIRNBAUM.
7.	OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppé
	Solo Violoncello, Mr. J. KELLER.
8.	SELECTION, "Pinafore"	Sullivan
9.	SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
10.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
11.	SELECTION, "Faust"	Gounod
12.	MARCH, "Up the Street"	Morse

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

ESTABROOK AND EATON. IMPORTERS OF CIGARS. 222-224 WASHINGTON ST. BOSTON

MARGUERITE,
Conchas, . 10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE,
Panetelas, 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA,
Ideals, . . . 10c. each.
E. & E.,
Invincibles, 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande, 10c. each.
MANUEL GARCIA,
Conchas Elegante,
15c., 2 for 25c.
LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmonte, 20c.,

&
5

Sa

additional facts, t

New England T

C

101 Milk Stree

alls

ng

aris

WHOLESOME."

TRADE MARK

Wood, Pollard & Co.

Importers and Grocers.

101, 103, 105 Causeway Street
113, 115, 117 Causeway Street
263, 265, 267 Friend Street
172, 174 Summer Street
621, 623, 625 Atlantic Avenue
264, 266, 268 Purchase Street
Dewey Square

CORDOVA
Imported Cigars
DON RODRIGO
Clear Havana Cigars
GRAFTON
Domestic Cigars

Wood, Pollard & Co.
BOSTON

ston and bany

3 Trains a day leave Boston, Forenoon, Afternoon, and Evening, for the

St. Louis Exposition

LLMAN SLEEPING CARS
run through without change via the

York Central Lines

EXCURSION RATES.

	A	B	C
STON	$42.00	$35.00	$28.25
ORCESTER	40.40	33.70	27.25
RINGFIELD	38.80	32.35	26 25
TTSFIELD	38.25	31.90	25.90

TICKET CONDITIONS.

ckets on sale April 25 ; return limit December 15.
ckets on sale April 25 ; return limit 60 days.
ckets on sale April 25 ; return limit 15 days.
s and Stop-overs. Stop-overs will be permitted on fares shown in Classes t such points as may be authorized by roads over which ticket reads, within of ticket.

ON & ALBANY'S ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION FOLDER, containing de- nd illustrations, rates, maps of New York Central Lines between New England ouis, the Exposition Grounds, and City of St. Louis, may be secured by en- mp to the undersigned.

NSON, Gen. Pass. Agt., Boston. J. L. WHITE, 366 Washington St., Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Thursday, May 26, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 21.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 26.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Prophet" . . . . . Meyerbeer
2. SUITE from Ballet, "Sylvia" . . . . . Delibes
3. SELECTION, "Aïda" . . . . . Verdi
4. WALTZ, "Vienna Blood" . . . . . Strauss

5. PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin" . . . Wagner
6. a. MELODIE . . . . . Schmedes
   b. "FROM MY COUNTRY" . . . . . Birnbaum
   Solo Violin, Mr. A. BIRNBAUM.
7. WALTZ CAPRICE . . . . . Rubinstein
8. COUNTRY DANCE . . . . . Nevin

9. OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers" . . . . Offenbach
10. WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht" . . . . . Ziehrer
11. SELECTION, "Rounders" . . . . . Erlanger
12. MARCH, "Washington Post" . . . . . Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

TRADE MARK

Wood, Pollard & Co.

Importers and Grocers.

101, 103, 105 Causeway Street
113, 115, 117 Causeway Street
263, 265, 267 Friend Street
172, 174 Summer Street
621, 623, 625 Atlantic Avenue
264, 266, 268 Purchase Street
Dewey Square

CORDOVA
Imported Cigars

DON RODRIGO
Clear Havana Cigars

GRAFTON
Domestic Cigars

Wood, Pollard & Co.
BOSTON

BÜRGERLICHES BRÄUHAUS
PILSNER AND MÜNCHNER HOF BRÄU BIERS
IN BOTTLES
ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS
AND BY THE
Harrison Bottling Co., 33 and 34 Lewis Wharf
Telephone, Richmond 1119
SOLE NEW ENGLAND AGENTS FOR
Königliches Hofbräuhaus, München, Bavaria. Bürgerliches Bräuhaus, Würzburg, Bavaria
William A. Miles & Co.'s New York Croton Brewery Ales.
Iroquois Brewing Co. Buffalo (N.Y.) Beers.
Boston Agents for Frank Jones Portsmouth Ales.

Compared with any other table water, whether foreign or domestic,

Londonderry Lithia Water

excels in brilliancy and taste, and is universally conceded to be the most satisfactory diluent for wines and liquors: it blends perfectly.
"Reliable goods and an attractive package."
The sparkling in quarts, pints, and splits. The still in half-gallon bottles.

The only Lithia Water sold at these Concerts

McCORMICK BREWERY CO.'S
TRIUNE ALE
Used exclusively on draft at these concerts
TRIUNE — THREE IN ONE — HOPS WATER ALE MALT
Also in bottles
Telephone, 144 Roxbury BOSTON

DRINK

HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.
JOS. GAHM & SON, New England Agents
125 Purchase Street

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Friday, May 27, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 22.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 27.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH	Magel
2.	OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi"	Adam
3.	WALTZ, "Artist's Life"	J. Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Country Girl"	Monckton
5.	FANTASIA on "I Pagliacci"	Leoncavallo
6.	TANNHAUSER MARCH	Wagner
7.	INTERMEZZO, "Contes d'Hoffmann"	Offenbach
8.	SELECTION, "Romeo and Juliet"	Gounod
9.	OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht"	Ziehrer
11.	SELECTION, "Babette"	Herbert
12.	HUNGARIAN MARCH	Moldauer

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

CLOTHING
CARPETS
RUGS
PORTIERES
BLANKETS
DRAPERIES
FEATHERS
GLOVES
LACE CURTAINS
REAL LACES ETC
CLEANSED OR DYED
AND REFINISHED
PROPERLY BY

LEWANDO'S

17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
2206 Washington St Roxbury
1274 Massachusetts Avenue
Cambridge

Also New York Philadelphia Newport Hartford New Haven Providence Lynn Watertown (Newton delivery) Worcester Washington

Teams Telephones

We also do more fine laundry work than any other establishment

Look at this list of Musical Comedies and Operas, now being played in London and to be produced during the coming season in America.

THE CINGALEE,	L. MONCKTON
MADAME SHERRY,	H. FELIX
DUCHESS OF DANTZIC,	I. CARYLL
THE EARL AND THE GIRL,	I. CARYLL
THE ORCHID,	I. CARYLL and L. MONCKTON
THE CHERRY GIRL,	I. CARYLL

Vocal Scores, etc., now ready.

To be had at all Music Stores and from . . .

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, New York.

Sole agents for Chappell & Company.

On sale in the Hall or may be ordered of the Waiter

LOWNEY'S

Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece."

One pound packages, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35 and 30 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Caramels and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes.

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

The
Mason & Hamlin
PIANOFORTES
are manufactured on basic scientific principles, from the best obtainable materials and by master mechanics.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Saturday, May 28, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 23.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK

VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
8.00 a.m.	8.04 a.m.	Hartford	1.59 p.m.
bL 10.00 "	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.00 "
10.03 "	10.07 "	" "	4.28 "
aL 1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m.	" "	5.57 "
1.03 "	1.07 "	" "	6.58 "
2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.57 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.00 "
aL 5.00 "	5.04 "	" "	10.02 "
a 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

L Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
c 10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.28 p.m.
a 1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	" "	6.58 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	" "	9.00 "
d 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.03 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New London; b New London to New York; c New London to Stamford: d Providence to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m., Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Pilgrim" or "Plymouth," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.
362 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.

SATURDAY, MAY 28.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Radetzky"	Strauss
2.	OVERTURE, "Les Dragons de Villars"	Maillard
3.	SELECTION, "Aïda"	Verdi
4.	WALTZ, "Violettes"	Waldteufel
5.	RAKOCZY MARCH from "La Damnation de Faust"	Berlioz
6.	HYMN TO ST. CECILIA	Gounod
	Violin Solo, Mr. A. BIRNBAUM.
7.	VALSE CAPRICE	Rubinstein
8.	SELECTION, "Pirates of Penzance"	Sullivan
9.	SELECTION, "Grand Duchess"	Offenbach
10.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
11.	SELECTION, "Peggy from Paris"	Loraine
12.	MARCH, "Up the Street"	Morse

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

"RUBBER!"

Sure, also Silk or Cotton, with Metal Parts of Rustless Brass

All these insure the Comfort and Service of the

PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS

Don't be "held up" with Imitations

Tally-Ho Ginger Ale

Sold at these Concerts

Better than Coffee
Richer than Coffee
Nine-tenths Coffee

C. C. HARVEY & COMPANY

144 Boylston Street

Representatives of

KNABE PIANOS

We unhesitatingly assert that the New Knabe Mignon Grand is by far the best small grand piano yet produced by any maker.

THE KNABE PIANO

Is a high-grade, artistic product, suited to the every-day requirements of the American public.

RENTAL DEPARTMENT. We will rent any grade, new or second-hand piano at lower prices than any other house. We make a specialty of summer rentals, and can please you with the quality of our stock.

Sole representatives of the Angelus Piano Player. Large circulating music library

C. C. HARVEY & CO., 144 Boylston Street
Telephone, 134 Oxford

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Monday, May 30, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 24.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 30

PROGRAMME.

1.	POLONAISE	Chopin
2.	OVERTURE, "Phèdre"	Massenet
3.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
4.	WALTZ, "Martin"	Ziehrer
5.	SUITE, "La Belle au Bois Dormant"	Tschaikowsky
6.	PRELUDE, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
7.	OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers"	Offenbach
8.	BALLET MUSIC, "Coppelia"	Delibes
9.	SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
10.	WALTZ, "One Thousand and One Nights"	Strauss
11.	SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland"	Herbert
12.	MARCH, "Washington Post"	Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

A. DE LUZE & FILS
BORDEAUX
Clarets and Sauternes

D. LEIDEN
SPARKLING HOCK
AND MOSELLE
Sold at these concerts

IF YOU ARE ON THE WATER-WAGON
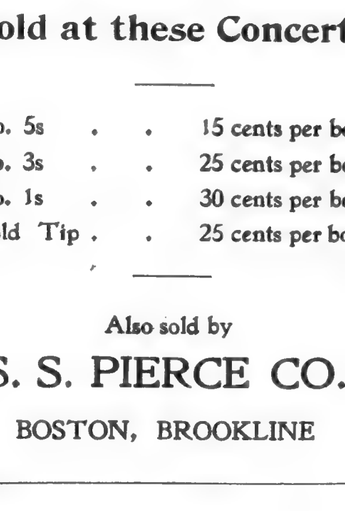
DRINK
"DUFFY'S 1842" CIDER
Sparkling. Non-alcoholic
Served at the "Pops"
HAYNES-PIPER COMPANY
NEW ENGLAND AGENTS
17 LEWIS WHARF BOSTON, MASS.



Mah Mal
EGYPTIAN
CIGARETTES
Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s	15 cents per box
No. 3s	25 cents per box
No. 1s	30 cents per box
Gold Tip	25 cents per box

Also sold by
S. S. PIERCE CO.
BOSTON, BROOKLINE

WM. L. WHITNEY
INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL FOR VOCALISTS
FLORENCE BOSTON PARIS
SYMPHONY CHAMBERS
246 Huntington Avenue BOSTON, MASS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, May 31, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 25.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 31.

PROGRAMME.

1.	TABASCO MARCH	Chadwick
2.	OVERTURE, "Semiramide"	Rossini
3.	WALTZ, "Harlequin en Voyage"	Zach
4.	SELECTION, "Fortune Teller"	Herbert
5.	POLONAISE	Liszt
6.	FANTASIE, "La Bohème"	Puccini
7.	BALLET MUSIC, "Faust"	Gounod
8.	SELECTION, "Traviata"	Verdi
9.	OVERTURE, "Galatea"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "The Skaters"	Waldteufel
11.	SELECTION, "King Dodo"	Luders
12.	MARCH, "Cruiser Harvard"	Strube

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

TECH NIGHT . . . . . Tuesday, June 7

MENASHI AND RED LION CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

Charles B. Perkins & Co.

The following choice selection of our CIGARS Always on sale at Pop Concerts:

Ginita Deliciosos Extra	10c., 3 for 25c.
Matilde Rothschilds	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra	15c., 2 for 25c.
Matilde Perfecto Finos	20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos Extra	15c.
Tedesco Exquisites	15c., 2 for 25c.
Toinette Perfecto	10c., 3 for 25c.

TREMONT THEATRE

EVERY EVENING AT EIGHT

"Another Winner"

HENRY W. SAVAGE'S ANNUAL SPRING PRODUCTION

WOODLAND

A FOREST FANTASY

Book by FRANK PIXLEY
Music by GUSTAV LUDERS
Authors of "PRINCE OF PILSEN" and "KING DODO"

Staged under direction of GEORGE F. MARION

MATINEES WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY AT 2

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad

ROYAL BLUE LINE

ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION

$27.25

Round trip from BOSTON via NEW YORK and WASHINGTON, D.C., with stop-over privileges; a diverse route returning at slightly increased cost.

Illustrated folder and details on application.

ROYAL BLUE LINE OFFICE

No. 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

RED FOX ALE

Unquestionably the finest ale sold to-day.

Red Fox Ale combines delicacy of flavor with highly nourishing qualities.

If hitherto wedded to English brews, try RED FOX ALE.

Massachusetts Breweries Co.
17 Otis Street, Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

SYMPHONY HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Notice to Advertisers.

The advertising columns in the programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

In order to thoroughly enjoy the Concerts, smoke

Daniel Frank & Co.'s

Barrister Perfecto . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Barrister Conchas . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
N. S. Londres . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Celebridad Perfecto, 10c. each.
Garcia, D. F. & Co.,
Conchas . . 10c. each.
The American Puritanos
Finos . . . . . 15c.
2 for 25c.
The American Concha
Fina Especial . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
The American Perfecto
Fino . . . . . 20c.
3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter Puritanos
Finos . . . . . 15c.
2 for 25c.

On sale at the "POPS"

Boston, Wednesday, June 1, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 26.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1.

PROGRAMME.

1. POLONAISE . . . . . Chopin
2. OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor" . . . . Nicolai
3. SELECTION, "Rigoletto" . . . . . Verdi
4. WALTZ, "Roses from the South" . . . . . Strauss

5. FUNERAL MARCH OF A MARIONETTE . . . Gounod
6. PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin" . . . . Wagner
7. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert
8. DANCES from "Halka" . . . . . Moniuszko

9. OVERTURE, "Martha" . . . . . Flotow
10. WALTZ, "Barcarole" . . . . . Waldteufel
11. SELECTION, "Yankee Consul" . . . . . Robyn
12. MARCH, "Rakoczy" . . . . . Berlioz

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

TECH NIGHT . . . . . Tuesday, June 7

COAT ROOM A.

HUNTINGTON AVENUE ENTRANCE.

Garments, Umbrellas, and Bicycles

CHECKED FREE.

NORFOLK CABINET LAGER BEER

THE large sales of Norfolk Cabinet at the "Pops" during past years are entirely due to the sound footing of confidence which experience inspires. Brewed from the highest grades of malt and hops, thoroughly aged, and properly sterilized, in delicacy of flavor and purity it is the ideal table beer.

MASSACHUSETTS BREWERIES CO.
17 Otis Street, Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

ESTABROOK AND EATON.
IMPORTERS OF CIGARS. 222-224 WASHINGTON ST. BOSTON

MARGUERITE,
Conchas, . 10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE,
Panetelas, 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA,
Ideals, . . . 10c. each.
E. & E.,
Invincibles, 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande, 10c. each.
MANUEL GARCIA,
Conchas Elegante,
15c., 2 for 25c.
LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmonte, 20c., 3 for 50c.
BOCK & CO.,
Especiales de E. & E.,
20c., 5 for $1.00.
LA CAROLINA,
Perfectos, . . 25c. each.

On sale at the "Pops"

Estabrook & Eaton
CIGAR IMPORTERS
222 and 224 Washington Street.
Masonic Building, Boylston Street.
Merchants Building, 77 Summer St.

376 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Boston, Thursday, June 2, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 27.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 2.

PROGRAMME.

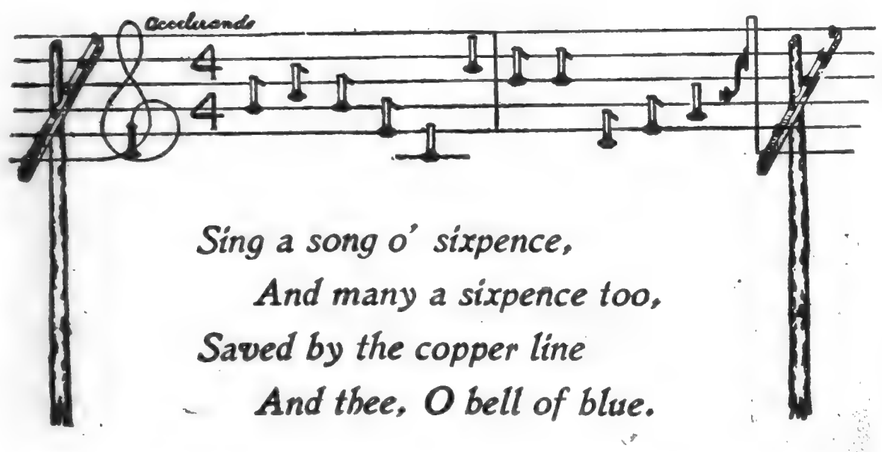
1.	MARCH, "Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
2.	OVERTURE, "Phèdre"	Massenet
3.	SELECTION, "Romeo and Juliet"	Gounod
4.	WALTZ, "Obersteiger"	Ziehrer
5.	FANTASIA on "I Pagliacci"	Leoncavallo
6.	SERENADE, "Contes d'Hoffmann"	Offenbach
7.	MALAGUENA	Moszkowski
8.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
9.	OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi"	Adam
10.	WALTZ, "Morgenblätter"	Strauss
11.	SELECTION, "Babette"	Herbert
12.	MARCH, "Slave"	Tschaikowsky

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

TECH NIGHT . . . . . Tuesday, June 7

For High Balls
Insist upon getting
Apollinaris
"RENDERS SPIRITS MORE WHOLESOME."

GEO. H. ELLIS CO.
PRINTERS
272 CONGRESS ST.
BOSTON



Sing a song o' sixpence,
And many a sixpence too,
Saved by the copper line
And thee, O bell of blue.

The above will be translated into prose, with many additional facts, to any body inquiring at or writing to

New England Telephone & Telegraph Company
Contract Department

LOCAL LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE

101 Milk Street, Boston, Mass. Telephone, Main 6028

Boston and Albany

3 Trains a day leave Boston, Forenoon, Afternoon, and Evening, for the
St. Louis Exposition
PULLMAN SLEEPING CARS
run through without change via the
New York Central Lines
EXCURSION RATES.

	A	B	C
From BOSTON	$42.00	$35.00	$28.25
" WORCESTER	40.40	33.70	27.25
" SPRINGFIELD	38.80	32.35	26 25
" PITTSFIELD	38.25	31.90	25.90

TICKET CONDITIONS.
A. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit December 15.
B. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit 60 days.
C. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit 15 days.
Limits and Stop-overs. Stop-overs will be permitted on fares shown in Classes A and B at such points as may be authorized by roads over which ticket reads, within final limit of ticket.

BOSTON & ALBANY'S ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION FOLDER, containing description and illustrations, rates, maps of New York Central Lines between New England and St. Louis, the Exposition Grounds, and City of St. Louis, may be secured by enclosing stamp to the undersigned.

A. S. HANSON, Gen. Pass. Agt., Boston. J. L. WHITE, 366 Washington St., Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Friday, June 3, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 28.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 3.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Teufel" . . . . . Suppé
2. OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo" . . . . . Auber
3. SELECTION, "Erminie" . . . . . Jakobowski
4. WALTZ, "Puppenfee" . . . . . Bayer
5. RAKOCZY MARCH . . . . . Berlioz
6. "THE DELUGE" . . . . . Saint-Saëns
   Solo Violin, Mr. A. BIRNBAUM.
7. BALLET MUSIC, "Gioconda" . . . . . Ponchielli
8. "RIDE OF THE WALKÜRE" . . . . . Wagner
9. OVERTURE, "Raymond" . . . . . A. Thomas
10. WALTZ, "Merry War" . . . . . Strauss
11. SELECTION, "King Dodo" . . . . . Luders
12. MARCH, "El Capitan" . . . . . Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

TECH NIGHT . . . . . Tuesday, June 7
WAGNER NIGHT . . . . . Monday, June 13

TRADE MARK

Wood, Pollard & Co.

Importers and Grocers.

101, 103, 105 Causeway Street
113, 115, 117 Causeway Street
263, 265, 267 Friend Street
172, 174 Summer Street
621, 623, 625 Atlantic Avenue
264, 266, 268 Purchase Street
Dewey Square

CORDOVA
Imported Cigars

DON RODRIGO
Clear Havana Cigars

GRAFTON
Domestic Cigars

Wood, Pollard & Co.
BOSTON

BÜRGERLICHES BRÄUHAUS
PILSNER AND MÜNCHNER HOF BRÄU BIERS
IN BOTTLES
ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS
AND BY THE
Harrison Bottling Co., 33 and 34 Lewis Wharf
Telephone, Richmond 1119
SOLE NEW ENGLAND AGENTS FOR
Königliches Hofbräuhaus, München, Bavaria. Bürgerliches Bräuhaus, Würzburg, Bavaria
William A. Miles & Co.'s New York Croton Brewery Ales.
Iroquois Brewing Co. Buffalo (N.Y.) Beers.
Boston Agents for Frank Jones Portsmouth Ales.

Compared with any other table water, whether foreign or domestic,

Londonderry Lithia Water

excels in brilliancy and taste, and is universally conceded to be the most satisfactory diluent for wines and liquors: it blends perfectly.
"Reliable goods and an attractive package."
The sparkling in quarts, pints, and splits. The still in half-gallon bottles.

The only Lithia Water sold at these Concerts

McCORMICK BREWERY CO.'S
TRIUNE ALE

Used exclusively on draft at these concerts

TRIUNE
THREE IN ONE
HOPS WATER ALE MALT

Also in bottles

Telephone, 144 Roxbury BOSTON

DRINK

HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.

JOS. GAHM & SON, New England Agents
125 Purchase Street

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Saturday, June 4, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 29.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 4.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Loraine"	Ganne
2.	FUNERAL MARCH OF A MARIONETTE	Gounod
3.	SELECTION, "Traviata"	Verdi
4.	WALTZ, "Blue Danube"	Strauss
5.	OVERTURE, "William Tell" (Violoncello Solo, Mr. J. KELLER.)	Rossini
6.	SELECTION, "Geisha"	Jones
7.	INTERMEZZO, "Contes d'Hoffmann"	Offenbach
8.	TANNHAEUSER MARCH	Wagner
9.	"CZARINA"	Ganne
10.	WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
11.	SELECTION, "Yankee Consul"	Robyn
12.	MARCH, "Up the Street"	Morse

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

TECH NIGHT . . . . . Tuesday, June 7
WAGNER NIGHT . . . . . Monday, June 13

CLOTHING
CARPETS
RUGS
PORTIERES
BLANKETS
DRAPERIES
FEATHERS
GLOVES
LACE CURTAINS
REAL LACES ETC
CLEANSED OR DYED
AND REFINISHED
PROPERLY BY

LEWANDO'S

17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
2206 Washington St Roxbury
1274 Massachusetts Avenue
Cambridge

Also New York Philadelphia Newport Hartford New Haven Providence Lynn Watertown (Newton delivery) Worcester Washington

Teams Telephones

We also do more fine laundry work than any other establishment

The Imperial Edition of Classics and Standard Songs.
$1.50 Each.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY OF SONG, containing 44 Songs and 6 Duets of the Great Masters.

THE SOPRANO ALBUM, 42 Classics and Standard Songs.

THE BARITONE ALBUM, 55 Classics and Standard Songs.

No Such Choice Selections ever before Published.
To be had from all Dealers in Boston and
BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, New York.

On sale in the Hall or may be ordered of the Waiter

LOWNEY'S
Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece."

One pound packages, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35 and 30 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Caramels and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes.

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

The
Mason & Hamlin
PIANOFORTES
are manufactured on basic scientific principles, from the best obtainable materials and by master mechanics.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Monday, June 6, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 30.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK

VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
8.00 a.m.	8.04 a.m.	Hartford	1.59 p.m.
bL 10.00 "	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.00 "
10.03 "	10.07 "	"	4.28 "
aL 1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m.	"	5.57 "
1.03 "	1.07 "	"	6.58 "
2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.57 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.00 "
aL 5.00 "	5.04 "	"	10.02 "
a 5.03 "	5.07 "	"	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	"	7.12 a.m.

L Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
c 10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.28 p.m.
a 1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	"	6.58 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	"	9.00 "
d 5.03 "	5 07 "	"	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	"	7.12 a.m.

Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New London; b New London to New York; c New London to Stamford; d Providence to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m., Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Pilgrim" or "Plymouth," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.
362 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.

MONDAY, JUNE 6.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg"	Kral
2.	OVERTURE, "Masaniello"	Auber
3.	WALTZ, "Éternelle Ivresse"	Ganne
4.	SELECTION, "Giroflé-Giroflá"	Lecocq
5.	ENTR'ACTE, "Philémon et Baucis"	Gounod
6.	OVERTURE, "Martha"	Flotow
7.	COUNTRY DANCE	Nevin
8.	SELECTION, "Traviata"	Verdi
9.	OVERTURE, "Banditenstreiche"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "Seid umschlungen, Millionen"	Strauss
11.	SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland"	Herbert
12.	MARCH, "Teufel"	Suppé

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

TECH NIGHT . . . . . Tuesday, June 7
WAGNER NIGHT . . . . . Monday, June 13

Watch out for a Tumble in Trousers unless you wear
PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS
Your Haberdasher will supply them if you insist

Tally-Ho Ginger Ale

Sold at these Concerts

Better than Coffee
Richer than Coffee
Nine-tenths Coffee

The FIRST COST of the KNABE PIANO

Is not high. After you have used a Knabe Piano for a few years and ascertained by personal experience that its tone is just as sweet and true as when you first bought it, that its touch is as accurate as when you first played it, then you will begin to realize why the Knabe Pianos are prized by their owners.

And every year that passes will add to your contentment.

Purchase a Knabe, and when you are through with it let your children have it, for it will still render satisfactory service.

Sold and rented by

C. C. HARVEY & COMPANY

144 BOYLSTON STREET

Agents for the Angelus Piano Player BOSTON

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, June 7, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 31.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT. Mr. FREDERIC F. BULLARD, Tech '87, was invited by Mr. ADAMOWSKI to conduct the entire programme this evening. By special request of the Executive Committee of the Tech Reunion and Mr. Bullard, Mr. ADAMOWSKI and Mr. BULLARD will appear as associate conductors..

TUESDAY, JUNE 7. Technology Night.

PROGRAMME.

Strube
. F. Bullard
Strauss
Herbert

Bullard, '87

Lang Syne
abrook, '05
t E. Walker dore Moses

Solomon Levi
Air, America
dwards, '98
Bullard, '87

Wagner
Offenbach
Zeller
Kral

cheer Rogers

stage.

, June 13

TECH NIGHT at the POPS
TECH REUNION, June 7, 1904

PROGRAM No. 6, FIRST GROUP OF TECH SONGS.

("Remember, this is not music.")

I. RETROSPECTION.

FOR OPTIMISTS AND FOR PESSIMISTS.

1

O TECH, as I look back to thee,
My eyes are filled with tears.
I'll ne'er forget the place in which
I spent such { hap-py / wretch-ed } years.
And, as I look upon my life
{ With for-tune at my beck, / Which is a to-tal wreck, }
I { bless with all my heart and soul / wish that I'd been sent to jail
The day / Be-fore } I entered TECH.

2

The old professors { kind and good / sour and cross }
To whom I did recite,
How { grieved / pleased } they'd be when I would fail,
How { glad / sad } when I'd be right.
And as I look (etc.).

3

The Faculty their { kindly note / cursed vote }
With { joy the fact did state, / pain I did receive, }
Informing me in { friendly / gleeful } tones
That I would { graduate / have to leave. }
And as I look (etc.).

4

The things I studied while at TECH,
{ How useful they have been! / Such useless, foolish truck! }
I've used this knowledge { many times / just two times }
{ My way in life to win, / And each time I got stuck. }
And as I look (etc.).

Foster's Bugle Brand Bottling

Bass Ale

Mah Mal

EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s . .	15 cents per box
No. 3s . .	25 cents per box
No. 1s . .	30 cents per box
Gold Tip . .	25 cents per box

Also sold by

S. S. PIERCE CO.

BOSTON, BROOKLINE

ON DER
N Y
. MASS.

e Institute Stairs

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, June 7, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 31.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

Foster's Bugle Brand Bottling

Bass Ale

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT. Mr. FREDERIC F. BULLARD, Tech '87, was invited by Mr. ADAMOWSKI to conduct the entire programme this evening. By special request of the Executive Committee of the Tech Reunion and Mr. Bullard, Mr. ADAMOWSKI and Mr. BULLARD will appear as associate conductors..

TUESDAY, JUNE 7. Technology Night.

PROGRAMME.

Strube
. F. Bullard
Strauss
Herbert

Bullard, '87

Lang Syne
tabrook, '05 et E. Walker odore Moses

Solomon Levi
Air, America
Edwards, '98
F. Bullard, '87

Wagner
Offenbach
Zeller
Kral

cheer Rogers

stage.

y, June 13

ON DER

Y
. MASS.

PROGRAM No. 8. SECOND GROUP OF TECH SONGS.

I. TAKE ME BACK TO TECH!

1

I wish that I were back again
  At the TECH on Boylston Street,
Dress'd in my dinky uniform,
  So dapper and so neat.
I'm crazy after Calculus:
  I never have had enough.
It was hard to be dragged away so young:
  It was horribly, awfully tough!
Oh, give me some 'Ology,
  'Ology, tra-la-la-la!
Any old kind of 'Ology!
  Tra-la-la-la-la-la-la-la-la-la-la-la.

Refrain.

Take me back on a special train
  To the glorious Institute.
I yearn for the inspiration
  Of a Tech-nol-o-gi-cal Toot!
I'd shun the physical, quizzical Prof.
  And Chapel, and all that;
But how I would love again to go
  On a Scientific Bat!

2

Oh, back to the days that were free from care,
  In the 'Ology 'Varsity shop,
With nothing to do but analyze air
  In an an-e-mo-met-ric-al top;
Or the dif-fer-en-ti-a-ti-on
  Of the trig-o-nom-e-tri-cal pow'rs
Of the constant pi that made me sigh
  In those happy days of ours.
'Rah for TECH-NOL-O-GY!
  'Ology, 'Ology, oh!
Glorious old TECH-NOL-O-GY!
  'Ology, 'Ology, 'Ology, 'Ology.

Refrain.

II. PREXY FOR AYE!

1

Long live the President!
Cheer for the President!
  Prexy for aye!
Head of TECHNOLOGY,
Leader in knowledge,
He needs no apology,
  Prexy for aye!

2

Wise in the ways of truth,
Wise in the ways of youth,
  Chief of our clan,
Long may he live, to learn
How at his every turn
TECH men in him discern
  TECH's ideal man.

II. ON ROGERS STEPS.

1

When thinking of our years at TECH, the toilsome, busy days
Are those which first come to our minds when her great name we praise;
But all good sons of stern old TECH have other visions dear,
Of hours and troubles smoked away with merry comrades near,

Refrain.

On Rogers steps! what happy mem'ries cheer us,
  Of college chums and friendships made to last!
Years come and go, but still they'll seem as near us
  As when we sat on Rogers steps in the golden, glorious past.

2

To those who win, to those who lose, the end is just the same:
So strive we on, and play our part here in the world's great game;
And side by side we'll always stand and keep TECH to the fore,
And cheer her as we used to do in those fair days of yore.

Refrain.

III. THE BEST SCHOOL OF ALL.

We'll honor yet the school we know,
  The Best School of All!
We'll honor yet the rule we know
  Till the last bell call;
For working days or holidays,
Or glad or melancholy days,
They're great days and jolly days
  In the Best School of All!

It's good to cheer the school we know,
  The land of youth and dream.
It's good to cheer the rule we know
  Before we take the stream.
Though we may miss the sight of her,
  Our hearts will ne'er forget:
We'll keep the old delight of her;
  We'll keep her honor yet.

We'll honor yet the school we know, etc.

The men that are the guide of us,
  Our daily foes and friends,
They shall not lose their pride of us,
  Howe'er our journey ends.
Their voice, to us who sing of it,
  For aye its message bears:
The great, round world shall ring of it,
  And all we are be theirs.

We'll honor yet the school we know, etc.

Mah Mal

EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s . .	15 cents per box
No. 3s . .	25 cents per box
No. 1s . .	30 cents per box
Gold Tip . .	25 cents per box

Also sold by

S. S. PIERCE CO.

BOSTON, BROOKLINE

e Institute Stairs

III. THE JANITORS' UNION.

1

Now you may think the king doth rule, but we tell you, "not so";
For many things that happen here the king can never know.
He shivers and he catches cold whene'er we bank the fires;
And, when we wish to waste the coal, Good Lord! how he perspires!

Refrain.

For we belong to the Union, as you may easily see.
All of our walking delegates as busy as union men can be.
Hurrah for the Janitors' Union, that means so much to me!
For tenants and proprietors must humbly bow the knee.

2

We sweep with feather dusters, though the king prefers a mop;
And ev'ry time he sees us, he tries to make us stop.
Do you think we are going to kneel and ossify our knees?
If dust gets in his royal nose, he is allowed to sneeze.

Refrain.

3

In our thermodynamic course they teach us about heat;
On radiators, traps, and pipes, you bet, we can't be beat.
But when we question Peabo hard, and argue to his face,
All we can get from Peabo is,— "Is Miller round the place?"

Refrain.

IV. A STEIN SONG.

1

Give a rouse, then, in the Maytime,
For a life that knows no fear!
Turn night-time into day-time
With the sunlight of good cheer!
‖ For it's always fair weather
When good fellows get together,
With a stein on the table
And a good song ringing clear. ‖

2

Oh, we're all frank-and-twenty
When the spring is in the air;
And we've faith and hope a-plenty,
And we've life and love to spare.
‖ And it's birds of a feather
When good fellows get together,
With a stein on the table
And a heart without a care. ‖

3

For we know the world is glorious,
And the goal a golden thing,
And that God is not censorious
When His children have their fling.
‖ And life slips its tether
When good fellows get together
With a stein on the table
In the fellowship of spring. ‖

Foster's Bugle Brand Bottling

Bass Ale

d at these concerts

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, June 7, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 31.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT. Mr. FREDERIC F. BULLARD, Tech '87, was invited by Mr. ADAMOWSKI to conduct the entire programme this evening. By special request of the Executive Committee of the Tech Reunion and Mr. Bullard, Mr. ADAMOWSKI and Mr. BULLARD will appear as associate conductors..

TUESDAY, JUNE 7. Technology Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. NATIONAL MARCH . . . . . Strube
2. SONG, "The Sword of Ferrara" . . . . . F. F. Bullard
3. WALTZ, "Roses of the South" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert
5. MARCH, "We're All Frank-and-twenty!" . . F. F. Bullard, '87
6. TECH SONGS
   - a. "Retrospection" . . . . . Air, Auld Lang Syne
   - b. "On Rogers Steps" . . . . . T. W. Estabrook, '05
   - c. "The Best School of All" (Henry Newboldt) . Janet E. Walker
7. MEDLEY, College Songs . . . . . Theodore Moses
8. TECH SONGS
   - a. "Take me back to TECH!" (I. W. Litchfield, '85), Air, Solomon Levi
   - b. "Prexy for Aye!" . . . . . Air, America
   - c. "The Janitors' Union" (G. F. Loughlin, '03) E. B. Edwards, '98
   - d. A Stein Song (Richard Hovey) . . . . F. F. Bullard, '87
9. PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin" . . . . Wagner
10. SELECTION, "Grand Duchess" . . . . . Offenbach
11. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
12. MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg" . . . . . Kral

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

After the concert, Tech men will form by classes and march to the Institute to cheer Rogers Building, which will be appropriately illuminated.
Refreshments served to balcony patrons in hall in left corridor, first balcony, near stage.

WAGNER NIGHT . . . . . Monday, June 13

IF YOU ARE
ON THE WATER-WAGON
DRINK
"DUFFY'S 1842" CIDER
Sparkling. Non-alcoholic
Served at the "Pops"

HAYNES-PIPER COMPANY
NEW ENGLAND AGENTS
17 LEWIS WHARF BOSTON, MASS.

Mah Mal
EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES
Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s . . 15 cents per box
No. 3s . . 25 cents per box
No. 1s . . 30 cents per box
Gold Tip . . 25 cents per box

Also sold by
S. S. PIERCE CO.
BOSTON, BROOKLINE

WM.
NTERNATIONA
FLORENCE

Climbin' Up the Institute Stairs

SYMP
246 Huntington Av

[37]

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, June 7, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 31.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT. Mr. FREDERIC F. BULLARD, Tech. '87, was invited by Mr. ADAMOWSKI to conduct the entire programme this evening. By special request of the Executive Committee of the Tech Reunion and Mr. Bullard, Mr. ADAMOWSKI and Mr. BULLARD will act as associate conductors.

TUESDAY, JUNE 7. Technology Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. NATIONAL MARCH	Strube
2. SONG, "The Sword of Ferrara"	F. F. Bullard
3. WALTZ, "Roses of the South"	Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland"	Herbert
5. MARCH, "We're All Frank and twenty!"	F. F. Bullard, '87
6. CHORUS SONGS
"Retrospection"	Air, Auld Lang Syne
"On Rogers Steps"	T. W. Estabrook, '05
"The Best School of All" (Henry Newboldt)	Janet E. Walker
MEDLEY, College Songs	Theodore Moses
7. CHORUS SONGS
"Take me back to TECH!" (L. W. Litchfield, '85),	Air, Solomon Levi
"Proxy for Aye!"	Air, America
"The Janitors' Union" (G. F. Loughlin, '03)	E. B. Edwards, '98
A Stein Song (Richard Hovey)	F. F. Bullard, '87
8. PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
9. SELECTION, "Grand Duchess"	Offenbach
10. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
11. MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg"	Kral

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

Encore. Tech men will form by classes and march to the Institute to cheer Rogers, which will be appropriately illuminated.

Refreshments served to balcony patrons in hall in left corridor, first balcony, near stage.

WAGNER NIGHT . . . . . Monday, June 13

Foster's Bugle Brand Bottling

Bass Ale

d at these concerts

IF YOU ARE ON THE WATER-WAGON
DRINK
"DUFFY'S 1842" CIDER
Sparkling. Non-alcoholic
Served at the "Pops"

HAYNES-PIPER COMPANY
NEW ENGLAND AGENTS
17 LEWIS WHARF BOSTON. MASS.

Mah Mal

EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s . .	15 cents per box
No. 3s . .	25 cents per box
No. 1s . .	30 cents per box
Gold Tip . .	25 cents per box

Also sold by

S. S. PIERCE CO.

BOSTON, BROOKLINE

WM.

NTERNATIONA

FLORENCE

SYMPH

246 Huntington Av

III. THE JANITORS' UNION.

Now you may think the King [illegible], but we tell you, "not so";
For many things that happen [illegible] king can never know.
He shivers and he [illegible] er we bank the fires;
And, when we wish to waste [illegible] Good Lord! how he perspires!

For we belong to the Union, [illegible] may easily see.
All of our working days are [illegible] as union men can be.
Hurrah for the Janitors' Union, [illegible] means so much to me!
For tenants and proprietors [illegible] mbly bow the knee.

We sweep with [illegible] the king prefers a mop;
And every time he sees us [illegible] ake us stop.
Do you think we are going [illegible] ossify our knees?
Of dust gets in his nostrils, [illegible] wed to sneeze.

Some [illegible] h us about heat:
In radiators, steam and [illegible] ve can't be beat.
But when we get to [illegible] argue to his face,
All we can get from [illegible] er round the place?"

IV. A STEIN SONG.

Give a [illegible] Maytime,
For [illegible] fear!
Turn [illegible] time
With [illegible] d cheer!
For [illegible] her
With [illegible] ther,
And [illegible] clear.

[illegible] nty
With [illegible] ai::
With [illegible] plenty,
And [illegible] spare.
With [illegible] ther,
With [illegible] re

For [illegible] rious,
And [illegible] ng,
With [illegible] us
With [illegible] eir fling.
With [illegible] ner

Climbin' Up the Institute Stairs

HOLLON C. SPAULDING, '87

Now, if you'll give attention,
Some trials I will mention—
Climbin' up the Institute stairs;
For mechanics is my grip,—
Though I very often slip,
Climbin' up the Institute stairs;
And the Prof's, so good and kind,
I am sure will never mind—
Climbin' up the Institute stairs—
If I punch them one by one,
Just to make a little fun—
Climbin' up the Institute stairs.

CHORUS:

Then we hear those bells a-ringing,—
We hear, but no one cares,
For the jolly Techs are singing—
Climbin' up the Institute stairs.

Mr. Cross, the physics terror,
Who so seldom makes an error,—
Climbin' up the Institute stairs,—
We will ever hope and pray
That he'll let us through in May—
Climbin' up the Institute stairs.
Webster Wells, in conic sections,
Surely beats the last elections—
Climbin' up the Institute stairs;—
For his head's with knowledge stored
When he sends you to the board—
Climbin' up the Institute stairs.

CHORUS.

Peter Schwamb, with bevel gears,
Fairly moves us all to tears;
And his epicyclic train
Made us nearly all insane—
Climbin' up the Institute stairs.
And, though giving passing notice,
We must say a word of Otis;
For of all the funny Dutch,
The old "Esel" was too much—
Climbin' up the Institute stairs.

CHORUS.

As for Faunce's curves and tangents,
Just imagine, if you can, gents,
That you're ever in a nip;
Then, what good is his descrip'?—
Climbin' up the Institute stairs.
Then there's dear old William's English
(Two whole hours a week of anguish),
When at least we have a rest,
While his lectures we digest—
Climbin' up the Institute stairs.

CHORUS.

Spite of all I've said before,
How professors are a bore,
I assuredly believe
That you wouldn't care to leave—
Climbin' up the Institute stairs.
Now the Class of '87
Is a synonym for heaven;
So enjoy while we may,—
For our life is not all play,—
Climbin' up the Institute stairs.

CHORUS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, June 7, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 31.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT. Mr. FREDERIC F. BULLARD, Tech '87, was invited by Mr. ADAMOWSKI to conduct the entire programme this evening. By special request of the Executive Committee of the Tech Reunion and Mr. Bullard, Mr. ADAMOWSKI and Mr. BULLARD will appear as associate conductors.

TUESDAY, JUNE 7. Technology Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. NATIONAL MARCH . . . . . Strube
2. SONG, "The Sword of Ferrara" . . . . . F. F. Bullard
3. WALTZ, "Roses of the South" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert
5. MARCH, "We're All Frank-and-twenty!" . . . . . F. F. Bullard, '87
6. TECH SONGS
   - a. "Retrospection" . . . . . Air, Auld Lang Syne
   - b. "On Rogers Steps" . . . . . T. W. Estabrook, '05
   - c. "The Best School of All" (Henry Newboldt) . . . . . Janet E. Walker
7. MEDLEY, College Songs . . . . . Theodore Moses
8. TECH SONGS
   - a. "Take me back to TECH!" (I. W. Litchfield, '85), Air, Solomon Levi
   - b. "Prexy for Aye!" . . . . . Air, America
   - c. "The Janitors' Union" (G. F. Loughlin, '03) . . . . . E. B. Edwards, '98
   - d. A Stein Song (Richard Hovey) . . . . . F. F. Bullard, '87
9. PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner
10. SELECTION, "Grand Duchess" . . . . . Offenbach
11. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
12. MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg" . . . . . Kral

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

After the concert, Tech men will form by classes and march to the Institute to cheer Rogers Building, which will be appropriately illuminated.

Refreshments served to balcony patrons in hall in left corridor, first balcony, near stage.

WAGNER NIGHT . . . . . Monday, June 13

III. THE JANITORS' UNION.

1

Now you may think the king doth rule, but we tell you, "not so";
For many things that happen here the king can never know.
He shivers and he catches cold whene'er we bank the fires;
And, when we wish to waste the coal, Good Lord! how he perspires!

Refrain.

For we belong to the Union, as you may easily see.
All of our walking delegates as busy as union men can be.
Hurrah for the Janitors' Union, that means so much to me!
For tenants and proprietors must humbly bow the knee.

2

We sweep with feather dusters, though the king prefers a mop;
And ev'ry time he sees us, he tries to make us stop.
Do you think we are going to kneel and ossify our knees?
If dust gets in his royal nose, he is allowed to sneeze.

Refrain.

3

In our thermodynamic course they teach us about heat:
On radiators, traps, and pipes, you bet, we can't be beat.
But when we question Peabo hard, and argue to his face,
All we can get from Peabo is,—"Is Miller round the place?"

Refrain.

IV. A STEIN SONG.

1

Give a rouse, then, in the Maytime,
For a life that knows no fear!
Turn night-time into day-time
With the sunlight of good cheer!
For it's always fair weather
When good fellows get together,
With a stein on the table
And a good song ringing clear.

2

Oh, we're all frank-and-twenty
When the spring is in the air;
And we've faith and hope a-plenty,
And we've life and love to spare.
And it's birds of a feather
When good fellows get together,
With a stein on the table
And a heart without a care.

3

For we know the world is glorious,
And the goal a golden thing,
And that God is not censorious
When His children have their fling.
And life slips its tether
When good fellows get together
With a stein on the table
In the fellowship of spring.

Foster's Bugle Brand Bottling

Bass Ale

d at these concerts

IF YOU ARE ON THE WATER-WAGON
DRINK
"DUFFY'S 1842" CIDER
Sparkling. Non-alcoholic
Served at the "Pops"

HAYNES-PIPER COMPANY
NEW ENGLAND AGENTS
17 LEWIS WHARF BOSTON, MASS.

Mah Mal

EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s	15 cents per box
No. 3s	25 cents per box
No. 1s	30 cents per box
Gold Tip	25 cents per box

Also sold by

S. S. PIERCE CO.

BOSTON, BROOKLINE

WM

NTERNATIONAL SCHOOL FOR VOCALISTS

FLORENCE BOSTON PARIS

SYMPHONY CHAMBERS

46 Huntington Avenue BOSTON, MASS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Wednesday, June 8, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 32.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Vienna always Vienna" . . . . . Strauss
2. OVERTURE, "Mignon" . . . . . A. Thomas
3. SELECTION, "Rigoletto" . . . . . Verdi
4. WALTZ, "Éternelle Ivresse" . . . . . Ganne

5. TANNHAEUSER MARCH . . . . . Wagner
6. BALLET MUSIC, "Queen of Sheba" . . . . Goldmark
   Violoncello Solo, Mr. J. KELLER.
7. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert
8. SERENADE . . . . . Moszkowski

9. OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers" . . . . Offenbach
10. WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht" . . . . . Ziehrer
11. SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen" . . . . . Luders
12. MARCH, "Loraine" . . . . . Ganne

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

WAGNER NIGHT . . . . . Monday, June 13
TSCHAIKOWSKI NIGHT . . . . Wednesday, June 15
FRENCH COMPOSERS' NIGHT . . . Friday, June 17

MENASHI AND RED LION CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

Charles B. Perkins & Co.

The following choice selection of our CIGARS Always on sale at Pop Concerts:

Ginita Deliciosos Extra	10c., 3 for 25c.
Matilde Rothschilds	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra	15c., 2 for 25c.
Matilde Perfecto Finos	20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos Extra	15c.
Tedesco Exquisites	15c., 2 for 25c.
Toinette Perfecto	10c., 3 for 25c.

TREMONT THEATRE

EVERY EVENING AT EIGHT

"Another Winner"

HENRY W. SAVAGE'S

ANNUAL SPRING PRODUCTION

WOODLAND

A FOREST FANTASY

Book by FRANK PIXLEY
Music by GUSTAV LUDERS
Authors of "PRINCE OF PILSEN" and "KING DODO"

Staged under direction of GEORGE F. MARION

MATINEES WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY AT 2

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad

ROYAL BLUE LINE

ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION

$27.25

Round trip from BOSTON via NEW YORK and WASHINGTON, D.C., with stop-over privileges; a diverse route returning at slightly increased cost.

Illustrated folder and details on application.

ROYAL BLUE LINE OFFICE

No. 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

RED FOX ALE

Unquestionably the finest ale sold to-day.

Red Fox Ale combines delicacy of flavor with highly nourishing qualities.

If hitherto wedded to English brews, try RED FOX ALE.

Massachusetts Breweries Co.
17 Otis Street, Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

SYMPHONY HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Boston, Thursday, June 9, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 33.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

Notice to Advertisers.

The advertising columns in the programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

In order to thoroughly enjoy the Concerts, smoke

Daniel Frank & Co.'s

Barrister Perfecto . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Barrister Conchas . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
N. S. Londres . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Celebridad Perfecto, 10c. each.
Garcia, D. F. & Co., Conchas . . 10c. each.
The American Puritanos Finos . . . . . 15c.
2 for 25c.
The American Concha Fina Especial . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
The American Perfecto Fino . . . . . 20c.
3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter Puritanos Finos . . . . . 15c.
2 for 25c.

On sale at the "POPS"

THURSDAY, JUNE 9.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Persian" . . . . . Strauss
2. OVERTURE, "Le Roi d'Ys" . . . . . Lalo
3. WALTZ, "Barcarole" . . . . . Waldteufel
4. SELECTION, "Mikado" . . . . . Sullivan

5. "AU CLAIR DE LUNE" . . . . . Maquarre
6. OVERTURE, "Rienzi" . . . . . Wagner
7. SELECTION, "Chinese Honeymoon" . . . . Talbot
8. GRACEFUL DANCE . . . . . Sullivan

9. OVERTURE, "Zampa" . . . . . Hérold
10. WALTZ, "On and On" . . . . . Strauss
11. SELECTION, "King Dodo" . . . . . Luders
12. MARCH . . . . . Nagel

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

WAGNER NIGHT	Monday, June 13
TSCHAIKOWSKI NIGHT	Wednesday, June 15
FRENCH COMPOSERS' NIGHT . . .	Friday, June 17

COAT ROOM A.

HUNTINGTON AVENUE ENTRANCE.

Garments, Umbrellas, and Bicycles

CHECKED FREE.

NORFOLK CABINET LAGER BEER

THE large sales of Norfolk Cabinet at the "Pops" during past years are entirely due to the sound footing of confidence which experience inspires. Brewed from the highest grades of malt and hops, thoroughly aged, and properly sterilized, in delicacy of flavor and purity it is the ideal table beer.

MASSACHUSETTS BREWERIES CO.
17 Otis Street, Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Friday, June 10, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 34.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. P. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 10.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Loraine"	Ganne
2.	OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry"	Suppé
3.	WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
4.	SELECTION, "Erminie"	Jakobowski
5.	VALSE LENTE	Hansel
6.	"RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES"	Wagner
7.	"CONTES D'HOFFMANN"	Offenbach
8.	FANTASIE, "La Bohème"	Puccini
9.	OVERTURE, "La Jolie Parfumeuse"	Offenbach
10.	WALTZ, "The Skaters"	Waldteufel
11.	SELECTION, "Toreador"	Caryll
12.	MARCH, "Juanita"	Suppé

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

WAGNER NIGHT . . . . . Monday, June 13
TSCHAIKOWSKI NIGHT . . . . Wednesday, June 15
FRENCH COMPOSERS' NIGHT . . . Friday, June 17

ESTABROOK AND EATON. IMPORTERS OF CIGARS. 222-224 WASHINGTON ST. BOSTON

MARGUERITE,
Conchas, . 10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE,
Panetelas, 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA,
Ideals, . . . 10c. each.
E. & E.,
Invincibles, 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande, 10c. each.
MANUEL GARCIA,
Conchas Elegante,
15c., 2 for 25c.
LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmonte, 20c., 3 for 50c
BOCK & CO.,
Especiales de E. & E.,
20c., 5 for $1.00.
LA CAROLINA,
Perfectos, . . 25c. each.

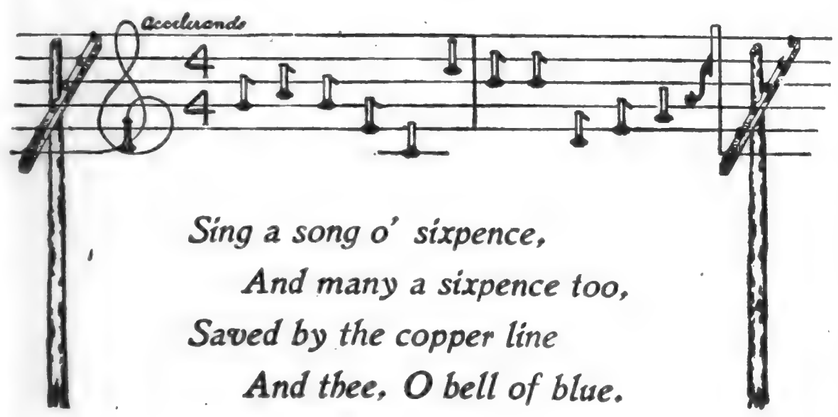
On sale at the "Pops"

Estabrook & Eaton
CIGAR IMPORTERS
222 and 224 Washington Street.
Masonic Building, Boylston Street.
Merchants Building, 77 Summer St.

376 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

For High Balls
Insist upon getting
Apollinaris
"RENDERS SPIRITS MORE WHOLESOME."

GEO. H. ELLIS CO.
PRINTERS
272 CONGRESS ST.
BOSTON



Sing a song o' sixpence,
And many a sixpence too,
Saved by the copper line
And thee, O bell of blue.

The above will be translated into prose, with many additional facts, to any body inquiring at or writing to

New England Telephone & Telegraph Company
Contract Department
101 Milk Street, Boston, Mass. Telephone, Main 6028

Boston and Albany

3 Trains a day leave Boston, Forenoon, Afternoon, and Evening, for the
St. Louis Exposition
PULLMAN SLEEPING CARS
run through without change via the
New York Central Lines

EXCURSION RATES.

	A	B	C
From BOSTON	$42.00	$35.00	$28.25
" WORCESTER	40.40	33.70	27.25
" SPRINGFIELD	38.80	32.35	26.25
" PITTSFIELD	38.25	31.90	25.90

TICKET CONDITIONS.

A. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit December 15.
B. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit 60 days.
C. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit 15 days.
Limits and Stop-overs. Stop-overs will be permitted on fares shown in Classes A and B at such points as may be authorized by roads over which ticket reads, within final limit of ticket.

BOSTON & ALBANY'S ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION FOLDER, containing description and illustrations, rates, maps of New York Central Lines between New England and St. Louis, the Exposition Grounds, and City of St. Louis, may be secured by enclosing stamp to the undersigned.
A. S. HANSON, Gen. Pass. Agt., Boston. J. L. WHITE, 366 Washington St., Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Saturday, June 11, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 35.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 11.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Teufel"	Suppé
2.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
3.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
4.	WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht"	Ziehrer
5.	OVERTURE, "Oberon"	Weber
6.	"LOIN DU BAL"	Gillet
7.	SELECTION, "Geisha"	Johns
8.	BALLET MUSIC, "Gioconda"	Ponchielli
9.	SELECTION, "Faust"	Gounod
10.	WALTZ, "España"	Waldteufel
11.	SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen"	Luders
12.	MARCH, "Cruiser Harvard"	Strube

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

WAGNER NIGHT	Monday, June 13
TSCHAIKOWSKI NIGHT	Wednesday, June 15
FRENCH COMPOSERS' NIGHT	Friday, June 17

TRADE MARK

Wood, Pollard & Co.

Importers and Grocers.

101, 103, 105 Causeway Street
113, 115, 117 Causeway Street
263, 265, 267 Friend Street
172, 174 Summer Street
621, 623, 625 Atlantic Avenue
264, 266, 268 Purchase Street
Dewey Square

CORDOVA
Imported Cigars

DON RODRIGO
Clear Havana Cigars

GRAFTON
Domestic Cigars

Wood, Pollard & Co.
BOSTON

BÜRGERLICHES BRÄUHAUS
PILSNER AND MÜNCHNER HOF BRÄU BIERS
IN BOTTLES
ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS
AND BY THE
Harrison Bottling Co., 33 and 34 Lewis Wharf
Telephone, Richmond 1119
SOLE NEW ENGLAND AGENTS FOR
Königliches Hofbräuhaus, München, Bavaria. Bürgerliches Bräuhaus, Würzburg, Bavaria
William A. Miles & Co.'s New York Croton Brewery Ales.
Iroquois Brewing Co. Buffalo (N.Y.) Beers.
Boston Agents for Frank Jones Portsmouth Ales.

Compared with any other table water, whether foreign or domestic,

Londonderry Lithia Water

excels in brilliancy and taste, and is universally conceded to be the most satisfactory diluent for wines and liquors: it blends perfectly.
"Reliable goods and an attractive package."
The sparkling in quarts, pints, and splits. The still in half-gallon bottles.

The only Lithia Water sold at these Concerts

McCORMICK BREWERY CO.'S
TRIUNE ALE

Used exclusively on draft at these concerts

TRIUNE
THREE IN ONE
HOPS WATER ALE MALT

Also in bottles

Telephone, 144 Roxbury BOSTON

DRINK

HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.

JOS. GAHM & SON, New England Agents
125 Purchase Street

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Monday, June 13, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 36.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 13.

Wagner Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. TANNHAEUSER MARCH . . . . . Wagner
2. OVERTURE, "Rienzi" . . . . . Wagner
3. WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht" . . . . . Strauss
4. COUNTRY DANCE . . . . . Nevin

5. PRELUDE TO ACT I., "Lohengrin" . . . . Wagner
6. VALSE, "Onegin" . . . . . Tschaikowsky
7. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner
8. PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin" . . . . Wagner

9. GRACEFUL DANCE . . . . . Sullivan
10. "RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES" . . . . . Wagner
11. WALTZ, "Roses from the South" . . . . . Strauss
12. MARCH, "Teufel" . . . . . Suppé

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

TSCHAIKOWSKI NIGHT	Wednesday, June 15
FRENCH COMPOSERS' NIGHT . . .	Friday, June 17
HARVARD NIGHT	Monday, June 20
OFFENBACH NIGHT	Tuesday, June 21

CLOTHING
CARPETS
RUGS
PORTIERES
BLANKETS
DRAPERIES
FEATHERS
GLOVES
LACE CURTAINS
REAL LACES ETC
CLEANSED OR DYED
AND REFINISHED
PROPERLY BY

LEWANDO'S

17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
2206 Washington St Roxbury
1274 Massachusetts Avenue Cambridge

Also New York Philadelphia Newport Hartford New Haven Providence Lynn Watertown (Newton delivery) Worcester Washington

Teams Telephones

We also do more fine laundry work than any other establishment

To the Professional Singer

To the Teacher of Singing

To the Pupil

We can offer the largest variety of English Songs, composed by the best known Musicians.

Songs in all styles and in keys to suit all voices.

Write for Lists.

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, New York.

On sale in the Hall or may be ordered of the Waiter

LOWNEY'S

Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece."

One pound packages, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35 and 30 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Caramels and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes.

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

The

Mason & Hamlin

PIANOFORTES

are manufactured on basic scientific principles, from the best obtainable materials and by master mechanics.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Saturday, June 11, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 35.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 11.
PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Teufel"	Suppé
2.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
3.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
4.	WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht"	Ziehrer
5.	OVERTURE, "Oberon"	Weber
6.	"LOIN DU BAL"	Gillet
7.	SELECTION, "Geisha"	Johns
8.	BALLET MUSIC, "Gioconda"	Ponchielli
9.	SELECTION, "Faust"	Gounod
10.	WALTZ, "España"	Waldteufel
11.	SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen"	Luders
12.	MARCH, "Cruiser Harvard"	Strube

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

WAGNER NIGHT	Monday, June 13
TSCHAIKOWSKI NIGHT	Wednesday, June 15
FRENCH COMPOSERS' NIGHT	Friday, June 17

TRADE MARK

Wood, Pollard & Co.

Importers and Grocers.

101, 103, 105 Causeway Street
113, 115, 117 Causeway Street
263, 265, 267 Friend Street
172, 174 Summer Street
621, 623, 625 Atlantic Avenue
264, 266, 268 Purchase Street
Dewey Square

CORDOVA
Imported Cigars

DON RODRIGO
Clear Havana Cigars

GRAFTON
Domestic Cigars

Wood, Pollard & Co.
BOSTON

BÜRGERLICHES BRÄUHAUS
PILSNER AND MÜNCHNER HOF BRÄU BIERS
IN BOTTLES
ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS
AND BY THE
Harrison Bottling Co., 33 and 34 Lewis Wharf
Telephone, Richmond 1119
SOLE NEW ENGLAND AGENTS FOR
Königliches Hofbräuhaus, München, Bavaria. Bürgerliches Bräuhaus, Würzburg, Bavaria
William A. Miles & Co.'s New York Croton Brewery Ales.
Iroquois Brewing Co. Buffalo (N.Y.) Beers.
Boston Agents for Frank Jones Portsmouth Ales.

Compared with any other table water, whether foreign or domestic,

Londonderry Lithia Water

excels in brilliancy and taste, and is universally conceded to be the most satisfactory diluent for wines and liquors: it blends perfectly.
"Reliable goods and an attractive package."
The sparkling in quarts, pints, and splits. The still in half-gallon bottles.

The only Lithia Water sold at these Concerts

McCORMICK BREWERY CO.'S
TRIUNE ALE

Used exclusively on draft at these concerts

TRIUNE
REGISTERED TRADE MARK
THREE IN ONE
HOPS WATER ALE MALT

Also in bottles

Telephone, 144 Roxbury BOSTON

DRINK

HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.

JOS. GAHM & SON, New England Agents
125 Purchase Street

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Monday, June 13, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 36.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 13.

Wagner Night.

PROGRAMME.

1.	TANNHAEUSER MARCH	Wagner
2.	OVERTURE, "Rienzi"	Wagner
3.	WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht"	Strauss
4.	COUNTRY DANCE	Nevin
5.	PRELUDE TO ACT I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
6.	VALSE, "Onegin"	Tschaikowsky
7.	OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
8.	PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
9.	GRACEFUL DANCE	Sullivan
10.	"RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES"	Wagner
11.	WALTZ, "Roses from the South"	Strauss
12.	MARCH, "Teufel"	Suppé

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

TSCHAIKOWSKI NIGHT	Wednesday, June 15
FRENCH COMPOSERS' NIGHT	Friday, June 17
HARVARD NIGHT	Monday, June 20
OFFENBACH NIGHT	Tuesday, June 21

CLOTHING
CARPETS
RUGS
PORTIERES
BLANKETS
DRAPERIES
FEATHERS
GLOVES
LACE CURTAINS
REAL LACES ETC
CLEANSED OR DYED
AND REFINISHED
PROPERLY BY

LEWANDO'S

17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
2206 Washington St Roxbury
1274 Massachusetts Avenue
Cambridge

Also New York Philadelphia Newport Hartford New Haven Providence Lynn Watertown (Newton delivery) Worcester Washington

Teams Telephones

We also do more fine laundry work than any other establishment

To the Professional Singer
To the Teacher of Singing
To the Pupil

We can offer the largest variety of English Songs, composed by the best known Musicians.

Songs in all styles and in keys to suit all voices.

Write for Lists.

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, New York.

On sale in the Hall or may be ordered of the Waiter

LOWNEY'S
Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece."

One pound packages, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35 and 30 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Caramels and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes.

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

The
Mason & Hamlin
PIANOFORTES
are manufactured on basic scientific principles, from the best obtainable materials and by master mechanics.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, June 14, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 37.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK

VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
8.00 a.m.	8.04 a.m.	Hartford	1.59 p.m.
bL 10.00 "	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.00 "
10.03 "	10.07 "	" "	4.28 "
aL 1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m.	" "	5.57 "
1.03 "	1.07 "	" "	6.58 "
2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.57 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.00 "
aL 5.00 "	5.04 "	" "	10.02 "
a 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

L Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
c 10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.28 p.m.
a 1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	" "	6.58 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	" "	9.00 "
d 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New London; b New London to New York; c New London to Stamford; d Providence to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m., Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Pilgrim" or "Plymouth," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.
362 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.

TUESDAY, JUNE 14.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Loraine" . . . . . Ganne
2. OVERTURE, "Martha" . . . . . Flotow
3. SELECTION, "Geisha" . . . . . Jones
4. WALTZ, "Gros Wien" . . . . . Strauss

5. COUNTRY DANCE . . . . . Nevin
6. BALLET MUSIC, "Sylvia" . . . . . Delibes
7. MALAGUEÑA . . . . . Moszkowski
8. SELECTION, "Aïda" . . . . . Verdi

9. OVERTURE, "Fledermaus" . . . . . Strauss
10. WALTZ, "Barcarole" . . . . . Waldteufel
11. SELECTION, "Woodland" . . . . . Luders
12. MARCH, "El Capitan" . . . . . Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

TSCHAIKOWSKI NIGHT	Wednesday, June 15
FRENCH COMPOSERS' NIGHT	Friday, June 17
HARVARD NIGHT	Monday, June 20
OFFENBACH NIGHT	Tuesday, June 21

The

Suspense is Terrible

if you wear anything but

PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS

When you ask for them please be sure you get them

Tally-Ho Ginger Ale

Sold at these Concerts

Veuve Chaffard

PURE OLIVE OIL

In Honest Bottles

The FIRST COST of the KNABE PIANO

Is not high. After you have used a Knabe Piano for a few years and ascertained by personal experience that its tone is just as sweet and true as when you first bought it, that its touch is as accurate as when you first played it, then you will begin to realize why the Knabe Pianos are prized by their owners.

And every year that passes will add to your contentment.

Purchase a Knabe, and when you are through with it let your children have it, for it will still render satisfactory service.

Sold and rented by

C. C. HARVEY & COMPANY

144 BOYLSTON STREET
BOSTON

Agents for the Angelus Piano Player

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

A. DE LUZE & FILS
BORDEAUX
Clarets and Sauternes

D. LEIDEN
SPARKLING HOCK
AND MOSELLE
Sold at these concerts

Boston, Wednesday, June 15, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 38.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15.

Tschaikowski Night.

PROGRAMME.

1.	POLONAISE from "Onegin"	Tschaikowski
2.	OVERTURE, "Fledermaus"	Strauss
3.	"LA BELLE AU BOIS DORMANT"	Tschaikowski
4.	WALTZ, "España"	Waldteufel
5.	OVERTURE, "1812"	Tschaikowski
6.	SONG WITHOUT WORDS	Tschaikowski
7.	SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland"	Herbert
8.	BALLET, "The Nut-cracker"	Tschaikowski
9.	VALSE from "La Belle au Bois Dormant"	Tschaikowski
10.	SELECTION, "Yankee Consul"	Robyn
11.	WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
12.	MARCH, "Loraine"	Ganne

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

FRENCH COMPOSERS' NIGHT	Friday, June 17
HARVARD NIGHT	Monday, June 20
OFFENBACH NIGHT	Tuesday, June 21

IF YOU ARE
ON THE WATER-WAGON
DRINK
"DUFFY'S 1842" CIDER
Sparkling. Non-alcoholic
Served at the "Pops"

HAYNES-PIPER COMPANY
NEW ENGLAND AGENTS
17 LEWIS WHARF BOSTON, MASS.

Mah Mal
EGYPTIAN
CIGARETTES
Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s	15 cents per box
No. 3s	25 cents per box
No. 1s	30 cents per box
Gold Tip	25 cents per box

Also sold by
S. S. PIERCE CO.
BOSTON, BROOKLINE

WM. L. WHITNEY
INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL FOR VOCALISTS
FLORENCE BOSTON PARIS

SYMPHONY CHAMBERS
246 Huntington Avenue BOSTON, MASS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Thursday, June 16, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 39.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 16.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Teufel"	Suppé
2.	OVERTURE, "Oberon"	Weber
3.	SELECTION, "Traviata"	Verdi
4.	WALTZ, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
5.	CHANT D'AMOUR	John Spencer Camp
6.	SELECTION, "Geisha"	Jones
7.	BALLET MUSIC, "Queen of Sheba"	Goldmark
	Violoncello Solo, Mr. J. KELLER.
8.	OVERTURE, "Zampa"	Hérold
9.	OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht"	Ziehrer
11.	SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen"	Luders
12.	MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

FRENCH COMPOSERS' NIGHT	Friday, June 17
HARVARD NIGHT	Monday, June 20
OFFENBACH AND STRAUSS NIGHT	Tuesday, June 21
ITALIAN COMPOSERS' NIGHT	Wednesday, June 22
REQUEST NIGHT	Thursday, June 23

MENASHI AND RED LION CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

Charles B. Perkins & Co.

The following choice selection of our CIGARS Always on sale at Pop Concerts:

Ginita Deliciosos Extra	10c., 3 for 25c.
Matilde Rothschilds	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra	15c., 2 for 25c.
Matilde Perfecto Finos	20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos Extra	15c.
Tedesco Exquisites	15c., 2 for 25c.
Toinette Perfecto	10c., 3 for 25c.

TREMONT THEATRE

EVERY EVENING AT EIGHT

"Another Winner"

HENRY W. SAVAGE'S

ANNUAL SPRING PRODUCTION

WOODLAND

A FOREST FANTASY

Book by FRANK PIXLEY
Music by GUSTAV LUDERS
Authors of "PRINCE OF PILSEN" and "KING DODO"

Staged under direction of GEORGE F. MARION

MATINEES WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY AT 2

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad

ROYAL BLUE LINE

ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION

$27.25

Round trip from BOSTON via NEW YORK and WASHINGTON, D.C., with stop-over privileges; a diverse route returning at slightly increased cost.

Illustrated folder and details on application.

ROYAL BLUE LINE OFFICE

No. 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

RED FOX ALE

Unquestionably the finest ale sold to-day.

Red Fox Ale combines delicacy of flavor with highly nourishing qualities.

If hitherto wedded to English brews, try RED FOX ALE.

Massachusetts Breweries Co.
17 Otis Street, Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

SYMPHONY HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Notice to Advertisers.

The advertising columns in the programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

In order to thoroughly enjoy the Concerts, smoke

Daniel Frank & Co.'s

Barrister Perfecto . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Barrister Conchas . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
N. S. Londres . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Celebridad Perfecto, 10c. each.
Garcia, D. F. & Co., Conchas . . 10c. each.
The American Puritanos Finos . . . . . 15c.
2 for 25c.
The American Concha Fina Especial . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
The American Perfecto Fino . . . . . 20c.
3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter Puritanos Finos . . . . . 15c.
2 for 25c.

On sale at the "POPS"

Boston, Friday, June 17, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 40.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 17.

French Composers' Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Queen of Sheba" . . . . . Gounod
2. "SCÈNE PITTORESQUE" . . . . . Massenet
3. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . . Gounod
4. WALTZ, "The Skaters" . . . . . Waldteufel

5. OVERTURE, "Mignon" . . . . . A. Thomas
6. "THE DELUGE" . . . . . Saint-Saëns
   Violin Solo, Mr. A. BIRNBAUM.
7. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet
8. "L'ARLÉSIENNE" . . . . . Bizet

9. OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers" . . . . . Offenbach
10. WALTZ, "España" . . . . . Chabrier
11. SELECTION, "The Brigands" . . . . . Offenbach
12. MARCH, "Tambour-battant" . . . . . Messager

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

HARVARD NIGHT	Monday, June 20
OFFENBACH AND STRAUSS NIGHT	Tuesday, June 21
ITALIAN COMPOSERS' NIGHT	Wednesday, June 22
REQUEST NIGHT	Thursday, June 23
SOLOISTS' NIGHT	Friday, June 24

AUBURNDALE INN

Evergreen Avenue, Auburndale
Near RIVERSIDE Station

Excellent Cuisine — Restaurant a la Carte — Private Dining Rooms

Chicken Dinners a Specialty

Charming Location on the Banks of the Charles River

Two minutes from Riverside Station Three minutes from Norumbega Park Twenty minutes' ride by Boston & Albany R.R. from Boston

ALEX. BROWN, Manager

"IT"

There is always one by which the standards of others are measured.

NORFOLK CABINET LAGER BEER

THE large sales of Norfolk Cabinet at the "Pops" during past years are entirely due to the sound footing of confidence which experience inspires. Brewed from the highest grades of malt and hops, thoroughly aged, and properly sterilized, in delicacy of flavor and purity it is the ideal table beer.

MASSACHUSETTS BREWERIES CO.
17 Otis Street, Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Saturday, June 18, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 41.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 18.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Coronation"	Meyerbeer
2.	OVERTURE, "Martha"	Flotow
3.	WALTZ, "Roses from the South"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Aïda"	Verdi
5.	"RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES"	Wagner
6.	INTERMEZZO, "Contes d'Hoffmann"	Offenbach
7.	SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland"	Herbert
8.	GRACEFUL DANCE	Sullivan
9.	OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppé
	Violoncello Solo, Mr. J. KELLER.
10.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
11.	SELECTION, "Yankee Consul"	Robyn
12.	MARCH, "El Capitan"	Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

HARVARD NIGHT	Monday, June 20
OFFENBACH AND STRAUSS NIGHT	Tuesday, June 21
ITALIAN COMPOSERS' NIGHT	Wednesday, June 22
REQUEST NIGHT	Thursday, June 23
SOLOISTS' NIGHT	Friday, June 24

ESTABROOK AND EATON.
IMPORTERS OF CIGARS. 222-224 WASHINGTON ST. BOSTON

MARGUERITE,
Conchas, . 10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE,
Panetelas, 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA,
Ideals, . . . 10c. each.
E. & E.,
Invincibles, 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande, 10c. each.
MANUEL GARCIA,
Conchas Elegante,
15c., 2 for 25c.
LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmonte, 20c., 3 for 50c.
BOCK & CO.,
Especiales de E. & E.,
20c., 5 for $1.00.
LA CAROLINA,
Perfectos, . . 25c. each.

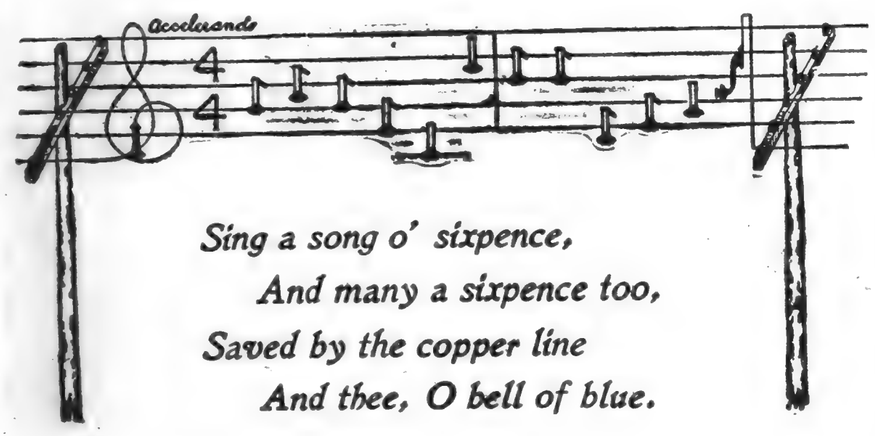
On sale at the "Pops"

Estabrook & Eaton
CIGAR IMPORTERS
222 and 224 Washington Street.
Masonic Building, Boylston Street.
Merchants Building, 77 Summer St.

376 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

For High Balls
Insist upon getting
Apollinaris
"RENDERS SPIRITS MORE WHOLESOME."

GEO. H. ELLIS CO.
PRINTERS
272 CONGRESS ST.
BOSTON



Sing a song o' sixpence,
And many a sixpence too,
Saved by the copper line
And thee, O bell of blue.

The above will be translated into prose, with many additional facts, to anybody inquiring at or writing to

New England Telephone & Telegraph Company
Contract Department
101 Milk Street, Boston, Mass. Telephone, Main 6028

Boston and Albany

3 Trains a day leave Boston, Forenoon, Afternoon, and Evening, for the

St. Louis Exposition

PULLMAN SLEEPING CARS
run through without change via the

New York Central Lines

EXCURSION RATES.

	A	B	C
From BOSTON	$42.00	$35.00	$28.25
" WORCESTER	40.40	33.70	27.25
" SPRINGFIELD	38.80	32.35	26.25
" PITTSFIELD	33.25	31.90	25.90

TICKET CONDITIONS.

A. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit December 15.
B. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit 60 days.
C. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit 15 days.

Limits and Stop-overs. Stop-overs will be permitted on fares shown in Classes A and B at such points as may be authorized by roads over which ticket reads, within final limit of ticket.

BOSTON & ALBANY'S ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION FOLDER, containing description and illustrations, rates, maps of New York Central Lines between New England and St. Louis, the Exposition Grounds, and City of St. Louis, may be secured by enclosing stamp to the undersigned.

A. S. HANSON, Gen. Pass. Agt., Boston. J. L. WHITE, 366 Washington St., Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Monday, June 20, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 42.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 20. Harvard Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Cruiser Harvard" . . . . . Strube
2. MALAGUEÑA . . . . . Moszkowski
3. SELECTION, "Peggy from Paris" . . . . . Loraine
4. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
5. SELECTION from "Boodle & Co.," Hasty Pudding Production, 1904 . . . . . J. H. Densmore, '04
   Conducted by the composer.
6. TANNHAEUSER MARCH . . . . . Wagner
7. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert
8. a. SELECTION, "Will-o'-the wisp." Pi Eta Production, 1904 Davison, '06–Grey, '06
   b. MARCH, "Men of Harvard" . . . . . F. H. Grey, '06
   Conducted by the composer.
9. SELECTION, "Grand Duchess" . . . . . Offenbach
10. "RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES" . . . . . Wagner
11. "FAIR HARVARD" . . . . .
12. a. MARCH, "Our Director" . . . . . Bigelow
    b. MARCH, "Up the Street" . . . . . Morse, '96

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

OFFENBACH AND STRAUSS NIGHT	Tuesday, June 21
ITALIAN COMPOSERS' NIGHT	Wednesday, June 22
SOLOISTS' NIGHT	Thursday, June 23
REQUEST NIGHT	Friday, June 24
GRADUATES' NIGHT	Monday, June 27

TRADE MARK

Wood, Pollard & Co.

Importers and Grocers.

101, 103, 105 Causeway Street
113, 115, 117 Causeway Street
263, 265, 267 Friend Street
172, 174 Summer Street
621, 623, 625 Atlantic Avenue
264, 266, 268 Purchase Street
Dewey Square

CORDOVA
Imported Cigars

DON RODRIGO
Clear Havana Cigars

GRAFTON
Domestic Cigars

Wood, Pollard & Co.
BOSTON

BÜRGERLICHES BRÄUHAUS
PILSNER AND MÜNCHNER HOF BRÄU BIERS
IN BOTTLES
ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS
AND BY THE
Harrison Bottling Co., 33 and 34 Lewis Wharf
Telephone, Richmond 1119
SOLE NEW ENGLAND AGENTS FOR
Königliches Hofbräuhaus, München, Bavaria. Bürgerliches Bräuhaus, Würzburg, Bavaria
William A. Miles & Co.'s New York Croton Brewery Ales.
Iroquois Brewing Co. Buffalo (N.Y.) Beers.
Boston Agents for Frank Jones Portsmouth Ales.

Compared with any other table water, whether foreign or domestic,

Londonderry Lithia Water

excels in brilliancy and taste, and is universally conceded to be the most satisfactory diluent for wines and liquors: it blends perfectly.
"Reliable goods and an attractive package."
The sparkling in quarts, pints, and splits. The still in half-gallon bottles.

The only Lithia Water sold at these Concerts

McCORMICK BREWERY CO.'S
TRIUNE ALE
Used exclusively on draft at these concerts
TRIUNE
THREE IN ONE
HOPS WATER ALE MALT
Also in bottles
Telephone, 144 Roxbury BOSTON

DRINK
Schlitz
THE BEER THAT MADE MILWAUKEE FAMOUS.
HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.
JOS. GAHM & SON, New England Agents
125 Purchase Street

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, June 21, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 43.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

CLOTHING
CARPETS
RUGS
PORTIERES
BLANKETS
DRAPERIES
FEATHERS
GLOVES
LACE CURTAINS
REAL LACES ETC
CLEANSED OR DYED
AND REFINISHED
PROPERLY BY

LEWANDO'S

17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
2206 Washington St Roxbury
1274 Massachusetts Avenue
Cambridge

Also New York Philadelphia Newport Hartford New Haven Providence Lynn Watertown (Newton delivery) Worcester Washington

Teams Telephones

We also do more fine laundry work than any other establishment

TUESDAY, JUNE 21.

Offenbach and Strauss Night.

PROGRAMME.

1.	PERSIAN MARCH	Strauss
2.	SELECTION, "Périchole"	Offenbach
3.	WALTZ, "Roses from the South"	Strauss
4.	OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers"	Offenbach
5.	OVERTURE, "Fledermaus"	Strauss
6.	INTERMEZZO, "Contes d'Hoffmann"	Offenbach
7.	WALTZ, "Artist Life"	Strauss
8.	SELECTION, "The Brigands"	Offenbach
9.	POLKA MAZOURKA	Strauss
10.	SELECTION, "Grand Duchess"	Offenbach
11.	WALTZ, "Blue Danube"	Strauss
12.	RADETZKY MARCH	Strauss

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

ITALIAN COMPOSERS' NIGHT	Wednesday, June 22
SOLOISTS' NIGHT	Thursday, June 23
REQUEST NIGHT	Friday, June 24
GRADUATES' NIGHT. Last of the Season	Monday, June 27

French Waltzes by Famous Writers.

Successful in All Countries.

DANS LES LARMES	by R. BERGER.
VALSE TRISTE	" "
VALSE ENCHANTEE	" "
REPONSE A AMOUREUSE	" "
PETITE ANNONCE	" "
LA FRANCE	J. MARTORELL
ETERNELLE IVRESSE	L. GANNE

To be had from all Music Stores or

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, New York.

On sale in the Hall or may be ordered of the Waiter

LOWNEY'S
Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece."

One pound packages, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35 and 30 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Caramels and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes.

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

The Mason & Hamlin
PIANOFORTES
are manufactured on basic scientific principles, from the best obtainable materials and by master mechanics.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Wednesday, June 22, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 44.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK

VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
8.00 a.m.	8.04 a.m.	Hartford	1.59 p.m.
bL 10.00 "	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.00 "
10.03 "	10.07 "	" "	4.28 "
aL 1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m.	" "	5.57 "
1.03 "	1.07 "	" "	6.58 "
2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.57 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.00 "
aL 5.00 "	5.04 "	" "	10.02 "
a 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

L Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
c 10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.28 p.m.
a 1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	" "	6.58 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	" "	9.00 "
d 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New London; b New London to New York; c New London to Stamford; d Providence to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m., Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Pilgrim" or "Plymouth," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.

362 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22.

Italian Composers' Night.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Prophet"	Meyerbeer
2.	SELECTION, "Aïda"	Verdi
3.	SELECTION, "La Bohème"	Puccini
4.	WALTZ, "Blue Danube"	Strauss
5.	SELECTION, "Traviata"	Verdi
6.	INTERMEZZO, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
7.	BALLET MUSIC, "Gioconda"	Ponchielli
8.	MARCH, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
9.	SELECTION, "I Pagliacci"	Leoncavallo
10.	WALTZ, "Barcarole"	Waldteufel
11.	SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland"	Herbert
12.	MARCH, "Tambour-battant"	Messager

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

SOLOISTS' NIGHT		Thursday, June 23
REQUEST NIGHT		Friday, June 24
GRADUATES' NIGHT.	Last of the Season	Monday, June 27

A Light Weight
President
Poor in Politics but
Excellent in Suspenders
ACCEPT ONLY THE GENUINE

Tally-Ho Ginger Ale

Sold at these Concerts

Better than Coffee
Richer than Coffee
Nine-tenths Coffee

The FIRST COST of the KNABE PIANO

Is not high. After you have used a Knabe Piano for a few years and ascertained by personal experience that its tone is just as sweet and true as when you first bought it, that its touch is as accurate as when you first played it, then you will begin to realize why the Knabe Pianos are prized by their owners.

And every year that passes will add to your contentment.

Purchase a Knabe, and when you are through with it let your children have it, for it will still render satisfactory service.

Sold and rented by

C. C. HARVEY & COMPANY

144 BOYLSTON STREET

Agents for the Angelus Piano Player BOSTON

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Thursday, June 23, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 45.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 23.

Soloists' Night.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
2.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
3.	SONG, "Rosary"	Nevin
	Solo Trumpet, Mr. KLOEPFEL.
4.	WALTZ, "Violets"	Waldteufel
5.	a. Serenade	Härtel
	b. "Image of the Rose"	Reichardt
	BOSTON TROMBONE QUARTET.
6.	HARP SOLO, Andante	Rossini–Alvars
	Mr. HEINRICH SCHUECKER.
7.	VIOLIN SOLO, "Legende"	Wieniawski
	Mr. A. BIRNBAUM.
8.	"FIRE CHARM," from "Walküre"	Wagner
9.	OVERTURE, "William Tell"	Rossini
	Solo Violoncello, Mr. J. KELLER.
10.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
11.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
12.	MARCH, "Up the Street"	Morse

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

REQUEST NIGHT . . . . . Friday, June 24
GRADUATES' NIGHT. Last of the Season . Monday, June 27

Foster's Bugle Brand Bottling

Bass Ale

Sold at these concerts

"DUFFY'S 1842" CIDER

Sparkling. Non-alcoholic

The pure juice of choice apples, refined by a new process. Pure, wholesome, delicious. An ideal beverage for the yacht and summer home. Write for booklet.

HAYNES-PIPER COMPANY
Served at first-class hotels and restaurants by the bottle.

Mah Mal

EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s	15 cents per box
No. 3s	25 cents per box
No. 1s	30 cents per box
Gold Tip	25 cents per box

Also sold by

S. S. PIERCE CO.

BOSTON, BROOKLINE

WM. L. WHITNEY

INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL FOR VOCALISTS

FLORENCE BOSTON PARIS

SYMPHONY CHAMBERS

246 Huntington Avenue BOSTON, MASS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

MENASHI
AND
RED LION
CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

Boston, Friday, June 24, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 46.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 24.

Request Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Loraine" . . . . . Ganne
2. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet
3. WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht" . . . . . Ziehrer
4. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert

5. PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin" . . . Wagner
6. INTERMEZZO, "Contes d'Hoffmann" . . . . Offenbach
7. "LA BELLE AU BOIS DORMANT" . . . Tschaikowski
8. OVERTURE, "Rienzi" . . . . . Wagner

9. OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant" . . . . . Suppé
   Violoncello Solo, Mr. J. KELLER.
10. WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows" . . . . . Vollstedt
11. SELECTION, "Yankee Consul" . . . . . Robyn
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . . Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

GRADUATES' NIGHT. Last of the Season. Monday, June 27

Charles B. Perkins & Co.

The following choice selection of our CIGARS Always on sale at Pop Concerts:

Ginita Deliciosos Extra	10c., 3 for 25c.
Matilde Rothschilds	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra	15c., 2 for 25c.
Matilde Perfecto Finos	20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos Extra	15c.
Tedesco Exquisites	15c., 2 for 25c.
Toinette Perfecto	10c., 3 for 25c.

TREMONT THEATRE

EVERY EVENING AT EIGHT

"Another Winner"

HENRY W. SAVAGE'S
ANNUAL SPRING PRODUCTION

WOODLAND

A FOREST FANTASY

Book by FRANK PIXLEY
Music by GUSTAV LUDERS
Authors of "PRINCE OF PILSEN" and "KING DODO"

Staged under direction of
GEORGE F. MARION

MATINEES WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY AT 2

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad

ROYAL BLUE LINE

ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION

$27.25

Round trip from BOSTON via NEW YORK and WASHINGTON, D.C., with stop-over privileges; a diverse route returning at slightly increased cost.

Illustrated folder and details on application.

ROYAL BLUE LINE OFFICE

No. 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

RED FOX ALE

Unquestionably the finest ale sold to-day.

Red Fox Ale combines delicacy of flavor with highly nourishing qualities.

If hitherto wedded to English brews, try RED FOX ALE.

Massachusetts Breweries Co.
17 Otis Street, Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

SYMPHONY HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Notice to Advertisers.

The advertising columns in the programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

In order to thoroughly enjoy the Concerts, smoke

Daniel Frank & Co.'s

Barrister Perfecto . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Barrister Conchas . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
N. S. Londres . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Celebridad Perfecto, 10c. each.
Garcia, D. F. & Co.,
Conchas . . 10c. each.
The American Puritanos
Finos . . . . . 15c.
2 for 25c.
The American Concha
Fina Especial . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
The American Perfecto
Fino . . . . . 20c.
3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter Puritanos
Finos . . . . . 15c.
2 for 25c.

On sale at the "POPS"

Boston, Saturday, June 25, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 47.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 25.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Loraine"	Ganne
2.	OVERTURE, "1812"	Tschaikowski
3.	SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland"	Herbert
4.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
5.	SELECTION, "Aïda"	Verdi
6.	INTERMEZZO, "Contes d'Hoffmann"	Offenbach
7.	"CZARINA"	Ganne
8.	OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
9.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
10.	WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
11.	SELECTION, "King Dodo"	Luders
12.	MARCH, "El Capitan"	Sousa

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

GRADUATES' NIGHT. Last of the Season . Monday, June 27

AT RIVERSIDE

20 Minutes by Auto

AUBURNDALE INN
EVERGREEN AVE. - Alex. Brown, Mgr.

OPPOSITE ATHLETIC CLUB

There is always one by which the standards of others are measured.

NORFOLK CABINET LAGER BEER

THE large sales of Norfolk Cabinet at the "Pops" during past years are entirely due to the sound footing of confidence which experience inspires. Brewed from the highest grades of malt and hops, thoroughly aged, and properly sterilized, in delicacy of flavor and purity it is the ideal table beer.

MASSACHUSETTS BREWERIES CO.
17 Otis Street, Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Monday, June 27, 1904. Nineteenth Season. Summer 1904.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 48.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 27.

Graduates' and Closing Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Veritas" . . . . . Densmore, '04
2. OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers" . . . . Offenbach
3. SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen" . . . . . Luders
4. WALTZ, "Jolly Students" . . . . . Vollstedt

5. PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin" . . . . Wagner
6. a. MARCH, Dedicated to the Class of 1884 . . P. H. Goepp, '84
   b. SELECTION from "Hernani" . . . . Osborne, '84
   c. GAVOTTE from "His Royal Nibs" . . Shafter Howard, '85
7. SELECTION, "King Dodo" . . . . . Luders
8. "TANNHAEUSER" MARCH . . . . . Wagner

9. WALTZ, "Estudiantina" . . . . . Waldteufel
10. SELECTION, "Yankee Consul" . . . . . Robyn
11. "FAIR HARVARD" . . . . . .
12. MARCH, "Up the Street" . . . . . Morse, '96

The Mason and Hamlin Pianoforte.

ESTABROOK AND EATON.
IMPORTERS OF CIGARS. 222-224 WASHINGTON ST. BOSTON

MARGUERITE,
Conchas, . 10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE,
Panetelas, 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA,
Ideals, . . . 10c. each.
E. & E.,
Invincibles, 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande, 10c. each.
MANUEL GARCIA,
Conchas Elegante,
15c., 2 for 25c.
LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmonte, 20c., 3 for 50c.
BOCK & CO.,
Especiales de E. & E.,
20c., 5 for $1.00.
LA CAROLINA,
Perfectos, . . 25c. each.

On sale at the "Pops"

Estabrook & Eaton
CIGAR IMPORTERS
222 and 224 Washington Street.
Masonic Building, Boylston Street.
Merchants Building, 77 Summer St.

376 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

WHY DRINK Common Carbonated Waters
When for the same price you can get
Apollinaris
at any Bar or Restaurant?
Apollinaris is bottled ONLY at the Spring, Neuenahr, Germany, and ONLY with its own Natural Gas.

TREMONT THEATRE
EVERY EVENING AT EIGHT
"Another Winner"
HENRY W. SAVAGE'S
ANNUAL SPRING PRODUCTION
WOODLAND
A FOREST FANTASY
Book by FRANK PIXLEY
Music by GUSTAV LUDERS
Authors of "PRINCE OF PILSEN" and "KING DODO"
Staged under direction of
GEORGE F. MARION
MATINEES WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY AT 2

The above will be translated into prose, with many additional facts, to any body inquiring at or writing to

New England Telephone & Telegraph Company
Contract Department
101 Milk Street, Boston, Mass. Telephone, Main 6028

Boston & Albany
3 Trains a day leave Boston, Forenoon, Afternoon, and Evening, for the
St. Louis Exposition
PULLMAN SLEEPING CARS
run through without change via the
New York Central Lines
EXCURSION RATES.

	A	B	C
From BOSTON . . .	$42.00	$35.00	$28.25
" WORCESTER .	40.40	33.70	27.25
" SPRINGFIELD .	38.80	32.35	26 25
" PITTSFIELD . .	38.25	31.90	25.90

TICKET CONDITIONS.
A. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit December 15.
B. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit 60 days.
C. Tickets on sale April 25; return limit 15 days.
Limits and Stop-overs. Stop-overs will be permitted on fares shown in Classes A and B at such points as may be authorized by roads over which ticket reads, within final limit of ticket.

BOSTON & ALBANY'S ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION FOLDER, containing description and illustrations, rates, maps of New York Central Lines between New England and St. Louis, the Exposition Grounds, and City of St. Louis, may be secured by enclosing stamp to the undersigned.
A. S. HANSON, Gen. Pass. Agt., Boston. J. L. WHITE, 366 Washington St., Boston

EVENING TRANSCRIPT
SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1904

Again the Pop Concerts

Twenty-three years of Symphony concerts with the imposing total of 1141 performances, and eighteen years of the Pops as summer sequences of the Symphony season, with a total of 989 performances, is fairly satisfying evidence of the demand for good music, both classical and light. It also establishes Boston as one of the most genuinely musical cities in the country, if not in the world.

With the close of the Symphony season next Saturday evening, there follows the commencement of the nineteenth season of the Pops on Tuesday evening, May 3, at Symphony Hall, as usual. There will be the customary eight weeks, closing with Graduates' Night on Monday, June 27. Everything will be conducted on the same general plan as in the past eighteen years, with reserved tables on the floor, reserved seats in the first balcony, and a generous allowance of unreserved tables and balcony seats. There is already assured the usual number of special nights with their characteristic features.

The orchestra of fifty musicians will be chosen from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mr. T. Adamowski, who will again conduct the concerts, will make every effort to suit the popular taste and demand. The prices of the past three years will be continued. Tickets will go on sale at Symphony Hall, Monday morning, April 25.

BOSTON HERALD-
-TUESDAY,
APRIL 26, 1904.

The opening of the season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall one week from this evening will again provide an entertainment which has proved eminently popular for many years. T. Adamowski will be the conductor. The arrangements which have been made for many years to the satisfaction of the public will again be followed, and without doubt the coming season of eight weeks will prove enjoyable to a great public. Many orders for reserved tables and seats were received at Symphony Hall yesterday for the opening nights, and tables and seats may be secured during the present week at the box office.

BOSTON POST.
TUESDAY.
APRIL 26, 1904

AGAIN THE "POPS"

The opening of the season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall will occur one week from this evening. It will gratify the regular patrons of these concerts to have Mr. T. Adamowski again as conductor, for few of those who have directed the "Pops" in former years have been more successful than this talented musician. Without doubt the coming season of eight weeks will prove enjoyable to a great public.

BOSTON JOURNAL-
-TUESDAY,
APRIL 26, 1904

AGAIN THE "POPS."

The opening of the season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall one week from this evening will again provide an entertainment which has proved eminently popular for many years and afforded those with musical and social inclination a delightful meeting place. The arrangements which have been so satisfactory for many years in the direction of these events will again be followed, and without doubt the coming season of eight weeks will prove enjoyable to a great public. Many orders for reserved tables and seats were received at Symphony Hall yesterday for the opening nights, and they may be secured during the present week at the box office.

DAILY ADVERTISER,
TUESDAY MORNING,
APRIL 26, 1904

MUSICAL NOTES.

A combination of music and mirth may safely be anticipated at Symphony Hall a week from this evening, when the annual season of "Pop" concerts begins. The arrangements for these musical and social events, which have proved so satisfactory for many years, will again be followed, and every evening from 8 to 11 the "Home of the Symphonies" will again resound with the lighter music of the summer season, played by an orchestra of 50 musicians, under the baton of T. Adamowski.

BOSTON GLOBE-
-TUESDAY,
APRIL 26, 1904.

Opening of the "Pops."

A combination of music and mirth may safely be anticipated at Symphony hall one week from this evening, when the annual season of "Pop" concerts begins. The arrangements for these musical and social events, which have proved so satisfactory for many years, will again be followed, and every evening from 8 to 11 the "home of the symphonies" will again resound with the lighter music of the summer season played by an orchestra of 50 musicians under the baton of Mr T. Adamowski.

Few conductors of the "Pops" in former seasons have been as successful as Mr Adamowski in catering to the wishes of the patrons of these concerts, and his program for the coming season will undoubtedly contain much that is novel in the line of popular music. Reserved seats at the tables and in the balcony are now on sale.

BOSTON POST.
THURSDAY.
APRIL 28, 1904

The unusually large demand for reserved tables and seats for the first of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall, next Tuesday evening, shows again the correct selection of a name for these pleasant events. The return of Mr. T. Adamowski to the director's desk will be the cause of an ovation to this popular musician.

DAILY ADVERTISER,
THURSDAY MORNING,
APRIL 28 1904

There is ample evidence that the "Pops" will have a brilliant start at Symphony Hall next Tuesday evening and the assignment of tables and seats already made in response to orders indicates an audience notable from both a musical and social standpoint.

BOSTON GLOBE-
-SATURDAY,
APRIL 30, 1904.

The first of the season's "Pop" concerts, to be given at Symphony hall next Tuesday evening, will find Mr T. Adamowski again in his old position at the conductor's desk. He has planned an excellent program and will introduce as the evening's soloist Mr A. Birnbaun, the violinist who joined the Symphony orchestra last fall.

DAILY ADVERTISER,
SATURDAY MORNING,
APRIL 30, 1904

MUSIC NOTES.

The first of the season's "Pop" concerts, to be given at Symphony hall next Tuesday evening, will find T. Adamowski again in his old position at the conductor's desk. He has planned an excellent programme for the enjoyment of the brilliant audience already assured, and will introduce as the evening's soloist, Birnbaun, the violinist who joined the Symphony orchestra from Vienna last fall.

BOSTON HERALD-
-SATURDAY,
APRIL 30, 1904.

The first of the "Pop" concerts will be given in Symphony Hall next Tuesday evening. Mr. Timothee Adamowski will be the conductor. The programme will be one to appeal to all classes, and Mr. Birnbaum of the orchestra will play the incidental solo in Gounod's "Hymn to St. Cecilia." Tables and seats are now on sale at Symphony Hall.

BOSTON POST.
SATURDAY.
APRIL 30, 1904

The first of the season's "Pop" concerts, to be given at Symphony Hall next Tuesday evening, will find T. Adamowski again in his old position at the conductor's desk. He has planned an excellent programme for the enjoyment of the brilliant audience, already assured, and will introduce as the evening's soloist, A. Z. Birnbaun, the violinist who joined the Symphony orchestra from Vienna last fall.

BOSTON JOURNAL-
-SATURDAY,
APRIL 30, 1904.

The first of the season's "Pop" concerts, to be given at Symhony Hall next Tuesday evening, will find Mr. T. Adamowski in his old position at the conductor's desk. He has planned an excellent program for the enjoyment of the brilliant audience already assured, and will introduce as the evening's soloist Mr. A. Birnbaum, the violinist who joined the Symphony orchestra from Vienna last fall, and has already established himself as a favorite with the Symphony concert patrons.

EVENING RECORD,
SATURDAY,
APRIL 30, 1904.

MUSIC NOTES.

The first of the season's "Pop" concerts, to be given at Symphony hall next Tuesday evening, will find T. Adamowski again in his old position at the conductor's desk. He has planned an excellent programme for the enjoyment of the brilliant audience already assured, and will introduce as the evening's soloist, Birnbaun, the violinist who joined the Symphony orchestra from Vienna last fall.

Boston Transcript
SATURDAY, APRIL 30, 1904

Mr. Adamowski and the "Pops"

The "Pop" concerts, which are to continue at Symphony Hall for eight weeks beginning on Tuesday evening next, give promise of fully maintaining the standard of excellence which has characterized these events in the past. The orchestra of fifty men is again to be directed by Mr. T. Adamowski, who has so well met the demands of the "Pop" patrons in former years. Mr. Adamowski outlines his plans as follows: "I confess it is rather pleasant to me to resume my old duties as director of the orchestra for the 'Pop' concerts. The Boston public has been very kind to me throughout my long residence in this city, and I have a sort of pride in doing what I can to maintain these concerts as one of the 'institutions' of the city. I have grown up with these concerts since I came to Boston, and they have always seemed to me a bit unique in their character. While I was abroad last summer I improved every possible opportunity to visit the concert gardens of the principal continental cities and refresh my acquaintance with the character of the programme which appealed to the audiences. I trust that during the coming concerts the 'Pop' audiences will benefit somewhat by the knowledge I gained in these visits to the foreign concert gardens, and I shall try to present some programmes which shall include selections suited to all classes of music-lovers. Your average Bostonian is inclined to take life rather seriously as compared with the residents of European capitals, and this tendency increases the difficulty of gaining effects which one notes as the result of the concert-garden programmes abroad. I hope to include in the concerts of the present season a sufficient number of selections which shall command the approval of even the most serious-minded 'Pop' patron, and yet make the concerts entertainments in the best sense of the word. I have been fortunate in securing additions to the library which will enable me to present selections from all of the popular musical comedies and light operas of the day, and I hope to add a first hearing in Boston of a number of novelties by prominent composers of all countries. The large number of competent soloists in the ranks of the orchestra will enable me to vary the programmes in an interesting way, and I shall have the pleasure of presenting as soloist on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings of the coming week Mr. A. Birnbaun, the violinist who joined the Symphony orchestra from Vienna last fall."

For the first night the programme will be as follows:

March, "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner
Overture, "Mignon" ..... A. Thomas
Selection, "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Waltz, "Im Lauschiger Nacht" ..... Ziehrer
Fantasia on "Il Pagliacci" ..... Leoncavallo
(First time.)
Prelude to Act III., "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
Hymn to St. Cecilia ..... Gounod
(Violin Solo by Mr. A. Birnbaun.)
"Country Dance" ..... Nevin
Overture, "Orpheus" ..... Offenbach
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen" ..... Luders
Waltz, "Blue Danube" ..... J. Strauss
March, "Sambre et Meuse" ..... Planquette

BOSTON JOURNAL-
-TUESDAY,
MAY 3, 1904.

OPENING OF THE "POPS."

The first concert of the eight weeks' "Pops," at Symphony Hall, to be given this evening, promises to introduce these events in the most auspicious manner. Mr. T. Adamowski returns to his place at the conductor's desk, and the program he has planned for the orchestra of fifty musicians includes many brilliant selections.

The numbers named are the "Mignon" and "Orpheus" overtures, selections from "Carmen," "Lohengrin," and "Prince of Pilsen," a fantasia from "Il Pagliacca," "Im Lauschiger Nacht" and "Blue Danube" waltzes, the "Tannhauser" and "El Capitan" marches, the "Country Dance" by Nevin, and Gounod's "Hymn to St. Cecilia," in which the violin solo is to be played by Mr. A. Birnbaun. The programs for the remaining evenings of the present week have many interesting novelties.

BOSTON POST.
TUESDAY.
MAY 3, 1904

OPENING OF THE "POP" CONCERTS

The first concert of the eight weeks' "Pops" at Symphony Hall, to be given this evening, promises to introduce these events in the most auspicious manner. The demand for reserved seats at the tables and in the balconies has been unusually large, and the audience will be a representative one, both from a musical and social standpoint.

Mr. T. Adamowski returns to his place at the conductor's desk, and the programme he has planned for the orchestra of 50 musicians includes many brilliant selections. The numbers named are the "Mignon" and "Orpheus" overtures, selections from "Carmen," "Lohengrin" and "Prince of Pilsen"; a fantasia on "I Pagliacci," "Im Lauschiger Nacht" and "Blue Danube" waltzes, the "Tannhauser" and "El Capitan" marches, the "Country Dance" by Nevin, and Gounod's "Hymn to St. Cecilia," in which the violin solo is to be played by Mr. A. Birnbaun. The programmes for the remaining evenings of the present week have many interesting novelties.

DAILY ADVERTISER,
TUESDAY MORNING,
MAY 3, 1904

FIRST "POP" TONIGHT.

The opening of the "Pop" concert season at Symphony Hall this evening promises to bring together an audience of immense proportions, the advance demand for seats on the floor and balcony having been largely in excess of that of former seasons. The plans made for these events promise well for their success during the next 8 weeks, and the musical and social features of the season will undoubtedly be fully appreciated by the public seeking entertainment.

BOSTON HERALD-
-TUESDAY,
MAY 3, 1904.

FIRST "POP" CONCERT.

The "Pop" concert season at Symphony Hall will begin this evening. The advance sale of tickets for floor and balcony has been largely in excess of that of former years. The plans for the season promise well for success during the next eight weeks and the musical and social features of the season will undoubtedly be fully appreciated by the public in search of entertainment. This evening, with Mr. T. Adamowski as conductor, the orchestra of 50 musicians will play the "Mignon" and "Orpheus" overtures, selections from "Carmen," "Lohengrin" and "Prince of Pilsen," a fantasia on "Pagliacci," "Im Lauschiger Nacht" and "Blue Danube" waltzes, the "Tannhaeuser" and "El Capitan" marches, the "Country Dance" by Nevin and Gounod's "Hymn to St. Cecilia," in which the violin solo will be played by Mr. Birnbaum. The programmes for the remaining evenings of the present week include interesting novelties.

BOSTON GLOBE-
-TUESDAY.
MAY 3, 1904.

Opening of the "Pop" Concerts.

The first concert of the eight weeks' "Pops" at Symphony hall to be given this evening promises to introduce these events in the most auspicious manner. The demand for reserved seats at the tables and in the balconies has been unusually large and the audience will be a representative one, both from a musical and social standpoint. Mr T. Adamowski returns to his place at the conductor's desk, and the program he has planned for the orchestra of 50 musicians includes many brilliant selections.

The numbers named are the "Mignon" and "Orpheus" overtures, selections from "Carmen," "Lohengrin" and "Prince of Pilsen," a fantasia on "Il Pagliacca," "Im Lauschiger Nacht" and "Blue Danube" waltzes, the "Tannhausser" and "El Capitan" marches, the "Country Dance" by Neven, and Gounod's "Hymn to St Cecilia," in which the violin solo is to be played by Mr A. Birnbaun. The programs for the remaining evenings of the present week have many interesting novelties.

Boston Transcript
TUESDAY, MAY 3, 1904

The opening of the "Pop" concert season at Symphony Hall this evening promises to bring together an audience of immense proportions, the advance demand for seats on the floor and balcony having been largely in excess of that of former seasons. This evening, with Mr. T. Adamowski as conductor, the orchestra of fifty musicians will be heard in the "Mignon" and "Orpheus" overtures, selections from "Carmen," "Lohengrin" and "The Prince of Pilsen," a fantasia on "Il Pagliacci," "Im Lauschiger Nacht" and "Blue Danube" waltzes, the "Tannhäuser" and "El Capitan" marches, the "Country Dance" by Neven, and Gounod's "Hymn to St. Cecilia," in which the violin solo is to be played by Mr. A. Birnbaum. The programmes for the remaining evenings of the week have many interesting novelties.

SUNDAY JOURNAL,
MAY 1, 1904.

Popular Music Will Echo In Symphony Hall At The "Pops"

"Why does the 'Pop' season open on Tuesday?" is the very pertinent question people are asking each other after long years of Monday first nights. "All the fault of the calendar," reply the managers. There are eight weeks of each summer devoted to the "Pops." This year "graduates' night," always the most brilliant sort of a close, comes on June 27, which is Monday. Therefore, to make the eight weeks come out even the start is made on Tuesday.

Programs already announced indicate very plainly that every effort will be made to satisfy the musical palates of those desiring light music of the best kind rather than that which is too classical.

In other words, those who attend the "Pops" this year are apt to come away whistling or humming some popular air to which the Symphony has given a new meaning and fresh beauty.

Special nights already arranged for will include May 25, when the National Electric Societies, then holding a convention in this city, have bought up the entire house; June 7, which is "Tech" night, and, of course, the Harvard nights.

For Tuesday night there have been tables engaged by Mr. and Mrs. Eben Jordan and a party, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Skinner, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Burnham, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Goodrich, who, by the way, will meet their friends for the first time since their wedding; Mrs. "Tim" Adamowski, Mr. Otto Roth, Mr. James Forsyth, Mr. Atherton, Dr. Foster Bush, Dr. Bapst Blake and party, Mr. W. P. Blake, Miss Blake, Miss Anne Lyman, Mrs. G. M. Rich, who will have several guests; Mr. Schuyler Bartlett and Mr. Charles F. Dennie.

-GLOBE-
-MAY 1, 1904.

"Pop" Concerts Begin Tuesday Night.

The opening of the "Pop" concert season at Symphony hall Tuesday evening brings Mr T. Adamowski back to his old post at the conductor's desk. Mr Adamowski needs no introduction to a Boston audience and with a view to gaining some information as to his plans for the coming season the writer saw him at Symphony hall Friday, and in the course of a pleasant chat about the coming concerts Mr Adamowski said:

"Few of my professional experiences during my long residence in Boston have given me more pleasure than those associated with the direction of the Pop concerts in the old Music hall and in the newer auditorium where they are now given. There is an exhilaration in standing before an orchestra, in the presence of such audiences as assemble at these events, that is indescribable and I think that I voice the sentiments of all the musicians who participate in these events when I say that they are the most enjoyable engagements of any that we participate in during the year. In the coming concerts I hope to catch something of the spirit of those given in the European capitals and afford the patrons of the Boston 'Pops' a hearing of such selections as I found immensely popular at all of the concert gardens I visited during my trip abroad last summer.

"The tendency of the average American to take life seriously makes an obstacle in the conduct of the 'Pop' concerts which can hardly be appreciated. Although I claim to be pretty much of an American myself I realize that there is a tendency on this side of the water to maintain a certain restraint under any and all circumstances even where the foreigner would from second nature abandon himself to the enjoyment of the moment. I hope that I may profit by the experience I have gained in former years in the concerts of the coming season and succeed in presenting such selections as may make the 'Pops' of the present year a source of entertainment to a large public. I have been particularly fortunate in collecting additions to the library which promise to afford a wide variety in the selections to be presented and the popular musical comedies and light operas of the day will find prominence in each week's programs.

"The introduction of solo numbers by prominent members of the orchestra will make one of the features of the season's concerts, and there are so many competent men in the orchestra that I am quite sure these contributions will be eminently pleasing. During the first week Mr A. Birnbaun, the violinist who joined the Symphony orchestra from Vienna last fall, will be heard on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings, and I need not tell those who heard him at the Boston and Cambridge concerts of his ability as a soloist."

The arrangements for the "pops" during the coming season will be essentially the same as in former years, the main floor of Symphony hall being filled with tables, a certain proportion of which may be reserved in advance, and seats may be had in the first and second balconies by those who prefer to listen to the music away from the more social surroundings of the floor. The usual light refreshments will be served at the tables, and the same care shown as in former seasons to make the "pops" worthy their name.

This is the Tuesday evening program:

March, Tannhauser.....Wagner
Overture, Mignon.....Thomas
Selection, Carmen.....Bizet
Waltz, Im Lauschiger Nacht.....Zieh rer
Fantasia on Il Pagliacci.....Leoncavallo
(First time.)
Prelude to Act III, Lohengrin.....Wagner
Hymn to St Cecilia.....Gounod
(Violin solo by Mr A. Birnbaun.)
Country Dance.....Nevin
Overture, Orpheus.....Offenbach
Selection, Prince of Pilsen.....Luders
Waltz, Blue Danube.....J Strauss
March, El Capitan.....Sousa

——The season of Pop concerts opens Tuesday evening at Symphony hall, almost before the echoes of the classical music played Saturday evening by the symphony orchestra have died away. These concerts have come to be a feature in the musical and social life of Boston and its suburbs during the spring season, and have grown more and more popular as the years have gone by. Mr Adamowski will conduct the orchestra, which will be composed of Symphony men, and promises patrons programs that will be truly popular. Already a very large number of tables have been engaged for the opening night, a few who will be there with friends being Dr J. Papst Blake, Mr Eben D. Jordan, Mr A. M. Leland, Mr and Mrs Stephen H. Bennett, Mr and Mrs James Lowell Putnam, Mr and Mrs Arthur Richmond, Mr and Mrs Wallace G. Goodrich, Mr Henry Burnham, Mr and Mrs Kimball, Miss Estelle Kimball, Mr F. W. Allen, Mr Atherton, Mr Schuyler Bartlett, Mr William P. Blake, Mr James Forsythe, Miss Annie Lyman and Mrs G. W. Richardson.

Received May 5 1904

SUNDAY POST.
MAY 1, 1904

FIRST WEEK OF THE "POPS"

The regular season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall will begin on Tuesday evening next and will continue for eight weeks, with much the same arrangements as have proved so satisfactory during the long continuance of these events. Mr. T. Adamowski has been again selected as the conductor for the season and a wiser choice could hardly have been made. In discussing his plans for the coming concerts with a Post man, Mr. Adamowski said:

"I hope that the concerts of the coming season will be accepted by the 'Pop' patrons as an evidence on the part of the management of these events to provide the Boston public with the very best entertainments in this line that can be had anywhere. I certainly shall make every effort to maintain the high reputation the 'Pops' have gained and to present such programmes as will appeal to music lovers of all classes. During my trip through Europe last summer I took particular pains to renew my acquaintance with the concert gardens of the principal cities and to study the class of compositions which found the most general favor. I hope to make use of the knowledge thus gained in preparing the programmes for the coming season. I have been particularly successful in securing a lot of novelties by composers of all nations and have added to the library selections from all of the popular musical comedies and light operas recently produced. I trust that I shall again have the favor of the 'Pop' patrons in occasionally presenting selections which demand a cessation of the confusion naturally attending such events, because I realize that there are many in the audiences who have a taste for the more delicate orchestral compositions which demand unusual attention during their performance.

"There are so many capable solo players in the orchestra that I shall be enabled to introduce solo numbers worthy the attention of the patrons, and during the first week I shall have the pleasure of presenting as soloist Mr. A. Birnbaun, the violinist who joined the Symphony Orchestra from Vienna last fall, and who gained distinct favor with the Symphony audiences of the Boston and Cambridge concerts the last season."

The usual arrangements for tables will be made on the floor of the hall for the coming season's concerts, a certain proportion of which can be engaged in advance. Those desiring to hear the concerts apart from the social surroundings of the floor will find seats in the first and second balconies. The programme announced for the opening night is as follows:

1. March, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
2. Overture, "Mignon".....A. Thomas
3. Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
4. Waltz, "Im Lauschiger Nacht".....Ziehrer
5. Fantasia on "I Pagliacci".....Leoncavallo (First Time.)
6. Prelude to Act 3, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
7. Hymn to St. Cecilia.....Gounod (Violin solo by Mr. A. Birnbaun.)
8. "Country Dance".....Nevin
9. Overture, "Orpheus".....Offenbach
10. Selection, "Prince of Pilsen"...Luders
11. Waltz, "Blue Danube".....J. Strauss
12. March, "El Capitan".....Sousa

BRILLIANT MUSICAL EVENT

A splendid programme has been arranged for the initial Pop concert of the season, on Tuesday evening next, in Symphony Hall, and there will be a fairly record breaking attendance. Among the many who have taken tables for that occasion are Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Goodrich (Madeleine Boardman), who will return from their bridal tour for the concert, Dr. J. Babst Blake and party, Dr. J. Foster Bush and guests, Mr. and Mrs. Eben D. Jordan, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen H. Bennett. Mr. and Mrs. James Lovell Putnam, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Burnham, Mr. William P. Blake, Mr. Otto Roth, Miss Estelle Kimball, Mr. Schuyler S. Bartlett, Mr. and Mrs. James B. Forsyth. Captain and Mrs. William H. Alline, Mr. F. W. Allen and Miss Anna Lyman. It is a pleasure to state that the programmes will be less classical than they were last year, and will be liberally interspersed with numerous selections from the favorite light operas.

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN
WEDNESDAY, MAY 4, 1904

BEAUTY AND FASHION AT 'POP' CONCERT

Symphony Hall Bright With Exquisite Costumes of Smart Set.

SOCIETY OUT IN FORCE

Society will flock to Symphony Hall tonight when the second of the "Pop" concerts will be given. But little change has been made in the personnel of the orchestra. The program arranged for this evening is as follows:

March, "Tambour-Battant".....Messager
Overture, "Light Cavalry".....Suppe
Suite from Ballet.....Tschaiowsky
Waltz, "Gross Wien".....J. Strauss
Fantasia on "La Boheme".....Puccini
Selection, "Faust".....Gounod
"Narcissus".....Nevin
Ballet from "Gioconda".....Poncielli
Selection, "Robin Hood".....De Koven
Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
Selection, "Peggy from Paris".....Loraine
March, "Tobasco".....Chadwick

The opening concert was one of the most brilliant first nights at a Pop concert in years. Among the many handsomely gowned women were noted:

MISS ELLEN ATHERTON—Cafe-au-lait veiling gown closely tucked, dark blue lace, and sash and deep crush girdle of cafe-au-lait silk.

MRS. WILLIAM ARMSTRONG—Pale blue crepe-de-chine, light blue moire stock and girdle, and skirt with circular bands of moire and Irish lace insertion.

MISS ASPINWALL—Narrow black and white striped silk, skirt in narrow bands of jet and black silk fringe.

MISS HELEN APPLETON—Pink and blue changeable taffeta silk, bodice in white Russian in jabot effect.

MRS. HENRY HARRIS—Black satin and jet.

MISS DOROTHY JORDAN—Pale blue crepe de chine and lace, large white hat.

MISS HENRIETTA STEVENSON—White lace with white satin wrap; white picture hat.

MRS. JAMES PUTNAM—Black muslin, embroidered in large conventional flowers in purple shades, white lace; large, flat lavender straw hat, trimmed in orchids.

MRS. GOODRICH—Brown chiffon and cloth, white turban trimmed in pansies.

MRS. TIM ADAMOWSKI—Black veiling and lace, large black picture hat.

MISS BONNIE LYMAN—Pale gray silk.

MISS BLAKE—Pale gray, violet turban.

MRS. JOSEF ADAMOWSKI (Mme. Szumowska)—Black satin, gray trimming of silk and lace.

MISS ESTELLE KIMBALL—White net over white satin, with touches of light blue silk passementerie on the bodice.

MME. ALEXANDER MARIUS—Mode silk skirt, red and white silk bodice, black velvet ribbon and cream lace.

MRS. HENRY L. HIGGINSON—Dull gray cloth and white lace.

MISS JULIET HIGGINSON, in gray crepe de chine, bodice in white lace, large black straw picture hat.

MISS ALISON HAUGHTON—Black veiling, black hat.

MRS. FRED CONVERSE—Pale gray veiling, gray lace.

MRS. FRANK MOSELEY—Pale gray silk, flower bonnet.

MISS MAY MOSELEY—Pale pink satin, with large pale pink straw picture hat.

MISS SARA DAGGETT, with her fiance, Dr. Beattie, of London—Pale gray cloth, trimmed in white lace, picture hat of cream straw.

MRS. FRANCIS S. WATSON—Cream white silk, with a purple velvet hat.

MRS. J. FOSTER BUSH (with Dr. Bush)—White satin waist, with black veiling skirts.

MISS BUSH—Black and white.

MRS. FRED COMEE—Black lace.

MRS. L. F. MUDGETT—Cafe-au-lait silk, with cream lace.

MISS KATHERINE FAY—Pale gray veiling, trimmed in pale blue silk.

MISS HENRIETTA SARGENT—Black veiling; pearls.

Others in the hall were Mr. and Mrs. Stephen H. Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. Max Zach, Mr. Charles Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Dennee, Mr. Edward Glazier, Mrs. Louise C. Elson, Miss Amory, Mr. Ingersoll Amory, Miss Aspinwall and Mr. and Mrs. Herbert M. Leland.

Boston Transcript
WEDNESDAY, MAY 4, 1904

Symphony Hall: First "Pop" Concert

The Pops began last night in Symphony Hall, the people seating themselves at their tables to the sound of the very same march that made imposing the entrance of the guests at the Wartburg singing contest in the days of the holy Elizabeth. But not at Vienna, at Berlin or even at Bayreuth, do Elizabeth's guests come in such glory of attire as did the people of Boston last night to what, for the time being, purports to be a beer garden. The ladies were grand—in silks and velvets, not to say satins, and most marvellous hats. Not for "Tristan und Isolde," not for the opening night of "Candida," did the women of Boston make themselves so fine as for the first Pop concert. And the men were not far behind; long tails and white ties were plenty! This being a free country, there is no adequate reason why people should not dress everywhere quite as they choose, yet one must retain the privilege of being amused at seeing a concert in a beer hall made into a fashionable event. From the social standpoint, the Pops are now what the Symphony concerts used to be.

But there were many in the crowded hall yesterday evening who manifestly did not come to feast their eyes on millinery. On the contrary, they came, very evidently, to hear the music, for they sat as bolt upright and with as serious a mein as though they were at a Longy Club concert. Fewest, apparently, entered the hall for the original purpose of light, summer concerts: to have a good time with their friends, sitting comfortably about a table, with something to drink, and agreeable music for a backbround. As Bernard Shaw puts it, Englishmen (consequently Americans, or, at all events, New Englanders) cannot play. He appears to be all right; even a concert ostensibly adapted to sociability and warm weather is treated earnestly.

Looked upon as a "legitimate" concert, that of last night was admirable. The programme was excellent, the players were in good form, and Mr. Adamowski conducted with a warmth of temperature and a keenness of rhythm that were delightful. From a social point of view, the occasion was even more sucessful, the house being quite filled, with very fine people, all in their gladdest garments. That the atmosphere was gay, however, cannot be said, for there was in the air too much of the air of the drawing-room. R. R. G.

DAILY ADVERTISER, WEDNESDAY MAY 4, 1904.

THE "POPS" AT SYMPHONY HALL.

Just as our symphony concerts present the best performances in their field in America, the "Pops" offer to Bostonians a series of smoking concerts that can certainly not be rivalled on this side of the water They form a delightful dessert to our heavy symphonic meal. But it is now the 19th season of these charming musical postscripts, and it is impossible to say anything about them, or about Mr. Ellis, or Mr. Comee, who guide their destinies, that will not come to the reader as an 18 times told tale.

Even the conductor, Mr. Adamowski, is not to be described as a novelty. His beat was as graceful as ever, his manner as earnest as of yore. He insists upon the dignity of the concerts, spite of their cakes and ale, so strenuously that the Harvard boys have altered their Virgil into

"Timeo Adamowski's, et dona ferentes!"

He was greeted with considerable effusion and the applause kept up to a fervid point at almost every number, with many encores during the evening. The programme was as follows:—

March "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Overture "Mignon".....A. Thomas
Selection "Carmen".....Bizet
Waltz "Im Lauschiger Nacht".....Ziehrer
Fantasia on "Il Pagliacci".....Leoncavallo
(First Time)
Prelude to Act. III. "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Hymn to St. Cecilia.....Gounod
(Violin Solo by Mr. A. Birnbaum)
"Country Dance".....Nevin
Overture "Orpheus".....Offenbach
Selection "Prince of Pilsen".....Luders
Waltz "Blue Danube".....J. Strauss
March "El Capitan".....Sousa

And an equally varied programme is offered for every night this week. Mr. Birnbaum, who was very successful and was encored in his solo last night, is to give solos again on Thursday and Saturday.

The appreciation of the lighter numbers showed that Richard Strauss has not obliterated Johann, and that "Tannhauser" and "Anhauser," the "Prince of Pilsen" and the imported Pilsener, may all work together in harmony. The large and brilliant audience seemed more jovial and "en rapport" with the occasion than ever.

There is one suggestion that might be made for a novelty programme in these interesting concerts. Why not give a concert of musical curiosities some evening? For example, one might give Mozart's "Musikalischer Spass," which pictures a country Kapellmeister trying with might and main to write a great classical work; and his struggles are most comical to hear.

Then there is Beethoven's gory composition, the "Battle Symphony," picturing the Battle of Vittoria, with 2 bass drums pounding away as artillery on each side of the stage.

There is also Cleather's concerto for kettle-drum, in which the musical world is turned upside down, and the kettle-drum becomes the leading instrument of the orchestra, the player performing on 6 of these drums, and being supported by such lesser instruments as violins, horns, etc.!

Wagner's "Centennial March" might also come in as a curio—in short, a very interesting programme might be made up that would be attractive to classicist and the laity alike.

Nevertheless, the outline of the present programmes promises many enjoyable evenings, and the "Pops" are an unfailing sign that Spring and warm weather are soon coming. Louis C. Elson.

[57]

"POP" CONCERTS OPEN FOR SEASON

Society Crowds Symphony Hall Which Blooms Like a Huge Flower Garden.

ADAMOWSKI THE LEADER

Balcony Filled and Much Bowing and Waving of Programs Among Old Patrons.

The nineteenth season of the promenade concerts, more jovially known as the "Pops," was opened in Symphony Hall, which bloomed like a huge flower garden, last evening. The orchestra, composed as usual of Symphony men, was led by Mr. T. Adamowski, and this was the musical menu he offered the audience:

March, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Overture, "Mignon".....A. Thomas
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Waltz, "In lauschiger Nacht"...Ziehrer
Fantasia on "I Pagliacci" (first time), Leoncavallo
Prelude to Act III., "Lohengrin," Wagner
Hymn to St. Cecilia, violin solo by Mr. A. Birnbaum.....Gounod
Country Dance.....Nevin
Overture, "Orpheus".....Offenbach
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen".....Luders
Waltz, "Blue Danube".....J. Strauss
March, "El Capitan".....Sousa

In Symphony Hall transformed, in the presence of the familiar tables built for four, of vernal toilets, of chatter and laughter of nicotinian incense and the odor of the nectar of Gambrinus, one may well cry "The king of winter is dead; long live the king of spring!"

Abandon Added.

The "Pops" are the residuary legatee of the Symphonies, with an added feeling of gaiety and abandon. We see the same men on the platform, but they seem to be a more genial lot, with less of the burdens of the musical world on their shoulders. From the thunderous tonalities of Richard Strauss they have moved over very gracefully to the sensuous swing of Johann, the greatest waltz maker of them all. And we who listen do not have to scratch our heads to find the meaning of this or that musical problem. We know what the "Pops" mean, and we are perfectly ready to Give a rouse, then, in the May-time

For a heart without a fear.
* * * * With a stein on the table,
And a good song ringing clear.

Mr. Adamowski, who was warmly greeted and who conducted with his customary care, had arranged a very excellent program. There was plenty of the sort of music that naturally fits a concert of this kind, which demands force and fire and fooot-compelling rhythm, rather than delicacy and striking beauty.

Wagner Is Better.

Wagner is better than Gounod—with all due respect to the "Hymn to St. Cecilia," the solo violin part of which was well played by Mr. Birnbaum—and Offenbach's delirious can-can arouses more enthusiasm than the pretty tinkle of Nevin. There is a time for weeping and there is a time for laughter in music; the "Pops" season is an audible smile.

It is almost an impertinence to say that the orchestra played exceedingly well, for it could scarcely do otherwise. Part of the pleasure to the people consists in hearing some familiar thing like "The Prince of Pilsen" sounded forth by fifty men and with a beauty of tone that one can get nowhere else in America. Whether or not one always agrees with Mr. Adamowski's view of various compositions is immaterial. The music is superb, and its performance as fine as can reasonably be expected.

And now for a successful carrying out of the season, which has been launched with all the accessories that Bostonians love.

In the balcony there was a double-all-round and in some places triple rows of people, who alternated their attention between the orchestra and the table set, leveling opera glasses and lorgnettes at each in turn, and exchanging hand moves and nods of approval with acquaintances all over the house.

During the intermissions the cliff dwellers and the "tablers" met in the foyer and enjoyed the promenade. It was all so delightfully Bohemian.

Some of those noted were Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, who had a table in the center of the hall. Mrs. Higginson was in dove-gray silk crepe, and wore a close bonnet of straw. Miss Juliet Higginson was in cafe au lait batiste. Mr. Eben Jordan had a party of young people at his table. Miss Dorothy Jordan wore the lightest gray chiffon gown and a flat hat of white leghorn wreathed in pink rosebuds.

Miss Katherine Fay, whose table was nearby, was in light gray crepe and a blue hat. Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Goodrich held quite a reception at their table. Mrs. Goodrich wore a gown of tobacco brown voile with a veil-draped hat of the same shade. Miss Eleanore Sears was in black and white.

Tables Were Gay.

One of the tables was occupied by Dr. Robert Beattie of London and his fiancee, Miss Sara Daggett, whose engagement was announced last week.

Mrs. W. D. Quint wore blue louisine done in cream lace and a hat of blue and green. Miss Estelle Kimball was in cafe au lait crepe. Miss Deven's gown was of pale gray. Mrs. Blake wore a handsome jetted gown of black.

Mrs. Adamowski was in light tan voile. Miss Ulay Kenney's gown of all white was completed by a white hat and boa. Mrs. Frank Watson was in black and white. Others there were Mr. and Mrs. James Putnam, Percy Atherton, Ray Atherton, Dr. Ralph Thompson, Dr. George C. Hall, Joshua Holden, Harry Mason, Herbert Copeland, Walter Badger, Thomas Tracy Bouve, Mr. and Mrs. Dennee, Dr and Mrs. Blake.

SOCIETY ATTENDS OPENING OF "POPS"

The inaugural of the 19th season of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall began last evening under the most auspicious circumstances.

The body of the house was filled, and an unusual number of spectators were in both balconies. Society was well represented and handsomely gowned women could be seen on every side.

Boston's mild form of polite dissipation seems to have started with renewed vigor, and with the coolness of the evening and the admirable programme arranged by Mr. Adamowski, the company was in excellent spirits. The selections were as follows:

1. March, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
2. Overture, "Mignon".....A. Thomas
3. Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
4. Waltz, "In lauschiger Nacht".....Ziehrer
5. Fantasia on "I Pagliacci".....Leoncavallo (First time.)
6. Prelude to Act III., "Lohengrin"...Wagner
7. Hymn to St. Cecilia.....Gounod (Violin solo by Mr. A. Birnbaum.)
8. Country Dance.....Nevin
9. Overture, "Orpheus".....Offenbach
10. Selection, "Prince of Pilsen".....Luders
11. Waltz, "Blue Danube".....J. Strauss
12. March, "El Capitan".....Sousa

It will be seen that Mr. Adamowski supplied a pleasing variety and in addition was very generous with his repeats, almost every number being redemanded. There has been but little change in the personnel of the orchestra, and the musicians played with all their wonted skill. For the remainder of the week the offerings promise to be equally attractive, as the programme for tonight will evidence. It is as follows:

1. March, "Tambour-Battant".....Messager
2. Overture, "Light Cavalry".....Suppe
3. Suite from Ballet.....Tschaiowsky
4. Waltz, "Gross Wien".....J. Strauss
5. Fantasia on "La Boheme".....Puccini
6. Selection, "Faust".....Gounod
7. "Narcissus".....Nevin
8. Ballet from "Gioconda".....Ponchelli
9. Selection, "Robin Hood".....De Koven
10. Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
11. Selection, "Peggy from Paris".....Loraine
12. March, "Tobasco".....Chadwick

Gowns of Society Women

One of the most attractive gowns seen was that of Mrs. James Putnam, which was a black muslin, embroidered in large conventional flowers in purple shades. She wore white lace trimming it, and her hat was a large flat lavender straw trimmed in orchids. She was with Mr. Putnam, in Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Goodrich's party.

Mrs. Goodrich was in brown chiffon and cloth, with white turban trimmed in pansies.

Mrs. Tim Adamowski was in black veiling and lace and wore a large black picture hat.

Miss Bonnie Lyman, in the same party, was in pale gray silk.

William P. Blake had his sister, Miss Blake, at his table, the latter in pale gray with a violet turban.

Mrs. Josef Adamowski (Mme. Szumowska) was very pretty in a black satin with gray trimming of silk and lace.

Miss Ellen Atherton was gowned in cafe-au-lait veiling, the entire gown (skirt and bodice) closely tucked. The trimming was dark blue lace. She had a sash and deep crush girdle of the cafe-au-lait silk.

Mrs. William Armstrong wore a pale blue crepe-de-chine. She had a light blue moire stock and girdle and her skirt was done in circular bands of the moire and Irish lace insertion.

Miss Aspinwall was gowned in a narrow black and white striped silk, the skirt trimmed in narrow bands of jet and black silk fringe.

Miss Helen Appleton was very pretty in a pink and blue changeable taffeta silk. The lace used in trimming the bodice was white Russian and was used in jabot effect.

Mrs. Henry Harris was in black satin and jet.

Miss Dorothy Jordan was in pale blue crepe de chine and lace, with large white hat.

Miss Henrietta Stevenson wore white lace with white satin wrap. She wore a white picture hat.

Miss Estelle Kimball was in white net over white satin with touches of light blue silk passementerie on the bodice.

Mme. Alexander Marius was in a mode silk skirt with which she wore a red and white silk bodice trimmed in black velvet ribbon and cream lace.

Mrs. Henry L. Higginson was in dull gray cloth and white lace.

Miss Juliet Higginson wore gray crepe de chine, the bodice done in white lace, and a large black straw picture hat.

Miss Alison Haughton looked stunning in black veiling and a black hat.

Mrs. Fred Converse was in pale gray veiling and gray lace.

Mrs. Frank Moseley was in pale gray silk, with a flower bonnet. Her daughter, Miss May Moseley, was in pale pink satin, with which she wore a large pale pink straw picture hat.

Miss Sara Daggett, with her fiance, Dr. Beattie of London, was in pale gray cloth trimmed in white lace, and wore a picture hat of cream straw.

Mrs. Francis S. Watson was in cream white silk, with a purple velvet hat.

Mrs. J. Foster Bush (with Dr. Bush) was in white satin waist with black veiling skirts. Miss Bush was also in black and white.

Mrs. Fred Comee was in black lace.

Mrs. L. F. Mudgett had on cafe-au-lait silk with cream lace.

Miss Katherine Fay was in pale gray veiling, trimmed in pale blue silk.

Miss Henrietta Sargent was in black veiling and wore some beautiful pearls at her throat.

Others in the hall were Mr. and Mrs. Stephen H. Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. Max Zach, Mr. Charles Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Dennee, Mr. Edward Glazier, Mrs. Louis C. Elson, Miss Amory, Mr. Ingersoll Amory, Miss Aspinwall and Mr. and Mrs. Herbert M. Leland.

Received Mar. 1904

NINETEENTH SEASON OF "POP" CONCERTS.

Large and Brilliant Audience Enjoys Opening of the Series Last Evening in Symphony Hall.

SCENES AT LAST NIGHT'S "POP."

"Pop" go the concerts once again, and from now on Bostonians will find their annual spring tonic—seltzer, symphony and society carefully blended at Symphony hall. It was a brilliant first night, indeed it was one of the most brilliant first nights at a "Pop" concert in many, many years. Not since the olden days when the "Pops" were served in the original Music hall on Hamilton pl, has there been a larger gathering of the aristocratic music lovers of Boston at one of these concerts.

They were most all down stairs, for while the first and second balconies had a fair-sized crowd, practically every table on the floor was taken. It was the typical modified Bohemia, made in Boston, and found nowhere else. It was as eminently respectable as the average "Pops" and a little more. If the tables hadn't been there it would have required no great stretch of imagination to have believed it a symphony recital, for the audience contained many faces familiar to the more dignified musical.

Col and Mrs Henry L. Higginson with their daughter, Miss Juliet, were there with a party of friends. So too, were Eben D. Jordan, Miss Dorothy Jordan and a large party, Hon Joshua B. Holden, F. O. North, Henry L. Mason, Mrs T. Adamowski, Miss May Kenney, Miss Elizabeth Devens, Mrs Frank Watson, Miss Katherine Fay, Miss Eleanor Sears, Walter Badger, Stephen Burnett, Otis Kimball, E. H. Converse, Clayton Johns, Gideon Wurdz, Charles Denee, Percy Atherton, Roy Atherton, David Kimball, Miss Estelle Kimball, Mr and Mrs Otto Roth, Mr and Mrs Josef Adamowski, Mr and Mrs James Putnam, Mr and Mrs James Forsythe, George H. Lyman, Dr W. S. Bigelow, Mr and Mrs Walter Goodrich, Herbert Copeland, Thomas Tracy Bouve, Max Zach and W. P. Blake.

Ordinarily a "Pop" concert is pleasantly informal, but last evening full dress seemed to be the rule. A glance across the crowded floor showed a sea of colors, a garden of the choicest blossoms from the gardens of the dressmaker and the milliner. Beautiful indeed were many of the gowns. Color, color everywhere and brilliancy was the key-note. The hats alone were enough to drive a woman insane with envy. Huge, wonderful creations of lace-tulle-crepe and what-not, most of them surmounted by large, graceful plumes of varying shades.

The audience was fairly punctual, and when conductor T. Adamowski first mounted the platform pretty nearly everybody were in their seats ready to greet him.

At first there was a little chilliness, the crowd seemed to have forgotten how to act at a "Pop," and sat up very straight, paying strict attention to the music program. Very gradually, however, they dropped the "Boston attitude" and by the time the orchestra had reached "El Capitan," which was the last number, it was noticeable there was a little more attention given to the liquid program, and that, so far from sitting up straight, everyone seemed to have inclined toward the center of their respective tables, drawn thither, doubtless, by the warming influence.

Everyone seemed to be highly pleased with the way that things were conducted. On all sides were heard words of approval for conductor Adamowski and managers Ellis and Comee. The most generally expressed delight was that the program seemed to show a desire to supply music which would please the lesser cultured class of music lovers.

In the intermissions there was more or less promenading in the lobbies. This was especially true during the last intermission, when, for a few moments, the passageways were gay with people, and the chatter of voices was pleasant and cheerful.

The "Pops" this year promise to be all that their name suggests. If the crowd of last evening is to be taken as any criterion, the real music lovers have taken them to their hearts with all the enthusiasm of the days of old.

PLEASING CONCERT PROGRAM

Mr Adamowski's Selections Are Admirably Chosen and Receive Hearty Applause.

The program numbers comprised the "Mignon and "Orpheus" overtures, selections from "Carmen," "Lohengrin" and "Prince of Pilsen," a fantasia on "Il Pagliacca," "Im Lauschiger Nacht" and "Blue Danube" waltzes, the "Tannhauser" and "El Capitan" marches, the "Country Dance" by Nevin, and Gounod's "Hymn to St Cecelia," in which the violin solo was performed by Mr A. Birnbaun.

The orchestra is made up of musicians whose abilities are well and favorably known to our Symphony patrons, and being under the direction of their associate artist, Mr T. Adamowski, whose style of conducting is familiar to the men, the dozen or more selections were played with splendid effect. As is invariably the case at these concerts the opening number on the program makes but little impression, for it is always played midst the confusion and bustle attending the arrival of tardy patrons. The second piece, the "Mignon" overture, was heard under better circumstances and its excellent performance resulted in a spontaneous outburst of applause which brought forth an encore number. Then came the brilliant and dashing measures of "Carmen," followed by a Ziehrer waltz, both selections being given with admirable swing and nerve.

In the second part of the program was "St Cecelia's" hymn, which proved to be the artistic feature of the evening, by reason of the exquisite expression and finish with which the violin part was played by Mr Birnbaun. A repetition was imperatively demanded by the auditors, something rather unusual for a so-called "hush" number. The "Lohengrin" and "Pagliacci" excerpts were also well received, and the "Country Dance," by Nevin, a dainty little piece, was given in excellent fashion.

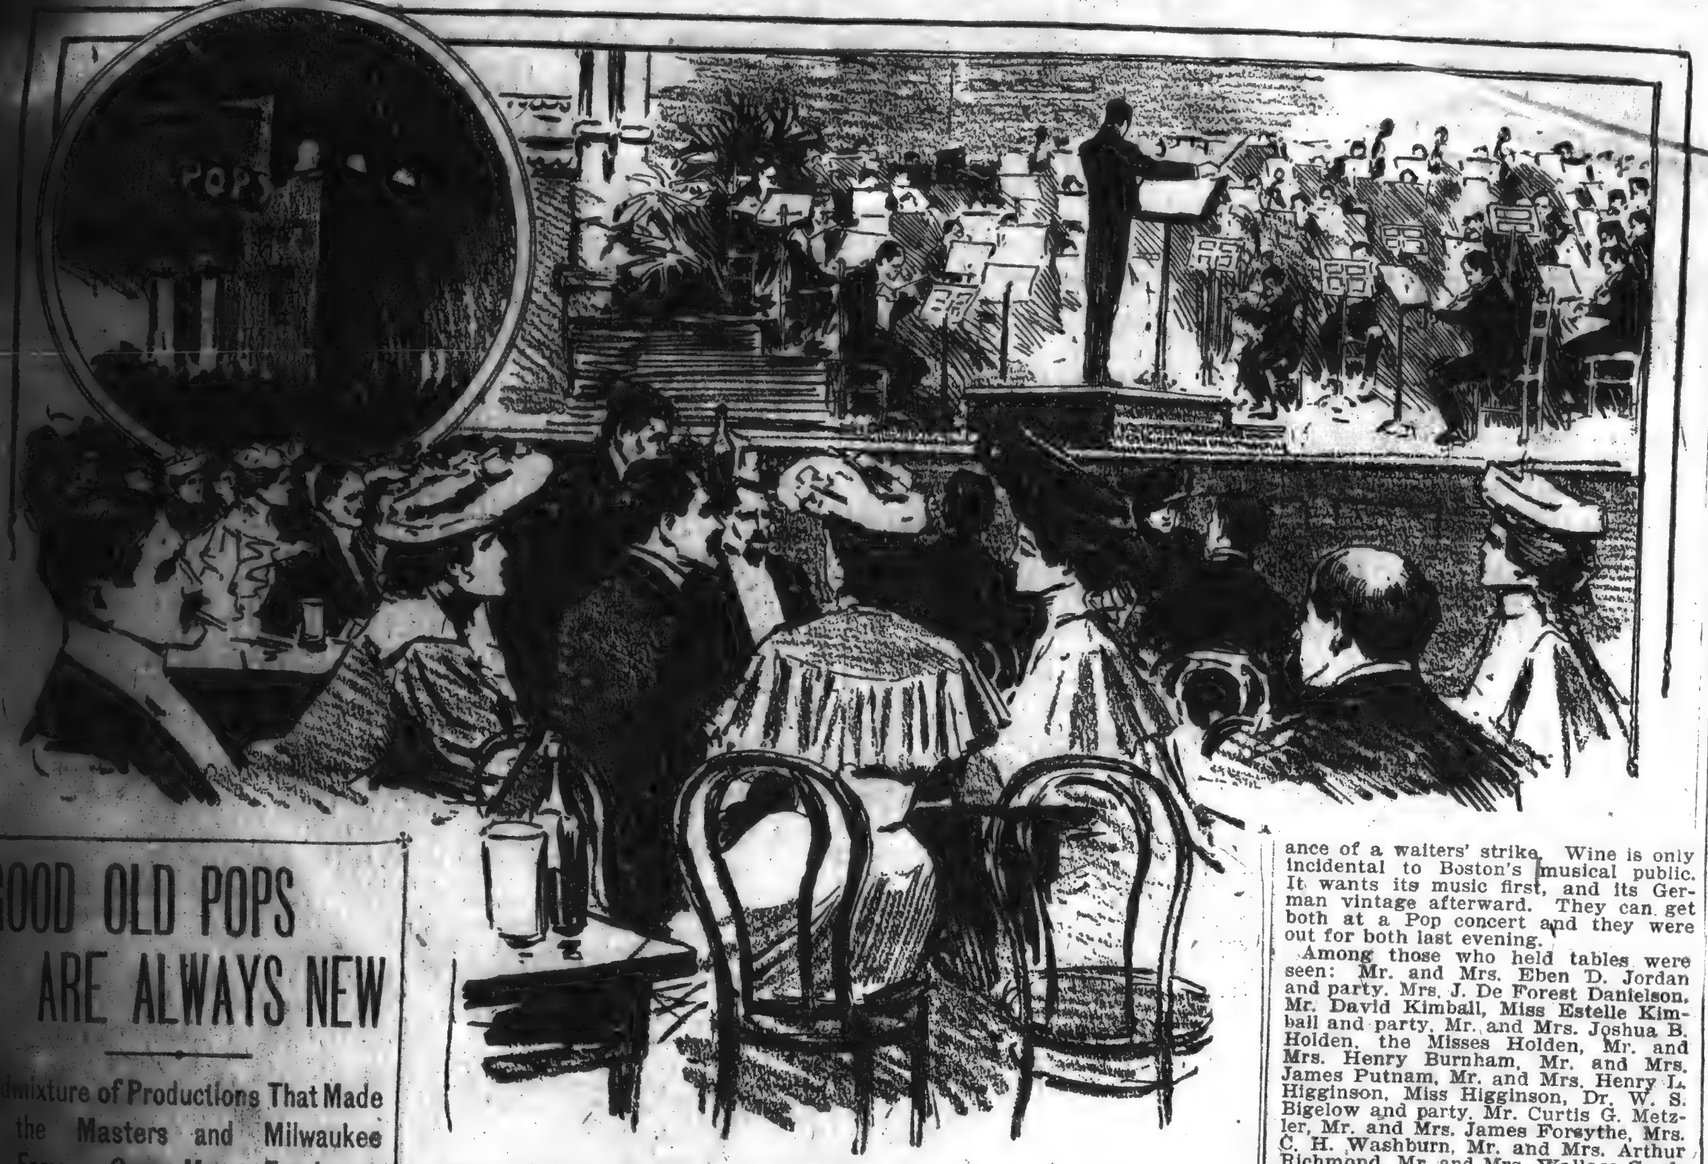
Mr Adamowski's selections were of a more cheerful nature and nearer the popular taste than has been the case in the majority of programs given at these concerts, for Wagner was represented by two of his more melodious compositions and of the other works which might be termed "classics" each one was a favorite. The closing section of the program was made up of four light pieces by Offenbach, Luders, J. Strauss and Sousa, jolly, familiar works which put one in good humor, and especially so when played as they were last night. There were more repeats and the favor with which the whole program was received indicates pretty plainly that compositions of the heavier grade should be largely in the minority at a "Pop" concert, if the wishes of the general public are to be considered.

This evening's program will be as follows:

March, Tambour-battant	Messager
Overture, Light Cavalry	Suppe
Suite from La Belle au Bois Dormant,	Tschaikowsky
Waltz, Gross Wien	J. Strauss
Fantasia on La Boheme	Puccini
Selection, Faust	Gounod
Narcissus	Nevin
Ballet from Gioconda	Ponchielli
Selection, Robin Hood	De Koven
Waltz, Grubenlichter	Zeller
Selection, Peggy from Paris	Loraine
March, Tabasco	Chadwick

POP CONCERT SEASON IS NOW WIDE OPEN

Gay Throng Within and the Big Crowds About the Entrance of Symphony Hall During Last Night's Most Successful Opening of the Season of Pop Concerts



GOOD OLD POPS ARE ALWAYS NEW

Admixture of Productions That Made the Masters and Milwaukee Famous Once More Fascinates Society and the Rabble.

Pop! Pop! Pop!

The Pop concerts began their eight ... of miniature explosions at Symphony Hall last evening, and while there was much of bubbling and fizzing, the thing was everything but a fizzle.

In fact, the opening evening was a ... effervescent, musical, social success. For a first evening glass out of the eight weeks' bottle the Pop ... was a real good sample. ... shows what a Pop concert is, ... those in the know were ... glad to see that every-... received him ... boriously ...

The entire floor, where the tables are spread, was occupied, and the balconies were filled by people who either like to hear their music rather than drink it in, or else they were too late in applying for tables. There didn't seem to be any one wearing a worried look, no matter where he was located in the hall, and during the intermezzo—this is a musical affair—the entire assemblage mingled in the corridors and told, each one to the other, the season's latest tales.

Oh! Boston is surely a gay and festive place, and when Bostonians get together in force, as they did last evening, and inhale their Wagner and Gounod with the stuff that made Milwaukee famous and a certain Dublin family stout, they are a very merry throng.

All decorous and proper, mind you! This is a Boston Pop concert, and not a Chicago roof garden. Symphony Hall was the place, and not Luna Park; and Adamowski was leading the orchestra.

A social success? Well! If the continuing approval of those whose names are symbolical of Boston's social life is the criterion, then the pops will be essentially correct this year as formerly.

The smart set was present last evening and gave their languid approval of the opening Pop. They followed no set rule as to whether pretzels, lobster salads or ice cream should come with the orders. It was simply a social O. K. and now that there is no further doubt in the minds of those who look up while hoping for a chance to look in, it is a safe guess that the seven weeks and five days remaining will be much to the poppy at Symphony Hall.

Although the thirst of the crowd for liquid refreshments was manifested by a hurrying stream of waiters, the musical thirst was more in evidence, so much so, in fact, that during some of the numbers there was almost an appearance of a waiters' strike. Wine is only incidental to Boston's musical public. It wants its music first, and its German vintage afterward. They can get both at a Pop concert and they were out for both last evening.

Among those who held tables were seen: Mr. and Mrs. Eben D. Jordan and party, Mrs. J. De Forest Danielson, Mr. David Kimball, Miss Estelle Kimball and party, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua B. Holden, the Misses Holden, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Burnham, Mr. and Mrs. James Putnam, Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, Miss Higginson, Dr. W. S. Bigelow and party, Mr. Curtis G. Metzler, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsythe, Mrs. C. H. Washburn, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Goodrich, Mr. and Mrs. Timothee Adamowski, Mr. Otto Roth, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Bigelow, Mr. and Mrs. Josef Adamowski, Mr. Schuyler Bartlett and party, Mr. and Mrs. Thorndyke Spaulding and Miss Sara Daggett.

PROGRAMME NOT HEAVY.

Adamowski Leads with Spirit and Marked Authority, While Applause Is Hearty.

The first concert of the 19th season of the "Pops," under the management of Messrs. C. A. Ellis and F. R. Comee, was given last night in Symphony Hall, Mr. Timothee Adamowski was the conducter. The programme was as follows:

March, "Tannhaeuser,".....Wagner
Overture, "Mignon".....A. Thomas
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Waltz, "In lauschiger Nacht".....Ziehrer
Fantasia on "Pagliacci".....Leoncavallo
(First time).
Prelude to act III., "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Hymn to St. Cecilia.....Gounod
Violin solo by Mr. A. Birnbaum.
Country dance.....
Overture, "Orpheus".....Nevin
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen".....Offenbach
Waltz, "Blue Danube".....Luders
March, "El Capitan".....J. Strauss
.....Sousa

Mr. Adamowski led with much spirit, with musical appreciation, and with marked authority, and there was frequent and hearty applause. There were encores, and Mr. Birnbaum was obliged to bow in response to an enthusiastic demand for a repetition of Gounod's hymn of sugary sentiment. There was a large audience, which was at first as staid as though it were seated in family pews.

There was a little more animation discernible later, but the attitude of well-bred composure was not thrown off, even after the internal application of modest quenchers. The season is in its infancy, and no true Bostonian is suddenly gay.

It is a pleasure to see that the programmes, as announced, are of a reasonably light nature, and Mr. Adamowski is to be congratulated on his selections.

The music played at "Pop" concerts should be either decorative or a stimulus to good nature and enjoyment. The ancients were of this opinion, and we are no better than our fathers. Athenaeus tells us the reason for the introduction of music at the feast, and his words might well serve as a motto for the programmes at Symphony Hall: "In the first place, in order that every one who might be too eager for drunkenness or gluttony might have music as a sort of physician and healer of his insolence and indecorum; and also because music softens moroseness of temper, for it dissipates sadness and produces affability and a sort of gentleman-like joy."

And listen unto the wisdom of Jesus, the son of Sirach: "A concert of music in a banquet of wine is as a signet of carbuncle set in gold. As a signet of an emerald set in a work of gold, so is the melody of music with pleasant wine."

There has been table music in all ages from the famous banquet of Tamerlane the Great to the infamous cuppers of Louis XV.; from the feast where Cortez envied Montezuma to the Pompeiian junketings of Prince Napoleon at the beginning of the Second Empire. It was the fashion at London in the 18th century to sup in the open air not far from a band. Horace Walpole flirted with Mme. de Boufflers as they ate to the sound of horn and hautboy. Ange Goudar ate chicken only during an andante, for he feared lest indigestion would follow keeping pace with the heels of a jig.

On the other hand, Dr. Veron swore that he could not digest without music. And some are of such will power that, unlike Thomas Hardy's Michael Mail, they will not follow the time: "I was sitting eating fried liver and lights," said Mr. Mail. "I well can mind—ah, I was! and to save my life I couldn't help chawing to the tune. Band played six-eight times; six-eight chaws I, willy-nilly. Band plays common; common time went my teeth among the fried liver and lights as true as a hair. Beautiful 'twere! Ah, I shall never forget that there band!"

We believe in gregarious enjoyment at "Pop" concerts, and we therefore look skew-eyed at the railed pen and all formal restrictions. There should be no deliberate dressing for the occasion. If a man be more comfortable in the full rigor of evening dress, he should be welcomed; but the uneasy consciousness of such dress often dampens the natural high spirits of the wearer after the first moment of exultation in showing to the assemblage that he possesses the garments. There are Bostonians who take their pleasures in the manner of Froissart's Englishmen. There are Bostonians who make a brave endeavor to be gay—"Bohemian," they call it—but the true Bohemian is born, not made. Some are disconcerted because they do not see "people they know." But how delightful it is to see persons one does not know, and how pleasant it may be to talk with them without the prelude of an introduction—that dismal prelude when the introduced survey each other as strange dogs!

There should be day schools in May and June for night enjoyment. There should be classes in facial expression, ease in sitting, general and desultory conversation. There are many topics for lecturers in these schools: "How to Be Agreeable to Unknown Companions," "How to Entertain a Strange and Attractive Woman Without Though of Mrs. Grundy—and Without Fear of Injuring One's Own 'Social Standing'"; "How to Be Jolly When One Occupies a Position of Trust and responsibility," etc., etc.

Music, if it be shrewdly chosen and played with spirit or with the proper sentiment, should put these listeners at ease. The music should never have an "educational" tendency. What is known as "good music" is often bad, yes, immoral at a "Pop." Excerpts from symphonies, symphonic poems, serious overtures, pot-pourris on themes from tragic operas are here as trespassers with the malicious intent to injure if not kill enjoyment.

Let the masters of light and comic opera be heard; let there be dance tunes galore; let there be stirring marches, even though some one may furnish a heel accompaniment or even sing the air in the ecstasy of his delight. The music should never be of a character to remind one of a formal concert hall. Auber and Offenbach are now in season, not Brahms and his austere companions. Johann Strauss is now a more desirable acquaintance than Richard. Tschaikowsky is now only a man that wrote ballet music. Let Sousa be heard, for his music permits even loud conversation.

And, above all, the idea should never prevail that the crowd is gathered for the sole purpose of hearing music. Music should not be the controlling, dominating feature; it should not be like unto a thunder storm during which babblers cease their chatter and birds peep not, nor do they chirp.

Ajib, the third Kalander, told his tale before the three ladies of Baghdad and their guests. He told a wondrous tale of forty damsels, sumptuously dressed and ornamented, and one and all as bright as moons, who welcomed him in the palace, plated with red gold and studded with costly gems, the palace of the forty chambers, one of which was not to be entered.

Trays were laid at nightfall, and spread with flowers and fragrant herbs and fruits and confections. At last, they brought out wine. "We sat down to drink," said Ajib, "and some sang songs and others played the lute and psaltery and recorders and other instruments, and the bowl went merrily round. Hereupon such gladness possessed me that I forgot the sorrows of the world one and all and said: 'This is, indeed, life. O sad that 'tis fleeting!'"

But neither Ajib, son of Khazib, a king and the son of a king, nor any one of the forty damsels suffered from self-consciousness; nor had they been taught to believe that the chief purpose of the musical art was to instruct, to educate.

[09]

BOSTON JOURNAL,

THURSDAY,

MAY 5, 1904.

There is every indication that the "Pop" concerts are to be unusually successful the present season. The brilliant opening on Tuesday night showed the interest of the public in these events, and the programs already planned by Mr. Adamowski are well calculated to hold the interest of the "Pop" patrons. The selections for this evening include overtures by Herold and Adam, waltzes by Ganne, Godard and Strauss, the Handel "Largo" (violin solo by Mr. A. Birnbaum), and a lot of other pleasing numbers.

DAILY ADVERTISER,

THURSDAY MORNING,

MAY 5, 1904.

There is every indication that the "Pop" concerts are to be unusually successful the present season. The brilliant opening on Tuesday night showed the interest of the public in these events and the programmes already planned by Mr. Adamowski are well calculated to hold the interest of the "Pop" patrons.

BOSTON POST,

THURSDAY,

MAY 5, 1904

The "Pop" concert season, which had such a brilliant opening on Tuesday evening, continues in high favor, and Mr. Adamowski's programmes for the present week promise to add much that is enjoyable for the patrons of these events. The selections for this evening will introduce the Handel "Largo," in which the violin solo is to be played by Mr. A. Birnbaun, who created such a notable sensation on Tuesday evening. Popular operatic music, waltzes by Strauss and Ganne and much other music of a pleasing nature will be heard in the course of the evening. Some capital programmes have been planned for Friday and Saturday evenings of this week.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, MAY 5, 1904.

There is every indication that the "Pop" concerts are to be unusually successful the present season. The brilliant opening on Tuesday night showed the interest of the public in these events and the programs already planned by Mr Adamowski are well calculated to hold the interest of the "Pop" patrons. The selections for this evening include overtures by Herold and Adams, waltzes by Ganne, Godard and Strauss, the Handel "Largo," with violin solo by Mr A. Birnbaun, and a lot of other pleasing numbers.

BOSTON HERALD-

—THURSDAY,

MAY 5, 1904.

The "Pop" concert season, which opened on Tuesday evening, continues in high favor, and Mr. Adamowski's programmes for the present week promise to add much that is enjoyable for the patrons of these events. The selections for this evening will introduce Handel's "Largo," with violin solo by Mr. Birnbaum. Popular operatic music, waltzes by Strauss and Ganne and much other music of a pleasing nature will be heard in the course of the evening. Some capital programmes have been planned for Friday and Saturday evenings of this week.

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, MAY 5, 1904

The selections for this evening's Pop Concert will introduce the Handel "Largo," in which the violin solo is to be played by Mr. A. Birnbaun. Popular operatic music, waltzes by Strauss and Ganne and other music of a pleasing nature will be heard in the course of the evening. Some capital programmes have been planned for Friday and Saturday evenings.

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN-

THURSDAY, MAY 5, 1904.

THE "POPS."

The "Pop" concert season continues in high favor, and Mr. Adamowski's programs for the present week promise to add much that is enjoyable for the patrons of these events. The selections for this evening will introduce the Handel "Largo," in which the violin solo is to be played by Mr. A. Birnbaun; and capital programs have been planned for Friday and Saturday

EVENING RECORD,

THURSDAY,

MAY 5. 1904.

There is every indication that the "Pop" concerts are to be unusually successful the present season. The brilliant opening on Tuesday night showed the interest of the public in these events and the programmes already planned by Mr. Adamowski are well calculated to hold the interest of the "Pop" patrons.

THE SUN, FRIDAY.

MAY 6, 1904.

A May Anniversary in Boston.

Now the sweet words of AMORY CABOT CODMAN BOODY well into the mind:

"Beat on me, brilliant and shameless, splendor and glare of the light,
When the Hall of Symphony flashes to the flash of my shirt bosom white;
Music, my Queen, play on with your maddest, delirious stop;
Ears of me, fill you with clangors, while into my intimate crop
Trickles the ginger of life at the wild sybaritical 'Pop!'
Pop! Pop! Oh, glamour and ginger of 'Pop!'"

For, the "Pop" concerts in Symphony Hall have resumed their hilarious course. As a headlinesman of the Boston Herald writes, not without humor:

"Pop concert season is now wide open. Gay throngs within."

An artist employed by the same obliging contemporary paints the gay throng for us. Several ladies look with straining eyes at the orchestra, a sea of players and instruments. The leader, some seven feet tall, stands on a cross between a dais and a pair of hay scales. Both the ladies who are gazing with straining eyes at him and the ladies who are gazing at nothing in particular seem unutterably sad. The men look like old-fashioned funeral "mutes" who have shed their "weepers." To the extreme left, a gloomily handsome man holds between his clenched lips an unlighted cigarette. There is a bottle of sterilized milk on his table. Also a beaker, which he has brimmed. He can have committed no crime. Crime isn't milk-fed. Why does he glare so darkly, and at what unknown foe?

To the right, a bald-headed citizen fixes an evidently disapproving eye upon an unhappy man diagonally opposite. A waiter seems in the act of bringing a tray with a bottle and glass. That bottle must hold whiskey, or, at least, beer. The bald-headed man wouldn't worry more of his roof off by so fixing basilisk eyes upon his neighbor if that wretch were not about to take a drink. The wretch wouldn't look so wretched—wouldn't so pierce the table with stern and steely gaze—if he were not about to do something that will disagree with him and excite the aversion of those about him. But he has come in from Toad Hill or Hingham, and he is bound to do his worst.

Everywhere in the picture you see the same weeds-of-woe phizzes. It is clear that nobody dares to say a word. The folks listen with doleful ears. Is it their way of being happy? Yes; here is one of the supreme moments of Bostonian existence. This is what is known as "festal cheer." These are the gladdest sights of all the Boston year.

Some traitor, who should be torn in pieces at once, dares to find fault with this state of mystical joy wearing a face of grief. Hear and shudder:

"We believe in gregarious enjoyment at 'Pop' concerts, and we therefore look skew-eyed at the railed pen and all formal restrictions. There should be no deliberate dressing for the occasion. If a man be more comfortable in the full rigor of evening dress, he should be welcomed; but the uneasy consciousness of such dress often dampens the natural high spirits of the wearer after the first moment of exultation in showing to the assemblage that he possesses the garments."

"Natural high spirits" is gibe enough, without insisting that the Bostonians squirm in the togs of night. And here is a hair-splitter for you: If a Bostonian falls unconsciously into his evening clothes, it is well. If he knows what he is doing when he dons them, it is ill. That is, he can wear evening clothes properly only when he is drunk, drugged or crazy. This will not do. The reporter should shake the camphor balls from his "dress suit," and not envy his betters. Listen to another calumny:

The Sun, [illegible]

"There are Bostonians who make a brave endeavor to be gay—'Bohemian,' they call it—but the true Bohemian is born, not made."

Wrong again. No true Bohemian made? Do they have Pilsner, for example, in Symphony Hall?

Here is another absurd and malicious charge:

"Some are discontented because they do not see there 'people they know.'"

On the contrary, to be a model of decorous behavior to the unfortunate "people they don't know" is an additional happiness. It satisfies the didactic and pedagogic instinct, the strongest in the Boston mind. For the last time we quote and rebuke this irreverent spirit:

"There should be day schools in May and June for night enjoyment. There should be classes in facial expression, ease in sitting, general and desultory conversation. There are many topics for lecturers in these schools: 'How to Be Agreeable to Unknown Companions,' 'How to Entertain a Strange and Attractive Woman Without Thought of Mrs. Grundy—and Without Fear of Injuring One's Own "Social Standing,"' 'How to Be Jolly When One Occupies a Position of Trust and Responsibility.'"

This is positively insulting. Depression, not expression, is the correct facial mood, especially at a "Pop." Happiness is in the interior. It is against the law to be "jolly" after 11 P. M.; and, by implication, at any time. How can the holder of a position of trust be "jolly"? What WENDELL PHILLIPS used to call "the red chairs of State street" never were and never shall be filled by the frivolous. By an air of solemnity and austerity, one slides into positions of trust and responsibility. This sneering critic would have the Solid Men of Boston frame themselves in giddiness. Why not paint King's Chapel red or ask the President and Fellows of Harvard to "do" a skirt dance?

BOSTON HERALD-

—SATURDAY,

MAY 7, 1904.

A first week of the "Pops" ends with the concert this evening, and it is gratifying to know that the season has had a most auspicious beginning. The programmes thus far presented have proved eminently pleasing. For this evening's selections the operatic numbers, which, by the way, have gained unusual favor this year, are taken from the "Queen of Sheba," "William Tell," "Geisha," "Tannhaeuser," "Poet and Peasant," Grand Duchess" and "Yankee Consul." Mr. A. Birnbaum will play the violin solo in the prelude to Saint-Saens' "Deluge."

BOSTON JOURNAL-

—SATURDAY,

MAY 7, 1904.

A first week of the "Pops" ends with the concert this evening and it is gratifying to know that the season has had a most auspicious beginning. The programs thus far presented have proved eminently pleasing. For this evening's selections the operatic numbers, which by the way have gained unusual favor this year, are taken from the "Queen of Sheba," "William Tell," "Geisha," "Tannhauser," "Poet and Peasant," "Grand Duchess" and "Yankee Consul." Mr. A. Birnbaum is to play the violin solo in the prelude to Saint Saens' "The Deluge," and all of the other numbers are well chosen.

BOSTON POST,

SATURDAY,

MAY 7, 1904

A first week of the "Pops" ends with the concert this evening and it is gratifying to know that the season has had a most auspicious beginning. For this evening's selections the operatic numbers, which by the way have gained unusual favor this year, are taken from the "Queen of Sheba," "William Tell," "Geisha," "Tannhauser," "Poet and Peasant," "Grand Duchess" and "Yankee Consul." Mr. A. Birnbaum is to play the violin solo in the prelude to Saint-Saens' "The Deluge," and all of the other numbers are well chosen.

[61]

DAILY AD[illegible]ISER,

SATURDAY MORNING,

MAY 7, 1904.

A very gratifying success has attended the opening of the "Pop" concert season at Symphony Hall, and it is quite evident that the plans for the season meet the approval of the amusement seeking public. The excellent orchestra, led by Mr. Adamowski, will be heard this evening in operatic selections from the "Queen of Sheba," "William Tell," "Geisha," "Tannhauser," "Grand Duchess," "Poet and Peasant" and "Yankee Consul."

Boston Daily Globe.

SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1904.

A very gratifying success has attended the opening of the "Pop" concert season at Symphony hall. The excellent orchestra led by Mr Adamowski will be heard this evening in operatic selections from the "Queen of Sheba," "William Tell," "Geisha," "Tannhauser," "Grand Duchess," "Poet and Peasant" and "Yankee Consul." Mr A. Birnbaun, the violinist, is to play the solo in the prelude to Saint Saens' "The Deluge."

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1904

There is every evidence that the present season of "Pop" Concerts at Symphony Hall is to be a notable one in the successful record of these events. The programme for Monday evening will include the "Piccolono," "Zampa" and "Fleidermaus" overtures; selections from "The Mikado," "The Fencing Master" and "The Prince of Pilsen"; the "Cavalleria Rusticana" intermezzo, Nevin's "Narcissus," "L'Amoureuse" waltz, Berger, and the new Vienna Strauss, and the "Pomp and Circumstance" and "Up the Street" marches.

SUNDAY POST.

MAY 8, 1904

THE "POP" CONCERTS

The management of the "Pop" concerts of the last week has again been approved by large audiences of those who find these entertainments just suited to the season. The plans of former years have been substantially followed, and every opportunity to add to the comfort and convenience of patrons has been improved. Those familiar with the "Pops" of former seasons have noted with satisfaction the increased enjoyment of the social opportunities afforded by these events at the concerts of the past week and the general participation in the promenade between the sections of the programme has added not a little to the enjoyment of the evening.

Although the programmes show a tendency to giving prominence to light music, the selections made are worthy the character of the orchestra engaged in presenting them, and unusual attention has been paid to the selections which demand a cessation of all unnecessary confusion for their enjoyment.

Mr. Birnbaun, the violinist, and Mr. Keller, the 'cellist, who were so well received in their appearances last week, will be heard in solo selections in the concerts for the present week.

At the concert tomorrow evening the overtures will be those from Guirod's "Piccolino," Herold's "Zampa," and J. Strauss' "Fleidermaus"; the operatic selections will be from "The Mikado," "Fencing Master," and "Prince of Pilsen," together with the intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana"; the waltzes will be Berger's "L'Amoureuse" and Strauss' "New Vienna," and the marches Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" and Morel's "Up the Street."

SUNDAY JOURNAL,

MAY 8, 1904.

Season Of Pops Was Inaugurated By A Brilliant Attendance

Those who have been regular first nighters at the "Pops" agree that the nineteenth season opened very auspiciously last Tuesday night. The tables were all well surrounded by representative groups, there was a triple row of interested listeners in the gallery and the program was enthusiastically received.

The "Pops" approach more closely the Bohemian than anything else which Boston publicly smiles upon, but the evening clothes of the men and the elaborate, yes, studied gowning of the women, throws a cloak of conventionality over the scene, beneath which the hint of Bohemia becomes almost lost to view.

To be sure there is lemonade, and even beer, and an inevitable plate of very well browned pretzels, which occupies the center of each table. Besides there are ice creams and ices, pink, and yellow and white, and the men smoke, all of which tends toward some vague atmospheric condition termed Bohemian. During the intermission there is the stroll through the corridors of Symphony Hall with occasional trips to the balcony, where people can see how others see them.

From a sartorial point the "Pop" on its opening night was decidedly brilliant. Especially in headgear did all the colors of the rainbow appear, and as one looked down on the bobbing confections of millinery from the balcony, he was reminded of a huge flower garden all in the glory of full bloom. The programs so far have been less heavy than usual, the classical being alternated with the froth of the popular music of today.

Among those noted in the audience on opening night were Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who had at his table in the center of the hall, Mrs. Higginson, wearing dove gray veiling trimmed with lace and a close bonnet with black trimming, and Miss Juliet Higginson, whose gown of palest gray chiffon crepe was done in lace; Mr. Eben Jordan, whose pretty daughter, Dorothy, was in the lightest blue crepe de chine with lace, and wore a large white leghorn hat encircled with pink rosebuds; Mrs. "Tim" Adamowski, charming in black face; Mrs. Josef Adamowski, also in black relieved with white; Mrs. James Putnam in black mulle showing a pompadour design in purple flowers; Miss Katherine Fay in light gray crepe with bands of pale blue satin, and a hat of pale blue and white; Miss Estelle Kimball in white net, and Miss Aspinwall in black and white striped silk done in jet.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Goodrich had a table well down the hall. It was their first apearance since their return from their honeymoon trip, and everyone was anxious to greet them. They had a number of the smartest set at their table during the entire evening. Mrs. Goodrich wore a handsome gown of brown voile combined with chiffon, and a pansy wreathed hat.

Miss Sara Daggett, who was with her fiance, Dr. Beattie of London, received the good wishes of all her friends. She was wearing pale gray done in heavy lace. Miss Henrietta Stevenson was all in white, as was also Miss May Kenney, Mrs. Louis Mudgett wore champagne tinted silk and lace.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, MAY 8, 1904.

"POP" CONCERTS IN FAVOR.

There is every evidence that the present season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall is to be a notable one in the successful record of these events. The management has wisely adhered to the arrangements which have found favor in former seasons and the comfort and convenience of patrons is carefully attended to.

The concerts of the opening week have called out a generous patronage and the social side of these entertainments has seldom been better appreciated than by those who have attended the events of the past week.

The management has been singularly successful in presenting programs which, while appealing to the popular taste, are worthy the presentation by the splendid body of musicians making up the orchestra. The results of the past week have shown a strong preference for operatic music, including selections from the standard works of this class, rather than the lighter musical comedies of the day. Mr Birnbaun, the violinist, who has appeared as soloist during the last week, will again be heard in the programs of the present week, as will also Mr Keller of the 'cello section of the orchestra.

It is interesting to know that the American composer is to have a recognition in the novelties of the present season and quite a number of selections suited to the programs have already been accepted from men well worthy of recognition in the concert room. The "Pops" will be continued every weekday evening for the next seven weeks.

The program for tomorrow evening will include the "Piccolono," "Zampa" and "Fleidermaus" overtures, selections from "Mikado," "Fencing Master," and "Prince of Pilsen," the "Cavalleria Rusticana" intermezzo, Nevin's "Narcissus," the "L'Amoureuse" waltz, Berger, and the new Vienna Strauss, and the "Pomp and Circumstance" and "Up the Street" marches.

——The Pop concert which opened the series Tuesday evening was a great success musically as well as socially, and rarely has there been a larger or finer audience upon any similar occasion, every table upon the floor being taken by groups of friends, and the seats in the first balcony, too, were well filled. A bright and cheerful program was played by the orchestra, under Mr Adamowski, who was cordially greeted and who graciously responded in the course of the evening with several encores that were persistently demanded. Mr Ellis and Mr Comee, who have worked together to bring these concerts into such well deserved popularity, were much pleased and received the heartiest congratulations. During the intermissions the broad corridors were crowded with promenaders, who find walking a relief after sitting and listening intently to the music as many do. Among the many noticed at this first concert were Mr and Mrs Henry L. Higginson, who had the same table as last year. Mrs Higginson was plainly dressed in gray cloth with white embroidered vest and black toque with a touch of violet. Mr and Mrs Wallace Goodrich (Madeline Boardman), Mr Otto Roth, Miss Annie Lyman and Mrs Adamowski had tables together; Mrs Goodrich was in golden brown chiffon over white and wore a toque of white roses and violets; Miss Annie Lyman, gray voile with lace trimmings and black hat with white plumes; Mrs Adamowski, black crepe de chine, with chiffon and a black hat with plumes. She also wore a necklace of pearls with a diamond clasp; Mr and Mrs J. Lowell Putnam were with the Goodriches a part of the evening. Mrs Putnam wearing a beautiful costume of black silk brocaded with pink and white roses, with lace elbow sleeves, and a pinkish violet straw hat with pink roses; Mr Richard C. Dixey had friends with him and his daughter, Miss Rosamund Dixey, in pale gray veiling and hat with wreath of pink roses and green foliage; Miss Barbara Higginson, who was with Mr and Mrs Henry L. Higginson, was in pale gray voile, appliqued in white, and black picture hat with black plumes; Miss Sara W. Daggett and her fiance, Dr Robert Reattie of London, had a table, Miss Daggett in gray liberty silk with lace insertions in skirt and bodice, and white hat with pink roses. She carried a bouquet of sweet peas and lilies of the valley; Mr and Mrs Comee brought a party of friends, Mrs Comee wearing a becoming gown of black crepe de chine with black silk motifs and transparent yoke, and black hat with long white plume which encircled the crown. She also wore a loose bouquet of marguerites at the belt; Mr Willard A. Bul- his daughter, Mrs Herbert Wells, Miss Maud Parker of New York and Mr Channing Bullard were together, Miss Parker in pale blue silk, the bodice adorned with lace, and white hat with bows of pale blue silk and fine white flowers with foliage on the crown. Her wrap was ecru cloth lined with crimson satin: Mrs Herbert Wells in black crepe de chine with transparent yoke of fagoting and black hat with black plumes; Mr and Mrs Frederic Converse, the latter in gray crepe de chine with lace bertha of the same shade, and white hat with black velvet, and a white rose under the brim; Mr and Mrs Otis Kimball and Miss Estelle Kimball were of a party of 10; Miss Kimball in an exquisite gown of white chiffon over white silk, embroidered with light blue forgetmenots, and a white chip hat with white plumes; Miss Eleanor Ames, who was one of Miss Kimball's guests, wore pale blue silk and black hat with black plumes; [illegible] Dorothy Jordan, who was with her father, Mr Eben D. Jordan, wore pale gray voile and white chip hat faced with blue and trimmed with roses and green leaves; Mr and Mrs A. Lawrence Rotch, the latter in gray with white lace trimmings, and velvet cloak with deep mechlin lace collar. Her hat was done in red roses and green leaves; Mr and Mrs Philip Hale, [illegible] R. R. Gardiner and Mr Prescott were at one table, Mrs Hale in white india silk, the bodice trimmed with black chantilly, and black hat with white roses; Mr and Mrs Mudgett, the latter in fawn-colored voile, and toque of natural straw, with light blue ribbon and bunch of voilets; Dr and Mrs Shattuck, Mrs Shattuck in black satin and jet and white lace at the bodice and jetted and lace toque; Mr William P. Blake, Miss Anne Dehon Blake in ecru cloth and toque of violets; Dr William Sturgis Bigelow with friends, Mr and Mrs Stephen H. Bennett, and Miss Hannah Stevenson; Mrs Bennett in white chiffon and cluny lace, with diamonds. Her hat was of white straw with loops of rose pink ribbon and black lace; Miss Stevenson in white veiling with transparent yoke of lace, and large white lace hat with white roses and foliage; and Mr and Mrs J. Montgomery Sears. Mrs C. H. Washburn had at her table Dr and Mrs Frederick L. Emerson, Mrs Quincy Emery and others. Mrs Washburn wore a beautifully fitting gown of white tulle flecked with gold and done with broad black lace insertions, and a large white hat with white feathers tipped with green. Mrs Emerson wore fine white canvas with pale blue embroidery, and Mrs Emery was in white veiling and lace and a white hat. Altogether the evening was most enjoyable, and the season seems never to have opened more auspiciously.

——All the week, since the opening night at the Pop concert, there have been enthusiastic audiences, and the programs are exceptionally interesting. On Friday evening Mr and Mrs Leverett Tuckerman had friends with them, Mrs Tuckerman wearing a spring-like costume of fawn veiling, the bodice in eton jacket effect, with points, and insertions of cream lace, and toque with wreath of small pink roses about the brim, and an inner wreath of green leaves. Mr and Mrs John T. Linzee were guests of Mrs Adamowski, both ladies wearing black. Mrs Linzee black voile, jetted, and black straw hat with ribbons and lace, and Mrs Adamowski, black crepe de chine and black hat with lace; Dr Dwight, with friends. Mr Herbert Hale, and Mrs Schuecker, who had some ladies with her. Mrs Schuecker, in tan veiling, the bodice trimmed with lace, and white straw hat with pink roses. Mr and Mrs Schuecker are to spend the summer abroad.

[62]

THE SUNDAY HERALD-
-BOSTON, MAY 8, 1904-

The opening of the "Pops" on Tuesday night was, as far as the people around the tables were concerned, quite like the horse show, for a crowd of very nearly the same people who occupied the triple tier row of boxes were on hand to enjoy Mr Adamowski's admirable band, which he led with his customary grace and skill. It was as smartly dressed a company, too, as at the horse show. Indeed, we never have seen such a display of handsome gowns on handsome women on any previous opening of the Pops. Everybody, too, seemed in admirable good spirits. There was a lot of quiet laughter and chatter, which didn't in the least interfere with the enjoyment of the music. A New York woman in the hall, who had never seen society Boston under such conditions, declared that the women around her in their gowns and style were quite equal to anything in New York or Newport, and was vastly pleased with her evening in every respect. There were numerous small dinners before the concert and several quiet little suppers after at the Somerset and other clubs.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The management of the "Pop" concerts of the past week has again been approved by large audiences of those who find these entertainments just suited to the season. The plans of former years have been substantially followed and every opportunity to add to the comfort and convenience of patrons has been improved. Those familiar with the "Pops" of former seasons have noted with satisfaction the increased enjoyment of the social opportunities afforded by these events at the concerts of the past week and the general participation in the promenade between the sections of the programme has added not a little to the enjoyment of the evening. Although the programme shows a tendency toward giving prominence to light music, the selections made are worthy the character of the orchestra engaged in presenting them, and unusual attention has been paid to the selections which demand a cessation of all unnecessary confusion for their enjoyment. Distinct favor has been shown the selections made from the standard operas and in the programme of the present week this preference on the part of patrons will be recognized. Mr. Birnbaum, violinist, and Mr. Keller, 'cellist, will be heard in solo selections in the concerts for the present week. Many copositions worthy a hearing in these concerts have been received from composers in this and other American cities, and quite a number of these have been accepted for presentation. The concerts will be continued each week day evening for the coming seven weeks.

At the concert tomorrow evening the overtures will be from Guiraud's "Piccolino," Herold's "Zampa" and J. Strauss' "Fiedermaus;" the operatic selections will be from "The Mikado," "Fencing Master" and "Prince of Pilsen," together with the intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana;" the waltzes will be Berger's "L'Amoureuse" and Strauss' "New Vienna," and the marches Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" and Sousa's "Up the Street."

Mrs. T. Adamowski had a table full of guests again at the Pops on Wednesday night, and Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery Sears brought a party. On Thursday night in the crowd were Mr. and Mrs. Frederick A. Turner, Mrs. Turner in pale blue figured silk, with much white lace, and a black and white toque with red roses. Their son, F. A. Turner, Jr., was with them. Mr. F. D. Cochrane was of a stag party, and Mr. E. P. Boynton had several guests. Almost every table has been filled all through the week, following the brilliant opening of Tuesday, and last night there was the usual Saturday evening crush. A large number of tables have already been engaged for this week.

Everybody has been talking about the brilliant opening of the Pops Tuesday night and what a splendid augury it was for their success. Mr. Ellis and Mr. Comee were all smiles as they received the congratulations of the many who passed in and out, and well they might have been happy over the success of the evening. There was no attempt at decoration, except the few conventional palms on the platform, and that was really all that was needed. Naturally the most observed table was Mrs. T. Adamowski's. Her party included the bride, Mrs. Wallace Goodrich (Madeleine Boardman), Mr. Goodrich and the James Lowell Putnams. Mrs. Goodrich was looking exceedingly well in a trousseau gown of seal brown veiling, the bodice of the same toned chiffon over white. Her white rose toque had a cluster of purple and yellow pansies on one side. Mrs. Putnam, always successfully effecting a style peculiarly her own, was in black muslin highly flowered in mauve and pinkish shades with white lace and mauve ribbons. Her large purple hat was done with shaded roses and ribbons of a similar tone with the coloring of the gown. The Putnams left early. Mrs. Adamowski was dignified and handsome in black chiffon with much shirring and lace, a richly plumed hat and a rope of pearls.

Prof. and Mrs. A. Lawrence Rotch, the last named in gray veiling with white lace and a red flower toque, were with Hon. and Mrs. George H. Lyman. Mrs. Lyman was all in black with a rope of pearls, and so was Miss Hetty Sargent, who was at Mr. and Mrs. F. I. Amory's table. Mrs. Amory was very handsome in champagne colored silk and a plumed hat of the same tone. Mrs. Stephen Bennett, who with Mr. Bennett entertained a party, wore a rich gown of white veiling and lace and a very smart white leghorn hat with pink ribbon and brown chiffon about the crown, and brown plumes under the brim at the back. Near them were Mr. Eben D. Jordan and Miss Dorothy Jordan with a young people's party, including Miss Theodate Bailey and Miss Hannah Stevenson who wore white veiling and lace and a white lace hat with lilacs. Miss Jordan was in a pretty gray chiffon gown with much shirring and a white hat with pompadour colorings. Miss Baily of Philadelphia, who is visiting Miss Jordan, was all in white. Mrs. Edward Foote of Beacon street and her daughter, Mrs. Ten Eyck Wendell (May Dwight Foote) were with Mr. William Atherton. Mrs. Wendell was looking distinguished and smart in white liberty satin, finely embroidered, and a large black hat almost covered with white plumes. Mrs. Foote was in becoming black, with pearls. Miss Anna Robbins, who was there with her mother, Mrs. B. T. Robbins, was very pretty in a pale blue gown and hat. Mr. and Mrs. D. K. Snow had a party, Mrs. Snow in light blue crepe and a plumed hat of the same tone.

Mrs. W. W. Vaughan in a black jetted gown with white lace and a black hat with white plumes, brought a party of young people, including Miss Mary Vaughan, in gray veiling and white lace and a white plumed hat with a touch of black velvet. Mr. Otis Kimball and Miss Estelle Kimball had at their table, among others, Miss Chadwick of Paris, in red silk with white lace and a white hat wreathed with red flowers; Miss Eleanor Ames, wearing pale blue liberty with black applique and a black plumed hat, and Miss Tudor, all in black. The young hostess was very pretty in white veiling with pale blue embroidery and a white plumed hat. With Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, the latter in gray silk with white lace and a black hat, was Miss Barbara Higginson, in gray voile with white lace and a black picture hat. Miss Marion Fenno, in black spangled lace with touches of pale blue over white and a black and white plumed hat, was with a party including Miss Nancy Whiteside, who was all in black excepting the sweeping white plume on her large hat, and Miss Katharine Fay, who wore gray veiling and a blue hat with white feathers. Mr. Richard C. Dixey had a party including his young daughter, Rosamond, in gray veiling and white lace and a white lace hat wreathed with roses and foliage. Mr. and Mrs. Josef Adamowski were of Mr. William P. Blake's guests, Mrs. Adamowski in gray veiling with a three-quarter coat of white and black silk and a black and white hat with pink roses. Miss Margaret Upham, in cafe-au-lait silk and a white hat, was with a large party, which included Mr. Arthur Moors and his sister, Miss Adelaide Moors, who was in black velvet with white lace and a black and white plumed hat.

Others there were Mr. and Mrs. Frederick S. Converse, who brought guests, Mrs. Converse in gray veiling with lace of the same tone and a white hat with pink roses and touches of black velvet; Dr. and Mrs. F. L. Emerson, the latter in fine white veiling embroidered in pale blue and a white flower toque, who were of a party including Mrs. Quincy Emery, who was all in white; Dr. and Mrs. J. Bapst Blake, Mrs. Blake in white silk and lace and a black hat with white plumes, and Dr. and Mrs. George B. Shattuck, who were in the balcony, Mrs. Shattuck wearing black lace over white silk, and a black plumed hat. Mrs. Francis Watson was also of a balcony party. She wore a white gown and a purple toque with a cluster of white flowers; Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Forsyth, the latter in black net, done with silver and a black hat with white plumes, made a table party, including Mr. Charles Gilson; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Hale had a party, Mrs. Hale in gray cloth and a white chiffon bodice with fine black lace and a black and white hat. Mrs. F. R. Comee, in black lace and a black hat with white plumes and a string of pearls, entertained a large party; Mrs. Francis W. Kittredge, in brown cloth and a white flower hat, and Mr. and Mrs. Louis Elson, Mrs. Elson wearing gray veiling and white lace, a white hat with touches of black velvet and a rope of corals, were also there.

DAILY ADVERTISER,
TUESDAY MORNING,
MAY 10, 1904.

THIS EVENING'S "POP" CONCERT.

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall this season are proving an immense success. At the concert this evening the programme will have for its overtures Flotow's "Stradella," Auber's "Fra Diavolo," and Suppe's "Pique Dame,' for its waltzes Waldteufel's "Skaters," Strauss' "Kaiser," and that from Tschaikowsky's "Eugene Onegin," for its marches Suppe's "Fatinitza," and Sousa's "Washington Post," the operatic selections will be from "Gondoliers" and "Three Little Maids," and Wagner's "Ride of the Walkuries," completes the list of selections.

BOSTON POST,
TUESDAY,
MAY 10, 1904

THE "POP" CONCERT

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall this season are proving an immense success, and not a little of the pleasure attending these events comes from the far greater amount of sociability which characterizes the audiences. The programmes made by Mr. T. Adamowski, conductor of the orchestra, serve to show the splendid organization which he leads to fine advantage and the audiences thus far have been emphatic in their approval of his selections.

At the concert this evening the programme will have for its overtures Flotow's "Stradella," Auber's "Fra Diavolo" and Suppe's "Pique Dame"; for its waltzes Waldteufel's "Skaters," Strauss' "Kaiser" and that from Tschaikowsky's "Eugene Onegin"; for its marches Suppes "Fatinitza" and Sousa's "Washington Post." The operatic selections will be from the "Gondoliers" and "Three Little Maids," and Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries" completes the list of selections.

Boston Daily Globe.
TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1904.

This Evening's "Pop" Concert.

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall this season are proving an immense success, and not a little of the pleasure attending these events comes from the far greater amount of sociability which characterizes the audiences. The programs made by Mr T. Adamowsky, conductor of the orchestra, serve to show the splendid organization which he leads to fine advantage. This evening the program will have for its overtures Flotow's "Stradella," Auber's "Fra Diavolo" and Suppe's "Pique Dame," for its waltzes Waldteufel's "Skaters," Strauss' "Kaiser" and that from Tschaikowsky's "Eugene Onegin"; for its marches, Suppe's "Fatanitza" and Sousa's "Washington Post." The operatic numbers will be from the "Gondoliers" and "Three Little Maids." Wagner's "Ride of the Walkuries" completes the list of selections.

BOSTON HERALD-
-TUESDAY,
MAY 10, 1904.

TONIGHT AT THE "POPS."

That the short season of the "Pops" is to be well improved was shown by the unusually large audiences of last week. The programmes seem to have met the popular taste, and in no week of a former season has the social side of the "Pops" been so fully appreciated. At tonight's concert the overtures will be Flotow's "Stradella," Auber's "Fra Diabolo" and Suppe's "Pique Dame;" the marches will be Suppe's "Fatanitza" and Sousa's "Washington Post;" the operatic selections will be made from "The Gondoliers" and Rubin's "Three Little Maids;" the waltzes will be Waldteufel's "Skaters," Strauss' "Kaiser" and one from Tschaikowsky's "Eugene Onegin," and Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries" will complete the programme. These concerts are given each weekday evening from 8 to 11.

[63]

THE SUNDAY HERALD-
-BOSTON, MAY 8, 1904-

The opening of the "Pops" on Tuesday night was, as far as the people around the tables were concerned, quite like the horse show, for a crowd of very nearly the same people who occupied the triple tier,row of boxes were on hand to enjoy Mr Adamowski's admirable band, which he led with his customary grace and skill. It was as smartly dressed a company, too, as at the horse show. Indeed, we never have seen such a display of handsome gowns on handsome women on any previous opening of the Pops. Everybody, too, seemed in admirable good spirits. There was a lot of quiet laughter and chatter, which didn't in the least interfere with the enjoyment of the music. A New York woman in the hall, who had never seen society Boston under such conditions, declared that the women around her in their gowns and style were quite equal to anything in New York or Newport, and was vastly pleased with her evening in every respect. There were numerous small dinners before the concert and several quiet little suppers after at the Somerset and other clubs.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The management of the "Pop" concerts of the past week has again been approved by large audiences of those who find these entertainments just suited to the season. The plans of former years have been substantially followed and every opportunity to add to the comfort and convenience of patrons has been improved. Those familiar with the "Pops" of former seasons have noted with satisfaction the increased enjoyment of the social opportunities afforded by these events at the concerts of the past week and the general participation in the promenade between the sections of the programme has added not a little to the enjoyment of the evening. Although the programme shows a tendency toward giving prominence to light music, the selections made are worthy the character of the orchestra engaged in presenting them, and unusual attention has been paid to the selections which demand a cessation of all unnecessary confusion for their enjoyment. Distinct favor has been shown the selections made from the standard operas and in the programme of the present week this preference on the part of patrons will be recognized. Mr. Birnbaum, violinist, and Mr. Keller, 'cellist, will be heard in solo selections in the concerts for the present week. Many copositions worthy a hearing in these concerts have been received from composers in this and other American cities, and quite a number of these have been accepted for presentation. The concerts will be continued each week day evening for the coming seven weeks.

At the concert tomorrow evening the overtures will be from Guiraud's "Piccolino," Herold's "Zampa" and J. Strauss' "Fiedermaus;" the operatic selections will be from "The Mikado," "Fencing Master" and "Prince of Pilsen," together with the intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana;" the waltzes will be Berger's "L'Amoureuse" and Strauss' "New Vienna," and the marches Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" and Sousa's "Up the Street."

Mrs. T. Adamowski had a table full of guests again at the Pops on Wednesday night, and Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery Sears brought a party. On Thursday night in the crowd were Mr. and Mrs. Frederick A. Turner, Mrs. Turner in pale blue figured silk, with much white lace, and a black and white toque with red roses. Their son, F. A. Turner, Jr., was with them. Mr. F. D. Cochrane was of a stag party, and Mr. E. P. Boynton had several guests. Almost every table has been filled all through the week, following the brilliant opening of Tuesday, and last night there was the usual Saturday evening crush. A large number of tables have already been engaged for this week.

Everybody has been talking about the brilliant opening of the Pops Tuesday night and what a splendid augury it was for their success. Mr. Ellis and Mr. Comee were all smiles as they received the congratulations of the many who passed in and out, and well they might have been happy over the success of the evening. There was no attempt at decoration, except the few conventional palms on the platform, and that was really all that was needed. Naturally the most observed table was Mrs. T. Adamowski's. Her party included the bride, Mrs. Wallace Goodrich (Madeleine Boardman), Mr. Goodrich and the James Lowell Putnams. Mrs. Goodrich was looking exceedingly well in a trousseau gown of seal brown veiling, the bodice of the same toned chiffon over white. Her white rose toque had a cluster of purple and yellow pansies on one side. Mrs. Putnam, always successfully effecting a style peculiarly her own, was in black muslin highly flowered in mauve and pinkish shades with white lace and mauve ribbons. Her large purple hat was done with shaded roses and ribbons of a similar tone with the coloring of the gown. The Putnams left early. Mrs. Adamowski was dignified and handsome in black chiffon with much shirring and lace, a richly plumed hat and a rope of pearls.

Prof. and Mrs. A. Lawrence Rotch, the last named in gray veiling with white lace and a red flower toque, were with Hon. and Mrs. George H. Lyman. Mrs. Lyman was all in black with a rope of pearls, and so was Miss Hetty Sargent, who was at Mr. and Mrs. F. I. Amory's table. Mrs. Amory was very handsome in champagne colored silk and a plumed hat of the same tone. Mrs. Stephen Bennett, who with Mr. Bennett entertained a party, wore a rich gown of white veiling and lace and a very smart white leghorn hat with pink ribbon and brown chiffon about the crown and brown plumes under the brim at the back. Near them were Mr. Eben D. Jordan and Miss Dorothy Jordan with a young people's party, including Miss Theodate Bailey and Miss Hannah Stevenson who wore white veiling and lace and a white lace hat with lilacs. Miss Jordan was in a pretty gray chiffon gown with much shirring and a white hat with pompadour colorings. Miss Baily of Philadelphia, who is visiting Miss Jordan, was all in white. Mrs. Edward Foote of Beacon street and her daughter, Mrs. Ten Eyck Wendell (May Dwight Foote) were with Mr. William Atherton. Mrs. Wendell was looking distinguished and smart in white liberty satin, finely embroidered, and a large black hat almost covered with white plumes. Mrs. Foote was in becoming black, with pearls. Miss Anna Robbins, who was there with her mother, Mrs. B. T. Robbins, was very pretty in a pale blue gown and hat. Mr. and Mrs. D. K. Snow had a party, Mrs. Snow in light blue crepe and a plumed hat of the same tone.

Mrs. W. W. Vaughan in a black jetted gown with white lace and a black hat with white plumes, brought a party of young people, including Miss Mary Vaughan, in gray veiling and white lace and a white plumed hat with a touch of black velvet. Mr. Otis Kimball and Miss Estelle Kimball had at their table, among others, Miss Chadwick of Paris, in red silk with white lace and a white hat wreathed with red flowers; Miss Eleanor Ames, wearing pale blue liberty with black applique and a black plumed hat, and Miss Tudor, all in black. The young hostess was very pretty in white veiling with pale blue embroidery and a white plumed hat. With Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, the latter in gray silk with white lace and a black hat, was Miss Barbara Higginson, in gray voile with white lace and a black picture hat. Miss Marion Fenno, in black spangled lace with touches of pale blue over white and a black and white plumed hat, was with a party including Miss Nancy Whiteside, who was all in black excepting the sweeping white plume on her large hat, and Miss Katharine Fay, who wore gray veiling and a blue hat with white feathers. Mr. Richard C. Dixey had a party including his young daughter, Rosamond, in gray veiling and white lace and a white lace hat wreathed with roses and foliage. Mr. and Mrs. Josef Adamowski were of Mr. William P. Blake's guests, Mrs. Adamowski in gray veiling with a three-quarter coat of white and black silk and a black and white hat with pink roses. Miss Margaret Upham, in cafe-au-lait silk and a white hat, was with a large party, which included Mr. Arthur Moors and his sister, Miss Adelaide Moors, who was in black velvet with white lace and a black and white plumed hat.

Others there were Mr. and Mrs. Frederick S. Converse, who brought guests, Mrs. Converse in gray veiling with lace of the same tone and a white hat with pink roses and touches of black velvet; Dr. and Mrs. F. L. Emerson, the latter in fine white veiling embroidered in pale blue and a white flower toque, who were of a party including Mrs. Quincy Emery, who was all in white; Dr. and Mrs. J. Bapst Blake, Mrs. Blake in white silk and lace and a black hat with white plumes, and Dr. and Mrs. George B. Shattuck, who were in the balcony, Mrs. Shattuck wearing black lace over white silk, and a black plumed hat. Mrs. Francis Watson was also of a balcony party. She wore a white gown and a purple toque with a cluster of white flowers; Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Forsyth, the latter in black net done with silver and a black hat with white plumes, made a table party, including Mr. Charles Gilson; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Hale had a party, Mrs. Hale in gray cloth and a white chiffon bodice with fine black lace and a black and white hat, Mrs. F. R. Comee, in black lace and a black hat with white plumes and a string of pearls, entertained a large party; Mrs. Francis W. Kittredge, in brown cloth and a white flower hat, and Mr. and Mrs. Louis Elson, Mrs. Elson wearing gray veiling and white lace, a white hat with touches of black velvet and a rope of pearls, were also there.

DAILY ADVERTISER,
TUESDAY MORNING,
MAY 10, 1904.

THIS EVENING'S "POP" CONCERT.

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall this season are proving an immense success. At the concert this evening the programme will have for its overtures Flotow's "Stradella," Auber's "Fra Diavolo," and Suppe's "Pique Dame,' for its waltzes Waldteufel's "Skaters," Strauss' "Kaiser," and that from Tschaikowsky's "Eugene Onegin," for its marches Suppe's "Fatinitza," and Sousa's "Washington Post," the operatic selections will be from "Gondoliers" and "Three Little Maids," and Wagner's "Ride of the Walkuries," completes the list of selections.

BOSTON POST.
TUESDAY,
MAY 10, 1904

THE "POP" CONCERT

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall this season are proving an immense success, and not a little of the pleasure attending these events comes from the far greater amount of sociability which characterizes the audiences. The programmes made by Mr. T. Adamowski, conductor of the orchestra, serve to show the splendid organization which he leads to fine advantage and the audiences thus far have been emphatic in their approval of his selections.

At the concert this evening the programme will have for its overtures Flotow's "Stradella," Auber's "Fra Diavolo" and Suppe's "Pique Dame"; for its waltzes Waldteufel's "Skaters," Strauss' "Kaiser" and that from Tschaikowsky's "Eugene Onegin"; for its marches Suppes "Fatinitza" and Sousa's "Washington Post." The operatic selections will be from the "Gondoliers" and "Three Little Maids," and Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries" completes the list of selections.

Boston Daily Globe.
TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1904.

This Evening's "Pop" Concert.

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall this season are proving an immense success, and not a little of the pleasure attending these events comes from the far greater amount of sociability which characterizes the audiences. The programs made by Mr T. Adamowsky, conductor of the orchestra, serve to show the splendid organization which he leads to fine advantage. This evening the program will have for its overtures Flotow's "Stradella," Auber's "Fra Diavolo" and Suppe's "Pique Dame," for its waltzes Waldteufel's "Skaters," Strauss' "Kaiser" and that from Tschaikowsky's "Eugene Onegin"; for its marches, Suppe's "Fatanitza" and Sousa's "Washington Post." The operatic numbers will be from the "Gondoliers" and "Three Little Maids." Wagner's "Ride of the Walkuries" completes the list of selections.

BOSTON HERALD-
-TUESDAY,
MAY 10, 1904.

TONIGHT AT THE "POPS."

That the short season of the "Pops" is to be well improved was shown by the unusually large audiences of last week. The programmes seem to have met the popular taste, and in no week of a former season has the social side of the "Pops" been so fully appreciated. At tonight's concert the overtures will be Flotow's "Stradella," Auber's "Fra Diabolo" and Suppe's "Pique Dame;" the marches will be Suppe's "Fatanitza" and Sousa's "Washington Post;" the operatic selections will be made from "The Gondoliers" and Rubin's "Three Little Maids;" the waltzes will be Waldteufel's "Skaters," Strauss' "Kaiser" and one from Tschaikowsky's "Eugene Onegin," and Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries" will complete the programme. These concerts are given each weekday evening from 8 to 11.

[63]

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ALL BOSTON GOES TO POPS, AND GOWNS RIVAL HORSE SHOW

Crowds from Out of Town Also Flock to Enjoy the Music, to See and Be Seen and to Sample Dainties Upon Offer.

"HOW did they ever come to call them 'Pops' concerts?" asked the woman with the expressive eyes and the costume that was a symphony in violet, just as the orchestra reached its most pianissimo passage.

"Why, they were always called that, dear," lucidly replied the girl with the red hat and the white boa. "Weren't they, Fred?"

"Sure," affirmed the young man with the Tuxedo coat and white waistcoat.

"But why?" persisted the woman whose costume was a symphony in violet.

Leader Adamowski swung his arms strenuously and the strain that the flageolets had been carrying came to an end with a crash of brass, reed and drums. He sat down and as the audience ceased applauding the servers of liquids and tobacco prepared for another spasm of industry.

"Waiter," asked the young man with the Tuxedo coat and the white waistcoat, "How did these concerts come to be called 'Pops?'"

"Why, really sir. I'm not quite sure, sir," said the waiter.

"Wasn't it because they are popular?"

"Yes, sir. I think so, sir."

"I thought," said the girl with the red hat and the white boa, "that it might be because you can hear so many corks popping between the musical numbers."

"Yes, ma'am," said the waiter. "I'm quite sure that's the reason, ma'am. Thank you, sir."

Thousands of Bostonians and hundreds from out of town go to the "Pop" concerts during the season, and it is safe to say that a big percentage of them are as ignorant of the origin of the name as the woman with the expressive eyes and her friends. It is nineteen years since this peculiarly Boston institution was initated. Many things may be forgotten in that time.

Good Music and Good

Perhaps you never attended the "Pops." If you like good music, good company and good cheer you are the [illegible] then.

Symphony Hall, with its [illegible] resounding stage, its spacious floor and convenient balconies, is an ideal place for the concerts, which begin annually on the first of May and run nightly until the middle of June.

The main floor has been levelled and converted, so far as possible, into a continental concert hall. More than two hundred little tables, with five chairs to each, take up the entire "down-stairs" space. Three-fifths of these are within a railing, to pass which a seat check is required. Boston society, with such others as care to pay the price, sits here. The other two-fifths are occupied by those holding simple admission tickets, unless the balconies suit them better.

On the stage, rising in four banks semi-circularly about the leader, are fifty musicians from the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They play almost continually from 8 until 11 o'clock, except for two intermissions of a quarter of an hour, when the audience arises, if its members please, and promenades.

One may purchase many things at the "Pops." There are lager beer and ales, domestic and foreign; Rhine wine, sauterne and claret. Most of the men drink, in great moderation. The wines and malt liquors are good. The prices are not high. There are also lemonade and soda, served to woman-kind. It looks good.

At a Boston "Pops" concert it is the unusual thing to see the women drinking even beer. Most of them would as soon think of showing enthusiasm over the beautiful music as they would of drinking in public. Therein shows New England's difference from New York or other cosmopolitan cities.

Cigars and cigarettes, at regular cigar-stand prices, are served. There are no five-cent cigars on the bill of fare. Presumably, five-cent people are not expected in the audience. One may also buy ices, and salads, and sandwiches and confectionery.

Who goes? Oh, everybody who's who in Boston.

Mrs. James Putnam, resplendent in a gown of black muslin, figured conventionally in the pastel shades, with a fine black silk dot in it and trimmed with white lace on the surplice folds of the bodice, sits at the Wallace Goodrich's table, as handsome a matron as one might wish to see. She wears an enormous hat of deep purple silk and straw trimmed in the artistic orchid shades.

Miss "Bonnie" Lyman is of the same party, with Mrs. "Tim" Adamowski, the concert leader's wife, Mr. and Mrs. Goodrich, Philip S. Sears, Harry Burnham and Parkman Haven.

Miss Estelle Kimball is with her father, Otis Kimball. She wears a white net gown with touches of pale blue silk in the shoulders and bodice. She is an extremely pretty young woman. In the party are John Stone Stone, the clever scientist, Harry Mason and others.

The prettiest of the younger girls in the smart set—Miss Hannah Stevenson—is at the table with Eben D. Jordan and Miss Dorothy Jordan. She wears white lace—apparently the same dress she wore a week before when bridesmaid for his sister, now Mrs. Saltonstall. Miss Jordan, chic as always, wears a Paris gown of the palest shade of silvery blue crepe and lace with a large white leghorn hat trimmed in tiny pink flowers.

Mrs. Francis S. Watson, who evidently prefers the balcony to the floor, is very stunning in a cream silk with a lot of white tulle at her throat, and a large purple velvet toque.

The balcony is also popular with Mme. Alexander Marius, in a chic red bodice, with hat to match and mode silk skirts, with Max Zach and his wife, and with Miss Amory.

Some Fine Costumes.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Dixey occupy a front table on the floor with their daughter, Miss Rosamond Dixey. Mrs. Dixey is beautifully gowned in a pale gray nun's veiling gown cut en traine, the bodice of which is done in finest tucks, while the trimming is of soft gray lace. She wears a large white hat trimmed in gray ostrich plumes. Her young daughter is attractive in dark blue silk with large picture hat to match her gown.

Mrs. Daniel Snow, one of the prettiest women in the hall, is in a creation of dark gray cloth and lace and wears a light picture hat.

Miss Clara Amory, who is in mourning, is modestly gowned in black veiling, the waist of which is trimmed in black taffeta silk, and wears a small black toque of silk and straw.

Miss Anderson is charming in a gown of dark green silk, the bodice of which is trimmed in white Irish lace, and wears a bolero jacket. Her stock is of the lace over white satin, and her hat of delicate lace trimmed in white ostrich plumes. She wears a gold chain, set with small diamonds, which falls nearly to her waist.

Miss Blake is very stylish in pale mode crepe, with a waist of the same material trimmed in bands of cream lace. She wears a large lavender hat trimmed in folds of lavender tulle, while a band of lavender flowers edges the rolling flat brim.

Miss Appleton who has a large party at two of the front tables, is gowned in pale blue veiling, the skirt en traine and finely plaited. The bodice is also done in the plaited effect and is loosely bloused, which is extremely becoming to her girlish, slight figure. She wears quantities of cream lace trimming on her bodice, while her stock is pale blue turquoise satin, paillette with tiny cut steel sequins.

Mrs. De Forest Danielson is handsome in a gown of black silk and lace and wears a becoming and severely plain hat of ecru straw.

Others in the large audience were Dr. George H. Hall, Mr. M. F. Aspinwall, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Keen and a party of friends, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Hale, the latter attractively gowned in white silk with black lace trimming her bodice in surplice effect. Dr. Ralph M. Thompson, Mr. Edward Kelley and a party of ladies at one of the front tables, Miss Cabot and a number of friends, Mr. and Mrs Wilder Quint, Mr. Roy Gardner, Mr. George Prescott, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Chadwick, Mr. A. S. Hemenway and Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Sears.

There are Mrs. William Armstrong, Mrs. Henry L. Higginson and Miss Juliet Higginson, Miss Prince, with her fiance, young Wolcott, Mrs. Henry Harris, Mrs. Fred Converse, Miss Ellen Atherton, Miss Aspinwall, Miss Helen Appleton, Mrs. Josef Adamowski, Miss Blake, Miss Alison Haughton, Mrs. Frank Moseley, Miss May Moseley, Miss Sara Daggett, with Dr. Beattie of London, her fiance; Mrs. Fred Comee, Mrs. J. Foster Bush, Miss Katherine Fay Miss Henrietta Sargent, Mrs. Stephen H. Bennett, Mrs. Louise C. Elson, Mrs. Herbert M. Leland, and a hundred others.

SOME OF ELITE OF BOSTON SOCIETY AT

Leaders of smart set occupy seats within railing on floor of hall, and by brilliancy the attractiveness of the spectacle.

These particular gowns and gems may not be seen here another night, although their wearers are here almost nightly.

Chat, Promenade and Sip.

The smart people at the concerts wear their beautiful gowns, chat, promenade,

Everybody Who Is Anybody in Society of Hub Attends Performances, and Display of Costumes Is Most Brilliant

There are a dozen numbers in each, about equally divided between classical and light music. The orchestra is entirely competent in its playing of either. Sundry long-haired gentlemen, sitting, mostly, away back, act as an unconscious "claque" for the intensely classical pieces. The bulk of the auditors seem better pleased with Gounod's "Hymn to St. Cecelia," "Narcissus," "Prince of Pilsen," "Robin Hood," the overture from "William Tell," and the intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana."

Conductor Adamowski is reasonably liberal with encores. That is not to say that thirty-five numbers on a programme of ten. He acknowledges continued applause, not by playing another selection, but by repeating a portion of the one applauded. Applause at the "Pops" is "continued," rather than "enthusiastic." Boston conservatism seems to admit of no "bravas!"

Of course the society people are in evening dress. Most of the others, on the floor and in the balconies, are in ordinary business clothes as to the men and simple gowns as to the women. The orchestra is with the majority. Only its leader wears evening dress.

There are many waiters. They wear rubber heels or "sneaks." Their sudden appearances without premonitory footfalls are positively startling. This enables them to circulate about the tables when summoned, even though the band is playing. They make up for this repression of sounds by the flourish and "pop" with which they open bottles.

You would enjoy an evening—or many of them—at the "Pops."

And, by the way, the girl with the red hat and the white boa was wrong, even if the waiter did agree with her. When the concerts were begun in old Music Hall, a generation ago, they were called "popular concerts." Within a few years common conversation had abbreviated the title to "Pops."

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

...ICAN

TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1904.

THE "POPS"—The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall this season are proving a great success, and the programs prepared by Mr. Adamowski have served to show the organization he leads to fine advantage. At this evening's concert will be played the "Stradella," "Fra Diavolo" and "Pique Dame" overtures; for waltzes, Waldteufel's "Skaters," Strauss's "Kaiser," and that from Tschaikowsky; for marches "Fatinitza" and "Washington Post;" the operatic selections will be from "The Gondoliers" and "Three Little Maids," and Wagner's "Ride of the Walkuries" completes the list.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1904

The programme at tonight's Pop concert will include Flotow's "Stradella," Auber's "Fra Diavolo," and Suppe's "Pique Dame," the marches will be Suppe's "Fatanitza" and Sousa's "Washington Post," the operatic selections will be from Sullivan's "The Gondoliers," and Rubin's "Three Little Maids," the waltzes will be Waldteufel's "Skaters," Strauss's "Kaiser" and Tschaikowsky's "Eugene Onegin," and Wagner's "Ride of the Walkuries" completes the programme. These concerts are given each week day evening from eight to eleven.

BOSTON POST.

THURSDAY.

MAY 12, 1904

The "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall this evening will call out a large audience as the programme is one of unusual interest. Operatic music will be given prominence and the wide scope of the selections is shown from the fact that the list includes selections from Malliard's "Les Dragons de Villare," Sullivan's "Pinafore," Offenbach's "Les Contes d'Hoffman," Wagner's "Lohengrin," Verdi's "Traviata," Suppo's "Pique Dame," and Rubin's "Three Little Maids."

BOSTON HERALD-

-THURSDAY,

MAY 12, 1904.

The "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall this evening will call out a large audience, as the programme is one of unusual interest. Operatic music will be given prominence, and the wide scope of the selections is shown from the fact that the list includes selections from Malliard's "Les Dragons do Villare," Sullivan's "Pinafore," Offenbach's "Les Contes d'Hoffman," Wagner's "Lohengrin," Verdi's "Traviata," Suppe's "Pique Dame," and Rubin's "Three Little Maids." The other numbers on the programme are in keeping with the excellent selections made for these events this season. The concerts are given each evening, from 8 till 11.

BOSTON JOURNAL-

-THURSDAY,

MAY 12, 1904.

A brilliant list of selections for the "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall this evening has been chosen, ad the large advance sale of tables and balcony seats again shows the popularity of these events. Operatic music will be prominent, the works represented in this class of compositions being "Malliard's "Les Dragons de Villars," Sullivan's "Pinafore," Offenbach's "Les Contes d'Hoffmann," Wagner's "Lohengrin," Verdi's "Traviata," Suppe's "Pique Dame," and Rubin's "Three Little Maids." The other numbers on the program are in keeping with the excellent selections made for these events this season.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1904.

A brilliant list of selections for the "Pop" concert at Symphony hall this evening has been chosen. Operatic music will be prominent, the works represented being Malliard's "Les Dragons de Villars," Sullivan's "Pinafore," Offenbach's "Les Contes d'Hoffman," Wagner's "Lohengrin," Verdi's "Traviata," Suppe's "Pique Dame" and Rubin's "Three Little Maids."

EVENING RECORD,

THURSDAY,

MAY 12, 1904.

A brilliant list of selections for the "Pop" concert at Symphony hall this evening has been chosen and the large advance sale of tables and balcony seats again shows the popularity of these events. Operatic music will be prominent. The concerts are given each evening from 8 till 11.

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN-

-THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1904.

THE "POPS"—The "Pop" concert season at Symphony Hall is proving one of the most successful ever held. Operatic music will be given prominence at this evening's concert, the list including selections from Malliard's "Les Dragons de Villare," Sullivan's "Pinafore," Offenbach's "Les Contes d' Hoffmann," Wagner's "Lohengrin," Verdi's "Traviata," Suppe's "Pique Dame" and Rubin's "Three Little Maids."

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1904

At the "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall this evening operatic music will be given prominence. The list includes selections from Malliard's "Les Dragons de Villare," Sullivan's "Pinafore," Offenbach's "Les Contes d'Hoffmann," Wagner's "Lohengrin," Verdi's "Traviata," Suppé's "Pique Dame" and Ruben's "Three Little Maids."

BOSTON HERALD-

-SATURDAY,

MAY 14, 1904.

The second week of the "Pops" at Symphony Hall ends this evening, and the programme arranged by Mr. Adamowski for this occasion is full of attractive features. Mr. Birnbaum, violinist, will play the solo in Handel's "Largo," and among the operatic numbers are selections from "Si j'etais Roi," "Toreador," "Henry VIII." "Carmen," "Raymond" and "Peggy from Paris." Some bright waltzes and marches are also down on the programme. These concerts will be continued until further notice every weekday evening from 8 till 11 o'clock.

BOSTON POST,

SATURDAY,

MAY 14, 1904

The second week of the "Pops" at Symphony Hall ends with that of this evening and the programme arranged by Mr. Adamowski for this occasion is full of attractive features. Mr. Birnbaum, the violinist, is to play the solo in Handel's "Largo," and among the operatic numbers are selections from "Si j'etais Roi," "Toreador," "Henry VIII.," "Carmen," "Raymond," and "Peggy from Paris." Some bright waltzes and marches are also down on the programme.

BOSTON JOURNAL-

-SATURDAY,

MAY 14, 1904.

The "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall this evening will make a brilliant ending of the second week of these events. Mr. Adamowski is having splendid success in making his programs, and in that of this evening he has included the overtures "Si j'etais Roi" and "Raymond," with selections from the operas of "Toreador," "Henry III," "Lohengrin," and "Peggy from Paris." The program also includes 'Handel's "Largo" (violin solo by Mr. Birnbaum) and some bright waltzes and marches. These concerts are continued each week day evening from 8 till 11 o'clock.

Boston Daily Globe.

SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1904.

The second week of the "Pops" at Symphony, and the program arranged by Mr Adamowski for this occasion is full of attractive features. Mr Birnbaum, the violinist, is to play the solo in Handel's "Largo," and among the operatic numbers are selections from "Si j'etais Roi," "Toreador," "Henry VIII," "Carmen," "Raymond" and "Peggy From Paris." Some bright waltzes and marches are also on the program.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1904

The season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall is now under good headway and there is every reason to expect a record of success for these excellent summer night entertainments. One of the interesting developments of the season thus far has been the unusually large attendance of visitors from other cities showing the name and fame of these concerts has spread far beyond local limits. Mr. Adamowski's programmes have been universally commended and have proved pleasing to all classes of music lovers while the men of the orchestra have never done better work than during the present season. The concerts are given every week-day evening from eight to eleven o'clock and the programme for Monday evening next is rich in attractive features. For this occasion the overtures are Suppe's "Flotte Bursche," Gounod's "Faust," Flotow's "Stradella," while the operatic selections are from "Gioconda," "The Brigands," and "Yankee Consul." Marches by Ganne and Sousa, waltzes by Strauss and Waldteufel and Nevins's "Narcissus" complete the programme.

SUNDAY JOURNAL,

MAY 15, 1904.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall have fully maintained their popularity during the week just ended and there is every evidence that the present season of these delightful summer evening entertainments is to be a notable one in point of success. That the summer tide of travel has already set toward Boston is made conclusively evident to anyone watching the promenade in the spacious corridors of the hall during the intermission at these events, and it is pleasant to realize that the name and fame of the "Pops" has become so widespread that attendance upon one of these events has become a recognized feature of a visit to Boston. Mr. Adamowski has hit upon a popular line of selections in making up his programs thus far and it must be a captious person who cannot find ample entertainment in the numbers of an evening at the "Pops." A third week of these concerts begins tomorrow evening, when the program will have as its operatic selections excerpts from "Faust," "Gioconda," "The Brigands," and "Yankee Consul," with the overtures "Flotte Bursche" and "Stradella," the waltzes "Thousand and One Nights" and "Barcarolle," the "March Militaire," Ganne, and "King Cotton," Sousa, the suite "L'Arlesienne," Bizet, and "Narcissus," Nevin, as the other numbers. These concerts are continued for the present every week-day evening from 8 to 11.

SUNDAY POST,

MAY 15, 1904

POP CONCERTS

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall during the last two weeks have made a remarkably brilliant opening for the regular summer season of these events and it is quite evident that the present week is to see a continuance of the favor shown these entertainments. Mr. Adamowski's programmes are proving just what is wanted by the patrons of these concerts and the men of the orchestra have never done better work than in the "Pops" of the present season.

During the present week Mr. Adamowski will bring forward a lot of bright numbers and each concert of the week will include notably strong features. For tomorrow evening the programme will be introduced by Ganne's "March Militaire" and conclude with Sousa's "King Cotton." The overtures will be Suppe's "Flotte Bursche" and Flotow's "Stradella." The operatic selections will be made from "Faust," "Gioconda," "The Brigands" and "Yankee Consul," the waltzes will be Strauss' "Thousand and One Nights" and Waldteufel's "Barcarolle" with Bizet's suite "L'Arlesienne" and Nevin's "Narcissus" as the remaining numbers.

[65]

TECH BOYS CHEER FOR "PREXY"

Tech Boys of Whatever Age Yelled Themselves Hoarse at the "Pop" Concert In Symphony Hall Last Night, and Cheered for M. I. T. and Prexy Pritchett

A YELLING FEST BY TECH AT POPS

Graduates Cheer "Prexy" Pritchett and Sing and Cheer to Their Hearts' Content, for They Own the Hall for Time Being.

Long Live the President!
Cheer for the President!
Prexy for aye!
Heed of Technology,
Leader in knowledge,
He needs no apology;
Prexy for aye!

Several hundred Tech graduates sang "Prexy for Aye" at the Pops last night, with voices of undergraduate strength. Then "Prexy," Pritchett, escorted by Maj. H. L. Higginson and the class of '93, entered the hall. All the grads jumped to their feet and cheered like a football crowd when the home eleven scores.

Those dignified young and old engineers and architects and chemists—those leaders in America's scientific world—threw off their decorum as if it were a dress coat or a top hat, and let loose enough sound to raise the roof. It lasted two, three, five minutes—it lasted and lasted. Eventually a shrieking, wild-eyed '91 graduate leaped upon a chair and waved his arms frantically, significantly.

The sign language needed no assistance from spoken words. Every Tech man understood and the roar became a concerted yell:

"M-I-T, Rah-Rah-Rah; M-I-T, Rah-Rah-Rah; M-I-T, Rah-Rah-Rah; Technol-o-gy. Pritchett-Pritchett-Pritchett!"

It was a magnificent outburst of enthusiasm, and President Pritchett was visibly pleased. He smiled and bowed—whereupon the cheering was renewed. And then Naughty-Five in the rear truculently demanded another yell. So everybody rose again and repeated the ovation.

Below Tech banners of all classes, from '68 to '05, waved triumphantly, and Tech men acted about as they pleased. There was nothing but harmony; Tech's ownership fio Symphony Hall was voluntarily conceded and nobody was more eager to make the occasion notable than Manager Comee. Maj. Higginson's courtesy was thanked with an "M. I. T." cheer and a long "Higginson,"

Each class marched in separately and formally, giving en route its old yell. At the front group of the tables classes from '68 to '91 occupied reserved sections; at the rear group of tables sat all the latter-day classes. The din began when the gray-haired '68 men skipped up the aisles. More old-timers appeared presently, and were received with the Tech cheer. Then the old-timers followed forth a noisy greeting to the younger grads. Maj. John Bigelow, the hero of Las Guasimas, now professor of modern languages at the Institute, was warmly applauded when he came with the class of '93. Prof. Hachstein, the personal friend of every student who ever recited German to him, was greeted with prolonged, delighted cheering, and then given a special cheer. Dean Burton tried to enter inconspicuously, but everybody caught sight of him and received him [illegible]

[illegible] hour [illegible]

[66]

INCOMPLETE

Boston Daily Globe.
TUESDAY, MAY 16, 1905.

AT 1000TH "POP."

Many Old Favorites in Its Special Program.

Haydn's "Farewell Symphony" Given as a Feature.

The 1000th "Pop" popped in spite of the fog last night, and was ...oroughly enjoyed by a large audience, most of whom were old-timers, and there for the purpose of hearing old-time music—in a sense.

These concerts have now been in existence so long that people have "memories," and pieces like "Loin du Bal," Haendel's "Largo" from the requiem mass, the good old "William Tell" overture, and the introduction of the third act of "Lohengrin," Schumann's "Traumerel," or the "Derniere Sommeil d'une Vierge," mean to thousands a recollection of an evening spent perhaps across the table from a pair of eyes, with smoke and music, and even a phrase, or a look, that will never be separated again from the tune.

Of the 1000 concerts 795 were given in old Music hall, and 205 have been given in Symphony hall. There have been 10 conductors, beginning with Neuendorff, and counting Mullaly, Rietzel, Kneisel, Adamowski, Gruenberg, de Novellis, Max Zach, Leo Schultz and Gustav Strube. Only one halt has been made; in the summer of 1890 there were no concerts.

The program for the first "Pop" included the "Imperial" march by Resch, the overture to "William Tell," "Mon Reve," the Waldteufel waltz; selections from "The Little Duke," by Lecoq—who hears of "The Little Duke" today?—Suppe's overture "Morning, Noon and Night in Vienna," "Reminiscences from Tannhauser," a "pizzicato polka" by Strauss, Ernest Scherz' arrangement of Bilse's music condensing a whole concert into one piece; "Die Felsenmuhle," a forgotten but pretty piece by Reisiger; the "Donau Lieder" waltzes of Strauss, favorites 20 years ago; a paraphrase of "Die Lorelei," and a galop, "Shooting Star," by Bial.

Of these only the "William Tell" overture was on last night's program. Indeed, so many of the old-time favorites crowded for recognition that the selection came to call for diplomacy. A fine program was finally arranged, with a most unusual feature. The Haydn "Farewell symphony" was played. At every music desk a small candle was lighted, as orchestras were lighted when the farewell symphony was written. All other lights on the stage were put out, and those in the auditorium were lowered. In semigloom the players departed one by one, each blowing out his candle as he left. The sentiment of it was prettily enforced, and the audience was mightily pleased when the last two violins departed, and Mr Adamowski, blowing out his own last twinkle, followed them.

Other pieces of the old-time concerts on the program were the good old "Hoch Hapsburg" march that has stirred so many a student gathering in Music hall, the Strauss "Thousand and One Nights" waltz, which apparently was chosen for its title; the overture to "Martha" selections from L. S. Thompson's "Pudding" opera, "The Sphinx"—Mr Thompson himself was in the audience—"Loin du Bal," the introduction to the third act of "Lohengrin," and the Haendel largo, without which, of course, the evening would have had almost no meaning. The final set of pieces were modern, in deference to new-comers, probably.

BOOK AND MUSIC GOOD

TECH NIGHT AT THE "POP"

Mirth, Good Fellowship and Loyalty to M. I. T.

"For we will never go with Harvard as we go marching on," were the words which Technology men fitted to the air of "Glory, Glory, Hallelujah" in observing "Tech night" at the "Pops" in Symphony Hall last evening, and this streak of determination and earnestness which characterized the festive occasion had a significant bearing on the effort, now pending, toward the merging of the two institutions.

"Technology, free and independent," was a sentiment cheered to the echo from the few scattered representatives of classes in the late '60s and '70s to the solid ranks of the vigorous young men of the '05 body and the under classmen.

Scene of Enthusiasm

It was a gala night. From a point of vantage in the balcony Mrs. "Jack" Gardner smiled indulgently on the enthusiastic scene.

Now and then the celebrators raised their glasses high in the air, and to the observing eye it seemed as if they were drinking Mrs. Gardner's health in silent toast, mindful that she was one of the sponsors of the Pop movement. But for Colonel Higginson, another staunch supporter of the custom, there came loud and ringing recognition when the students arose to cheer his name.

Sons of Tech crowded the hall to the very doors, and in the balconies above were massed handsomely gowned women. In its setting of jollity and good fellowship the college spirit ever predominated.

College Spirit Everywhere

"Tech, Tech, Tech," came the hearty chorus over and over again, thundering its way to the rafters and re-echoing in near-by streets.

Class yells galore were given, those of '05 men at times drowning the others completely. The musical programme directed by Max Zach and the impromptu selections of students found response in tumultuous encores.

Tech colors were everywhere, and at one end of the hall was stretched a huge flag with a white-lettered "Technology" inscribed on the red background.

When the "good night" sounded, the revelling hosts departed satisfied that the institution had been suitably honored.

Boston Transcript
TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1905

"HARVARD NIGHT" AT THE "POPS"

Programme Characteristic of College Life Performed Before an Immense Audience

"Harvard Night" at the "Pops" attracted a full house last evening in spite of the bad weather. Undergraduates were there by the scores, and a big representation of "grads"; and from the Back Bay and Brookline and many other places came devotees of the concerts to make up a full house. On the platform "H-A-R-V-A-R-D" shone brilliantly in a crimson electrical illumination, and from the fronts of the balconies hung numerous crimson posters dedicated to "Harvard," the "Nine," the "Eleven," the "Crew" and the "Track Team." These posters became souvenirs early in the evening, for people in the balcony did not hesitate to appropriate them. A few fluttered downward and stirred up brief excitement below. Each of the undergraduate classes had its own little group in the hall and each made itself heard at brief intervals. The Glee Club occupied seats near the stage.

The attractive programme was arranged by conductor Strube with much discrimination, his march, "Soldiers Field," heading the list. The "Prince of Pilsen" was also received with much applause, as were other selections of popular character. After a few numbers had been played, the conductor retired, yielding up his baton in turn to Messrs. Hall. Grey, Densmore and Hosmer, all of whom are composers of Hasty Pudding and Pi Eta works. Under their leadership the orchestra played several selections of distinctly Harvard music, including "Machiavelli," this year's Pudding production; "Elaine," the march "Through the Yard at Harvard" and a march from the Pi Eta's "Counterfeiter" of 1905. "Glory, Glory to the Crimson," brought the immense audience to its feet, and a repetition was necessary before the remainder of the programme was permitted to be carried out.

The last part of the performance consisted of "The Stadium," "American Fantasy," "Fair Harvard," and a polka, "The Tattler." During the intermissions the Glee Club sang several songs. The audience expressed itself enthusiastically after every number, but the greatest outburst came, however, after the rendering of "Fair Harvard." "Up the Street" was the closing number, and everybody sang this march, composed by Morse of '96. Then the audience departed with a long cheer, perfectly satisfied with "Harvard Night."

While there was the usual enthusiasm and applause, compared with some of the "Harvard Nights" of past years the performance was without boisterousness, and the students kept strictly within the limits of propriety. Those who attended with the expectation of seeing anything approaching a "rough house" met with disappointment.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, MAY 15, 1904.

—The Pop concerts have been largely patronized the past week, the second of the season, and every evening jolly parties of eight and ten persons come together to enjoy the social side as well as the music, which is exceptionally good. Mrs Adamowski entertains guests almost every evening, and during intermissions many friends come from other tables for a pleasant word or greeting. One evening early in the week Mr and Mrs John T. Linzee, Miss Annie Lyman and Mr and Mrs Boylston Beal were her guests, Mrs Adamowski and Mrs Linzee, both in black, and Miss Lyman in blue and white checked taffeta, the bodice applique, with black lace, and a white hat, with long white plumes. Mrs Beal was in brown taffeta, trimmed with black and gold, the bodice opening over white lace, and black hat with white plumes. Others there were Mr and Mrs Montgomery Sears, who had a table alone; Mr Eben D. Jordan and his daughter, with friends; Mr James P. Stearns and Miss Stearns, the latter in gray veiling, and Miss Sara W. Daggett, with her fiance, Dr Robert Beattie, was in light gray voile, with white lace appliques and light blue chiffon hat, with blue plumes and violets; Dr and Mrs Hall Curtis, the latter in black lace and a lace and jet toque, with small pink rose. Mr William P. Blake, Miss Lyman and Mr and Mrs Arthur Richmond were with Mrs Adamowski Wednesday evening, Mrs Richmond wearing a dress of voile in two shades of tan, the bodice embroidered and made with eton effect, and small round hat done in pink flowers and small wings; Miss Lyman in pale gray crepe de chine, and black hat with long white plume; Mrs Adamowski in black silk skirt and bodice of black lace, with wrap of accordion plaited veiling. Mr and Mrs Kenneth Horton had several young people at their table, including Miss Rosamond Gibson and Miss Constance Amory, Miss Gibson in black voile, with applications of white irish lace at the bodice, and black hat; Miss Amory, lavender voile, the skirt shirred and trimmed with insertions of valenciennes lace, and a transparent yoke of the same lace at the bodice, and black hat with white plumes; Mrs Horton was in a mull of champagne shade, with light blue chiffon trimmings. The bodice was made with a bertha of mull covered with modern point lace, and the sleeves of flounces of mull. The hat was black, with white ostrich tips. Miss Hannah Stevenson and Miss Eleanor Sears were of a party of young people, one of whom wore a silver gray taffeta, with puffed sleeves and lace and an open work cream-colored straw hat, with a wreath of roses around the crown and a bow of cerise ribbon. Miss Stevenson wore white veiling and a white lace hat, with white lilacs and foliage. Miss Sears was in blue veiling, tucked and appliqued in white, and a black hat with plumes. Mr Dalton and Miss Susie Howe were with several friends, Miss Howe in a gown of striped cream chiffon, with lace, and a black hat with plumes. Mr Henry Goodrich and Mr Howard Gay both brought friends.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall have fully maintained their popularity during the week just ended, and there is every evidence that the present season of these delightful summer evening entertainments is to be a notable one in point of success. That the summer tide of travel has already set toward Boston is made evident to any one watching the promenade in the spacious corridors of the hall during the intermission, and it is pleasant to realize that the name and fame of the "Pops" have become so widespread that attendance upon one of these events has become a recognized feature of a visit to Boston.

Mr Adamowski has hit upon a popular line of selections in making up his programs thus far, and it must be a captious individual who cannot find ample entertainment in the numbers of an evening at the "Pops." A third week of these concerts begins tomorrow evening, when the program will have as its operatic selections excerpts from "Faust," "Gioconda," "The Brigands" and "Yankee Consul," with the overtures "Flotte Bursche" and "Stradella," the waltzes "Thousand and One Nights" and "Barcarolle," the "March Militaire," Ganne, and "King Cotton," Sousa, the suite "L'Arlesienne," Bizet, and "Narcissus," Nevin, as the other numbers.

SUNDAY HERALD—BOSTON, MAY 15, 1904.

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall during the last two weeks have made a remarkably brilliant opening for the regular summer season. A night at the "Pops" has come to be a standard attraction for all visitors to Boston, and one only needs to pass in the promenade to realize that the tide of summer travel has already set toward this city and that the name and fame of the "Pops" are well known beyond local limits. Mr. Adamowski's programmes are proving just what is wanted by the patrons of these concerts, and the men of the orchestra have never done better work than in the "Pops" of the present season. During the present week Mr. Adamowski will bring forward a lot of bright numbers and each concert of the week will include notably strong features. For tomorrow evening the programme will begin with Ganne's "March Militaire" and end with Sousa's "King Cotton." The overtures will be Suppe's "Flotte Bursche" and Flotow's "Stradella." The operatic selections will be made from "Faust," "Gioconda," "The Brigands" and "Yankee Consul"; the waltzes will be Strauss' "Thousand and One Nights" and Waldteufal's "Barcarolle," with Bizet's suite "L'Arlesienne" and Nevin's "Narcissus" as the remaining numbers. These concerts will be continued for the present every evening from 8 till 11 o'clock.

Thursday night was a gala one at the Pops, for there was as large a crowd of smart people as at the opening, and there was a bride, too, in Mrs. Standen (Eleanor Appleton), Mrs. Goodrich having held that distinction on the first night. Maj. and Mrs. Standen had a family party, including Miss Dorothy and Miss Gladys Appleton and their brother, Mr. William S. Appleton. Oddly enough, Mrs. Standen wore a gown of similar coloring to Mrs. Goodrich's. It was of brown veiling and chiffon, with a yoke of white lace, and her large white hat was almost covered with white roses. It was an exqusite costume, and the wearer was radiant in it. Miss Dorothy Appleton wore black net, with a corsage bouquet of red roses and a white lace and rose hat, and Miss Gladys was in pearl gray chiffon, with white lace and a large white hat. Mrs. John L. Thorndike was of a party which included Mr. Joseph S. Bigelow and his daughter, Miss Mary Bigelow. Mrs. Thorndike was in a rich black jetted gown and a black plumed hat. Miss Bigelow wore one of the prettiest gowns seen that night. It was of pale blue liberty, accordion plaited, with cream insertions, and the hat was a large blue plumed one.

Across the aisle was Miss Olivia Thorndike, whose wonderful fire dance society is still talking about and congratulating her upon. She was very smart in gray veiling, with rose applique and a black plumed hat. Of the same party, chaperoned by Mrs. W. W. Vaughan, was, among other young people, Miss Mary Vaughan in rose pink silk, with white applications and a white plumed hat. Mrs. Vaughan wore black veiling, with white insertions and a black hat with white plumes. Mr. and Mrs. Eben Draper had Mrs. Francis Watson with them. The latter was looking unusually well in gray voile, with a bodice of the same toned liberty and a large black hat, with shaded pale blue flowers. Mrs. Draper was also in gray, with white Irish lace and a girdle of shaded blue satin. Her broad black toque was done with white wings. Miss Elizabeth Devens, in black voile, with a cape of fine white lace, and a white hat with large pink roses; Miss Helen Battelle, in rose pink, with a three-quarter white lace coat and a black lace hat, and her sister, Miss Sally Battelle, in a similar gown, but of a deeper pink, and a large violet hat, with blush roses, were of a table party which made one of the most attractive in the hall, and at another Miss Clara Shattuck was looking extremely pretty in mauve liberty and chiffon and a large plumed hat to match. Mr. Herbert Leeds was there with a party, and at a nearby table were Dr. James C. White and his son, Dr. Charles J. White.

Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery Sears, who are sailing the last of the month for a short visit to the other side, brought a party to the Pop concert Monday night. On Tuesday Mrs. Adamowski had at her table Mr. and Mrs. John T. Linzee and Mr. and Mrs. Boylston Beal, among others. Mrs. Linzee was in black with a chain of pearls, and Mrs. Beal in russet brown silk with white lace and a black hat with white plumes. Mr. Eben Jordan had a party and so did Mr. E. Howard Gay, who brought among others his young niece, Miss Caroline Gay, Mr. Harry Gay's daughter, who was very pretty in gray veiling with white lace and a large black hat with pink roses. Mr. Charles Hayden with a large party and Mr. Reginald Bolles, one of a stag table, were others there.

On Wednesday night, at the Pop concert, Mrs. Adamowski entertained at her table Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Mr. William P. Blake and others. Mrs. Richmond looked quite a beauty in a violet gown, with embroidery and chiffon of the same tone, and a violet straw hat with paler tinted flowers and Mercury wings. Mrs. Adamowski was in rich black lace. Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Horton brought a charming young party that night, including Miss Constance Amory, in violet voile with white lace and a black hat with white plumes, and Miss Rosamond Gibson, in black veiling with white lace and a black picture hat. Mrs. Horton was handsome in a gown of heavy ecru lace over pale blue, and her black hat had white plumes. Mrs. James W. Kenney of the Parkway brought a young people's party, her daughter's friends, which filled two tables. The hostess was in black lace with touches of pale blue and a black plumed hat. Miss Kenney wore light blue voile with white lace and a white plumed hat. Mr. Philip Dalton and his fiancee, Miss Susan Howe, who are to be married June 6, were of a party. Miss Howe wore palest pink striped mousseline de soie and a black plumed hat. Among those in the balcony was Mrs. Henry P. Kidder, with friends. She was in a black jetted princess gown with touches of white and a toque of violets.

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN—SUNDAY, MAY 15, 1904.

During the past week the weather has been unusually cool, enabling people to enjoy the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall thoroughly. Among the parties attending I saw that Colonel Charles Hayden, of Governor Bates's staff, with young Kenneth Horton and his wife, and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Brown, of the Somerset.

Mrs. Horton was in a gown of ecru pongee silk and wore a small hat. Mrs. Brown was in black jetted lace, and wore a large black picture hat trimmed in pink roses.

Near by sat Mr. Charles H. Gibson with a party of people, including Mr. E. Howard Gay. At another table I caught a glimpse of Dr. Beattie, of London, who had his fiance, Miss Sara Daggett, of the Hotel Somerset, with him. Miss Daggett was in pale-gray veiling trimmed in white lace. She wore a small gray straw hat trimmed in white feathers. Miss Mary Lawrence was in the hall, at a centre table, with a number of friends.

THE "POPS"—The third week of the "Pop" Concerts begins to-morrow evening at Symphony Hall. So far there has been every evidence that the present season of these summer evening entertainments is to b a notable one in point of success. To-morrow evening's program will comprise the usual varied operatic selections, marches, overtures and waltzes, and much popular music will be rendered. These concerts are to be continued for the present every week day evening from 8 to 11.

BOSTON HERALD—MAY 16, 1904.

Friday night is evidently a popular one at the Pop concerts, for every table was filled. Mr. S. Hooper Hooper had in his party Mr. and Mrs. J. Frederick Brown, Miss Bacon and Mr. Harold Blanchard. Mr. Brown was in a white lace gown, Miss Bacon in white crepe, and both wore large black hats. Miss Eleonora Sears, with another party, was one of the prettiest girls there that night. She was all in white, with a large black picture hat.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, MAY 17, 1904.

Tonight at "the Pops."

The success of "the Pops" this season has shown a keen appreciation of the efforts on the part of the management to make these delightful entertainments worthy the name given them. Mr Adamowski's programs are happily chosen and arranged and all of the features appeal successfully to the pleasure-seeking public. This evening's selections include the marches, "Oberstiger," Zeller, and "Hoc Habsburg," Grall; selections from "Aida," "La Boheme," "Lohengrin," "Carmen" and "King Dodo," the "Doctrinen" waltz, Ed. Strauss; the "Espana" waltz, Chabrier; the "Funeral March of a Marionette," Gounod; the "Valse Caprice," Rubinstein, and the "Picolino" overture," Guirod.

[68]

BOSTON POST.

MAY 17, 1904

"THE POPS"

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall continue in the full tide of success, and the season gives every evidence of making a new record for these most delightful entertainments. Mr. Adamowski's good taste in the selection and arrangement of the programmes is commended by patrons, the comfort of those who attend is given careful attention, and the surroundings are such that they will add essentially to the evening's pleasure. This evening's selections include the marches "Oberstiger," Zeller, and "Hoch Habsburg," Krall; selections from "Aida," "La Boheme," "Lohengrin," "Carmen" and "King Dodo," the "Doctrinen" waltz, Ed Strauss, and the "Espany" waltz, Chabrier; the "Funeral March of a Marionette," Gounod; the "Valse Caprice," Rubinstein, and the "Picolino" overture, Guirod.

BOSTON HERALD-

MAY 17, 1904.

"THE POPS."

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall continue in the full tide of success, and Mr. Adamowski's programmes are commended by patrons, whose comfort is attended to in every way. The programe tonight will include the marches, "Obersteiger," Zeller, and "Hoch Habsburg," Krail; selections from "Aida," "La Boheme," "Lohengrin," "Carmen" and "King Dodo"; "Doctrinen" waltz, Ed Strauss; "Espana," Chabrier; Gounod's "Funeral March of a Marionette," "Valse Caprice," Rubinstein, and "Picolino," overture, Guiraud. These concerts are given each week day evening from 8 to 11 o'clock.

BOSTON JOURNAL-

MAY 17, 1904.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall continue in the full tide of success and the season gives every evidence of making a new record for these most delightful entertainments. Mr. Adamowski's good taste in the selection and arrangement of the program is commended by patrons, the comfort of those who attend is given careful attention and the surroundings are such that they will add essentially to the evening's pleasure. This evening's selections include the marches "Oberstiger," Zeller, and "Hoch Habsburg," Krall; selections from "Aida," "La Boheme," "Lohengrin," "Carmen" and "King Dodo," the "Doctrinen" waltz, Ed Strauss, and the "Espana" waltz, Chabrier; the "Funeral March of a Marionette," Gounod; the "Valse Caprice," Rubinstein, and the "Picolino" overture, Guirod. These concerts are given each week day evening from 8 to 11 o'clock.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, MAY 17, 1904

This evening's selections for the Symphony Hall Pop concert include the marches "Oberstiger," Zeller; and "Hoc Habsburg," Krall; selections from "Aida," "La Bohème," "Lohengrin," "Carmen," and "King Dodo," the "Doctrinen" waltz, Ed. Strauss and the "España" waltz, Chabrier; the "Funeral March of a Marionette," Gounod; the "Valse Caprice," Rubinstein; and the "Picolino" overture, Guirod. These concerts are given each weekday evening, from eight to eleven o'clock.

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN-

TUESDAY, MAY 17, 1904.

THE "POPS."—The "Pop" Concerts are justifying their name in full this season, and Symphony Hall is thronged nightly with lovers of music of the lighter sort well played. The "Pops" are an institution of which Boston people are very fond, and which they have always from the beginning accorded hearty support. Very attractive programmes have been arranged by Conductor Adamowski for this week's concerts.

BOSTON POST.

MAY 19, 1904

At the "Pop" concert this evening in Symphony Hall the selections include for operatic music excerpts from Mockton's "Country Girl," Ponciellí's "Gioconda," Bizet's "Carmen" and Rubin's "Three Little Maids." The marches will be Massager's "Tambour Battant" and Sousa's "King Cotton," the waltzes Strauss' "Roses from the South" and Waldteufel's "Espana," and the overtures Suppe's "Light Cavalry" and Auber's "Masaniello." Mr. A. Birnbaum, the violinist, is to play the solo in Gounod's "Hymn to St. Cecilia," and Grieg's "Peer Gynt" suite is also included.

BOSTON JOURNAL.

MAY 19, 1904.

Mr. T. Adamowski, the conductor of the "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall, this evening has planned a capital program for the patrons of these events, with selections from popular authors, brilliant waltzs, stirring marches, and other good music. Mr. A. Birnbaum, the violinist, who has made himself a great favorite with the "Pop" audiences, is to play the solo in Gounod's "Hymn to St. Cecelia," and the popular "Peer Gynt" suite is one of the evening's numbers. These concerts are given from 8 till 11 o'clock.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1904.

Mr T. Adamowski, the conductor of the "Pop" concert at Symphony hall, has planned a capital program for this evening. Mr A. Birnbaum, the violinist, is to play the solo in Gounod's "Hymn to St Cecilia" and the popular "Pier Gynt" suite is one of the evening's numbers.

BOSTON HERALD-

MAY 19, 1904.

The programme of the "Pop" concert this evening in Symphony Hall will include excerpts from Mockton's "Country Girl," Ponciellí's "Gioconda," Bizet's "Carmen," Rubin's "Three Little Maids," marches by Messager and Sousa, Strauss' "Roses from the South" and Waldteufel's "Espana" waltzes" and the overtures, Suppe's "Light Cavalry" and Auber's "Masaniello." Mr. Birnbaum will play the solo in Gounod's "Hymn to St. Cecilia," and Grieg's "Pier Gynt" suite is also on the programme.

DAILY ADVERTISER,

MAY 19, 1904.

POP CONCERTS.

T. Adamowski, the conductor of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall this evening, has planned a capital programme for the patrons of these events with selections from popular authors, brillant waltzes, stirring marches, and other good music. A. Birnbaum, the violinist, is to play the solo in Gounod's "Hymn to St. Cecilia" and the popular "Peer Gynt" suite is one of the evening's numbers.

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN

-THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1904.

THE "POPS."—Early Summer in Boston without the "Pops" would not seem a bit like the real thing. Popular as this feature of Boston life has been in the past, it has never been more so than now. The orchestra does splendid work, and Conductor Adamowski prepares his programme so as to please the greatest variety of tastes.

EVENING RECORD,

MAY 19, 1904.

POP CONCERTS.

T. Adamowski, the conductor of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall this evening, has planned a capital programme for the patrons of these events with selections from popular authors, brillant waltzes, stirring marches, and other good music. A. Birnbaum, the violinist, is to play the solo in Gounod's "Hymn to St. Cecilia" and the popular "Peer Gynt" suite is one of the evening's numbers.

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1904

At the "Pop" concert this evening in Symphony Hall the programme includes for operatic music excerpts from Mockton's "Country Girl," Ponciellí's "Gioconda," Bizet's "Carmen" and Rubin's "Three Little Maids." The marches will be Massager's "Tambour Battant" and Sousa's "King Cotton"; the waltzes Strauss's "Roses from the South" and Waldteufel's "Espana," and the overtures Suppe's "Light Cavalry" and Auber's "Masaniello." Mr. A. Birnbaum, the violinist, is to play the solo in Gounod's "Hymn to St. Cecilia," and Grieg's "Pier Gynt" suite is also included in the evening's programme.

BOSTON HERALD-

MAY 21, 1904.

The third week of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall ends this evening. The programme will include Tschaikowsky's "1812" overture, the "Blue Danube" waltz, Meyerbeer's "Coronation March," Handel's "Largo" (violin solo by M. Birnbaum), selections from Herbert's "Singing Girl" and Luders' "King Dodo," and a lot of other equally attractive compositions. These concerts will be continued from 8 till 11 each week day evening until further notice.

SUNDAY JOURNAL

MAY 22, 1904.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The "Pop" concerts of the present week at Symphony Hall will conclude the first half of the present season of these events and it is gratifying to know that the efforts of the management have been fully appreciated by the amusement-seeking public. No better evidence of a widespread recognition of the "Pops" as an established Boston institution is needed than the fact that the entertainment committee of the 27th annual convention of the National Electric Light Association, to be held in this city this week, has taken the entire floor section of reserved tables for the concert of next Wednesday evening. The regular patrons of the "Pops" will find ample accommodation at the outside tables and in the balcony. For the concert of tomorrow evening Mr. Adamowski has chosen as his program the marches "Zaragoza," Ortega, and "Teufel," Suppe; the waltzes "Vienna Beauties," Ziehrer, and "Roses from the South," Strauss; the overture "Phedre," Massenet, and "Galatea," Suppe; selections from "The Serenade," Herbert, "La Perichole," Offenbach, and "The Yankee Consul," the "Peer Gynt" suite, a polonaise by Liszt, and Gillet's "Lettre de Manan."

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, MAY 22, 1904.

ANOTHER WEEK OF "POPS."

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall are to be continued throughout this week; the first half of the annual season of these events will be concluded next Saturday. The reputation of Boston as a convention city is well known and the entertainment committee of the 27th annual convention of the National electric light association to be held here this week have selected the "Pop" concerts as one of the principal institutions of the city to make the visiting delegates acquainted with it. The entire reserved space on the floor has been taken by this committee next Wednesday evening, and the delegates to the convention and their ladies will be the guests of the Boston committee.

Tomorrow evening's program will have as its principal features the marches "Zaaragoza," Ortega, and "Teufel," Suppe; the overtures, "Phedre," Massenet, and "Galatea," Suppe; the waltzes, "Vienna Beauties," Ziehrer, and "Roses from the South," Strauss; selections from "The Serenade," Herbert; "La Perichole," Offenbach, and "The Yankee Consul," Robyn; the suite "Peer Gynt," a polonaise by Liszt and Gillet's "Lettre de Manon."

——One can imagine no more delightful way of passing an evening than at the Pop concerts, where one, if not a stranger to the city, is sure to meet congenial friends and at the same time enjoy the splendid music, which is of so great variety as to please all tastes. Mrs Adamowski entertained at her table early in the week Mr and Mrs Guy Lowell of Brookline with other friends, Mrs Lowell wearing a handsome costume of cream lace over pale blue, with blue chiffon sleeves, and a black hat with plumes. On Wednesday evening Mr and Mrs James Lowell Putnam, Miss Annie Lyman and Mr Clayton Johns were guests of Mrs Adamowski. Mrs Putnam wore a very beautiful gown of black spangled lace with white lace yoke and sleeves to the bodice spangled with brilliants and a collar of diamonds. Her wrap was of white silk and white lace, with applications of black lace, and she also wore a black hat with plumes. Miss Lyman was in cream chiffon and lace and white hat trimmed with blue and white shaded ostrich plumes. Mrs Adamowski was in black chiffon and a black toque with plumes and wore a necklace of pearls. Attention was quite generally directed to this table at one time, as a berceuse by Mr Johns was played and made such a hit it was repeated. Others there the same evening were Mr and Mrs Boylston Beal, Mrs Beal wearing brown crepe de chine, with chiffon at the front of bodice, and sleeves of the same. The hat was white straw, trimmed with cherries and daisies. Dr and Mrs Mead, the latter in black taffeta ruffled and toque of violets; Mr and Mrs Richard C. Dixey and Miss Tappan had two young ladies with them, both in gray foulards, accordion plaited and trimmed with white lace, one with burnt straw hat trimmed with black velvet, the other white chiffon with cream roses. Mrs Dixey was in palest gray voile, with jeweled lace at the bodice and turquoise necklace and black hat with white plumes; Miss Tappan in gray nun's veiling, accordion plaited, and white straw hat with black velvet and heliotrope flowers; Mr Nathan Haskell Dole, Dr William Sturgis Bigelow, Miss Sharpsteen, in black voile with black taffeta silk cloak and deep irish lace collar, with pink straw hat, done in pink and black; Miss Marion Blake, in black voile and wrap of white silk and renaissance lace and white hat with black plumes; Mr Beebe and his sister, Miss Beebe, had two young girls with them, one in canton silk with cream lace yoke and sleeves and black hat, the other in pale blue voile and gray hat covered with pansies and foliage; Miss Beebe was in black jetted lace and white toque and trimmed with black velvet and ostrich tips.

SUNDAY HERALD

MAY 22, 1904.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The "Pop" concerts of the present week at Symphony Hall will end the first half of the present season. The entertainment committee of the 27th annual convention of the National Electric Light Association, to be held in this city this week, has taken the entire floor section of reserved tables for the concert of next Wednesday evening and purposes to give the visiting delegates a memorable opportunity to say of this occasion: "All of which I saw, and a part of which I was." The regular patrons of the "Pops" will find ample accommodation at the outside tables and in the balcony and a brilliant assemblage may be expected, as the delegates to the convention will bring along their wives and daughters to share the social festivities of the meeting here. For the concert of tomorrow evening Mr. Adamowski has chosen the marches "Zaragoza," Ortega, and "Teufel," Suppe; the waltzes "Vienna Beauties," Ziehrer, and "Roses from the South," Strauss; the overtures "Phedre," Massenet, and "Galatea," Suppe; selections from "The Serenade," Herbert; "La Perichole," Offenbach, and "The Yankee Consul"; the "Peer Gynt" suite, a polonaise by Liszt and Gillet's "Lettre de Manon." These concerts are given from 8 till 11 each week day evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Guy Lowell, the latter Miss Sargent's older sister, were at Mrs. Adamowski's table at the Pops Monday night, and on Tuesday Mr. and Mrs. James Lowell Putnam were with her. Mr. William P. Blake was one of her guests Wednesday evening.

SUNDAY POST,

MAY 22, 1904

ANOTHER WEEK OF "POPS"

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall are to be continued throughout this week and the first half of the annual season of these events will be concluded next Saturday. The reputation of Boston as a convention city is well known, and it is a gratifying fact that the entertainment committee of the 27th annual convention of the National Electric Light Association to be held here this week have selected the "Pop" concerts as one of the principal institutions of the city to make the visiting delegates acquainted with.

The entire reserved space on the floor has been taken by this committee next Wednesday evening, and the delegates to the convention and their ladies will be the guests of the Boston committee.

The "Pops" are to be continued each week-day evening from 8 till 11 o'clock, and tomorrow evening's programme will have as its principal features the marches "Zaragoza," "Ortega, and "Teufel," Suppe; the overtures "Phedre," Massenet, and "Galatea," Suppe; the waltzes "Vienna Beauties," Ziehrer, and "Roses from the South," Strauss; selections from "The Serenade," Herbert; "La Perichole," Offenbach, and the "Yankee Consul," Robyn; the suite "Peer Gynt," a polonaise by Liszt and Gillet's "Lettre de Manon."

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERIC

-SUNDAY, MAY 22, 1904.

THE "POPS"—There are many Boston people who regard the passing of an evening at Symphony Hall, listening to the music of the admirable orchestra, under the direction of Conductor Adamowski, as a very pleasant way of doing so, and this accounts for the success of the "Pop" concerts. For the coming week some very attractive programmes are being arranged, and the plan of pleasing the greatest possible variety of tastes will be continued.

* * *

BOSTON POST.

MAY 24, 1904

THE "POP" CONCERTS

The fourth week of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall was most successfully begun last evening, the audience in attendance showing an intense interest in the many attractive features of these enjoyable events. The "Pops" will gain decided prominence in the city's amusements from this time to the end of the season from the special nights arranged for home and visiting organizations, the first of these being that planned for tomorrow evening, when the delegates to the convention of the National Electric Light Association will be the guests of the local members.

For tonight some of the selections to be played by the orchestra of 50 under Mr. T. Adamowski are the marches "Vienna Always Vienna," Schrammel, and "Serenade," Herbert; the waltzes "Barcarole," Waldteufel, and "Harlequin en Voyage," Zach; selections from "Babette," Herbert; "Faust," Gounod, and "King Dodo," Luders; the overtures "Si j'etais Roi," Adam; "Flying Dutchman," Wagner, and "Semiramide," Rossini; the "Intermezzo" from Offenbach's "Contes d'Hoffmann," and the "Czarina Mazourka," Genne.

TIGHT BINDING

BOSTON JOURNAL-

MAY 24, 1904.

SPECIAL NIGHTS AT THE 'POP' CONCERTS

New Feature Introduced Which Will Add to the Success of the Season.

The fourth week of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall was most successfully begun last evening, the audience showing an intense interest in the many attractive features of these enjoyable events.

The "Pops" will gain decided prominence in the city's amusements from this time to the end of the season from the special nights arranged for home and visiting organizations, the first of these being that planned for tomorrow evening when the delegates to the convention of the National Electric Light Association will be the guests of the local members. Ample accommodation for the general public will, however, be provided on this occasion.

For tonight some of the selections to be played by the orchestra of fifty under Mr. T. Adamowski, are the marches "Vienna Always Vienna," Schrammel; and "Serenade," Herbert; the waltzes "Barcarole," Waldteufel, and "Harlequin en Voyage," Zach; selections from "Babette," Herbert; "Faust," Gounod, and "King Dodo," Luders; the overtures "Si j'etais Roi," Adam; "Flying Dutchman," Wagner, and "Semiramide," Rossini; the "Intermezzo" from Offenbach's 'Contes d'Hoffmann, and the "Czarina Mazourka," Ganne. These concerts are given every weekday evening from 8 to 11 oclock.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, MAY 24, 1904.

The "Pop" Concerts.

The fourth week of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall was successfully begun last evening, the audience in attendance showing an intense interest in the many attractive features of these enjoyable events. The "Pops" will gain decided prominence in the city's amusements from this time to the end of the season from the special nights arranged for home and visiting organizations, the first of these being that planned for tomorrow evening, when the delegates to the convention of the National electric light association will be the guests of the local members.

For tonight some of the selections to be played by the orchestra under Mr T. Adamowski are the marches, "Vienna, Always Vienna," Schrammel, and "Serenade," Herbert; the waltzes "Barcarole," Waldteufel, and "Harlequin en Voyage," Zach; selections from "Babette," Herbert; "Faust," Gounod; "King Dodo," Luders; the overtures "Si j'etais Roi," Adam; "Flying Dutchman," Wagner; "Semiramide," Rossini; the "Intermezzo" from Offenbach's "Contes d'Hoffman" and the "Czarina Mazourka," Ganne.

BOSTON HERALD

MAY 24, 1904.

The fourth week of the "Pops" at Symphony Hall began last evening with a [illegible] concert of an attractive pa[illegible] Matis have been arranged for [illegible] and visiting organizations. The [illegible] of these is tomorrow, when the [illegible] to the convention of the Na[illegible] Electric Light Association will [illegible] the guests of the local members. [illegible] accommodation for the general [illegible] will, however, be provided on [illegible] occasion. For tonight some of the [illegible] selections will be the marches "Vienna, [illegible]ways Vienna," Schrammel, and "Ser[illegible]ade," Herbert; the waltzes "Bar[illegible]arole," Waldteufel, and "Harlequin en [illegible]oyage," Zach; selections from "Bab[illegible]ette," Herbert; "Faust," Gounod, and [illegible]King Dodo," Luders; the overtures [illegible]Si j'etais Roi," Adam; "Flying Dutch[illegible]man," Wagner, and "Semiramide," [illegible]Rossini; the "Intermezzo" from Offen[illegible]bach's "Contes d'Hoffmann," and the [illegible]Czarina Mazourka," Ganne. These con[illegible]certs are given every weekday evening [illegible]from 8 to 11 o'clock.

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN-

TUESDAY, MAY 24, 1904.

THE "POPS"—A very enjoyable program was rendered at last night's "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall and there will be a feast of variety all the week. The delegates to the National Electric Light Association convention, with ladies, will attend the concert to-morrow evening and the entire floor section of reserved tables has been set aside for them, but the regular patrons will find ample accommodation at the outside tables and in the balcony. It is expected to prove a brilliant occasion.

EVENING RECORD,

MAY 24, 1904.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The fourth week of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall was most successfully begun last evening, the audience in attendance showing an intense interest in the many attractive features of these enjoyable events. The "Pops" will gain decided prominence in the city's amusements from this time to the end of the season from the special nights arranged for home and visiting organizations, the first of these being that planned for tomorrow evening when the delegates to the convention of the National Electric Light Assn. will be the guests of the local members.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, MAY 24, 1904

The fourth week of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall was most successfully begun last evening, the audience in attendance showing an intense interest in the many attractive features of these enjoyable events. The "Pops" will gain decided prominence in the city's amusements from this time to the end of the season from the special nights arranged for home and visiting organizations, the first of these being that planned for tomorrow evening, when the delegates to the convention of the National Electric Light Association will be the guests of the local members. Ample accommodation for the general public will, however, be provided. For tonight some of the selections to be played by the orchestra of fifty, under Mr. T. Adamowski, are the marches "Vienna, Always Vienna," Schrammel; and "Serenade," Herbert; the waltzes, "Barcarole," Waldteufel; and "Harlequin en Voyage," Zach; selections from "Babette," Herbert; "Faust," Gounod; and "King Dodo," Luders; the overtures "Si j'etais Roi," Adam; "Flying Dutchman," Wagner; and "Semiramide," Rossini; the "Intermezzo" from Offenbach's "Contes d'Hoffmann," and the "Czarina Mazourka," Ganne. These concerts are given every week day evening, from eight to eleven o'clock.

ADVERTISER,

MAY 26, 1904.

At the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall this evening the grand orchestra of 50 musicians under the direction of T. Adamowski will present a programme full of attractive features. Some notably interesting operatic music will be played and all of the selections are of a popular character. These concerts are given each week day evening from 8 to 11 and will be continued until further notice.

BOSTON JOURNAL-

MAY 26, 1904.

At the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall this evening the grand orchestra of fifty musicians, under the direction of Mr. T. Adamowski, will present a program full of attractive features. Some notably interesting operatic music will be played and all of the selections are of a popular character. These concerts are given each week day evening from 8 to 11, and will be continued until further notice.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, MAY 26, 1904.

BIG FAMILY PARTY.

Convention Delegates and Fair Women Made the Pop Concert Seem Like a Class Day Show.

The electricians and their wives and their evening clothes and their pretty girls went to the Pop concert last night. In order to make a family party of it, the conventionists simply bought up the whole hall, and then went visiting at each other's tables.

Never was a merrier pop. They foregathered in dress suits and light, gay gowns, like a class day; they ate everything on the especially prepared menu, and drank unlimited quantities of pink claret lemonade and strictly limited quantities of light beer. They listened to the quiet music, and they chatted merrily to help out the fortissimo passages.

Everywhere were the convention badges; everybody knew everybody else, and the spirit of fellowship was shown a thousand different ways.

Conductor Timothee Adamowski's program was of the usual length—12 numbers—but of lively selections. The heavy classical was barred away to some evening when people wanted instruction and soulfulness with their pretzels, and well-known favorites ruled the lists.

The stage was decorated with long festoons of green, roped with yellow incandescents in a canopy over the musicians, as at the Ancient and Honorable artilery company's banquet last fall; at the top hung a great electric badge, rimmed with the words, "National Electric Light Association," and bearing the mystic device of the order in the center.

BOSTON HERALD-

MAY 25, 1904.

All Reserved Section at the "Pop" Concert Engaged for Tonight.

At 7 o'clock this morning the operator at the Vendome reported that a man from Ohio didn't answer his bell.

"Better send the boy up," said the clerk. "These electricians are not used to gas, and he may have been experimenting."

The door was open and the occupant gone, so a general alarm was sounded. Fifteen minutes later a porter located the Ohio man on the roof, and when asked what he was doing he answered:

"I'm just up here to get the dimensions for installing an electric fan. If it keeps on getting hot the boys would like a good rotary at work on the roof.

"Fans are my line—my card—" But the porter had flitted.

The National Electric Light Association is surely having a warm time. The two hottest days of the year have been theirs.

"Just as we expected," said F. S. V. Sias of the entertainment committee. "Even Boston itself had to melt when the electric light folks began to illuminate into the city."

By the time the last edition of The Herald is on the street, there will be 1000 delegates registered with the secretary, being over 150 more than ever attended a convention of electric lighting folks in the country.

They come from everywhere. At 1:30 today a man with a grip strolled into the Vendome and registered as from Ossawatamie, Mo.

"I may be a leetle late, Mr. Clerk, but I'm glad I got here in time for the 'Pops.' I promised to take a couple home to the children."

The delegates are enjoying every minute of their stay, and in addition to their entertainment they are receiving many valuable hints and helps in their professional line. Many of the most prominent electrical experts in the country are on deck, getting a line on the new things which are constantly cropping up in the electrical field. The business is one which offers no inducement to men who are satisfied with what was going on last year. The men in the electrical industry are new men, the business is new, and it is growing so fast that predictions have long since ceased to come from those who see the rapidity with which the industry must grow.

That is the reason for calling conventions, and that is probably the reason why the present convening has brought together the largest and by far the most enthusiastic crowd yet gathered.

They look prosperous, too, not quite so self-satisfied or gaudy as a Republican national convention crowd maybe—the electrical people are here for business—but still every indication of a successful business man, a man of affairs, a hustler, is worn by each delegate who wears a button and lodges at the Vendome.

Today is a big day for the dynamo operators.

Not only will there be a regular convention session at 2 this afternoon, but there is a boat ride down the harbor and a visit to the L street station of the Edison company, where the magnificent new plant will be thoroughly inspected.

Then tonight is to be the banner night of the four nights, officially, at least, as the entire reserved section of Symphony Hall is to belong to the National Electric Light Association, and the "Pops" will be all theirs, except for the outside sections.

From the way they were scrambling for tickets today, there will probably be a hustle on the part of those delegates not yet ticketed to get seats in the public sections of the hall.

This morning's session was very well attended, the seats being all taken and many delegates standing.

The first paper was read by Mr. Edgar B. Green on "Economy in Minor Station Supplies." He outlined various methods tending to do away with waste at small power plants, and his careful research showed many new ideas which will probably be adopted by the superintendents who have neglected that part of the business.

Mr. E. A. Arnold read a lengthy paper, embracing "Notes on the Internal-Combustion Engine as Applied to Central Station Service." He used many explanatory diagrams, and the printed copy of his address was well illustrated by cuts.

Messrs. J. D. Andrew and W. F. Wells, both of New York, submitted a paper on economy test of a 5500-horsepower, three-cylinder, compound engine and generator.

The special engine which was discussed was the one located in the Waterside station of the New York Edison Company, Thirty-eighth and Thirty-ninth streets and East river, New York.

Mr. Edward Yanger of Pittsburg read a paper on "The Mechanical Stoker and the Human Operator," giving many valuable ideas on the question.

The report of the committee on award of Doherty gold medal was read by Chairman Dr. Schuyler S. Wheeler of Ampere, N. J. The report will be printed today and be ready for distribution tomorrow.

The report of the committee on investigation of steam turbines was submitted by Mr. W. C. L. Eglin of Philadelphia. The printed copy is beautifully and profusely illustrated, showing great care in preparation.

The last paper of the morning session was "Practical Notes on Steam Turbines," read by Mr. Francis Hodgkinson of Pittsburg.

Boston Globe
May 26-04.

A capital program is announced for the "Pop" concert at Symphony hall this evening, the selections made including a lot of bright operatic music and other numbers of a popular character. Mr Adamowski has been eminently successful in suiting the tastes of the "Pop" concert patrons this season.

BOSTON POST.

MAY 26, 1904

ELECTRICIANS AT THE "POPS"

Last evening the National Electric Light Association was entertained by the "Pops" at Symphony Hall.

Members and invited guests of the convention began to arrive early and occupied the section including the whole ground floor, reserved especially for them.

The decorations figured fittingly for the occasion.

A delightful musical programme was given, under the direction of Conductor T. Adamowski, assisted by C. A. Ellis and P. R. Course.

The ladies of the convention made a visit through the Boston shopping district in the morning.

At 2 p. m. the members of the convention had an interesting sail down the harbor, viewing the historical places, the old ship Constitution, Fort Independence, Castle Island, Fort Strong, Boston light, the historic town of Hull and Nantasket Beach. By 3:30 the boat returned to the station of the Edison company, which was also visited. From there special cars took the party back to the Hotel Vendome.

At the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall this evening the grand orchestra of 50 musicians, under the direction of Mr. T. Adamowski, will present a programme full of attractive features and some notably interesting operatic music will be played. These concerts are given each week day evening from 8 to 11, and will be continued until further notice.

BOSTON HERALD

MAY 26, 1904.

Yesterday was the second day of the National Electric Light Association's convention, and it was a very busy period of time from the moment the delegates ordered their cereal foods up to the minute they wound their non-magnetic timepieces at midnight. The stage manager of the entertainment committee may never have been in vaudeville, but he surely knows how to conduct a continuous performance and some of the time yesterday he had two shows going at once—all star acts, at that.

The principal event in the way of ex-convention entertainment was the evening at the "Pops." Special plans were laid, and the committee were the only ones to whom the waiters looked for the coin. Money in the hands of a man with a delegate's button pinned on his coat might just as well be counterfeit. He could have anything in the place, but the committee did the buying.

"The handsomest crowd that I ever saw in the hall," remarked one of the Symphony men to a Herald reporter.

And why not?

In the crowd of electric light people who listened to Mr. Adamowski and his big orchestra last evening, there were several men whose annual salaries range around $20,000, there were three times as many who receive for the use of their brains a yearly stipend of $5000, and the $1500 to $2000 man was everywhere.

"Every man a gentleman, and electrician and a sport, and not a pikerino in the list," was the way a man from Lake City, Col., put it.

"But say, son," he added, "this here band has got the Lake City drum corps filed away in the scrap album when it comes to music. I don't see how they do it, either, when there are so many fiddlers in the shift."

Symphony Hall Was a Scene of Beauty.

The stage was appropriately decorated with added brilliancy in color schemes that set things off to a nicety. Suspended from the top was the insignia of the association done in red, white and blue lights, with a green border. The outer circle was white, with the words "National Electric Light Association," and on the inside were the letters of the well known electrical formula which, when translated, means that the current is equal to the electrical force minus the resistance. At least that was what a man with a saffron badge said, and like all these electrical people, he seemed to know what he was talking about.

There are nothing but live ones in the electrical line. Dead ones are about as useful as dead wires when it comes to electric lighting.

At the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall, this evening, the orchestra of 50, under the direction of Mr. T. Adamowski, will present a programme full of attractive features. Some notably interesting operatic music will be played and all of the selections are of a popular character. These concerts are given each weekday evening from 8 to 11 and will be continued until further notice.

[70]

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, MAY 26, 1904

A capital programme is announced for the "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall this evening, the selections made including a lot of bright operatic music and other numbers of a popular character. Mr. Adamowski has been eminently successful in suiting the tastes of the "Pop" concert patrons this season. The concerts are given every week-day evening from 8 to 11.

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN-

THURSDAY, MAY 26, 1904.

THE "POPS."—The fourth week of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall is proving one of the most successful yet, and the audiences are showing an intense interest in the many attractive features of these enjoyable events. The "Pops" will gain decided prominence in the city's amusements from now on because of the many special nights arranged for home and visiting organizations.

EVENING RECORD,

MAY 28, 1904.

THE "POPS."

Mr. T. Adamowski has arranged a delightful programme for this evening's "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall. The operatic selections have been made from "Les Dragons de Villars," "Aida," "Pirates of Penzance," "Grand Duchess," and "Peggy from Paris." The marches "Rakoczy," Berlioz, and "Up the Street," are also down in the evening's selections.

BOSTON HERALD

MAY 28, 1904.

Mr. T. Adamowski has arranged a popular programme for this evening's "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall. The operatic selections are from "Les Dragons de Villars," "Aida," "Pirates of Penzance," "Grand Duchess" and "Peggy from Paris." The marches "Rakoczy," "Berlioz" and "Up the Street" will also be played. These concerts will be continued four weeks longer, from 8 to 11 o'clock each week day evening.

BOSTON POST,

MAY 28, 1904

This evening's "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall ends the first half of the present season of these pleasant events. The orchestra of 50 musicians under Mr. T. Adamowski will have the assistance of Mr. A. Birnbaum as violin soloist, and the programme has many attractive features. Among the operatic selections will be heard excerpts from "Les Dragons de Villars," "Aida," "Pirates of Penzance," "Grand Duchess' and "Peggy from Paris." The popular march, "Up the Street." will end the programme.

BOSTON JOURNAL-

MAY 28, 1904.

Mr. T. Adamowski has arranged a delightful program for this evening's "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall. The operatic selections have been made from "Les Dragons de Villars," "Aida," "Pirates of Penzance," "Grand Duchess," and "Peggy from Paris." The marches, "Rakoczy," Berlioz, and "Up the Street" are also down in the evening's selections. These concerts will be continued four weeks longer, from 8 to 11 o'clock each week day evening.

Boston Daily Globe.

SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1904.

This evening's "pop" concert at Symphony hall ends the first half of the present season of these pleasant events. The orchestra will have the assistance of Mr. A. Birnbaum as violin soloist. Among the operatic selections will be excerpts from "Les Dragons de Villars," "Aida," "Pirates of Penzance," "Grand Duchess" and "Peggy from Paris." The popular march, "Up the Street," will end the program.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1904

The first half of the season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall closed last evening. During the remaining weeks of the season many attractive features will be presented by Mr. Adamowski. For Monday evening the selections include the "Phedre" and "Orpheus aux Enfers" overtures, the ballet music from Delibes's "Coppelia," the suite "Le Belle au Bois Dormant (Tchaikovsky), the prelude to "Lohengrin," selections from "Carmen," "Cavalleria Rusticana," and "Babes in Toyland" and some bright waltzes and marches. These concerts are given from eight to eleven each week-day evening.

SUNDAY, MAY 29, 1904.

THE "POPS."—A fine series of programs is being arranged for the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall during the coming week. The attendance has been very encouraging so far, and there is every reason to believe the present season, which is to continue until further notice, will be one of the most successful in the history of this Boston institution. The "Pops" furnish a treat to lovers of fine music and one may enjoy it in comfort at Symphony Hall.

SUNDAY POST,

MAY 29, 1904

THE "POP" CONCERTS

The first half of the season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall ended with that of last evening and the patronage given these pleasing events thus far this year has been most gratifying to the management. During the remaining weeks of the season many attractive features will be presented and Mr. Adamowski will continue to plan programmes upon the lines of those which have already gained so much favor with "Pop" patrons.

For tomorrow evening the selections include the "Phedre" and "Orpheus aux Enfers" overtures, the ballet music from Delibe's "Coppelia," the suite "La Belle au Bois Dormant," Tschaikowsky, the prelude to "Lohengrin," selections from "Carmen," "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Babes in Toyland" and some bright waltzes and marches.

SUNDAY HERALD

MAY 29, 1904

"POP" CONCERTS.

The patronage given the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall thus far has been gratifying to the management. During the remaining weeks of the season many attractive features will be presented and Mr. Adamowski will continue to plan programmes upon the lines of those which have already gained so much favor with "Pop" patrons. For tomorrow evening the selections include the "Phedre" and "Orpheus aux Enfers" overtures, the ballet music from Delibas' "Coppelia," the suite "La Pelle au Bois Dormant," Tschaikowsky, the prelude to "Lohengrin," selections from "Carmen," "Cavallieria Rusticana," and "Babes in Toyland" and some bright waltzes and marches. These concerts are given from 8 to 11 each week day evening.

Every table was taken for the Pop concert Thursday night, and no small part of its charm was the coolness of the hall. It was most delightfully comfortable, which made it all the more delightful to enjoy one of the best programmes Mr. Adamowski has yet arranged. Mr. and Mrs. James Lowell Putnam were with a party, including Miss Hetty Sargent and Mr. A. L. Cochrane. Mrs. Putnam wore a lovely gown of black jetted net. The unlined collarless yoke, which was of white spangled lace, extended over the arms in a point to the elbow, where the several black jetted frills were met by long unlined cuffs of the white lace. She wore a broad jet dog collar and a large black plumed hat. Miss Sargent was in pale blue Liberty, with much fagotting, and a black picture hat. At an adjoining table were, among others, Mrs. John C. Gray and Miss Eleanor Gray, the latter very pretty in black jetted net. with unlined yoke and sleeves and a corsage bouquet of pink sweet peas. Her large black hat was done with one sweeping black plume. Mrs. Gray wore mode veiling, with numerous tucks, the short coat opening over a white silk and lace blouse. Her black lace draped hat had touches of pink and blue. Mrs. D. Webster King, who was in the balcony with her daughter, Miss Anne King, wore fine black and white shepherd's plaid silk, with black applique and a black toque with white roses. Miss King was in blue and white polka dotted silk, and her small blue hat was done with green breasts. Mrs. Adamowski, who was in black lace, had a party including Mr. Parkman Haven. Mr. and Mrs. George Chadwick were also there with friends.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall has supplied an ideal entertainment for the recent hot nights, and the audiences that have attended have shown a full appreciation of the excellent programs presented and the good work of the orchestra under Mr. Adamowski's direction. The present season is to continue four weeks longer and many notable attractions are being planned for the remaining concerts. A capital program has been planned for tomorrow evening, with the "Phedre" and "Orpheus aux Enfers" overtures, selections from "Carmen," "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Babes in Toyland," the "Lohengrin" prelude, the "Coppelia" ballet music and a lot of other pleasing numbers among its selections. These concerts are given from 8 till 11 each week day evening.

Herald May 29 '04

MRS. JOHN T. LINZEE and Mrs. Boylston Beal were prominent at a table at the Pop concert Tuesday night. Mrs. Linzee was looking girlish and very pretty in a thin black gown with transparent yoke, a large black chiffon hat with white roses and pearls. Mrs. Beal was in golden brown silk, the short coat opening over a white lace bodice, and a white lace hat with pink roses. Dr. and Mrs. George B. Shattuck were with a party, Mrs. Shattuck in black and white with a small jetted toque. Mr. A. H. Higginson had a table full, and so did the Hon. J. B. Holden. Two of the latter's daughters were of his party, one in rose pink, and the other in violet, and both with large white lace and flower hats. Mrs. Adamowski, who brought guests as usual, was looking her best in her diaphanous black gown, a black hat loaded with plumes, and some fine pearls. Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Converse were also there, Mrs. Converse wearing gray voile and a red hat with shaded red plumes. One of the prettiest of the young girls there was Miss Pauline Burke of Brookline, the daughter of Judge John H. Burke. She was with friends in the balcony, and was charming in old rose silk with touches of black and a large chiffon hat with plumes and roses.

SUNDAY GLOBE-

MAY 29, 1904.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall has supplied an ideal entertainment for the recent hot nights and the audiences that have attended have shown a full appreciation of the excellent programs presented under Mr Adamowski's direction. The present season is to continue four weeks longer.

A capital program has been planned for tomorrow evening with the "Phedre" and "Orpheus aux Enfers" overtures, selections from "Carmen," "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Babes in Toyland," the "Lohengrin" prelude, the "Coppelia" ballet music and a lot of other pleasing numbers among the selections.

—The present season of Pop concerts seems to be a greater success than previous ones, both from a social and musical standpoint, and the audiences which gather round the tables on the floor every evening as well as in the balconies seem to enjoy every note of the music and are enthusiastic to a degree. Rarely has any one selection so touched the sympathies of an audience as did a dainty little intermezzo by Offenback, played Tuesday evening and twice repeated, with absolute quiet in the house. An overture, "Euphrosyne," by Mr Frederic S. Converse, who sat at Mrs Adamowski's table, was also a favorite. Mrs Adamowski had several at her table that evening, Mrs Converse, who wore a pale gray costume with white chiffon at the front of the corsage, and a red chiffon hat with shaded red plumes; Mr and Mrs Joseph Adamowski, the latter in a pretty evening gown and hat done in black velvet and violet; Miss Annie Lyman, in white chiffon and lace, and valenciennes lace hat with pale blue satin bows; Mr and Mrs Arthur Richmond, the latter in cream liberty silk, the bodice done in embroidery and lace and cream straw hat with impyan wings; Mrs Adamowski was in black veiling, with transparent yoke and black toque with ostrich plumes. Others there were Miss Schlesinger, in dove gray voile, with touches of blue and cream lace at the bodice, and a white hat with a black and white plume; Mr Boynton brought a party of ladies and gentlemen who were visiting here from New York; Mr and Mrs Boylston Beal had some young people with them, Mrs Beal in brown, the bodice opening over white, and a white straw and lace hat, with pink roses and foliage; Mr Alexander A. Higginson had friends at his table. Dr and Mrs Shattuck were in the balcony, Mrs Shattuck in black voile with yoke of lace over white and jetted toque; Dr and Mrs William Copley Winslow, Mrs Winslow in blue and white foulard, with duchesse lace fichu, and black toque with white flowers; Mr and Mrs Charles Porter, the latter in black silk skirt and white silk bodice, with hat of pale blue chiffon. There was great enthusiasm Wednesday evening, when the visiting electricians occupied all the tables on the floor. The decorations for that evening on the stage were much admired, and nothing so brilliant and tasteful has been seen here before. Ropes of laurel, with hundreds of small lights caught to them every few inches were suspended from a circle, also in colored lights at the highest point above the stage and hanging in graceful lines were caught to the sides and back of the stage. The effect was charming and the large audience present Thursday evening also had the pleasure of seeing the decorations.

Globe May 29 '04

—Among the many who attended the Pop concert Thursday evening were Mr Adamowski, who entertained several friends, and Mr and Mrs George W. Chadwick, who also had friends with them. A pleasant party was composed of Mrs John Chipman Gray, Miss Eleanor Gray, Mr and Mrs James Lowell Putnam, Miss Henrietta Sargent, Mr Berkeley Updike and others. Mrs Gray was looking very youthful in a costume of gray checked cloth, with white liberty silk bodice and black hat draped at the back with black chantilly and a touch of blue ribbons and pink roses at the front; Miss Gray in black net pallette with jet, with transparent yoke and sleeves to the bodice and black hat with plumes; Miss Sargent in light blue veiling and black hat; Mrs Putnam in black jetted lace, the neck and sleeves of white lace and black-plumed hat; Miss Cecilia Walker, Miss Adelaide Smith, Mrs Copley Winslow, who brought some young ladies, was in a violet bodice and black skirt and toque of black with cream lace and jet.

SUNDAY JOURNAL

MAY 29, 1904.

The two most popular forms of amusement and entertainment during the past week have been parties for the Pops and the circus. The latter has had its run and gone on its way rejoicing. The former are as largely attended and as enthusiastic as they were at the very first of the season. The programs have been of unusual merit and the same familiar faces are seen frequently about the tables, proving the devotion and appreciation of Boston to the efforts of its Symphony Orchestra.

[71]

BOSTON POST.

MAY 31, 1904

THE "POP" CONCERTS

At the "Pops" this evening in Symphony Hall there will be a programme presented well calculated to add to the pleasure of patrons. Mr. Adamowski has been singularly happy in hitting the tastes of his audiences this year, and the splendid orchestra he directs gives an ideal interpretation of the selections presented. The "Pops" are at the height of their season, and the plans for the four weeks remaining of the present series of concerts make it certain that they will continue to be prominent in the city's amusements while they last.

Tonight's programme gives prominence to the compositions of local musicians as it includes Chadwick's "Tabasco" march, Zach's "Harlequin en Voyage" waltz, and Strube's "Cruiser Harvard" march, as well as a lot of operatic music by the best of the world's composers.

DAILY ADVERTISER,

MAY 31, 1904.

THE POP CONCERTS.

The season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall continues in the full tide of popular favor, and the management of these pleasant events is sparing no effort to make the concerts of the present season worthy the liberal patronage bestowed upon them. Mr. Adamowski is to be congratulated upon the excellent taste he has shown in his selections this year and the men of the orchestra are to be heartily commended for the excellent fashion in which the several programmes have been presented. The "Pops" of the season continue 4 weeks longer.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, MAY 31, 1904.

The "Pop" Concerts.

At the "Pops" this evening in Symphony hall there will be a program presented well calculated to add to the pleasure of patrons. Mr Adamowski has been singularly happy in hitting the tastes of his audiences this year and the splendid orchestra he directs gives an ideal interpretation of the selections presented. The "Pops" are at the height of their season and the plans for the four weeks remaining of the present series of concerts make it certain that they will continue to be prominent in the city's amusements while they last.

Tonight's program gives prominence to the compositions of local musicians, as it includes Chadwick's "Tabasco" march, Zach's "Harlequin en Voyage" waltz, and Strube's "Cruiser Harvard" march, as well as a lot of operatic music by the best of the world's composers.

BOSTON HERALD.

MAY 31, 1904.

THE "POPS."

The season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall continues in popular favor and the management is sparing no effort to make the concerts of the present season worthy the liberal patronage bestowed upon them. Mr. Adamowski may be congratulated upon his programme. The "Pops" will continue four weeks longer, each weekday evening from 8 to 11 o'clock. Boston composers will contribute liberally to the programme this evening, as its selections include Chadwick's "Tabasco" march, Zach's "Harlequin en Voyage" waltz and Strube's "Cruiser Harvard" march. Brilliant operatic music will also be played.

EVENING RECORD,

MAY 31, 1904.

THE POP CONCERTS.

The season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall continues in the full tide of popular favor, and the management of these pleasant events is sparing no effort to make the concerts of the present season worthy the liberal patronage bestowed upon them. Mr. Adamowski is to be congratulated upon the excellent taste he has shown in his selections this year and the men of the orchestra are to be heartily commended for the excellent fashion in which the several programmes have been presented. The "Pops"' of the season continue 4 weeks longer.

BOSTON HERALD.

JUNE 4, 1904.

A Saturday night at the "Pop" concerts, Symphony Hall, has come to be recognized as an event not to be missed by those who keep in touch with the amusement opportunities of the season. This evening Mr. Adamowski will direct the orchestra of 50 musicians in a programme in which Rossini, Strauss, Offenbach, Verdi and Gounod will be represented. The "Pop" concerts last three weeks only.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, MAY 31, 1904

The season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall continues in the full tide of popular favor and the management of these pleasant events is sparing no effort to make the concerts of the present season worthy the liberal patronage bestowed upon them. Mr. Adamowski is to be congratulated upon the good taste he has shown in his selections, and the men of the orchestra are to be commended for the excellent fashion in which the several programmes have been presented. The "Pops" continue four weeks longer, each week-day evening from eight to eleven o'clock. Boston composers will contribute liberally to the programme this evening, as its selections include Chadwick's "Tabasco" march, Zach's "Harlequin en Voyage" waltz, and Strube's "Cruiser Harvard" march. A lot of brilliant operatic music will also be played.

BOSTON POST.

JUNE 2, 1904

The cosmopolitan character of the audiences at the "Pops" in Symphony Hall this season has come to be noted by all who attend these pleasant events, and the air of jollity which prevails among the patrons shows that the social side of the "Pops" is fully appreciated. The concerts of the present week have called out large audiences, and Mr. Adamowski's programmes are universally commended. A brilliant list of overtures, marches, waltzes and operatic music will be played this evening.

BOSTON JOURNAL.

JUNE 2, 1904.

The "Pops" at Symphony Hall afford opportunities for musical and social enjoyment that have appealed most successfully to the public this week, and the great audiences present have been delighted with the excellent programs planned for the orchestra and directed by Mr. Adamowski. Boston social life is seen at its best at the "Pops," and visitors to the city continue to look upon these events as one of its local institutions, and an acquantance with them as necessary to a complete knowledge of Boston. Tonight's program has many attractive features, and includes an admirable variety of overtures, marches, waltzes and other choice music.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1904.

The cosmopolitan character of the audiences at the "Pops" in Symphony hall this season has come to be noted by all who attend these pleasant events. The concerts of the present week have called out large audiences, and Mr Adamowski's programs are universally commended.

BOSTON HERALD

JUNE 2, 1904.

The "Pops" at Symphony Hall afford opportunities for musical and social enjoyment that have appealed successfully to the public this week, and the audiences present have been delighted with the programmes planned by Mr. Adamowski. Visitors to the city continue to look upon these events as one of Boston's institutions. The programme tonight has many attractive features and includes a variety of overtures, marches and waltzes.

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1904

The cosmopolitan character of the audiences at the "Pops" in Symphony Hall this season has come to be noted by all who attend them. The concerts of the present week have called out large audiences and Mr. Adamowski's programmes are universally commended. A brilliant list of overtures, marches, waltzes and operatic music will be played this evening. These concerts are given every week day evening from eight till eleven o'clock.

BOSTON POST.

JUNE 4, 1904

The usual brilliant audience seen at the "Pops" in Symphony Hall Saturday nights is assured for this evening, and the promenade between the acts will be well worth participating in. Mr. Adamowski has made a capital programme in which the operatic and dance music is arranged in contrasts that enhance the interest of these numbers. Mr. J. Keller, the cello player, takes the solo in the "William Tell" overture.

BOSTON JOURNAL.

JUNE 4, 1904.

A Saturday night at the "Pop" concerts in the Symphony Hall has come to be recognized as an event not to be missed by those who keep in touch with the amusement opportunities of the season. This evening Mr. Adamowski will direct the orchestra of fifty musicians in a particularly interesting program, in which Rossini, Strauss, Offenbach, Verdi, Gounod, and many of the more modern composers will be represented by bright selections. The "Pop" concerts last three weeks only.

Boston Daily Globe.

SATURDAY, JUNE 4, 1904.

The usual brilliant audience seen at the "Pops" in Symphony hall Saturday nights is assured for this evening. Mr Adamowski has made a capital program in which the operatic and dance music is arranged in contrasts that enhance the interest of these numbers. Mr J. Keller, the cello player, takes the solo in the "William Tell" overture.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 4, 1904

The continued favor which the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall enjoy proves their excellent character. The results of the season thus far have been most satisfactory and during the coming three weeks, which conclude the series, there will be some notable assemblies. The "Tech" boys, both young and old, and from all over the country, will be seen in force at the concert of next Tuesday evening, and Mr. Adamowski has arranged that the tunes dear to all sons of "M. I. T." shall have prominence in the evening's programme. Mr. Adamowski continues to hit the popular taste in making his programmes, and on Monday evening the bill includes the overtures to "Masaniello" (Auber) and "Banditenstreiche" (Suppe), selections from "Girofle-Girofla" (Lecocq), "Rigoletto" (Verdi) and "Babette" (Herbert), the "Country Dance" (Nevin), the waltzes "Eternelle Ivresse" (Ganne) and "Seid umschlungen, (Nevin), "Millionen" (Strauss), and a lot of other good music. These concerts are given each week day evening from eight to eleven o'clock.

EVENING RECORD,

JUNE 4, 1904.

THE POPS.

The usual brilliant audience seen at the "Pops" in Symphony Hall Saturday nights is assured for this evening and the promenade between the acts will be well worth participating in. Mr. Adamowski has made a capital programme in which the operatic and dance music is arranged in contrasts that enhance the interest of these numbers.

SUNDAY HERALD-

JUNE 5, 1904

Tuesday night, always a good one at the Pop concerts, was particularly so last week. Dr. and Mrs. Henry Lee Morse had a table, Mrs. Morse wearing dark blue veiling with a white silk and lace bodice and a toque of purple and white violets. Miss Estelle Kimball, who was with a party near by, wore pearl gray veiling and lace and a black toque wreathed with pink roses and faced with gray chiffon. Among the large number of people in the balcony that night were Miss Dorothy Jordan with her cousins, Miss Helen and Miss Marion Jordan, who were both in dark blue with touches of white and black plumed hats. Miss Jordan wore an exquisite gown of silver gray chiffon, elaborately shirred, with a white lace yoke and a white hat with pompadour coloring. Mrs. Corey chaperoned the party. This week Tuesday will be Tech night.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The continued favor which the "Pop" concerts of Symphony Hall enjoy proves beyond question the excellent character of the arrangements made for these events, and the enterprise of the management in meeting the wishes of those who attend. The results of the season thus far have been most satisfactory and during the coming three weeks, which conclude the present series, some notable assemblies will be seen. The Institute of Technology students and alumni will be present in force at the concert of next Tuesday evening, and for this occasion Mr. Adamowski has arranged so that the tunes dear to all sons of "Tech" shall have prominence in the programme. "Tech" men from all over the country have responded to the invitations for this evening. Mr. Adamowski continues to hit the popular taste of the "Pop" patrons in making his programme and that for tomorrow evening will have as some of its selections the overtures "Masaniello," Auber; and "Banditenstreiche," Suppe; selections from "Girofle-Girofla," Lecocq; "Rigoletto," Verdi; and "Babette," Herbert; the "Country Dance," Nevin; the waltzes "Eternelle Ivresse," Ganne, and "Seid Umschlungen, Millionen," Strauss; and a lot of other good music.

SUNDAY POST,

JUNE 5, 1904

THE "POP" CONCERTS

The continued favor which the "Pop" concerts of Symphony Hall enjoy prove beyond question the excellent character of the arrangements made for these events and the enterprise of the management in meeting the wishes of those who attend. The results of the season thus far have been most satisfactory and during the coming three weeks, which conclude the present series of concerts, some notable assemblies will be seen at the "Pops."

The "Tech" boys, both young and old, will be seen in force at the concert of next Tuesday evening, and for this occasion Mr. Adamowski has arranged so that the tunes dear to all sons of "M. I. T." shall have prominence in the evening's programme.

The programme for tomorrow evening will have as some of its selections the overtures, "Masaniello," Auber, and "Banditenstreiche," Suppe; selections from "Girofle-Girofla," Lecocq; "Rigoletto," Verdi, and "Babette," Herbert; the "Country Dance," Nevin; the waltzes "Eternelle Ivresse," Ganne, and "Seid Umschlungen, Millionen," Strauss; and a lot of other good music.

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN

SUNDAY, JUNE 5, 1904.

THE "POPS."—The "Pop" concerts of the coming week at Symphony Hall promise to be events well worthy the patronage of the public, and the high favor that these Summer night entertainments enjoy shows that the enterprise of the management in maintaining their high standard, both musically and socially, is fully appreciated. A brilliant programme is planned for to-morrow evening, and Tuesday is to be "Tech" night.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 5, 1904.

——Among the many who have attended the Pop concerts the past week were Mrs Adamowski, who has entertained several friends nearly every evening, including Miss Annie Lyman, Mr Parkman Haven and Mr William P. Blake. Mis sEstelle Kimball, wearing a becoming gown of gray veiling, accordion plaited, with white at the bodice, and black and white hat, had several friends with her one evening. Mr Thomas Seabury, Mr and Mrs Charles Porter, Mr Robert Edwards, Mrs Schuecker and Rev Dr and Mrs William Copley Winslow. Tuesday evening will bring together hundreds of Technology boys, who will have the tables on the floor, but the balconies will furnish ample room for their friends. The program has been arranged specially for the evening, opening with Strube's stirring national march. Mr Frederic Field Bullard's march will be played—he is a graduate, class of '87. After this march there will be Tech and College songs. A rousing good time for every one is anticipated.

THIS WEEK'S "POP" CONCERTS.

The "Pop" concerts of the coming week at Symphony hall promise to be events well worthy the patronage of the public, and the high favor which these summer night entertainments enjoy shows beyond question that the enterprise of the management in maintaining the high standard of the "Pops," both musically and socially, is fully appreciated. Among the notable gatherings planned for the closing weeks of the "Pops" that of Tuesday evening promises to take marked prominence, for on this occasion the sons of "Tech" from all over the country are to assemble in Boston. The program arranged by Mr Adamowski for this evening will afford ample opportunities for the sons of "M. I. T." to hear and participate in the tunes dear to "Tech" men and some vocal efforts worthy the standing of the institute may confidently be anticipated.

For tomorrow evening the program will include the overtures "Masaniello," Auber, and "Banditenstreiche," Suppe; selections from "Girofle-Girofla," Lecocq; "Rigoletto," Verdi, and "Babette," Herbert; "The Country Dance," Nevin; the waltzes "Eternelle Ivresse," Ganne, and "Seid Umschlungen, Millionen," Strauss.

BOSTON POST.

JUNE 7, 1904

"TECH" NIGHT AT THE "POPS"

The men to whom the initials "M. I. T." have a peculiar fascination will be found in force at the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall tonight, and the songs dear to the men of "Tech" will make a prominent feature in the evening's programme. These special nights at the "Pops" are always of intense interest to those identified with them and the "Tech" men expect to make their "Pop" of the present year pass all previous records.

Mr. Adamowski has arranged an admirable series of programmes for the present week and each evening will have notable special features. The "Pops" will continue three weeks longer.

[72]

BOSTON JOURNAL

JUNE 7, 1904.

'TECH' SONGS GALORE TONIGHT

Symphony Hall will be filled with an enthusiastic audience this evening upon the occasion of the annual "Tech" night. The men of "M. I. T." have responded with great cordiality to the invitations sent out by the class secretaries, and it is expected that there will be the largest representation of members and graduates of the Institute ever known at a "Pop" concert. "Tech" songs will be made a feature of the program.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1904.

"Tech" Night at the "Pops."

The men to whom the initials M. I. T. have a peculiar fascination will be found in force at the "Pop" concert in Symphony hall tonight and the songs dear to the men of "Tech" will make a prominent feature in the evening's program. These special nights at the "Pops" are always of intense interest to those identified with them, and the "Tech" men expect to make their "Pop" of the present year pass all previous records. Mr Adamowski has arranged an admirable series of programs for the present week and each evening will have notable special features. The "Pops" continue three weeks longer.

BOSTON HERALD

JUNE 7, 1904.

"TECH" NIGHT AT THE POPS.

Symphony Hall will be filled with an enthusiastic audience this evening, upon the occasion of the annual "Tech" night. The men of "M. I. T." have responded with great cordiality to the invitations sent out by the class secretaries, and it is expected that there will be the largest representation of members and graduates of the institute ever known at a "Pop" concert. "Tech" songs will be made a feature of the programme, and Mr. Adamowski has arranged his selections with a view to commanding the interest of those present. The series of programmes planned for the rest of the week promises a lot of enjoyment for the patrons of the "Pops." These concerts are to be continued three weeks longer, and are given each week day evening from 8 to 11 o'clock.

DAILY ADVERTISER, WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 8, 1904.

TECH'S ALUMNI ALMOST SOLIDLY AGAINST UNION WITH HARVARD

Class Reunions Pledge Themselves Against Supporting Scheme, and Polite Contempt for Harvard Is Expressed at Pop Concert

ALUMNI SENTIMENT ON PROPOSED MERGER

CLASSES '68 TO '78—No formal action. Sentiment largely opposes union with Harvard.

CLASS OF '82—No official action, but does not favor the merger.

CLASSES OF '83, '84—Matter left to individual members to express themselves when occasion requires.

CLASSES '85, '86, '87—Voted down the proposition by an overwhelming majority, there being only 2 votes cast in favor.

CLASS OF '88—Practically unanimous on this resolution: "Resolved, that '88 reserves her opinion until some definite proposition be offered; voted that it be submitted to the corporation.

CLASS OF '92—Unanimously voted for absolute independence.

CLASSES OF '93 and '94—In favor of absolute independence of M. I. T.

CLASS OF '95—Cast 34 votes, 20 for absolute independence, 1 for merger, 13 not voting.

CLASS OF '96—Nearly unanimous in opposition to coalition with Harvard.

CLASS OF '97—Did not vote on any direct question. Members passed in slips of their opinions, most of which were in opposition.

CLASS OF '99—Signed a resolution for absolute independence.

CLASS OF 1900—Did not vote opinion, but the majority voiced the sentiments of the other classes.

CLASS OF '01—Voted 60 to 3 against merger.

CLASS OF '02—Took no direct action and was but lukewarm in opposition to joining with Harvard.

CLASS OF '03—Voted 25 to 14 against coalition.

"You can't make crimson of cardinal and gray.

"We don't give a —— for Harvard, as we go marching on."

These words, sung to the tune of John Brown's body, made up the rallying cry of the classes of '85, '86 and '87, M. I. T. as they marched from their class dinners at B. A. A. to Symphony hall last evening.

Members of other classes expressed sympathy with them as they marched up Huntington ave., and when standing on chairs at Symphony hall they roared forth the emphatic refrain no opposition was audible.

In somewhat unconventional language they apepared to have expressed the sentiment of 95 p.c. of the M. I. T. graduates, who last evening made Symphony hall a joyous rally place.

It was a great demonstration of the independents, who claim that M. I. T. has much to lose and little to gain by any combination.

Standing on chairs almost under the positions occupied by Pres. Pritchett and Mrs. F. A. Walker, the graduates who were boys nearly 2 decades ago, defiantly rebuffed the suggestion of combination.

But entirely apart from this it was a great night for M. I. T. Few there were at the "pop" concert who did not have a close interest in the institute. The floor was comfortably filled with graduates, who gathered about the tables, prepared to cheer everything from "Prexy" Pritchett to themselves and do it with enthusiasm and energy.

They cheered Pres. Pritchett, Mrs. Walker, the classes by number and finally gave their own class yells.

Because none but "Tech" graduates were desired on the floor there was a lively little disagreement between a young man and a policeman early in the evening. The young man came in a carriage with his mother. He had ordered a table by telephone and learned nothing about Tech night. When informed as to the situation he was very angry and sought to do injury to the stalwart policeman who was present and desired to have all arguments as short as might be. His mother, who was evidently deeply distressed, got him into the carriage as soon as possible and they were driven off.

Meanwhile the M. I. T. "boys" were diverting themselves with impromptu parades of their class standards, carrying F. F. Bullard of '87, who composed a stein song for the occasion, up and down the hall on their shoulders, and generally diverted both themselves and their friends in the galleries.

From the galleries came bushels of brilliantly colored paper, which was allowed to flutter to the floor by partisans of different classes. Those of '87 and '99 developed the greatest originality in this line.

The standards of '87, '90 and '93 were the most conspicuous. When the one belonging to '93 was handed up to a charming young woman in the balcony, who waved it vigorously, there was a racket which was equally complimentary to the banner and its temporary custodian.

There was much amusement at a sign in the '93 section which said: "A long-missing member restored to his fellows." Those who looked for the restored member shricked with laughter at the discovery that he was a small mechanical pig, who stepped as lively as if he had always travelled by "L" trains.

Incidentally the music of the incomparable Symphony orchestra went on and was sometimes so loudly cheered as to raise a doubt whether the cheers were accompanying the music or vice versa. Conductor Adamowski was thoroughly sympathetic and once or twice assisted the cheering throng by music which kept time with its demonstration.

There were a number of pieces complimentary to the "Tech" men on the programme.

At 10.30 the classes with their standards high in the air swung into the avenue and marched down to the Rogers building, which fairly flamed with red fire.

The throng which came with them all regardless of the drizzling rain applauded while the graduates cheered everything connected with the institute which met with their approval.

The names of the presidents of the institute flamed forth in big electric letters when they were mentioned by Giles Taintor '87, who led the cheering. Meanwhile a short distance away glowed the figures of '85.

THE CLASS REUNIONS.

Members of several classes of M. I. T. met at hotels about Copley sq. last night before going to the "Pop" concert, and talk ran largely upon the proposed coalition with Harvard. Sentiment ran strongly in opposition to any such alliance. Old men and young men talked forcibly upon the subject, uniting maturer judgment with the schoolboy fervor of the younger heads.

A. D. Little, of the class of '85, made a stirring speech in behalf of amalgamation with Harvard, but was promptly voted down with only 2 votes in his favor, by the united classes of '85, '86 and '87.

Several similar speeches were either voted down or hissed down.

W. B. Snow, class of '82, chairman of the now famous committee that secured the signatures of the postal card petition in opposition, was warmly greeted and cheered everywhere he moved. He was heard to say, "The best interests of the institute, educational and otherwise, demand that it keep its own individuality, which it would lose in a merger with Harvard."

At the reunion of the classes of '85, '86 and '87 at the B. A. A., the subject which is uppermost in the minds of all Tech alumni received considerable informal discussion. These classes turned out 95 strong. The general sentiment of the assemblage was against the merger, but a strong address in favor under certain condition was made by A. D. Little, '85, and received close attention. Among those who spoke against the proposition were Spaulding, '86; Clifford, '86, and Stengis, '87.

No formal action on the matter was taken, however, and the alumni, after the dinner, evinced a decided reluctance to discuss the matter.

Everett Morss, '85, presided at the dinner, and Prof. Burrison was the guest of honor.

M. I. T. class dinners at the Copley Sq. Hotel last night were those of '92, '97 and '99, and at the Hotel Berkeley, '95, '96 and '03. The sentiment against the merger with Harvard University was pronounced and approximated 90 per cent of the meetings. Several speakers said, in effect, that the M. I. T. was the only institution of its class in the country, that it had built itself up unaided by any outside school, and that there was no reason why its individuality should be sunk for the honor of another institution.

CONTINUED ON PAGE SEVEN.

"TECH NIGHT AT THE POPS"—THE INSPIRING SCENE ON THE FLOOR OF SYMPHONY HALL LAST EVENING

TECH BOYS TAKE LID OFF AT POPS

Symphony Hall Jammed with Yelling Crowd, Which Cheers Cardinal and Gray and Shouts "To —— with Harvard."

"You can't make crimson out of cardinal and gray,
You can't make crimson out of cardinal and gray,
And we don't give a —— for Harvard,
As we go marching on."

Tumultuously singing this parody, written by Gellett Burgess, '87, and yelling also against the Crimson the classic lines which Harvard generally applies exclusively to Yale, members of every class ever graduated by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology informally placed on record last night at the Pops concert in Symphony Hall their sentiments regarding a merger with the university across the Charles.

The floor of the hall was packed with the classes from '68 to '04, massed around tables of liquid refreshments, and the galleries were crammed with fair ladies and friends of the rioters. To close the second day of the reunion, the Tech grads took the lid off their enthusiasm last night, and even Harvard, which seemed to get the worst of the sentiment, never made such a hullabaloo as did these stern men of science who are initiating a little college [illegible] traditions of their [illegible] famed for matters of fact. With one bound, the Tech men proved themselves past masters in matters of enthusiasm.

The entire hall was hung with the gray and cardinal banners of the institute, while from the rear gallery hung a huge cardinal banner, bearing the full name of the college. Over the stage blazed a parti-colored electric sign, "Tech."

The appearance of Mr. T. Adamowski, who conducted the Symphony orchestra during the greater part of the musical programme, was the signal for a great outburst of enthusiasm. No sooner had the last notes of the first number ceased than all classes sprang to their feet in their rivalry to be first and noisiest, producing a pandemonium that for a long time threatened to be the sole entertainment of the evening.

The appearance of President Pritchett on the floor was the second cause which set all of the classes into violent jubilation, and so tumultuous became the spread of good fellowship that the president discreetly took his station in the gallery. For nearly five minutes the assembled classes yelled "Prexy—Prexy—Prexy."

The enthusiastic graduates cheered various benefactors of the college, including Mrs. W. A. Rogers and Mrs. Francis A. Walker, wives of former presidents. Mrs. Walker was present in the gallery

"A long missing member of '93 is restored to his fellows," read a banner hoisted by the loyalists around the '93 camp, and nearly 600 men crowded into the centre aisle to learn the identity of the lucky member. This proved to be a tiny mechanical pig, so cleverly constructed that it walked up and down the aisle with a perfect simulation of the real live candidate for the sausage mill. The little mascot was painted gray, and its spare-ribs bore the red numerals of '93.

Mr. F. F. Bullard, '87, conducted the orchestra while it played his famous "Stein Song," which every one joined in singing. No sooner had he laid down the baton than he was seized by eager arms and borne upon the shoulders of a jubilant throng up and down the entire length of the hall. The programme

1. National March.....Strube
2. Song, "The Sword of Ferrara"..... F. F. Bullard, '87
3. Waltz, "Roses of the South".....Strauss
4. Selection, "Babes in Toyland"....Herbert
5. March, "We're All Frank and Twenty!" F. F. Bullard, '87
6. Tech songs.
   a—"Retrospection", air, Auld Lang Syne.
   b—"On Rogers Steps"..T. W. Esterbrook, '05
   c—"The Best School of All" (Henry Newboldt).....Janet E. Walker
7. Medley, college songs.....Theodore Moses
8. Tech songs.
   a—"Take Me Back to Tech!" (I. W. Litchfield, '85) air, Solomon Levi.
   b—"Prexy for Aye!" air, America.
   c—"The Janitors' Union" (G. F. Loughlin, '03).....E. B. Edwards, '98
   d—"A Stein Song" (Richard Hovey)..... F. F. Bullard, '87
9. Prelude to Act III., "Lohengrin"...Wagner
10. Selection, "Grande Duchesse".....Offenbach
11. Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
12. March, "Hoch Habsburg".....Kral

After the concert the graduates marched to the Rogers building, which was outlined in the night by a border of red fire around its cornices. Here the classes gave cheer after cheer for various sentiments dear to all of them. How great was the enthusiasm may be judged by the fact that the presence of fire engines working only a block away was known to none of the celebrants. Over the steps of the building hung electric signs of the names of the various presidents of Tech. The cheering was led by Giles Taintor, '87, and the cheers were as follows:

The man who founded the Institute of Technology—President Rogers.
The man who held the fort in time of trouble—President Runkle.
The man who built up the institute—President Walker.
The man who took the helm in time of doubt—President Crafts.
The man who has extended the influence of Technology—President Pritchett.
The man who pledged his personal credit that the institute might live—Cummings.
The man to whom we owe much—Munroe.
The secretary—Tyler.
The dean—Benton.
The corporation.
The faculty.
The association of class secretaries.
The Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

[74]

BOSTON JOURNAL—WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, 1904.

Tech Alumni United On Keeping Out Of Harvard

Paper Passed Around at the Pops Results in Emphatic Expression of Opinion---Pres. Pritchett Remains Silent.

Every Technology graduate now in Boston was yesterday asked to declare his position on the question of the school being united with Harvard and last night it was apparent that the great majority had declared against the movement, John Wolworth, '78, one of the leaders of the antis, declaring that of 1200 answers received, not over 5 per cent. favored union.

In addition to this, the classes of '94, '96 and '97 adopted resolutions declaring against union, while alumni of '85 and '87 scored a hit singing a song entitled "You Can't Make Crimson Out of Cardinal and Gray," to the tune of "John Brown's Body."

The great meeting place for Tech men last night was the Pops, where a circular asking an expression of opinion was circulated.

Most of those who signed expressed their disapproval of the plan.

A peculiar feature of the union talk is the fact that while leaders of the antis are plentiful, the pros, aside from President Pritchett, have few champions.

James G. Woolworth of Providence, R. I., one of the leaders of the antis, said last night:

"I am of the number who signed 'no' to the petition which was circulated among the alumni, and I know that out of over 1200 signed replies, not more than 5 per cent. said 'yes.' The question has been discussed among the old men pretty seriously during the last three weeks and the sentiment is just as strongly in opposition as it was when the first inquiring statement was put out.

"You know there was a second paper sent around when the overwhelming majority of negative answers poured in, and this paper stated that there had been a misunderstanding. Nevertheless, the feeling is that no arrangement can be reached, whereby M. I. T. will not in the end forfeit its prestige among the schools of the country, which it has built up in years. It appears that whatever terms are agreed on the ultimate result will be Tech becoming a sub-head to Havard and the president of Harvard the real head of the double institution."

An influential member of the alumni, '84, who did not wish his name used, said:

"Offhand I say no. It's a matter that cannot be fixed without deliberation. You ask me what my reasons are for standing against the merger. I would answer you more readily if you asked me what grounds I should take for it."

Another alumnus, '93, said:

"I will say that the alumni as a whole are against amalgamation. I do not think that because the '04 class as a whole is willing to leave the settlement of the question to President Pritchett, it is fair to deduct any conclusion that he will be supported in holding out against the sentiment of the alumni, to whom any institution must look for its strength. As a matter of fact, I do not suppose we can have any official say, but it is not the custom anywhere to overlook the voice of the alumni."

Currier Lang, marshal of the class of '04 and one of its most influential members, says: "We are not against an alliance. We think some satisfactory agreement can be reached."

Another member, who refused his name, said: "The class as a whole stand in with President Pritchett, but I myself and several others that I know are opposed. The class as a whole have explicit confidence in Dr. Pritchett and are willing to trust his judgment in the case."

President Pritchett refuses to talk. He said any word from him would be very inopportune at this moment, but that he would make a public statement very soon.

TECH NIGHT AT THE POP CONCERT

It was Tech night at the concert. Everything was Tech. It was overwhelmingly and preponderously Technology, with not the slightest regard for Harvard, the university with which President Pritchett would merge the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

As far as the success of the affair is concerned it is sufficient to say that every class from '68, the first class to receive diplomas from the Institute, up to the class of '04, the members of which received their sheepskins but yesterday, was represented.

While the classes of '68, '69 and '70, the first three to be graduated from the institute, got by far the grandest reception of any of the classes when they praded into the hall with their class banners floating on high, the class of '87 was IT from start to finish.

It was '87 who did "the right thing, as usual," it was '87 to whom the Glee Club owes its origin, it was '87 that started the first class society, it was a man from '87 who started the Technology Quarterly, and it is '87 who leads in the Walker memorial subscriptions, and, above all, it was Mr. Frederick F. Bullard, Tech, '87, who was invited by Conductor Adamowski to lead the entire program last night, and last, but not by any means least, it was Gelett Burgess, Tech, '87, who originated the words of a refrain which was on the lips of every Tech man last night, and which reiterated the statement that the Tech men didn't give a d—— for Harvard.

About 9 o'clock the class of '93, headed by President Pritchett, entered the hall. For full five minutes pandemonium reigned, class yell after class yell intermingled with the name of Pritchett on the end of each, and then as one person the vast assembly of college men arose and gave three grand cheers for the college and the man who is at its head.

Equally hearty was the reception given to T. Adamowski, the conductor, who appeared on the platform for the third number on the card, and to Mr. Frederick F. Bullard of '87, who conducted the most of the program.

At the conclusion of the concert the graduates formed by classes in front of Symphony Hall and marched to the college buildings on Boylston street, where they cheered in front of Rogers Hall.

LARGE NUMBER OF TECH GRADUATES

The graduating exercises of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology were held in Huntington Hall, Rogers Building, yesterday afternoon. The largest class in the history of the institute was graduated, 231 receiving degrees of bachelor of science and twelve receiving degrees of master of science. Among the latter were the first naval constructors who have graduated from the institute. Three years ago the United States government selected Massachusetts Institute of Technology as the best fitted school to train the naval constructors for the navy. That year three men, graduates of Annapolis, Lieut. Wm Burder Ferguson, Jr., Lieut. William McInter and Lieut. John Armistead Spilman were sent to Tech. Yesterday those men received the first degrees ever conferred by Tech to a naval constructor.

After the reading of the thesis President Pritchett made an address to the graduating class.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, 1904.

TECH'S ALUMNI ALMOST SOLIDLY AGAINST UNION WITH HARVARD

Class Reunions Pledge Themselves Against Supporting Scheme, and Polite Contempt for Harvard Is Expressed at Pop Concert

ALUMNI SENTIMENT ON PROPOSED MERGER

CLASSES '68 TO '78—No formal action. Sentiment largely opposes union with Harvard.

CLASS OF '82—No official action, but does not favor the merger.

CLASSES OF '83, '84—Matter left to individual members to express themselves when occasion requires.

CLASSES '85, '86, '87—Voted down the proposition by an overwhelming majority, there being only 2 votes cast in favor.

CLASS OF '88—Practically unanimous on this resolution: "Resolved, that '88 reserves her opinion until some definite proposition be offered; voted that it be submitted to the corporation.

CLASS OF '92—Unanimously voted for absolute independence.

CLASSES OF '93 and '94—In favor of absolute independence of M. I. T.

CLASS OF '95—Cast 34 votes, 20 for absolute independence, 1 for merger, 13 not voting.

CLASS OF '96—Nearly unanimous in opposition to coalition with Harvard.

CLASS OF '97—Did not vote on any direct question. Members passed in slips of their opinions, most of which were in opposition.

CLASS OF '99—Signed a resolution for absolute independence.

CLASS OF 1900—Did not vote opinion, but the majority voiced the sentiments of the other classes.

CLASS OF '01—Voted 60 to 3 against merger.

CLASS OF '02—Took no direct action and was but lukewarm in opposition to joining with Harvard.

CLASS OF '03—Voted 25 to 14 against coalition.

"You can't make crimson of cardinal and gray."

"We don't give a —— for Harvard, as we go marching on."

These words, sung to the tune of John Brown's body, made up the rallying cry of the classes of '85, '86 and '87, M. I. T. as they marched from their class dinners at B. A. A. to Symphony hall last evening.

Members of other classes expressed sympathy with them as they marched up Huntington ave., and when standing on chairs at Symphony hall they roared forth the emphatic refrain no opposition was audible.

In somewhat unconventional language they apepared to have expressed the sentiment of 95 p.c. of the M. I. T. graduates, who last evening made Symphony hall a joyous rally place.

It was a great demonstration of the independents, who claim that M. I. T. has much to lose and little to gain by any combination.

Standing on chairs almost under the positions occupied by Pres. Pritchett and Mrs. F. A. Walker, the graduates who were boys nearly 2 decades ago, defiantly rebuffed the suggestion of combination.

But entirely apart from this it was a great night for M. I. T. Few there were at the "pop" concert who did not have a close interest in the institute. The floor was comfortably filled with graduates, who gathered about the tables, prepared to cheer everything from "Prexy" Pritchett to themselves and do it with enthusiasm and energy.

They cheered Pres. Pritchett, Mrs. Walker, the classes by number and finally gave their own class yells.

Because none but "Tech" graduates were desired on the floor there was a lively little disagreement between a young man and a policeman early in the evening. The young man came in a carriage with his mother. He had ordered a table by telephone and learned nothing about Tech night. When informed as to the situation he was very angry and sought to do injury to the stalwart policeman who was present and desired to have all arguments as short as might be. His mother, who was evidently deeply distressed, got him into the carriage as soon as possible and they were driven off.

Meanwhile the M. I. T. "boys" were diverting themselves with impromptu parades of their class standards, carrying F. F. Bullard of '87, who composed a stein song for the occasion, up and down the hall on their shoulders, and generally diverted both themselves and their friends in the galleries.

From the galleries came bushels of brilliantly colored paper, which was allowed to flutter to the floor by partisans of different classes. Those of '87 and '99 developed the greatest originality in this line.

The standards of '87, '90 and '93 were the most conspicuous. When the one belonging to '93 was handed up to a charming young woman in the balcony, who waved it vigorously, there was a racket which was equally complimentary to the banner and its temporary custodian.

There was much amusement at a sign in the '93 section which said: "A long-missing member restored to his fellows." Those who looked for the restored member shrieked with laughter at the discovery that he was a small mechanical pig, who stepped as lively as if he had always travelled by "L" trains.

Incidentally the music of the incomparable Symphony orchestra went on and was sometimes so loudly cheered as to raise a doubt whether the cheers were accompanying the music or vice versa. Conductor Adamowski was thoroughly sympathetic and once or twice assisted the cheering throng by music which kept time with its demonstration.

There were a number of pieces complimentary to the "Tech" men on the programme.

At 10.30 the classes with their standards high in the air swung into the avenue and marched down to the Rogers building, which fairly flamed with red fire.

The throng which came with them all regardless of the drizzling rain applauded while the graduates cheered everything connected with the institute which met with their approval.

The names of the presidents of the institute flamed forth in big electric letters when they were mentioned by Giles Taintor '87, who led the cheering. Meanwhile a short distance away glowed the figures of '85.

THE CLASS REUNIONS.

Members of several classes of M. I. T. met at hotels about Copley sq. last night before going to the "Pop" concert, and talk ran largely upon the proposed coalition with Harvard. Sentiment ran strongly in opposition to any such alliance. Old men and young men talked forcibly upon the subject, uniting maturer judgment with the schoolboy fervor of the younger heads.

A. D. Little, of the class of '85, made a stirring speech in behalf of amalgamation with Harvard, but was promptly voted down with only 2 votes in his favor, by the united classes of '85, '86 and '87.

Several similar speeches were either voted down or hissed down.

W. B. Snow, class of '82, chairman of the now famous committee that secured the signatures of the postal card petition in opposition, was warmly greeted and cheered everywhere he moved. He was heard to say, "The best interests of the institute, educational and otherwise, demand that it keep its own individuality, which it would lose in a merger with Harvard."

At the reunion of the classes of '85, '86 and '87 at the B. A. A., the subject which is uppermost in the minds of all Tech alumni received considerable informal discussion. These classes turned out 95 strong. The general sentiment of the assemblage was against the merger, but a strong address in favor under certain condition was made by A. D. Little, '85, and received close attention. Among those who spoke against the proposition were Spaulding, '86; Clifford, '86, and Stengis, '87.

No formal action on the matter was taken, however, and the alumni, after the dinner, evinced a decided reluctance to discuss the matter.

Everett Morss, '85, presided at the dinner, and Prof. Burrison was the guest of honor.

M. I. T. class dinners at the Copley Sq. Hotel last night were those of '92, '97 and '99, and at the Hotel Berkeley, '95, '96 and '03. The sentiment against the merger with Harvard University was pronounced and approximated 90 per cent of the meetings. Several speakers said, in effect, that the M. I. T. was the only institution of its class in the country, that it had built itself up unaided by any outside school, and that there was no reason why its individuality should be sunk for the honor of another institution.

BOSTON POST.

WEDNESDAY. JUNE 8. 1904

TECH MEN DENOUNCE HARVARD IN SONG

"We don't give a d—— for Har-vard,
"We don't give a d—— for Har-vard,
"We don't give a d—— for Har-vard,
"As we go marching on."

Wildly singing the above and shouting defiance at Harvard, the 2000 Tech students and alumni assembled at the "Pops" last evening voiced their opposition to the proposed amalgamation of the Cambridge university and their own alma mater.

Middle aged, conservative alumni, members of the class of '77, started the song. It was taken up by all the other classes.

President Pritchett, on entering the hall, bowed to the cheering students, who concluded their ovation with the word, "Prexy," repeated 30 times.

Then about 200 students gathered about the president's table, and made known their sentiments by repeating the song three times.

Wherever Tech men went yesterday the merger was denounced. In a detachment of '91 men, which visited the engineering rooms, was an alumnus, who said:

"Think of that so-called Lawrence Scientific School (of Harvard) getting political control of all this machinery."

At the class dinners of '85, '86 and '87 the plan of union was discussed and disapproved, but no formal action was taken, "because, as the opinion of the faculty has not yet been asked, it remains to be seen what will be done by those in closest touch with the institute."

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, 1904

TECH NIGHT AT THE "POPS"

An Uproarious Celebration, the Dominant Note Being Defiance to Harvard

The same spirit of opposition to any union with Harvard which marked the class gatherings of Technology alumni was also the dominant note of the Technology jubilee at the "Pops" last evening. True, the expression of opinion was more vociferous and melodious than elegant when the great body of alumni roared out in chorus just what it did n't give for Harvard; but the amenities were observed in the color-scheme of another verse of the same song which proclaimed the impossibility of making crimson out of cardinal and gray—something that every kindergartener who has dabbled his fingers in the primary colors knows. Gelett Burgess, '87, perpetrated the words, the class of '87 popularized them by marching into the hall to their music; everybody was singing them when the orchestra did not play, and sometimes when it did; and Conductor Adamowski finally surrendered and finished his programme by leading the song with full Symphony accompaniment.

It was a great night for Tech. On the organ front the word "Tech" blazed, and across the balcony rail at the back of the hall was a huge red banner with the name of the Institute on it. On the tables stood crepe paper banners in cardinal and gray. The programme announced that Frederic F. Bullard, '87, had been invited by Adamowski to conduct the whole programme, but by request of the executive committee, Bullard and Adamowski would divide the programme between them.

The class of '98 was first in, followed closely by '02. The class of '90 came in with a huge banner. The class of '99 begged in chorus "Please take that flag down," but '90 simply turned it at right angles so it did n't hide the stage from '99 in the rear of the hall. The class of '99 had little flags, and lots of confetti, all printed with the class figures. It snowed cardinal and gray from their entrance on for the rest of the evening. Then came this year's class, '04, not more than a couple of hundred of them. There had been cheering before, but now the air simply shivered as hundreds barked welcome to each other. Somebody caught sight of Professor Blochstein in a balcony, and he was cheered. The class of '99 cheered all the classes the Institute has ever graduated, counting off year after year. The idea spread, and counting bees began all over the hall.

Finally the orchestra began, Mr. Bullard leading. It was pretty quiet, for word had passed that the occasion was not to be marred. But at the last note pandemonium broke forth again. Somebody conceived the idea of visiting another class with a bunch of fellows, and cheering them first all squatting down, and then all standing a tiptoe. Another stunt was a sort of chorus of sirens, wonderfully effective. Two more numbers had been played, when in came '93, which had been dining President Pritchett. F. R. Comee, who has for years claimed the privilege, escorted the president in, and the alumni cheered and cheered for "Prexy."

It was more difficult than ever to cork up the noise after that; still, it was achieved. Frederic F. Bullard was cheered for leading of his own compositions, and was finally rushed out of the conductor's box, and mounted on the shoulders of husky grads to be carried in triumph down the aisle and back in the middle of a tempest of delight.

With more or less assistance (?) from the audience, the following programme was rendered:

1. National March..... Strube
2. Song, "The Sword of Ferrara"..... F. F. Bullard, '87
3. Waltz, "Roses of the South".....Strauss
4. Selection, "Babes in Toyland".....Herbert
5. March, "We 're All Frank and Twenty!" F. F. Bullard, '87
6. Tech Songs:
   a "Retrospection," air Auld Lang Syne.
   b "On Rogers Steps"...T. W. Esterbrook, '05
   c "The Best School of All" (Henry Newboldt) .....Janet E. Walker
7. Medley, college songs.....Theodore Moses
8. Tech Songs:
   a "Take Me Back to Tech!" (I. W. Litchfield, '85), air, Solomon Levi.
   b "Prexy for Aye!" air, America.
   c "The Janitors' Union" (G. F. Loughlin. '03).....E. B. Edwards, '93
   d "A Stein Song" (Richard Hovey)... F. F. Bullard, '87
9. Prelude to Act III., "Lohengrin".....Wagner
10. Selection, "Grande Duchesse".....Offenbach
11. Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
12. March, "Hoch Habsburg".....Kral

When at last the concert ended, a vast procession marched down Huntington avenue to Rogers, shouting as they went. On the cornice of the first story of Rogers was a ring of red fire sticks, which were lit as the procession approached. Then Taintor '87 mounted a table on the steps, and led the crowd in the final cheering. As each president of Tech was cheered his name flashed out between the great columns in letters of incandescent fire. Rogers, Rundle, Walker, Crafts and Pritchett were cheered; then Cummings, Tyler, Burnham, the corporation and the faculty, the association of class secretaries, and finally a mighty cheer for the Institute.

BOSTON POST.

JUNE 9, 1904

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall are enjoying immense favor this week and Mr. Adamowski's programmes contain selections calculated to please all patrons. This evening the orchestra will be heard in a lot of bright operatic music varied by dance music of the most enjoyable sort. These concerts are to be continued only two weeks longer.

BOSTON JOURNAL-

JUNE 9, 1904.

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall this week have been patronized by the largest audiences of the season and the bright programs of popular music given under Mr. Adamowski's direction have been keenly appreciated. This evening's selections include some particularly interesting overtures and selections from popular operas, pleasingly varied by brilliant dance music. These concerts last only two weeks more and are given each weekday evening from 8 till 11.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1904.

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall are enjoying immense favor this week and Mr Adamowski's programs contain selections calculated to please all patrons. This evening the orchestra will be heard in a lot of bright operatic music varied by dance music of the most enjoyable sort. These concerts continue two weeks longer.

BOSTON HERALD

JUNE 9, 1904.

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall this week have been patronized by the largest audiences of the season and the bright programmes of popular music given under Mr. Adamowski's direction have been keenly appreciated. This evening's selections include some particularly interesting overtures and selections from popular operas, pleasingly varied by brilliant dance music. These concerts last only two weeks more.

[76]

THE BOSTON GLOBE—WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, 1904.

STRENUOUS NIGHT FOR TECH MEN AT THE POPS.

DEFIANCE TO HARVARD

Tech Men Hurl It in Song.

Alumni's Night at Pop Concert.

March, Cheer and Do All Kinds of Stunts.

Opposition to Merger at Class Reunions.

Tech celebrated last night in its reunion with a Pop concert in Symphony hall, but there was more pop than concert. A program was faithfully played, it is true, and respectful attention was had for every number, especially When Mr Adamowski led, but the virulent political meeting that was going on, added to the enthusiasm in process of unbottling, rather swamped the fiddlers before any tune was finished. Then, again, the classes kept on arriving till long after 9, and began visiting each other with cheers immediately upon arrival, and the concert was ended shortly after 10:30, so altogether the music had [illegible] time of it.

But it was the greatest evening in Tech's history, none the less, and the keynote of it was a declaration of independence, sang by '87 as it marched in, solid-ranked, bannered and shouting. Gelett Burgess of the class wrote the declaration of independence, and the man who wrote the tune of "John Brown's Body" was responsible for the music of it.

You can't make crimson out of cardinal and gray,
You can't make crimson out of cardinal and gray,
You can't make crimson out of cardinal and gray,
As Tech goes marching on.
We don't give a d— for Ha-a-arvud,
We don't give a d— for Ha-a-arvud,
We don't give a d— for Ha-a-arvud,
As Tech goes marching on.

How They Sang It.

That was the battle song, and they sang it marching, and sang it standing on the tables; they sang it sitting down, and roared it when Timothee Adamowski finished up the evening by playing the tune. And when midnight fell moist and misty across Boylston st, there were still a few hoarse voices trying bravely to assert Tech's independence to any who might be awake or who might be waked up.

Round every table in the hall these scenes were going on. At least one man was trying at any given moment to raise a cheer, and usually succeeding admirably. Two more were shaking hands, and a third was pointing out to a fourth a girl in the balconies. There were girls in the balconies, but except for Mrs Rogers and Mrs Walker, who were discovered and cheered lustily, the girls were no more important last night than the gilding on the rails. For the rest of each group at every table was having it out on the question whether Tech would better go in for a chance at Gordon McKay's millions and risk losing her maiden name.

Many of the classes had their dinners before going to Symphony hall, with the effect that the concert began late. On the organ front the word "Tech" blazed, and across the balcony rail at the back of the hall was a huge red banner with the name of the institute on it. On the tables stood the crepe paper banners in cardinal and gray.

The programs announced that Frederic F. Bullard '87 had been invited by Mr Adamowski to conduct the whole program, but by request of the executive committee Mr Bullard and Mr Adamowski would divide the program between them.

The class of '98 was first in, followed closely by '92. They put in the time cheering each other, and were answered by indistinct roars from outside. The class of '00 came in with a huge banner and a fishing pole, the mystery of whose use was presently explained. It was made fast to the pennant's tip and used to extend it. The class of '99 begged in chorus "please take that flag down" and '00, polite but foxy, simply turned it at right angles so it didn't hide the stage from '99 in the rear of the hall. The class of '99 had little flags, and lots of confetti, all printed with the class figures. It snowed cardinal and gray from their entrance on for the rest of the evening.

Then came this year's class, '04, not more than a couple of hundred of them, and entered impressively by the middle door at the rear, marching with banners and shoutings like an army, up the middle aisle to seats right at the stage. There had been cheering before, but now the torn air simply shivered in raucous vibrations as the hundreds barked welcome to each other. Somebody caught sight of Prof Blochstein in a balcony, and he was cheered. Then came Dr Mixter, strolling in quietly with some solemn old "grads," and he was cheered by class after class.

Then '99 cheered all the classes the institute has ever graduated, counting off year after year. The idea spread, and counting bees began all over the hall.

It was 8:30 already, but lots of classes were yet to come, and there was no sign of a concert. Finally the orchestra began, Mr Bullard leading the firsa number. It was pretty quiet, for strenuous word had passed among the classes that last night was to be marred by no rough house. But at the last note pandemonium broke forth again. Somebody conceived the idea of visiting another class with a bunch of fellows, and cheering them first all squatting down, and then all standing a tiptoe. Another stunt was a sort of chorus of sirens, wonderfully effective.

Everybody had learned the declaration of independence by now, and the long intermission was used to declare what they didn't give for Harvard. There was also a version of "Mr Dooley" which consigned Harvard to a place in which Unitarians don't believe, but this was too complicated for large choruses to learn. Still another stunt was performed with small megaphones, which gave a booming sound to the cheering in spots.

It was after 9, and the third number on the program had been reached, when in came '93, which had been dining Pres Pritchett. F. R. Comee, who has for years claimed the privilege, escorted the president in, and the hall rose to its feet on the tables and whooped till its last gasp for "Prexy." It was more difficult than ever to cork up the noise after that; still, it was achieved.

What They Said About a Merger.

The crowd "milled" round the center of the hall, and visited and shook hands and said what a good time it was having, and the discussions beat up to the ceiling. It was "If the alumni had a vote, as they ought to, you'd see"; "I am a good trader; I don't believe in letting five millions get away from us"; "We haven't tried yet to see what the alumni will do for Tech"; "Our class voted dead against any surrender of independence." But the determination didn't progress. It merely showed that [illegible]

Tech was developing a strenuous public opinion in the family. Nobody knows yet which it will be.

Frederick F. Bullard, being cheered for his leading of his own compositions, now produced a lovely stunt. He actually fired a salvo of cheers with the orchestra, and the alumni yipped with delight. They rushed Bullard out of the conductor's box, and mounting him on the shoulders of two husky old grads, carried him in triumph down the aisle and back in the middle of a tempest of delight, Bullard steering his team by the ears.

And so at last the concert ended, and a vast procession marched down Huntington av and to Rogers, shouting as they went that they cared not a Dee for Harvard. On the cornice of the first story of Rogers was a ring of red fire sticks, which were lit as the procession approached. Then Taintor '87 mounted a table on the steps, and led the crowd in the final cheering. As each president of Tech was cheered his name flashed out between the great columns in letters of incandescent fire. Rogers, Rundle, Walker, Crafts and Pritchett were cheered; then Cummings, Tyler, Burnham, the corporation and the faculty, and lastly the association of class secretaries. Finally McClure of Pittsburg led a round for Taintor, and the men massed on the steps to roar a few more, and last of all to shred off to class punches or to go home through the damp night as the last sparks of red fire melted and dropped and went out.

The announcement was made that today's boat will leave Rowe's wharf at 10, instead of 11, as originally announced.

[7 7]

BOSTON POST,

JUNE 11, 1904

The "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall this evening will be made notable by the attendance of one of the largest audiences of the season, the demand for seats on the floor and in the balconies having been excessive. Mr. Adamowski has planned a programme rich in attractive features.

DAILY ADVERTISER,

JUNE 11, 1904

THE POPS.

The Saturday night audiences at the "Pop" concerts in Symphony hall are well worth seeing by those unfamiliar with this characteristic of Boston life, and visitors to the city are always to be noted in large numbers upon these occasions. The demand for seats at the tables and in the balconies this evening ensures the attendance of a representative audience, and Mr. Adamowski has planned a programme well calculated to arouse the enthusiasm of patrons.

BOSTON JOURNAL.

JUNE 11, 1904.

The "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall this evening will be made notable by the attendance of one of the largest audiences of the season. The demand for seats on the floor and in the balconies having been excessive. Mr. Adamowski has planned a program rich in attractive features.

Boston Daily Globe.

SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1904

The "Pop" concert in Symphony hall this evening will be made notable by the attendance of one of the largest audiences of the season. Mr Adamowski has planned a program rich in attractive features.

BOSTON HERALD.

JUNE 11, 1904.

The Saturday night audiences at the "Pop" concerts in Symphony Hall are well worth seeing by those unfamiliar with this characteristic of Boston life, and visitors to the city are always to be noted in large numbers upon these occasions. The demand for seats at the tables and in the balconies this evening insures the attendance of a representative audience, and Mr. Adamowski has planned a programme well calculated to arouse the enthusiasm of patrons. There are only two weeks more of these pleasant entertainments.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1904

Final Nights at the "Pops"

The season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall ends on Saturday evening, the 25th inst., and for the remaining nights of the present series Mr. Adamowski is planning some programmes that will fully maintain the popular standard of the present year. Boston residents have shown a keen appreciation of the "Pops" this season and no preceding series of these concerts has attracted such widespread attention from visitors to this city. The success of the management in making the "Pops" such an attractive resort for the amusement seeking public has been universally commended by visitors from abroad who are familiar with similar resorts throughout Europe, and the superiority of the orchestra directed by Mr. Adamowski over those in the concert gardens of the old world is universally conceded. Next week a series of special programmes has been planned with selections by Wagner as a feature on Monday evening, by Tchaikovsky on Wednesday evening and gems by French composers on Friday evening. These special nights have been arranged in response to many requests received from patrons by Mr. Adamowski and many notable compositions by the composers named will be presented. In the Wagner programme for Monday evening there are the overtures to "Rienzi," "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin," the "Ride of Valkyries," the "Tannhäuser" march and the prelude to the third act of "Lohengrin." These concerts are given each weekday evening from eight to eleven o'clock.

EVENING RECORD,

JUNE 11, 1904.

THE POPS.

The Saturday night audiences at the "Pop" concerts in Symphony hall are well worth seeing by those unfamiliar with this characteristic of Boston life, and visitors to the city are always to be noted in large numbers upon these occasions. The demand for seats at the tables and in the balconies this evening ensures the attendance of a representative audience, and Mr. Adamowski has planned a programme well calculated to arouse the enthusiasm of patrons.

SUNDAY POST,

JUNE 12, 1904

SPECIAL NIGHTS AT THE POPS

The all too short season of Pop concerts at Symphony Hall is rapidly nearing its end and the final nights of the present series promise to give a brilliant ending to the season of 1904. Mr. Adamowski's success in meeting the desires of the patrons of the "Pops" in the selection of programmes has been most pronounced, and the excellent work done by the orchestra under his baton has been universally commended by conservative critics.

The season will end with the concerts of next week. Many attractive features have been arranged for the final nights. A series of special programmes has been planned for this week with a Wagner night tomorrow evening, a Tchaikowsky programme for Wednesday evening, one given to French composers for Friday evening.

In the Wagner programme arranged for tomorrow evening the selections from this master's works will include the overtures "Rienzi," "Tannhausser" and "Lohengrin"; the introduction to the third act of "Lohengrin," the "Ride of Valkyries" and "Tannhausser" march. These concerts are given each week-day evening from 8 till 11 o'clock.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 12, 1904.

SPECIAL NIGHTS AT THE "POPS."

The short season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall is rapidly nearing its end and the final nights of the present series promise to give a brilliant ending to the season of 1904. Mr Adamowski's success in meeting the desires of the patrons of the "Pops" in the selection of programs has been most pronounced and the excellent work done by the orchestra under his baton has been universally commended by conservative critics. The season ends with the concerts of next week and many attractive features have been arranged for the final nights.

A series of special programs has been planned, with a Wagner night tomorrow evening, a Tschaikowsky program for Wednesday evening and one given to French composers for Friday evening. In the Wagner program tomorrow evening the selections will include the overture "Rienzi," "Tannhauser" and "Lohengrin"; the introduction to the third act of "Lohengrin"; the "Ride of Valkyries" and "Tannhauser" march.

——Tuesday was a great night for the Technology men at the Pops, and Symphony hall was given over entirely to the alumni and their friends. There were banners on all the tables in Tech colors, cordinal and gray, a large red banner suspended from the balcony at the farther end of the hall and "Tech" in illuminated letters on the front of the organ. There was cheering for the several classes, cheering for the president and cheering for Mr Bullard after leading his own compositions, when he was carried on the shoulders of some of the men down the aisle and back. Everybody had a good time, joining in the singing of college songs, and it was a red-letter night for the institute. Wednesday evening there was a lull after the storm, and the large audience that gathered about the tables enjoyed the quiet and splendid program presented. Mr Keller's violoncello solo in the ballet music from the "Queen of Sheba" was so beautifully done that the audience demanded a repetition, which was given. Mrs Adamowski entertained several friends at her table, Mr Gordon Dexter, Miss Annie Lyman and others. Mrs Adamowski was in black veiling and a black hat with a ruching of silk around the crown, and Miss Lyman was in white embroidered tussah silk and black hat with white plumes. Others there were Dr Daniel Lawrence Hunt, Mrs Hunt and several guests. Mrs Hunt was in pale gray crepe de chine applique, with white silk embroidery, and white straw hat, done in blue flowers and foliage; Mr and Mrs Arthur Richmond, Mrs Richmond in biscuit liberty silk, the bodice and sleeves with cream lace, and a violet hat with violet wings; Dr and Mrs William Copley Winslow, Mrs Winslow in violet voile, with lace, and toque of lace and white flowers; Mr John H. Holmes had his son, Mr Harry Holmes, Mr Haskell and other gentlemen, with ladies, as his guests. Tomorrow will be a Wagner night, six of the twelve numbers having been written by that composer; Wednesday Tschaikowski night and Friday French composers' night.

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN

SUNDAY, JUNE 12, 1904

THE "POPS"—The season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall ends on Saturday evening, the 25th inst., and for the remaining nights of the present series Mr. Adamowski is planning some programmes that will fully maintain the popular standard of the present year. This week a special programme has been planned, with selections by Wagner as a feature on Monday evening, by Tschaikowsky on Wednesday evening, and gems by French composers on Friday evening.

SUNDAY JOURNAL,

JUNE 12, 1904.

SPECIAL NIGHTS AT THE 'POPS'

The all too short season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall is rapidly nearing its end, and the final nights of the present series promise to give a brilliant ending to the season of 1904. Mr. Adamowski's success in meeting the desires of the patrons of the "Pops" in the selection of programs has been most pronounced, and the excellent work done by the orchestra under his baton has been universally commended by conservative critics. The season ends with the concerts of next week. Many attractive features have been arranged for the final nights. A series of special programs has been planned for this week, a Wagner night tomorrow evening, a Tschaikowsky program for Wednesday evening, one given to French composers for Friday evening. In the Wagner program arranged for tomorrow evening the selections from this master's works will include the overtures "Rienzi," "Tannhauser" and "Lohengrin"; the introduction to the third act of "Lohengrin," the "Ride of Valkyries" and "Tannhausser" march. These concerts are given each week day evening from 8 till 11 o'clock.

SUNDAY HERALD.

JUNE 12, 1904.

FINAL NIGHTS AT THE "POPS."

The season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall ends on Saturday evening, the 25th inst., and for the remaining nights of the present series Mr. Adamowski is planning programmes that will fully maintain the popular standard of the present year. Boston residents have shown a keen appreciation of the "Pops" this season, and no preceding series of these concerts has attracted such widespread attention from visitors to this city. The success of the management in making the "Pops" such an attractive resort for the amusement-seeking public has been universally commended by visitors from abroad, who are familiar with similar resorts throughout Europe, and the superiority of the orchestra directed by Mr. Adamowski over those in the concert gardens of the old world is universally conceded.

This week a series of special programmes has been planned, with selections by Wagner as a feature on Monday evening, by Tschaikowsky on Wednesday evening and gems by French composers on Friday evening. These special nights have been arranged in response to many requests received from patrons by Mr. Adamowski, and many notable compositions by the composers named will be presented. In the Wagner programme arranged for Monday evening there are the overtures to "Rienzi," "Tannhauser" and "Lohengrin," the "Ride of the Valkyries," the "Tannhauser" march and the prelude to the third act of "Lohengrin." These concerts are given each week-day evening from 8 to 11 o'clock.

JUNE 13, 1904.

Mr. Comee has every reason to be gratified by the success which has attended the Pop concerts so far, and as the special nights have already started in, there will be no chance of there being any vacant chairs on the floor or empty seats in the balcony. Tonight Mr. Adamowski has prepared a Wagner programme, and on Friday night the French composers will be represented. Always the great night, however, is the Harvard one, which will be on the 20th, a week from tonight, and only less popular is the Graduates' night, which is set for a week later, which brings it after class day.

BOSTON POST,

JUNE 14, 1904

The "Pops" concert season at Symphony Hall continues only during this and next week, so that the opportunities to enjoy these delightful events are rapidly passing. The plans for the final "Pops" made by the management and Mr. Adamowski insure a very brilliant ending of the season, and the excessive advance demand for seats at the tables and in the balconies for the last concerts shows that the public fully appreciates these entertaining affairs.

This evening a programme of operatic and dance music, varied by other popular music, will be played by the orchestra of 50 musicians, and tomorrow evening Tschaikowsky's music will be made the prominent feature of the selections. A programme of French compositions will be given next Friday evening.

BOSTON

JUNE 14, 1904.

"POP" SEASON NEARS AN END.

The brilliant season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall ends with those of this and next week. The Wagner program of last evening proved a strong attraction, and the "Tschaikowsky night," arranged for tomorrow evening, is an equally popular affair, with the great "1812" overture as one of its leading features. For this evening Mr. Adamowski has arranged a program of operatic and dance music, varied with other popular forms of compositions.

DAILY ADVERTISER,

JUNE 14, 1904.

POP CONCERT.

The "pop" concert season at Symphony Hall continues only during this and next week, so that the opportunities to enjoy these delightful events are rapidly passing. The plans for the final "pops" made by the management and Mr. Adamowski ensure a very brilliant ending of the season, and the excessive advance demand for seats at the tables and in the balconies for the last concerts shows that the public fully appreciates these entertaining affairs.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, JUNE 14, 1904.

Notable "Pop" Nights.

The brilliant season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall ends with those of next week, and conductor Adamowski is planning to give a notable ending to the present series of these delightful entertainments. The Wagner program of last evening proved a strong attraction and the "Tschaikowsky night" arranged for tomorrow evening is an equally popular affair, with the great "1812" overture as one of its leading features.

For this evening Mr Adamowski has arranged a program of operatic and dance music pleasantly varied with other popular forms of compositions, which as played by the orchestra of 50 musicians, should prove a source of uninterrupted pleasure. The demand for seats at the tables and in the balconies for the final "Pops" has already assured a series of large audiences.

BOSTON HERALD.

JUNE 14, 1904.

LAST "POPS" OF THE SEASON.

The "Pop" concert season at Symphony Hall continues only during this and next week, so that the opportunities to enjoy these delightful events are rapidly passing. The plans for the final "Pops" made by the management and Mr. Adamowski ensure a very brilliant ending of the season, and the excessive advance demand for seats at the tables and in the balconies for the last concerts shows that the public fully appreciate these entertaining affairs. This evening a programme of operatic and dance music varied by other popular music will be played by the orchestra of 50 musicians, and tomorrow evening Tschaikowsky's music will be made the prominent feature of the selections. A programme of French compositions will be given next Friday evening. The concerts are given each weekday evening from 8 to 11 o'clock.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, JUNE 14, 1904

The brilliant season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall closes with those of this and next week. The Wagner programme of last evening proved a strong attraction, and the "Tchaikovsky night" to be given tomorrow evening is an equally popular affair, with the great "1812" overture as one of its leading features. For this evening Mr. Adamowski has arranged a programme of operatic and dance music pleasantly varied with other popular forms of compositions, which as played by the orchestra of fifty musicians will prove a source of uninterrupted pleasure. The demand for seats at the tables and in the balconies for the final "Pops" has already assured a series of large audiences.

EVENING RECORD,

JUNE 14, 1904.

POP CONCERT.

The "pop" concert season at Symphony Hall continues only during this and next week, so that the opportunities to enjoy these delightful events are rapidly passing. The plans for the final "pops" made by the management and Mr. Adamowski ensure a very brilliant ending of the season, and the excessive advance demand for seats at the tables and in the balconies for the last concerts shows that the public fully appreciates these entertaining affairs.

[78]

BOSTON POST,
JUNE 16, 1904

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall end with "Harvard" night on Monday, the 27th inst., and the final opportunities of enjoying these delightful entertainments are being fully improved by the public. A particularly bright programme of operatic selections and dance music pleasingly varied by other popular numbers has been planned for this evening by Mr. Adamowski. In tomorrow evening's programme there will be heard a large number of compositions of the French school.

Boston Daily Globe.
THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1904

The "Pops" at Symphony hall are attracting great audiences, and Mr Adamowski's programs are giving immense satisfaction to patrons. The season ends Monday evening, June 27, with the annual "Harvard" night. Tomorrow evening compositions of the French school will be given prominence.

ADVERTISER,
JUNE 16, 1904.

The last of the season's "Pops" at Symphony Hall are attracting great audiences and Mr. Adamowski's programmes are giving immense satisfaction to patrons. The season ends on Monday, June 27, with the annual "Harvard night."

BOSTON HERALD
JUNE 16, 1904.

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall end with "Harvard" night on Monday, the 27th inst., and the final opportunities of enjoying these delightful entertainments are being fully improved by the public. A particularly bright programme of operatic selections and dance music, pleasingly varied by other popular numbers, has been planned for this evening by Mr. Adamowski. In tomorrow evening's programme there will be heard a large number of compositions of the French school, which will undoubtedly make the evening a memorable one.

Boston Transcript
THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1904

The last of the season's "Pops" at Symphony Hall are attracting great audiences and Mr. Adamowski's programmes are giving immense satisfaction to patrons. The season ends on Monday evening, the twenty-seventh, with the annual Harvard Night. Tomorrow evening a special programme will be presented in which the compositions of the French school will be given prominence.

EVENING RECORD,
JUNE 16. 1904

The last of the season's "Pops" at Symphony Hall are attracting great audiences and Mr. Adamowski's programmes are giving immense satisfaction to patrons. The season ends on Monday, June 27, with the annual "Harvard night."

Boston Transcript
SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1904

The season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall which has proved such a source of entertainment during the last seven weeks, continues only eight nights longer, ending with Harvard "Graduates'" night on Monday evening, the twenty-seventh. Conductor Adamowski has planned a series of brilliant programmes for the concluding concerts. At the concert Monday evening, known as "Harvard" night, when ladies will be admitted to seats at the tables on the floor, the selections will include "Fair Harvard," the march "Up the Street," by Morse, '96, the "Hasty Pudding" music of the present season's production, the marches "Our Director," by Bigelow, and "Cruiser Harvard," by Strube, and a lot of other selections of a popular character. Tuesday evening the compositions of Offenbach and Strauss will be given prominence; Wednesday evening will be Italian composers' night; Thursday evening the programme will be made up of request numbers, and in the soloists' night's programme on Friday Messrs. Hackebarth, horn, Kloepfel, trumpet, Birnbaum violin, and Keller, 'cello, will contribute solos. The final Saturday night programme will be made up of selections well calculated to make it a memorable occasion.

Boston Daily Globe.
SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1904

The selections for the "Pop" concert this evening include much that is popular in the lighter classes of compositions. These concerts continue only a week longer, ending with Harvard "graduates" night, June 27.

BOSTON POST,
JUNE 18, 1904

The last but one of the Saturday night "Pops" of the present season occurs this evening, and Mr. Adamowski's programme is full of attractive features. A series of special nights has been arranged for next week which promise to make a brilliant ending to the season. Monday evening will be known as "Harvard" night and ladies will join the representatives of the university both on the floor and in the balcony on this occasion. The season will end with "graduates'" night on Monday evening, the 27th inst.

BOSTON HERALD-
JUNE 18, 1904.

The last but one of the Saturday night "Pops" of the season occurs this evening, and Mr. Adamowski's programme is full of attractive features. A series of special nights has been arranged for next week which promise to make a brilliant ending to the season. Monday evening will be known as "Harvard" night, and ladies will join the representatives of the university both on the floor and in the balcony on this occasion. The season ends with "Graduates'" night on Monday evening, the 27th inst.

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN-
-SUNDAY, JUNE 19, 1904.

THE "POPS"—Only seven more "Pop" concerts are to be given at Symphony Hall, as the season ends with the Harvard "Graduates' night" a week from to-morrow evening. Conductor Adamowski has planned a series of brilliant programs for the concluding concerts of the series. To-morrow evening will be a Harvard night. Ladies will be admitted to seats at the tables on the floor, and the selections will be appropriate in character. Tuesday evening compositions of Offenbach and Strauss will be given prominence, Wednesday will be Italian composers' night, Thursday the program will be made up of request numbers, and Friday will be soloists' night. The Saturday night program will be made a memorable one.

SUNDAY JOURNAL,
JUNE 19, 1904.

LAST OF THE "POP" SEASON.

The very enjoyable season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall comes to an end one week from Monday evening, when "Harvard graduates'" night will terminate this brilliant series of entertainments. Conductor Adamowski has good reason to be satisfied with the result of the work this season, and the members of the orchestra have won golden opinions from the public by their performance of the well-chosen programs. For the coming week the arrangements contemplate a series of special programs. Monday evening will be known as Harvard night, an occasion when representatives of the university are allowed to entertain their lady friends at the tables, as well as in the balcony. For this evening the opening selection will be the "Cruiser Harvard" march by Strube, and other appropriate numbers will be the "Hasty Pudding" music of the present year's production, the waltz "Jolly Students," Vollstedt; "Fair Harvard," and the marches "Our Director," Bigelow; and "Up the Street," Morse, '96. There will be an Offenbach and Strauss night on Tuesday, an Italian composer' night on Wednesday, a program made up of request numbers on Thursday, and in the program of soloists' night on Friday. Messrs. Hackenbarth, korn; Kloepfel, trumpet; Birnbaum, violin; and Keller, cello, will contribute solo work, For next Saturday evening a program is announced well calculated to make the event a memorable one with all who attend.

SUNDAY POST,
JUNE 19, 1904

END OF THE "POP" CONCERTS

The very delightful season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall will come to an end one week from Monday evening when "Harvard Graduates'" night will terminate this brilliant series of entertainments. Conductor Adamowski has good reason to be satisfied with the result of his work and the members of the orchestra have won golden opinions from the public by their performance of the well chosen programmes.

For the coming week the arrangements contemplate a series of special programmes. Monday evening will be known as "Harvard night," an occasion when representatives of the university are allowed to entertain their lady friends at the tables as well as in the balcony. For this evening the opening selection will be the "Cruiser Harvard" march by Strube, and other appropriate numbers will be the "Hasty Pudding" music of the present year's production, the waltz "Jolly Students," Vollstedt; "Fair Harvard" and the marches, "Our Director," Bigelow, and "Up the Street," Morse, '96.

There will be an Offenbach and Strauss night on Tuesday, an Italian composers' night on Wednesday, a programme made up of request numbers on Thursday and in the programme of soloists' night on Friday Messrs. Hackebarth, horn; Kloepfel, trumpet; Birnbaum, violin, and Keller, 'cello, will contribute solo work. For next Saturday evening a programme is announced well calculated to make the event a memorable one with all who attend.

SUNDAY HERALD
JUNE 19, 1904

END OF "POP" CONCERT SEASON.

The very enjoyable season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall comes to an end one week from Monday evening, when "Harvard Graduates" night will terminate this brilliant series of entertainments. Conductor Adamowski has good reason to be satisfied with the result of his work during the season, and the members of the orchestra have won golden opinions from the public by their performance of the well-chosen programmes. For the coming week the arrangements contemplate a series of special programmes. Monday evening will be known as Harvard night, an occasion when representatives of the university are allowed to entertain their lady friends at the tables, as well as in the balcony. For this evening the opening selection will be the "Cruiser Harvard" march, by Strube, and other appropriate numbers will be the "Hasty Pudding" music of the present year's production, the waltz, "Jolly Students," Vollstedt; "Fair Harvard" and the marches "Our Director," Bigelow, and "Up the Street," Morse, '96. There will be an Offenbach and Strauss night on Tuesday, an Italian composer's night on Wednesday, a programme made up of request numbers on Thursday, and in the programme of soloists' night on Friday Messrs. Hackebarth, horn; Kloepfel, trumpet; Birnbaum, violin, and Keller, 'cello, will contribute solo work. For next Saturday evening a programme is announced well calculated to make the event a memorable one with all who attend.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, JUNE 19, 1904.

FINAL NIGHTS AT THE "POPS."

The season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall which has proved such a source of entertainment during the last seven weeks continues only seven nights longer, ending with Harvard "Graduates" night, Monday evening, June 27. Conductor Adamowski has planned a series of brilliant programs for the concluding concerts of the season. At the concert tomorrow evening, known as "Harvard" night, the selection will include "Fair Harvard," the march, "Up the Street," by Morse '96, the "Hasty Pudding" music of the present season's production, the marches, "Our Director," by Bigelow, and "Cruiser Harvard," by Strube, and a lot of other selections of a popular character.

Tuesday evening the composition of Offenbach and Strauss will be given prominence; Wednesday evening will be Italian composers' night; Thursday evening the program will be made up of request numbers, and in the soloists' night program, Friday, Messrs Hakebarth, horn; Kloepfel, trumpet; Birnbaum, violin, and Keller, 'cello, will contribute solos.

—As the season of Pop concerts draws to a close, they seem to be more popular than ever, and the music is exceptionally fine. Monday evening, Wagner night, and Wednesday evening, Tschaikowsky night, the audience, which surrounded all the tables, were so enthusiastic that several numbers had to be repeated, Mr Adamowski always gracefully yielding to the applause. The 1812 overture aroused the greatest enthusiasm, as well it might, but it is entirely too difficult to be repeated, and for once the leader declined. Mrs Adamowski has entertained friends at her table every evening, and on Wednesday Mr and Mrs J. De Forest Danielson, who came up from Newport for the Country club races, Miss Annie Lyman, Mr William P. Blake, Mrs Adamowski's sister, who is visiting her at her home on Chestnut st, and Mr Gordon Dexter were at her table, joined by Mr Adamowski during the intermissions. Mrs Danielson was charming in an exquisite gown of white silk muslin, flowered in pink and wearing a rope of pearls and a black hat with black ostrich plumes. Her wrap was of black satin. Miss Lyman was in blue silk flecked with white, the yoke of the bodice embroidered in blue and white, hat with blue and white shaded ostrich plumes. Both Mrs Adamowski and her sister were in black crepe de chine and lace, and wore black hats. Others there were Dr and Mrs William Copley Winslow, Mrs Winslow in light blue and black india silk and toque of blue chiffon, with a touch of black; Mr and Mrs Grace, the latter in cream irish lace over cream silk, and white hat with white plumes; Mr Alexander H. Higginson, who had some friends with him; Mr Robert Clement, Miss Bowness in cafe-au-lait silk, embroidered, and hat with pink roses; Miss Marie Nichols, Mrs Herbert Wells in black crepe de chine was with several friends; Mrs Schuecker in tan voile and lace and hat with green wings, Mr and Mrs W. H. W. Bicknell and Mr and Mrs B. F. Pitman. Tomorrow will be Harvard night, when a great time is expected by present members of the university and the alumni, and on Saturday evening the concerts close. Early the following week Mr Adamowski and several members of the orchestra will sail for Europe.

Globe
June 19-04.

BOSTON HERALD
JUNE 20, 1904.

Mrs. Gardner made her first appearance at the Pops Thursday night with a party including Miss Hetty Sargent. All of them had been at Lancester for the Patten-Thayer wedding. Mrs. Adamowski also had a table full of guests that night, and Mrs. Gardner spent the latter part of the evening with her party. Tonight is Harvard night, and there is sure to be a crush and a very lively one. Next Monday night, the closing one of the Pop season, will be Graduates' night, when the entire floor will be given over to the college boys, old and young, and the women and girls will be relegated to the balcony.

BOSTON JOURNAL
JUNE 21, 1904.

LAST NIGHTS AT THE "POPS."

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall end with Harvard Graduates' night, next Monday evening, and the final week of these delightful entertainments promises to be a brilliant one. This evening's program is to give prominence to Offenbach and Strauss, and both of these composers are represented by their best compositions. For Wednesday evening there will be an Italian composers' night; Thursday evening the selections will be made from those requested by patrons, and Friday evening there will be a soloists' night, when Mr. A. Hackbarth, horn; Mr. Kloepfel, trumpet; Mr. Birnbaum, violin; and Mr. Keller, 'cello; will contribute solo work. The Saturday night's program is an unusually popular one, and for the Harvard Graduates' night on Monday evening Mr. Adamowski has made selections that will add to the gaiety of the occasion.

HARVARD NIGHT WAS TAME AFFAIR

Old-Timers at the Pops Bewail Lack of Spirit Displayed on Such Occasions.

ENTHUSIASM WAS LACKING

Dinsmore and Gray "Personally Conducted" Selections of Their Individual Works.

Symphony Hall was filled to its capacity last night, it being the '04 Harvard night at the Pops. The old-timers branded it the tamest for many years. The concert was one of the finest, but disappointment was felt because of the lack of the good old Harvard spirit. The only time during the evening that anything resembling enthusiasm was displayed was when J. H. Dinsmore, '04, and F. H. Grey, '05, appeared on the conductor's stand to conduct the orchestra through the numbers which these gentlemen had composed.

Crimson banners bearing the names of the track team, the baseball nine, the football eleven, and the crew, were suspended from the balconies and in the rear of the stage was to be seen a large crimson electric sign spelling "Harvard."

Distributed through the program were such selections as "Cruiser Harvard," selections from "Boodle and Co.," the 1904 Hasty Pudding production; "Will-o'-the-Wisp," from the Pi Eta production of 1904; "Men of Harvard," "Fair Harvard" and "Up the street."

[79]

BOSTON HERALD

JUNE 21, 1904.

WANTED "VERITAS" AND THEY GOT IT

Harvard Men at Harvard Night at Pop Concert Got Everything Else They Wanted, Too, Including Lots of Fun.

"Harvard! Harvard! Harvard!
Rah! Rah! Rah!
Rah! Rah! Rah!
Rah! Rah! Rah!
Four! Four! Four!"

Although the foregoing slogan may be set up by the compositor in pica type, the boys who shouted it at the Pops last evening are not of that type. For that, a cheer:

Rah! Rah! Rah!
Rah! Rah! Rah!
Rah! Rah! Rah!
Densmore! Densmore! Densmore!

Speaking of Densmore, he is the member of the class of '04 who is responsible for "Boodle & Co.," and is also the author of "Veritas"—the march, not motto.

Last evening the boys who gathered themselves in Symphony Hall yelled lustily in this vein:

"We want Veritas! We want Veritas!" and the answer was that they got it.

Although Symphony Hall contained the undergraduates from over the river last evening, the gay and festive young roysterers could not contain themselves, and gave themselves up to much energetic display of college spirit.

Harvard night at the Pops means that the college spirit is on tap.

Last evening was no exception, and there was enough of that indefinable, indefinite, inspiring college warmth let loose to win a boat race, a baseball game, or a football game, if it could be inoculated into the players.

The players came in for their share of glorification at that. Suspended from the balconies were big crimson flags of tissue paper with the names of the nine on one, the eleven on another, the eight on a third and the track team on a fourth. When the concert started there were 84 flags floating from the balconies. When the concert ended, they were all gone, each bound for some young lady's collection of college souvenirs.

But the line-up of the nine did not contain the name of Clarkson. Maybe the junta forgot to put it on. Maybe Clarkson is not entitled to as big an "H" as any man on the list—or is it that universities, as well as republics, are sometimes ungateful?

Being Harvard night, there was a special Harvard programme, Harvard conducted, and Harvard sung.

The opening number was the march "Cruiser Harvard;" the fifth number was a selection from "Boodle & Co.," conducted by "Johnny" Densmore, the composer, who was obliged at this point to give his march "Veritas." The eighth number was a selection from "Will-O'-the-Wisp," the Pi Eta production, written by Davison and Grey of '06. Mr. Davison conducted and Mr. Grey conducted the next selection, a march, "Men of Harvard."

"Fair Harvard" was sung by the audience, standing, and the concert closed with "Our Director" and "Up the Street."

Taken as a whole, the evening was in a beautiful crimson tint, all except the big H-A-R-V-A-R-D electric sign just over the players. That was reddish. No one minded it, however, as it was clearly to be seen that a sign which gave out a crimson glare would not be so striking. The entire hall, from floor up to and including the top balcony, was filled by young Harvard men and young ladies who have leanings toward Harvard. Maybe they were sisters of the students, but they looked too happy for that.

The cheering was notable for its continuity, if not for its consistency. When five boys in a corner cheer for the class of 1910, it is hard to tell whether they are members of the Somerville high school, who will matriculate in two years or whether they are jolliers.

Mr. Adamowski was cheered specially, generally, and ad lib., and bowed his acknowledgments and repeated the final movements of the numbers unsparingly.

Of course, a few mistakes were made. Per examplum, when the orchestra played Zeller's delightful waltz, "Gruenlichter," a small party thought it was a medley, and when they caught something that sounded like "Down, Down, Down, Where the Wurtzburger Flows" they started to sing. It didn't last long as the author of the latter piece probably only lifts half a movement at a time.

Well! they had a jolly old time, bless their roguish young hearts, and they may come again next year.

Herald
June 21-04

LAST NIGHTS AT THE "POPS."

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall end with Harvard graduates' night next Monday evening, and the final week of these delightful entertainments promises to be a brilliant one. The success of the season has exceeded the most sanguine expectations, and the management, with the assistance of Mr. Adamowski and the excellent orchestra, has done much to add to the pleasure of the public during the last two months. This evening's programme is to give prominence to Offenbach and Strauss, and both of these composers are represented by their best compositions. For Wednesday evening there will be an Italian composers' night, Thursday evening the selections will be made from those requested by patrons, and Friday evening there will be a soloists' night, when Mr. A. Hackbarth, horn; Mr. Kloepfel, trumpet; Mr. Birnbaum, violin, and Mr. Keller, 'cello, will contribute solo work. The Saturday night's programme is an unusually popular one, and for the Harvard graduates' night on Monday evening Mr. Adamowski has made selections that will add to the gayety of the occasion. These concerts are given each evening from 8 till 11 o'clock.

ADVERTISER,

JUNE 21, 1904.

LAST NIGHTS AT THE "POPS."

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall end with Harvard graduates' night, next Monday, and the final week of these delightful entertainments promises to be a brilliant one. The success of the season has exceeded the most sanguine expectations, and the management with the assistance of Mr. Adamowski and the excellent orchestra, have done much to add to the pleasure of the public during the last 2 months. The Saturday night's programme is an unusually popular one and for the Harvard graduate night on Monday evening, Mr. Adamowski has made selections that will add to the gaiety of the occasion.

BOSTON POST.

JUNE 21, 1904

NO RUSHING AT HARVARD "POPS"

Lusty cheers, toasts galore and the attendance of pretty women combined with stirring strains of music in making "Harvard night" at the "Pops" last evening a great event. But there was no rushing.

Sons of the institution on the other side of the Charles were out in force. Men who won degrees years ago rallied to the honor of their alma mater and their hoary heads dotted the expanse of rollicking, shouting students. Among the fair sex were to be seen many who showed their loyalty with crimson raiment. One maiden who appeared with a costume entirely of that color became visibly embarrassed when a wild outburst of enthusiasm followed her entrance.

In the class yells which thundered upward from the floor, balconies and corridors, the 1904 cohorts appeared to have the best of it. Delegations of that class were scattered through the hall, and their ringing vollies hurled defiance to yells of the other factions.

LAST NIGHTS AT THE "POPS"

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall will end with Harvard graduates' night next Monday evening, and the final week of these delightful entertainments promises to be a brilliant one. The success of the season has exceeded the most sanguine expectations, and the management, with the assistance of Mr. Adamowski and the excellent orchestra, has done much to add to the pleasure of the public during the past two months. This evening's programme is to give prominence to Offenbacn and Strauss, and both of these composers are represented by their best compositions.

For Wednesday evening there will be an Italian composers' night, Thursday evening the selections will be made from those requested by patrons, and Friday evening there will be a soloists' night when Mr. A. Hackbarth, horn; Mr. Kloepfel, trumpet; Mr. Birnbaum, violin, and Mr. Keller, 'cello, will contribute solo work. The Saturday night's programme is an unusually popular one, and for the Harvard graduates' night on Monday evening Mr. Adamowski has made selections that will add to the gayety of the occasion.

EVENING RECORD,

JUNE 21, 1904.

LAST NIGHTS AT THE "POPS."

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall end with Harvard graduates' night, next Monday, and the final week of these delightful entertainments promises to be a brilliant one. The success of the season has exceeded the most sanguine expectations, and the management with the assistance of Mr. Adamowski and the excellent orchestra, have done much to add to the pleasure of the public during the last 2 months. The Saturday night's programme is an unusually popular one and for the Harvard graduate night on Monday evening, Mr. Adamowski has made selections that will add to the gaiety of the occasion.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, JUNE 21, 1904

HARVARD NIGHT.

Everything at Pops is of Crimson.

Favorites Win Applause That is Hearty.

Presence of Many Women Makes for Order.

Last evening an electric light sign, blushing a deep crimson, announced from its position over the stage at Symphony hall that it was Harvard night at the Pops, and by the time the first selection was under way several hundred of the crowd that make Cambridge famous had assembled and were insistently and vociferously proclaiming that the whole show was for Harvard.

Conductor Adamowski had arranged a program designed to please the taste of Harvard sympathizers, and the hall was given over to the friends and people of Harvard to do with it as they pleased.

In the beginning the hall was prettily decorated, but only in the beginning. At frequent intervals around the balcony railing there were hung red banners bearing black "H'S" and the names of the various athletic teams and crews of '04. Silently but surely these disappeared one by one, and at the end of the first intermission but three remained. Later these three met the fate of their fellows.

It was an unusually orderly crowd. Almost every group of students was toned down by the presence of two or more of the sex that cheers but does not celebrate. Never in the past has there been such a general outcoming of the women friends of Harvard on a Harvard night at the pops.

The exuberance was confined almost entirely to cheering, and the greater part of the cheering was for Harvard. Once the crowd started in on an enthusiastic cheer for conductor Adamowski, but Adamowski is hardly the sort of name to shout and the sound that drifted up to Apollo when the crowd finished "Rah-rahing" and struck the name of the conductor sounded something like a babel of Japanese and Russian battle cries.

The fifth number on the program was a selection from "Boodle & Co," the Hasty Pudding show of '04, and it was announced that the orchestra would be led by the composer, J. H. Densmore. Mr Densmore's appearance was the signal for wild and enthusiastic cheering, and after he had finished the "Boodle & Co" number the crowd yelled:

"More, more, more—Dens-more!"

Then everybody said: "We want 'Veritas'!"

And they got it. Again Mr Densmore took the baton and led the orchestra through the thrilling measures of his most celebrated march.

Later on F. H. Grey and Mr Davidson led the orchestra in their compositions, "Men of Harvard" and "Will-o-the-Wisp" from the Pi Eta show. They, too, were applauded and cheered.

Practically the only unusual excitement of the evening came when some mischievous spirits near the front of the hall set off some whistling fireworks that sent a shower of tiny sparks and a lot of smoke into the air. No one seemed frightened, and it was taken as a joke.

Last Nights at the "Pops."

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall end with "Harvard Graduates" night next Monday evening and the final week of these delightful entertainments promises to be a brilliant one. The success of the season has exceeded the most sanguine expectations and the management with the assistance of Mr Adamowski and the excellent orchestra have done much to add to the pleasure of the public during the last two months. This evening's program is to give prominence to Offenbach and Strauss and both of these composers are represented by their best compositions.

Wednesday evening there will be an Italian composers' night; Thursday evening the selections will be made from those requested by patrons, and Friday evening there will be a soloist's night when Mr A. Hackbarth horn, Mr Kloepfel trumpet, Mr Birnbaum violin, and Mr Keller 'cello will contribute solo work. The Saturday night's program is an unusually popular one, and for the "Harvard Graduates'" night, Monday evening, Mr Adamowski has made selections that will add to the gayety of the occasion.

BOSTON POST.

JUNE 23, 1904

At the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall this evening the programme will afford a hearing of a number of the solo artists of the orchestra, including Messrs. Schuecker, harp; Kloeffel, trumpet; Birnbaum, violin, and Keller, cello, and the Boston trombone quartet will also contribute some numbers. Tomorrow evening a request programme will be presented, popular music will be played Saturday evening and the season will end with Harvard graduates' night next Monday evening.

[80]

Transcript

TUESDAY, JUNE 21, 1904

HARVARD NIGHT AT THE POPS

Symphony Hall, Prettily Decorated, Was Crowded and a Fine Programme Was Given

Symphony Hall was filled to its capacity last night, it being this season's "Harvard night" at the Pops. The concert was one of the finest yet given, but there appeared to be a lack of the good old Harvard spirit. There were as usual the class yells, which thundered upward from the floor, balconies and corridors, and the 1904 men appeared to have the best of it. Delegations of that class were scattered through the hall, and their ringing vollies hurled defiance to yells of the other factions.

Crimson banners bearing the names of the track team, the baseball nine, the football eleven, and the crew, were suspended from the balconies and in the rear of the stage was to be seen a huge crimson electric sign spelling "Harvard." In the beginning, the hall showed how prettily it was decorated, but only in the beginning. At frequent intervals all these special decorations silently disappeared, one by one, and at the end of the first intermission scarcely anything remained, all having been "appropriated" by enthusiastic young women, who took them for souvenirs. It was an unusually orderly crowd. Never in the past has there been such a general outcoming of the women friends of Harvard on a "Harvard night" at the Pops. The exuberance was confined almost entirely to cheering, and chiefly for Harvard.

Being "Harvard night," there was a special Harvard programme. The opening number was the march "Cruiser Harvard;" the fifth number was a selection from "Boodle & Co.," the Hasty Pudding show of this year, conducted by John H. Densmore, the composer, class of 1904, who was obliged at this point to give his march, "Veritas." The eighth number was a selection from "Will-o'-the-Wisp," the Pi Eta production, written by Davison and Grey of 1906. Mr. Davison conducted, and Mr. Grey conducted the next selection, a march, "Men of Harvard." These numbers all aroused great enthusiasm. Assistant Manager F. R. Comee, himself a Harvard man, as usual did everything in advance and also during the evening to make the occasion enjoyable and memorable.

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall end with Harvard graduates' night, next Monday evening, and the final week of these entertainments promises to be a brilliant one. This evening's programme is to give prominence to Offenbach and Strauss and both of these composers are represented by their best compositions. For Wednesday evening there will be an Italian composer's night, Thursday evening the selections will be made from those requested by patrons and Friday evening there will be a soloist's night, when Mr. A. Hackbarth, horn; Mr. Kloepfel, trumpet; Mr. Birnbaum, violin, and Mr. Keller, 'cello, will contribute solo work. The Saturday night programme is an unusually popular one and for the Harvard graduates' night, on Monday evening, Mr. Adamowski has made selections that will add to the gayety of the occasion. Concerts are given each evening from eight till eleven.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1904

At the "pop" concert in Symphony hall this evening the program will afford a hearing of a number of the solo artists of the orchestra, including Messrs Schuecker, Kliffel, Birnbaum and Keller. The Boston trombone quartet will also contribute some numbers. Tomorrow evening a request program will be presented, and the season will end with "Harvard graduates' night" next Monday evening.

ADVERTISER,

JUNE 23, 1904.

A very unusual programme has been planned for this evening's "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall. It is soloists' night, and among the individual players who will be heard in solo numbers are Messrs. Kloeffel, trumpet; Schuecker, harp; Birnbaum, violin; and Keller, 'cello. The Boston trombone quartet will also contribute to the evening's numbers.

BOSTON JOURNAL

JUNE 23, 1904.

At the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall this evening the program will afford a hearing of a number of the solo artists of the orchestra, including Messrs. Schuecker, harp; Kloeffel, trumpet; Birnbaum, violin, and Keller, cello, and the Boston trombone quartet will also contribute some numbers. Tomorrow evening a request program will be presented, a lot of popular music will be played Saturday evening and the season will end with Harvard graduate's night on Monday.

BOSTON HERALD
JUNE 23, 1904.

A very unusual programme has been planned for this evening's "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall. It is soloists' night, and among the individual players who will be heard in solo numbers are Messrs. Kloeffel, trumpet; Schuecker, harp; Birnbaum, violin, and Keller, 'cello. The Boston trombone quartet will also contribute. Mr. Adamowski will present a number of selections that have been requested tomorrow evening, and a popular programme has been planned for Saturday evening. The season ends with Harvard graduates' night next Monday evening.

Boston Transcript
THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1904

An unusual programme has been planned for this evening's "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall. It is soloists' night, and among the players who will be heard in solo numbers are Messrs. Kloeffel, trumpet; Schuecker, harp; Birnbaum, violin, and Keller, 'cello. The Boston Trombone Quartet will also contribute to the programme. Mr. Adamowski will present a number of selections that have been requested tomorrow evening, and a popular programme will be presented Saturday evening. The season ends with Harvard Graduates' Night next Monday evening.

Boston Daily Globe.
SATURDAY, JUNE 25, 1904

The "Pop" concert at Symphony hall this evening promises to be an unusually interesting occasion. The last Saturday night of the season will undoubtedly call out a big audience and Mr Adamowski has planned a very attractive program, having as two of its features the "1812" overture and the intermezzo from Offenbach's "Contes d'Hoffmann."

BOSTON HERALD
JUNE 25, 1904.

The last Saturday night at the "Pop" concerts promises to bring a great audience to Symphony Hall this evening. Mr. Adamowski has arranged a particularly brilliant programme for this occasion, including in its selections the great "1812" overture and the charming intermezzo from Offenbach's Contes d'Hoffman. The "Pop" concert season ends on Monday evening with Harvard Graduates' Night, and there is every evidence that this event will give a notable ending to the season. There are a few balcony seats to be had for this occasion.

BOSTON JOURNAL
JUNE 25, 1904.

The "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall this evening promises to be an unusually interesting occasion. The last Saturday night of the season will undoubtedly call out a big audience, and Mr. Adamowski has planned a very attractive program for the occasion, having as two of its features the "1812" overture and the charming intermezzo from Offenbach's "Contes d'Hoffmann."

BOSTON POST.
JUNE 25, 1904

The last Saturday night at the "Pop" concerts promises to bring a great audience to Symphony Hall this evening. Mr. Adamowski has arranged a particularly brilliant programme for this occasion, including the great "1812" overture and the charming intermezzo from Offenbach's "Contes d'Hoffmann." The "Pop" concert season will end on Monday evening with Harvard graduates' night.

ADVERTISER,
JUNE 25, 1904

The last Saturday night at the "Pop" concerts promises to bring a great audience to Symphony Hall this evening. Mr. Adamowski has arranged a particularly brilliant programme for this occasion, including in its selections the great "1812" overture and the charming inter-mezzo from Offenbach's Contes d'Hoffmann. The "Pop" concert season ends on Monday evening with Harvard graduates' night.

EVENING RECORD,
JUNE 25, 1904.

THE "POPS."

The last Saturday night at the "Pop" concerts promises to bring a great audience to Symphony Hall this evening. Mr. Adamowski has arranged a particularly brilliant programme for this occasion, including in its selections the great "1812" overture and the charming inter-mezzo from Offenbach's Contes d'Hoffmann. The "Pop" concert season ends on Monday evening with Harvard graduates' night.

Boston Transcript
SATURDAY, JUNE 25, 1904

The "Pop" concert season comes to an end with the Harvard graduates' night Monday evening. This annual event has come to be included in the notable happenings of commencement week and the Harvard "boys" throughout the country count upon attending their annual "Pop." Mr. Adamowski has made up an admirable list of selections and it is more than likely that vocal efforts by the graduates will add to and enliven the evening's programme. Some of the numbers that will appeal particularly to the graduates are the march "Veritas" Densmore '04, a selection from "Hernani" Osborn '84, the march "Up the Street" Morse '96, "Fair Harvard" and the march dedicated to the class of 1884 P. H. Goepp '84. The "Pop" season has proved a particularly successful one and the good taste and judgment of Mr. Adamowski in selecting and directing the season's programme has been universally commended.

SUNDAY JOURNAL,
JUNE 26, 1904.

The last week of the Pops was such as made the close one of glory.

Tables were fashionably surrounded at each evening and the special nights were well observed. Graduates' night, tomorrow, will bring out more than a full house and seats are at a premium.

SUNDAY POST,
JUNE 26, 1904

THE LAST "POP" CONCERT

The eight weeks' season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall will end tomorrow evening with the annual Harvard graduates' night, which has come to be recognized as one of the principal events of the commencement week of Harvard University. The various classes through their secretaries have secured for their members all of the tables on the floor of the hall, and a large number of balcony seats have also been taken for the lady friends of the members. There are, however, a limited number of seats in the first balcony and the second balcony will, as usual, be open to buyers of admission tickets.

The programme afranged by Mr. Adamowski is full of attractive features and the graduates can be relied upon to add to its numbers and enliven its performance. The compositions included in the evening's work, which have a particular interest to the graduates, are the march "Veritas," Densmore, '04; a selection from "Hernani," Osborne, '84; the march, "Up the Street," Morse, '96; "Fair Harvard," and the march dedicated to the class of 1884, P. H. Goepp, '84.

It is gratifying to know that the "Pop" concert season has been a success and that the programmes selected and played under the direction of Mr. T. Adamowski have proved immensely popular with the patrons. The amusement public has again been under obligations to the management of these delightful entertainments by the admirable manner in which they have been conducted.

SUNDAY HERALD

Published Every Sunday in the Year.
Vol. CXV., No. 178.

SUNDAY, JUNE 26, 1904.

Although there was not quite so much noisy demonstration for Harvard night at the Pops Monday and the evening was noticeably more quiet in other ways, it seemed to be none the less enjoyable for the participants and for tht large feminine contingent on the floor and in the balcony, where every table and every seat were occupied. Mrs. Gardiner's party in the balcony was perhaps the largest. Mrs. Gardner was all in white. Her gown was of satin and lace and she wore a large toque. Miss Nannie Winsor, in blue and white silk with a black and white hat with a party, including Richard H. Weld, Jr.; Miss Katharine Bullard, in white silk flowered in black; Miss Annie Manning, in white cloth, her sister, Miss Abby Manning, in pearl gray, both wearing black and white toques; Mrs. E. F. Fenellosa, all in black, and Miss Brenda Fenellosa, in figured silk with white lace and touches of pale blue and a lace hat with white plumes and black velvet, were also there.

There was a lot of good cheering, but comparatively little shouting and singing. The Pop concert season will close tomorrow night, when the graduates will have the floor to themselves, but numerous seats have already been secured in the balcony by the families of the men, who will be below, young girls and their chaperones. Mr. Adamowski, who has done such good work on the conductor's stand and has given even more universal satisfaction than on previous seasons, has well earned his holiday. He and his wife are shortly sailing for Europe. Their trip will include a visit to Poland.

Boston Sunday Globe
SUNDAY, JUNE 26, 1904.

END OF THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The "Pop" concert season which has made such a pleasant feature of the city amusements for the last eight weeks comes to an end with the "Harvard graduates" night tomorrow evening. This annual event has come to be included in the notable happenings of commencement week and the Harvard "boys" throughout the country count upon attending their annual "Pop" as much as any other of the observances of this college season. Mr Adamowski has made up an admirable list of selections for the evening and it is more than likely that vocal efforts by the graduates will add to and enliven the evening's program.

Some of the numbers that will appeal particularly to the enthusiasm of the graduates are the march, "Veritas," Densmore '04; a selection from "Hernani," Osborn '84; the march, "Up the Street," Morse '96; "Fair Harvard" and the march dedicated to the class of 1884, P. H. Goepp '84.

The "Pop" season has proved a particularly successful one and the good taste and judgment of Mr Adamowski in selecting and directing the season's program has been universally commended by the patrons. The management of the concerts is again to be congratulated upon having successfully contributed to the pleasure of the Boston public and commended for the admirable fashion in which these entertainments have been conducted.

—The Pop concerts will close tomorrow evening, graduates' night, and it must be admitted by the hundreds of patrons that they have never been more enjoyable than this season, and that the music has never been better. These concerts come at the most opportune time, after the long season of recitals and so much classical music, and fill in the most cheery way the time intervening between the close of the Symphony concerts and the going away for summer vacations. Monday evening, Harvard night, the hall was filled with a gay company of students, accompanied by their young girl friends, all in prettiest of summer costumes. There was a good deal of shouting and enthusiasm as the favorite numbers were played, and some not on the program were called for and given. Mr Densmore, Harvard '04, conducted selections from his own Hasty Pudding production, "Boodle & Co." Mr Gray, Harvard '06, conducted two of his own compositions, and Mr Morse, Harvard '96, his ever-popular march, "Up the Street," Thursday was soloists' night and Friday request night. Mrs Adamowski has entertained friends almost every evening since the beginning of the season. Wednesday, her sister, Mrs John L. Conoway, Mr Parkman Haven, Mrs Harry Pratt McKean and others were her guests. Mrs McKean, who has come up from Philadelphia to her cottage at Prides Crossing, was very attractive in a gown of pale-blue muslin, with yoke and insertions of lace and a chiffon hat of the same shade trimmed with blue plumes; Mrs Adamowski and her sister were in black, one in chiffon, the other crepe de chine and lace with black hats; Mr Eben D. Jordan had his son and his daughter, Miss Dorothy, and a young girl friend of her as a guest. She was dressed in white muslin and lace and white lace hat; Miss Jordan wore pink silk muslin, tucked and trimmed with flounces of lace and a white lace hat, with pink satin ribbon bows and pink roses; Mrs Mudgett, in a champagne voile with applications of lace and narrow bands of persian silk, entertained two young ladies who were visiting here for the pleasant things of Wellesley college week—Miss Grant was in white lace and Miss Lamb in blue india silk with lace sleeves and yoke; Mr William Rotch, Mrs Rotch and their daughters; Mrs Samuel S. Shaw of Mt Vernon st, Dr and Mrs William Copley Winslow, Miss Helen Griswold, in dark blue silk muslin and black hat with foliage; Mr and Mrs Kenneth Horton, with several young friends; Mr Atherton, the Misses Manning, both in white gowns and foliage hats; Mr and Mrs Comee entertained several friends, Mrs Comee in white silk with renaissance lace and a black hat with black ostrich plumes; Mrs John L. Gardner, in white chiffon with lace and a cream straw hat with white trimmings, brought friends with her. The hall was more cheery than usual on Monday evening with "Harvard" in illuminated letters over the stage and the crimson banners hung from the balconies, but before the close of the evening the banners had all been appropriated, to be kept as souvenirs. Tomorrow will be the most exciting night of the season and the concerts end with Mr Morse's "Up the Street."

Boston Transcript
TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1904

Harvard Men at the "Pops"

Conductor and Musicians Left Their Places When the Listeners Marched Upon the Stage

"Harvard Graduates' Night" brought to a close last evening in Symphony Hall the nineteenth season of the "Pop" concerts, and the great hall was crowded with people whose enjoyment and enthusiasm knew no bounds and who made the occasion memorable. Outside of the hall recognition of the occasion was taken by means of large red electric letters spelling "Pops," and similar letters above the stage of the hall blazed forth the word "Harvard." Throughout the hall banners designated where various classes were to sit, but this applied only to the early part of the evening, as there soon was general intermingling which soon became a good-natured friendly mixup.

It was in all ways a representative Harvard night, and the Harvard spirit was shown everywhere. The cheers for the classes, the cheers for President Eliot and the cheers just for old Harvard were given with that fervor and vigor which makes a Harvard man proud that he is one. To an onlooker the sport and enthusiasm are contagious, and if he be not a college man he feels naturally a little tinge of regret.

The graduates came from all over the country, knowing that they would find their classmates here, and in a few days they will go away again, only to return next year, and the next. This college spirit is infectious. Judges, gray-haired business men, learned members of the bar, are made young again and cheer as heartily as they did during their freshman year. Harvard enthusiasm underlies it all and fills every man to the brim, from the young member of the class of 1903 to Hon. John S. Keyes of Concord, N. H., eighty-two years of age, a member of the class of '41, who sat in the balcony and watched the other boys cheering and marching on the floor below. Mr. Keyes is one of Harvard's oldest graduates and honored sons, and he stood while his fellow-collegians sang "Fair Harvard," which greatly moved him.

During the intermission, preceding the last group of numbers, I. Tucker Burr of the class of '79 mounted the leader's place on the stage and led the entire gathering in prolonged cheers for almost everything bearing relation to Harvard. The class of '98, led by "Bart" Hayes, went up to the platform, and, joining forces with 1901, led by "Jack" Hallowell, cheered lustily for themselves and for Harvard, and for each class from that of '75 up to this year. "Fair Harvard" aroused the boys so that nothing would do but an encore. Mr. Adamowski was judicious in his selection of his encore, for in his endeavors to please he gave them the good old college air, "Johnny Harvard." This was the signal for a grand parade in which fully one-half of those present participated. While a part of them were content to use the available floor space for their parade ground the younger men were more particular and mounted the stage. This was too much for Mr. Adamowski and his musicians, and they smilingly withdrew and left the whole stage to the boys. They gave nine "'rahs" for the conductor and many other cheers and yells; soon the doors of Symphony Hall had been closed for the season and Harvard Graduates' Night at the Pops had become history.

BOSTON POST.
JUNE 28, 1904

HARVARD GRADS AT THE POPS

Last night was graduates' night at the Pops.

The entire floor of Symphony Hall was filled with Harvard men. Every class from '79 up was represented by students who cheered, sang and waved banners.

The banner class, '79, with its 38 representatives, was celebrating its 25th anniversary, and was made the chief object of the cheering.

President Roosevelt, President Eliot and Harvard were also cheered.

Music composed by Harvard graduates was played by the orchestra.

The good time ended with "Glory, glory for the Crimson, for this is Harvard's day," sung by the students while they marched across the platform.

[81]

BOSTON JOURNAL.

JUNE 28, 1904.

HARVARD BOYS DRIVE SYMPHONY MEN FROM STAGE

March "Johnny Harvard" Proves Too Much for Enthusiastic Graduates and Musicians Leave the Program Unfinished.

Because the hilariousness of the Harvard grads led them to appropriate the stage for a parade ground last night at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall, Conductor Adamowski shouldered his baton and marched his musical forces away, refusing to complete the program.

The audience was all that could be desired, and on the floor of the hall every class from '79 to '03 was represented. Of all the classes present '79 was unquestionably the center of attraction. From the start to the premature finish, '79 could be heard on the end of nearly every yell.

During the first eight numbers on the program everything went smoothly. There was lots of cheering, but perfect order was maintained.

At Second Intermission.

It was during the second intermission the crowd began to warm up, and in order to make their cheering more effective the members of '98 mounted the stage. While officials of the hall were endeavoring to persuade them to desist, '01 came into sudden prominence at the other end of the stage, and the trick was off. For ten minutes the enthusiastic grads swarmed upon the platform and lustily cheered the class of '79, the members of which occupied seats directly in front of the conductor's stand, prominent among them being Secretary of War Taft. Having been permitted to cheer themselves nearly hoarse, the men filed back to the tables and resumed their seats preparatory to listening to the remainder of the concert.

"Fair Harvard" aroused the boys so that nothing would do but an encore. Adamowski was judicious in his selection of his encore, for in his endeavors to please he gave them the good old college air, "Johnny Harvard."

This was the signal for a grand parade in which fully one-half of those present participated. While a portion of them were content to use the available floor space for their parade ground the members of '01 were more particular and mounted the stage.

Adamowski Stops.

When Adamowski saw that his domain was invaded his countenance fell, as also did his hands with one of those decided gestures which indicate the end of a number. There was silence.

Not a member of the well-trained orchestra finished the bar of music which was being played. A shake of the head and a wave of the hand from their conductor followed. As one man the musicians rose to leave the stage, led by the conductor.

For fully five minutes the cheering continued, hardly a person noticing that the program had not been completed. As the lights were slowly extinguished the crowds sought the exits, and all was over for the season of 1904.

ADVERTISER,

JUNE 28, 1904.

HARVARD NIGHT AT POPS.

Amid lusty cheering, fierce stamping and echoes of the famous Cambridge yell, Harvard graduates night brought the Pop concerts to a brilliant finish at Symphony Hall last evening. And the end came much sooner than either those in the balcony or the orchestra were aware, after what might be called a jolly "grads night."

The orchestra under the direction of Mr. Adamowski was playing an encore to "Fair Harvard." It was the tune of "John Brown's Body," to which the words "Glory glory for the Crimson" are put. Instantly class after class throughout the hall took up the air. Singing was followed by marching and marching by a stampede towards the platform. The class of 1901 led by "Jack" Hallowell, fully 200 strong, fell into line, and up they went right into the stage where the orchestra was playing.

Not in the least to be outdone, the class of '98 rushed up the centre aisle and one by one were hauled upon the platform. It looked as though the classes were about to rush upon each other when the music abruptly stopped. Mr. Adamowski was put to flight by the on-rushing throng of students. Musician after musician left the seat, apparently fearful of his own person, to say nothing of the music racks, music etc. It looked like a "rough house" for several minutes when Mr. Comee appeared on the stage and requested quiet. The lights went down and Harvard graduates night of 1904 was a thing of the past.

It was a typical "Grads night," both in the general ensemble and decorative effects. On the stage and front of the big organ was a huge electrical sign, "Harvard," with the baseball score 5 and 3 on either side in red and blue respectively. Over the balconies hung scores of crimson banners bearing the names of the crew, baseball, football and track team. Before the evening was half gone these were in the possession of the fair sex who sat alongside and watched their brothers, cousins and friends sport below.

Early in the evening the class of '98 afforded considerable amusement for the spectators and classes on the floor by marching in, headed by a huge flag with '98 marked in blazing letters. Before the "grads" had really begun to get warmed up, a '98 man hurried to the upper balcony with the flag, placing it in a high nook near the statue Apollo. Everybody watched the fate of the flag, which was all too apparent, for some 1901 boys had their eyes upon it. Soon a youth was seen climbing to the balconies, the flag was down and fluttered to the floor, accompanied by wild yells that drowned the best efforts of Mr. Adamowski and his musicians.

From 8 until 11 p.m. the cheering was incessant. First '79, nearly 40 strong after a quarter of a century out of college, would cheer 1901, now celebrating its triennial; then the response. The class of '91 cheered for '95, '96 for '92, '97 for '84, and so on until it was a perfect pandemonium of long Harvards and 3 times 3.

Between the intermission, I. T. Bird of '79 climbed upon the platform and led all the graduates on the floor in the sweeping Harvard yell. They cheered for the nine, the crew, the eleven, Pres. Eliot, the class of '79, Adamowski, and when that was done gave 3 times 3 and a tiger for their women guests, who responded by standing.

...ignited from flying rockets and fir... crackers.

All the employes on the first floo... escaped without serious injury. Th... front of the first floor was blown ou... and soon the entire building was i... flames.

Every effort was made to rescue thos... on the third floor. Firemen climbe... ladders in the midst of the pyrotech...
nics and finally reached the third floor...
Miss Sempson and Jancovitch were... alive, but died in a hospital. Berma... was dead when taken from the buildin...

During the rescue three firemen wer... injured and three other persons wer... also cut and burned, but their injuri... are not considered serious.

The flames spread to the building oc... cupied by H. S. Kilner & Co. publisher... and that occupied by J. L. Gibney &...
Bros. dealers in automobile supplies... but did no serious damage. The entir... loss on all three buildings, includin... stock, is estimated at $30,000. There wa...
no insurance on the fireworks estab... lishment.

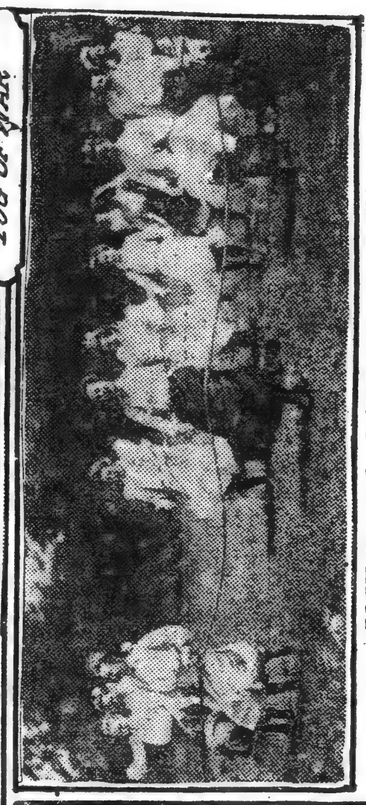
IN TWO DAYS' SESSION.

New Bedford District Ministerial Association Opens Its Meeting at Bridgewater.

BRIDGEWATER, June 27 — A two days' session of the New Bedford District ministerial association was opened in the Methodist church this afternoon with a good attendance. The program this afternoon began with a devotional exercise and was followed by public worship. Rev G. E. Brightman read the Scriptures and prayer was offered by Rev J. T. Docking. An address followed on "The All-Essential Essential," by Rev M. S. Kaufman. This evening there was a preaching service by Rev G. F. Scrivener, who spoke on "Unanswered Attacks on Prayer."

The session will continue tomorrow.

TUG OF WAR



50 YDS. DASH - WON BY MABEL V. ROSE.

JIM MURPHY STARTS THE GAME, OF "CAPTAIN BALL"

Members of the class of 1904 of the Hugh O'Brien school had an outing at Waverley Oaks yesterday, under the personal supervision of submaster George E. Murphy.

In a special car that left the schoolhouse at 9 a. m. the boys and girls ran... where they had a nice time feeding the ducks and geese.

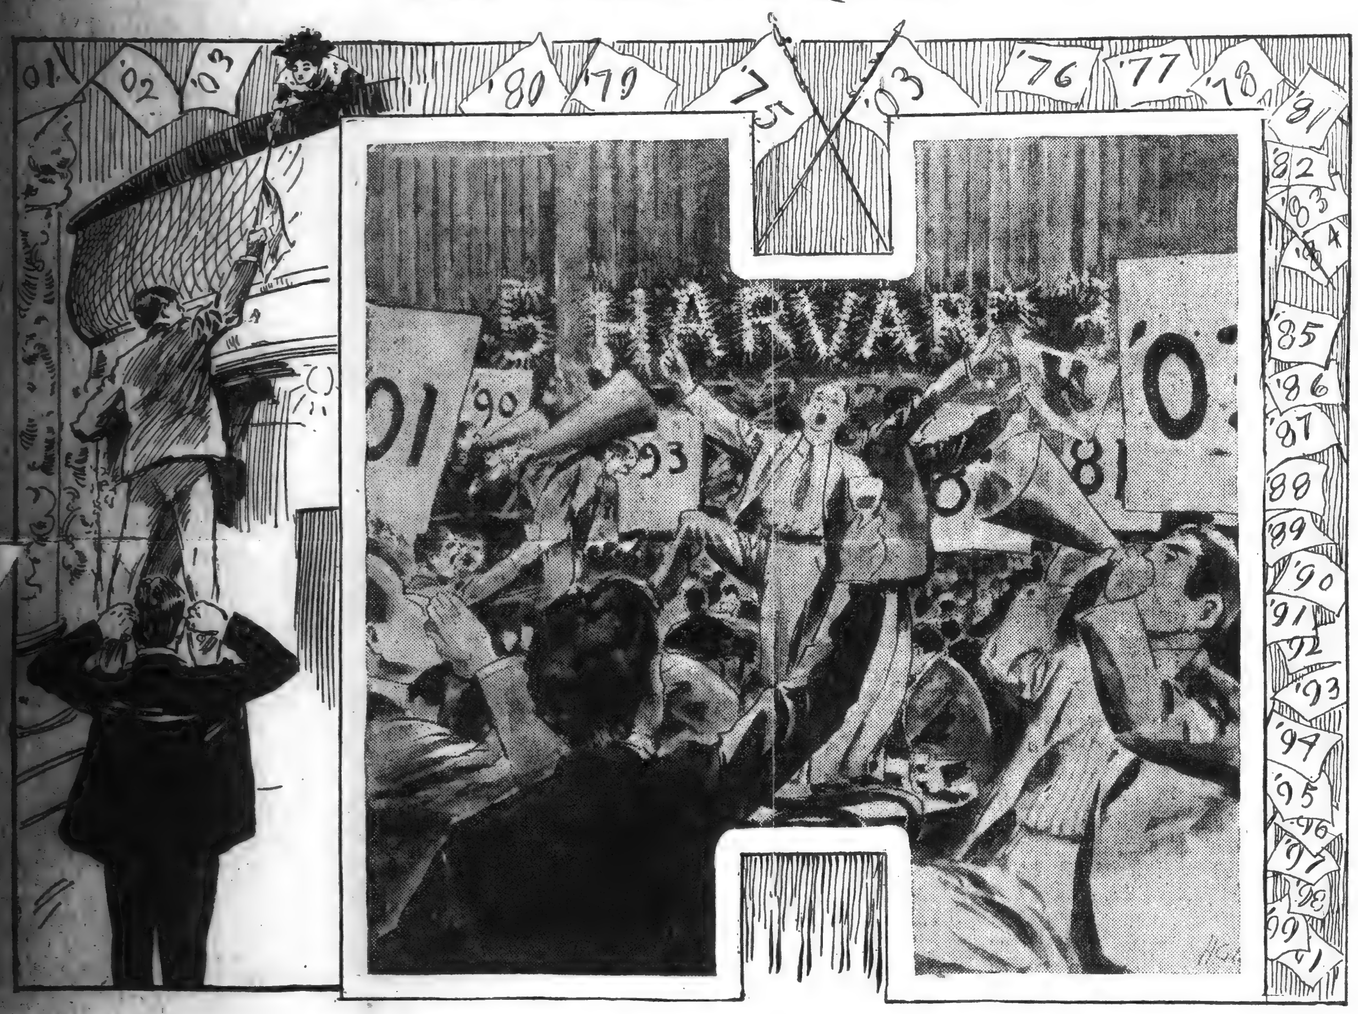
When it grew cooler in the afternoon there was a baseball game between the Browns and the Reds, which was won by the latter, 10 to 7, in five innings. About 5 another lunch was served. Then the girls settled down to... the class song...

Walter G. Woodworth won the race, with Walter A. Kelly second.

The real interest, however, centered in a tug-of-war contest between teams of girls. Frances Meltzer was captain of one team and Grace M. C. Hanley of the other. When the word was given...

TAME GRADUATES AT THE "POP" CONCERT.

Their Night is Filled With Cheers for Everybody, But Otherwise Quiet.



SCENES FROM GRADUATES' NIGHT AT THE "POP" CONCERT.

Graduates' night at the "Pops," which is generally uproarious and at times has bordered on an academic riot, was last night observed in a new spirit. It will go down in history as the most gentlemanly assemblage ever met in Symphony hall to make merry and shout for the Crimson. It was so gentlemanly and conventional that many said it was tame.

While the evening went along with the usual amount of cheering, there was almost no singing and only one demonstration. This demonstration came during an encore to "Fair Harvard," which was next to the last number on the program. "Jack" Hallowell and about 150 dervishes who belonged to the class of '01 began marching in single file round the hall. Everything went well until they marched upon the outer edge of the platform. Mr Adamowski, who holds art to be one thing and fun another, stopped conducting and was clearly displeased, but the orchestra finished the number. Then Mr Adamowski motioned the orchestra to leave the stage, and thus it happened that the last number, "Up the Street," wasn't played at all.

Meanwhile the '98 men, led by "Bart" Hayes, had come up to the platform and joining forces with '01 cheered lustily for themselves and for Harvard. Then the invaders dispersed and everybody was just as well satisfied as if the program had been finished.

The evening was entirely uneventful otherwise. Once all the classes, led by Isaac Tucker Burr Jr of the class of '79, gave three times three for Harvard, for Roosevelt, and for Pres Eliot, but this aroused little excitement.

The galleries were full of ladies, but those on the floor were hardly aware of it. Once they cheered the "Ladies," but didn't get even a handkerchief flutter back.

The floor was given up entirely to the Harvard classes. Near the front was stationed '79 and '89, which had about 40 and 60 men respectively. The class that did the best yelling was 1901, which, led by "Jack" Hallowell, could drown out with its 150 voices all the others. The men of '84 also had a good time, and cheered oftener than any other class.

Other classes that had good yelling contingents were '81, '82, '83, '91, '95, '96, '97 and '99.

The class of '54 was cheered once or twice, and so was the stadium. Excellent feeling prevailed, and when all united to cheer the Crimson or sing "Fair Harvard" devotion to alma mater was apparent.

The only singing of the evening was when "The Days of Old" in the Yankee Consul was played, the chorus being repeated several times.

There were no "celebrities" present. The oldest graduate at the concert was John S. Keyes of Concord, class of '41, who appeared to enjoy the fun as much as anybody.

POP CONCERT SEASON WOUND UP WITH HARVARD

HARVARD NIGHT AT THE "POP"

A Rousing Crimson Windup of the 19th Concert Season, Marked by Volley After Volley of Wildly Enthusiastic Cheers.

FOUNTAIN OF COLLEGE SPIRIT AT FULL HEAD

Students and Graduates Shout Themselves Hoarse—Conductor Adamowski Gracefully Yields Possession of Stage.

Harvard!

The "Pops"!

Pandemonium!

A hundred cheering, jeering, yelling, healthy young fellows waving the class flag of '98 crawling on to the platform of Symphony Hall and then shouting themselves hoarse with:

"Ninety-eight! Ninety-eight! Ninety-eight!

"Rah! Rah! Rah!

"Rah! Rah! Rah!

"Rah! Rah! Rah!

"Seventy-nine! Seventy-nine! Seventy-nine!"

indicated the enthusiasm which was in the barrel last evening.

But when Mr. Adamowski's orchestra played "Fair Harvard," every man on the floor of the hall stood still and sang, sang, sang, with all the fervor which can possess a college graduate, and the crowds of people in the balconies, leaning over, could see no movement among those below except the rhythmic waving of the class flags.

Even the smoke from the cigars and cigarettes was stopped while the college hymn was sung.

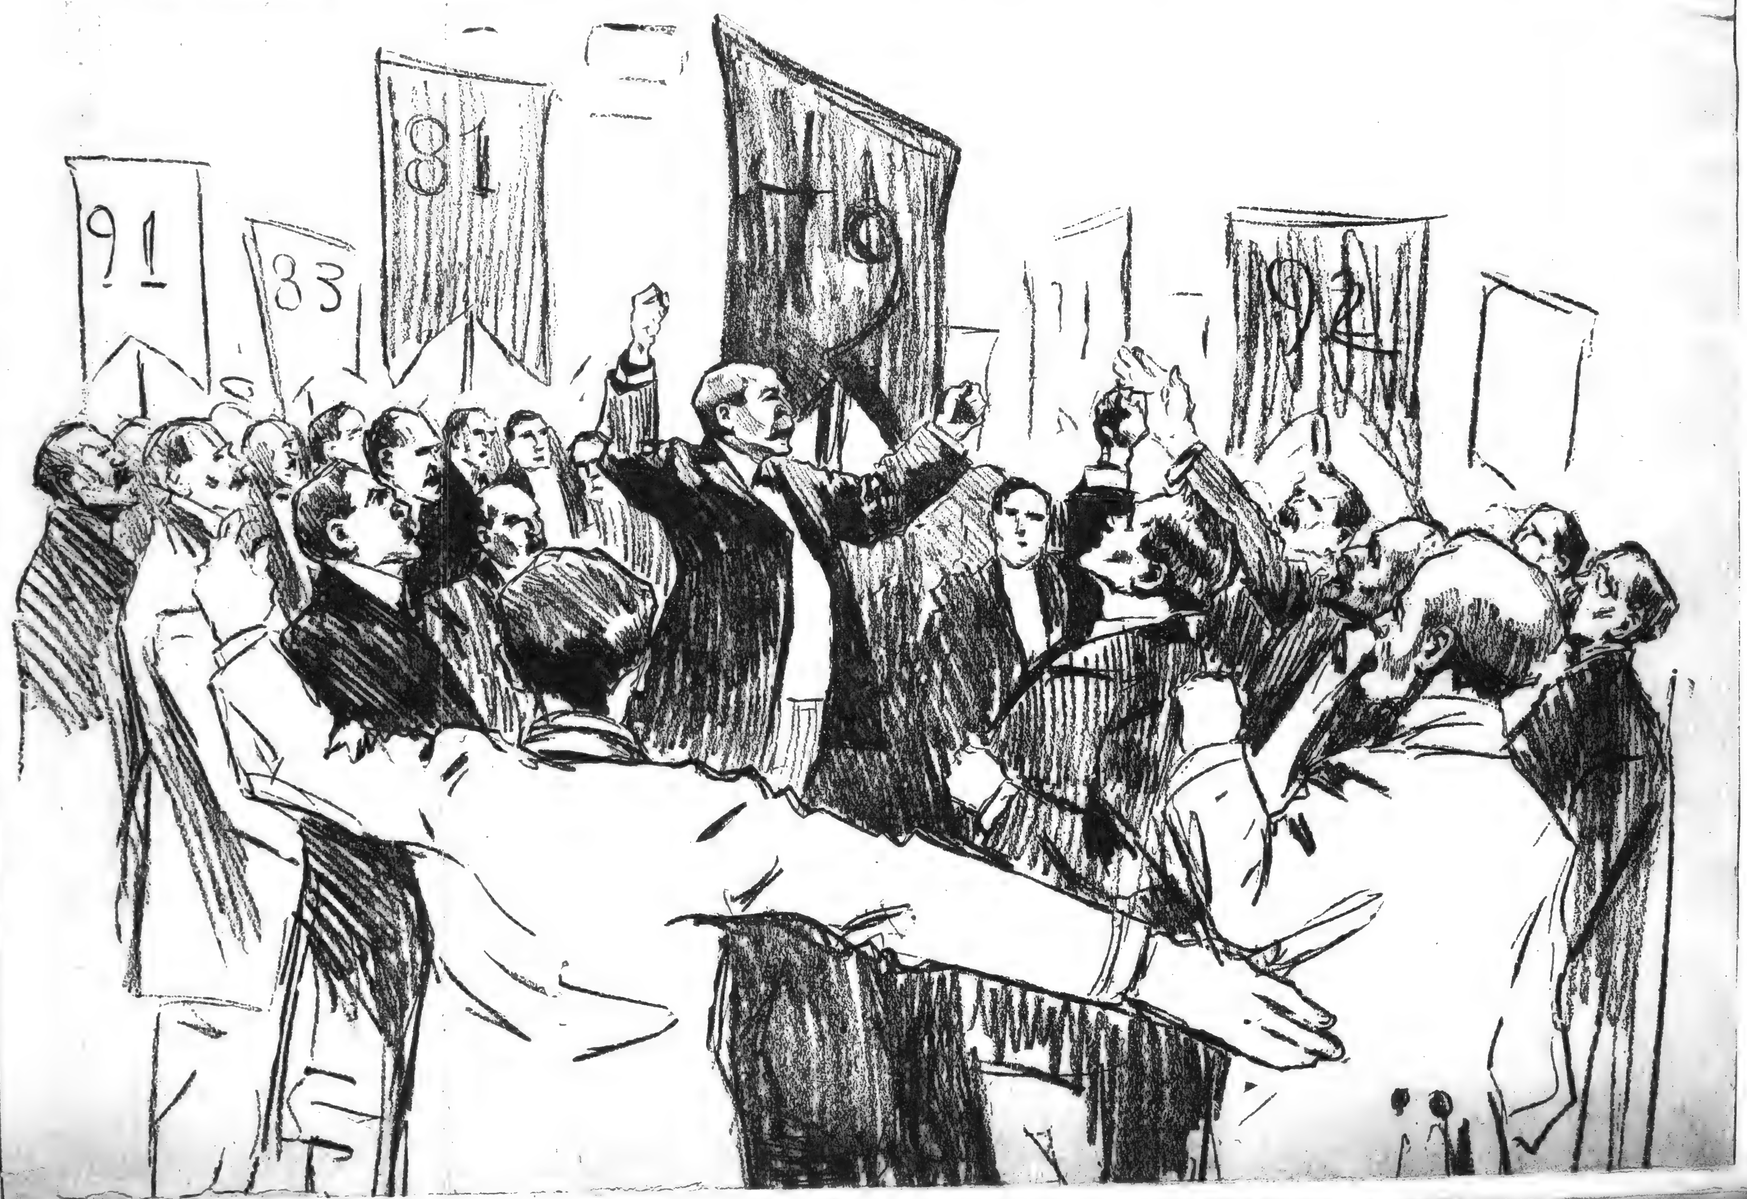
Last night was the 48th consecutive "Pop" and marked the close of the 19th season.

The Harvard graduates were on hand to help the Symphony players end the season in an approved Harvard manner—and they succeeded.

The evening was delightfully crimson, from the redly displayed "P-O-P-S" on the roof to the big red illuminated "H-A-R-V-A-R-D" electric sign on the back of the stage, with a red "5" and a blue "3" under it.

The crowd of last evening wasn't worrying about the result of the last game with Yale. It was thinking of what the boys would do today and Thursday, and they cheered [illegible] the [illegible]

Members of the Old Class of '79, Which Gave the Stadium to Harvard, Cheering the Class of '04 On Harvard Graduates' Night at the Closing Pop Concert of the Season in Symphony Hall



[83]

The Pope

Season 1905.

SYMPHONY HALL

POPS

THE TWENTIETH SEASON
NINETEEN HUNDRED AND FIVE

The Pope

Season 190

BILL OF FARE

LUNCH

SANDWICHES.

Ham	10
Tongue	10
Chicken	15
Swiss Cheese	15
Roquefort Cheese	15
Brie Cheese	15
Neufchatel Cheese	15
American Cheese	15
Sardine	15

ICE-CREAM.

Vanilla	20
Strawberry	20
Chocolate	20
Harlequin	25
Cake	15

PER PLATE.

Cold Ham	25
Cold Smoked Tongue	30
Cold Chicken	30
Swiss Cheese and Water Crackers	25
Roquefort " " " "	25
Brie " " " "	25
American " " " "	25
Neufchatel " " " "	20
Sardines	30
Pretzels	10
Karl Rusks	10

SALADS.

Lobster	40
Chicken	40

CONFECTIONS.

The Walter M. Lowney Co. Assorted Chocolates.

One pound packages, $1.00, 75, 60, and 50
One-half pound packages..35, 30, and 25

Assorted Chocolates and Bonbons.

1 lb. packages, 50. ½ lb. packages, 30

Chocolate Suranné	½ lb. boxes, 25
Chocolate Peppermints	½ lb. boxes, 25

CIGARS

(All Cigars will be enclosed in sealed envelopes, with the price printed thereon.)

Marguerite, Panetelas	From Estabrook & Eaton.	10c., 3 for 25c.
Salerosa, Ideals		10c. each
E. & E., Invincibles		15c., 2 for 25c.
El Principe de Gales, Londres Grande		10c. each
Manuel Garcia, Consuelos		15c., 2 for 25c.
Bock & Co., Reciprocity		15c., 2 for 25c.
Bock & Co., Especiales		20c., 5 for $1.00
Lords of England, Delmontes		20c., 3 for 50c.
La Carolina, Perfectos		25c. each
Barrister, Perfectos	From Daniel Frank & Co.	10c., 3 for 25c.
Celebridad, Perfecto		10c. each
American, Puritanos (all Havana)		15c., 2 for 25c.
American, Concha Fina Especial (all Havana)		10c., 3 for 25c.
American, Perfecto (all Havana)		20c., 3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter, Puritanos (all Havana)		15c., 2 for 25c.
Mundo, Favoritas (all Havana)		15c. each
Constancia, Londres Especial (imported)		15c. each
Mapa de Cuba, Perfecto (imported)		25c. each
El Roble, Concha Especiales	From S. S. Pierce Co.	10c., 3 for 25c.
Buscador, Rothschilds		15c., 2 for 25c.
Pembina, Bouquet		10c., 3 for 25c.
Overland, Perfecto		15c., 2 for 25c.
Blason, Regalia Chiquita		15c., 2 for 25c.
Iberia, Bachelor Especials		15c., 2 for 25c.
Iberia, Claveles		15c. straight
Cosmopolitana, Perfecto Extra		20c. straight
Romeo and Julieta, Perfectos		25c. straight
Iberia, Mercedes		20c., 3 for 50c.
Iberia, Americanos		25c. straight
Iberia, Regalia Fina Especial		20c., 3 for 50c.
Punch, Perfectos		25c. straight
Iberia, Emenencias		25c. straight
Fernandez & Saxby, Petit Perfectos		20c. straight
Blason, Brevas		20c. straight
Ginita Deliciosos Extra (domestic)	From C. B. Perkins & Co.	10c., 3 for 25c.
Catriona Perfectos (domestic)		10c. each
Petronila Puritanos (clear Havana)		10c. each
Tedesco Exquisitos (domestic)		15c., 2 for 25c.
Petronila Rothschilds (clear Havana)		15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra (imported)		15c., 2 for 25c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos (imported)		15c. each
Romeo and Juliet Pacificos (imported)		20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Americanos (imported)		20c. each
Grafton, Petit Perfectos	From Wood, Pollard & Co.	10c., 3 for 25c.
Blenheim, Perfectos Extra		10c. each
Nottingham, Perfectos		10c. each
Charles the Great, Puritanos Finos		15c., 2 for 25c.
Don Rodrigo, Puritanos		15c., 2 for 25c.
Cordova, Perfectos		25c.

Richmond Straight Cut	20c.	No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip	15c.
Mah Mal No. 5	15c.	No. 2 " " " club size	20c.
Mah Mal No. 3	25c.	Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip	25c.
Mah Mal No. 1	30c.	Mah Mal Cork Tip	25c.

LIST OF DRINKS

SCHLITZ BREWING CO. Milwaukee Beer on draught	10
Claret	15	Plain Lemonade	10
Rhine Wine	15	Lemonade with Wine	15
Rhine Wine and Seltzer	15	Soda Lemonade	15
Claret Punch	20	Soda Lemonade with Wine	20
Claret Cobbler	20	Egg Lemonade	20
Rhine Wine Cobbler	20	Apollinaris Lemonade	20
Plain Soda	10	Pureoxia Soda Lemonade	15

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC ALES, LAGER BEER, AND CIDER.

	PT.		PT.
Bass & Co.'s Pale Ale (Foster's Bottling)	25	Original Budweiser Beer (Anheuser-Busch Brew. Ass'n)	25
Bass & Co.'s Pale Ale, White Label	25	King's Bohemian Beer	20
" " " " Dog's Head	25	Pfaff's Lager	20
Van Nostrand's P. B. Ale	20	American Brewing Co. A.B.C. Beer	20
Guinness' Stout	25	Ginger Ale (C. & C.)	25
Muir's Scotch Ale	25	Cochrane's Belfast Ginger Ale	25
Pilsener Beer	25	Duffy's "1842" Cider, non-alcoholic, Quarts, .50; Pints, .25; Half Pints	15
Culmbacher Beer	25	S. S. Pierce's Cider....Half Pints	15
Schlitz Milwaukee Beer	20	Tally Ho Ginger Ale	15
Schlitz Milwaukee Export Beer	25	Pureoxia Dry Ginger Ale ...Pints	15
Schlitz Milwaukee Pale Beer	25	Pureoxia Dry Ginger Ale, Half Pints	10
Schlitz Milwaukee Dark Beer	25	Puritan Ginger Ale	15
Boston Club Lager (Van Nostrand)	20	Vartray Ginger Ale	15
Norfolk Cabinet Beer	20
Anheuser Beer (Anheuser-Busch Brew. Ass'n)	20

RHINE WINES.

		QT.	PT.
Table Wine		1.00
Zeltinger (Moselle), 1895	From D. Leiden & Co.	1.50	.75
Niersteiner, 1893		1.50	.75
Liebfraumilch, 1893		2.00
Johannisberger Cabinet, Yellow Seal, 1886		2.50
Sparkling Hock		2.50	1.25
Sparkling Moselle		2.50	1.25
Baron R. de Luze Sparkling Dry Comet		3.00	1.50
California Riesling (Wood, Pollard & Co.)		1.50	.75
Zeltinger Moselle, Carl Acker (Wood, Pollard & Co.)		1.50	.75
Laubenheimer, Carl Acker (Wood, Pollard & Co.)		2.00	1.00
Liebfraumilch, Carl Acker (Wood, Pollard & Co.)		2.00	1.00
Rudesheim (Deinhard & Co.)		1.50	.75
Niersteiner Riesling (Deinhard & Co.)		1.50	.75

CLARETS.

	QT.	PT.
Ordinaire	.80	.40
Medoc Magnums (A. de Luze & Fils), 1893	1.00	.50
Pontet Canet (A. de Luze & Fils), 1899	1.50	.75
Chateau La Rose (A. de Luze & Fils), 1899	2.00	1.00
Chateau Lafite (A. de Luze & Fils), 1899	2.50
Zinfandel (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.00	.60
Medoc, Cruse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.00	.60
St. Julien, Cruse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
Pontet Canet, Cruse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
La Rose, Cruse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	2.00	1.00

SAUTERNES.

	QT.	PT.
Barsac (A. de Luze & Fils), 1881	1.00	.50
Sauterne (A. de Luze & Fils), 1893	1.50	.75
Haut Sauterne (A. de Luze & Fils), 1878	2.00	1.00
California Sauterne (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
Sauterne, Cruse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	1.50	.75
Haut Sauterne, Cruse & Fils (Wood, Pollard & Co.)	2.00	1.00

MINERAL WATERS.

	QT.	PT.	SPLITS
Apollinaris	.35	.20	.10
Pureoxia Siphons of Seltzer		.20
Pureoxia Siphons, Carbonic		.20
Pureoxia Club Soda		.20
Puritan Mineral Water	.35	.20	.10
Puritan Lithia Water	.40	.25	.15

PATRONS WILL PLEASE PAY WAITERS.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

[84]

The Pope

Season 1903

Did you order too?

P.B. is the Pop-ular
Brew

"Oh Be Jolly!"

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS

appreciable numbers had a little section set off on the floor, and had a big crimson flag planted with the class year on it.

The class of '01 seemed to have the largest number present, although '98 massed an impressive number. The classes of '79 and '89 were very well represented, and were the recipients of many, many complimentary cheers.

Classes Vied with Each Other in Enthusiastic Cheering.

Cheering, with a clear voiced leader to direct things properly, is an exact science. Every conceivable combination was tried last evening. The class of '98 took it into their heads that a visit from the class of '91 would be agreeable. The calling cards read like this, shouted in sing-song by 100 boys who never get tired: "We want '91 to come over!" "We want '91 to come over!" and then the class of '91 stood up in their section and volunteered the information, "We will! We will! We will!"

And they went over and blended on a few stanzas of the Harvard drinking song and went back.

But '98 went back with them. It seems that class ethics demand a return of all courtesies. That is how it happened that the class of '79 became so tired that they could hardly shout. They tried to return every cheer that was given them, and as they and the Stadium, for which they are responsible, were the most popular incentives to shouting, they had a large contract to carry out.

The class of '89, with a special 15th annual celebration in process, was out in force and was proportionately enthusiastic. They cheered every class on the floor and did it all at once. This seemed to be worthy of applause from the balconies. Then Bart Hayes of '98 got his boys going and cheered every class from 1875 to 1904, inclusive.

This seemed the limit, till a thought struck the leader of the '01 aggregation, and he started with one and counted to 79, punctuated that year with three long 79s, and then came down to date with no diminution in the heartiness of the yell.

They might be counting yet, but Mr. Adamowski returned to the platform for the final group of selections and they gave nine "rahs" for Adamowski.

The musical programme started with "Veritas," composed by Densmore of '04, and concluded with "Up the Street," by Morse of '96.

It was while this last number was being played that the '01 and '98 boys started for the platform, ascended it and started to do stunts along the front rail. This was too much for Mr. Adamowski and his musicians, and they smilingly withdrew and left the whole stage to the boys who love their alma mater and try so hard to prove it.

Representative Harvard Night Full of theTrue Harvard Spirit.

Then the lights began to go out and they all went home.

Taken all in all, the evening was a representative Harvard night, and the representative Harvard spirit was manifested in a thousand ways. The cheers for the other classes, the cheers for President Eliot and the cheers for just old Harvard, Harvard, Harvard, were given with that snap and vigor which makes a Harvard man's crimson blood stir in his arteries, and crimson thoughts surge through his brain.

To an onlooker the sport and enthusiasm is contagious, and if he be not a college man, he feels maybe a little tinge of regret.

They came from all over the country, knowing that they would find their classmates here, and in a few days they will go away again, only to return next year and the next.

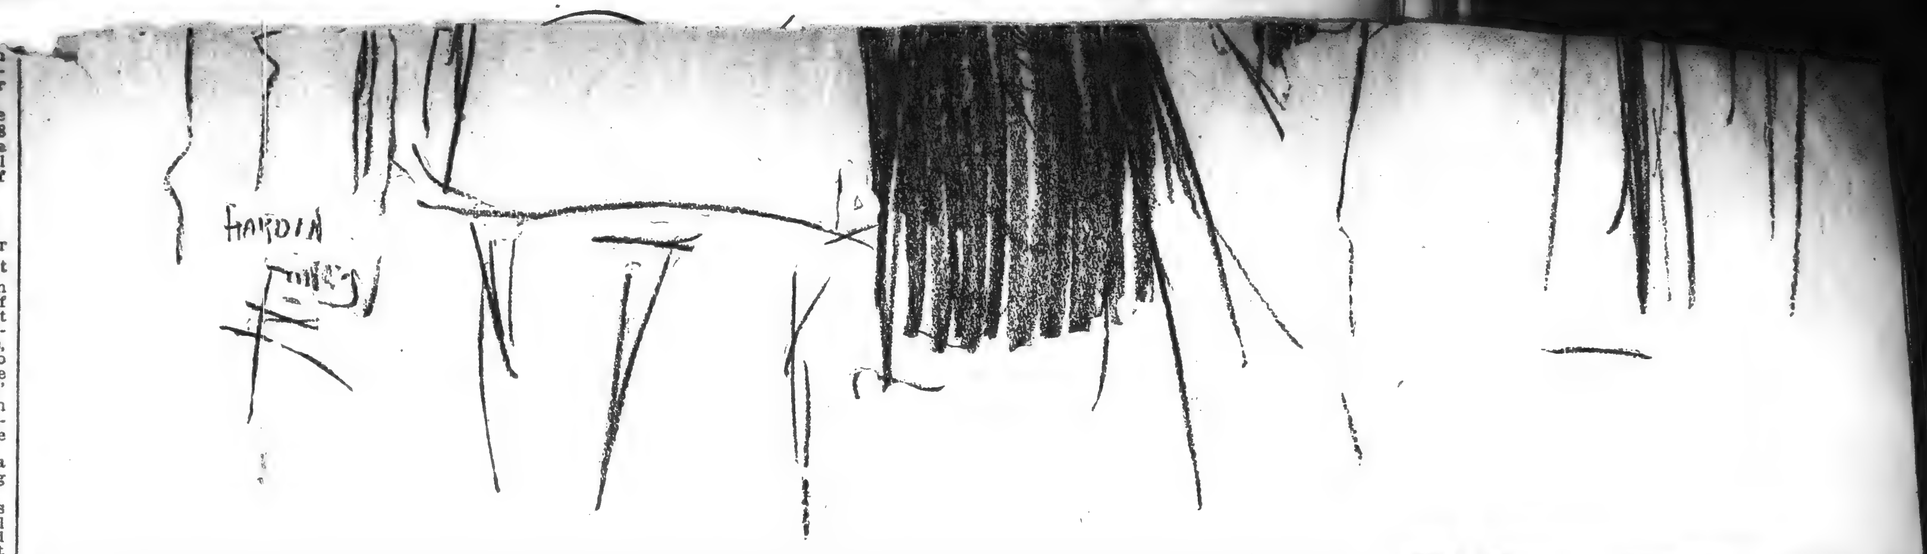
And Harvard enthusiasm is over it all and fills every man to the brim, from the young member of the class of '03, who will cast his first presidential ballot in the fall, to the Hon. John S. Keyes of [illegible], N. H., 83 years of age, a member of the class of '41, who sat in the balcony and watched the other boys cheering and marching on the floor below.

Mr. Keyes is one of Harvard's oldest graduates and honored sons, and he stood while his fellow collegians sang "Fair Harvard" and let an occasional tear trickle down his cheek, and was not ashamed.

It is infectious, this college spirit. Judges, gray haired business men, learned members of the bar, are made young again and cheer as heartily as they did during their freshman year.

During the intermission, preceding the last group of numbers, Mr. I. Tucker Burr of the class of '79 mounted the leader's place on the stage and lead the entire gathering in prolonged "The Ladies," "Harvards," "Eliots," "Stadiums," "Seventy-nines," "Naughty fours" and everything else on the list.

And a half-hour later the final stand had been made by the classes, the last "Rah, Rah, Rah," had been said, and the doors of Symphany Hall had been closed for the season and Harvard graduates' night at the Pops had become a crimson spot on the records for 1904.



HONY HALL

OPS

ENTIETH SEASON

HUNDRED AND FIVE

BLANK PAGE

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Monday, May 1, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 1.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 1, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Black Bess" . . . . . Strube
2. OVERTURE, "Mignon" . . . . . A. Thomas
3. BALLET MUSIC, "Queen of Sheba" . . . . . Goldmark
4. WALTZ, "España" (Violoncello Solo, Mr. JOSEF KELLER.) . . . . . Waldteufel

---

5. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert
6. OVERTURE, "Fledermaus" . . . . . J. Strauss
7. SERENADE from "Les Contes d'Hoffmann" . . . . Offenbach
8. OVERTURE, "1812" . . . . . Tschaikowski

---

9. OVERTURE, "Rienzi" . . . . . Wagner
10. WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows" . . . . . Vollstedt
11. SELECTION, "Sho-gun" . . . . . Luders
12. MARCH, "Vienna Dude" (First time.) . . . . . Von Blon

Steinway Piano Used.

PARIS SUMMER SCHOOL (June to September) HAROLD BAUER PIANOFORTE

JUST TELEPHONE

LEWANDO'S DYEING · CLEANSING · LAUNDERING

GLOVES
Cleansed 10 cents per pair
Color of Tan Gloves retained No shrinking

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed
All spots removed

LACE and MUSLIN CURTAINS
Cleansed $1 per pair

All kinds Blankets cleansed 75 cents per pair

LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
Delivery Service Telephone Exchange
NEW YORK PHILADELPHIA WASHINGTON

The Latest Cycles
for One and More Voices

THREE SPANISH FOLK-SONGS. By Cleland Cornmell		Price $1.00
FOUR SONGS FROM THE GARDEN OF KHAMA. By Alma Goetz.	In two keys	" 1.00
A DREAM OF FLOWERS. By Julian Clifford. Song Cycle		" 1.50
FAIRY DREAMS. By Franco Leoni. Cycle for four voices		" 1.50
SONGS OF THE DESERT. By George Clutsam.	In two keys	" 1.25
A LOVER IN DAMASCUS. Song Cycle. By Amy Woodforde-Finden.	Two keys	" 1.50
SHROPSHIRE LAD. Song Cycle. By Arthur Somervell		" 1.50
THREE SONG POEMS. By S. Coleridge-Taylor.	Two keys	" 1.00
HESPERIDES SONG CYCLE. By George Clutsam		" 1.50
BUNCH OF SHAMROCKS. Irish Song Cycle for four solo voices. By A. A. Needham		" 2.00

To be had of all leading dealers and

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, New York

On sale in the hall or may be ordered of the waiter

LOWNEY'S
Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece"

One pound packages, $1, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35, 30, and 25 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Suranné and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes, 25 cents

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

THE C. C. HARVEY CO.
144 BOYLSTON STREET
Representatives of
KNABE PIANOS

We unhesitatingly assert that the New Knabe Mignon Grand is by far the best small grand piano yet produced by any maker.

THE KNABE PIANO
Is a high-grade, artistic product, suited to the every-day requirements of the American public.

RENTAL DEPARTMENT. We will rent any grade, new or second-hand piano at lower prices than any other house. We make a specialty of summer rentals, and can please you with the quality of our stock.

Sole representatives of the ANGELUS PIANO PLAYER. Large circulating music library
THE C. C. HARVEY CO., 144 BOYLSTON STREET TELEPHONE, 134 OXFORD

SUMMER WILLIAM L. WHITNEY INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL for VOCALISTS and PIANISTS SCHOOL
OPPOSITE SYMPHONY HALL

FLORENCE SUMMER SCHOOL JUNE TO SEPTEMBER VINCENZO LOMBARDI CARUSO DELUCIA

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, May 2, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.
Vol. I. No. 2.
Published by C. A. ELLIS.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. POLONAISE . . . . . Chopin
2. OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi" . . . . . Adam
3. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet
4. WALTZ, "Éternelle Ivresse" . . . . . Ganne

5. SUITE FROM BALLET, "La Belle au Bois Dormant," Tschaikowski
6. "FIRE-CHARM," from "Die Walküre" . . . . . Wagner
7. "MÉDITATION, PRIERE" . . . . . Th. Dubois
   For Violin, Harp, and Organ.
   Messrs. HOFFMANN, SCHUECKER, and ZACH.
8. OVERTURE, "William Tell" . . . . . Rossini

9. SELECTION, "Aïda" . . . . . Verdi
10. WALTZ, "Violets" . . . . . Waldteufel
11. SELECTION, "Duchess of Dantzic" . . . . . Caryll
12. MARCH, "Tambour-battant" . . . . . Messager

Steinway Piano Used.

Mason & Hamlin Liszt Organ Used.

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK
VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
e 8.00 a.m.	8.04 a.m.	Hartford	2.00 p.m.
bL 10.00 a.m.	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.10 "
a 10.03 "	10.07 "	" "	4.15 "
fL 1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m.	" "	6.10 "
g 1.03 "	1.07 "	" "	7.10 "
e 2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.59 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.11 "
aL 5.00 "	5.04 "	" "	10.10 "
g 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
g 12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

L Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
a 10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.15 p.m.
g 1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	" "	7.10 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	" "	9.11 "
g 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
g 12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New York; b New London to New York; e New Haven to New York; f Boston to New Haven; g Boston to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

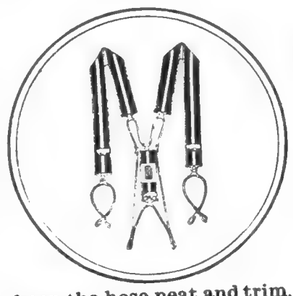
Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m.; Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Priscilla" or "Pilgrim," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.
362 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.

Tally-Ho Ginger Ale

Sold at these Concerts

Better than Coffee
Richer than Coffee
Nine-tenths Coffee



LIGHT WEIGHT
President Suspenders

"A gentle suspender for gentlemen."
Adds to the comfort of good dressers by giving unconscious and even support to the trousers.

Ball Bearing Garters

keep the hose neat and trim, and make them feel better. It's in the mechanism.

ASK YOUR DEALER FOR THEM.
The C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO.,
P.O. Box 414, SHIRLEY, MASS.

In the programme above, for Tuesday, May 2, we can supply at once for all piano players the following:

1. POLONAISE . . . . . Chopin
2. SELECTION. "Carmen" . . Bizet
3. BALLET MUSIC. "Coppelia," Delibes

4. FIRE CHARM. From "Die Walküre" . . . . . Wagner
5. SUITE FROM BALLET. "La Belle au Bois Dormant," Tschaikowski
6. OVERTURE. "William Tell," Rossini

7. SELECTION. "Aïda" . . . Verdi
8. WALTZ. "Violets" . . Waldteufel
9. SELECTION. "School Girl," Rubens

The PROGRAMME for TO-NIGHT

Can be played in your home to-morrow night or any night by any member of your family if you have one of our piano players. We rent and sell the leading makes of players at attractive prices. Convenient terms of payment will be arranged for responsible purchasers.

We have the most complete library of music in America for Pianista, Pianola, Angelus, Simplex, and other players. The latest selections, such as the music from "It Happened in Nordland," "Humpty Dumpty," "Johnny Jones," "Lady Teazle," etc., now in stock.

☞ If you own a player, be sure your name is on our mailing list for the new catalogue, containing over ten thousand numbers.

Some players that have been rented this winter will be sold before May 15 at from $90 to $165. Every instrument guaranteed

MENDELSSOHN MUSIC CO.
172 Tremont Street, Boston Also New York and Providence, R.I.

SUMMER SCHOOL (June to September) HAROLD BAUER PIANOFORTE

FLORENCE SUMMER SCHOOL JUNE TO SEPTEMBER VINCENZO LOMBARDI CARUSO DE LUCIA

SUMMER INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL WILLIAM L. WHITNEY for VOCALISTS and PIANISTS SCHOOL
OPPOSITE SYMPHONY HALL

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

PARIS SUMMER SCHOOL (June to September) HAROLD BAUER PIANOFORTE

FLORENCE SUMMER SCHOOL JUNE TO SEPTEMBER VINCENZO LOMBARDI CARUSO DE LUCIA

Boston, Wednesday, May 3, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 3.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 3, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
2.	OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
3.	SELECTION, "Faust"	Gounod
4.	WALTZ, "Tales from the Vienna Woods"	J. Strauss
5.	BALLET MUSIC, "Gioconda"	Ponchielli
6.	SELECTION, "Mikado"	Sullivan
7.	GAVOTTE	Linke
8.	OVERTURE, "Semiramide" (First time.)	Rossini
9.	"RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES"	Wagner
10.	WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht"	Ziehrer
11.	SELECTION, "Yankee Consul"	Robyn
12.	MARCH, "El Capitan"	Sousa

Steinway Piano Used.

Foster's Bugle Bottling Brand
BASS ALE

Sold at these concerts

Pure, Healthful, Refreshing
Apollinaris
"The Queen of Table Waters"

Mah Mal
EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES
Sold at these Concerts

No. 7s	10 cents per box
No. 5s	15 cents per box
No. 3s	20 cents per box
No. 1s	25 cents per box

Also sold by
S. S. PIERCE CO.
BOSTON, BROOKLINE

Baltimore & Ohio
ROYAL BLUE LINE
"EVERY OTHER HOUR ON THE EVEN HOUR."
New York to Baltimore and Washington
Splendid equipment, thoroughly modern coaches, Pullman cars, and superior dining-car service
Solid trains from NEW YORK to
PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE
ST. LOUIS, CHICAGO
Ticket office, 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
C. W. BASSETT, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore
D. B. MARTIN, Manager Passenger Traffic, Baltimore

DRINK
Schlitz
THE BEER THAT MADE MILWAUKEE FAMOUS.
HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.
JOS. GAHM & SON, New England Agents
125 Purchase Street

SUMMER SCHOOL
WILLIAM L. WHITNEY
INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL for VOCALISTS and PIANISTS
OPPOSITE SYMPHONY HALL

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

PARIS SUMMER SCHOOL (June to September)

FLORENCE SUMMER SCHOOL (June to September)

VINCENZO LOMBARDI

CARUSO DE LUCIA

HAROLD BAUER PIANOFORTE

Boston, Thursday, May 4, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 4.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
2.	SUITE FROM BALLET, "Sylvia"	Delibes
3.	SELECTION, "Geisha"	Jones
4.	WALTZ, "Harlequin's Wedding"	Zach
5.	"L'ARLÉSIENNE"	Bizet
6.	SELECTION, "Pirates of Penzance"	Sullivan
7.	FANTASIE, "La Bohème"	Puccini
8.	OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry"	Suppé
9.	GAVOTTE	Linke
10.	WALTZ, "Barcarole"	Waldteufel
11.	SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen"	Luders
12.	MARCH, "Cruiser Harvard"	Strube

Steinway Piano Used.

Monday, May 15, 1000th Concert, Reminiscence Night.

MENASHI AND RED LION CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, Club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

MISS MOORE
HIGH CLASS SPECIALTY SHOP
421 BOYLSTON STREET
WARREN CHAMBERS
BOSTON

Dainty Clothing for misses, women, and children.

Dresses ready to wear in veiling, taffeta, linen, and muslin. Prices from $25 to $200.

A variety of waists in hand embroidered linens and muslins and silks. Prices from $12 to $85.

Finest veils, parasols, neckwear, handkerchiefs, toilet articles, etc. Carefully selected and up to date.

Charles B. Perkins & Co.

The following choice selection of our CIGARS Always on sale at "Pop" Concerts:

Ginita Delicioses Extra (domestic)	10c., 3 for 25c.
Catriona Perfectos (domestic)	10c. each
Petronila Puritanos (clear Havana)	10c. each
Tedesco Exquisitos (domestic)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Petronila Rothschilds (clear Havana)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra (imported)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos (imported)	15c. each
Romeo and Juliet Pacificos (imported)	20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Americanos (imported)	20c. each

ASK THE WAITER FOR

AMERICA'S FINEST PRODUCT

VARTRAY

Ginger Ale
Sarsaparilla

VARTRAY WATER CO.
Buffalo, N.Y.

Puritan

BEVERAGES are made of water distilled at the plant of the Puritan Water Company at Broadway and 30th Street, New York. The plant is always open to inspection. This policy has been adopted as giving the best possible guarantee of purity. Puritan beverages are not designed for consumers who place cheapness above quality. They are the best that can be made. A bottle of Puritan mineral water or ginger ale will help you to enjoy the concert. Give your order to the waiter.
Orders may be sent by mail to the PURITAN WATER COMPANY, 1218 Broadway, New York, and will be promptly filled by freight or express, as directed. Transportation charges payable by the purchaser.

Boston and Albany

4 Trains a Day

Leave Boston
MORNING (9 a.m.)
NOON (12 o'clock)
AFTERNOON (4 p.m.)
and NIGHT (11.15 p.m.)

Via "Springfield Line" for

NEW YORK CITY

Equipped with
Pullman Parlor and Sleeping Cars
WITH EXCELLENT DINING CAR SERVICE

Lv. BOSTON	9.00 a.m.	12.00 m.	4.00 p.m.	11.15 p.m.
" WORCESTER	10.06 "	1.04 p.m.	5.02 "	11.53 "
" SPRINGFIELD	11.34 "	2.22 "	6.21 "	2.35 a.m.
Ar. HARTFORD	12.13 p.m.	2.57 "	6.57 "	3.19 "
" NEW HAVEN	1.21 "	3.55 "	7.58 "	4.30 "
" NEW YORK	3.15 p.m.	5.45 p.m.	9.52 p.m.	6.46 a.m.

For reservations, tickets, etc., call on
R. M. HARRIS, City Passenger and Ticket Agent
366 WASHINGTON STREET
A. S. HANSON, General Passenger Agent. BOSTON, MASS.

SUMMER SCHOOL
WILLIAM L. WHITNEY
INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL for VOCALISTS and PIANISTS
OPPOSITE SYMPHONY HALL

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

PARIS SUMMER SCHOOL (June to September) HAROLD BAUER PIANOFORTE

FLORENCE SUMMER SCHOOL JUNE TO SEPTEMBER VINCENZO LOMBARDI CARUSO DE LUCIA

SYMPHONY HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Notice to Advertisers.

The advertising columns in the programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

In order to thoroughly enjoy the Concerts smoke

Daniel Frank & Co.'s

Barrister, Perfecto . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Celebridad, Perfecto 10c. each
American, Puritanos . . 15c.
2 for 25c.
American, Concha Fina Especial . . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
American, Perfectos . . 20c.
3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter, Puritanos, 15c.
2 for 25c.
Mundo, Favoritas 15c. each
Constancia, Londres Especial (Imported) 15c. each
Mapa de Cuba, Perfecto (Imported) . . 25c. each

ON SALE AT THE "POPS"

Boston, Firday, May 5, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 5.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 5, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. POLONAISE . . . . . Chopin
2. "SCÈNE PITTORESQUE" . . . . . Massenet
3. WALTZ, "Estudiantina" . . . . . Waldteufel
4. SELECTION, "Duchess of Dantzic" . . . . . Caryll

5. SELECTION, "Gondoliers" . . . . . Sullivan
6. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet
7. "DELUGE" . . . . . Saint-Saëns
8. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner
   Violin Solo, Mr. HOFFMANN.

9. SELECTION, "Grand Duchess" . . . . . Offenbach
10. WALTZ, "Wine, Woman, and Song" . . . . . J. Strauss
11. SELECTION, "School Girl" . . . . . Rubin
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . . . Sousa

Steinway Piano Used.

Monday, May 15, 1000th Concert, Reminiscence Night.

DUFFY'S "1842" CIDER

SPARKLING. DELICIOUS

CONTAINS NO PRESERVATIVE

Served at the "Pops"

HAYNES PIPER CO., Distributers
18 Lewis Wharf, Boston
Telephone, Richmond 1112

Van Nostrand's

P. B. Ale

The waiter always has a smile
When he brings the "smile" to you
For the bottle is full of P. B. Ale,
And he knows Van Nostrand's Brew.

An old-time favorite at the "Pops"

NORFOLK CABINET LAGER BEER

THE large sales of Norfolk Cabinet at the "Pops" during past years are entirely due to the sound footing of confidence which experience inspires. Brewed from the highest grades of malt and hops, thoroughly aged, and properly sterilized, in delicacy of flavor and purity it is the ideal table beer.

MASSACHUSETTS BREWERIES CO.
17 Otis Street, Boston

Order a Siphon of

PUREOXIA SELTZER

To enliven your Rhine Wine

SUMMER WILLIAM L. WHITNEY INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL for VOCALISTS and PIANISTS SCHOOL
OPPOSITE SYMPHONY HALL

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Saturday, May 6, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 6.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Coronation"	Meyerbeer
2.	BALLET MUSIC from "Henry VIII."	Saint-Saëns
3.	SELECTION, "Sho-gun"	Luders
4.	WALTZ, "Blue Danube"	J. Strauss
5.	SELECTION, "Pinafore"	Sullivan
6.	OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppé
7.	"MÉDITATION, PRIERE"	Th. Dubois

For Violin, Harp, and Organ.
Messrs. HOFFMANN, SCHUECKER, and ZACH.

8. SUITE FROM BALLET, "La Belle au Bois Dormant," Tschaikowski

9.	OVERTURE, "Orpheus"	Offenbach
10.	WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
11.	SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland"	Herbert
12.	MARCH, "Boccaccio"	Suppé

Steinway Piano Used.

Mason & Hamlin Liszt Organ Used.

Monday, May 15, 1000th Concert, Reminiscence Night.

ESTABROOK CIGARS AND EATON

On Sale at the "Pops"

MARGUERITE,
Conchas . . 10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE,
Panetelas . . 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA,
Ideals . . . . . 10c. each
E. & E.,
Invincibles . 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL DELETOSA,
Conchas . . 10c., 3 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande 10c. each
MANUEL GARCIA,
Consuelos . 15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO.,
Reciprocity . 15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO.,
Especiales 20c., 5 for $1.00
LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmontes . 20c., 3 for 50c.
LA CAROLINA,
Perfectos . . . 25c. each

Estabrook & Eaton
CIGAR IMPORTERS
222 and 224 Washington Street.
Masonic Building, Boylston Street.
Merchants Building, 77 Summer St.

376 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Harrison Bottling Company
Representing
Imported Pilsner and Bavarian Beers of Rudolph Oelsner, New York.
W. A. Miles & Co., New York, Croton Brewery Ales.
Iroquois Brewing Co., of Buffalo, N.Y., Lager Beers.
Frank Jones Brewing Co., Portsmouth, N.H., Ales.

33 and 34 LEWIS WHARF, Boston, Mass.
Telephone, Richmond 1119

American Brewing Co.
ST. LOUIS
A. B. C. BEER.
Try a pint and notice the fine hop flavor.
The perfection of American brewing.
CODMAN & HALL CO.,
DEWEY SQUARE.

If you want an Old-fashioned Beer
ASK FOR
Pfaff's Lager

THE RATHSKELLER

UNDER THE
NEW AMERICAN HOUSE
BOSTON
MUSIC from 12 to 3
and 6 to Midnight

Try some of our SPECIAL DISHES Cannot be excelled

THEATRE PARTIES can make arrangements ahead

SUMMER WILLIAM L. WHITNEY
INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL for VOCALISTS and PIANISTS SCHOOL
OPPOSITE SYMPHONY HALL

PARIS SUMMER SCHOOL (June to September) HAROLD BAUER PIANOFORTE

FLORENCE SUMMER SCHOOL JUNE TO SEPTEMBER VINCENZO LOMBARDI CARUSO DE LUCIA

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Monday, May 8, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 7.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 8, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Hussar Drill" . . . . . Zach
2. "BAL COSTUMÉ" . . . . . Rubinstein
3. WALTZ, "Kiss" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Fortune-teller" . . . . . Herbert

5. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet
6. OVERTURE, "Raymond" . . . . . A. Thomas
7. "SOUS TA FENETRE" . . . . . A. Lachaume
   (First time.)
8. MARCH, "Slav" . . . . . Tschaikowski

9. SERENADE from "Les Contes d'Hoffmann" . . Offenbach
10. WALTZ, "The Skaters" . . . . . Waldteufel
11. SELECTION, "King Dodo" . . . . . Luders
12. MARCH, "High School Cadets" . . . . . Sousa

Hume Piano Used.

Mason & Hamlin Liszt Organ Used.

Monday, May 15, 1000th Concert, Reminiscence Night.

TRADE MARK.

Wood, Pollard & Co.,

Importers of Wines, Spirits, Groceries, and Teas.

COFFEE ROASTERS.

Wood, Pollard & Co.,

Opposite North and South Stations, BOSTON.

Wood, Pollard & Co.

GRAFTON
BLENHEIM
NOTTINGHAM

CIGARS

CHARLES THE GREAT
DON RODRIGO
CORDOVA

Opposite North and South Stations BOSTON

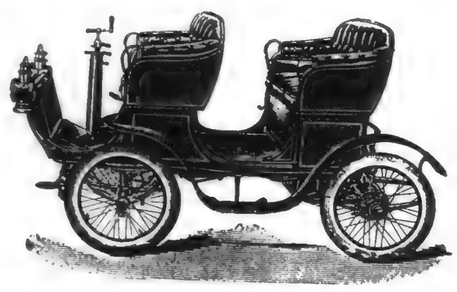
Mountain View House

Rangeley Lake, Maine.

L. E. BOWLEY, Proprietor.

Always Satisfactory.

Post-office address, MOUNTAIN VIEW, MAINE.

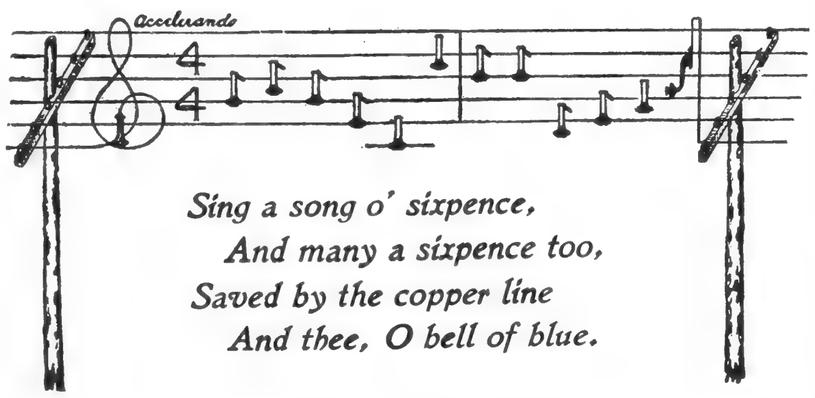


AUTOMOBILES FOR HIRE.

THE LARGEST RENTING STATION IN AMERICA.

All models of machines for hire by the hour, day, week, or month.
Open day and night. Will call at any address.
Sight-seeing cars, large or small parties, seats $1. The only up-to-date way to see Boston and suburbs. Daily trips to Nantasket, Concord, Lexington, etc.
Machines always ready. Write or telephone.

K. A. SKINNER, Proprietor, 179 Clarendon St.
Telephone, 67 Tremont.



Sing a song o' sixpence,
And many a sixpence too,
Saved by the copper line
And thee, O bell of blue.

The above will be translated into prose, with many additional facts, to anybody inquiring at or writing to

New England Telephone & Telegraph Company

LOCAL LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE

Contract Department

101 Milk Street, Boston, Mass. Telephone, Main 6090

PARIS SUMMER SCHOOL (June to September) HAROLD BAUER PIANOFORTE

FLORENCE SUMMER SCHOOL JUNE TO SEPTEMBER VINCENZO LOMBARDI CARUSO DE LUCIA

Order KARL RUSKS with your beer at the "Pops." You'll like them. For home use buy KARL RUSKS of S. S. Pierce Co. or Cobb, Bates & Yerxa Co. No better hot weather luncheon than Karl Rusks and milk.

[92]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, May 9, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 8.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Vienna Dude"	Von Blon
2.	OVERTURE, "Zampa"	Hérold
3.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
4.	SELECTION, "Romeo and Juliet"	Gounod
5.	"DANSE MACABRE"	Saint-Saëns
6.	SELECTION, "It Happened in Nordland"	Herbert
7.	"SALUT D'AMOUR"	Elgar
8.	"RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES"	Wagner
9.	SELECTION, "Aïda"	Verdi
10.	WALTZ, "Kaiser"	Strauss
11.	SELECTION, "Sho-gun"	Luders
12.	MARCH, "Teufel"	Suppé

Hume Piano Used.

Monday, May 15, 1000th Concert, Reminiscence Night.

PARIS SUMMER SCHOOL (June to September) HAROLD BAUER PIANOFORTE

JUST TELEPHONE

LEWANDO'S DYEING · CLEANSING · LAUNDERING

GLOVES
Cleansed 10 cents per pair
Color of Tan Gloves retained No shrinking

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed
All spots removed

LACE and MUSLIN CURTAINS
Cleansed $1 per pair

ALL KINDS
BLANKETS
Cleansed 75 cents per pair

LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
Delivery Service Telephone Exchange
NEW YORK PHILADELPHIA
WASHINGTON

BOOSEY & COMPANY manufacture the highest grade of Military Band Instruments. Contractors to the British Army, and now supplying the leading soloists in the United States with the highest grade of Military Instruments made.

Perfect tune, tone, and general excellence in workmanship guaranteed.

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, NEW YORK

On sale in the hall or may be ordered of the waiter

LOWNEY'S
Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece"

One pound packages, $1, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35, 30, and 25 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Suranné and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes, 25 cents

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

THE C. C. HARVEY CO.
144 BOYLSTON STREET
Representatives of
KNABE PIANOS

We unhesitatingly assert that the New Knabe Mignon Grand is by far the best small grand piano yet produced by any maker.

THE KNABE PIANO
Is a high-grade, artistic product, suited to the every-day requirements of the American public.

RENTAL DEPARTMENT. We will rent any grade, new or second-hand piano at lower prices than any other house. We make a specialty of summer rentals, and can please you with the quality of our stock.

Sole representatives of the ANGELUS PIANO PLAYER. Large circulating music library
THE C. C. HARVEY CO., 144 BOYLSTON STREET
TELEPHONE, 134 OXFORD

FLORENCE SUMMER SCHOOL (June to September) VINCENZO LOMBARDI CARUSO DE LUCIA

Order KARL RUSKS with your beer at the "Pops." You'll like them. For home use buy KARL RUSKS of S. S. Pierce Co. or Cobb, Bates & Yerxa Co. No better hot weather luncheon than Karl Rusks and milk.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Wednesday, May 10, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 9.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK

VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
e 8.00 a.m.	8.04 a.m.	Hartford	2.00 p.m.
bL 10.00 a.m.	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.10 "
a 10.03 "	10.07 "	" "	4.15 "
fL 1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m	" "	6.10 "
g 1.03 "	1.07 "	" "	7.10 "
e 2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.59 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.11 "
aL 5.00 "	5.04 "	" "	10.10 "
g 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

L Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
a 10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.15 p.m.
g 1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	" "	7.10 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	" "	9.11 "
g 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New York; b New London to New York; e New Haven to New York; f Boston to New Haven; g Boston to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m., Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Priscilla" or "Pilgrim," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.
362 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.

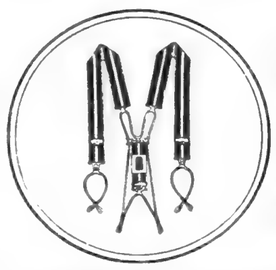
WEDNESDAY, MAY 10, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1.	POLONAISE	Chopin
2.	BALLET MUSIC, "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saëns
3.	SELECTION, "Geisha"	Jones
4.	WALTZ, "Barcarole"	Waldteufel
5.	MINUET	Paderewski
6.	FANTASIA from "La Bohème"	Puccini
7.	"LA BELLE AU BOIS DORMANT"	Tschaikowski
8.	SELECTION, "Rigoletto"	Verdi
9.	OVERTURE, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht"	Ziehrer
11.	SELECTION, "Yankee Consul"	Robyn
12.	MARCH, "Boccaccio"	Suppé

Hume Piano Used.

Monday, May 15, 1000th Concert . . Reminiscence Night
Monday Evening, May 22 . . . Wagner Programme



LIGHT WEIGHT
President Suspenders

"Trousers support that's delightful."

As easy as no suspenders, with a greater degree of security.

Ball Bearing Garters

not alone sure and comfortable, but also wear longer.

ASK YOUR DEALER FOR THEM.

The C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO.,
P.O. Box 414, SHIRLEY, MASS.

Tally-Ho Ginger Ale

Sold at these Concerts

Better than Coffee
Richer than Coffee
Nine-tenths Coffee

JUST LANDED. RUSSIAN BRONZES and BRASSES. Also Large Variety of Other Importations.
RUSSIAN IMPORTING COMPANY, 355 BOYLSTON STREET.
Telephone, 2481-4 Back Bay.

In the programme above, for Wednesday, May 10, we can supply at once for all piano players the following:

1.	POLONAISE	Chopin
2.	BALLET MUSIC, "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saëns
3.	SELECTION, "Rigoletto"	Verdi
4.	WALTZ, "Barcarole"	Waldteufel
5.	MINUET	Paderewski
6.	"La Belle au Bois Dormant"	Tschaikowski
7.	SELECTION, "Yankee Consul,"	Robyn
8.	MARCH, "Boccaccio"	Suppé

The PROGRAMME for TO-NIGHT

Can be played in your home to-morrow night or any night by any member of your family if you have one of our piano players. We rent and sell the leading makes of players at attractive prices. Convenient terms of payment will be arranged for responsible purchasers.

We have the most complete library of music in America for Pianista, Pianola, Angelus, Simplex, and other players. The latest selections, such as the music from "It Happened in Nordland," "Humpty Dumpty," "Johnny Jones," "Lady Teazle," etc., now in stock.

☞ If you own a player, be sure your name is on our mailing list for the new catalogue, containing over ten thousand numbers.

Some players that have been rented this winter will be sold before May 15 at from $90 to $165. Every instrument guaranteed

MENDELSSOHN MUSIC CO.
172 Tremont Street, Boston Also New York and Providence, R.I.

Order KARL RUSKS with your beer at the "Pops." You'll like them. For home use buy KARL RUSKS of S. S. Pierce Co. or Cobb, Bates & Yerxa Co. No better hot weather luncheon than Karl Rusks and milk.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Thursday, May 11, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 10.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
2.	DREAM MUSIC, "Hansel and Gretel"	Humperdinck
3.	POTPOURRI OF AUSTRIAN MELODIES	Koschat
4.	WALTZ, "Harlequin en Voyage"	Zach
5.	SELECTION, "It Happened in Nordland"	Herbert
6.	BALLET, "Gioconda"	Ponchielli
7.	OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppé
8.	SERENADE	Moszkowski
9.	SELECTION, "Faust"	Gounod
10.	WALTZ, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
11.	SELECTION, "Erminie"	Jakobowski
12.	MARCH, "Hungarian"	Moldauer

Hume Piano Used.

Monday, May 15, 1000th Concert . . Reminiscence Night
Monday Evening, May 22 . . . Wagner Programme

Foster's Bugle Brand Bottling
BASS ALE

Sold at these concerts

Apollinaris

"THE QUEEN OF TABLE WATERS."

Bottled only at the Apollinaris Spring, Neuenahr, Germany, and Only with its Own Natural Gas.

BEWARE OF SUBSTITUTIONS

MahMal

EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s	15 cents per box
No. 3s	20 cents per box
No. 1s	25 cents per box
No. 3, Cork Tips	25 cents per box

Also sold by
S. S. PIERCE CO.
BOSTON, BROOKLINE

Baltimore & Ohio
ROYAL BLUE LINE

"EVERY OTHER HOUR ON THE EVEN HOUR."

New York to Baltimore and Washington

Splendid equipment, thoroughly modern coaches, Pullman cars, and superior dining-car service

Solid trains from NEW YORK to
PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE
ST. LOUIS, CHICAGO

Ticket office, 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

C. W. BASSETT, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore
D. B. MARTIN, Manager Passenger Traffic, Baltimore

DRINK

Schlitz

THE BEER THAT MADE MILWAUKEE FAMOUS.

HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.

JOS. GAHM & SON, New England Agents
125 Purchase Street

Order KARL RUSKS with your beer at the "Pops." You'll like them. For home use buy KARL RUSKS of S. S. Pierce Co. or Cobb, Bates & Yerxa Co. No better hot weather luncheon than Karl Rusks and milk.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." SYMPHONY HALL.

Boston, Friday, May 12, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 11.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1.	PERSIAN MARCH	Strauss
2	BALLET MUSIC, "Sylvia"	Delibes
3.	WALTZ, "Morgenblätter"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Duchess of Dantzic"	Caryll
5.	SELECTION, "Aïda"	Verdi
6.	SLAVONIC DANCES	Dvorak
7.	VIOLIN SOLO, Romance	Wagner
	Mr. JACQUES HOFFMANN.
8.	OVERTURE, "Raymond"	Thomas
9.	SELECTION, "The Brigands"	Offenbach
10.	WALTZ, "Artist Life"	Strauss
11.	SELECTION, "It Happened in Nordland"	Herbert
12.	MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg"	Kral

Hume Piano Used.

Monday, May 15, 1000th Concert . . Reminiscence Night
Monday Evening, May 22 . . . Wagner Programme

MENASHI
AND
RED LION
CIGARETTES
Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, Club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

MISS MOORE
HIGH CLASS SPECIALTY SHOP
421 BOYLSTON STREET
WARREN CHAMBERS
BOSTON

Dainty Clothing for misses, women, and children.

Dresses ready to wear in veiling, taffeta, linen, and muslin. Prices from $25 to $200.

A variety of waists in hand embroidered linens and muslins and silks. Prices from $12 to $85.

Finest veils, parasols, neckwear, handkerchiefs, toilet articles, etc. Carefully selected and up to date.

Charles B. Perkins & Co.
The following choice selection of our CIGARS Always on sale at "Pop" Concerts:

Ginita Deliciosos Extra (domestic)	10c., 3 for 25c.
Catriona Perfectos (domestic)	10c. each
Petronila Puritanos (clear Havana)	10c. each
Tedesco Exquisitos (domestic)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Petronila Rothschilds (clear Havana)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra (imported)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos (imported)	15c. each
Romeo and Juliet Pacificos (imported)	20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Americanos (imported)	20c. each

ASK THE WAITER FOR

AMERICA'S FINEST PRODUCT

VARTRAY
Ginger Ale
Sarsaparilla

VARTRAY WATER CO.
Buffalo, N.Y.

Puritan

BEVERAGES are made of water distilled at the plant of the Puritan Water Company at Broadway and 30th Street, New York. The plant is always open to inspection. This policy has been adopted as giving the best possible guarantee of purity. Puritan beverages are not designed for consumers who place cheapness above quality. They are the best that can be made. A bottle of Puritan mineral water or ginger ale will help you to enjoy the concert. Give your order to the waiter.
Orders may be sent by mail to the PURITAN WATER COMPANY, 1218 Broadway, New York, and will be promptly filled by freight or express, as directed. Transportation charges payable by the purchaser.

Boston and Albany

4 Trains a Day
Leave Boston
MORNING (9 a.m.)
NOON (12 o'clock)
AFTERNOON (4 p.m.)
and NIGHT (11.15 p.m.)
Via "Springfield Line" for
NEW YORK CITY
Equipped with
Pullman Parlor and Sleeping Cars
WITH EXCELLENT DINING CAR SERVICE

Lv. BOSTON	9.00 a.m.	12.00 m.	4.00 p.m.	11.15 p.m.
" WORCESTER	10.06 "	1.04 p.m.	5.02 "	11.53 "
" SPRINGFIELD	11.34 "	2.22 "	6.21 "	2.35 a.m.
Ar. HARTFORD	12.13 p.m.	2.57 "	6.57 "	3.19 "
" NEW HAVEN	1.21 "	3.55 "	7.58 "	4.30 "
" NEW YORK	3.15 p.m.	5.45 p.m.	9.52 p.m.	6.46 a.m.

For reservations, tickets, etc., call on
R. M. HARRIS, City Passenger and Ticket Agent
366 WASHINGTON STREET
A. S. HANSON, General Passenger Agent. BOSTON, MASS.

Order KARL RUSKS with your beer at the "Pops." You'll like them. For home use Buy KARL RUSKS of S. S. Pierce Co. or Cobb, Bates & Yerxa Co. No better hot weather luncheon than Karl Rusks and milk.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

BIRD

SYMPHONY HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Notice to Advertisers.

The advertising columns in the programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

In order to thoroughly enjoy the Concerts smoke

Daniel Frank & Co.'s

Barrister, Perfecto . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Celebridad, Perfecto 10c. each
American, Puritanos . . 15c.
2 for 25c.
American, Concha Fina Especial . . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
American, Perfectos . . 20c.
3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter, Puritanos, 15c.
2 for 25c.
Mundo, Favoritas 15c. each
Constancia, Londres Especial (Imported) 15c. each
Mapa de Cuba, Perfecto (Imported) . . 25c. each

ON SALE AT THE "POPS"

Boston, Saturday, May 13, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 12.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Black Bess" . . . . . Strube
2. OVERTURE, "Mignon" . . . . . Thomas
3. WALTZ, "The Skaters" . . . . . Waldteufel
4. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . . Gounod

5. SELECTION, "Geisha" . . . . . Jones
6. MARCH, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner
7. SERENADE for Violin, Harp, and Violoncello . . Oelschlagel
   Mr. HOFFMANN, Mr. SCHUECKER, and Mr. KELLER.
8. OVERTURE, "Zampa" . . . . . Hérold

9. SERENADE from "Les Contes d'Hoffmann" . . Offenbach
10. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
11. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . . . Sousa

Hume Piano Used.

Monday, May 15, 1000th Concert . . Reminiscence Night
Monday Evening, May 22 . . . Wagner Programme

DUFFY'S "1842" CIDER

SPARKLING. DELICIOUS

CONTAINS NO PRESERVATIVE

Served at the "Pops"

HAYNES PIPER CO., Distributers

18 Lewis Wharf, Boston

Telephone, Richmond 1112

Van Nostrand's

P.B. Ale

The cop Knows how to give the "Wink"
Much better than most people think,
We never saw him wink for tea
But he knows the art when he wants P. B.

Be wise and get next

NORFOLK CABINET LAGER BEER

THE large sales of Norfolk Cabinet at the "Pops" during past years are entirely due to the sound footing of confidence which experience inspires. Brewed from the highest grades of malt and hops, thoroughly aged, and properly sterilized, in delicacy of flavor and purity it is the ideal table beer.

MASSACHUSETTS BREWERIES CO.
17 Otis Street, Boston

Order a Siphon of

PUREOXIA SELTZER

To enliven your Rhine Wine

Order KARL RUSKS with your beer at the "Pops." You'll like them. For home use buy KARL RUSKS of S. S. Pierce Co. or Cobb, Bates & Yerxa Co. No better hot weather luncheon than Karl Rusks and milk.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Monday, May 15, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 13.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 15, 1905.

1,000th Performance, Reminiscence Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg" . . . . . Kral
2. OVERTURE, "William Tell" . . . . . Rossini
   Solo Violoncello, Mr. JOSEF KELLER.
   Played as No. 2 at first "Pop" Concert, July 11, 1885.
3. WALTZ, "Thousand and One Nights" . . . . Strauss
4. OVERTURE, "Martha" . . . . . Flotow
5. SELECTION, "The Sphinx" . . . . . Thompson
6. { a. "LOIN DU BAL" . . . . . Gillet
   { b. INTRODUCTION, Act III., "Lohengrin" . . . Wagner
7. LARGO . . . . . Handel
   Solo Violin, Mr. HOFFMANN.
8. FAREWELL SYMPHONY . . . . . Haydn
9. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert
10. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
11. SELECTION, "Yankee Consul" . . . . . Robyn
12. MARCH, "Up the Street" . . . . . Morse

Jewett Piano Used.

Monday Evening, May 22 . . . Wagner Programme

Steinert Hall

Mr. CHARLES B. STEVENS, Teacher of Singing, 162 Boylston Street, Steinert Hall

ESTABROOK CIGARS AND EATON

On Sale at the "Pops"

MARGUERITE,
Panetelas . . 10c., 3 for 25c.

SALEROSA,
Ideals . . . . . 10c. each

E. & E.,
Invincibles . 15c., 2 for 25c.

EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande 10c. each

MANUEL GARCIA,
Consuelos . 15c., 2 for 25c.

BOCK & CO.,
Reciprocity . 15c., 2 for 25c.

BOCK & CO.,
Especiales 20c., 5 for $1.00

LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmontes . 20c., 3 for 50c.

LA CAROLINA,
Perfectos . . . 25c. each

Estabrook & Eaton
CIGAR IMPORTERS

222 and 224 Washington Street.
Masonic Building, Boylston Street.
Merchants Building, 77 Summer St.

376 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Harrison Bottling Company

Representing

Imported Pilsner and Bavarian Beers of Rudolph Oelsner, New York.
W. A. Miles & Co., New York, Croton Brewery Ales.
Iroquois Brewing Co., of Buffalo, N.Y., Lager Beers.
Frank Jones Brewing Co., Portsmouth, N.H., Ales.

33 and 34 LEWIS WHARF, Boston, Mass.
Telephone, Richmond 1119

Try a pint bottle and appreciate the fine hop flavor.

CODMAN & HALL CO.,
Distributers,
DEWEY SQUARE.

If you want an Old-fashioned Beer
ASK FOR

Pfaff's Lager

THE RATHSKELLER

UNDER THE
NEW AMERICAN HOUSE
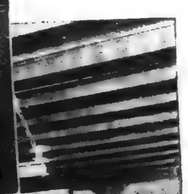
BOSTON
MUSIC from 12 to 3
and 6 to Midnight



Try some of our SPECIAL DISHES Cannot be excelled

THEATRE PARTIES can make arrangements ahead

Mr. CHARLES B. STEVENS, Teacher of Singing, 162 Boylston Street, Steinert Hall

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

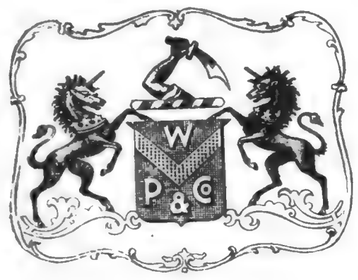
Boston, Tuesday, May 16, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 14.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

TRADE



MARK.

Wood, Pollard & Co.,

Importers of Wines, Spirits, Groceries, and Teas.

COFFEE ROASTERS.

Wood, Pollard & Co.,

Opposite North and South Stations,

BOSTON.

TUESDAY, MAY 16, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Black Bess" . . . . . Strube
2. OVERTURE, "Semiramide" . . . . . Rossini
3. WALTZ, "The Skaters" . . . . . Waldteufel
4. SELECTION, "Mikado" . . . . . Sullivan

5. BALLET MUSIC, "Gioconda" . . . . . Ponchielli
6. OVERTURE, "Galatea" . . . . . Suppé
7. SERENADE for Violin, Harp, and Violoncello . . . Oelschlagel
   Mr. HOFFMANN, Mr. SCHUECKER, and Mr. KELLER.
8. SELECTION, "Aïda" . . . . . Verdi

9. OVERTURE, "Stradella" . . . . . Flotow
10. SELECTION, "It Happened in Nordland" . . . . Herbert
11. WALTZ, "Éternelle Ivresse" . . . . . Ganne
12. HUNGARIAN MARCH . . . . . Moldauer

Jewett Piano Used.

Monday Evening, May 22 . . . Wagner Programme

Wood, Pollard & Co.

GRAFTON
BLENHEIM
NOTTINGHAM

CIGARS

CHARLES THE GREAT
DON RODRIGO
CORDOVA

Opposite North and South Stations
BOSTON

Mountain View House

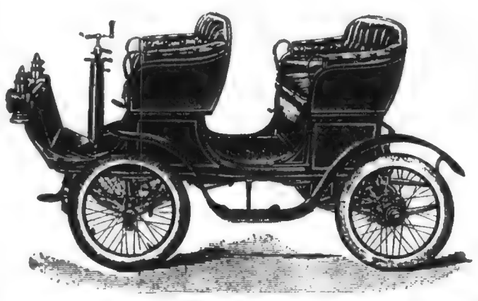
Rangeley Lake, Maine.

L. E. BOWLEY, Proprietor.

Always Satisfactory.

Post-office address,

MOUNTAIN VIEW, MAINE.



AUTOMOBILES FOR HIRE.

THE LARGEST RENTING STATION IN AMERICA.

All models of machines for hire by the hour, day, week, or month.

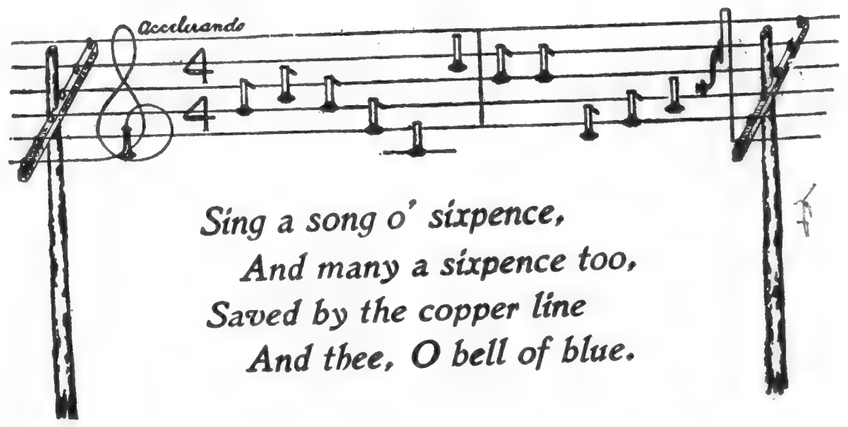
Open day and night. Will call at any address.

Sight-seeing cars, large or small parties, seats $1. The only up-to-date way to see Boston and suburbs. Daily trips to Nantasket, Concord, Lexington, etc.

Machines always ready. Write or telephone.

K. A. SKINNER, Proprietor, 179 Clarendon St.

Telephone, 67 Tremont.



The above will be translated into prose, with many additional facts, to anybody inquiring at or writing to

New England Telephone & Telegraph Company

Contract Department

101 Milk Street, Boston, Mass.

Telephone, Main 6090

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Wednesday, May 17, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 15.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 17, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner
2. BALLET MUSIC, "Faust" . . . . . Gounod
3. SELECTION, "Mikado" . . . . . Sullivan
4. WALTZ, "Faschingskinder" . . . . . Ziehrer
   (First time.)

5. OVERTURE, "Barber of Seville" . . . . . Rossini
6. OVERTURE, "Rienzi" . . . . . Wagner
7. INDIAN SERENADE . . . . . Converse
8. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet

9. OVERTURE, "Pique Dame" . . . . . Suppé
10. WALTZ, "España" . . . . . Waldteufel
11. SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen" . . . . . Luders
12. MARCH, "El Capitan" . . . . . Sousa

Jewett Piano Used.

Monday Evening, May 22 . . . Wagner Programme

The Latest Orchestral Successes
AS PLAYED AT THESE CONCERTS

"Caressante Valse," By Frank Lambert
"Sous ta Fenetre," By Aimé Lachaume
"Berceuse" By Alfred Rieger
"International March and Two-step," By C. J. Roberts

Also published for Piano Solo, and can be had from all dealers and

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, New York

JUST TELEPHONE

GLOVES
Cleansed 10 cents per pair
Color of Tan Gloves retained No shrinking

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed
All spots removed

LACE and MUSLIN CURTAINS
Cleansed $1 per pair
ALL KINDS
BLANKETS
Cleansed 75 cents per pair

LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
Delivery Service Telephone Exchange
NEW YORK PHILADELPHIA WASHINGTON

On sale in the hall or may be ordered of the waiter

LOWNEY'S
Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece"

One pound packages, $1, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35, 30, and 25 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Suranné and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes, 25 cents

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

THE KNABE ANGELUS PIANOS

will be ready for delivery September 1. The KNABE is the FIRST absolutely high-grade, artistic piano to be equipped with an automatic piano player which in no way alters or detracts from the appearance of the piano.

The KNABE piano enjoys a deserved reputation for tone, touch, and durability equalled by no other piano, because its pre-eminence is not due to purchased encomiums but TRUE MERIT.

The price of the KNABE piano has not been reduced at the expense of its construction, but remains the same, while its makers progress steadily toward their ideal and ambition of over sixty years to produce ALWAYS the BEST PIANO MADE.

EXAMINE THE NEW SCALES AND CASES

Let us quote you terms for your summer rental. Largest renting stock in Boston.

THE C. C. HARVEY CO., 144 BOYLSTON STREET
TELEPHONE, OXFORD 134

[100]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Thursday, May 18, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 16.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1.	RAKOCZY MARCH	Berlioz
2.	HUNGARIAN DANCES	Brahms
3.	SELECTION, "Mikado"	Sullivan
4.	WALTZ, "Seid umschlungen Millionen"	Strauss
5.	OVERTURE, "Les Dragons de Villars"	Maillard
6.	SELECTION, "Aïda"	Verdi
7.	VIOLIN SOLO, "Romanza"	Strube
8.	SELECTION, "It Happened in Nordland"	Herbert
9.	OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "Violets"	Waldteufel
11.	SELECTION, "Yankee Consul"	Robyn
12.	MARCH, "Boccaccio"	Suppé

Jewett Piano Used.

Monday Evening, May 22 . . . Wagner Programme

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK

VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

	Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
e	8.00 a.m.	8.04 a.m.	Hartford	2.00 p.m.
bL	10.00 a.m.	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.10 "
a	10.03 "	10.07 "	" "	4.15 "
fL	1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m.	" "	6.10 "
g	1.03 "	1.07 "	" "	7.10 "
e	2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.59 "
b	3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.11 "
aL	5.00 "	5.04 "	" "	10.10 "
g	5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
g	12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

L Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

	Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
a	10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.15 p.m.
g	1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	" "	7.10 "
b	3.00 "	3.04 "	" "	9.11 "
g	5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
g	12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New York; b New London to New York; e New Haven to New York; f Boston to New Haven; g Boston to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m., Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Priscilla" or "Pilgrim," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.
362 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.

LIGHT WEIGHT
President Suspenders
"None so easy."

The most comfortable trouser support for summer wear.

Ball Bearing Garters

are termed an unconscious garter, because you do not realize you have them on.

ASK YOUR DEALER FOR THEM.

The C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO.
P.O. Box 414, SHIRLEY, MASS.

Tally-Ho Ginger Ale

Sold at these Concerts

Better than Coffee
Richer than Coffee
Nine-tenths Coffee

In the programme abov , for Thursday, May 18, we can supply at once for a l piano players the following:

1.	RAKOCZY MARCH	Berlioz
2.	HUNGARIAN DANCES	Brahms
3.	SELECTION, "Mikado"	Sullivan
4.	WALTZ, "Seid umschlungen Millionen"	Strauss
5.	SELECTION, "Aïda"	Verdi
6.	"THE DELUGE"	Saint-Saëns
7.	SELECTION, "It Happened in Nordland"	Herbert
8.	OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
9.	WALTZ, "Violets"	Waldteufel
10.	SELECTION, "Yankee Consul,"	Robyn
11.	MARCH, "Boccaccio"	Suppé

The PROGRAMME for TO-NIGHT

Can be played in your home to-morrow night or any night by any member of your family if you have one of our piano players. We rent and sell the leading makes of players at attractive prices. Convenient terms of payment will be arranged for responsible purchasers.

We have the most complete library of music in America for Pianista, Pianola, Angelus, Simplex, and other players. The latest selections, such as the music from "It Happened in Nordland," "Humpty Dumpty," "Johnny Jones," "Lady Teazle," etc., now in stock.

☞ If you own a player, be sure your name is on our mailing list for the new catalogue, containing over ten thousand numbers.

Some players that have been rented this winter will be sold at from $90 to $165.
Every instrument guaranteed

MENDELSSOHN MUSIC CO.
172 Tremont Street, Boston Also New York and Providence, R.I.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Friday, May 19, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 17.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 19, 1905.

PROGRAMME

1.	MARCH, "Black Bess"	Strube
2.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
3.	SELECTION, "Faust"	Gounod
4.	WALTZ, "Barcarole"	Waldteufel
5.	OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo"	Auber
6.	SELECTION, "Gondoliers"	Sullivan
7.	BALLET MUSIC, "Queen of Sheba" (Solo Violoncello, Mr. KELLER.)	Goldmark
8.	POLONAISE from "Onegin"	Tschaikowski
9.	GAVOTTE	Linke
10.	WALTZ, "Kaiser"	Strauss
11.	SELECTION, "Sho-Gun"	Luders
12.	HUNGARIAN MARCH	Moldauer

Jewett Piano Used.

Monday Evening, May 22 . . . Wagner Programme

Foster's Bugle Brand Bottling

BASS ALE

Sold at these concerts

Apollinaris

"THE QUEEN OF TABLE WATERS."

Bottled only at the Apollinaris Spring, Neuenahr, Germany, and Only with its Own Natural Gas.

MahMal

EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s	15 cents per box
No. 3s	20 cents per box
No. 1s	25 cents per box
No. 3, Cork Tips	25 cents per box

Also sold by

S. S. PIERCE CO.

BOSTON, BROOKLINE

Baltimore & Ohio

CENTRAL R.R. of N.J. BALTIMORE & OHIO R.R. PHILA. & READING R.R.

ROYAL BLUE LINE

"EVERY OTHER HOUR ON THE EVEN HOUR."

New York to Baltimore and Washington

Splendid equipment, thoroughly modern coaches, Pullman cars, and superior dining-car service

Solid trains from NEW YORK to PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE ST. LOUIS, CHICAGO

Ticket office, 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

C. W. BASSETT, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore

D. B. MARTIN, Manager Passenger Traffic, Baltimore

DRINK

HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.

JOS. GAHM & SON, New England Agents
125 Purchase Street

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Saturday, May 20, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 18.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Athletic Club" . . . . . R. Nagel
2. OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi" . . . . . Adam
3. SELECTION, "Brigands" . . . . . Offenbach
4. WALTZ, "Morgenblätter" . . . . . Strauss

5. BALLET MUSIC, "Gioconda" . . . . . Ponchielli
6. WEDDING MARCH . . . . . Mendelssohn
7. LARGO . . . . . Handel
   Solo Violin, Mr. HOFFMANN.
8. SELECTION, "Pirates of Penzance" . . . . . Sullivan

9. OVERTURE, "Galatea" . . . . . Suppé
10. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
11. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert
12. MARCH, "Cruiser Harvard" . . . . . Strube

Jewett Piano Used.

Monday Evening, May 22 . . . Wagner Programme
Saturday, May 27 . . Farewell Night of Mr. T. Adamowski

MENASHI AND RED LION CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, Club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

MISS MOORE
HIGH CLASS SPECIALTY SHOP
421 BOYLSTON STREET
WARREN CHAMBERS
BOSTON

Dainty Clothing for misses, women, and children.

Dresses ready to wear in veiling, taffeta, linen, and muslin. Prices from $25 to $200.

A variety of waists in hand embroidered linens and muslins and silks. Prices from $12 to $85.

Finest veils, parasols, neckwear, handkerchiefs, toilet articles, etc. Carefully selected and up to date.

Charles B. Perkins & Co.

The following choice selection of our CIGARS Always on sale at "Pop" Concerts:

Ginita Deliciosos Extra (domestic)	10c., 3 for 25c.
Catriona Perfectos (domestic)	10c. each
Petronila Puritanos (clear Havana)	10c. each
Tedesco Exquisitos (domestic)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Petronila Rothschilds (clear Havana)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra (imported)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos (imported)	15c. each
Romeo and Juliet Pacificos (imported)	20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Americanos (imported)	20c. each

ASK THE WAITER FOR

AMERICA'S FINEST PRODUCT

VARTRAY

Ginger Ale
Sarsaparilla

VARTRAY WATER CO.
Buffalo, N.Y.

Puritan

BEVERAGES are made of water distilled at the plant of the Puritan Water Company at Broadway and 30th Street, New York. The plant is always open to inspection. This policy has been adopted as giving the best possible guarantee of purity. Puritan beverages are not designed for consumers who place cheapness above quality. They are the best that can be made. A bottle of Puritan mineral water or ginger ale will help you to enjoy the concert. Give your order to the waiter.
Orders may be sent by mail to the PURITAN WATER COMPANY, 1218 Broadway, New York, and will be promptly filled by freight or express, as directed. Transportation charges payable by the purchaser.

Boston and Albany

4 Trains a Day

Leave Boston
MORNING (9 a.m.)
NOON (12 o'clock)
AFTERNOON (4 p.m.)
and NIGHT (11.15 p.m.)

Via "Springfield Line" for

NEW YORK CITY

Equipped with
Pullman Parlor and Sleeping Cars
WITH EXCELLENT DINING CAR SERVICE

Lv. BOSTON	9.00 a.m.	12.00 m.	4.00 p.m.	11.15 p.m.
" WORCESTER	10.06 "	1.04 p.m.	5.02 "	11.53 "
" SPRINGFIELD	11.34 "	2.22 "	6.21 "	2.35 a.m.
Ar. HARTFORD	12.13 p.m.	2.57 "	6.57 "	3.19 "
" NEW HAVEN	1.21 "	3.55 "	7.58 "	4.30 "
" NEW YORK	3.15 p.m.	5.45 p.m.	9.52 p.m.	6.46 a.m.

For reservations, tickets, etc., call on
R. M. HARRIS, City Passenger and Ticket Agent
366 WASHINGTON STREET
A. S. HANSON, General Passenger Agent. BOSTON, MASS.

[103]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL "The POPS" SEASON of 1905

SYMPHONY HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Notice to Advertisers.

The advertising columns in the programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

In order to thoroughly enjoy the Concerts smoke

Daniel Frank & Co.'s

Barrister, Perfecto . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Celebridad, Perfecto 10c. each
American, Puritanos . . 15c.
2 for 25c.
American, Concha Fina Especial . . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
American, Perfectos . . 20c.
3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter, Puritanos, 15c.
2 for 25c.
Mundo, Favoritas 15c. each
Constancia, Londres Especial (Imported) 15c. each
Mapa de Cuba, Perfecto (Imported) . . 25c. each

ON SALE AT THE "POPS"

Boston, Monday, May 22, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 19.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 22, 1905.

WAGNER NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner
2. OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo" . . . . . Auber
3. WALTZ, "Sounds from the Vienna Woods" . . . Strauss
4. "RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES" . . . . . Wagner

5. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner
6. SELECTION, "Sho-Gun" . . . . . Luders
7. PARAPHRASE from "Parsifal" for Four Violoncellos . Wagner
   Messrs. KELLER, NAGEL, BARTH, and HEBERLEIN.
8. { PRELUDE, Act I., "Lohengrin" / PRELUDE, Act III., "Lohengrin" } . . . . . Wagner

9. "FIRE-CHARM," from "Die Walküre" . . . . Wagner
10. WALTZ, "Violets" . . . . . Waldteufel
11. SELECTION, "It Happened in Nordland" . . . Herbert
12. HUNGARIAN MARCH . . . . . Moldauer

Steinway Piano Used.

Saturday, May 27 . . Farewell Night of Mr. T. Adamowski
Monday, May 29 . . . . . Mr. Max Zach, Conductor

DUFFY'S "1842" CIDER

SPARKLING. DELICIOUS

CONTAINS NO PRESERVATIVE

Served at the "Pops"

HAYNES PIPER CO., Distributers
18 Lewis Wharf, Boston
Telephone, Richmond 1112

Van Nostrand's

P.B. Ale

When Rube to City takes the train,
The novel sights to see,
He thinks of how many mugs he'll drain,
Good mugs of old P. B.

You will see it on the tables of "those who know"

NORFOLK CABINET LAGER BEER

THE large sales of Norfolk Cabinet at the "Pops" during past years are entirely due to the sound footing of confidence which experience inspires. Brewed from the highest grades of malt and hops, thoroughly aged, and properly sterilized, in delicacy of flavor and purity it is the ideal table beer.

MASSACHUSETTS BREWERIES CO.
17 Otis Street, Boston

Order a Siphon of

PUREOXIA SELTZER

To enliven your Rhine Wine

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Tuesday, May 23, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 20.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
2.	POLISH DANCES	Moniuszko
3.	WALTZ, "Barcarole"	Waldteufel
4.	SELECTION, "Geisha"	Jones
5.	OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi"	Adam
6.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
7.	SUITE, "Peer Gynt"	Grieg
8.	MARCH, "Slav"	Tschaikowski
9.	OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers"	Offenbach
10.	WALTZ, "The Mountaineers"	Ziehrer
11.	SELECTION, "Erminie"	Jakobowski
12.	MARCH, "El Capitan"	Sousa

Steinway Piano Used.

Thursday, May 25, by special request . . Wagner Night
Saturday, May 27 . . Farewell Night of Mr. T. Adamowski
Monday, May 29 . . . . . Mr. Max Zach, Conductor

ESTABROOK CIGARS AND EATON

On Sale at the "Pops"

MARGUERITE,
Panetelas . . 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA,
Ideals . . . . . 10c. each
E. & E.,
Invincibles . 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande 10c. each
MANUEL GARCIA,
Consuelos . 15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO.,
Reciprocity . 15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO.,
Especiales 20c., 5 for $1.00
LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmontes . 20c., 3 for 50c.
LA CAROLINA,
Perfectos . . . 25c. each

Estabrook & Eaton
CIGAR IMPORTERS
222 and 224 Washington Street.
Masonic Building, Boylston Street.
Merchants Building, 77 Summer St.

376 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Harrison Bottling Company
Representing
Imported Pilsner and Bavarian Beers of Rudolph Oelsner, New York.
W. A. Miles & Co., New York, Croton Brewery Ales.
Iroquois Brewing Co., of Buffalo, N.Y., Lager Beers.
Frank Jones Brewing Co., Portsmouth, N.H., Ales.

33 and 34 LEWIS WHARF, Boston, Mass.
Telephone, Richmond 1119

A. B. C.
"KING OF ALL BOTTLED BEERS"

The American Brewing Co.
ST. LOUIS.

Try a pint bottle and appreciate the fine hop flavor.

CODMAN & HALL CO.,
Distributers,
DEWEY SQUARE.

If you want an Old-fashioned Beer
ASK FOR

Pfaff's Lager

THE RATHSKELLER

UNDER THE
NEW AMERICAN HOUSE
BOSTON
MUSIC from 12 to 3
and 6 to Midnight

Try some of our SPECIAL DISHES Cannot be excelled

THEATRE PARTIES can make arrangements ahead

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

BIRD

Boston, Wednesday, May 24, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 21.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 24, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1.	RAKOCZY MARCH	Berlioz
2.	"INVITATION TO DANCE"	Weber
3.	SELECTION, "Gondoliers"	Sullivan
4.	WALTZ, "Snowflakes" (First time.)	Bayer
5.	BALLET MUSIC from "The Cid"	Massenet
6.	SELECTION, "Grand Duchess"	Offenbach
7.	"SALUT D'AMOUR"	Elgar
8.	OVERTURE, "Semiramide"	Rossini
9.	OVERTURE, "Stradella"	Flotow
10.	WALTZ, "España"	Waldteufel
11.	SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen"	Luders
12.	MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg"	Kral

Steinway Piano Used.

Thursday, May 25, by special request . . Wagner Night
Saturday, May 27 . . Farewell Night of Mr. T. Adamowski
Monday, May 29 . . . . Mr. Max Zach, Conductor

TRADE

MARK.

Wood, Pollard & Co.,

Importers of Wines, Spirits, Groceries, and Teas.

COFFEE ROASTERS.

Wood, Pollard & Co.,

Opposite North and South Stations,
BOSTON.

Wood, Pollard & Co.

GRAFTON
BLENHEIM
NOTTINGHAM

CIGARS

CHARLES THE GREAT
DON RODRIGO
CORDOVA

Opposite North and South Stations
BOSTON

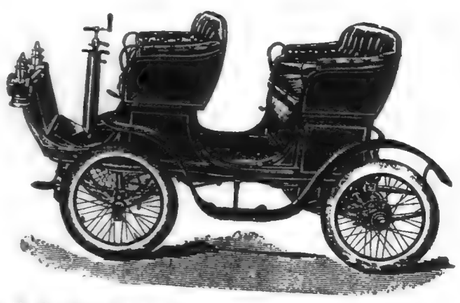
Mountain View House

Rangeley Lake, Maine.

L. E. BOWLEY,
Proprietor.

Always Satisfactory.

Post-office address,
MOUNTAIN VIEW, MAINE.

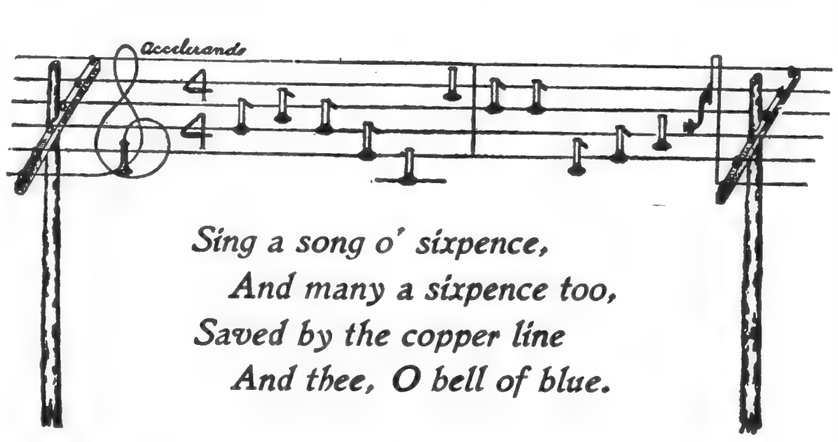


AUTOMOBILES FOR HIRE.

THE LARGEST RENTING STATION IN AMERICA.

All models of machines for hire by the hour, day, week, or month.
Open day and night. Will call at any address.
Sight-seeing cars, large or small parties, seats $1. The only up-to-date way to see Boston and suburbs. Daily trips to Nantasket, Concord, Lexington, etc.
Machines always ready. Write or telephone.

K. A. SKINNER, Proprietor, 179 Clarendon St.
Telephone, 67 Tremont.



Sing a song o' sixpence,
And many a sixpence too,
Saved by the copper line
And thee, O bell of blue.

The above will be translated into prose, with many additional facts, to any body inquiring at or writing to

New England Telephone & Telegraph Company

LOCAL LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE

Contract Department

101 Milk Street, Boston, Mass. Telephone, Main 6090

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

BIRD

Boston, Thursday, May 25, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 22.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 25, 1905.

Wagner Night, by request.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner
2. BALLET MUSIC, "Henry VIII." . . . . . Saint-Saëns
3. SELECTION, "Mikado" . . . . . Sullivan
4. "RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES" . . . . . Wagner

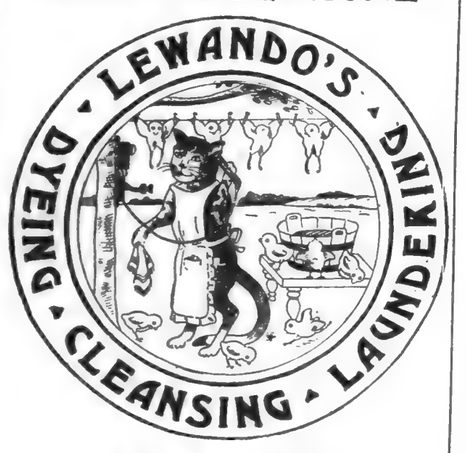
5. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . . Gounod
6. ROMANZA for Violin . . . . . Wagner
   Mr. JACQUES HOFFMANN.
7. OVERTURE, "Rienzi" . . . . . Wagner
8. PARAPHRASE from "Parsifal" for Four Violoncellos . Wagner
   Messrs. KELLER, NAGEL, BARTH, and HEBERLEIN.

9. GAVOTTE . . . . . Linke
10. PRELUDE to Act III., "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner
11. WALTZ, "Snowflakes" . . . . . Bayer
    (First time.)
12. MARCH, "Tambour Battant" . . . . . Messager

Steinway Piano Used.

Saturday, May 27 . . Farewell Night of Mr. T. Adamowski
Monday, May 29 . . . . . Mr. Max Zach, Conductor

JUST TELEPHONE



GLOVES
Cleansed 10 cents per pair
Color of Tan Gloves retained No shrinking

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed
All spots removed

LACE and MUSLIN CURTAINS
Cleansed $1 per pair
ALL KINDS
BLANKETS
Cleansed 75 cents per pair

LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
Delivery Service Telephone Exchange
NEW YORK PHILADELPHIA
WASHINGTON

The Cheapest and Best Series of Standard Music now published . . .

"Imperial Edition of Songs"

Soprano Album
Baritone Album
Contralto Album
Bass Album
Tenor Album
Tschaikowsky Album
Golden Treasury of Song

PAPER COVERS, PRICE $1.00 NET, EACH

To be had of all dealers and

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, New York

On sale in the hall or may be ordered of the waiter

LOWNEY'S
Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece"

One pound packages,
$1, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages,
35, 30, and 25 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Suranné and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes, 25 cents

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

THE KNABE ANGELUS PIANOS

will be ready for delivery September 1. The KNABE is the FIRST absolutely high-grade, artistic piano to be equipped with an automatic piano player which in no way alters or detracts from the appearance of the piano.

The KNABE piano enjoys a deserved reputation for tone, touch, and durability equalled by no other piano, because its pre-eminence is not due to purchased encomiums but TRUE MERIT.

The price of the KNABE piano has not been reduced at the expense of its construction, but remains the same, while its makers progress steadily toward their ideal and ambition of over sixty years to produce ALWAYS the BEST PIANO MADE.

EXAMINE THE NEW SCALES AND CASES

Let us quote you terms for your summer rental. Largest renting stock in Boston.

THE C. C. HARVEY CO., 144 BOYLSTON STREET
TELEPHONE, OXFORD 134

[107]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Friday, May 26, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 23.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 26, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "El Capitan" . . . . . Sousa
2. OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi" . . . . . Adam
3. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
4. SELECTION, "It Happened in Nordland" . . . . . Herbert

5. GAVOTTE . . . . . Linke
6. "LA BELLE AU BOIS DORMANT" . . . . . Tschaikowski
7. SYMPHONIC POEM, "The Youth of Hercules" . . . . . Saint-Saëns
8. MARCH, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner

9. OVERTURE, "Galatea" . . . . . Suppé
10. WALTZ, "Beautiful Blue Danube" . . . . . Strauss
11. SELECTION, "Yankee Consul" . . . . . Robyn
12. MARCH, "Vienna Dude" . . . . . Wagner

Steinway Piano Used.

Saturday, May 27 . . Farewell Night of Mr. T. Adamowski
Monday, May 29 . . . . . Mr. Max Zach, Conductor

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK

VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
e 8.00 a.m.	8.04 a.m.	Hartford	2.00 p.m.
bL 10.00 a.m.	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.10 "
a 10.03 "	10.07 "	" "	4.15 "
fL 1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m.	" "	6.10 "
g 1.03 "	1.07 "	" "	7.10 "
e 2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.59 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.11 "
aL 5.00 "	5.04 "	" "	10.10 "
g 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

L Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
a 10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.15 p.m.
g 1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	" "	7.10 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	" "	9.11 "
g 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

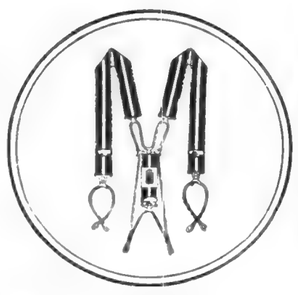
Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New York; b New London to New York; e New Haven to New York; f Boston to New Haven; g Boston to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m., Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Priscilla" or "Pilgrim," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.
362 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.



LIGHT WEIGHT

President Suspenders

"Cool and comfortable as gentle zephyrs."

Worn during business or pleasure. They increase the comfort of the wearer.

Ball Bearing Garters

are the most dependable. They never slip down or come unfastened.

ASK YOUR DEALER FOR THEM.

The C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO.,
P.O. Box 414, SHIRLEY, MASS.

Tally-Ho Ginger Ale

Sold at these Concerts

Better than Coffee
Richer than Coffee
Nine-tenths Coffee

In the programme above, for Friday, May 26, we can supply at once for all piano players the following:

1. MARCH, "El Capitan" Sousa
2. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" Zeller
3. SELECTION, "It Happened in Nordland" Herbert
4. GAVOTTE Linke
5. "La Belle au Bois Dormant" Tschaikowski
6. SYMPHONIC POEM, "The Youth of Hercules" Saint-Saëns
7. MARCH, "Tannhäuser" Wagner
8. OVERTURE, "Galatea" Suppé
9. WALTZ, "Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
10. SELECTION, "Yankee Consul," Robyn
11. MARCH, "Vienna Dude" Wagner

The PROGRAMME for TO-NIGHT

Can be played in your home to-morrow night or any night by any member of your family if you have one of our piano players. We rent and sell the leading makes of players at attractive prices. Convenient terms of payment will be arranged for responsible purchasers.

We have the most complete library of music in America for Pianista, Pianola, Angelus, Simplex, and other players. The latest selections, such as the music from "It Happened in Nordland," "Humpty Dumpty," "Johnny Jones," "Lady Teazle," etc., now in stock.

☞ If you own a player, be sure your name is on our mailing list for the new catalogue, containing over ten thousand numbers.

Some players that have been rented this winter will be sold at from $90 to $165. Every instrument guaranteed

MENDELSSOHN MUSIC CO.

172 Tremont Street, Boston Also New York and Providence, R.I.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Saturday, May 27, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

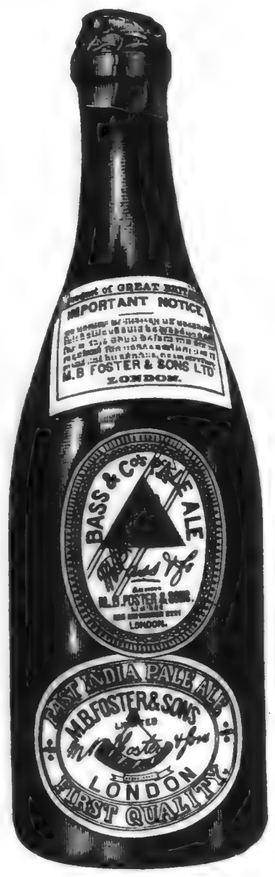
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 24.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Conductor.

Foster's Bottling Bugle Brand

BASS ALE



Sold at these concerts

SATURDAY, MAY 27, 1905.

Farewell Night of Mr. T. Adamowski.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Tambour Battant" . . . . . Messager
2. OVERTURE, "Mignon" . . . . . Thomas
3. WALTZ, "The Skaters" . . . . . Waldteufel
4. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . . Gounod

5. BALLET MUSIC, "Gioconda" . . . . . Ponchielli
6. "THE DELUGE" . . . . . Saint-Saëns

Solo Violin, Mr. HOFFMANN.

7. SELECTION, "La Bohème" . . . . . Puccini
8. FAREWELL SYMPHONY . . . . . Haydn

9. SERENADE, "Les Contes d'Hoffmann" . . . . Offenbach
10. WALTZ, "Lauschiger Nacht" . . . . . Ziehrer
11. SELECTION, "It Happened in Nordland" . . . . Herbert
12. MARCH, "Cruiser Harvard" . . . . . Strube

Steinway Piano Used.

Monday, May 29 . . . . . Mr. Max Zach, Conductor

Pure, Healthful, Refreshing

Apollinaris

"The Queen of Table Waters"

Mah Mal

EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s . .	15 cents per box
No. 3s . .	20 cents per box
No. 1s . .	25 cents per box
No. 3, Cork Tips	25 cents per box

Also sold by

S. S. PIERCE CO.

BOSTON, BROOKLINE

Baltimore & Ohio

CENTRAL R.R. of N.J. — BALTIMORE & OHIO R.R. — PHILA. & READING R.R.

ROYAL BLUE LINE

"EVERY OTHER HOUR ON THE EVEN HOUR."

New York to Baltimore and Washington

Splendid equipment, thoroughly modern coaches, Pullman cars, and superior dining-car service

Solid trains from NEW YORK to
PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE
ST. LOUIS, CHICAGO

Ticket office, 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

C. W. BASSETT, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore

D. B. MARTIN, Manager Passenger Traffic, Baltimore

DRINK

HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.

JOS. GAHM & SON, New England Agents
125 Purchase Street

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Monday, May 29, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 25.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 29, 1905.

First Night of Conductor Max Zach

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Merry Soldiers" . . . . . Sabathil
2. WALTZ, "Vienna Blood" . . . . . Strauss
3. SELECTION, "Florodora" . . . . . Stuart
4. OVERTURE, "Domino Noir" . . . . . Auber

5. OVERTURE to "Slovenly Peter." Ballet by . . Heuberger (First time.)
6. SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . . . Mascagni
7. SCÈNE RELIGIEUSE ET INVOCATION . . . . Massenet 'Cello Obligato, Mr. JOSEPH KELLER.
8. FINALE to Act I. from "Lohengrin" . . . . Wagner

9. WALTZ, "Forest Spirits" . . . . . Zach
10. ENTR'ACTE, "Al Fresco" . . . . . Herbert (First time.)
11. MAZURKA, "Die Libelle" . . . . . Strauss
12. MARCH, "Princess Ninetta" . . . . . Strauss

Hume Piano Used.

Tuesday, May 30 . . . . . Patriotic Night
Monday, June 5 . . . . . Wagner Night

MENASHI AND RED LION CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, Club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

MISS MOORE
HIGH CLASS SPECIALTY SHOP
421 BOYLSTON STREET
WARREN CHAMBERS
BOSTON

Dainty Clothing for misses, women, and children.

Dresses ready to wear in veiling, taffeta, linen, and muslin. Prices from $25 to $200.

A variety of waists in hand embroidered linens and muslins and silks. Prices from $12 to $85.

Finest veils, parasols, neckwear, handkerchiefs, toilet articles, etc. Carefully selected and up to date.

Charles B. Perkins & Co.

The following choice selection of our CIGARS Always on sale at "Pop" Concerts:

Ginita Deliciosos Extra (domestic)	10c., 3 for 25c.
Catriona Perfectos (domestic)	10c. each
Petronila Puritanos (clear Havana)	10c. each
Tedesco Exquisitos (domestic)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Petronila Rothschilds (clear Havana)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra (imported)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos (imported)	15c. each
Romeo and Juliet Pacificos (imported)	20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Americanos (imported)	20c. each

36 Kilby St. Branch, 53 State St., Exchange Building. Telephone, Main 1186

ASK THE WAITER FOR

AMERICA'S FINEST PRODUCT

VARTRAY

Ginger Ale
Sarsaparilla

VARTRAY WATER CO.
Buffalo, N.Y.

Puritan

BEVERAGES are made of water distilled at the plant of the Puritan Water Company at Broadway and 30th Street, New York. The plant is always open to inspection. This policy has been adopted as giving the best possible guarantee of purity. Puritan beverages are not designed for consumers who place cheapness above quality. They are the best that can be made. A bottle of Puritan mineral water or ginger ale will help you to enjoy the concert. Give your order to the waiter.
Orders may be sent by mail to the PURITAN WATER COMPANY, 1218 Broadway, New York, and will be promptly filled by freight or express, as directed. Transportation charges payable by the purchaser.

Boston and Albany R.R.

4 Trains a Day

Leave Boston
MORNING (9 a.m.)
NOON (12 o'clock)
AFTERNOON (4 p.m.)
and NIGHT (11.15 p.m.)

Via "Springfield Line" for

NEW YORK CITY

Equipped with
Pullman Parlor and Sleeping Cars
WITH EXCELLENT DINING CAR SERVICE

Lv. BOSTON	9.00 a.m.	12.00 m.	4.00 p.m.	11.15 p.m.
" WORCESTER	10.06 "	1.04 p.m.	5.02 "	11.53 "
" SPRINGFIELD	11.34 "	2.22 "	6.21 "	2.35 a.m.
Ar. HARTFORD	12.13 p.m.	2.57 "	6.57 "	3.19 "
" NEW HAVEN	1.21 "	3.55 "	7.58 "	4.30 "
" NEW YORK	3.15 p.m.	5.45 p.m.	9.52 p.m.	6.46 a.m.

For reservations, tickets, etc., call on
R. M. HARRIS, City Passenger and Ticket Agent
366 WASHINGTON STREET
A. S. HANSON, General Passenger Agent. BOSTON, MASS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL "POPS" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Notice to Advertisers.

The advertising columns in the programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

In order to thoroughly enjoy the Concerts smoke

Daniel Frank & Co.'s

Barrister, Perfecto . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Celebridad, Perfecto 10c. each
American, Puritanos . . 15c.
2 for 25c.
American, Concha Fina Especial . . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
American, Perfectos . . 20c.
3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter, Puritanos, 15c.
2 for 25c.
Mundo, Favoritas 15c. each
Constancia, Londres Especial (Imported) 15c. each
Mapa de Cuba, Perfecto (Imported) . . 25c. each

ON SALE AT THE "POPS"

Boston, Tuesday, May 30, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 26.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 30, 1905.

Patriotic Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Szechenyi" . . . . . Fahrbach
2. WALTZ, "Gross-Wien" . . . . . Strauss
3. OVERTURE, "Le Roi l'a dit" . . . . . Delibes
4. SELECTION, "Robin Hood" . . . . . De Koven

5. "LOUISIANA" (The official St. Louis World's Fair March) (First time.) Fr. van der Stucken
6. SPRING SONG . . . . . Mendelssohn
7. SELECTION, "King Dodo" . . . . . Luders
8. "PAN-AMERICANA" (First time.) . . . . . Herbert

9. OVERTURE to "Mignon" . . . . . Thomas
10. AMERICAN FANTASY . . . . . Herbert
11. VALSE, "Amoureuse" . . . . . Berger
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . . . Sousa

Hume Piano Used.

Monday, June 5 . . . . . Wagner Night

DUFFY'S "1842" CIDER

SPARKLING. DELICIOUS

CONTAINS NO PRESERVATIVE

Served at the "Pops"

HAYNES PIPER CO., Distributers

18 Lewis Wharf, Boston

Telephone, Richmond 1112

Van Nostrand's

P.B. Ale

The artist with palette in hand
And a palate in his mouth,
Paints P. B. Ale throughout the land,
And drinks it through the drought.

Ask the waiter for P. B.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS

NORFOLK CABINET LAGER BEER

THE large sales of Norfolk Cabinet at the "Pops" during past years are entirely due to the sound footing of confidence which experience inspires. Brewed from the highest grades of malt and hops, thoroughly aged, and properly sterilized, in delicacy of flavor and purity it is the ideal table beer.

MASSACHUSETTS BREWERIES CO.
17 Otis Street, Boston

Order a Siphon of

PUREOXIA SELTZER

To enliven your Rhine Wine

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Wednesday, May 31, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 27.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 31, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. CORONATION MARCH . . . . . Meyerbeer
2. OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant" . . . . . Suppé
   'Cello Obligato, Mr. J. KELLER.
3. WALTZ, "Girls of Baden" . . . . . Komzak
   (First time.)
4. SELECTION, "Aïda" . . . . . Verdi

5. TWO ENTR'ACTES from "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet
6. WALTZ, "Harlequin's Journey" . . . . . Zach
7. ROMANZA for Violin . . . . . Strube
   Mr. CARLO ONDRICEK.
8. "ENTRÉE TRIOMPHALE DES BOYARDS" . Halvorsen

9. OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi" . . . . . Adam
10. INTERMEZZO from "Contes d'Hoffmann" . . Offenbach
11. SELECTION, "It Happened in Nordland" . . . Herbert
12. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . . Wagner

Hume Piano Used.

Monday, June 5 . . . . . Wagner Night

ESTABROOK CIGARS AND EATON

On Sale at the "Pops"

MARGUERITE,
Panetelas . . 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA,
Ideals . . . . . 10c. each
E. & E.,
Invincibles . 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande 10c. each
MANUEL GARCIA,
Consuelos . 15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO.,
Reciprocity . 15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO.,
Especiales 20c., 5 for $1.00
LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmontes . 20c., 3 for 50c.
LA CAROLINA,
Perfectos . . . 25c. each

Estabrook & Eaton
CIGAR IMPORTERS
222 and 224 Washington Street.
Masonic Building, Boylston Street.
Merchants Building, 77 Summer St.
376 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Harrison Bottling Company
Representing
Imported Pilsner and Bavarian Beers of Rudolph Oelsner, New York.
W. A. Miles & Co., New York, Croton Brewery Ales.
Iroquois Brewing Co., of Buffalo, N.Y., Lager Beers.
Frank Jones Brewing Co., Portsmouth, N.H., Ales.
33 and 34 LEWIS WHARF, Boston, Mass.
Telephone, Richmond 1119

Try a pint bottle and appreciate the fine hop flavor.

CODMAN & HALL CO.,
Distributers,
DEWEY SQUARE.

If you want an Old-fashioned Beer
ASK FOR
Pfaff's Lager

THE RATHSKELLER

UNDER THE
NEW AMERICAN HOUSE
BOSTON
MUSIC from 12 to 3
and 6 to Midnight

Try some of our SPECIAL DISHES Cannot be excelled

THEATRE PARTIES can make arrangements ahead

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Thursday, June 1, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 28.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. WERNER MARCH . . . . . Ziehrer
2. WALTZ, "Longchamps Fleuri" . . . . . Waldteufel
3. OVERTURE, "Stradella" . . . . . Flotow
4. SELECTION, "Singing Girl" . . . . . Herbert

5. SELECTION, "Il Trovatore" . . . . . Verdi
6. TWO MOVEMENTS from "Peer Gynt" . . . . . Grieg
   a. Anitra's Dance.
   b. In the Halls of the Mountain King.
7. "UNDER THE LINDEN TREES," from "Scènes Alsaciennes"
   'Cello Obligato, Mr. KELLER. Clarinet Obligato, Mr. FRITZSCHE. Massenet
8. WALTZ, "Vienna Bonbons" . . . . . Strauss

9. OVERTURE, "Pique Dame" . . . . . Suppé
10. VALSE BLEUE . . . . . Margis
11. SELECTION, "Erminie" . . . . . Jakobowski
12. MILITARY MARCH . . . . . Zach

Hume Piano Used.

Monday, June 5 . . . . . Wagner Night

TRADE

MARK.

Wood, Pollard & Co.,

Importers of Wines, Spirits, Groceries, and Teas.

COFFEE ROASTERS.

Wood, Pollard & Co.,

Opposite North and South Stations,
BOSTON.

Wood, Pollard & Co.

GRAFTON
BLENHEIM
NOTTINGHAM

CIGARS

CHARLES THE GREAT
DON RODRIGO
CORDOVA

Opposite North and South Stations
BOSTON

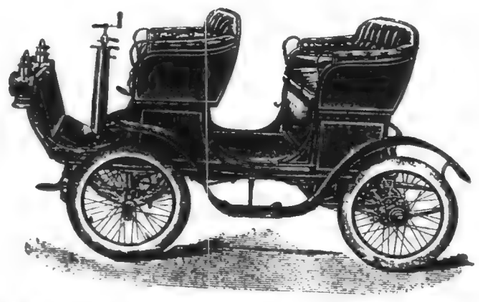
Mountain View House

Rangeley Lake, Maine.

L. E. BOWLEY,
Proprietor.

Always Satisfactory.

Post-office address,
MOUNTAIN VIEW, MAINE.



AUTOMOBILES FOR HIRE.

THE LARGEST RENTING STATION IN AMERICA.

All models of machines for hire by the hour, day, week, or month.
Open day and night. Will call at any address.
Sight-seeing cars, large or small parties, seats $1. The only up-to-date way to see Boston and suburbs. Daily trips to Nantasket, Concord, Lexington, etc.
Machines always ready. Write or telephone.

K. A. SKINNER, Proprietor, 179 Clarendon St.
Telephone, 67 Tremont.

SUBSCRIBERS

The New England Telephone and Telegraph Company has made material changes in its Rates affecting Metropolitan and Suburban Exchanges

INDUCEMENTS

Are offered to Suburban Subscribers for Residence Telephones. For Information call

Contract Dept. MAIN 6090 101 Milk St. Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Friday, June 2, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 29.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 2, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "For the Country"
2. OVERTURE, "Zampa" . . . . . Milloecker
3. SELECTION, "Robin Hood" . . . . . Hérold
4. WALTZ, "Landeskinder" . . . . . De Koven

---

5. TWO HUNGARIAN DANCES . . . . . Strauss
6. NOCTURNE . . . . . Brahms

For Violin, 'Cello, and Harp.
Messrs. ONDRICEK, KELLER, and SCHUECKER.

7. SELECTION from "Opernball" . . . . . Doppler
8. OVERTURE, "Le Roi d'Ys" (First time.) . . . . . Heuberger

---

9. WALTZ, "Fledermaus" . . . . . Lalo
10. SELECTION, "Yankee Consul" . . . . . Strauss
11. "RIDE OF THE HUSSARS" . . . . . Robyn
12. MARCH, "Wien bleibt Wien" . . . . . Spindler

Hume Piano Used. Schrammel

Monday, June 5 . . . . . Wagner Night

JUST TELEPHONE

LEWANDO'S DYEING CLEANSING LAUNDERING

GLOVES

Cleansed 10 cents per pair
Color of Tan Gloves retained No shrinking

CLOTHING

Cleansed or Dyed
All spots removed

LACE and MUSLIN CURTAINS

Cleansed $1 per pair

ALL KINDS BLANKETS

Cleansed 75 cents per pair

LEWANDO'S

17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street

Delivery Service Telephone Exchange
NEW YORK PHILADELPHIA WASHINGTON

The Latest Cycles for One and More Voices

THREE SPANISH FOLK-SONGS. By Cleland Cornmell		Price $1.00
FOUR SONGS FROM THE GARDEN OF KHAMA. By Alma Goetz.	In two keys	" 1.00
A DREAM OF FLOWERS. By Julian Clifford.	Song Cycle	" 1.50
FAIRY DREAMS. By Franco Leoni.	Cycle for four voices	" 1.50
SONGS OF THE DESERT. By George Clutsam.	In two keys	" 1.25
A LOVER IN DAMASCUS. Song Cycle. By Amy Woodforde-Finden.	Two keys	" 1.50
SHROPSHIRE LAD. Song Cycle. By Arthur Somervell		" 1.50
THREE SONG POEMS. By S. Coleridge-Taylor.	Two keys	" 1.00
HESPERIDES SONG CYCLE. By George Clutsam		" 1.50
BUNCH OF SHAMROCKS. Irish Song Cycle for four solo voices. By A. A. Needham		" 2.00

To be had of all leading dealers and

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, New York

On sale in the hall or may be ordered of the waiter

LOWNEY'S Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece"

One pound packages, $1, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35, 30, and 25 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Suranné and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes, 25 cents

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

THE KNABE ANGELUS PIANOS

will be ready for delivery September 1. The KNABE is the FIRST absolutely high-grade, artistic piano to be equipped with an automatic piano player which in no way alters or detracts from the appearance of the piano.

The KNABE piano enjoys a deserved reputation for tone, touch, and durability equalled by no other piano, because its pre-eminence is not due to purchased encomiums but TRUE MERIT.

The price of the KNABE piano has not been reduced at the expense of its construction, but remains the same, while its makers progress steadily toward their ideal and ambition of over sixty years to produce ALWAYS the BEST PIANO MADE.

EXAMINE THE NEW SCALES AND CASES

Let us quote you terms for your summer rental. Largest renting stock in Boston.

THE C. C. HARVEY CO., 144 BOYLSTON STREET
TELEPHONE, OXFORD 134

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Saturday, June 3, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 30.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1.	TEUFEL'S MARCH	Suppé
2.	OVERTURE, "Martha"	Flotow
3.	WALTZ, "Pomone"	Waldteufel
4.	SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland"	Herbert
5.	"BLISSFUL DREAM"	Meyer-Helmund
6.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
7.	BALLET MUSIC, "Sylvia"	Delibes
8.	OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
9.	SEXTETTE from "Lucia"	Donizetti
10.	WALTZ, "Harlequin's Wedding"	Zach
11.	POLKA, "Tic-Tac"	Strobl
12.	MARCH, "Cruiser Harvard"	Strube

Hume Piano Used.

Monday, June 5 . . . . . Wagner Night
Tuesday, June 6 . . . . . Technology Night

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK
VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
e 8.00 a.m.	8.04 a.m.	Hartford	2.00 p.m.
bL 10.00 a.m.	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.10 "
a 10.03 "	10.07 "	" "	4.15 "
fL 1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m.	" "	6.10 "
g 1.03 "	1.07 "	" "	7.10 "
e 2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.59 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.11 "
aL 5.00 "	5.04 "	" "	10.10 "
g 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

L Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
a 10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.15 p.m.
g 1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	" "	7.10 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	" "	9.11 "
g 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

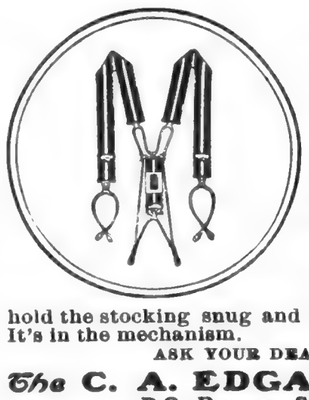
Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New York; b New London to New York; e New Haven to New York; f Boston to New Haven; g Boston to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m., Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Priscilla" or "Pilgrim," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.
362 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.



LIGHT WEIGHT
President Suspenders

"Most trouser comfort obtainable."
Even support of the trousers without any strain on the shoulders.

Ball Bearing Garters

hold the stocking snug and firm without binding the leg. It's in the mechanism.

ASK YOUR DEALER FOR THEM.

The C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO.
P.O. Box 414, SHIRLEY, MASS.

Tally-Ho Ginger Ale

Sold at these Concerts

Veuve Chaffard

PURE OLIVE OIL

In Honest Bottles

In the programme above, for Saturday, June 3, we can supply at once for all piano players the following:

1. OVERTURE, "Martha" Flotow
2. WALTZ, "Pomone" Waldteufel
3. SELECTION, "Belle of New York" Kerker
4. SELECTION, "Carmen" Bizet
5. BALLET MUSIC, "Sylvia" Delibes
6. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser" Wagner
7. SEXTETTE from "Lucia" Donizetti

The PROGRAMME for TO-NIGHT

Can be played in your home to-morrow night or any night by any member of your family if you have one of our piano players. We rent and sell the leading makes of players at attractive prices. Convenient terms of payment will be arranged for responsible purchasers.

We have the most complete library of music in America for Pianista, Pianola, Angelus, Simplex, and other players. The latest selections, such as the music from "It Happened in Nordland," "Humpty Dumpty," "Johnny Jones," "Lady Teazle," etc., now in stock.

☞ If you own a player, be sure your name is on our mailing list for the new catalogue, containing over ten thousand numbers.

Some players that have been rented this winter will be sold at from $90 to $165.
Every instrument guaranteed

MENDELSSOHN MUSIC CO.
172 Tremont Street, Boston Also New York and Providence, R.I.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Monday, June 5, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1895.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 31.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 5, 1905.

WAGNER NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. ORIENTAL MARCH . . . . . Zach
2. WALTZ, "Joys of Life" . . . . . Strauss
3. SELECTION, "The Serenaders" . . . . . Herbert
4. OVERTURE to "The Flying Dutchman" . . . . . Wagner

5. SELECTION, "La Bohème" . . . . . Puccini
6. "LÉGENDE" . . . . . Wieniawski
   Mr. ONDRICEK.
7. OVERTURE to "Slovenly Peter" . . . . . Heuberger
8. PRELUDE to "The Mastersingers" . . . . . Wagner

9. PROCESSION OF THE WOMEN, "Lohengrin" . . Wagner
10. SONG, "Evening Star," from "Tannhäuser" . . . Wagner
    Solo Trombone, Mr. CARL HAMPE.
11. WALTZ, "Girls of Baden" . . . . . Komzak
12. MARCH . . . . . Nagel

Jewett Piano Used.

Tuesday, June 6 . . . . . Technology Night
Monday, June 12 . . . . . French Composers' Night

Served at these concerts

Sparkling Dry-Comet

Apollinaris

"THE QUEEN OF TABLE WATERS."

Bottled only at the Apollinaris Spring, Neuenahr, Germany, and Only with its Own Natural Gas.

MahMal

EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s	15 cents per box
No. 3s	20 cents per box
No. 1s	25 cents per box
No. 3, Cork Tips	25 cents per box

Also sold by

S. S. PIERCE CO.

BOSTON, BROOKLINE

Baltimore & Ohio

CENTRAL R.R. of N.J. — BALTIMORE & OHIO R.R. — PHILA. & READING R.R.

ROYAL BLUE LINE

"EVERY OTHER HOUR ON THE EVEN HOUR."

New York to Baltimore and Washington

Splendid equipment, thoroughly modern coaches, Pullman cars, and superior dining-car service

Solid trains from NEW YORK to PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE ST. LOUIS, CHICAGO

Ticket office, 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

C. W. BASSETT, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore

D. B. MARTIN, Manager Passenger Traffic, Baltimore

DRINK

HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.

JOS. GAHM & SON, New England Agents
125 Purchase Street

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Tuesday, June 6, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 32.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 6, 1905.

Technology Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Black Bess" . . . . . Strube
2. WALTZ, "I Love You" . . . . . Waldteufel
3. SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen" . . . . . Luders
4. a. "PREXY FOR AYE"
   b. "ON ROGERS STEPS"
   c. "TAKE ME BACK TO TECH"
5. COLLEGE OVERTURE . . . . . Moses
6. a. "RETROSPECTION"
   b. "THE BEST SCHOOL OF ALL"
7. OVERTURE, "Pique Dame" . . . . . Suppé
8. a. "THE JANITORS' UNION" }
   b. "THE STEIN SONG" } . . . Bullard, Tech '87
9. OVERTURE, "Orpheus" . . . . . Offenbach
10. SELECTION, "Yankee Consul" . . . . . Robyn
11. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
12. MARCH, "Hussar Drill" . . . . . Zach

Jewett Piano Used.

After the concert Tech men will form by classes and march to the Institute to cheer Rogers Building, which will be appropriately illuminated.

Refreshments served to balcony patrons in hall in left corridor, first balcony, near stage.

Monday, June 12 . . . . French Composers' Night

MENASHI
AND
RED LION
CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, Club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

MISS MOORE
HIGH CLASS SPECIALTY SHOP
421 BOYLSTON STREET
WARREN CHAMBERS
BOSTON

Dainty Clothing for misses, women, and children.

Dresses ready to wear in veiling, taffeta, linen, and muslin. Prices from $25 to $200.

A variety of waists in hand embroidered linens and muslins and silks. Prices from $12 to $85.

Finest veils, parasols, neckwear, handkerchiefs, toilet articles, etc. Carefully selected and up to date.

Charles B. Perkins & Co.

The following choice selection of our CIGARS Always on sale at "Pop" Concerts:

Ginita Deliciosos Extra (domestic)	10c., 3 for 25c.
Catriona Perfectos (domestic)	10c. each
Petronila Puritanos (clear Havana)	10c. each
Tedesco Exquisitos (domestic)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Petronila Rothschilds (clear Havana)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra (imported)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos (imported)	15c. each
Romeo and Juliet Pacificos (imported)	20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Americanos (imported)	20c. each

36 Kilby St. Branch, 53 State St., Exchange Building. Telephone, Main 1186

ASK THE WAITER FOR

AMERICA'S FINEST PRODUCT

VARTRAY

Ginger Ale
Sarsaparilla

VARTRAY WATER CO.
Buffalo, N.Y.

Puritan

BEVERAGES are made of water distilled at the plant of the Puritan Water Company at Broadway and 30th Street, New York. The plant is always open to inspection. This policy has been adopted as giving the best possible guarantee of purity. Puritan beverages are not designed for consumers who place cheapness above quality. They are the best that can be made. A bottle of Puritan mineral water or ginger ale will help you to enjoy the concert. Give your order to the waiter.
Orders may be sent by mail to the PURITAN WATER COMPANY, 1218 Broadway, New York, and will be promptly filled by freight or express, as directed. Transportation charges payable by the purchaser.

Boston and Albany

4 Trains a Day

Leave Boston
MORNING (9 a.m.)
NOON (12 o'clock)
AFTERNOON (4 p.m.)
and NIGHT (11.15 p.m.)

Via "Springfield Line" for

NEW YORK CITY

Equipped with
Pullman Parlor and Sleeping Cars
WITH EXCELLENT DINING CAR SERVICE

Lv. BOSTON	9.00 a.m.	12.00 m.	4.00 p.m.	11.15 p.m.
" WORCESTER	10.06 "	1.04 p.m.	5.02 "	11.53 "
" SPRINGFIELD	11.34 "	2.22 "	6.21 "	2.35 a.m.
Ar. HARTFORD	12.13 p.m.	2.57 "	6.57 "	3.19 "
" NEW HAVEN	1.21 "	3.55 "	7.58 "	4.30 "
" NEW YORK	3.15 p.m.	5.45 p.m.	9.52 p.m.	6.46 a.m.

For reservations, tickets, etc., call on
R. M. HARRIS, City Passenger and Ticket Agent
366 WASHINGTON STREET
A. S. HANSON, General Passenger Agent. BOSTON, MASS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL "The POPS" SEASON of 1905

SYMPHONY HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Boston, Wednesday, June 7, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 33.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

Notice to Advertisers.

The advertising columns in the programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 7, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. POLONAISE . . . . . Chopin
2. WALTZ, "Vienna Bonbons" . . . . . Strauss
3. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . . Gounod
4. OVERTURE, "La Jolie Parfumeuse" . . . . Offenbach

---

5. SELECTION, "Sho-Gun" . . . . . Luders
6. OVERTURE, "The Beautiful Galatée" . . . . Suppé
7. "LE DERNIER SOMMEIL DE LA VIERGE" . . Massenet
   For String Orchestra.
8. "ENTRÉE TRIOMPHALE DES BOYARDS" . Halvorsen

---

9. MARCHE NUPTIALE . . . . . Sieberg
   (First time.)
10. WALTZ, "Vienna Beauties" . . . . . Ziehrer
11. GALOP, "Wasps' Nest" . . . . . Zach
12. MARCH, "Obersteiger" . . . . . Zeller

Jewett Piano Used.

Monday, June 12 . . . . French Composers' Night
Wednesday, June 14 . Farewell Night of Conductor Max Zach

In order to thoroughly enjoy the Concerts smoke

Daniel Frank & Co.'s

Barrister, Perfecto . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Celebridad, Perfecto 10c. each
American, Puritanos . . 15c.
2 for 25c.
American, Concha Fina Especial . . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
American, Perfectos . . 20c.
3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter, Puritanos, 15c.
2 for 25c.
Mundo, Favoritas 15c. each
Constancia, Londres Especial (Imported) 15c. each
Mapa de Cuba, Perfecto (Imported) . . 25c. each

ON SALE AT THE "POPS"

DUFFY'S "1842" CIDER

SPARKLING. DELICIOUS

CONTAINS NO PRESERVATIVE

Served at the "Pops"

HAYNES PIPER CO., Distributers
18 Lewis Wharf, Boston
Telephone, Richmond 1112

Van Nostrand's

P. B. Ale

See Gretchen mit der big, new can
A sprinting to der barkeep man.
In Chermany she loved her beer
But somedings better she drinks here.
Und what would now her Fritzy say
Midout his P. B. Ale today?

A leader at the "Pops"

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS

NORFOLK CABINET LAGER BEER

THE large sales of Norfolk Cabinet at the "Pops" during past years are entirely due to the sound footing of confidence which experience inspires. Brewed from the highest grades of malt and hops, thoroughly aged, and properly sterilized, in delicacy of flavor and purity it is the ideal table beer.

MASSACHUSETTS BREWERIES CO.
17 Otis Street, Boston

Order a Siphon of

PUREOXIA SELTZER

To enliven your Rhine Wine

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Thursday, June 8, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 34.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . . Wagner
2. OVERTURE, "Semiramide" . . . . . Rossini
3. SELECTION, "It Happened in Nordland" . . . . Herbert
4. WALTZ, "New Vienna" . . . . . Strauss

5. PRELUDE to Act I., "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner
6. TWO HUNGARIAN DANCES . . . . . Brahms
7. INTERMEZZO . . . . . Carroll
8. WALTZ, "La Gitana" . . . . . Bucalossi

9. SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . . . Mascagni
10. ANDANTE for String Orchestra . . . . . Tschaikowski
11. SELECTION, "The Country Girl" . . . . . Monckton
12. BOCCACCIO MARCH . . . . . Suppé

Jewett Piano Used.

Monday, June 12 . . . . French Composers' Night
Wednesday, June 14 . Farewell Night of Conductor Max Zach
Thursday, June 15 First Appearance of Conductor Gustav Strube

ESTABROOK CIGARS AND EATON

On Sale at the "Pops"

MARGUERITE,
Panetelas . . 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA,
Ideals . . . . . 10c. each
E. & E.,
Invincibles . 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande 10c. each
MANUEL GARCIA,
Consuelos . 15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO.,
Reciprocity . 15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO.,
Especiales 20c., 5 for $1.00
LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmontes . 20c., 3 for 50c.
LA CAROLINA,
Perfectos . . . 25c. each

Estabrook & Eaton
CIGAR IMPORTERS
222 and 224 Washington Street.
Masonic Building, Boylston Street.
Merchants Building, 77 Summer St.

376 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Harrison Bottling Company
Representing
Imported Pilsner and Bavarian Beers of Rudolph Oelsner, New York.
W. A. Miles & Co., New York, Croton Brewery Ales.
Iroquois Brewing Co., of Buffalo, N.Y., Lager Beers.
Frank Jones Brewing Co., Portsmouth, N.H., Ales.

33 and 34 LEWIS WHARF, Boston, Mass.
Telephone, Richmond 1119

A. B. C.
"KING OF ALL BOTTLED BEERS"

"Famous the World over"
The American Brewing Co.
ST. LOUIS.

Try a pint bottle and appreciate the fine hop flavor.

CODMAN & HALL CO.,
Distributers,
DEWEY SQUARE.

If you want an Old-fashioned Beer
ASK FOR

Pfaff's Lager

THE RATHSKELLER

UNDER THE
NEW AMERICAN HOUSE
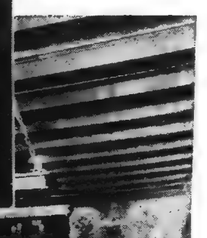
BOSTON
MUSIC from 12 to 3
and 6 to Midnight



Try some of our SPECIAL DISHES Cannot be excelled

THEATRE PARTIES can make arrangements ahead

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Friday, June 9, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 35.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 9, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH from "Queen of Sheba" . . . . . Gounod
2. WALTZ, "Artist's Life" . . . . . Strauss
3. OVERTURE, "Slovenly Peter" . . . . . Heuberger
4. SELECTION, "Aïda" . . . . . Verdi

5. SCARF DANCE from "Callirhoe" . . . . . Chaminade
6. VIOLONCELLO SOLO, Berceuse . . . . . Godard
   Mr. JOSEF KELLER.
7. WALTZ, "Harlequin's Wedding" . . . . . Zach
8. "LOUISIANA" . . . . . Fr. Van der Stucken

9. OVERTURE, "Oberon" . . . . . Weber
10. "RONDE D'AMOUR" . . . . . Westerhout
11. WALTZ from "Fledermaus" . . . . . Strauss
12. MARCH, "Merry Soldiers" . . . . . Sabathil

Jewett Piano Used.

Monday, June 12 . . . . . French Composers' Night
Wednesday, June 14 . Farewell Night of Conductor Max Zach
Thursday, June 15 First Appearance of Conductor Gustav Strube
Thursday, June 15 . . . . . Bank Officers' Night

TRADE MARK.

Wood, Pollard & Co.,

Importers of Wines, Spirits, Groceries, and Teas.

COFFEE ROASTERS.

Wood, Pollard & Co.,

Opposite North and South Stations, BOSTON.

Wood, Pollard & Co.

GRAFTON
BLENHEIM
NOTTINGHAM

CIGARS

CHARLES THE GREAT
DON RODRIGO
CORDOVA

Opposite North and South Stations
BOSTON

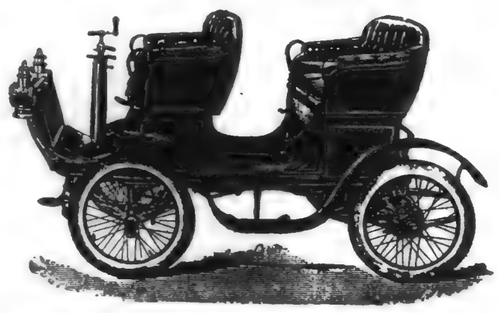
Mountain View House

Rangeley Lake, Maine.

L. E. BOWLEY, Proprietor.

Always Satisfactory.

Post-office address, MOUNTAIN VIEW, MAINE.



AUTOMOBILES FOR HIRE.

THE LARGEST RENTING STATION IN AMERICA.

All models of machines for hire by the hour, day, week, or month.
Open day and night. Will call at any address.
Sight-seeing cars, large or small parties, seats $1. The only up-to-date way to see Boston and suburbs. Daily trips to Nantasket, Concord, Lexington, etc.
Machines always ready. Write or telephone.

K. A. SKINNER, Proprietor, 179 Clarendon St.
Telephone, 67 Tremont.

SUBSCRIBERS

The New England Telephone and Telegraph Company has made material changes in its Rates affecting Metropolitan and Suburban Exchanges

LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE

INDUCEMENTS
Are offered to Suburban Subscribers for Residence Telephones. For Information call

Contract Dept. MAIN 6090 101 Milk St. Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Saturday, June 10, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 36.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MILITARY MARCH . . . . . Zach
2. WALTZ, "La Gitana" . . . . . Bucalossi
3. SELECTION, "Florodora" . . . . . Stuart
4. OVERTURE, "Raymond" . . . . . Thomas

5. OVERTURE, "William Tell" . . . . . Rossini
6. "MEDITATION," for Violin, Harp, and Organ . . . Dubois
   Messrs. ONDRICEK, SCHUECKER, and ZACH
7. SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . . . . Mascagni
8. "PAN-AMERICANA" . . . . . Herbert

9. WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht" . . . . . Ziehrer
10. SPRING SONG . . . . . Mendelssohn
11. SELECTION, "The Brigands" . . . . . Offenbach
12. MARCH, "Archduke Albrecht" . . . . . Schneider

Jewett Piano Used.

Monday, June 12	French Composers' Night
Wednesday, June 14	Farewell Night of Conductor Max Zach
Thursday, June 15	First Appearance of Conductor Gustav Strube
Thursday, June 15	Bank Officers' Night
Saturday, June 17	Patriotic Night

JUST TELEPHONE

LEWANDO'S DYEING CLEANSING LAUNDERING

GLOVES
Cleansed 10 cents per pair
Color of Tan Gloves retained No shrinking

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed
All spots removed

LACE and MUSLIN CURTAINS
Cleansed $1 per pair

ALL KINDS
BLANKETS
Cleansed 75 cents per pair

LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
Delivery Service Telephone Exchange
NEW YORK PHILADELPHIA WASHINGTON

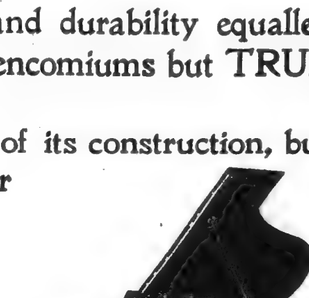
BOOSEY & COMPANY manufacture the highest grade of Military Band Instruments. Contractors to the British Army, and now supplying the leading soloists in the United States with the highest grade of Military Instruments made.

Perfect tune, tone, and general excellence in workmanship guaranteed.

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, NEW YORK

On sale in the hall or may be ordered of the waiter

LOWNEY'S
Chocolate Bonbons



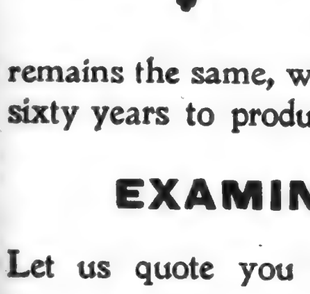
"Name on every piece"

One pound packages, $1, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35, 30, and 25 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Suranné and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes, 25 cents

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street



THE KNABE ANGELUS PIANOS

will be ready for delivery September 1. The KNABE is the FIRST absolutely high-grade, artistic piano to be equipped with an automatic piano player which in no way alters or detracts from the appearance of the piano.

The KNABE piano enjoys a deserved reputation for tone, touch, and durability equalled by no other piano, because its pre-eminence is not due to purchased encomiums but TRUE MERIT.

The price of the KNABE piano has not been reduced at the expense of its construction, but remains the same, while its makers progress steadily toward their ideal and ambition of over sixty years to produce ALWAYS the BEST PIANO MADE.

EXAMINE THE NEW SCALES AND CASES

Let us quote you terms for your summer rental. Largest renting stock in Boston.

THE C. C. HARVEY CO., 144 BOYLSTON STREET
TELEPHONE, OXFORD 134

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Monday, June 12, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 37.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 12, 1905.

French Composers' Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Hongroise" . . . . . Berlioz
2. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . . Gounod
3. INTERMEZZO, "Naila" . . . . . Delibes
4. OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers" . . . . . Offenbach

---

5. FUNERAL MARCH OF A MARIONETTE . . . Gounod
6. "UNDER THE LINDEN TREES" . . . . . Massenet
   'Cello, Mr. JOSEF KELLER. Clarinet, Mr. FRITZSCHE.
7. a. "HABENERA" . . . . . Chabrier
   b. GAVOTTE, "Mignon" . . . . . Thomas
8. OVERTURE, "Domino Noir" . . . . . Auber

---

9. OVERTURE, "Le Roi d'Ys" . . . . . Lalo
10. PRELUDE, "The Deluge" . . . . . Saint-Saëns
    Violin Solo, Mr. ONDRICEK.
11. WALTZ, "Barcarole" . . . . . Waldteufel
12. MARCH, "Tzigane" . . . . . Lacome

Steinway Piano Used.

Wednesday, June 14 . Farewell Night of Conductor Max Zach
Thursday, June 15 First Appearance of Conductor Gustav Strube
Thursday, June 15 . . . . . Bank Officers' Night
Saturday, June 17 . . . . . Patriotic Night

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK

VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
e 8.00 a.m.	8.04 a.m.	Hartford	2.00 p.m.
bL 10.00 a.m.	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.10 "
a 10.03 "	10.07 "	" "	4.15 "
fL 1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m.	" "	6.10 "
g 1.03 "	1.07 "	" "	7.10 "
e 2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.59 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.11 "
aL 5.00 "	5.04 "	" "	10.10 "
g 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

L Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
a 10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.15 p.m.
g 1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	" "	7.10 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	" "	9.11 "
g 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

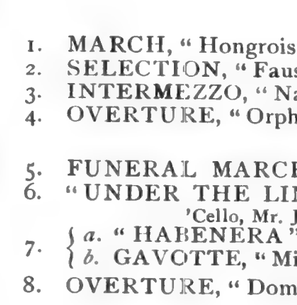
Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New York; b New London to New York; e New Haven to New York; f Boston to New Haven; g Boston to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m., Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Priscilla" or "Pilgrim," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.
362 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.



LIGHT WEIGHT
President Suspenders

"Light as a fairy, strong as a giant."

Worn by best dressed men because it's the most dependable, the lightest and coolest.

Ball Bearing Garters

add still further to men's comfort. Hold the hose snug and trim, and do not bind the leg.

ASK YOUR DEALER FOR THEM.

The C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO.,
P.O. Box 414, SHIRLEY, MASS.

S. S. Pierce Co.'s

Cider

Served at these concerts

Veuve Chaffard

PURE OLIVE OIL

In Honest Bottles

In the programme above, for Monday, June 12, we can supply at once for all piano players the following:

1. MARCH, "Hongroise" Berlioz
2. SELECTION, "Faust" Gounod
3. INTERMEZZO, "Naila" Delibes
4. OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers" Offenbach
5. FUNERAL MARCH OF A MARIONETTE Gounod
6. GAVOTTE, "Mignon" Thomas
7. OVERTURE, "Domino Noir" Auber
8. PRELUDE, "The Deluge," Saint-Saëns
9. WALTZ, "Barcarole" Waldteufel

The PROGRAMME for TO-NIGHT

Can be played in your home to-morrow night or any night by any member of your family if you have one of our piano players. We rent and sell the leading makes of players at attractive prices. Convenient terms of payment will be arranged for responsible purchasers.

We have the most complete library of music in America for Pianista, Pianola, Angelus, Simplex, and other players. The latest selections, such as the music from "It Happened in Nordland," "Humpty Dumpty," "Johnny Jones," "Lady Teazle," etc., now in stock.

☞ If you own a player, be sure your name is on our mailing list for the new catalogue, containing over ten thousand numbers.

Some players that have been rented this winter will be sold at from $90 to $165.
Every instrument guaranteed

MENDELSSOHN MUSIC CO.
172 Tremont Street, Boston Also New York and Providence, R.I.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Tuesday, June 13, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 38.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 13, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . . Wagner
2. WALTZ, "Nachtschwärmer" . . . . . Ziehrer
3. SELECTION, Serenade . . . . . Herbert
4. OVERTURE, "Ruy Blas" . . . . . Mendelssohn

5. BALLET MUSIC, "Feramors" . . . . . Rubinstein
6. HARP SOLO
   Mr. SCHUECKER.
7. INDIAN SERENADE . . . . . Converse
8. OVERTURE, "1812" . . . . . Tschaikowski

9. "OFFENBACHIANA" . . . . . Conradi
10. "DAWN" . . . . . Waller
11. SELECTION, "Yankee Consul" . . . . . Robyn
12. MARCH, "Vienna Dude" . . . . . Wagner

Steinway Piano Used.

Wednesday, June 14	Farewell Night of Conductor Max Zach
Thursday, June 15	First Appearance of Conductor Gustav Strube
Thursday, June 15	Bank Officers' Night
Saturday, June 17	Patriotic Night
Monday, June 19	Harvard Night
Tuesday, June 20	Wagner Night

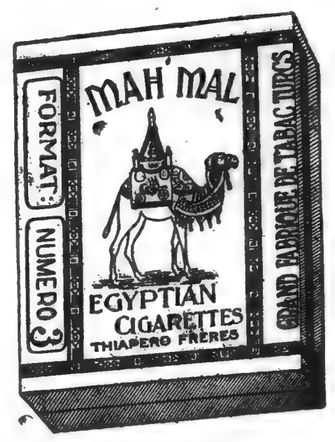
Served at these concerts

Sparkling Dry-Comet

Pure, Healthful, Refreshing

Apollinaris

"The Queen of Table Waters"



Mah Mal

EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s	15 cents per box
No. 3s	25 cents per box
No. 1s	30 cents per box
No. 3, Cork Tips	25 cents per box

Also sold by

S. S. PIERCE CO.

BOSTON, BROOKLINE

Baltimore & Ohio

CENTRAL R.R. of N.J. — BALTIMORE & OHIO R.R. — PHILA. & READING R.R.

ROYAL BLUE LINE

"EVERY OTHER HOUR ON THE EVEN HOUR."

New York to Baltimore and Washington

Splendid equipment, thoroughly modern coaches, Pullman cars, and superior dining-car service

Solid trains from NEW YORK to
PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE
ST. LOUIS, CHICAGO

Ticket office, 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

C. W. BASSETT, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore

D. B. MARTIN, Manager Passenger Traffic, Baltimore

DRINK

HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.

JOS. GAHM & SON, New England Agents
125 Purchase Street

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Wednesday, June 14, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 39.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 14, 1905.

Farewell Night of Conductor Max Zach.

PROGRAMME.

1. POLONAISE . . . . . Liszt
2. OVERTURE, "Le Roi l'a dit" . . . . . Delibes
3. WALTZ, "Girls of Baden" . . . . . Komzak
4. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet
5. OVERTURE, "Slovenly Peter" . . . . . Heuberger
6. SUITE, for Flute and Piano . . . . . Godard
   a. Allegretto.
   b. Idylle.
   c. Valse.
   Mr. D. MAQUARRE.
7. SCARF DANCE . . . . . Chaminade
8. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner
9. SELECTION, "It Happened in Nordland" . . . . . Herbert
10. DUO FOR VIOLINS, "Traum der Sennerin" . . . . . Labitzky
    Messrs. ONDRICEK and STRUBE.
11. WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows" . . . . . Vollstedt
12. MARCH, "Up the Street" . . . . . Morse

Steinway Piano Used.

Thursday, June 15	First Appearance of Conductor Gustav Strube
Thursday, June 15	Bank Officers' Night
Saturday, June 17	Patriotic Night
Monday, June 19	Harvard Night
Tuesday, June 20	Wagner Night

MENASHI
AND
RED LION
CIGARETTES
Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, Club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

MISS MOORE
HIGH CLASS SPECIALTY SHOP
421 BOYLSTON STREET
WARREN CHAMBERS
BOSTON

Dainty Clothing for misses, women, and children.

Dresses ready to wear in veiling, taffeta, linen, and muslin. Prices from $25 to $200.

A variety of waists in hand embroidered linens and muslins and silks. Prices from $12 to $85.

Finest veils, parasols, neckwear, handkerchiefs, toilet articles, etc. Carefully selected and up to date.

Charles B. Perkins & Co.
CIGARS
No. 36 Kilby Street Telephone, 1186 Main
Branch, No. 53 State Street, Exchange Building

We carry at all times and in many sizes and shapes the well-known
PETERSON DUBLIN PIPES, made in Dublin, Ireland

ASK THE WAITER FOR AMERICA'S FINEST PRODUCT
VARTRAY
Ginger Ale
Sarsaparilla
VARTRAY WATER CO.
Buffalo, N.Y.

Puritan

BEVERAGES are made of water distilled at the plant of the Puritan Water Company at Broadway and 30th Street, New York. The plant is always open to inspection. This policy has been adopted as giving the best possible guarantee of purity. Puritan beverages are not designed for consumers who place cheapness above quality. They are the best that can be made. A bottle of Puritan mineral water or ginger ale will help you to enjoy the concert. Give your order to the waiter.
Orders may be sent by mail to the PURITAN WATER COMPANY, 1218 Broadway, New York, and will be promptly filled by freight or express, as directed. Transportation charges payable by the purchaser.

Boston and Albany
4 Trains a Day
Leave Boston
MORNING (9 a.m.)
NOON (12 o'clock)
AFTERNOON (4 p.m.)
and NIGHT (11.15 p.m.)
Via "Springfield Line" for
NEW YORK CITY
Equipped with
Pullman Parlor and Sleeping Cars
WITH EXCELLENT DINING CAR SERVICE

Lv. BOSTON	9.00 a.m.	12.00 m.	4.00 p.m.	11.15 p.m.
" WORCESTER	10.06 "	1.04 p.m.	5.02 "	11.53 "
" SPRINGFIELD	11.34 "	2.22 "	6.21 "	2.35 a.m.
Ar. HARTFORD	12.13 p.m.	2.57 "	6.57 "	3.19 "
" NEW HAVEN	1.21 "	3.55 "	7.58 "	4.30 "
" NEW YORK	3.15 p.m.	5.45 p.m.	9.52 p.m.	6.46 a.m.

For reservations, tickets, etc., call on
R. M. HARRIS, City Passenger and Ticket Agent
366 WASHINGTON STREET
A. S. HANSON, General Passenger Agent. BOSTON, MASS.

CENTRE
all ano
Woodbury Pian
Orchestrell
Instrumerts
ERB COLLECTION OF PIANOS
DECIDED AND EXCLUSIVE BE OBTAINED ELSEWHERE
Steinert &
ons Co.
TEINERT HALL
Boylston Street
Association
EXCLUSIVELY ORIGINAL
BUDWEISER
OPS" er cars and ocean and lake steamers
Boston, Mass.

MANUSCRIPT

The M. Steinert & Sons Company.

Wholesale and retail representatives in the New England States for the sale of Steinway & Sons' and other first class

Pianos.

162-168 Boylston St. cor. Carver St.

Steinert Hall, Boston, June 13, 1903.

Mr. Frederic [illegible]

[illegible] Hall,

[illegible].

Dear Frederic:-

[illegible]

and in reply beg to state that I would like to have you announcement this year for the "Pop" concert programs.

I am especially pleased at your [illegible] an opportunity of [illegible] an [illegible].

Wishing you continued success, I remain

Yours very sincerely,

Dictated to A. V. Steinert & Sons Co.

[illegible] for passes - [illegible]

MANUSCRIPT

50 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.,

April 4, 1903.

My dear Mr. Comee:

I have delayed answering your letter of the 24th ult. not through neglect or wilful procrastination. I thank you for your kind invitation to lunch with you and Garceau at the University Club some day. It is difficult for me to get off for any length of time, and some days it is impossible. Perhaps I can manage it for some Wednesday, if agreeable to you. Perhaps, also, this note will make things sufficiently clear.

The reason why we have our own pop-concert is simple and plain. The fun of graduates' night has gone. Everything is now prim and proper, and it is not an exaggeration to say that one must sit and listen to music with intellectual ears and folded hands. No opportunity is allowed to mingle with other classes, to move about the hall or to meet with friends at other tables. I was not present when '91 created disorder, but I was present last year, and I had a thoroughly stupid time. If this were my own opinion only, it might be different, but nearly all the members of my class who were there, and many men of other classes, agreed with me that it was a stupid evening and that they regretted they had come. To be sure, we could shout our class cheers, and at the end we did rise on chairs and wave a few red paper flags over our heads; but every attempt on my part to visit any other table was foiled by an usher who tapped me on the shoulder and told me to sit down. Now, I quite understand Symphony Hall cannot be given over to a riot and that the danger to the hall of such is greater than to the old hall. Nor am I in any degree in favor of disorder and unsightly behavior or any objectionable feature; but I am in favor of a free commingling of friends and less stiffness. I am sure that you would do everything in your power to make the evening pleasant and to give us an enjoyable time, but I think you are handicapped by the situation, and I do not blame you for strict rules, though I must believe that they are stricter than necessary. Therefore, it seemed to us that we could have a jollier time and a more enthusiastic, freer evening in our own hall, with our own orchestra. The scheme is an innovation; no one can be sure of its success, but it is meeting with distinct approval from the members of my class who universally seem to favor it.

This, in a few words, is the situation.

Sincerely yours,

Charles Read Saltonstall

Chairman '93 Decennial Committee.

F. R. Comee, Esq.

this year as last- Thanks for passes- (U) Connelly '93

[124]

MANUSCRIPT

Mr. Timothee Adamowski, Conductor for Season of 1903

SYMPHONY HALL 'POP' PROGRAMME

Published by C. A. ELLIS, Manager

Season, Summer of Nineteen Hundred and Thr
Commencing Monday, May 4, the 892d Perfor
Ending Saturday, June 27. Forty-eight Perforn

ing his neighbor.
Speculator who k
Post, Boston Herald,

EVERY NIGHT EXCEPT SUNDAY GUARANTEED CIRCULATION, 15,000 COP

For Advertising Space, address F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, Boston,

Feb. 12, 1903.

Mr. C. J. Connelly,
Adams House.

My dear Mr. Connelly,

Even at this early date, I wish to take up with you the question of renewing your advertisement in our "Pop" concert programme for the coming season, details of which you will find above.

I think you will share in my enthusiasm in the matter of the conductor for the coming season, Mr. T. Adamowski. Under his direction, some years ago, the concerts were the most successful of any season we have ever had, and I see no good reason why we shall not repeat this record this year.

The general arrangement of the programme will be the same as before, each page entire going forward daily, so that every advertiser gets an equal show at the front page.

Your space, location, and price will be the same as before.

Asking your courteous consideration, and awaiting your reply, I am,

Cordially yours,

Fred. R. Comee.

Enclosed please find passes.
Dear Sir. We will use the same space this year as last. Thanks for passes. C J Connelly Jr

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

SYMPHONY HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Notice to Advertisers.

The advertising columns in the programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

In order to thoroughly enjoy the Concerts smoke

Daniel Frank & Co.'s

Barrister, Perfecto . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Celebridad, Perfecto 10c. each
American, Puritanos . . 15c.
2 for 25c.
American, Concha Fina Especial . . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
American, Perfectos . . 20c.
3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter, Puritanos, 15c.
2 for 25c.
Mundo, Favoritas 15c. each
Constancia, Londres Especial (Imported) 15c. each
Mapa de Cuba, Perfecto (Imported) . . 25c. each

ON SALE AT THE "POPS"

Boston, Thursday, June 15, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 40.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 15, 1905.

First Appearance of Conductor Gustav Strube.

Bank Officers' Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Queen of Sheba" . . . . . Gounod
2. OVERTURE, "Masaniello" . . . . . Auber
3. WALTZ, "Emperor" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Miss Simplicity" . . . . . Heartz

5. HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY, No. 2 . . . . . Liszt
6. TWO INTERMEZZI { a. "Einsam" / b. "Verliebt" } (First time.) . . . . . Strube
7. INTRODUCTION and Dance of Apprentices from "The Mastersingers" . . . . . Wagner
8. SELECTION, "Baron Humbug" . . . . . Thompson

9. OVERTURE, "Frau Meisterin" . . . . . Suppé
10. "THE BLUE MEDITERRANEAN" (First time.) . . . . . Volpatli
11. SELECTION, "The Filibuster" . . . . . Loraine
12. MARCH, "Radetzky" . . . . . Strauss

Steinway Piano Used.

Saturday, June 17 . . . . . Patriotic Night
Monday, June 19 . . . . . Harvard Night
Tuesday, June 20 . . . . . Wagner Night

DUFFY'S "1842" CIDER

SPARKLING. DELICIOUS

CONTAINS NO PRESERVATIVE

Served at the "Pops"

HAYNES PIPER CO., Distributers

18 Lewis Wharf, Boston

Telephone, Richmond 1112

The popular drink

At the "Pops"

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS

NORFOLK CABINET LAGER BEER

THE large sales of Norfolk Cabinet at the "Pops" during past years are entirely due to the sound footing of confidence which experience inspires. Brewed from the highest grades of malt and hops, thoroughly aged, and properly sterilized, in delicacy of flavor and purity it is the ideal table beer.

MASSACHUSETTS BREWERIES CO.
17 Otis Street, Boston

Order a Siphon of

PUREOXIA SELTZER

To enliven your Rhine Wine

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Friday, June 16, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 41.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 16, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Le Père la Victoire" . . . . . Ganne
2. SUITE, "Peer Gynt" . . . . . Grieg
3. WALTZ, "Près de Toi" . . . . . Waldteufel
4. OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant" . . . . . Suppé
   'Cello Obligato, Mr. KELLER.

5. SELECTION from "Samson and Delilah" . . . . Saint-Saëns
6. "REGRETS" (First time.) . . . . . Vieuxtemps
   (First time.)
   Violin Solo, Mr. ONDRICEK.
7. FINALE, "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner
8. THREE DANCES from "Henry VIII." . . . . German

9. OVERTURE, "Stradella" . . . . . Flotow
10. WALTZ, "Autumn Leaves" . . . . . Strube
    (First time.)
11. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert
12. MARCH, "King Karl" . . . . . Unrath

Steinway Piano Used.

Saturday, June 17 . . . . . Patriotic Night
Monday, June 19 . . . . . Harvard Night
Tuesday, June 20 . . . . . Wagner Night

ESTABROOK CIGARS AND EATON

On Sale at the "Pops"

MARGUERITE,
Panetelas . . 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA,
Ideals . . . . . 10c. each
E. & E.,
Invincibles . 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande 10c. each
MANUEL GARCIA,
Consuelos . 15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO.,
Reciprocity . 15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO.,
Especiales 20c., 5 for $1.00
LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmontes . 20c., 3 for 50c.
LA CAROLINA,
Perfectos . . . 25c. each

Estabrook & Eaton
CIGAR IMPORTERS
222 and 224 Washington Street.
Masonic Building, Boylston Street.
Merchants Building, 77 Summer St.
376 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Harrison Bottling Company
Representing
Imported Pilsner and Bavarian Beers of Rudolph Oelsner, New York.
W. A. Miles & Co., New York, Croton Brewery Ales.
Iroquois Brewing Co., of Buffalo, N.Y., Lager Beers.
Frank Jones Brewing Co., Portsmouth, N.H., Ales.
33 and 34 LEWIS WHARF, Boston, Mass.
Telephone, Richmond 1119

A.B.C.
KING OF ALL BOTTLED BEERS
THE American Brewing Co. St. Louis. U.S.A.
Try a pint bottle and appreciate the fine hop flavor.
CODMAN & HALL CO.,
Distributers,
DEWEY SQUARE.

If you want an Old-fashioned Beer
ASK FOR
Pfaff's Lager

THE RATHSKELLER

UNDER THE
NEW AMERICAN HOUSE
BOSTON
MUSIC from 12 to 3
and 6 to Midnight

Try some of our SPECIAL DISHES Cannot be excelled

THEATRE PARTIES can make arrangements ahead

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Saturday, June 17, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 42.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1905.

Patriotic Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Bunker Hill" . . . . . Strube
2. OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry" . . . . . Suppé
3. WALTZ, "Artist's Life" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "The Red Feather" . . . . . De Koven
   (Libretto by CHARLES EMERSON COOK.)

5. SELECTION, "Grand Duchess" . . . . . Offenbach
6. OVERTURE, "William Tell" . . . . . Rossini
   'Cello Obligato, Mr. KELLER.
7. INTERMEZZO from "Contes d'Hoffmann" . . Offenbach
8. "CZARDAS" . . . . . Grossman

9. GEORGE WASHINGTON HYMN . . . . . Sieberg
   (First time.)
10. AMERICAN FANTASY . . . . . Herbert
11. SELECTION, "Yankee Consul" . . . . . Robyn
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . . . Sousa

Steinway Piano Used.

Monday, June 19 . . . . . Harvard Night
Tuesday, June 20 . . . . . Wagner Night

TRADE MARK.

Wood, Pollard & Co.,

Importers of Wines, Spirits, Groceries, and Teas.

COFFEE ROASTERS.

Wood, Pollard & Co.,

Opposite North and South Stations, BOSTON.

Wood, Pollard & Co.

GRAFTON
BLENHEIM
NOTTINGHAM

CIGARS

CHARLES THE GREAT
DON RODRIGO
CORDOVA

Opposite North and South Stations
BOSTON

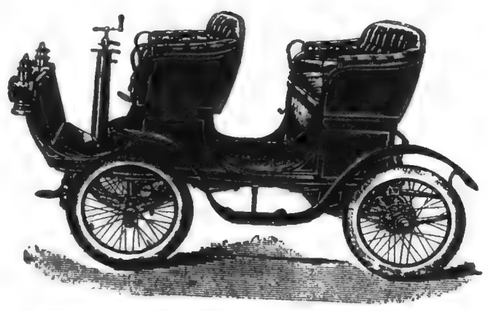
Mountain View House

Rangeley Lake, Maine.

L. E. BOWLEY, Proprietor.

Always Satisfactory.

Post-office address, MOUNTAIN VIEW, MAINE.



AUTOMOBILES FOR HIRE.

THE LARGEST RENTING STATION IN AMERICA.

All models of machines for hire by the hour, day, week, or month.
Open day and night. Will call at any address.
Sight-seeing cars, large or small parties, seats $1. The only up-to-date way to see Boston and suburbs. Daily trips to Nantasket, Concord, Lexington, etc.
Machines always ready. Write or telephone.

K. A. SKINNER, Proprietor, 179 Clarendon St.
Telephone, 67 Tremont.

SUBSCRIBERS

The New England Telephone and Telegraph Company has made material changes in its Rates affecting Metropolitan and Suburban Exchanges

INDUCEMENTS
Are offered to Suburban Subscribers for Residence Telephones. For Information call

Contract Dept. MAIN 6090 101 Milk St. Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Monday, June 19, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 43.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 19, 1905.

Harvard Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Soldiers' Field" . . . . . Strube
2. SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen" . . . . . Luders
3. WALTZ, "Estudiantina" . . . . . Waldteufel
4. SELECTION, "Machiavelli," Hasty Pudding Production, 1905 . . . . . Hall,'05

5. a. BALLET, "Elaine" . . . . . Grey
   b. MARCH, "Veritas"
6. a. MARCH, "Through the Yard at Harvard" . . . . . Densmore, '04
   b. MARCH from Pi Eta Production, "The Counterfeiter," 1905 . . . . . C. A. Hosmer, '02
7. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Davidson–Grey
8. SELECTION, "The Red Feather" . . . . . Zeller
   (Libretto by CHARLES EMERSON COOK, '93.) . . . . . De Koven

9. a. "THE STADIUM" . . . . . Johnston, '06
   b. AMERICAN FANTASY
10. "FAIR HARVARD" . . . . . Herbert
11. POLKA, "The Tattler"
12. MARCH, "Up the Street" . . . . . Comins . . . . . Morse, '96

Hume Piano Used.

Tuesday, June 20 . . . . . Wagner Night
Monday, June 26 . . . . . Ninth Graduates' Night

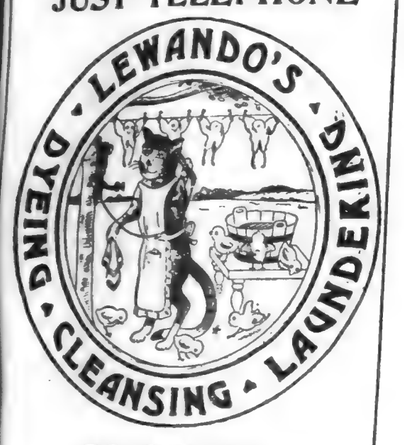
JUST TELEPHONE



GLOVES
Cleansed 10 cents per pair
Color of Tan Gloves retained No shrinking

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed
All spots removed

LACE and MUSLIN CURTAINS
Cleansed $1 per pair

ALL KINDS
BLANKETS
Cleansed 75 cents per pair

LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
Delivery Service Telephone Exchange
NEW YORK PHILADELPHIA WASHINGTON

The Latest Orchestral Successes
AS PLAYED AT THESE CONCERTS

"Caressante Valse," By Frank Lambert
"Sous ta Fenetre," By Aimé Lachaume
"Berceuse" By Alfred Rieger
"International March and Two-step," By C. J. Roberts

Also published for Piano Solo, and can be had from all dealers and

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, New York

On sale in the hall or may be ordered of the waiter

LOWNEY'S
Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece"

One pound packages, $1, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35, 30, and 25 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Suranné and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes, 25 cents

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

THE KNABE ANGELUS PIANOS

will be ready for delivery September 1. The KNABE is the FIRST absolutely high-grade, artistic piano to be equipped with an automatic piano player which in no way alters or detracts from the appearance of the piano.

The KNABE piano enjoys a deserved reputation for tone, touch, and durability equalled by no other piano, because its pre-eminence is not due to purchased encomiums but TRUE MERIT.

The price of the KNABE piano has not been reduced at the expense of its construction, but remains the same, while its makers progress steadily toward their ideal and ambition of over sixty years to produce ALWAYS the BEST PIANO MADE.

EXAMINE THE NEW SCALES AND CASES

Let us quote you terms for your summer rental. Largest renting stock in Boston.

THE C. C. HARVEY CO., 144 BOYLSTON STREET
TELEPHONE, OXFORD 134

[128]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Tuesday, June 20, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 44.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK

VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
e 8.00 a.m.	8.04 a.m.	Hartford	2.00 p.m.
bL 10.00 a.m.	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.10 "
a 10.03 "	10.07 "	" "	4.15 "
fL 1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m.	" "	6.10 "
g 1.03 "	1.07 "	" "	7.10 "
e 2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.59 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.11 "
aL 5.00 "	5.04 "	" "	10.10 "
g 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

L Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
a 10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.15 p.m.
g 1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	" "	7.10 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	" "	9.11 "
g 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New York; b New London to New York; e New Haven to New York; f Boston to New Haven; g Boston to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m., Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Priscilla" or "Pilgrim," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.
362 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.

TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1905.

Wagner Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner
2. WALTZ, "At Home" . . . . . Strauss
3. ANDANTE for String Orchestra . . . . . Platt
   (First time.)
4. OVERTURE, "Rienzi" . . . . . Wagner

5. SELECTION, "Huguenots" . . . . . Meyerbeer
6. LEGATO . . . . . Strube
7. PRELUDE to "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner
8. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner

9. SCÈNE RELIGIEUSE . . . . . Massenet
   'Cello Obligato, Mr. KELLER.
10. SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen" . . . . . Luders
11. WALTZ, "Wave" . . . . . Metra
12. MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg" . . . . . Kral

Hume Piano Used.

Monday, June 26 . . . . . Ninth Graduates' Night
Tuesday, June 27 . . . . . Soloists' Night

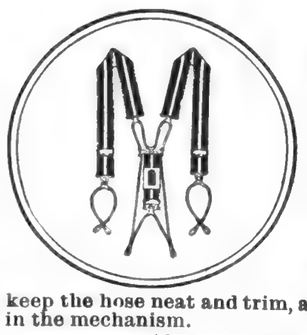
LIGHT WEIGHT

President Suspenders



"A gentle suspender for gentlemen."

Adds to the comfort of good dressers by giving unconscious and even support to the trousers.

Ball Bearing Garters

keep the hose neat and trim, and make them feel better. It's in the mechanism.

ASK YOUR DEALER FOR THEM.

The C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO.,
P.O. Box 414, SHIRLEY, MASS.

Tally-Ho Ginger Ale

Sold at these Concerts

Better than Coffee
Richer than Coffee
Nine-tenths Coffee

In the programme above, for Tuesday, June 20, we can supply at once for all piano players the following:

1. MARCH, "Tannhäuser" Wagner
2. OVERTURE, "Rienzi" Wagner
3. SELECTION, "Huguenots" Meyerbeer
4. PRELUDE to "Lohengrin" Wagner
5. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser" Wagner
6. SELECTION, "Prince of Pilsen" Luders

The PROGRAMME for TO-NIGHT

Can be played in your home to-morrow night or any night by any member of your family if you have one of our piano players. We rent and sell the leading makes of players at attractive prices. Convenient terms of payment will be arranged for responsible purchasers.

We have the most complete library of music in America for Pianista, Pianola, Angelus, Simplex, and other players. The latest selections, such as the music from "It Happened in Nordland," "Humpty Dumpty," "Johnny Jones," "Lady Teazle," etc., now in stock.

☞ If you own a player, be sure your name is on our mailing list for the new catalogue, containing over ten thousand numbers.

Some players that have been rented this winter will be sold at from $90 to $165.
Every instrument guaranteed

MENDELSSOHN MUSIC CO.

172 Tremont Street, Boston Also New York and Providence, R.I.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

BIRD

Boston, Wednesday, June 21, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 45.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. P. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 21, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Tabasco" . . . . . Chadwick
2. OVERTURE, "1492" . . . . . Pflueger
3. SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . . . Mascagni
4. WALTZ, "Jack and the Beanstalk" . . . . . Sloane

5. OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry" . . . . . Suppé
6. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert
7. MARCH AND WALTZ from "The Show Girl" . . . Heartz
8. SELECTION, "Boodle and Company" . . . . Densmore

9. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner
10. SELECTION, "Peggy from Paris" . . . . . Loraine
11. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
12. MARCH, "Fraternitas" . . . . . Densmore

Hume Piano Used.

Monday, June 26 . . . . . Ninth Graduates' Night
Tuesday, June 27 . . . . . Soloists' Night
Wednesday, June 28 . . . . . Wagner Night

Served at these concerts

Sparkling Dry-Comet

Apollinaris

"THE QUEEN OF TABLE WATERS."

Bottled only at the Apollinaris Spring, Neuenahr, Germany, and Only with its Own Natural Gas.

BEWARE OF SUBSTITUTIONS

Mah Mal

EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s . .	15 cents per box
No. 3s . .	25 cents per box
No. 1s . .	30 cents per box
No. 3, Cork Tips	25 cents per box

Also sold by

S. S. PIERCE CO.

BOSTON, BROOKLINE

Baltimore & Ohio

CENTRAL R.R. of N.J. — BALTIMORE & OHIO R.R. — PHILA. & READING R.R.

ROYAL BLUE LINE

"EVERY OTHER HOUR ON THE EVEN HOUR."

New York to Baltimore and Washington

Splendid equipment, thoroughly modern coaches, Pullman cars, and superior dining-car service

Solid trains from NEW YORK to
PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE
ST. LOUIS, CHICAGO

Ticket office, 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

C. W. BASSETT, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore

D. B. MARTIN, Manager Passenger Traffic, Baltimore

Schlitz

THE BEER THAT MADE MILWAUKEE FAMOUS

Served exclusively on draft at the "Pop" Concerts.

Visit the Schlitz Palm Garden at Paragon Park, Nantasket Beach.

JOS. GAHM & SON, N. E. Agents

125 Purchase Street

Telephone, Main 954 BOSTON

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Thursday, June 22, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 46.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. P. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 22, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Grand Republic" — Strube
2. OVERTURE, "La Gazza Ladra" — Rossini
3. WALTZ, "Joys of Life" — Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Faust" — Gounod

5. TWO SLAVIC DANCES — Dvorak
6. OVERTURE, "Mignon" — Thomas
7. "ANDACHT," for Violin, Harp, and Organ — Johnson
   Messrs. ONDRICEK, SCHUECKER, and YOUNG. (First time.)
8. HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY — Liszt

9. OVERTURE, "Pique Dame" — Suppé
10. WALTZ, "Mes Amours" — Riker
11. SELECTION, "The Serenade" (First time.) — Herbert
12. MARCH — Bilse

Hume Piano Used.
Mason & Hamlin Liszt Organ Used.

Monday, June 26	Ninth Graduates' Night
Tuesday, June 27	Soloists' Night
Wednesday, June 28	Wagner Night
Thursday, June 29	German Night

MENASHI
AND
RED LION
CIGARETTES
Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, Club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

MISS MOORE
HIGH CLASS SPECIALTY SHOP
421 BOYLSTON STREET
WARREN CHAMBERS
BOSTON

Dainty Clothing for misses, women, and children.

Dresses ready to wear in veiling, taffeta, linen, and muslin. Prices from $25 to $200.

A variety of waists in hand embroidered linens and muslins and silks. Prices from $12 to $85.

Finest veils, parasols, neckwear, handkerchiefs, toilet articles, etc. Carefully selected and up to date.

Charles B. Perkins & Co.
The following choice selection of our CIGARS Always on sale at "Pop" Concerts:

Ginita Deliciosos Extra (domestic)	10c., 3 for 25c.
Catriona Perfectos (domestic)	10c. each
Petronila Puritanos (clear Havana)	10c. each
Tedesco Exquisitos (domestic)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Petronila Rothschilds (clear Havana)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra (imported)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos (imported)	15c. each
Romeo and Juliet Pacificos (imported)	20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Americanos (imported)	20c. each

36 Kilby St. Branch, 53 State St., Exchange Building. Telephone, Main 1186

ASK THE WAITER FOR AMERICA'S FINEST PRODUCT

VARTRAY
Ginger Ale
Sarsaparilla

VARTRAY WATER CO.
Buffalo, N.Y.

Puritan

BEVERAGES are made of water distilled at the plant of the Puritan Water Company at Broadway and 30th Street, New York. The plant is always open to inspection. This policy has been adopted as giving the best possible guarantee of purity. Puritan beverages are not designed for consumers who place cheapness above quality. They are the best that can be made. A bottle of Puritan mineral water or ginger ale will help you to enjoy the concert. Give your order to the waiter.
Orders may be sent by mail to the PURITAN WATER COMPANY, 1218 Broadway, New York, and will be promptly filled by freight or express, as directed. Transportation charges payable by the purchaser.

Boston and Albany

4 Trains a Day
Leave Boston
MORNING (9 a.m.)
NOON (12 o'clock)
AFTERNOON (4 p.m.)
and NIGHT (11.15 p.m.)

Via "Springfield Line" for
NEW YORK CITY
Equipped with
Pullman Parlor and Sleeping Cars
WITH EXCELLENT DINING CAR SERVICE

Lv. BOSTON	9.00 a.m.	12.00 m.	4.00 p.m.	11.15 p.m.
" WORCESTER	10.06 "	1.04 p.m.	5.02 "	11.53 "
" SPRINGFIELD	11.34 "	2.22 "	6.21 "	2.35 a.m.
Ar. HARTFORD	12.13 p.m.	2.57 "	6.57 "	3.19 "
" NEW HAVEN	1.21 "	3.55 "	7.58 "	4.30 "
" NEW YORK	3.15 p.m.	5.45 p.m.	9.52 p.m.	6.46 a.m.

For reservations, tickets, etc., call on
R. M. HARRIS, City Passenger and Ticket Agent
366 WASHINGTON STREET
A. S. HANSON, General Passenger Agent. BOSTON, MASS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL "POPS" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Notice to Advertisers.

The advertising columns in the programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

In order to thoroughly enjoy the Concerts smoke

Daniel Frank & Co.'s

Barrister, Perfecto . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
Celebridad, Perfecto 10c. each
American, Puritanos . . 15c.
2 for 25c.
American, Concha Fina Especial . . . . 10c.
3 for 25c.
American, Perfectos . . 20c.
3 for 50c.
Knight Tempter, Puritanos, 15c.
2 for 25c.
Mundo, Favoritas 15c. each
Constancia, Londres Especial (Imported) 15c. each
Mapa de Cuba, Perfecto (Imported) . . 25c. each

ON SALE AT THE "POPS"

Boston, Friday, June 23, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 47.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

The "POPS"

SYMPHONY HALL — SEASON of 1905

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 23, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . . Wagner
2. OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor" . . . . . Nicolai
3. SELECTION, "Fortune-teller" . . . . . Herbert
4. PIZZICATO ARABESQUE . . . . . Fanchetti
   (First time.)
5. BALLET ÉGYPTIEN . . . . . Luigini
   (First time.)
6. "THE DELUGE" . . . . . Saint-Saëns
   Solo Violin, Mr. ONDRICEK.
7. AUBADE PRINTANIÈRE . . . . . Lacome
8. SELECTION, "Geisha" . . . . . Monckton

9. OVERTURE, "Tantalusqualen" . . . . . Suppé
10. "EN SORDINE" . . . . . Fullam
11. SELECTION, "King Dodo" . . . . . Luders
12. MARCH, "Liberty Bell" . . . . . Sousa

Hume Piano Used.

Monday, June 26 . . . . . Ninth Graduates' Night
Tuesday, June 27 . . . . . Soloists' Night
Wednesday, June 28 . . . . . Wagner Night
Thursday, June 29 . . . . . German Night

DUFFY'S "1842" CIDER

SPARKLING. DELICIOUS

CONTAINS NO PRESERVATIVE

Served at the "Pops"

HAYNES PIPER CO., Distributers
18 Lewis Wharf, Boston
Telephone, Richmond 1112

Van Nostrand's

P. B. Ale

When the old salt sights the harbor lights
And his ship runs in from sea.
His mind comes back to the happy nights
On shore with his old P. B.

Ask your waiter for P. B.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS

NORFOLK CABINET LAGER BEER

THE large sales of Norfolk Cabinet at the "Pops" during past years are entirely due to the sound footing of confidence which experience inspires. Brewed from the highest grades of malt and hops, thoroughly aged, and properly sterilized, in delicacy of flavor and purity it is the ideal table beer.

MASSACHUSETTS BREWERIES CO.
17 Otis Street, Boston

Order a Siphon of

PUREOXIA SELTZER

To enliven your Rhine Wine

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Saturday, June 24, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 48.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 24, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Damnation of Faust" . . . . . Gounod
2. OVERTURE, "Galatea" . . . . . Suppé
3. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet
4. WALTZ, "In lauschiger Nacht" . . . . . Ziehrer

5. SELECTION, "Traviata" . . . . . Verdi
6. "JAPANESE WAR PICTURES" . . . . . Woeber
7. "AM MEER" . . . . . Schubert

Trombone Solo, Mr. HAMPE.

8. OVERTURE, "Zampa" . . . . . Hérold

9. SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland" . . . . . Herbert
10. "THE BLUE MEDITERRANEAN" . . . . . Volpatli
11. WALTZ, "España" . . . . . Waldteufel
12. MARCH, "Black Bess" . . . . . Strube

Hume Piano Used.

Monday, June 26	Ninth Graduates' Night
Tuesday, June 27	Soloists' Night
Wednesday, June 28	Wagner Night
Thursday, June 29	German Night
Saturday, July 1	Closing Night

ESTABROOK CIGARS AND EATON

On Sale at the "Pops"

MARGUERITE,
Panetelas . . 10c., 3 for 25c.
SALEROSA,
Ideals . . . . . 10c. each
E. & E.,
Invincibles . 15c., 2 for 25c.
EL PRINCIPE DE GALES,
Londres Grande 10c. each
MANUEL GARCIA,
Consuelos . 15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO.,
Reciprocity . 15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO.,
Especiales 20c., 5 for $1.00
LORDS OF ENGLAND,
Delmontes . 20c., 3 for 50c.
LA CAROLINA,
Perfectos . . . 25c. each

Estabrook & Eaton
CIGAR IMPORTERS
222 and 224 Washington Street.
Masonic Building, Boylston Street.
Merchants Building, 77 Summer St.

376 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Harrison Bottling Company
Representing
Imported Pilsner and Bavarian Beers of Rudolph Oelsner, New York.
W. A. Miles & Co., New York, Croton Brewery Ales.
Iroquois Brewing Co., of Buffalo, N.Y., Lager Beers.
Frank Jones Brewing Co., Portsmouth, N.H., Ales.

33 and 34 LEWIS WHARF, Boston, Mass.
Telephone, Richmond 1119

A. B. C.
"KING OF ALL BOTTLED BEERS"

The American Brewing Co.
ST. LOUIS.

Try a pint bottle and appreciate the fine hop flavor.

CODMAN & HALL CO.,
Distributers,
DEWEY SQUARE.

If you want an Old-fashioned Beer
ASK FOR

Pfaff's Lager

THE RATHSKELLER

UNDER THE
NEW AMERICAN HOUSE
BOSTON
MUSIC from 12 to 3 and 6 to Midnight

Try some of our SPECIAL DISHES Cannot be excelled

THEATRE PARTIES can make arrangements ahead

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Monday, June 26, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 49.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 26, 1905.

Ninth Graduates' Night.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Through the Yard at Harvard"	C. A. Hosmer, '02
2.	SELECTION, "Yankee Consul"	Robyn
3.	WALTZ, "España"	Waldteufel
4.	OVERTURE, "His Majesty"	Shafter Howard, '85
5.	a. DECENNIAL MARCH	Elson, '95
	b. HASTY PUDDING MARCH	Purdon, '95
6.	SELECTION, "Babes in Toyland"	Herbert
7.	INTRODUCTION to Act III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
8.	OVERTURE, "Orpheus"	Offenbach
9.	a. MARCH, "Veritas"	Densmore, '04
	b. AMERICAN FANTASY	Herbert
10.	WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
11.	"FAIR HARVARD"	Bigelow
12.	MARCH, "Our Director"

Jewett Piano Used.

Tuesday, June 27	Soloists' Night
Wednesday, June 28	Wagner Night
Thursday, June 29	German Night
Saturday, July 1	Closing Night

TRADE MARK.

Wood, Pollard & Co.,

Importers of Wines, Spirits, Groceries, and Teas.

COFFEE ROASTERS.

Wood, Pollard & Co.,

Opposite North and South Stations, BOSTON.

Wood, Pollard & Co.

GRAFTON
BLENHEIM
NOTTINGHAM

CIGARS

CHARLES THE GREAT
DON RODRIGO
CORDOVA

Opposite North and South Stations
BOSTON

Mountain View House

Rangeley Lake, Maine.

L. E. BOWLEY,
Proprietor.

Always Satisfactory.

Post-office address,
MOUNTAIN VIEW, MAINE.

AUTOMOBILES FOR HIRE.

THE LARGEST RENTING STATION IN AMERICA.

All models of machines for hire by the hour, day, week, or month.

Open day and night. Will call at any address.

Sight-seeing cars, large or small parties, seats $1. The only up-to-date way to see Boston and suburbs. Daily trips to Nantasket, Concord, Lexington, etc.

Machines always ready. Write or telephone.

K. A. SKINNER, Proprietor, 179 Clarendon St.

Telephone, 67 Tremont.

SUBSCRIBERS

The New England Telephone and Telegraph Company has made material changes in its Rates affecting Metropolitan and Suburban Exchanges

INDUCEMENTS

Are offered to Suburban Subscribers for Residence Telephones. For Information call

Contract Dept. MAIN 6090 101 Milk St. Boston

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL — "The POPS" — SEASON of 1905

Boston, Tuesday, June 27, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 50.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 27, 1905.

Soloists' Night.

PROGRAMME.

1. GRAND MARCH . . . . . Schubert–Locke
2. OVERTURE, "Bronze Horse" . . . . . Auber
3. WALTZ, "Sounds from the Vienna Woods" . . . . Strauss
4. BALLADE for Trombone . . . . . Müller–Berghaus
   Mr. CARL HAMPE.
5. OVERTURE, "Mignon" . . . . . Thomas
6. FAUST FANTASIE for Violin . . . . . Sarasate
   Mr. BARLEBEN.
7. HUNGARIAN DANCES . . . . . Brahms
8. MILITARY CONCERTO for Clarinet . . . . . Barmann
   Mr. FRITZSCHE.
9. OVERTURE, "Freischütz" . . . . . Weber
10. WALTZ, "Im Dämmerlicht" . . . . . Strube
11. SELECTION, "Mikado" . . . . . Sullivan
12. MARCH, "Boccaccio" . . . . . Suppé

Jewett Piano Used.

Wednesday, June 28 . . . . . Wagner Night
Thursday, June 29 . . . . . German Night
Saturday, July 1 . . . . . Closing Night

JUST TELEPHONE

LEWANDO'S DYEING CLEANSING LAUNDERING

GLOVES
Cleansed 10 cents per pair
Color of Tan Gloves retained No shrinking

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed
All spots removed

LACE and MUSLIN CURTAINS
Cleansed $1 per pair

ALL KINDS BLANKETS
Cleansed 75 cents per pair

LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place
284 Boylston Street
Delivery Service Telephone Exchange
NEW YORK PHILADELPHIA WASHINGTON

The Cheapest and Best Series of Standard Music now published . . .

"Imperial Edition of Songs"

Soprano Album — Baritone Album
Contralto Album — Bass Album
Tenor Album — Tschaikowsky Album
Golden Treasury of Song

PAPER COVERS, PRICE $1.00 NET, EACH

To be had of all dealers and

BOOSEY & COMPANY, 9 East 17th Street, New York

On sale in the hall or may be ordered of the waiter

LOWNEY'S
Chocolate Bonbons

"Name on every piece"

One pound packages, $1, 75, 60, and 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 35, 30, and 25 cents

CHOCOLATES and BONBONS
One pound packages, 50 cents
One-half pound packages, 30 cents

Chocolate Suranné and Chocolate Peppermints in half-pound boxes, 25 cents

LOWNEY RETAIL STORE
416 Washington Street

THE KNABE ANGELUS PIANOS

will be ready for delivery September 1. The KNABE is the FIRST absolutely high-grade, artistic piano to be equipped with an automatic piano player which in no way alters or detracts from the appearance of the piano.

The KNABE piano enjoys a deserved reputation for tone, touch, and durability equalled by no other piano, because its pre-eminence is not due to purchased encomiums but TRUE MERIT.

The price of the KNABE piano has not been reduced at the expense of its construction, but remains the same, while its makers progress steadily toward their ideal and ambition of over sixty years to produce ALWAYS the BEST PIANO MADE.

EXAMINE THE NEW SCALES AND CASES

Let us quote you terms for your summer rental. Largest renting stock in Boston.

THE C. C. HARVEY CO., 144 BOYLSTON STREET
TELEPHONE, OXFORD 104

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Wednesday, June 28, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 51.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 28, 1905.

WAGNER NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Flag of Victory"	Blon
2.	OVERTURE, "Raymond"	Thomas
3.	SUITE, "L'Arlésienne"	Bizet
4.	PRELUDE to "The Mastersingers"	Wagner
5.	OVERTURE, "Rienzi"	Wagner
6.	TWO INTERMEZZI { a. "Einsam" b. "Verliebt" }	Strube
7.	"FIRE-CHARM," from "Die Walküre"	Wagner
8.	WALTZ, "Morgenblätter"	Strauss
9.	SELECTION from "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saëns
10.	SERENADE	Moszkowski
11.	WALTZ, "Mes Amours"	Riker
12.	MARCH, "Fürs Vaterland"	Millöcker

Jewett Piano Used.

Thursday, June 29 . . . . . German Night
Saturday, July 1 . . . . . Closing Night

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

BOSTON TO NEW YORK

VIA RAIL LINES.

Week-day Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
e 9.00 a.m.	9.04 a.m.	Hartford	2.00 p.m.
d, 10.00 a.m.	10.04 "	Shore Line	3.10 "
a 10.03 "	10.07 "	" "	4.15 "
f, 1.00 p.m.	1.04 p.m.	" "	6.10 "
g 1.03 "	1.07 "	" "	7.10 "
e 2.00 "	2.04 "	Hartford	7.59 "
b 3.00 "	3.04 "	Shore Line	9.11 "
a, 5.00 "	5.04 "	" "	10.10 "
g 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

‖ Parlor cars only. Limited in equipment, and will receive passengers only to the extent of its seating capacity. Special ticket required.

Sunday Service.

Leave Boston.	Leave Back Bay.	Via	Due New York.
a 10.03 a.m.	10.07 a.m.	Shore Line	4.15 p.m.
g 1.03 p.m.	1.07 p.m.	" "	7.10 "
b 2.00 "	2.04 "	" "	9.11 "
g 5.03 "	5.07 "	" "	11.00 "
12.00 n'ht	12.04 a.m.	" "	7.12 a.m.

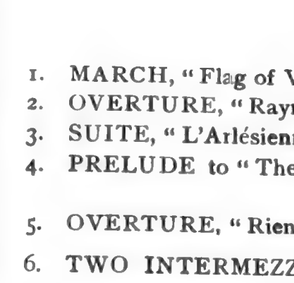
Equipment.

Vestibuled Buffet Parlor Cars and Coaches on Day Trains.
Stateroom and Sleeping Cars on Night Trains.
Dining Cars on trains noted above: a Boston to New York; b New London to New York; e New Haven to New York; f Boston to New Haven; g Boston to New London.

VIA FALL RIVER LINE.

Steamboat Express Train of Vestibuled Parlor Cars and Coaches leaves South Station daily, including Sundays, 6.00 p.m., Back Bay 6.04 p.m., connecting at Fall River with steamer "Priscilla" or "Pilgrim," touching at Newport, and due New York, Pier 19, North River, 7.00 a.m.

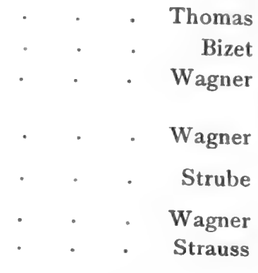
TICKET OFFICES, BOSTON.
303 Washington Street, South Station, and Back Bay Station.



LIGHT WEIGHT
President Suspenders

"Trousers support that's delightful."
As easy as no suspenders, with a greater degree of security.

Ball Bearing Garters



not alone sure and comfortable, but also wear longer.

ASK YOUR DEALER FOR THEM.

The C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO.,
P.O. Box 414, SHIRLEY, MASS.

S. S. Pierce Co.'s

Cider

Served at these concerts

Veuve Chaffard

PURE OLIVE OIL

In Honest Bottles

In the programme above, for Wednesday, June 28, we can supply at once for all piano players the following:

1. MARCH, "Flag of Victory" — Blon
2. OVERTURE, "Raymond" — Thomas
3. PRELUDE to "The Mastersingers" — Wagner
4. OVERTURE, "Rienzi" — Wagner
5. "FIRE-CHARM," from "Die Walküre" — Wagner
6. WALTZ, "Morgenblätter" — Strauss
7. SELECTION from "Samson and Delilah" — Saint-Saëns
8. SERENADE — Moszkowski
9. WALTZ, "Mes Amours" — Riker

The PROGRAMME for TO-NIGHT

Can be played in your home to-morrow night or any night by any member of your family if you have one of our piano players. We rent and sell the leading makes of players at attractive prices. Convenient terms of payment will be arranged for responsible purchasers.

We have the most complete library of music in America for Pianista, Pianola, Angelus, Simplex, and other players. The latest selections, such as the music from "It Happened in Nordland," "Humpty Dumpty," "Johnny Jones," "Lady Teazle," etc., now in stock.

☞ If you own a player, be sure your name is on our mailing list for the new catalogue, containing over ten thousand numbers.

Some players that have been rented this winter will be sold at from $90 to $165. Every instrument guaranteed

MENDELSSOHN MUSIC CO.

172 Tremont Street, Boston Also New York and Providence, R.I.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Thursday, June 29, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 52.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 29, 1905.

German Night.

PROGRAMME.

1.	GERMAN MARCH	Strube
2.	WALTZ, "Blue Danube"	Strauss
3.	OVERTURE, "Martha"	Flotow
4.	TWO SONGS for Trombone Quartet Messrs. HAMPE, Sr., HAMPE, Jr., MAUSEBACH, and KENFIELD.
5.	GRAND MARCH	Stasny
6.	LARGO	Handel
7.	OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
8.	a. "TRÄUMEREI"	Schumann
	b. WALTZ, "Rosenfesseln"	Strube
9.	SCHLARAFFEN MARCH	Kempter
10.	POTPOURRI OF GERMAN FOLK-SONGS	Schreiner
11.	WALTZ, "Erinnerung an Luzern"	Keler-Bela
12.	MARCH, "King Karl"	Unrath

Jewett Piano Used.

Saturday, July 1 . . . . . Closing Night

Served at these concerts

Sparkling Dry-Comet

Apollinaris

"THE QUEEN OF TABLE WATERS."

Bottled only at the Apollinaris Spring, Neuenahr, Germany, and Only with its Own Natural Gas.

MahMal

EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 5s	15 cents per box
No. 3s	25 cents per box
No. 1s	30 cents per box
No. 3, Cork Tips	25 cents per box

Also sold by

S. S. PIERCE CO.

BOSTON, BROOKLINE

Baltimore & Ohio

CENTRAL R.R. of N.J. — BALTIMORE & OHIO R.R. — PHILA. & READING R.R.

ROYAL BLUE LINE

"EVERY OTHER HOUR ON THE EVEN HOUR."

New York to Baltimore and Washington

Splendid equipment, thoroughly modern coaches, Pullman cars, and superior dining-car service

Solid trains from NEW YORK to PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE ST. LOUIS, CHICAGO

Ticket office, 360 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

C. W. BASSETT, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore

D. B. MARTIN, Manager Passenger Traffic, Baltimore

Schlitz

THE BEER THAT MADE MILWAUKEE FAMOUS

Served exclusively on draught at the "Pop" Concerts.

Visit the Schlitz Palm Garden at Paragon Park, Nantasket Beach.

JOS. GAHM & SON, N. E. Agents

125 Purchase Street

Telephone, Main 954 BOSTON

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SYMPHONY HALL

The "POPS"

SEASON of 1905

Boston, Friday, June 30, 1905. Twentieth Season. Summer 1905.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 53.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMBE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

MENASHI AND RED LION CIGARETTES

Sold at these Concerts

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, 15c.

No. 2 Menashi, Plain or Cork Tip, Club size, 20c.

Red Lion, Plain or Cork Tip, 25c.

MISS MOORE

HIGH CLASS SPECIALTY SHOP
421 BOYLSTON STREET
WARREN CHAMBERS
BOSTON

Dainty Clothing for misses, women, and children.

Dresses ready to wear in veiling, taffeta, linen, and muslin. Prices from $25 to $200.

A variety of waists in hand embroidered linens and muslins and silks. Prices from $12 to $85.

Finest veils, parasols, neckwear, handkerchiefs, toilet articles, etc. Carefully selected and up to date.

FRIDAY, JUNE 30, 1905.

PROGRAMME.

1.	EGYPTIAN MARCH	Strauss
2.	OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo"	Auber
3.	WALTZ, "Vienna Blood"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Fencing Master"	De Koven
5.	OVERTURE, "Orpheus"	Offenbach
6.	a. "MEDITATION" / b. CANZONETTA	Strube
7.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
8.	PRELUDES I. AND III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
9.	SELECTION, "It Happened in Nordland"	Herbert
10.	SERENADE	Keene
11.	WALTZ, "Amour et Printemps"	Waldteufel
12.	MARCH, "El Capitan"	Sousa

Jewett Piano Used.

Saturday, July 1 . . . . . Closing Night

Charles B. Perkins & Co.

The following choice selection of our CIGARS Always on sale at "Pop" Concerts:

Ginita Deliciosos Extra (domestic)	10c., 3 for 25c.
Catriona Perfectos (domestic)	10c. each
Petronila Puritanos (clear Havana)	10c. each
Tedesco Exquisitos (domestic)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Petronila Rothschilds (clear Havana)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Elena Reina Victoria Extra (imported)	15c., 2 for 25c.
Monte Rosa Puritanos (imported)	15c. each
Romeo and Juliet Pacificos (imported)	20c., 3 for 50c.
Monte Rosa Americanos (imported)	20c. each

36 Kilby St. Branch, 53 State St., Exchange Building. Telephone, Main 1186

ASK THE WAITER FOR

AMERICA'S FINEST PRODUCT

VARTRAY

Ginger Ale
Sarsaparilla

VARTRAY WATER CO.
Buffalo, N.Y.

Puritan

BEVERAGES are made of water distilled at the plant of the Puritan Water Company at Broadway and 30th Street, New York. The plant is always open to inspection. This policy has been adopted as giving the best possible guarantee of purity. Puritan beverages are not designed for consumers who place cheapness above quality. They are the best that can be made. A bottle of Puritan mineral water or ginger ale will help you to enjoy the concert. Give your order to the waiter.

Orders may be sent by mail to the PURITAN WATER COMPANY, 1218 Broadway, New York, and will be promptly filled by freight or express, as directed. Transportation charges payable by the purchaser.

Boston and Albany

4 Trains a Day

Leave Boston
MORNING (9 a.m.)
NOON (12 o'clock)
AFTERNOON (4 p.m.)
and NIGHT (11.15 p.m.)

Via "Springfield Line" for

NEW YORK CITY

Equipped with
Pullman Parlor and Sleeping Cars
WITH EXCELLENT DINING CAR SERVICE

Lv. BOSTON	9.00 a.m.	12.00 m.	4.00 p.m.	11.15 p.m.
" WORCESTER	10.06 "	1.04 p.m.	5.02 "	11.53 "
" SPRINGFIELD	11.34 "	2.22 "	6.21 "	2.35 a.m.
Ar. HARTFORD	12.13 p.m.	2.57 "	6.57 "	3.19 "
" NEW HAVEN	1.21 "	3.55 "	7.58 "	4.30 "
" NEW YORK	3.15 p.m.	5.45 p.m.	9.52 p.m.	6.46 a.m.

For reservations, tickets, etc., call on
R. M. HARRIS, City Passenger and Ticket Agent
366 WASHINGTON STREET
A. S. HANSON, General Passenger Agent. BOSTON, MASS.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1905

The "Pops"

It seems hardly possible that it is twenty years since, in 1885, the idea to supplement the Symphony season with a series of summer concerts of light and attractive music was established, to be in vogue every succeeding season save one. The length of these seasons varied considerably in the earlier years and the concerts were even prolonged throughout the summer, but of late they have been confined to the months of May and June. The twentieth season of the perennial "Pops" opens on Monday, May 1, and continues for nine weeks, closing on Saturday, July 1. The orchestra or fifty musicians will be selected as usual from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and everything will be conducted as usual with the single exception of a slight modification in the scale of prices which will be as follows: General admission to the unreserved tables on the floor and the second balcony, twenty-five cents; the entire first balcony, reserved at fifty cents, and seats at reserved floor tables, seventy-five cents. There will be the usual number of special nights including the one thousandth concert on Monday evening, May 15, which will be featured by a selected programme and other interesting attractions. Tickets go on sale for the opening night, Monday, May 1, Monday morning at Symphony Hall.

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

THE "POPS"

It seems hardly possible that it is 20 years since, in 1885, the idea to supplement the Symphony season with a series of summer concerts of light and attractive music was established, to be in vogue every succeeding season save one. The 20th season of the perennial "Pops" opens on Monday, May 1, and continues for nine weeks, closing on Saturday, July 1.

The orchestra of 50 musicians will be selected as usual from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and everything will be conducted as usual, with the single exception of a slight modification in the scale of prices, which will be as follows: General admission to the unreserved tables on the floor and the second balcony, 25 cents; the entire first balcony reserved at 50 cents, and seats at reserved floor tables, 75 cents.

There will be the usual number of special nights, including the 1000th concert on Monday evening, May 15, which will be featured by a selected programme and other interesting attractions. Tickets go on sale for the opening night, Monday, May 1, tomorrow morning at Symphony Hall.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, APRIL 23, 1905.

THE "POPS."

It seems hardly possible that it is 20 years since the idea to supplement the Symphony season with a series of summer concerts of light and attractive music was established, to be in vogue every succeeding season save one. The length of these seasons varied considerably in the earlier years and the concerts were even prolonged throughout the summer, but of late they have been confined to the months of May and June. The 20th season of the perennial "Pops" opens Monday, May 1, and continues for nine weeks, closing Saturday, July 1.

The orchestra of 50 musicians will be selected as usual from the ranks of the Boston Symphony orchestra and everything will be conducted as usual with the single exception of a slight modification in the scale of prices, which will be as follows: General admission to the unreserved tables on the floor and the second balcony 25 cents; the entire first balcony reserved at 50 cents, and seats at reserved floor tables 75 cents.

There will be the usual number of special nights including the 1000th concert Monday evening, May 15, which will be featured by a selected program and other interesting attractions. Tickets go on sale for the opening night Monday, tomorrow morning at Symphony hall.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1905

The "Pops"

For nineteen years the concerts during May and June by the larger part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which are known as the "Pops," have been a sterling feature of Boston's summer entertainments, simply because in addition to the regular Symphony patrons who welcome the seasonable musical relaxation there are thousands of music lovers whose tastes incline to melodies of a lighter vein than obtain during the winter. Then there is the additional feature of light refreshments, a chance to smoke, and the opportunity to study human nature and dress as exemplified in one's neighbors, who also indulge in the same privilege toward you. Everything will be conducted on the same general plan as in the past. Mr. T. Adamowski will conduct the first four weeks, and the balance of the season Mr. Max Zach and Mr. Gustav Strube will be the musical directors, in the order named. The programme for the opening night, Monday follows:

March, "Black Bess".....Strube
Overture, "Mignon".....A. Thomas
Ballet music, "Queen of Sheba".....Goldmark
Violoncello solo, Mr. Josef Keller.
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Babes in Toyland".....Herbert
Overture, "Fledermaus".....J. Strauss
Serenade from "Les Contes d'Hoffmann"...
Offenbach
Overture, "1812".....Tschaikowski
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
Selection, "Sho-Gun".....Luders
(First time.)
March, "Vienna Dude".....Von Blon

Tickets are now on sale at Symphony Hall, and the prices will be for general admission to the second balcony and unreserved tables on the floor, twenty-five cents; for the entire first balcony, reserved, fifty cents, and for seats at reserved tables on the floor, seventy-five cents as heretofore.

The Boston Journal

"POP" CONCERTS OPEN BEGINNING OF SEASON

For nineteen years the concerts during May and June by the larger part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which are better known as the "Pops," have been a sterling feature of Boston's summer entertainments, simply because in addition to the regular symphony patrons who welcome the seasonable musical relaxation there are thousands of music lovers whose tastes incline to melodies of a lighter vein than obtain during the winter. Then there is the additional feature of light refreshments, a chance to smoke, and the opportunity to study human nature and dress as exemplified in one's neighbors who also indulge in the same privilege with you. Everything this season will be conducted on the same general plan as in the past. T. Adamowski will conduct the first four weeks, and the balance of the season Max Zach and Gustav Strube will be the musical directors in the order named. The program for the opening night, Monday, follows:

March, "Black Bess".....Strube
Overture, "Mignon".....A. Thomas
Ballet music, "Queen of Sheba".....Goldmark
Violoncello solo.....
Josef Keller.
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Babes in Toyland".....Herbert
Overture, "Fledermaus".....J. Strauss
Serenade from "Les Contes d'Hoffmann"
.....Offenbach
Overture, "1812".....Tschaikowski
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
Selection, "Sho-Gun".....Luders
(First time)
March, "Vienna Dude".....von Blon

Tickets are now on sale at Symphony Hall, and the prices will be. general admission to the second balcony and unreserved tables on the floor, 25 cents; the entire first balcony reserved, 50 cents, and seats at reserved tables on the floor at 75 cents, as before.

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

THE "POPS"

Next Monday evening, May 1, the "Pops" begin their 20th season, 15 years in Music Hall and the fifth summer in Symphony Hall. Mr. T. Adamowski will again conduct for his seventh season, but for four weeks only, with the rest of the season to be divided between Mr. Max Zach, who has served seven years, and Mr. Gustav Strube, whose term as conductor covers five years.

Everything will be arranged on the same general plan which has made these concerts so successful for the past 19 years, with a slight modification in the scale of prices, which will be as follows: Admission to the second balcony and to unreserved tables on the floor, 25 cents; the entire first balcony reserved at 50 cents, and seats at reserved tables on the floor 75 cents, as usual.

The programme for the opening night, for which the tickets are now on sale at Symphony Hall, follows:

March, "Black Bess," Strube; overture, "Mignon," A. Thomas; ballet music, "Queen of Sheba," Goldmark; violoncello solor, Mr. Josef Keller; waltz, "Espana," Waldteufel; selection, "Babes in Toyland," Herbert; overture, "Fledermaus," J. Strauss; serenade from "Les Contes d'Hoffmann," Offenbach; overture, "1812," Tschaikowski; overture, "Rienzi," Wagner; waltz, "Jolly Fellows," Vollstedt; selection, "Sho-Gun," Luders (first time); march, "Vienna Dude," von Blon.

SUNDAY HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVII., NO. 113.
SUNDAY, APRIL 23, 1905.

THE "POPS."

It seems hardly possible that it is 20 years since, in 1885, the idea to supplement the Symphony season with a series of summer concerts of light and attractive music was established, to be in vogue every succeeding season save one. The length of these seasons varied considerably in the earlier years, and the concerts were even prolonged throughout the summer, but of late they have been confined to the months of May and June. The 20th season of the perennial "Pops" opens on Monday, May 1, and continues for nine weeks, closing on Saturday, July 1. The orchestra of 50 musicians will be selected, as usual, from the ranks of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and everything will be conducted, as usual, with the single exception of a slight modification in the scale of prices which will be as follows: General admission to the unreserved tables on the floor and the second balcony, 25 cents; the entire first balcony reserved at 50 cents, and seats at reserved floor tables 75 cents. There will be the usual number of special nights, including the 1000th concert, on Monday evening, May 15, which will be featured by a selected programme and other interesting attractions. Tickets go on sale for the opening night, Monday, May 1, tomorrow morning at Symphony Hall.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, APRIL 30, 1905.

THE "POPS" THIS WEEK.

Tomorrow evening the "Pops" begin their 20th season, 15 years in Music hall and the fifth summer in Symphony hall. Mr T. Adamowski will again conduct for his seventh season, four years from 1891 to 1894 and the third year of his present regime. Mr Adamowski will conduct for four weeks only, with the rest of the season to be divided between Mr Max Zach, who has served seven years, and Mr Gustav Strube, whose term as conductor covers five years.

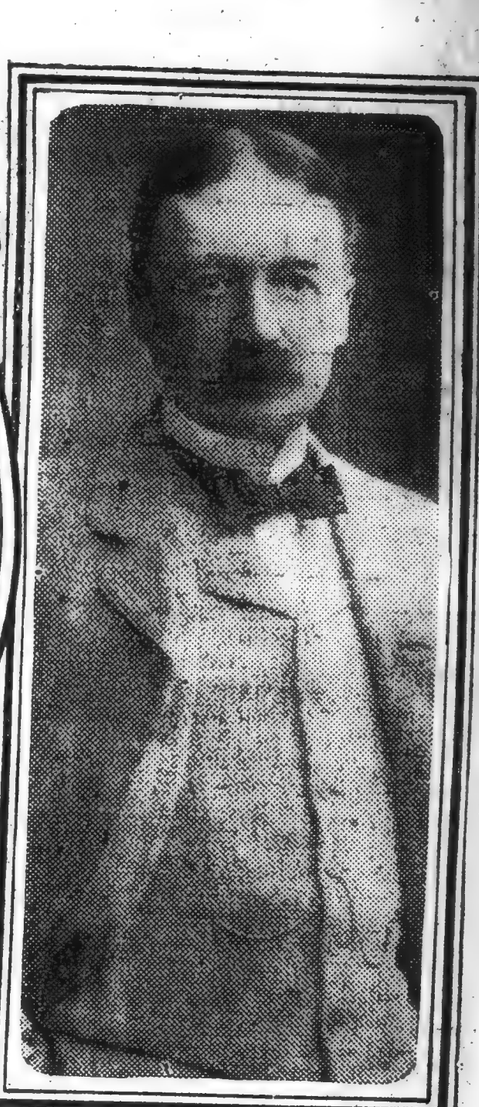
Everything will be conducted on the same general plan which has made these concerts so successful for the past 19 years, with a slight modification in the scale of prices, which will be as follows: Admission to the second balcony and to unreserved tables on the floor 25 cents, the entire first balcony reserved at 50 cents, and seats at reserved tables on the floor 75 cents, as usual. The program for the opening night is as follows:

March, Black Bess.....Strube
Overture, Mignon.....A Thomas
Ballet music, Queen of Sheba.....Goldmark
Violoncello solo, Mr Josef Keller.
Waltz, Espana.....Waldteufel
Selection, Babes in Toyland.....Herbert
Overture, Fledermaus.....J Strauss
Serenade from Les Contes d'Hoffmann
Offenbach
Overture, 1812.....Tschaikowski
Overture, Rienzi.....Wagner
Waltz, Jolly Fellows.....Vollstedt
Selection, Sho-Gun (first time).....Luders
March Vienna Dude.....von Blon

THE OPENING "POP" CONCERT IS GIVEN TOMORROW EVENING

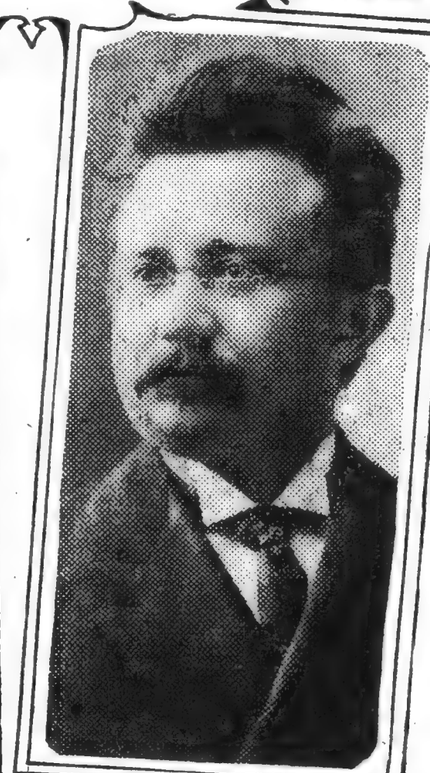
RALPH OSBORNE, BASS.

LOUISE ORMSBY, SOPRANO



T. ADAMOWSKI,

MAX ZACH, CONDUCTOR.



GUSTAV STRUBE, CONDUCTOR.

Benefit of the Pension Fund of the Symphony Orchestra Tonight; Two Song Recitals; Other Musical Events of the Week; How Theodore Thomas Made His Programmes; Their Structure and General Character.

fatigued."

THE "POPS."

For 19 years the concerts during May and June by the larger part of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which are better known as the "Pops," have been a sterling feature of Boston's summer entertainments, simply because, in addition to the regular symphony patrons, who welcome the seasonable musical relaxation, there are thousands of music lovers whose tastes incline to melodies of a lighter vein than obtain during the winter. Then there is the additional feature of light refreshments, a chance to smoke, and the opportunity to study human nature and dress as exemplified in one's neighbors, who also indulge in the same privilege toward you. Everything will be conducted on the same general plan as in the past. Mr. T. Adamowski will conduct the first four weeks, and the balance of the season Mr. Max Zach and Mr. Gustav Strube will be the musical directors in the order named. The programme for the opening night (tomorrow) follows:

1. March, "Black Bess".....Strube
2. Overture, "Mignon".....A. Thomas
3. Ballet music, "Queen of Sheba".Goldmark
   Violoncello solo, Mr. Josef Keller.
4. Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
5. Selection, "Babes in Toyland".....Herbert
6. Overture, "Fledermaus".....J. Strauss
7. Serenade from "Les Contes d'Hoffman".....Offenbach
8. Overture, "1812".....Tschaikowski
9. Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
10. Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
11. Selection, "Sho-Gun".....Luders
    (First time.)
12. March, "Vienna Dude".....Von Blon

Tickets are now on sale at Symphony Hall, and the prices will be: General admission to the second balcony and unreserved tables on the floor, 25 cents; the entire first balcony reserved, 50 cents, and seats at reserved tables on the floor at 75 cents, as before.

POPS HAVE A BRILLIANT OPENING

Animated Scene at Opening of 20th Season of "Pop" Concerts, in Symphony Hall, Under Magic Harmony-Evoking Baton of Conductor Timothee Adamowski

THE "POPS" OPENED WITH BEER AND SONG

THE "POP" CONCERTS.
PROGRAMME.

1—March, "Black Bess".....Strube
2—Overture, "Mignon".....A. Thomas
3—Ballet music, "Queen of Sheba"....Goldmark
Violoncello solo, Mr. Josef Keller.
4—Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
5—Selection, "Babes in Toyland".....Herbert
6—Overture, "Fledermaus".....J. Strauss
7—Serenade from "Les Contes d'Hoffman".....Offenbach
8—Overture, "1812".....Tschaikowski
9—Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
10—Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
11—Selection, "Sho-Gun".....Luders
(First time.)
12—March, "Vienna Dude".....Von Blon

The post-symphonic days have come,
The gladdest of the year,
When music-puzzles all are dumb,
And tunes are mixed with beer.

Delight and pleasure fill the house,
When T. A. lifts his stick,
And soon we find that Johann Strauss
Is quite as good as Dick.

We turn away from Berlioz
And other mournful brooders,
And drown stock-market cares and woes
In "Shogun" shots by Luders.

Symphonic Poems are banished here!
They'd anger us to frenzy,
And if R. Wagner must appear,
Why, let it be "Rienzi."

And D'Indy, with his Mountain lays,
We also gladly shelve,
And try instead that Russ Berceuse,
Tschaikowsky's "1812."

To Bach we now an "Offen" add;
It makes him much more jolly.
Goldmark's leg-music isn't bad
To cure one's melancholy.

The "Contes" of Hoffman made a hit,
Neath Adamowski's lead.
The cellos and the harp, in it,
Played very well indeed!

And Strube writes a number, too,
In straight harmonic phrases!
What, therefore, can the critic do
But sing the concert's praises?

Louis C. Elson.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

MUSICAL MATTERS

THE "POP" CONCERTS.
PROGRAMME.

1—March, "Black Bess".....Strube
2—Overture, "Mignon".....A. Thomas
3—Ballet music, "Queen of Sheba"....Goldmark
Violoncello solo, Mr. Josef Keller.
4—Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
5—Selection, "Babes in Toyland".....Herbert
6—Overture, "Fledermaus".....J. Strauss
7—Serenade from "Les Contes d'Hoffman".....Offenbach
8—Overture, "1812".....Tschaikowski
9—Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
10—Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
11—Selection, "Sho-Gun".....Luders
(First time.)
12—March, "Vienna Dude".....Von Blon

The post-symphonic days have come,
The gladdest of the year,
When music-puzzles all are dumb,
And tunes are mixed with beer.

Delight and pleasure fill the house,
When T. A. lifts his stick,
And soon we find that Johann Strauss
Is quite as good as Dick.

We turn away from Berlioz
And other mournful brooders,
And drown stock-market cares and woes
In "Shogun" shots by Luders.

Symphonic Poems are banished here!
They'd anger us to frenzy,
And if R. Wagner must appear,
Why, let it be "Rienzi."

And D'Indy, with his Mountain lays,
We also gladly shelve,
And try instead that Russ Berceuse,
Tschaikowsky's "1812."

To Bach we now an "Offen" add;
It makes him much more jolly.
Goldmark's leg-music isn't bad
To cure one's melancholy.

The "Contes" of Hoffman made a hit,
Neath Adamowski's lead.
The cellos and the harp, in it,
Played very well indeed!

And Strube writes a number, too,
In straight harmonic phrases!
What, therefore, can the critic do
But sing the concert's praises?

Louis C. Elson.

[143]

POPS AND PEOPLE TOGETHER AGAIN

First Night at Symphony Hall of 20th Season of Sprightly Concerts Attended in Large Numbers by Gay and Music-Loving.

Stirring strains from a Strube march, the Symphony orchestra, rustle of silken gowns, crackle of glistening shirt fronts, purr of foam and tinkle of glass, thin haze of smoke, appreciative attention, a spectacle of well-bred vivacity—the Pops!

May time brought the Pops to Symphony Hall once more. The opening of the 20th season was welcomed as cordially as ever. Old friends—Waldteufel Strube, Herbert, Strauss, Tschaikowski and Wagner—mingled pleasantly in the mauve and gold setting of Symphony Hall with a large assemblage of noteworthy people and the concomitant features of the Pops.

Fantastic musical comedy, dainty, entertaining and serious grand, dances, receptions, lectures—all give way at May time for the harmonious in melody of "Black Bess," "Mignon," "Queen of Sheba," "Babes in Toyland," serenade from "Les Contes d'Hoffmann," and the "Sue-gun."

When Conductor Adamowski stepped upon his stand the boxes were graced by many blithe parties. Clink of glass and soft swish suggested—suggested—Bohemia. Subdued laughter and low, modulated voices, quiet demeanor expressed Boston at a winter concert of the Symphony. Then the spirals of smoke took you back to Bohemia.

Conductor Adamowski summoned his orchestra quickly, keenly. The conversation languished and the assemblage sat up expectantly. The baton gyrated gracefully, the violins answered with a rush of sound.

Strube scored effectually, musicianly. Then the sprightly music of "Mignon" pleasantly intruded. Eventually the spirited "Espana" of Waldteufel! And then, very logically, the Promenade!

Everybody went out to the spacious corridors and looked at everybody else smilingly and politely and bowed blithely to acquaintances and friends. Women told one another: "How splendid to have the 'Pops' with us once more!"

"How well the Symphony is playing!"

"Mr. Adamowski conducts beautifully."

"There is so much charm in the atmosphere of the 'Pops'."

Men remarked that the jolly old "Pops." "Nothing like them, you know."

Back among the tables and the spiral skeins of cigarette smoke to hear the pretty music of "Babes in Toyland." Then the soft, sweet, sensuous Offenbach serenade. Finally the refreshing "Vienna Dad—" of Vien Blau, something you had not heard before, something you'd like to hear again. Then exit—well pleased with the 1905 "Pops." Carriage!

"Yes, charming."

"So fortunate to have the Symphony orchestra for the Pops! And Mr. Adamowski!"

"Yes—and Mr. [illegible] Mr. Comee. How splendidly they manage these affairs!"

Well known people in the audience: Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mrs. Timothee Adamowski, Miss Lena Little, Maj. and Mrs. H. L. Higginson, Miss Barbara Higginson, Miss Julia Higginson, Alexander Higginson, Otto Roth, William P. Blake, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Rufus Wills Pope, Mr. Alberta and party, Walter Dean, Mr. and Mrs. F. O. North, William T. Reid, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Steinert, S. H. Hudson, Mrs. F. R. Comee, Mr. and Mrs. Otis Kimball, Miss Estelle Kimball, Richard Heard, Capt. and Mrs. Alline, Julian Chamberlin, Mr. and Mrs. McQuesten, J. A. Fox, Percy Haughton, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Barron, Miss Ellen Todd, Dr. and Mrs. Foster Bush, Mr. and Mrs. Holman, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Hurtubis, Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Denee, Mr. S. Parkman Shaw and son, Elbridge Fernald and party.

JOURNAL—TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1905.

"POPS" TRANSFORMS THE GRAVE INTO GAY

Symphony Hall made its annual transition from grave to gay, from the classic to the ear-tickling, from learned program books to glasses of beer, with such ease and swiftness last night as to suggest that the spring monarch of music, though he wear cap and bells, is no less beloved by good Bostonians than the winter ruler, who dresses more severely.

As matters now stand the devotees of the Symphony concerts become the habitues of the "Pops," and to them are added the very good leaven of the more everyday set, who can appreciate fine music and who are not quite so hampered by conventionality. The result is a big blended mass of fashion, jollity, enthusiasm, fine clothes, tobacco smoke, gossip, the odor of malt and a general air of semi-Bohemianism that is about all Boston's upper tendom will permit itself to enjoy.

Follows Its Traditions.

The twentieth season of these admirable "Pops" lacked nothing of the traditional features in its opening. The crowd was large, the society and musical element strong, the waiters gracefully flippant, the refreshments well selected, the tables our old friends, and the music—ah, the music!

For here are fifty men of the Symphony, making, so far as technique is concerned, the finest light orchestra in the world. And here is a conductor who, while he is not overstocked with emotional qualities or the "zip" that ought to prevail in beer-garden music, is still a practised hand at pleasing "Pop" audiences, and a good maker of programs. The splendid quality of the orchestra does the rest.

Varied and Fascinating.

There was certainly varied and fascinating musical fare last evening. Between Strube's lively march, "Black Bess," which began amid an accompaniment of rattling chairs, and Van Blon's equally lively march, "Vienna Dude," which served as a retrocessional for outgoing feet, there were many inspiring things. The splendid sweep of the "Mignon" overture; the barbaric beauty of Goldmar's "Queen of Sheba" ballet music; the alluring Waldteufel's "Espana" waltz; the jolly patter of Herbert's "Babes in Toyland"; the exquisite rhythms of Strauss' "Fledermanus"; the charming serenade from Offenbach's "Contes d'Hoffmann"; the tremendous uproar of Tschaikowsky's "1812" overture, and the blatant sonority of Wagner's "Rienzi"—all these made their own especial effect, and all were played with the usual proficiency.

There was much enthusiasm, one or two encores and an aesthetic basket of pale pink roses for Mr. Adamowski, who accepted his honors modestly.

Society Folk in Force.

Although there was a rival show across the way in the Sharon Sanitarium bazaar, with its own "Pop" concert, still society was well represented and the tables "inside the ring" were exceptionally decorative. Conspicuous among the parties were Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, with a number of young folks, including the Misses Juliet and Barbara Higginson, Alexander Higginson and Julian Chamberlain; Mrs. Timothee Adamowski, with several friends, including Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Otto Roth, Mme. Emile A. Marius and "Willie" Blake; Mr. and Mrs. Frederick McQueston, with friends; Mr. and Mrs. H. Staples Potter, with Dr. Potter; Mrs. Patterson of New York and others; Capt. and Mrs. W. H. Alline, with Mr. and Mrs. Thomas O. Rogers; Mrs. Yeatton and party, Mr. and Mrs. McGeough, Courtenay Guild and his sister, Miss Guild, J. Mason Little, his daughter and other young ladies, including Miss Mabel Daniels, who was congratulated on all sides on the success of her music in "Alice in Wonderland Continued;" Commander Murch, U. S. N., and party; Mrs. Frederick R. Comee and party, including Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Steinert.

Mrs. Gardner Is Late.

Also there were Arthur Austin, Mrs. and Miss Robbins of the Norman, Brookline; Mr. and Mrs. F. O. North, Miss Anna Lyman, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dennee, Miss Estelle Kimball, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Hurtubis, Jr., and party, including Mr. and Mrs. Seavey Holman; Col. Harry Hastings, with friends; S. H. Hudson, Miss Mary Desmond of London, with party; Ralph Menard, Dr. and Mrs. J. Foster Bush and two daughters, who were handsomely gowned in white; Louis Elson, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Shirley, Mr. and Mrs. James Robinson, Mrs. C. J. Parker, Mrs. John F. Wood, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Perkins, with party, and James S. Pearson, with several male friends.

At the end of the fourth number Mr. Adamowski was presented with a large basket of pink roses tied with pink satin ribbons.

The last person to arrive was Mrs. Jack Gardner, accompanied by Miss Lena Little, and they joined Mrs. Adamowski's party. Miss Little was gowned in white and wore upon her left sleeve a small Japanese battle flag.

Tuesday Evening

BOSTON TRAVELER
FOUNDED IN 1825
The Oldest Daily Evening Newspaper Issued in Boston

"POPS" OPEN TO BIG CROWD

Mr. Adamowski Gives Splendid Programme for Inauguration of 20th Season

SOCIETY OUT IN FORCE

The "Pops" began last night. There were the fashionable coterie at the tables within the rail, the women in handsome gowns and plumed hats, sipping their wine or beer and chatting; there were the less fashionable outside the rail; there were the men and women who like to watch those on the floor in the first balcony; there were the men and women who hang far over the railing, drawn by the music, in the second balcony; there was Adamowski—and there was the Symphony Orchestra, Boston's own orchestra.

The 20th season of these concerts was marshaled in by Strubi's soul-stirring "Black Bess March."

As the evening wore on the tobacco smoke formed a haze over the auditorium, softening the lights and the gowns of the women. The pop of corks, the tinkle of glasses and the buzz of chatter and gossip was continuous. But always did they cease when the beauty of the music, the magnificent playing of the orchestra demanded.

All the old traditions were observed, and the promenades seemed more like the grand opera than a popular concert.

In the selection of his programme Adamowski showed his consummate skill and appreciation of what Bostonians want.

There were Waldteufel waltzes, selections from comic operas, marches, the serenade from "Les Contes d'Hoffmann," and overtures from "Mignon," "Fledermaus" and "Rienzi."

Of course, Colonel and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson were there with a large party, and of course Mrs. Jack Gardner was late.

In other parties were Mrs. Timothee Adamowski, Mrs. Frederick R. Comee, Courtenay Guild, J. Mason Little, Commander Murch, U. S. N.; Colonel Harry Hastings, Mrs. C. J. Parker, Mrs. Charles Perkins.

And Adamowski was in good humor.

BOSTON HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVII., NO. 137.
WEDNESDAY, MAY 17, 1905.

We extend our congratulations to the "Pops." It is a good record they have made, and we trust that the excellent entertainment given by them will continue indefinitely, so that our children and our children's children may live to see the anniversary of the 10,000th performance, or the 50,000th performance, just as we have enjoyed the 1000th performance. These concerts provide an excellent entertainment with good music, and a little wine or beer with a cigar if one wishes, and have become such an established institution that Boston would not be the same without them.

TWENTIETH SEASON OF THE "POPS" OPENS.

Modest Program and Warm Hearted Audience Give It a Good Send-Off.

SCENE AT THE FIRST "POP" CONCERT OF THE SEASON.

Considering that the opening concert of the 20th season of the "Pops" came at the end of a May day that had driven the merry revellers back into winter flannels, the audience last night in Symphony hall was large, warm-hearted and brilliant. It was not just the sort of night which made one flee as from an outdoor Turkish bath to gratefully cool halls, where Pilsner, Culmbacher et Cie revived one and the princess Nicotine aided Mr Adamowski to banish the thoughts of day. It was rather provocative of wonder whether after all it was wise to let the furnace go out for the season.

However, Mr Comee was not to blame for the weathetr, and Mr Adamowski was in fine form. The music was well selected for a modest beginning of the season—for the "Pops" are now so much of an institution that they need no starting blare of extra effort—and the orchestra played as though the men enjoyed playing.

The tables on the floor were almost all occupied, and there was a decent fringe outside the rail. The balcony and gallery were sparsely populated. Col Higginson had a large party, with his two nieces. Mrs Adamowski also had a party, at which Otto Roth was a guest. And though it was perhaps "the thing" to be across the street watching Miss Forbes and Miss Rotch dance, a number of well-known Boston people preferred to be charitable to themselves. Evening dress was favored, though by no means the rule, and many of the gowns were remarkably handsome.

The program contained several numbers well worth hearing and played with fine taste. Thomas' overture "Mignon," the Goldmark ballet music "Queen of the Sheba," for which Josef Keller played the 'cello solo, and that smashing, though somewhat over-played waltz "Espana" by Waldteufel, were all in the first section. The overture to Strauss' opera "Die Fledermaus" woke memories of the late opera season, and the simple serenade from Offenbach's "Les Contes d'Hoffmann" and Tschaikowsky's tremendous "1812" overture were in the second part, and before the third was done, Wagner's overture to "Rienzi" was played. It is only fair to say, however, that the audience vastly preferred Vollstedt's "Jolly Fellows" waltz, with the dancers coming home tight and whistling at cock-crow. Selections from the "Sho-Gun" were played for the first time in these concerts.

As the Pop concerts have gained in favor with Boston, they have acquired a distinctly Bostonian flavor. They are not made precisely solemn occasions, but they are far from rollicking times. Every one enjoys himself without disturbing the peace, and music, beer and smoke are all of the best. They have grown from year to year into the favor of people who like good music, and who are capable of enjoying an evening without taking the roof off in the effort.

Mr Adamowski, who is conducting for his seventh season, will occupy the stand—not boxed in this year—for four weeks only. The rest of the season will be divided between Gustav Strube and Max Zach. Mr Adamowski was given last night a huge basket of pink roses, and the audience was as pleased as he was himself.

ARST'S BOSTON

—TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1905.

WINTR
E

WEATHER FAILS TO CHILL STON'S WELCOME FOR 'POP' SEASON

SOME OF THE SMART SET WOMEN AT THE POP CONCERTS.
Sketched by Boston American Staff Artist.

SMART SET ASSURES SUCCESS OF 20TH YEAR OF POPULA R CONCERTS.

"Pops" redivivus!

Boston gives kindly welcome again to the "Pop" concerts, which have entered on their twentieth season in Symphony Hall under a welcome so genial that even Winter weather could not chill it.

You remember that good fellow, Dan Daly, in his feature song—

"Same old story—Nothing new."

Just so—same old "Pops."

Not so terribly old at that, only twenty years, just enough to get under the police listing this merry month of May. But old enough to be part of even conservative Boston. And so well established in its good points that "nothing new" is the best Boston wishes of it.

There were the same players, practically the same, the Symphony musicians.

Again in Bohemia.

There was the same bland Adamowski, Timothee of that name, wielding the baton with practiced ease. There were the delightful mauve and golden hall, the cosy tables, the Bohemian clink of glasses and still more Bohemian wreaths and clouds of cigar and cigarette smoke, the same old audience—not so, the same audience, but much of it charmingly young and fair.

To-day Messrs. Comee and Ellis, the men who manage the "Pops," are pleased that Boston did so prettily on the opening night. For it looked in the afternoon as though "pas" over sweet music and even the seductive "Pops."

But society remembered Brothers Ellis and Comee and the "Pops," and when Conductor Adamowski raised his baton for Strube's "Black Bess" march the cozy little tables about the central floor were well filled, with the "rail" tables showing a goodly number of patrons. So, from this auspicious beginning the management argues a prosperous season for the "Pops."

The Proper Program.

The opening night passed quickly. Classic music—not too classic, the cheerful strains of light operatic numbers, snappy popular compositions, the popping of corks, the crackle of matches lighting for the smokers, the clinkety-clink of the glasses, the "slip-slip" of the waiters scurrying busily to and fro, the hum of light talk, all blended into that ensemble which makes the "Pops" a smart Bohemia, if such adjective can be applied to anything Bohemian.

The program was judiciously selected, a little of Waldteufel, a dash of Tschaikowski, a bit of Wagner for musical ballast, some of Victor Herbert's "Babes in Toyland" and Luders' "Sho-gun" for merriment, and so on, not too heavy for the popular mind, not too light for the "really-truly musical."

And the music was as it should be. So much for criticism.

Smart Set in Evidence.

The "first night" audience included such as these: Mrs. John L. Gardner and Miss Lena Little, Miss May Desmond of London, Major and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, Misses Juliet and Barbara Higginson, Alexander Higginson and Julian Chamberlain, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Otto Roth, Mme. Emile A. Marius, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick McQueston, Mr. and Mrs. H. Staples Potter, Captain and Mrs. W. H. Alline, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas O. Rogers, Courtenay Guild, J. Mason Little and party, Commander Murch, U. S. N.

W

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1905

Symphony Hall: Pop Concert

Once more the Pop Concerts have begun, with even more magnificence than ever before. The opening last night, indeed, was grand. The hall, to begin with, was crowded, apparently all the tables on the floor being occupied, and both balconies were well filled. The spectacle was truly brilliant. Frequenters of the opera, which, it would seem, we are to have no more, complain that Boston women do not dress gayly for appearances in public. But these people are wrong. To see finely dressed ladies, one does not go to the opera, but to the Pops. On the whole, perhaps, the high-water mark was reached yesterday evening. Never before, surely, has there been such a display in Symphony Hall. And the men did not lag behind; tail coats were the rule rather than the exception. Among the gorgeous throng there was a goodly proportion of fine company. The occasion was grand.

Like everything else, of course, the opening had the defects of its qualities. Functions are not, it is usually held, entirely gay, and last night's entertainment might perhaps, under different circumstances, have been livelier. The programme, for instance, was adapted rather to please the tastes of the fine people assembled than to entertain such persons as might feel disposed to step into the hall for a few moments to take a glass of beer and listen to a waltz or two. There were three overtures played, those to "Mignon" and "Rienzi" and Tschaikowsky's "1812." There was also ballet music from Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba," and a charming serenade out of Offenbach's "Les Contes d'Hoffmann." In lighter vein were Mr. Strube's march "Black Bess," selections from "Babes in Toyland" and "The Sho-Gun," the overture to "Die Fledermaus," waltzes by Waldteufel and Vollstedt and a march entitled "Vienna Dude." Perhaps Mr. Adamowski could not have arranged a programme better calculated to please all tastes, those of gentle and simple alike. But does not Mr. Adamowski overestimate the taste of the gentle? Although people in glad raiment were far more plenty last night than plain persons, the musical number that seemed to give most pleasure was the selection from "Babes in Toyland." Fine feathers will not create a taste for Tschaikowsky. For the greater contentment of all "classes," let the music be light. Yesterday, by the way, the programme was admirably played, for Mr. Adamowski is not only a musician of temperament and charm, but a conductor of authority. Both musically and socially, in short, the opening Pop was a notable success. R. R. G.

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

OPENING OF "POP" CONCERTS

The 20th annual series of "Pop" concerts was inaugurated last evening at Symphony Hall. Timothee Adamowski was the conductor, and there was the usual orchestra of Symphony players, with Jacques Hoffmann as principal. The following attractive programme was presented.

March, "Black Bess".....Strube
Overture, "Mignon".....A. Thomas
Ballet Music, "Queen of Sheba".....Goldmark
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Babes in Toyland".....Herbert
Overture, "Fledermaus".....J. Strauss
Serenade from "Les Contes d'Hoffmann"...
Offenbach
Overture, "1812".....Tschaikowski
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
Selection, "Sho-gun".....Luders
March, "Vienna Dude".....Von Blon

There was a very large audience present, the tables being well filled, as were also the balconies, which indicates a most successful season.

The reduction of the admission price this year is an excellent move on the part of the management which is certain to prove profitable in the largely increased attendance that will be the inevitable result.

The programme presented was similar in character to those of former years, being a judicious mixture of the serious music with that in lighter vein. Such a programme is especially enjoyable, coming, as it does, after a lengthy Symphony season.

Among the several numbers that made decided "hits" with the audience were the Offenbach serenade, the Tschaikowski "1812" overture, and the excerpts from Victor Herbert's pleasing opera "Babes in Toyland." The time was, and not so long ago, either, when such works as the "Rienzi" and "1812" overtures would have been considered as ultra-classic and "heavy." But today these are thoroughly appreciated by what is known as the average audience, which is a gratifying evidence that a higher musical standard than formerly, exists among us.

The orchestra played at all times with the same artistic finish as ever, and all the numbers were liberally applauded. The audience was representative of the best in business and professional life, and many of the well-known society leaders were present.

The programme for this evening will include overtures by Rossini and Adolph Adam, selections from "Carmen" and "Aida," a polonaise by Chopin, ballet music from "Coppelia," and other numbers by Wagner, Tschaikowski, Dubois, Waldteufel, Rubin and Messager. Mr. Adamowski will direct for the first four weeks.

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

THE 1000TH "POP" CONCERT

The gay company of patrons that participated in the 1000th concert of the series known as "The Pops" at Symphony Hall last evening, will have many pleasant memories of this event. Reminiscences of the beginning of these pleasant musical evenings 20 years ago were in order, and Managers Ellis & Comee received many congratulations upon rounding out the 1000 nights, while many commendations were heard of the broad-minded, liberal policy and unprecedented liberality of Major Henry L. Higginson in making possible the continuance of these delightful entertainments during so long a period. Director Adamowski was quite in the mood, and the programme presented during the evening gave intense enjoyment to those present. Some notably brilliant programmes have been planned for the present week.

The Boston Journal

FOUNDED 1833

Published Every Week Day at The Journal Building, 262-268 Washington St.

TEN HUNDREDTH "POP" CONCERT

Night of Reminiscences at Symphony Hall and Some Novelties.

It was a night of reminiscences at Symphony Hall last night, when for the 1000th time a "Pop" concert was given by the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. And, indeed, it seemed a far cry that first tentative and experimental "Pop" of 1885 to the finished and accepted product of last night.

On the program last night the second number, the overture from William Tell, was also the second number upon that first "Pop" program twenty years ago. Among the other numbers many old-time favorites found places, and were given cordial greeting by the audience. The Harvard contingent was brought up standing by the selections from "The sphinx," the tuneful Hasty Pudding Club play of 1892, that in its time had an honored place upon the programs of the "Pop" concerts.

Among the best received of the numhere were the "Largo" of Handel, and Haydn's "Farewell Symphony," which ended the second section of the program. The lights in the hall were dimmed during the last number and through the orchestra were scattered tiny, flickering torches. Singly and in groups as the development of the theme progressed, the players blew out these lights, and with their instruments under their arms slowly left the stage. Slowly the orchestra dwindled until with the final bars of the melody only the leader, with a first and second violin, were left upon the stage.

Though it is twenty years since the first Pop was given, there are two veterans of the Music Hall service. George Hartshorn, head usher, and George Schad, doorkeeper of the Symphonies and cashier of the refreshment department of the "Pops," were both at the concert last night, looking down from the heights of thirty-six years and twenty-nine years, respectively, spent in and about the Symphony headquarters. Even the waiters now have honorable chevrons for long service. There are fourteen whose terms range from nineteen to five years, and for each five-year period Assistant Manager Fred R. Comee has furnished them with a silver stripe upon the sleeve.

Ten conductors have led the orchestra since its first dip into popular music. They include Ad Neuendorff, John C. Mullaly, Wilhelm Rietzel, Franz Kneisel, T. Adamowski, E. Gruenberg, A. de Novellis, Max Zach, Lee Schultz and Gustav Strube.

TIGHT BINDING

ston Daily Globe.
ESDAY, JUNE 20, 1905.

RVARD'S OWN POP.

imson Cast to Its Music and Decorations.

Student Composers Conduct Their Own Work.

hough their own particular night s not come until next Monday, not ew graduates joined the undergradus of Harvard last night at the Pop ert. It was Harvard night, and rly every number on the well-chosen gram was by a Harvard composer, was from an opera for which a rvard man wrote the libretto. Two dent composers conducted their own positions.

ach of the undergraduate classes had own little group in the hall and de itself heard at brief intervals. e glee club occupied seats near the ge and sang the well-known Harrd ditties, like "When We Ran With Old Mash-sheen," during the intersions.

Nor did society itself disdain the occasion. Chairman Cole of the police mmissoner was present, so was Mrs En L. Gardner, so was Grafton D. shing, so were Mr and Mrs Hollis unnewell, so were Mr and Mrs Benjain Tucker.

Over the organ blazed in complimentary crimson the word "Harvard," rhaps a little bigger than it would ve been were not Mr Comee himself enthusiastic Cantabrigian. And all ng the railings of the balconies hung imson banners, bearing the names of e eleven, the crew and various other arvard organizations. These were, of urse, unobtrusively "swiped" as the evening went on, generally by a woman. here must be whole towns consisting entirely of "Subs" papered with these souvenirs, judging by the number consumed in the last 15 years.

Mr Strube conducted. He was gracious in according encores, and the students shouted "Thank you, Mr Strube," in chorus. He began with his own march, "Soldiers Field," and played a selection from the "Prince of Pilsen" and the old favorite Waldteufel waltz, "Estudiantina," merely by way of the suggestion of the business of the evening.

Then came the first student conductor to the platform, Leland Hall '05, to conduct his own composition, a selection from this year's Pudding play, "Machiavelli." From then on through the evening most of the music was from distinctly college productions. The classes waltzed that they wanted "Veritas," and made other suggestions for amendments to the program, and they applauded Herbert's "American Fantasy" till Mr Strube played the "Star Spangled Banner" over again for them.

Hardly anybody could guess what would end up the evening. It was "Up the Street."

BOSTON HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVII., NO. 171.
TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1905.

"HARVARD NIGHT" LIVELY AT POPS

A Crowd of Roaring Enthusiasts, Undergraduates and Alumni Vociferously Cheers Rendering of All Its Favorite Songs.

Three times last evening at the "Pops" the big audience stood up most respectfully. On one occasion the Symphony drifted from a vivacious prelude to "The Star Spangled Banner." In a second the whole assemblage, men and women, were on their feet. Later, when they sat down — momentarily — they cheered with so much vigor that the orchestra repeated the national song. So everybody rose again.

And then—and then came "Fair Harvard." A delighted murmur went through the house, and all Harvard men stood up and accompanied the musicians. When the baton ceased the roof suddenly lifted under the impetus of the great roar. The noise expanded in volume, and eventually culminated in a tremendous "three long Harvards and three times three."

Posters Become Souvenirs for Fair Ones Who Attended.

"Harvard night" at the "Pops" attracted a full house in spite of the nasty weather. Undergraduates were there by the scores, and a big representation of "grads"; a perceptible sprinkling of Back Bay and Brookline and many other devotees of the concerts were present. On the platform "H-A-R-V-A-R-D" shone brilliantly in a crimson electrical illumination, and from the fronts of the balconies hung numerous crimson posters dedicated to "Harvard," the "Nine," the "Eleven," the "Crew" and the "Track Team." These posters shortly became souvenirs.

One by one somebody's sister or friend claimed them. A few fluttered downward and stirred up brief melees. Late in the evening a radiant young thing in the first balcony waved a poster carelessly over the heads of the "Naughty Eights." Without delay the freshmen entreated very earnestly. "Naughty Six" at the other end of the hall jeered vigorously, but the blithe freshmen redoubled their entreaties. Then the poster suddenly dropped. Over went two tables and a dozen brawny young men forgot the Symphony's superb rendering of "The Tattler" and fought for the token. In their struggles they tore it into forty pieces.

Singing of the Glee Club a Feature of the Evening.

Other features of "Harvard night" at the "Pops" were the popular numbers, the singing of the Glee Club and the cheering. Conductor Strube offered a pleasing programme—"Soldier's Field," his own composition, selections from the Hasty Pudding and the Pi Eta comic operas, occasional waltzes from Waldteufel and Zeller and strains from the "Prince of Pilsen" and "The Red Feather."

The audience expressed itself enthusiastically after every number. During the intermission the Glee Club sang several songs and won much applause.

The outburst of outbursts came, however, after the rendering of "Fair Harvard." From that moment, "Harvard night" at the "Pops" became the usual demonstrative event. In the rear of the hall a bunch of '07 men, thoroughly waked up, let loose a peremptory demand for "Veritas." "Naughty Four" voiced a similar request. "Naughty Five" re-echoed even louder. The whole hall joined with a mighty "Veritas." But Mr. Strube only smiled pleasantly and gave them Comins' lively "The Tattler." The audience clapped appreciatively and continued to demand "veritas." Possibly, however, there was no score on hand; anyhow, "Veritas" was not forthcoming. So Mr. Strube furnished an excellent substitute, "Up the Street," and everybody sang it, topped off the concert with a long cheer and went home perfectly satisfied with "Harvard night."

The Boston Journal
FOUNDED 1833
Published Every Week Day at The Journal Building, 262-268 Washington St.

HARVARD MEN CAPTURE "POPS"

Crimson Night Is Marked by a Big Audience, but There Is No Disorder.

Fair Harvard was glorified in music and song at the "Pops" last night. It was "Harvard night," and, despite the unpleasant weather outside, Symphony Hall has seldom held a larger or a gayer assemblage. Every undergraduate who could afford for the time being to forget his examinations was on hand, accompanied by friends.

Compared with some of the "Harvard nights" of past year the performance was a somewhat tame affair, the enthusiasm of the students being kept strictly within the limits of propriety. And those who attended with the expectation of seeing anything approaching a "rough house" were doomed to disappointment.

The attractive program was arranged by Conductor Strube with much discrimination, his march, "Soldiers Field," heading the list. The "Prince of Pilsen" was also received with much applause.

Harvard Men Conduct.

After a few numbers had been played the conductor retired, yielding up his baton in turn to Messrs. Hall, Grey, Densmore and Hosmer, all of whom are composers of Hasty Pudding and Pi Eta librettos. Under their leadership the orchestra rendered several selections of distinctly Harvard music, including "Machiavelli," this year's Pudding production; "Elaine," the march "Through the Yard at Harvard" and a march from the Pi Eta's "Counterfeiter" of 1905.

"Glory, Glory to the Crimson," brought the immense audience to their feet, and a repetition was necessary before the remainder of the program was permitted to be carried out.

Glee Club Sings.

The last third of the performance consisted of "The Stadium," "American Fantasy," "Fair Harvard," and a polka, "The Tattler," the whole ending with "Up the Street," the most popular and stirring march ever composed by a Harvard undergraduate, Morse, '96. During the intermissions the Glee Club sang several songs.

Society was well represented in the audience. Mrs. Gardner was an interested listener at a table near the center of the floor. She was accompanied by a party of friends, including Grafton D. Cushing, former president of the Boston school committee. At a near-by table was also seated Chairman Charles H. Cole of the Police Board.

Monday evening, June 26, has been fixed as "graduates' night."

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERI

PRETTY GIRL STIRS HARVARD BOYS AT 'POPS'

Causes Lively Scramble Between Freshmen and Juniors at College Night Concert.

Several Harvard men who attended "Harvard Night" at the "Pops" are asking themselves to-day:

"Who was that pretty girl who stirred up the fracas between 'Naughty-Eight' and 'Naughty-Six'?"

She was a pink-cheeked, smiling miss, with mischievous, sparkling eyes. Just as Conductor Strube swung his musicians into "The Tattler" this girl, leaning over the first balcony rail, swung a Harvard poster to and fro with provoking, tantalizing looks at the collegians below.

Right underneath were grouped the freshmen and junior tables. Instantly several "Naughty-eights" appealed to the girl vociferously.

Freshmen Send Up Appeal.

"Please, please, down here," they begged in insistent chorus. The girl's eyes sparkled brighter than ever and everyone looked up and smiled at the scene, ignoring the symphony musicians and the "Tattler" music.

"No, no, down here, Naughty-six, Naughty-six!" sang the juniors.

The girl, possibly embarrassed by the attention she was attracting, solved the difficulty in true feminine fashion. She let go the poster. Down it shot and in a minute three tables went over and the poster was the centre of a struggling, clutching throng of "freshies" and juniors.

About every man got a bit of it, to treasure as a memento of Harvard night, 1905, and of the demure lass who caused the rumpus.

It was a typical Harvard night at the "Pops." Lots of collegians were there, most of them with their sisters or some other chaps' sisters. Harvard decorations were everywhere, including many posters dedicated to the "Nine," the "Track Team" the "Eleven" and the "Crew."

All Sang "Star Spangled Banner."

When they played "The Star Spangled Banner" all arose and sang. The encore was sung even louder. And when the orchestra played "Fair Harvard" the collegians drowned the orchestra with vocal music, cheering over and over again at the finish.

Other Harvard selections, popular airs, a little classical music for good measure, Symphony Hall jammed to the last seat, a jolly crowd of enthusiastic young fellows attractive girls and a rousing finale of "Up The Street"—all together made a thoroughly satisfactory Harvard "Pops."

[148]

Annual Combination of Wine (or Stein), Women (in Balcony) and Song at Pops, Which Stirs Harvard Graduates to Proper Pitch for Picturesque Cheering

Harry Hooper Leading the Cheering of Class of '75.

Class of '05 Makes up in Lung Power What It Lacks in Historic Perspective.

tinguished Harvard alumnus. All the other classes—35 of them—followed with wild cheers for "Roosevelt." The grads of 25 years ago stood up in their seats, directly in front of the orchestra, and yelled vigorously for Harvard and President Roosevelt.

All Over Hall Banners Bobbed up and Down.

All over the hall the class banners bobbed merrily up and down. The class of '95 waved its big crimson Harvard flag and its 50 little '95 flags. Everybody roared. Up on the stage the players scraped their strings skilfully and made no impression on the din. Eventually R. C. Hooper mounted the platform and waved his arms, and the whole mass of yelling graduates broke forth into "Harvard—Harvard—Harvard.

"Rah, rah, rah, rah, rah, rah, rah, rah, rah.

"Roosevelt—Roosevelt—Roosevelt!"

The '02 men felt so pleased over the demonstration they had started that they flung one of their banners across the hall half way betwen roof and floor aend waved it triumphantly.

During the 10-minute lull that followed the orchestra played two selections that nobody heard, or could hear, the class of '95, numbering 100, paraded boisterously down the middle aisle and paid its respects to '02, and all the other classes cheered one another. The '97 men charged up the main aisle, informing the assemblage they were members of the famous class of '97. But the lull wa only the quietness that preceded an? ther storm.

"Skeeter" Holden of '95 mounted the stage and called for a long cheer in honor of the "nine." Then they cheered the crew—then the hilarious class of '75—then the famous class of '80.

"Anw now," bellowed the leader, "and now Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States!" Your ears ached after the demonstration subsided. With voices still fresh, however, those 1000 youthful grads refused to sit down again till they had paid tribute to "Presy" Eliot and to "the ladies."

This was the climaxic explosion of enthusiasm during the evening. Other cheering has shaken the pillars of Symphony Hall, but history records nothing like the crowning feature of the noise at the "ninth graduate night." Not a single tonsil escaped injury. After that series of tributes everybody spoke very hoarsely and cheered with noticeably lessened vigor.

From that moment also the Symphony became a feature of the occasion. It played "The Star Spangled Banner" and everybody heard the music and rose respectfully and sang with well-intended, but weak, enthusiasm. Then the orchestra rendered "Fair Harvard," and the 1000 grads stood up again and, in spite of sore throats, sang again. "Our Director" ended the programme; but the grads could only hum the inspiring air.

Then the old Harvard men went home speaking in whispers.

[149]

TIGHT BINDING

COMMENCEMENT IN HISTORY OF

S. H. Hooper, Leading Harvard 75's Cheering.

GRADS' NIGHT AT THE POPS RECORD BREAKER

The attendance at "grads night" at the "Pops" last night was the largest and most demonstrative that Symphony Hall has ever held. The floor was filled to its fullest capacity, the balconies were crowded and many were turned away at the doors. Of the class of 1880, President Roosevelt's class, there were over a hundred present, and a large quota from the class of '75.

Cheers for President.

Cheers for the President were in order throughout the evening from the individual classes, as well as from the graduates as a whole. Robert T. Hooper, '80, mounted the platform near the middle of the program and led a special cheer for President Roosevelt, which was answered by the wildest enthusiasm throughout the hall and was heartily entered into by those in the balconies. S. H. Hooper, wrapped about with a crimson flag bearing the numerals '75, led the cheering during the evening for that class.

Dr. Holden of '80 led the cheers for the nine, the crew, the seniors and for "Roosevelt of '80."

The class of '02 was very much in evidence. Their numerals were stretched across the hall from the balconies.

Had Special Steins.

The members of the class of '90 drank their beer from specially designed steins, which bore the legend "1890-1905," and were carried away as souvenirs. A call for a cheer for Mr. Comee of Symphony Hall, who is of the class of '75, received hearty response.

L. Hall, the composer of the Hasty Pudding play of this year, played piano accompaniment to several college songs. In the balcony were Mrs. John L. Gardner with a large party, including Mr. and Mrs. Hollis H. Hunnewell. Mr. and Mrs. H. Staples Potter and party, Mrs. F. Harry Hooper and Miss Helen Paine.

HARVARD GRADS DROWN OUT POPS

Uproarious Cheering for President Roosevelt, "Prexy Eliot," Classes, Crew, Etc., Make Ninth Annual Affair Most Memorable.

LUSTIEST VOICES ARE THOSE '02 RAISED

Cheers for "Prexy" and "Ladies" Are Those on Which Throats Are Wrecked—Songs They Sung Too.

"With a stein on the table and a good long ringing cheer"—that was "Harvard Graduates' night" at the "Pops." The old boys of the class of '41, of the class of '54, of the class of '75, sang and yelled themselves hoarse andthen tried to outsing and outyell the deep-chested lusty youths of '02.

But '02 won the merry contest. In fact, it made itself heard at all times during the evening—made itself heard, in spite of the other tremendous cheering. Fourthy-two came into the hall like an assaulting wedge at a scrane-rush. They finally bunched underthe curve of the balcony, and let loosea long cheer for the class of '02, then another long cheer for the class of '80, and then—and then a long "three Harvrds three times three and three Roosevelts.

This outburst lifted the lid of enthusiasm for the Presient—for the dis-

'80 mounted the long cheer in hen they cheered ious class of '75 of '80.

he leader, "and t, President of our ears ached subsided. With ever, those 1000 o sit down again ute to "Presy" explosion of evening. Other pillars of Symrecords nothing re of the noise night." Not a ury. After that ody spoke very with noticeably o the Symphony he occasion. It ed Banner" and sic and rose re- well-intended. Then the orches- vard," and the n and, in spite again. "Our rogramme; but m the inspiring men went home,

BOSTON GLOBE—TUESDAY, JUNE 27

ENTHUSIAM FOR CRIMSON THINGS

Harvard Graduates at the Pops Ready to Cheer at A Second's Notice.

It was a fine test of physical endurance that upward of 2000 Harvard men of variegated ages gave last evening at the ninth annual graduates' night at the Pop concert in Symphony hall.

The cheers and songs in which Harvard exuberance expended itself would have probably drowned the roar of Niagara, as they did the greater part of the playing of the orchestra. No doubt it was a trying occasion for conductor Strube and his musicians, but the graduates had a great time, and that was what they were there for. Having bought out practically the entire house, there was substantially no one privileged to find fault if the usual order of things was radically upset.

CLASS OF '02 HAS A BANNER RAISING OF ITS OWN.

The classes represented were '41, '55, '74 and everything succeeding it, including '05. All were at the tables on the floor, and the location of every class was indicated by a crimson banner on a pole, bearing the year. The two balconies were hung with red paper banners bearing various inscriptions, a good portion having the names of the different athletic teams. They became, as is customary, trophies for whoever could get near enough to get hold of them.

Most of the classes came in groups, the younger ones cheering as they marched, as a rule, and as the arrivals were continuous for half an hour, the scene was as interesting during the gathering of the clans as it was after the regular order of procedure began.

The name of Roosevelt was in the air all the evening, and it was evident there was inspiration in it, for whenever mentioned, which was many times, it was the signal for uproarious cheering that left no room to doubt that the President enjoys about the greatest and most widespread popularity among his fellows of any graduate whose name is to be found in the roll of Harvard.

Stimulated, no doubt, by the President's prospective reunion with his former classmates, today, his class, '80, turned out in large numbers, nearly 100 having been present. And it was a finely representative gathering, too, as may be seen by a few names picked up at random among the delegates: William Hooper, treasurer of the L road; Hon Josiah Quincy, Hon William A. Gaston, Prof Albert Bushnell Hart of Harvard, Robert Bacon, a partner of J. Pierpont Morgan; Dr Frank M. Holden of Philadelphia, Hollis H. Hunnewell, John Woodbury, secretary of the metropolitan park commission; Prof Harold N. Townsend, Hugh L. Bond of Baltimore, Richard M. Saltonstall, Robert Winsor, Henry B. Chapin, Frederic D. Hall, Frederic Almy and William H. Hills.

The station of honor, nearest the stage, was shared by '80 and '95, the latter, of course, celebrating its decennial. Dignity, appropriate, no doubt, for a class just now enjoying such distinction, characterized the deportment of the members of '80, but '95 just let itself go, and filled a large place in the proceedings of the evening.

most prominent among them, in the front row of the first balcony.

Dr Holden later led the audience in singing the "Stein song." Two or three times during the intermissions an impromptu glee club sang popular Harvard songs, the greatest enthusiasm being raised when they hit upon "The Marseillaise," which had to be sung all over again, the effect having been quite electrical, owing to the accompaniment of waving crimson flags all over the hall.

The playing of "John Brown's Body" by the orchestra stirred everybody's emotions to such an extent that the whole audience joined in the chorus, and then encored. Then "The Star Spangled Banner" brought all hands to their feet and "Fair Harvard" did the same, men and women alike singing the familiar song, while every one that had a scrap of crimson waved it in unison with the strains.

MR HOOPER CALLS FOR THREE CHEERS FOR FRED COMEE.

Class of '85 arrived somewhat late, having been the greater part of the day guests at the home of one of the members, James J. Storrow, at Lincoln.

CLASS OF '75 TOUCHES GLASSES WITH THAT OF '05.

Every member had a crimson pennant on a stick, with the class year on it, and a standard bearer had a huge Harvard flag about eight feet in length, which was manipulated with telling effect whenever the waving of flags was in order, which proved to be pretty nearly all the time.

The pennants and the big flag were frequently waved in unison with the music of the orchestra and contributed wonderfully to the animation of the scene.

Class of '02, led by Barrett Wendell Jr, took the palm for resourcefulness in keeping itself conspicuously in the public eye and ear all the evening. The members seemed to have lungs of leather and apparently cheered about all the other classes represented. They contributed the most spectacular and amusing feature, by providing a string which was attached, unobserved, to an '02 banner and hoisted high up near the ceiling, over the center of the hall, twice, during the evening, during the execution of a number by the orchestra, creating a big sensation and no end of laughter each time.

Class of '75, led by S. H. Hooper, a commanding figure, wrapped in two big Harvard flags as in a surcoat of ancient times, also made itself a prominent and entertaining feature, commanding the attention and respect, even when chaos reigned the wildest. At about the middle of the program Mr Hooper mounted a chair, with a bugler at his side, who sounded taps, and thus attracted attention when the sound of the human voice would have been futile.

Mr Hooper then called for three times three for Fred R. Comee, originator of Harvard graduates' night, which has been such a popular institution now for nine years, and they were given with a vociferousness exceeding anything else during the evening, Mr Comee meanwhile hiding his modest blushes as far away from the hall as he could get at such short notice. Prominent in '75 was John Kent; not forgotten as a great first base that year, who led his class in singing last night.

Other classes that were prominent in keeping enthusiasm keyed to a high pitch were '95 led by Thorndike Spalding, '90 led by Henry Vaughan, '99 led by Arthur Adams and '83 led by Sumner Pearmain. Class of '79 had as quiet and dignified representatives Judge William Schofield and chairman De Las Casas of the metropolitan park board.

Toward the end of the program, Dr Frank M. Holden of Baltimore, class of '80, led a tumult of general cheering in which everybody joined, for the ball nine, the boat crew, for classes of '75 and '80, Harvard, Pres Eliot, President Roosevelt, and finally the lad mainly occupied the two balconies, Mrs John L. Gardner, gowned entirely in white, even to her hat, having been the

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, JUNE 27, 1905

Great Enthusiasm at Harvard "Pops"

President Roosevelt's Class, '80, the Classes of '95, '75 and 1902 Were Most in Evidence

Harvard men of all ages gloried in music and song, and more particularly in noise, when they thronged to Symphony Hall, last evening, for the ninth annual Graduates' Night in the "Pop" concert series. The class of 1902 was out in greatest number, but '95 was a close second, and there were a good hundred there from President Roosevelt's class, '80. Along the balcony railings hung the usual array of crimson banners, with lists of the athletic great men of the University, although these disappeared before the evening was over; and almost every class on the floor bore banners large and small with their class designation emblazoned thereon.

The class of 1902 came into the hall in a solid mass, and started such a wave of enthusiasm that for several minutes there was not even a lull. The class, cheering and waving banners, marched through the hall to a space under the balcony at the rear, where they settled and established headquarters. As they reached their corner, they let forth mighty cheers, first for themselves, then for the class of '80, then for the President. And such a round as they started with the mention of President Roosevelt. It ran all over the hall. Classes as far back as '41 made known their presence with a three-times-three for Roosevelt; and it was some time before things quieted down.

The class of '95, celebrating their decennial, bunched themselves in the space near the stage at the left of the hall. They had a great crimson banner as a class emblem, and each individual had a small banner which he waved in time with the music that pleased him. This forest of waving banners was one of the sights of the evening.

When 1902 was fairly placed, 1895 decided to visit it; so the entire aggregation paraded down the aisles, banners and all, to shake hands with the 1902 men and give them a cheer. The other class responded, and some time later sent up into space between the floor and the roof a small 1902 flag, which remained there mysteriously for a time, and was then plucked down. It went up again before the evening was over, but its stay was short.

The class of '80 conducted itself with a fair amount of dignity, but its enthusiasm could not be repressed when H. M. Holden of Baltimore mounted the stage with a megaphone and started to lead a cheer. The class of '80 joined; everybody joined; it was one great roar of sound. Of course it was for the President. There were also cheers for President Eliot, the ladies, the nine, the crew, the classes of 1875, and the class of '80. And the strain was so great and so long-continued that subsequent cheering was necessarily performed with the soft stop on. But the will was good, just the same.

As for the programme, although the orchestra was heard only now and then during the evening, as a matter of fact it began with "Through the Yard at Harvard," by C. A. Hosmer, '02, and the first section of the programme closed with the overture to "His Majesty," by Shafter Howard, '85, both good numbers. During the intermission, while the orchestra went out to acquire new inspiration, the Harvard songs, words of which were printed in a supplement to the programme, were sung, led by Stewart Baird, '03, and Leland Hall, '04, the latter playing accompaniments on the piano. Elson's Decennial march and the Hasty Pudding march by Purdon, '95, opened the next part of the programme, and instead of playing the Orpheus overture of Offenbach for the closing number, the orchestra gave, in response to loud request, "Up the Street," by Bob Morse, '96. Other Harvard tunes were the "Veritas" march by Densmore, '04, and of course, "Fair Harvard," sung by everyone in the hall as a concluding number.

Class of 1905 Dines Together

END OF VOLUME

END OF REEL

PLEASE REWIND